All these thinges be true, concerning the head of the Church. Now let vs loke further what it is, and let vs herein take aduise of the Apostle. Let him shew vs the true head of the true Churche. He sayth in this wise: And he hath made subiect all thinges vnder his feete, (he speaketh of Christ) and he hathe giuen him to be the head ouer all things, to that church which is hys bodye, the accomplishment of him which fulfilleth all things in all men. Againe: But let vs (sayth he) follow the truth in loue, and in all thinges growe in him which is the head, that is to say Christ, in whome if the whole body be well ioyned and compacte together in euerye iointe of ayde and relife, according to the worcking of euery parte in his proportion, it maketh the encrease of the bodye, to the building vp of it self by charitie.

Ephe. 1.

Ephe. 4.

Ephes. 5.

Item: You Wyues be subiecte vnto your owne husbandes as to the Lord. For the husbande is the wyues head, euen as Christ is also the head of the congregation, and the same which ministreth saluation vnto the body.

Coloss. 1.

Also in an other place: All things were created by him and for him, & he is before all thinges, and by hym all thinges haue their being. And he is the head of the body of the church: who is the beginning, and the firste begotten of the dead, that he might haue the preheminence. This sayth the Apostle.

VVhat thing be conuenient for a head.

Ergo, Christe is the heade of Gods Church, of whome these thinges be reported which be in any wise requisite to the order of the true head. It is meete for the heade to haue not onlye an excellencye of worthinesse, but of gouernaunce also and power. It is meete for it to minister to the body spirite and lyfe, and to kepe all the members of it in continual concorde, ioyned together with one spirite and bloude, and to directe the motions and duetie of euery eche one, and to prouyde for the health of the whole body. Without such a heade what is the booy else, but a dead blocke?

But the Church hath a head, in whome all these points be plentifully comprised. For God the father hath appointed Christ the onlye begotten of God, to be the moste sufficient heade of all others, whose excellencie the Apostle doth commend, when he calleth him the beginning, hauing respect to the Hebrew word, which hathe the signification bothe of the beginning and of the heade. Agayne in that he sayth, It beareth rule in all thinges, and is before all things, and is set ouer all thinges, and that all thinges be and do stande by him, it toucheth the sufficiencie, that all matters necessarie be ministred to the body from the head: that he saith, He fulfilleth all in all, and giueth health to the body, and that all the bodye groweth in him: to which purpose that saying of Christ doth serue, I am the true Vine, and you be the braunches.

These things be so true, that none of the aduersaries be able to denye them. But yet they doe substitute vnto this heade Christ, as the principall heade, an other head to be as the secondarie heade. They meane the the Bishop of Rome, whome they do fondlye imagine to be ordeyned to be the heade of the vniuersall Church in the earth, as Lieutenaunte and Vicare vnto Christe the chief head. They will haue the ouerseer of the Church, to be as muche as the head. No doubte, Princes, Captaynes, and Kynges were called the heades of the people, as we maye see in the boke of Samuel, where it is sayd, that Saule was made the heade amongst the Tribes of Israell. And in Amos, where the noble menne were called the heades of the people. And in Esaye the seuenth chapiter: in which place the king of Damasco, and the king of Samaria be called heades. But we doe read in no place in the Scriptures, that the Apostles and Bishops be called the heades of the Church.

Yea, Augustine in his thirde boke writing against the letters of Petilian, denyeth, that the Apostle Paule coulde be the heade of them whome he had planted in the faith of Christ, saying: O what a rashnesse and pride is this of man? Why doest thou not rather suffer that Christ shoulde alwayes giue faith, and to make thee a Christian man in the giuing of it? Why doest thou not suffer that Christ should be euer the beginning of the Christian man, and that the Christian man shoulde fasten hys trote in Christe? that Christ be the head of the Christian manne? For what tyme the spiritual grace is bestowed vnto the beleuers by the holy and faithfull Minister, the Minister himselfe doth not iustifye: but he only of whome it is sayde, that he doth iustifye the wicked. Nor the Apostle Paul was not ỳ head and beginning of them whome he planted, nor Apollo the rote of them whome he watered, but he which gaue them encrease, as he himselfe saith in the thirde chapiter in the firste Epistle to the Corinthians, saying: I haue planted, Apollo hath watered, but God hath giuen encrease. So that nor he which planteth is any thing, nor he whiche watereth, but God who giueth encrease. Nor he was not the rote of them, but he rather which sayd: I am the Vine, & you be the braunches. And how coulde he be their heade, when he sayde: We beyng manye, are one body in Christ? And when he doth reporte moste plainely in many places, that Christ himselfe is the heade of the whole body?

This sayth Augustin. In which words he doth flatlye denye and refuse, that so noble an Apostle could be the head of them whom he himselfe had planted, and he giueth the reasons why, that is to say, bycause that Christian menne be one bodye in Christ, and that Christ himselfe is the head of the whole body. Now if it can not be sayde of Paul, that he was the head of the Church, which he planted in the Lorde, I suppose by lyke reason, that the same can not be reported of the rest of the Apostles. And if the Apostles cannot bee called heades of the Churches which they plated, how can Bishops be called heades of the Churches, which neuer planted, nor watered when they were planted by others.

They doe auaunce Peter aboue Paule and the reste of the Apostles, bycause that albeit the Apostles had like and equall authoritie, yet for al ỳ it was peculiarly said vnto him by the Lord: Fede my Shepe, & by the vertue of his commaundement, they do make him both pastor of the vniuersall Church, and head also. But I beseech you, is there so much difference betwixt planting & watering, which Paul reporteth of himselfe, & of Apollo, and feeding, which they peculiarly attribute vnto Peter, that Paul for al his planting of the churches, may not be called the heade of thé, & Peter for his feeding maye be called head, not of them only whō he fed, but of the vniuersall Church also? What hath Peter to do with the churches whiche Paul both planted & fedde, and whiche the rest of the Apostles planted: wherof many were vtterly vnknowen vnto him?

Shal we beleue that it was possible ỳ Peter onely should fede the vniuersal Church of Christ? To what purpose then should the rest haue bin chosen & sent abroade throughout al ỳ world? The lord said not vnto him Fede al my shepe, but simply, Fede my shepe. The feeding of those sheep was cōmitted vnto him which beleued of the circūcision, but there were yet other sheep also to be driuen oute of the Gentiles, and to be fed, of whō if Paul were aright called the Doctour and techer, I suppose he might by as good reason also be called the Pastor, whō for al ỳ Augustine doth not permit to be called head of thé. Again if it did belōg vnto Peter only to fede the shepe of Christ, what is the matter ỳ Paule calling vnto him the priests & bishops of ỳ church of Ephesus doth say: Loke wel therfore to your selues, & to ỳ whole flock, in which the holy spirite hath set you Bishoppes, to fede ποιμαίνειν the Churche of God, which he hath purchased with his bloud. Ergo, It was not Peter only which fed the Lords shepe, but ỳ other apostles also Bishops, Pastors, & Doctors fed also, vnto whō Augustine doth neuer the more yelde ỳ they shoulde be called heads of the church, than he did vnto Paul.

Gala. 2.

All ma

But in case men will nedes haue the Bishop of Rome to be head of ỳ church let him be head of ỳ Church which is subiect vnto him, as the body is to the head. In case there be a Church, which may be called the body of the Bishop of Rome, we cā be well content ỳ for all vs he may be head therof, as of his body: but it cā not be graunted that he be the heade of any particular bodye of Christe, much lesse of ỳ vniuersall body. For as for ỳ that they do crake & boast of ỳ succession of Peter, they be but topes and trifles. For he was neyther the head of the catholike church, nor yet if he had beene so, it were no reason ỳ therfore the like prerogatiue shold be giuen vnto al Bishops of Rome.

Of the Churche Bishop Rome head.

VIII. Of the Vnitie of the Church.

THe commendation of vnitie is worthyly esteemed great amōgst true godly persons. And wheras we do intende to note some things briefly of it, we will leaue to speake of ỳ vniuersal instinct therof giuen to all creatures naturallye, in that that they do bend al vnto one, and be preserued by vnity, to be discussed by sōme heads, and we will treate of the vnitie vnitie of the Churche, to applye our selues to the matter which we haue in hande: and we will speake not of the particular vnitie of the Church, but of the catholike and vniuersall vnitie: not of the counterfaite, but of the natural and true, not of the deuided, but of the whole and sound vnitie. The particular, counterfait, and and deuided vnitie, doth belong vnto Heretikes, Schismatikes, and vnto them which when they would seeme to be catholike, they do pretēd an vnitie: and yet the same vnitie which they haue, is not true, but counterfayt and grounded in false worships and traditions of men. But the catholike, true, and sound vnity pertaineth not to Schismatikes, but vnto the true, faithful, and that generally vnto all. The true and catholike vnitie of the Church, doth belong only vnto them, which are of the true & catholike Church.

Of the Churche vnitie

Wherefore, let them whiche doe sometimes entice vs, and sometimes enforce vs to kepe the vnitie of their Church, first of al make of their particular vnitie an vniuersal, of a deuided a whole one, of a counterfayte, a true Christian: that is to saye, Let them returne first themselues vnto the true & catholike church of Christ from whence they are fledde, setting vp their Popetie: and let them so embrace togyther with vs the vnity of it, that both they and we also maye be all one wyth all pure faithfull folke, and commonly and truely enioye the gwonesse of vnitie in the Lorde. It is not a true vnitie of the true Church by and by, bycause it is boasted of, vnder pretence of the catholike Churche. For it is no new matter, that they whiche be far from the truth of the catholike vnitie, doe presume to challenge themselues the title therof, if they thynke that they haue the better hande eyther in multitude, either in prescription of many yeares, eyther in authoritye of the higher powers. The place of Hierome is knowen, wryting in this wise: In king Constantius time, whē Eusebius and Hippatius were counsaylours, Infydelity was written vnder the name of vnitie and fayth, as it is knowen nowe. For in that tyme there was nothing semed so Godlye, nothyng so conuenient for the seruāt of God, as to folowe vnitie, and not to be plackt from the communion of the whole world, specially now when ỳ outwarde shewe of setting forth of things semed to haue no wickednes. Thus sayth he.

Hieronimus contra Luciferianos.

Wherefore we muste diligentlye search, which is the true vnitie of ỳ Catholike Churche, least we be deceyued by the false appellation and meaning of it, and in pretence of vnitie, do return vnto our old accustomed schisme.

The true and sounde vnitie of Christes Churche is comprysed in a diuision of three. For fyrst it is one in it selfe. And the catholyke churche is not manifolde but one, bycause it is the bodye of Christe, of which vnitie we spake before in the seconde article. Secondly there is a vnitye of bodye wyth the heade Chryste in thys one Churche. And wythoute thys vnitye any societye of Christian men is to no purpose.

Kyrieple diuision of true vnitie.

Thyrdly, the vnitie of the church

consisteth in the members of it, and that is when they sticke togither among themselues in a kind of moste fast knot and coniunction. This true & absolute vnitie, cã nother be stretched any larger, nor be restreined any streighter. For it is exactly applied vnto the threfolde respect of the Church. That is to say, of ỳ head, body, & members. And we must consider in the vnity of the Churche one head, one body, and one most united knitting togither of the diuers and sundry members of the same.

VVhat they be vvhich do breake the vnity of the Church.

And this vnitie they do breake as muche as lyeth in them, whiche doe either displace the true & only heade of the church, or else doe ioyne & substitute any other vnto it. Again they doe the same which do appoint such an vnitie of the body to the head, as can abide disagreing and reprobate members, or else wil haue vs to followe such an vnitie of the members, which shold exclude the vnity wyth Chriſt the hed. The firſt and laſt the Papiſts do: the ſecond they do, which doe ſo boaſt of the Goſpel of Chriſt, that they haue no regard of Chriſtian charitie, although that they doe reade and heare that Chriſt ſaid: In this you be knowen to be my diſciples, if you haue charitie & loue one to another. No doubt the true vnity with Chriſt is ſuch, that it doeth not onely require a mutuall loue and vnity of his faythful, but that it bredeth ỳ ſame alſo. Chryſoſtome ſaith, againſt them which do not care for the vnity with the head: What doeſt thou forſaking the heade (ſaith he) sticketh vnto ỳ mẽber? If thou doeſt fal from the head, thou art vtterlye loſt. And mark whatſoeuer he be he can not liue, vnleſſe he be ioyned vnto him by the head, and ſo liue.

Chriſoſtom

In what men the vnitie of consiſteth.

Now ſeeing that there is ſo great a diuerſity and vnequality in ỳ church both betwirt the body and ỳ head, and alſo betwirt the members themſelues, we muſt ſee by what meanes thys vnitye, whereof we doe ſpeake, doth conſiſt. The Papiſts doground it in the obedience and ſubiection vnto the Romiſh Church, whiche they wil haue to be the mother of al churches and faithfull folke. They do eimagine that it hath a lappe, whereunto all muſt haue recourſe, whiche wyll ſeeme to be true Chriſtians. And they doe al like this vnitie, whiche do ſeke therby rather how they themſelues, than howe Chriſt maye raigne. How they themſelues maye liue gaily and bountifully, rather than howe the members of the Churche may be ſaued togither. But we doe determine that to be the vnity of the church, not whiche dependeth vpon any particular church ether of Rome or any other: but which is alwayes of the Catholik church, & was not only before the Romiſh Church, but ſhall continue alſo when the ſame is gone & paſt, euen vntil the very end of all. This we do ſeke in the holy Scriptures, in which we haue this church alſo expreſſed, when they do call the church ỳ body, whoſe head Chriſt is.

I ſuppoſe they do ſufficiently declare, that the vnity of the Churche ſtandeth by like meanes as the vnity of the bodye wyth the heade doth conſiſte by and of the members, with the mẽbers. The apoſtle ſayth: We beyng many, are one bodye in Chriſt, & ech of vs one an others mẽbers. The vnyty of the heade wyth his bodye, conſiſteth in one fleſhe, one Spirit, one bloud, and one lyfe. The lyke is the vnitie of the members. For they alſo doe cleaue together as knit in one ſpirit, one bloud, one fleſhe and lyfe, and one head, one with an other. Wherefore the vnitie of the Church with Chriſt & of al the faithfull, which be the members of the Church, doeth conſiſt always in theſe meanes.

Of this vnitie of the Churche the Apoſtle ſpeaketh where he ſaythe: Therefore I doe aduiſe you, beyng bounde in the Lord, that you walke as it is mete for that calling wherin you be called, with all lowlineſſe and humblenelle, and with all gentleneſſe, bearing one with an other thronghe charitie, endeuouring to kepe the vnitie of the ſpirit, by the bande of peace. One bodye and one ſpirit, lyke as you be called alſo in one hope of your calling. One Lord, one Faith, one Baptiſme: one God and Father of all, which is aboue all, and by all, and in you all. And in an other place: Ye that loueth hys wyfe, loueth himſelfe. For no man neuer hateth his own fleſh: but doth rather nourithe and cherish it like as the Lord alſo doth the Churche: for we be members of the ſame body, of his fleſh and of his beanes. For this cauſe man ſhall forſake Father and Mother, and cleaue vnto his wife, and there ſhall become of two, one fleſhe. This miſterie is great, but I ſpeake of Chriſt & of the Church. Item. Know you not (ſayth he) that your bodyes be the members of Chriſt? Whether then ſhall I take the members of Chriſt, and make them members of a harlot? God forbidde. Know you not ỳ hee whiche cleaueth vnto a harlot, is one body therewithall? For (he ſayth:) They ſhall be brought bothe into one fleſhe. But he which ſticketh vnto the Lord, is one Spirite wyth him. And to the Romaines: But in caſe anye man hath not the Spirit of Chriſt, he is none of hys. And to the Ebrewes: Beholde, here am I, and the children whiche God hath giuen me. For aſmuch then that the children are partakers of fleſhe and bloude, he alſo himſelfe lykewiſe toke parte with them. &c.

Rom. 8.

Ebre. 2.

We doe ſee by theſe places of holy Scripture, that the vnitie of the Church, whereby we be both ioyned vnto Chriſte our head, and one of vs to an other, doth not exclude that communion of the ſame fleſhe and bloude: the myſterie wherof, the fathers haue much ſpoken of in the ſacramente of the bodye and bloud of the Lord, againſt the Heretykes that did denye the truthe of the fleſhe of Chriſte: and yet notwithſtanding, that it doeth not altogether conſiſte therein, but that it requireth withall the vnitie of one ſpirite and lyfe. Of the Spirite we haue ſeene in the places before. Of the lyfe, we may ſee in the laſte Epiſtle to the Corinthians, where the Apoſtle ſaith: For we which doe lyue, be alwayes deliuered vnto death for Jeſus ſake, that ỳ lyfe of Jeſu may be declared in our mortall fleſhe. Againe: Then if you be riſen with Chriſt, ſeke the thinges aboue, where Chriſte is ſitting at the right hand of God. And care for heauenlye matters, and not for earthlye. For you be dead, and your lyfe is hydden with Chriſte in consisteth in the members of it, and that is when they sticke togither among themselues in a kind of mosse fast knot and coniunction. This true & absolute vnitie, cā nother be stretched any larger, nor be restreined any streighter. For it is exactly applied vnto the threfolde respect of the Church. That is to say, of ỳ head, body, & members. And we must consider in the vnity of the Churche one head, one body, and one most united knitting togither of the diuers and sundry members of the same.

1. Corint. 4.

Coloſſ. 3.

VVhat they be vvhich do breake the vnity of the Church.

And this vnitie they do breake as muche as lyeth in them, whiche doe either displace the true & only heade of the church, or else doe ioyne & substitute any other vnto it. Again they doe the same which do appoint such an vnitie of the body to the head, as can abide disagreing and reprobate members, or else wil haue vs to followe such an vnitie of the members, which shold exclude the vnity wyth Chriſt the hed. The firſt and laſt the Papiſts do: the second they do, which doe so boaſt of the Gospel of Chriſt, that they haue no regard of Chriſtian charitie, although that they doe reade and heare that Chriſt saith: In this you be knowen to be my disciples, if you haue charitie & loue one to another. No doubt the true vnity with Chriſt is such, that it doeth not onely require a mutuall loue and vnity of his faythful, but that it bredeth ỳ same also. Chryſoſtome saith, against them which do not care for the vnity with the head: What doeſt thou forsaking the heade (saith he) sticketh vnto ỳ mēber? If thou doeſt fal from the head, thou art vtterlye loſt. And mark whatsoeuer he be he can not liue, vnleſſe he be ioyned vnto him by the head, and so liue.

Chriſoſtom

In vvhat men the vnitie of consiſteth.

Now seeing that there is so great a diuersity and vnequality in ỳ church both betwixt the body and ỳ head, and also betwixt the members themselues, we muſt see by what meanes thys vnitye, whereof we doe speake, doth consiſt. The Papiſts doground it in the obedience and subiection vnto the Romiſh Church, whiche they wil haue to be the mother of al churches and faithfull folke. They do eimagine that it hath a lappe, whereunto all muſt haue recourſe, whiche wyll seeme to be true Chriſtians. And they doe al like this vnitie, whiche do seeke therby rather how they themselues, than howe Chriſt maye raigne. How they themselues maye liue gaily and bountifully, rather this howe the members of the Churche may be saued togither. But we doe determine that to be the vnity of the church, not whiche dependeth vpon any particular church ether of Rome or any other: but which is always of the Catholik church, & was not only before the Romiſh Church, but shall continue also when the same is gone & past, euen vntil the very end of all. This we do seeke in the holy Scriptures, in which we haue this church also expreſſed, when they do call the church ỳ body, whose head Chriſt is.

I suppose they do sufficiently declare, that the vnity of the Churche standeth by like meanes as the vnity of the bodye wyth the heade doth consiſte by and of the members, with the mēbers. The apoſtle saith: We beyng many, are one bodye in Chriſt, & ech of vs one an others mēbers. The vnyty of the heade wyth his his body, consisteth in one fleshe, one Spirit, one bloud, and one lyfe. The lyfe is the vnitie of the members. For they also doe cleaue together as knit in one spirit, one bloud, one fleshe and lyfe, and one head, one with an other. Wherefore the vnitie of the Church with Chriſt & of al the faithfull, which be the members of the Church, doeth consiſt always in these meanes.

Of this vnitie of the Churche the Apoſtle speaketh where he saythe: Therefore I doe aduiſe you, beyng bounde in the Lord, that you walke as it is mete for that calling wherin you be called, with all lowlineſſe and humblenesse, and with all gentlenesse, bearing one with an other throughe charitie, endeuouring to kepe the vnitie of the spirit, by the bande of peace. One bodye and one spirit, lyke as you be called also in one hope of your calling. One Lord, one Faith, one Baptiſme: one God and Father of all, which is aboue all, and by all, and in you all. And in an other place: He that loueth hys wyfe, loueth himselfe. For no man neuer hateth his own fleth: but doth rather nourishe and cherish it like as the Lord also doth the Churche: for we be members of the same body, of his fleth and of his boanes. For this cause man shall forsake Father and Mother, and cleaue vnto his wife, and there shall become of two, one fleshe. This misterie is great, but I do speake of Chriſt & of the Church. Item. Know you not (saith he) that your bodyes be the members of Chriſt? Whether then shall I take the members Chriſt, and make them members of a harlot? God forbidde: Know you not ỳ hee whiche cleaueth vnto a harlot, is one body therewithall? For (he saith:) They shall be brought bothe into one fleshe. But he which sticketh vnto the Lord, is one Spirite wyth him. And to the Romaines: But in case anye man hath not the Spirit of Chriſt, he is none of hys. And to the Ebrewes: Beholde, here am I, and the children whiche God hath giuen me. For asmuch then that the children are partakers of fleshe and bloude, he also himselfe lykewise toke parte with them. &c.

Item. 6.

Rom. 8.

Ebre. 2.

We doe see by these places of holy Scripture, that the vnitie of the Church, whereby we be both ioyned vnto Chriſte our head, and one of vs to an other, doth not exclude that communion of the same fleshe and bloude: the mysterie wherof, the fathers haue much spoken of in the sacramente of the bodye and bloud of the Lord, against the Heretykes that did denye the truthe of the fleshe of Chriſte: and yet notwithstanding, that it doeth not altogether consiſte therein, but that it requireth withall the vnitie of one spirite and lyfe. Of the Spirite we haue seene in the places before. Of the lyfe, we may see in the laſte Epiſtle to the Corinthians, where the Apoſtle saith: For we which doe lyue, be alwayes deliuered vnto death for Jesus sake, that ỳ lyfe of Jesu may be declared in our mortall fleshe. Againe: Then if you be risen with Chriſt, seeke the thinges aboue, where Chriſte is sitting at the right hand of God. And care for heauenlye matters, and not for earthlye. For you be dead, and your lyfe is hydden with Chriſte in

1. Corint. 4.

Coloſſ. 3.

God. It is not possible that the lyfe shoulde bee discrepant from the vnity of the same Spirite.

Allways they which be partakers of the same selfe spirite, be partakers also of the same selfe lyfe. For the quality of ỳ life riseth vpon the quality of the Spirite.

One God & Father. One Lord. One Faith. One hope. One baptisme. One body Iohn.17.

Besides the vnitie of flesh & bloud spirite and life, the Apostle maketh mention also of one god and Father of all, who is ouer all throughout al, and in all the faythfull: of one Lord, one faith, and one hope: and one baptisme. In the vnity of the body wher by we be ioyned vnto ỳ head Christ, there is comprehended also the vnitie of God the Father. For we be al one in him also, and he in vs, when we be vnited vnto Christ. I pray not (sayth Christ) for them alone, but for them also which shall beleue in mee thorough their words and teaching, that all may be one, like as thou father art in me, and I in the, that they maye also be one in vs. Item: I in them, and thou in me, that they may be fulfilled into one, &c. Ergo that is a full vnity. In case that like as the father is the sonne, so the sonne be also in vs, and we in the Father and the sonne: that is to say, in one communion of Spirite, whereby wee bee made partakers of the heauenlye nature.

Those things whiche he spake of the vnitie of fayth, hope, and baptisme, be annexed vnto thys vnity: Euen as brotherlye loue is also whereby we bee declared to be the disciples of Christ: and peace also, wherby as it wer wt a certain knot, we be tyed in the vnitie of spirite. They whiche be knit vnto Christ, be tyed togyther not onely in the folowshyp of his spirite, but of fayth, and baptisme also.

For the vnitie maye not parte the vnitie of partes in Christ.

Thys vnitye of the Catholyke churche can not be, but amongest them whiche be true faythful folke, and true members of the Church. And to conserue and kepe thys, it is not onely lawefull but also necessarie, to forsake the companie of the outwarde and particular Churche, if the communion and felowshippe thereof be defyled: as in case of worshipping of Idols, in Simonye, In false seruices. In a counterfaite head, that is to say, Antichrist, and all suche other filthy dregges of the whore of Babylon. The vnitye of the Catholyke Churche is to be preferred aboue all particular Churches, in case that of necessitie a man should forsake the one or the other. Wherefore he must not be condemned immediatelye for a breaker of the vnity of the Churche, & a Schismatyke, whosoeuer doeth nowe a dayes forsake the Church of Rome, vnlesse it be proued that the vnitie of it is such, as is altogyther one with the true and Catholike Church: and that so we shoulde doe it wrong, to forsake it. On the other syde, he is not immediately in the vnitie of the Catholike Churche, whosoeuer is vnmixed in the Romishe Churche. For there be within it many nought typackes, farre wyde from the body of the true Churche, men not ioyned to Christ, nother in Faith nother in Spirite, (not shewing any charity) and loue towards the true faithfull. And yet they thinke: byeause they haue all one Pope, one madnesse in Idolatrie, one Masse, and doe serue all in one kynde of seruice of the see of Rome, that they be moste Catholyke, and that they alone doe stande in the vnitie of the Church. And being doted with this most vain perswasion, they doe condemne all others for Schismatikes and Heretykes, which doe obey Gods Word, and depart out of the middest of Babylon, and doe flee from the communion, seruice, and crueltie thereof, least if they shoulde be partakers of their sinnes, they should themselues also perishe with the perishing.

That the Vnity of the Church doth not consist in Ceremonies.

The true and Catholike vnity of the true and catholike Church, did neuer consist in outwarde rites and ceremonies but in faith and Spirite. Carefull (sayth the Apostle) to kepe the vnitie of the Spirite vntill we doe all atcheue vnto the vnitie of faith. The diuersitie of Ceremonies doth not breake the vnity of the Church, in case that that point doe stande whiche is in the actes of the Apostles. The hartes of ỳ multitude of them which beleeued, was one, and their soule one. He which obserueth the day and doth refrayne from some meates, if he do obserue brotherly loue and charitie, he is no whit deuided from them whych neither do obserue day, nor abstaine frō any kind of meates. Wherfore there is no cause why that anye brother should in such like cases either iudge eyther forsake his brother. This Contention (sayth Augustine) of the fasting of the Sabboth, is an endles matter, breeding strife, making no end of questions and debates. Therfore let the faith of the Church, whiche is spreade abroade euerye where, be one, as it were within in the mēbers, albeit that the vnitie it selfe of faith, be obserued in sundry sorts and ceremonies, by whych the same that is true in faith, is no wise hyndered. Surelye it were to be wished, that christian men shoulde so well agree togyther, that like as we haue one God, one Lorde, and one head, and be one body vnder the same, and doe drinke of him one Spirite, of fayth, hope, charity and Godly loue, so we might also iudge, and saye all one thing, whereunto the Apostle doeth aduise vs to the Corinthians, and not onely saye, but do it also, in as much as concerneth the case of our saluation. And what can be better welcome, than this vnitie, vnto a godly man: How good and pleasaunt a matter is it, for brethren to dwell in one: sayth the Prophet: should not such a vnity be compared aright vnto an holy ointmēt, whiche droppeth downe from Aarons head into hys beard, and to the hemme of his garment: and vnto the heauenly dewe, whiche of Gods goodnesse commeth downe vpon the hilles of Syon, whē that charitie, quiet, and agreeable vnitie, shedde vppon the Ministers, Pastors, and Doctors, by the Spirite of God, droppeth down vpon the inferior members of the church: For like as by their discorde and falling out, there be sowen parties and sects among the faythfull: so is vnitye cherished and mayntayned by theyr concorde and agreement. The disagreementes of the Bysshops as well

1. Cor. 15.

The oyntmente of Aaron.

Grecians as Latines, be not knowen, whereby the vnitie of the Churches was wonte alwayes to be broken. Of whiche matter we haue spoken somewhat vppon that place, in the xxij. Psalme: They deuided my garment among them, and cast lottes for my coate.

IX. Of the Faith of the Catholyke Church.

WE spake before of Faith in a place by it selfe, wherefore we nede not here to speake anye other thing of it, than as it is requisite and nedefull for the present case, that the vnitie of the Churche consisteth also in the very faith which the Apostle saith is one, as wel as baptisme, yea, as the Lord himselfe and his bodye. There is requisite therefore for the true vnitie of the church, not sundry, but one faith, and that not of al sorts, but the same which is Christian in deede. And this is called one (sayth Augustine) not in number but in kinde. For we call it rather one than many, for the likenesse & resemblāce therof, and that there is no diuersitie in it: That likewise as of the which willeth all one thing, there is one will, so the faith also of the beleuers is all one. The same the Fathers called Catholike, forasmuche as it was vniuersally and commonly professed of all faithfull, and according vnto the professiō or denying therof, they iudged Churches to be either catholike either heretical. And to the intent that the profession of it should be ready and plaine, they brought the those points which the true faithfull do beleue in this Catholike faith, in to a shorte and plaine lesson, called the Crede. Wherein we do say:

I beleue in one God the father almightie maker of Heauen and Earth: and in Iesus Christe his only Sonne our Lorde, which was conceiued by the holy Spirite, borne of the Virgin Mary, suffred vnder Pontius Pilate, crucified, dead: and buried: he descended into Hell, and rose againe the thirde day from the dead: hee ascended into heauen, and sitteth at the right hand of God the Father almightie, from thence he shall come to iudge the quicke and the deade. I beleue in the holy Spirite, the holy Catholike Church, the Communion of Sainctes, the forgiuenesse of Sinnes, the resurrection of the flesshe, and the life euerlasting.

The Crede of the Catholike faith.

This is the true Apostolike, right, and Catholike faith of the true Apostolike, right, and Catholike church, which varieth not, but hath remained always constantly one selfesame faith throughout all worlds, according vnto the which we be accounted true, right, and catholike Christian men. The Crede of Athanasius, doth comprehend the catholike faith in the rightе confession of the holye Trinitie, and the incarnation of Iesus Christ, true God and true Man, of his passion, death, going downe to Hell, resurrection, ascension, sitting at the right hand of the father, of the comming to iudge, of the generall resurrection of our bodies, of the laste iudgement, of the euerlasting fyre, & lyfe euerlasting. And after that he hath rehearsed al this, he saith: This is the Catholike faith, which vnlesse, that euery man do faithfully and firmely beleue, he cannot be saued.

Athanas. Creede.

Ergo,

De Trinit. lib. 13. cap. 2. The fayth of the churche is one.

Ergo they whiche do beleue after this wise, haue the Catholike faith. Wherefore it followeth, that they be not Heretikes, but Catholike folke, standing in the vnitie of the Catholike Churche. And this Gracian dyd acknowledge when he did publishe a law to the people of Constantinople from Thessalonica, in whiche he decreed, that they only which worshipped the holy Trinitie in like honour, shoulde bee called the Catholike Church: and they which were of the contrarye opinion, shoulde be called Heretikes. Loke vpon Solomenus in the Ecclesiastical history. And we be also playnely, warely, circūspectly and aduisedly and agreeably baptised in this faith through al Christendome, that the confession thereof is required of mens owne mouthes, in case they be of yeares of vnderstanding when they be baptised, and if they be infantes it is required of the witnesses of their baptisme, as vndertakers for their baptisme.

Wherefore they be very vnreasonable and rash, which be not content with this faith, but doe besides thys, require the faithfull to beleue other things, whereof there is no mention made nother in the catholike Crede, nother at the baptisme: nor they doe not require it fauorably, but they do burden men vppon lyke case and necessitie: as the catholike faithe is required of all them which will be any members of the catholike Churche. As to beleue in holy menne that bee dead: (Doest not thou beleue saye they, in Saincte:) Ergo thou arte an Hereticke) that wee muste call and crie for help of the Sainctes, that the Sainctes do pray for vs in Heauen, that their Images must be worshipped here in Churches: that the Masse is a sacrifice for the sinnes of the quicke and the dead, that the substāce of bread and wine is tourned into the body and bloud of the Lorde, by the consecration of the Priest: that there be seauen sacramentes: that the bish. of Rome is Christs vicar here in earth, and the generall head of all Churches, that it is not lawfull for priests to marry: yet I say nothing of that which they would haue vs to beleue of mans free will, of satisfactions, merites and pardons, that is to say, of the merchandises of Simon of Rome, and of the traditions of the Church. For vnlesse that a man doe beleue that al these matters be christian and true, he is cōdemned for an heretik: what soeuer become of that olde catholike faith and vnitie which they do set little by, but the olde Pastors did regard that only. And there is a great cause to make these menne to bee thus mynded. They knowe that there is little to bee gayned of the confession of the Catholike faith: but they doe feele that there ryseth not onely great gayne, but that their lordyneslie and kingdome also of the Priests doth consiste in those pointes which I nowe rehersed.

So that it is exceedyng necessarie for al faithful folk to know how that there is but one faith in the Church, and wherin the vnitie of it doth consist, and that there can be in it no diuersitie, and in what respect the faith may be diuers without any breache of the vnitie of the Church. When that ther is any mention made of the Faith of ỹ Churche, that it is so one, that as manye as doe dissente from it, be wide from the true vnitie of the Church of Chriſte: It muſt bée vnderſtanded of that onely Churche, which we call the Catholike church, and accordyng to the whyche they were in tymes paſt accompted Catholike which did confeſſe the ſame. Contrary vnto that no man can bée allowed to diſſent. But wheras there doth ariſe queſtions and diſſentions in the church vpon rites and frée and lawfull obſeruations, ſo that of the faithfull ſome beléeue one thing and ſome another: in that caſe ſuch fayth though it be neuer ſo dyuers, it hurteth nothing the Catholike vnitie. As for example, The Apoſtle ſayth: Receyue vnto you ỹ weake in faith, not in diſputing and troubling hys conſcience. One man beléeueth that he may eate all things, an other bycauſe ỹ he is weake, eateth hearbes. Why dothe the weake man eate hearbes? Bycauſe he beléeueth that he ought not to eate what he liſteth: and ſo he differeth from the faith of his brother whiche is ſtronger, who beléeueth ỹ it is lawfull for a Chriſtian man to eate what meate he liſt. Agayne, ſome man beléeueth that there is a difference in dayes, and another beléeueth that there is none: and the one hath a regard of the day and the other hath none: This varietie of faith dothe not breake the vnitie of the Catholike fayth, nor it hyndereth it not, but that both maye ſtande faſt ynough in the Catholike fayth, as well hée whyche beléeueth that he may eate all meates, and maketh no difference betwixte day and daye, as hée alſo that beléeueth that hée ought not to eate and putteth difference betwixte day and day. For notwithſtandyng all thys kinde of diſſention, yet there remaineth ſafe and ſound in the Churche, the whole communion of ſelowlhyppe of the myſteries of God and prayers, bycauſe his loue is ſaued, and the band of peace ſtandeth whole and ſounde. But whereas there dothe ryſe anye contentions in the Church vpon opinions of doctrine, worſhippes and obſeruations, contrary vnto Goddes worde, then it is not poſſible, that ſauing the vnitie of the catholike faith, thoſe things ſhoulde be beléeued and maintayned, which be both falſe, and ioyned alſo wyth vngodlyneſſe and ſuperſtition. He that doth beléeue thoſe thinges to be true and Chriſtian, doth depart from the true and only fayth of the Church, although hée wyth his mouthe confeſſe the ſame with others. And in caſe there doe ariſe diſſencions and ſchiſmes hereupon, they be in the blame which do maintayne the falſe faythe, and not they whiche doe withſtand it. And it maketh no matter whiche parte hée more or greater in number. For the Church it ſelfe doth not iudge accordyng vnto the multitude, nor it is not to be iudged after the conſente of the greater number, but after the manifeſt truth erpreſſed in the holy ſcriptures.

How faith in the Church is one.

Rom. 14.

X. Of the povver of the Church.

IT is not méete nor conuenient, ỹ we ſhould referre thoſe things whiche we ſhall ſpeake of the power of the Church, vnto that one vniuerſall Churche ſpread through out all the world: but we muſt referre them vnto vnto the members thereof, that is to ſay, vnto the particular churches, and that indifferently vnto euery one of them. For there is no reaſon that any one Church of Chriſt ſhoulde bée eſtéemed to haue leſſe eccleſiaſticall power than others whiche bée more wealthy and famous, bycauſe of the baſeneſſe of the powerty of them, and fewneſſe of the faithfull conteyned in the ſame: For lyke as the aduancement of riches & the baſeneſſe of powerty doth not make a byſhop higher or lower, euē ſo it maketh not the authoritie of the Churche nor greater nor leſſer. But whereas we do ſée nowadayes, that ſome ſmaller churches be ſubiect vnto the greater, it is more worldly than churchlike, whether it came of that that the leſſe churches of their owne accord haue ſubmitted and yelded their authoritie vnto the greater, as to the Metropolitane & mother Churches, or elſe that they haue ſuffered the ſame power to be taken frō them by the ſecular power, whether they woulde or not. Again, we wil not ſpeake of ſuch power as is peculiar to the miniſters of the word in the Churche, leaſt wée ſhall fondly confounde matters that be of theſelues diſtinct. And we haue ſpoken thereof alſo before, as muche as we thought néedefull, in the place of The miniſters of the word.

And forasmuche as apperteyneth vnto this preſente, euery particulare Churche hath thrée kind of powers. The firſt is that whiche all faithfull may & ought to vſe, to the intent that euery man may haue regarde of hys owne health: the ſame is the power to iudge of thoſe things whiche bée heard in the Church, and to eſchewe the ſayings of them whiche be ſtrangers vnto the ſame. We do not hereby giue authoritie, as ſome Sophiſters do, to the church, to iudge of the holy and Canonicall ſcriptures. Auguſtine ſpeaketh of thys matter in this wiſe: Therefore ſpirituall perſons, either ſuche as do gouerne, eyther ſuch as do obey, do iudge ſpiritually, not of the ſpirituall caſes which do ſhine in the firmament (by the firmamente he dothe meane the holye Scripture, in the ſame booke, the xv. chapter:) for they may not iudge of ſo high an authoritie, nor vppon the booke it ſelfe, in caſe there be in that any thing which is not apparant: for we ſubmit oure vnderſtanding vnto that: and we be aſſured, that the ſame which is hidden from our ſightes, is aright and truly ſayd. For though a man be ſpirituall and renewed vnto the knowledge of God, according vnto his image who created him, yet he muſte be the doer of the lawe and not iudge of it. And in the end of the ſame chapiter: For it is ſaid, that he iudgeth in thoſe things which he hath authoritie to reforme. This ſayeth Auguſtine. So that whereas the Apoſtle ſaith: Let two or thre prophets ſpeake and the reſt iudge, he ſpeaketh not of thoſe things whiche be ſpoken out of the holy ſcriptures, but of the other doctrines which be ſet forth by the prophets vnto ỹ church. Wherefore we muſt not herken vnto them whiche doe giue authoritie vnto the church to iudge of ỹ holy ſcriptures, in which reſpect they do aduance the ſea of Rome abone ỹ ſame. They ſay the ſcripture is not authenticall and alowable without the authority of ỹ church. And for this purpoſe they do

The povver to iudge in thoſe thinges vvhich be heard in the church. Auguſtin. Lib. confeſſ. 13. cap. 23.

1 Cor. 14.

alleage

allcage that out of Augustine: I had not beleeued the Gospell, vnlesse the authoritie of the Church had moued mee.

1 But what is to bee aunswered thereunto, we declared before in the place of holy Scriptures. The wicked generation of men, they doe suppresse the authoritie that is giuen to the Church, which is to iudge of opinions and traditions of menne, and they doe attribute that power vnto the Churche of Rome, whiche is not giuen vnto it at all.

Power to excommunicate.

2 The second power of ỳ Church is the same, whiche it oughte to vse, and the Ministers and pastors of it also, by the common verdicte of the faithfull, if it haue no christian magistrate. This the Apostle setteth forth in hys cause which kept his fathers wife. For I saith he, as absent in body, and presente in spirite, haue nowe determined as well as though I were present, that he whiche hathe done this facte, shall be deliuered, by you assembled togither and my spirit with you in the name and power of our Lord Jesus Christ, vnto Satan to the destruction of the flesh, that the spirite may be saued in the daye of our Lorde Jesu. This sayeth the Apostle: and that whiche followeth of the cleansing out of the olde leuen, and casting out of the euill out of the Church. This power of euery particular Church, that is, to excommunicate the reprobate persons, the Bysshop of Rome hath disanulled and taken away, for as muche as he hathe chalenged the same vnto himselfe ouer all the Churches of Christe, not to the intente to vse it better to the health of the faithfull, but rather vnto the oppression of all mē, yea kings also and princes, and to the most wicked gaine of his court.

1. Cor. 5.

3 The third power of the Church is that which the faithfull folke vsed iointly, but without any consente of the ministers when they had no christian magistrate, when they dyd renounce and depose their naughty pastors, and chose themselues better in their stede: Of this ỳ blessed Martyr Cyprian maketh mention, and that not lightly but very vehemently, saying: Nor lette not the people flatter themselues, as though they coulde be free from danger of sinne, when they do communicate with a sinfull priest, and doe giue their consent vnto the wrongfull and vnlawfull ordinance of their Bishop or head, whereas the sentence of God, dothe threaten and say by Osee the Prophet: Their sacrifices be as the bread of wayling, all they whiche do eate of it, shall bee defyled, teaching no doubt and declaring, that all they be tyed vnto sinne whiche are defyled with the sacrifice of a prophane and vnlawfull priest. And a little after that. Wherefore the people that is obedient vnto Gods commaundements, and whiche feareth God, must sequester them selues frō the sinfull ouerseer, and not entermedle himselfe with the sacrifice of the sinfull priest: forasmuch as they themselues haue speciall power eyther to chose worthy priestes, either to refuse the vnworthie. This sayth he: I pray you, howe is it that they whiche do nowe a dayes crake, that they haue the power of the Church, do not see, that it is by no men more oppressed than by the Bishops themselues, and other Prelates? But of this

Power to depose naughty pastors, and to chose better.

this kynde of Churche power, wee haue spoke before, whereas we spake of the Election of the ministers.

They whiche vnder the pretence, that they be the Churche, for rule the Church as they list, do giue vnto it so large a scope & power, ỳ vtterly they may also eyther chaunge, either abrogate all statutes and lawes, as well of the Apostles, as of others.

1 The lawe (say they) Remember that thou keepe holye the Sabbath day. Sixe dayes shalte thou worke, and doe all thy worke, but the seuenth day, is the sabbath of the Lorde thy God. &c. and yet the church by their authoritie hath changed the sabbath day into the Sunday. Item, Christ saide vnto his Disciples vppon the Mounte: I came not to breake the law, but to fulfill the lawe: and yet the Apostles Churche, at their firste Councell, did boldely pronounce of the ceassing of the lawe matters.

3 Farther they say: The Apostles decreed in their councell, that menne should abstayn from choked meates & blood: & yet for all that the churche by their authoritie hath altered and abrogated the matter, so clerely and expressly defined vpon: for they do at libertie vse choked meats & blud. Lo the authoritie of the Churche is also aboue the decrees of the Apostles.

Vnto this we doe answer in fewe wordes. The precepte of the Sabbath forasmuch as it dothe concerne the litterall obseruation of it, was temporarie, & therfore was taken away as a figuratiue shadow, not by the authoritie of the Church, but by the truth it selfe, whiche appeared in Christ. And therefore it is, that the Apostle sayth: Let no man therfore iudge vs in meate or drinke, or in a parcell of the holy day, or of the new Mone, or of the Sabbaths, which be figures of things to come, but the bodie is in Christ. Wherefore in that that the Lawish figuratiue and shadowish Sabbath is taken awaye, it was done nother contrary vnto the holie and Apostolike Scripture, neither yet by the authoritie of ỳ churche. Yea and some of the aduersaries doe ascribe the taking away of the Sabbath, and the institution of the Sunday, vnto the traditions of the Apostles, and not vnto ỳ Church. Wherefore it is to no purpose that they doe argue heere: The Churche changed the Sabbath into the Sunday, Ergo it is lawfull for the Sea of Rome to doe any thing against scripture. 2 As for the ceasing of the lawishe decrees, the Apostles dyd pronounce, as that the vse of them was taken away indeede, by the dispensation of the newe Testament. Then they did not take away the lawe decrees, but did onely declare, that they were taken away by Christe. As for the law it selfe, Christ did not take it away, but he did fulfill it: Nor the Apostles nother did not take it away, but rather established it. We doe establish and not vndoe the law, sayth the Apostle. No nor Christe nor the Apostles did not abolishe the lawe of God, in almuch as it is eternall and remaining for euer into all worldes. Nor yet the Apostles did not pronounce that the rites and ceremonies of the lawe were abolished, as by their owne authoritie, but as taken away by Christ. Wherefore the aduersaries doe proue nothing, nother hereby. And yet suppose that there be samewhat to be giuen to the authoritie of the Apostles, shall we therefore straightway giue all power vnto the sea of Rome, to ordeine, chãge, and abrogate what they list in the Church? yea and that contrary vnto holy Scripture? and vnder the colour of the church? where as there is no suche power in any place giuen vnto the Church. 3 Vnto the third obiection we do answer, That the churche which folowed next after the tymes of the Apostles did not ordeyne any thing contrarye vnto the decrees of the Apostles, in that they began to vse bloud and choked meates. For the Apostles did not so determine, that menne should for euer abstayne from bloud and choaked meates, but that the Churches of the Gentiles should for a tyme applye themselues vnto the weaknesse of them, whiche beléeued of the Iewes in Christ, and were yet in their conscience bounde vnto the lawe of Moyses, that they should not be offended in this matter. Wherefore at what time the feare of such sort of offence was taken away there was no reason to continue any longer in the decrée of the Apostles, & therfore it begã to ware weak of it self, & to decay by litle & litle. And it is no néede to haue it proued, ỳ it was abrogat by any cõtrary decrée of the catholike churche. This I thought good briefly to note of the power of ỳ church, which our aduersaries do auãce vp to ỳ skies, forasmuch as vnder the color therof, they do rule and reigne in the church, much like vnto thẽ which in the ciuile policy do prouide for their own priuat welth, and vnder the color of a cõmon welth, do oppresse the common welth: they do talk maruelous nobly of the cõmon welth, & auãce it exceedingly in words & set forth the authority of it, to ỳ intẽt, they may be able to order euery thing at their libertie in it, & do euery thing ỳ boldlier, in ỳ sort (which is worst of all) ỳ if any of the state doth speake against their wicked gouernãce, he shalbe take for an enimy of ỳ cõmon welth: whereas in dede the cõmon welth hath no crueller enimyes than they be which séeme to be ỳ patrones of ỳ same. We sée, ỳ the state of the church is altogither like now adays, which wold to god ỳ christian princes wold once vnderstand, who ought to be the patrons of Christes Church against all kynds of iniuries and wrongs, rather than the maynteiners of them which do oppresse it.

Rom. 8.

A Similitude.

XI. Whether that the church may erre

Our aduersaries doe vse a newe shift ỳ was neuer herd of amõg the old fathers: in ỳ they do maintein ỳ the church cãnot erre. Surely if we shuld yéelde to thẽ but in this poynte alone, they wold think ỳ they might be safe, & surely settled in their kingdom, & least it might be proued ỳ the church haue erred, & least they should giue vs way to proue that it hath erred, they do flée vnto this shift, to persuade al mẽ ỳ the church cãnot erre. 1. The church they say, is ỳ spouse of Christ, Christe doth not forsake his spouse, Ergo it cãnot erre. 2. Itẽ, The church is the kingdom of heauen. It appereth in the parables, in Mathew how then could kalhod haue reigned so many yeres in the kingdom of heuẽ? 3 Itẽ, The church is gouerned by the rule of the holy spirit, and the anoynting of the holy spirite doth alwayes wayes teach the churche. Ergo it can not erre. 4 Item, The church is the piller & foundation of the truth, howe then cã it erre? We answer briefly. We do know right wel, ỳ the church is the only and welbeloued spouse of Christ, the kingdom of heauen, that it is ruled by the maistrie & leading of ỳ holy spirit, & that we be alwayes taught by his anoynting, and that it is the piller & foundatiõ of the truth. But these sayings do pertain not vnto al particular churches, but vnto ỳ only, vpright & catholik church, whiche is the cõmunion of the saints and elects throughout al the world, whiche doth beleue in Christ their Lord and spouse in all ages. And touchyng this, there is no variance. There is none of vs that doth say, that the catholike Church hath erred in ỳ faith of Christ. For how can it erre when it followeth Christ, & walketh not in darkenes, but hath the light of lyfe? Christ hath not forsakẽ it, nor neuer wil forsake it, all our whole strife is vpõ the particulare churches, which be mingled with good and euill togyther. They not only cã erre, but also haue erred, and doe erre yet in many points: And forasmuch as they cõfesse the Apostolike and catholike fayth, so far forth they do not erre: In case ỳ they doe with a true hearte beléeue the same, which they do confesse with their mouth. But forasmuch as they haue forsaken the only mediator and sauiour, and are fallen vnto fornication with creatures, and do leaue the calling off, of the olde man, and lyue not vnto Christ but vnto the world, and that they doe applye their eares turned from the truth, vnto the voice of strangers and to fables, and do gather vnto thẽ maisters to please their itching eares, whiche ỳ Apostle shewed before thonlde come to passe: in this respect no doubt they haue erred For by these means they haue gotte thẽ such kind of maisters, ỳ they haue receiued & yelded vnto al inchs inuẽtions, til at length they became to be like most seruile bondslaues, & began to abide any that listed to bring them into slauery, any man that would deuoure them, any that woulde take any thing of them, any mã that would be aduanced ouer them, yea and if anye man that woulde strike them in the face. &c. Nowe whereas the Papistes do argue, that the churche can not erre, bycause it is the spouse of Christe, and that he can not forsake it: we do answer directly, that Christ hath not forsakẽ his church, but that his grace is always ready and at hãd to the beleuers. But héere standeth ỳ pointe of this case, whether that the church of Rome with the rest, whych be subiect vnto it, hath sincerely and stedfastly stickt vnto the doctrine of Christ our sauiour or no, & hath folowed always hir husband Christ, and hath neuer forsaken him, nor yélded vnto any strãgers: & whether it hath builded no hey nor stubble vpon the foũdation of the Apostles, yea & whether it hath not shakẽ & decaied ỳ foũdatiõ itself, if it wer not possible to be so, ỳ admonition of ỳ Apostle had bin to no purpose, which he gaue vnto ỳ Romains, saying: But in case any of the braunches be broken off, & they beyng a wild Oliue, thou being grafted into it, & made partner of the rote & fatnesse therof, do not glory against ỳ braches. For if thou do glory, thou bearest not ỳ rote, but ỳ rote bereth Christ neuer forsooke hys Church.

Mathe. 22. 13.

Rom. xi.

thee.

thee. Then thou wilt saye, the braunches wer broke of, to the intent that I should be grafted in. Verye well. They were broken off for their unbeliefe, now thou standest by fayth, lowke not to high, but be afraid, for if God spared not ỹ natural branches, peraduenture he will not spare thee. See then the goodnesse and straightenesse of God: his straightenesse towards thom which fell, and his goodnesse towardes thee, if thou continue in goodnesse. Else thou shalt be cutte off also, &c. Againe, To what purpose did the holy spirite warne vs before, that they whiche would not receyue the loue of the truth, should be giuen into a reprobate vnderstanding, to beleeue lyes: Item, That ther should be men in the Churche, and procéede out of it, which should erre theselues and deceyue others: And what hadde the Apostle néeded to feare, least that the faithfull Corinthians should bée seduced from the simplicitie whiche is in Chriſte Iesu by the suttletie of the serpent, if this were to be graunted to any particular Churche, and specially vnto the Church of Rome, that it coulde not erre: What auayled, I beseéke you, the aduise of Pope Hormisda, giuen to the Bishops of Spayne in this wise: Déerely beloued bréethren, let vs make continual prayers vnto the Lorde, and beseéke him with our dayly prayer, that wée may both in teaching and worke cleaue vnto him, whose members we doe desire to be, and that wée neuer stray frō that way which is Chriſt, to go into a bypath, least we be worthily forsaken of him, whome we do wickedly forsake: In case the church of Rome with his Bishops can not erre, why did the Pope feare at that time, least they should sometime wickedly forsake Chriſt, and be worthily forsaken againe of him: But these matters bée laughed at by the Papistes, as assuring themselues that the Churche hath a trusty husbande, of whome she can not be forsaken, as though she coulde not forsake hyr husbande, specially in the reprobate, of which it hath great multitude, and by whose wickednesse and power she is seduced and oppressed: whiche as they be not from aboue, so they doe not esteéme heauenly things, but doe most greédyly gape after the worlde. We thinke that the reason of these men being very Iewish, is not much vnlike vnto that whiche we can not forbeare without laughing, whē we heare those women make nowe and then that be charged with the cryme of adultery and breache of wedlocke, when they wil crie out: Sir, I would you knewe it, I haue an honest man to my husbande, as though it were a rare matter that an honest mā might haue a harlot to his wife: and they consider not, that by the honesty of their husbandes, they doe not escape the rebuke of their naughtie life, but are rather more to be blamed for the same, as such whome neither the vnspotted faithe & honesty of their husbands could moue to obserue & kéepe the chastitie of wedlocke.

Pope Hormisda hys aduice.

2 To that that they saye: Error hathe no place in the Kingdome of Heauen, for therein reygneth truth: the Church is the kingdome of heauen: Ergo there is no errour in the Church. We do aunswere, that thys is true in that respect, that the church is the kingdome of Heauen, and not the the kingdome of the worlde and of the flesh. And it is sayd arighte of the true & Catholike Church of Saints, in as muche as it is obedientlye and faithfully subiect in all his members vnto oure Lorde Chriſte the king of heauens. But in as much as it is as in many of his mēbers very weake, like as it doth yet sinne, so it doth erre also in many poyntes. But they doe speake of the Romish Church, which is rather the kingdome of the world than of Heauen, in whiche vnder the pretence of religion, there raigneth more than a worldly couetousnesse, wantonnesse, pride, mischieuous simonie, wealth, power, &c. of Popes, Cardinals, Bishops, Priests, Friers and Monkes, with a Catholike idolatrie of the seduced multitude in all manner of superstitions, and howe can suche a Church be taken for the kingdome of Heauen?

It is greeuouser to do vvickedly, than simply to erre.

But graunte. Let the Churche of Rome be the kingdome of heauen for a few electes sake which be in it, yet it followeth not thereof, that it can not erre. For as the kingdome of heauen is the kingdome of truth, so it is also the kingdome of rightuousnesse. For it is written of our King, he shal reign in iudgement and righteousnesse. Wherefore if the argument be good, that there can be no errour in the Church, bycause it is called the kingdome of heauen in which raigneth truth, by like reason a man may argue thus: In the church whiche is the kingdome of heauen, there is no sinne and vnrightuousnesse, for as much as the kingdome of heauen is the kingdome of rightuousnesse: Therefore like as the Churche doth not erre, so it dothe not sinne nother. But the Churche of Rome dothe so muche sinne, as well in the Prelates as in the common sorte, that there is none of the Papistes so shamelesse, whiche can denie, but that there is plentie of sinne in it, and that moste grieuous and abhominable. Nowe what can be deuised more vnreasonable, than that they doe denay that there cā be any erroure in ỹ Church of Rome, when it is manifest that it is drowned vppe in moste detestable wicked life, as though it were not more grieuous in Goddes sighte to worke and liue wickedly, than simply to erre: And the cause of this vnreasonablenesse is this, It séemeth to be a foule matter to the ringleaders of the church, as guides of the Lords flocke, to haue erred so enormiously, and to haue seduced the lords shéepe, but withall, to haue sinned so sore in many poyntes, they take it to be nothing so much shame. For they séeme to sinne as menne, and that it is common to them with others. But for to erre as the guides of mē, they thinke it a matter not tolerable. In case a Maryner be a wicked person in manye respectes, he is borne withall, so that he be skilfull vpon the sea. And they doe suppose that the case of the Prelates of the Churche is alike. So that they erre not in religion, but do teache the people aright, they thynke they may be borne withall, how greuously so euer they doe sinne. And therefore they deny not but that they be sinners, but they doe denay that they doe erre. And they be afrayde withall, least their kingdome be gon, if it be tryed that they haue seduced the people.

A similitude.

3 It is a like matter that they s..

The Churche is ruled by the holy spirite. Ergo it erreth not.

The Churche is ruled by the gouernaunce of the holy spirite, and that it is taught by the annoyntment thereof, Ergo it dothe not erre. It is true, the Churche is ruled by the gouernaunce of the holy spirite, for the elect and faithfull be taughte by his annoyntment. And as far forth as it obeyeth the gouernaunce of the spirit, so farre forthe in deede it erreth not. But it can not be proued, that it hath obeyed it in all things, so that it neuer erred. The firste fathers of the Church did sometime erre in the obseruaunce of the lawithe customes. And besides that, how oft and in how manye poyntes did the Churches of the Apostles erre, whyles that the Apostles were yet alyue? And howe must not the like betide vs after that they were giuen? And who will say, that the firste Churches had not the gouernance of the spirite?

The Church is the piller of the truth Ergo it erreth not.

Fourthly, whereas they do obiect that of the Apostle, that the Churche of the liuing God is the piller and foundation of the truth, and doe gather also therevpon, that the churche of Rome can not erre, they do againe chalenge that vnto them, whiche is proper vnto the true and Catholike Church only, and therevpon they doe gather that which is false. Augustine in his preface vpon the 47. Psalme, alleageth this place of the Apostle in this wise. Therefore we must vnderstand by the second of the sabboth, none but the Churche of Christ, but the Church of Christ in the Saincts, the Church of Christ in them which be written in heauen, the Churche of Christe in them, whiche do not yelde vnto the temptations of this worlde. For they be worthy to beare ỳ name of the firmamente. Therefore the Church in them which be strong (of whome the Apostle sayth, We whyche be strong, must beare with the infirmities of the weake) is called the firmamente. Whereof it is song in the Psalme: Let vs heare, let vs knowe, let vs sounde, let vs glory, let vs raigne. For heare you and know, that the same also is called the firmament by the writings of the Apostles; Whiche is (saith he) the church of the liuing God, the piller and firmament of truth. This sayeth Augustine, whereby he doth expound the Apostles woords of the Church, not in respecte that it is mingled with good and euill, but as it abideth firme and stedy in the electes, bycause that like as it standeth stedfast and firme in the electe, so in the euill and reprobate, of which it is exceding full, it dothe not stand stedy, but it is ouerwhelmed and ouerthrowen. But nowe whereas oure variaunce is not aboute the Churche in respecte that it is grounded and stayed in the electe, in fayme faithe vpon Christe the rocke, and so is called here the firmament by Augustine: but in that respect that it is mingled with good and euill, and doth in the euill sinne much and erre, and doth fall, and is ouercome, there was no neede to alleage this place of the Apostle againste vs, as though we dyd say, that the Church of Chryste hathe altogyther in all his members swarued from the truth of Chrystes doctrine. All our variance is aboute the correctyng of the errors in the Churche. Therefore it maketh nothing againste vs, that the Apostle doth in this respecte call the Churche of Christ, The piller and establishement ment of the truth, in that it continueth in the woord of the truth vntill the verye ende, whereas in the meane whyles the whole worlde eyther in the Churche, eyther out of the churche is ouerflowen wyth lyes and errors.

The Church of Ierusalem vnder the Apostles erred a greate whyle. Acts.21.

Chrysostome dothe expound thys place in this sorte. Not as that Iewish Church: for this is that whiche conteyneth the faith (that is to saye, the piller and establishmente of the truth) and the preaching. For truthe is the piller and establishment of the Church. This sayeth he. And he maketh not the Churche to be the piller and establishment of the truthe, but the truth of the Churche. For it is so also in the Greke copy, so that the translator can not be blamed. And howsoeuer it be expounded, ther can be nothing else proued vppon it, but that the truthe, whiche is the piller and establishment of the church, doth make the church stable and stedye: which we doe earnestly confesse and embrace. Then saye they, Howe can the church erre? I answere. Like as it is fast and firme in ỳ true faithful, and walking in the way of the truth, in asmuche as they doe with sincere faith sticke vnto their sauior Christ: so it is weake, and erring nowe and then, for asmuche as it yeldeth ouermuche vnto the flesh in the weaker & imperfecter members. I passe ouer the reprobates, whereas they do not receiue the spirite of the truthe, and be more of the worlde than of the church; though they be accounted in it, so they bee farre wide from thys sentence of Paule, and they doe not only erre, but they do also eyther violently compel the true members of the churche vnto their errors, or else they do craftely by deceit of hypocrisie & dissembled talke, abuse the & allure thē vnto the same. The primitiue church of Christ in Iury stayed a great while in the obseruatiō of lawish decrees, as we may perceyue in the Actes. You doe see brother (sayde Iames and the elders of the church) how many thousands ther be among ỳ Iewes, which haue beleued, & al be folowers of the law, &c. I would but aske of oure aduersaries, whether ỳ they will say that the same church were the piller & establishment of the truth. I thinke they wil not denye it.

Againe, whether ỳ they do thinke, that the same did erre in suche obseruation of the lawe, of whiche Paule dothe plainely testifie: If you be circumcised, Christ shall profite you nothing. If they be of that opiniō, then they must nedes graunte of necessitie, that the same Church erred whiche was the piller and the establishment of the truth. If they do denie it, what doe they else but condemne the Apostle: But they wil not condemne the Apostle: that is to say, they wyll not seme to be such maner of men, as shoulde condemne the Apostle: Ergo, the Church did erre. Then if that the church which was planted by Christ himselfe, and guided by the teachyng of the holy spirite, by so manifest argumentes coulde erre in a matter of so greate a waighte, in the Apostles days, let them giue me a reason why that the Church gathered out of the Gentiles, being ouerwhelmed wyth so many constitutions of men, coulde not erre after the Apostles tymes.

What neede many woords? Let vs deuide the Churche into his parties, that we may see by them what maye be truly sayd of the whole. Lette vs first consider of him, whome they do make the pastor of the vniuersall Church, the Apostle Peter himselfe. Is it not written that he was reprehended of Paule, bycause that he proceeded not the ryghte way wyth the rest of the Apostles, whiche seemed to be the pillers of the Churche, to the Gospell of Christ: if this could come to passe to Peter and some others of the principal Apostles, what errour could not take place in theyr successors? If they did erre, and that erroꝛ maye take place also in theyr successors, why may it not do so also in other faithfull folke of whome the church is made? And seeing that the Church may erre in all his members, it followeth, that it can not bee sayde of the whole bodye, that it can not erre. But yet in respecte, that it doth cleaue fast in sincere faith vnto Christ hys sauiour, pastor, and doctor, in that respecte it dothe not erre.

Peter erred

If the church of christ can not erre, then the church of Rome, bicause it doeth erre, is not of Christ.

Before I make an ende of thys place, I will admonishe our aduersaries, that they wil consider into what dangers they do dryue the churche of Rome, when they affirme of it, that it can not erre, bycause that it is the spouse of Christe, and the kingdome of Heauen: and that it is gouerned by the teaching and annoyntmente of the holye spirite, and that it is the piller and establishment of the truth. For what can else follow vpon this, but that it is neyther the spouse of Christe, and kingdome of Heauen, nor that it is gouerned by the teaching and annoyntment of the holye spirit, nor that it ought to be reputed for the piller and establishmente of the truth, in case that it may be conuinced of anye errourc. If it be none of these, what is it else, but the church of malignantes, the harlot of Antichrist, the slaue of cuill spirites, and the forge of all kind of lyes: In thys admonition I haue not to doe wyth the elect, which do yet erre in ỹ same, but with al them which do raigne in it, and doe withstande the trueth of Christ, not vpon erroꝛ, but vpon the zeale of the flesh, of their priuat gain, and vayne glozy, and do stand at vtter defiance with the true members of the Churche.

Briefly, There be two kindes of errors, as there be two sortes of the Christians whiche do erre: that is to say, the elect and the reprobate. The one kinde is, when that the truth of God is vtterly forsaken, so that they can not abide anye more to heare of it. Of this kinde of errors Paule speaketh, whē he sayth, that the time shall come, when menne shall turne their eares frō the truth vnto fables: and that God should sende them the effecte of strong delusion, that they shoulde beleeue lyes, and be iudged whiche haue not beleeued the truth: that in the latter dayes some should fall from the faithe, harkening to spirites of erroꝛ: and that cuill men and deceyuers should proceede on, to the worse, erring and seducing. In thys kynde of erroꝛ the reprobate doe erre not of ignorauncc onely, but (as it is in the Psalme) of hearte also. In them the Churche dothe erre outragiously. And ỹ saying of Christ is knowen: False Christians and false prophets shall arise, and worke signes and wonders, so that the elect, if it be possible, maye bee ledde into errors.

Another kynde of erroꝛ is, when menne do erre in any thing through ignorauncc, so that in the meane tyme they departe not from the true faythe in Christe, and hys grounde. Suche an erroꝛ is venial or pardonable, as Paule witnesseth, whych dothe attribute vnto the Bysshoppe Christe, that hee is mercifull and that hee can haue pitie vpon them whyche do erre. In thys kynde of erroꝛ the Churche maye erre in the electes also, vntyll that the tyme of the perfecte knowledge doe come. And who is able to rehearse all the errors of all ages, and particulare Churches? Was it not an erroꝛ as well in the Churche of Rome as also of Aphricke, when the sacramente of the Lordes supper was so gyuen of necessitie vnto infants, as though they coulde not be saued, albeit that they were baptised, in case that they were preuented by death, and departed out of this life withoute it? If thys was an errour, Ergo the church erred. If it was not, then it is nowe an erroꝛ, that they whiche came after, haue both done and taught otherwise, so that the whole Churche of Rome, dothe nowe erre in that matter. These kindes of errours be not so hainous, that they do exclude them that doe erre from Christ: yet for all that, they may not be dissembled but serue to the truth against them whiche doe shamelesly defende, that the Churche can not erre. For if the electe be sometimes subiecte vnto errors, with what face can it be granted to the reprobate in the Churche, that they can not erre?

XII. Whether that a Christian man may depart from the Church withoute blame.

Seeing that it is méete that there should be great vnitie and concord betwixt the Church and the pastors & al the members of the church, it doth easily appeare, that there is nothing more vnseemly, than if either the Pastor or the faithfull Christian do forsake the Church, or the church depart from his Pastor, or shake off any faithfull person out of the societie of the members. Wherfore it is not to be demaunded only, whether that it be lawfull for a christian man to depart from the churche, but there is a question to be moued also, whether that it be lawfull for the Pastor or the Church to shake of any Christian man out frō them, & to exclude him from the felowship of the faythfull. For wee see that bothe of these things be done. The churche is often times forsaken by the faithfull, and it bothe also sundry tymes forsake his members: yea rather it bothe cutte them off, and reiecte them from hauing to doe with it. Who perceiueth not that it is as vnmeet for the churche to forsake his members? I saye not vtterly to caste them off, as it is vnseemly for the faithfull to forsake the churche being the body, whereof they bee the members, and to sequester themselues altogither from hauing to do withall: Wherfore it is to be demaunded of wyse men, vppon what causes both is done. In worldly matters ther is nothing more fast and straight, than the knot or bonde of the husband and wife. And yet wee do see, that it happeneth so often, that the husband doth forsake his wife, or the wife depart from the husbande: againe, that eyther the parentes doe cast off their childre, or that the children of their owne minde do departe from their parents, in which chances it is not the fact only that is considered, but principally the causes and circumstances of the facte. Likewise in this question whiche we doe talke of nowe, we muste not immediately iudge of the fact, but search the causes of it. A Christian man is cast out of the Church by the president, or elders of the Church, the fact of it selfe is not pleasaunt to the Churche, and yet it is so done, if it bee not rashlye and unaduisedly done, but vppon necessarie causes, that it is not to bee blamed. A Christian man departeth from the Churche, the facte of it selfe is not meete for a member of the Churche, but for all that yet if there be good causes why he ought so to do, he is without blame, and Paule dyd excommunicate in the Church of the Corinthians a Christian man, yea betoke him vnto Satan. This facte was in it selfe very lamentable, and vnmeete both for the Apostle, and the Church of Christ also, but the causes do excuse the fact. There haue many at all times forsaken the Churche of Christ. Julian the Apostata departed from the Church of Christe. And in case he had a iust and necessary occasion, he had not bin worthy to haue bin called an Apostata.

That the Church doth oftentimes forsake the faithful and that she is also forsaken.

Julian Apostata.

VVhy wee haue forsaken the Romishe Churche.

Now for our time the Papists do call vs Apostatas, as many of vs as do forsake the felowship of ỳ Church of Rome. We do not denye the doing of it, but thinke that we haue cause rather to glory of it, than to dissemble it or to be afrayd of it. Wherefore lette them whiche will iudge of oure going from it, consider and examine not the simple facte onely, but the causes of it also, least they fall in their iudgement. Let them not stand vpon the reportes, wherby the church of Rome doth aduance it selfe aboue all the rest, in that that it calleth it selfe the Apostolike, Catholike, and Mother of all Churches: nor let not men suffer themselues to be decepued by the opinion of the olde Churche, but let them consider as it is now at this present, and they shall surely find it most contrary to the olde. Fyrste lok me vpon their wicked lordlinesse expressly forbidden by Christ, wherby they haue chalenged vnto them the maistery ouer the Churches of Christe. Secondly, their holy robberies, their most damnable heresie of simony, whiche did firste assaulte the Church of Christ, whereby they sell their keyes of authoritie, all their holy things, their alters, and Christe himselfe: and they do not sell it only, but they doe firste buy it, so that they sell it not as receyued freely, but as bought full dearely before. Thirdly, that most dissolute excesse in fare and apparell, their abundance of riches gotten by crafte & deceyt, passyng the treasures of Princes, their most abhominable lecherie, wherby not only the Papistes themselues are abhorred of God & men, but they haue a great while also replenished other churches altogither with whordoms and adulteries: by their diuelish single life and forbidding of lawful mariage: & what doth this report testify else else of the churche of Rome, but that it is very Babylon, and the seate of of Antichrist? This Bernarde sawe whē he said: The very offices also of the Ecclesiastical dignitie ar turned into filthy gaine and traffike of darknesse, nor there is not sought by thē the saluatiō of soules, but the excesse of riches. Therefore they be shorne, therfore they do oftētimes go to the churches, therfore they say Masse, & sing Psalmes. They do striue shamfully now a days for Bishoprikes, for Archedeaconrikes, for Abbotships & other dignities, to wast the reuenues of the Churches in superfluous and vain vses. The remainer is, that the man of sinne be discouered, the childe of perdition, the Diuell not onely of the daye, but of the nowe day tyde: whyche is not onely transfigured into the Aungell of lyght, but is auanced also aboue al that is called God, or that is worshipped. This sayeth he vpon the nynetie and one Psalm. Doth he not expressely declare, that the sea of the Courte of Rome is the sea of Antichrist: when he sayth, that the discouering of the man of sin is at hand, the son of perdition, the nowtide Diuell transfygured into the Aungell of lighte, whyche is auanced aboue all that is called GOD, or that is worshypped. Whereby dide he gather that the discouering of Antichrist was at hande? Truly by those things which he saw done openly at Rome, not as Apostolik, but as Apostatike: yea he saw it not symplie done, but so shamfully growne in that hugenesse, that there could be nothing else to be loked for at hande, but the discouering of the sea of Antichrist, whiche hath now ensued in our age. Therefore seing that nowe the man of sinne is discouered, the chylde of perdition, yea the Diuell of none dayes that Antichriste of Rome, wyth what conscience shoulde wee remayne in the communion and obedience of hym? And howe canne hē whyche consydereth this, fynde faulte with our departure? We were worthie to bee blamed for a runnagate, that would departe from the true Churche of Christe, and from Christe himself: but not so if a man forsake the malignaunte Churche and Antichrist wythall.

VVhether the communion of the Churche maye be forsaken vvithout blame.

But some man wil say: I graunte you that Antichriste, and all false pastors ought to be forsaken, may a mā therfore wythout blame leaue the cōmunion of the Churche? I answere. The cōmunion of the Church as it is nowadays, cannot be obserued without the company of ỳ Papists, for al Churches be subiecte vnto them, and the vse of all holy things are in their handes, whyche bee all confedered wyth Antichriste, and defiled either wyth Simony, eyther with Whordome, or wyth them bothe. And the Canons doe forbidde vs the communion of Simonistes, and do suspende all their ministery, and in their own law it is forbidde that any mā shulde heare the Masse of a priest, whom hē knoweth certainely to haue a concubine. But how say you, that they haue also falsified the very sacraments, in whiche the communion of the Churche doeth consiste? And haue defiled the Churches wyth corrupt doctrine and seruice? whereof there is no tyme to speake at thys present. The Apostle forbiddeth vs to be confeder-red with whoremongers, Idolaters, couetous persons, and extortioners, so that we shoulde not as muche as eate with them, how coulde he abide it if a man woulde bee partener of their doings? But these folke be not only Idolaters, that is to saye, worshippers of Images, but they would compell vs also to communicat with them in the worshippe of Images, praying vnto Saincte, and to take part of their Malles. I speake not of the bloud of the sheepe and Martyrs of Christ, which they haue most cruelly shedden in our dayes, and do yet shed most greedily. These be of many greeuous and waighty causes, sufficiente to serue for this case, whereby wise men may vnderstande, that wee do not vnadusedly, and for naughte depart from the church of Rome. Let them on the other side giue a reason why they doe pronounce that we bee straungers, and out of the communion of the true and catholike churche.

Dist. 32. Can. Nullus audiat Missam.

Of the Sacramentall signes Generally.

The scrupulositie of learned men hath made the matter of the sacraments intricate.

NOwe that wee haue spoken of the Church, & haue touched those things which may bee profitablye considered therein, I thinke it conuenient to say somewhat of ỹ Sacramental signes. I know that I doe enter into a very contentious matter, and very intricate, not of it selfe, but by the scrupulositie of some learned men, whyche doctrine was fyrste darkened by the cloudes and mistes, that the Schole doctors and fonde fryers haue ouercast it withall, and afterwards when it myghte haue haue bin opened and brought into lyghte, it was brought farther out of frame, by the odious contentions of some learned persons, so that asmuche as in them lay, they made that matter to be odiouse, whyche ought to be specially desired and soughte for. But what shall I do? Albeit that I shall bee in daunger of many mens iudgements, yet I muste proceede and kepe my course whyche I haue vndertaken to the profyte of good folke. I beseeke God that hee wyll temper and moderate it with hys spirite, and graunte that we swarue not from the ryghte marke. My meaning is to treate of thys matter as playnely as I can, bycause of the children of lyght: simply, bycause of the simple, ignoraunte and rude: profytablye, bycause I woulde not offende, but edifye the godlye: and religiously, bycause of the holye maiestie of the mysteries of God.

I. What a Signe is.

When signes, a signification.

FIrste we muste see what a signe is: As well the Greeke worde σημεῖον, as the Latine worde signum, doth the sufficientlye declare, that those things and doings be called signes, which doe signifie some thing: For it can not be a signe, where there is no signification. Therefore whether that the whole thyng do by the sighte and vse thereof signifye anye thyng, or whether it bee added to anye thyng, as some marke to bee for a knowlege: it is a right called a signe. Augustk. defineth a signe in this wise.

A

A Signe is a thing which besides ỹ matter that it presenteth to the senses, doth make some other thing therby to come into our thought: as whe we see a foote step, we do thinke that the beast whose step it is, hath passed there: and when we see smoke, wee know that there is fire: and by hearing the voyce of a beast, we vnderstand the affection of hys mynde: & at the sound of the trumpet, the souldiers do knowe that they must eyther marche on or retyre, according as matter of the battel requireth. This sayth he. Wherfore we must euen now at the first admonish the reader ỹ forasmuch as all doctrine is either of things, or of signes, ỹ he do cunningly make his difference: and consider ỹ in the things which they properly be in deede: and in signes not so much that whiche they be, but that which they do signify. For vnlesse he do so, he can not attaine to the perfect knowledge of the truth. For it is a perillous confusion & hindering our vnderstanding, when eyther the proper things be taken for signes, or signes for the very things in deede.

II. The kindes of Signes.

Signes giuen.

THere be many kinds of signes. Augustine doth deuide them into natural signes and signes giuen. He saith, that thei be natural signes which without wil and desire to signifie any thing, do make some other thing besides them selues to be knowe by thē, as the smoke doth, which doth signifie that there is fire. For the smoke doth it not of wil to signifie it, but it is well knowen by the perceyuing or marking of thinges proued, that there is fire withall, although ỹ there doe nothing appeare but smoke only. Like as the foote step is the signe of a beast, and the countenance the token of an angry mind. But our purpose is not at this present to speake of this kind of signes, For the sacramental signes whereof we must entreate be not of this sorte.

2 Signes giuen, maye be deuided into those signes which be giuen by God, and those which be giuen from men. Both be of that sorte that they do beare the signification either of things past, or present, or to come. Of things past, as the signes of remembrance & thankes giuing. Of things present, as the signes of grace, the signes of couenants: the signes of wines to be solde, the signes of the high way, the signes of seruice which men cal badges, &c. Of things to come, as the wonderfull tokens as wel in the skie, as in the earth. And we may recken among them also the Paschal lambe, & the brazen Serpent, in as much as they did prefigurate Christ. But leaning this diuision, let vs speake of the signes sente from God, in this respect, that some of them be miraculous and wonderful, and some not.

VVonderfull signes. Genes. 9. Iud. 6. Esai. 38. Matth. 25. Acts. 1.

1 Wonderful, as the raynebowe in the clouds. And those things whiche the Moyses did against Pharao: and the bush which was a fire, and burnt not: And the shadow of the diall turning back ten degrees: and the fleece of Gedeon: and the appearing of the holy spirite in the figure of a doue, at the Baptisme of Christ: And the fiery tongs, & such other like. Not marueilous, as Circumcisiō, the purifyings of the law, the lamb of the passeouer Signes not miraculous.

The vnleauened breade, the brazen serpent, the oyle wherwith the kings and priests were annoynted, & that whole ceremoniall maner of worshipping, appointed to the Israelites by Moses, ful of figures & shadowes of spiritual matters. And in the new Testament, Baptisme, the supper of the lord, the washing of fete, the breathyng of Christes mouth, whereby he gaue the holye spirite vnto hys Disciples: and such other lyke, whiche I remember not at this present. And whereas I do not rehearse the signe of the Lordes supper among those which be myraculous, I do it not alone: for Augustine hath done the same before, who doth recken ỳ bread of the lords supper amõg those signes, which after the ministerie is done, do passe & are consumed: & for as much as they be wrought by mẽ, they may haue honor as things religious, but men may not be abashed at them as wonderful. 2. Agayne, There is found among those signes which be giuen from God & without wonder, a diuersitie in the vse wherunto they be giuen. For some be to signifie and to admonish only, which haue no other vse, but to signifie and admonishe somewhat, as ỳ purifications of the lawe, the swete bread, and the other seruices of Moses. 2 Others haue not only the vse of signifying and admonishing, but the vse of confirming also: as Circumcision in the old law, called by the apostle Paul σφραγὶς, that is a seale for that intent, and baptisme in the new Testament, whiche both be aright called also the firste signes of admission. 3 Others do both signifie and offer somewhat withal, as the bread and wine in the lords supper, and the breathing of Christs mouth: and in the old testament the consecration which was done by annoint-ment: and that the Prophet Achias gaue vnto Hieroboam the kingdome of the ten tribes, by the tenne pieces of the clocke.

Iohn 20.

De Trini. lib. 3. cap. 10. Augustine doth recke the sacrament of the altar amõg the signes not very wonderfull.

Baptisme and Circumcision, signs mutuall.

Our purpose is not at this present to speake of all these kind of signes, but of them onely, whiche were not only done sometimes, but also be left and appointed to our vse by ỳ lorde in the new testament, which we doe now cal sacraments or sacramental signes. But by the way I suppose I do offend no good folk, in ỳ that I do cal the sacraments of the new testamen giuen by Christ Sacramentall signes. For two of the principall Doctors of the vniuersitie of Wittenberg haue done the same before me, namely Doctor Martin Luther, & Philip Melanchon. Of which the first sayth thus: But if I wil speake after the vse of the scripture, I haue but one sacrament, & three sacramental signes, & ỳ other sayth thus: First that (sayth he) which the cõmon people calleth a Sacrament, we doe call a sacramental signe, for Paul calleth Christ himselfe the sacrament. And he doth the same in his first Common places.

Rom. 4. Heb. 11.

De circumcis. Rom. 4.

Lib. de Babylonica. In praeambulo Concil.

And the knowledge of signes semed vnto Augustine a matter of so greate importaunce, ỳ he iudged it a matter méete to treate of diligently, as necessary vnto Christian doctrin, as you maye see in mo places than one in his writings.

What

III. What a Sacrament is.

The word sacramẽt, did not signifie the same with the olde writers as it doth now in the Churche. For they called a sacrament the oth, or religious bond, which was of ỳ strength of an othe. So they called ỳ souldiers othe, wherby they sware when they should go on warfare for the common wealth, that they should serue faithfully. The souldiers Sacramẽt, as may we perceiue by Seruius and Vegetius in their bookes of warre matters.

But when the Church men begã first to attribute a binding vnto the sacramental signes, they did applye thys worde Sacrament vnto them. And some thinke now a dayes, ỳ the word sacramẽt in Latin, is as much as the word Misterie in greeke. But the word Mysterie & Sacrament be sundry things. Ther be many misteries in religion, that is to say, secrete thyngs, whiche a man can not well call sacramentes: and on the other side, what so euer is a sacramente, is not by & by a mysterie. But though we ought not to be ignorant of this matter, yet we must not striue vpon it in the Church. And for my part I am content to vse the worde sacrament after the accustomable and vsuall meaning.

Augustine defineth a sacramente in this sort. The visible sacrifice (saith he) is the sacrament of the inuisible sacrifice: ỳ is to say, the holy signe. And again: A sacrament (sayth he) is a visible forme of an inuisible grace. And yet the self same Augustin doth in many places cal them sacramẽts, which be taken for misteries in holy Scriptures, yea the figures of ỳ lawe also: and in one place, I thinke vpon the. 141. Psalme, he reckeneth the signe of the crosse, made vpon the foreheads of Christian men, as a sacrament. Thus the fathers and diuines do obserue their peculiar maner of speaking in the Church, whiche are not to be restrained vnto the rule of secular writers. And we be not miscontẽted, ỳ the deuines vpon their owne authority doe meane otherwise by this word Sacramente, than the old Lawiers & Historiers did. Wherefore I iudge it méete to kepe the vsual definitiõ of the sacramente in this case whereby it is defyned to bée an holye signe, and a visyble forme of an inuisyble grace.

De ciuit. dei. lib. 10. cap. 5. De confecr. Dist. 2. Can. Sacrificium.

IIII. Wherof a Sacramental Signe doth consist.

According vnto the former definition of Sacrament, it is manifest, that a sacramẽtal signe is made of two things, wherof in deed the one is visible: and the other inuisible: and ỳ the visible doth serue the inuisible, & that it is as it were a certain forme or figure therof layde before ỳ senses of our eyes. Otherwise ther be three parts of a sacrament. Augustin saith thus: The worde is ioyned vnto the Element, and it is made a sacramẽt. He calleth the word, the Institution of the sacrament ordayned by the word of Christ. And we doe read in an other place in this wise: These be therefore called Sacramentes, bycause there is in them

A sacrament consisteth in two thinges.

Tract. 80. in Iohannem. De confecr. dist. 2 Can. Quimandue cat.

lẽne

seene one thing, and vnderstanded an other thyng. That which is seen hath a bodyly kind and shape, that which is vnderstãded, hath a spiritual frut. This is in that place.

Thre thinges in the Sacrament. The vvord.

Ergo, there be in a Sacramẽt thꝛée things.

1 The firste is the woꝛde, whiche some do call the pꝛomise, and we the oꝛdinaunce of the Lord. The Papists doe meane by the woꝛde, that which is spoken by the Pꝛiest, when he goeth to his consecration. But our iudgemẽt is, that thẽre is no sacramẽt made by any consecration of man, but by the institution of the Loꝛde, whiche being once wꝛought, doth consecrate sacraments foꝛ the Churche vntil the very ende of the woꝛld. And we do recite the same in ỹ Church, to the intent that the faythful should heare and beléeue it, not that there groweth any vertue vnto the Element therby. It pertayneth to the Lord only to make a Sacrament in the Churche, and not to the minister. We be not makers of sacraments, but administratoꝛs of thẽ.

Element.

2 The second is the Element, wherunto there is added the woꝛd of the Loꝛds oꝛdinaunce, as water in baptisme, and bꝛead and wine in the sacrament of thankes giuing. And wée muste here abuse the woꝛde of Elemente otherwyse this Elemente is called the signe and sacrament, when it is put to the vse therof. The Maister of the Sentences calleth it a thyng, saying: There bée two pointes in which a Sacramẽt doth consist (that is to say) woꝛdes, & things: woꝛdes as calling vpon the Trinitie: things, as water, oyle, and the lyke. Besides this, it is called a visible foꝛme,

Lib. 4. Dist. 1.

3 The thirde part is the thing signified. As if a Sacrament be a holy signe, there must be some other thing wherof it is the signe. And that they call the thing signified. Some also doe call it the matter of the Sacramente. So they were wont to sing: Nulla rei sit scissura, signi tantum fit fractura, qua nec status nec statura signati minuitur, that is: There is no cutting of the thing, but onely bꝛeaking of the signe, wherby noꝛ state noꝛ stature of the thing is minished. And by the Maister of the Sentences it is read in this soꝛte: They whiche doe come without fayth, oꝛ dissemblingly doe receiue the sacramente, and not the thing. Thys thing they do cal also the inuisible grace, wherasthey do define it, saying): A sacrament is ỹ visible foꝛme of the inuisible grace. And foꝛ as much as it is a signe bycause of the thyng signified, but not the thing signified, bycause of the signe, it is a sacramente, bycause of the thing of the sacramẽt, but it is not the thing of the sacrament, bycause it is a sacramẽt: it is the visible foꝛme, bycause of the inuisible grace, and not the inuisible grace, bycause of the visible foꝛme. Some men thought that the thyng oꝛ matter of the sacrament shoulde be called the substance, the essence, the nature, truth and vertue of the Sacrament, bycause that without it the Signe, Sacrament, and Elemẽt is vtterly voyde, and that al the vertue of the sacrament standeth in it. In déede these woꝛdes are vsed not without cause: but foꝛ as muche as of the ignoꝛant and vnexercised mẽ, these woꝛds be not so taken as they shoulde of right be vnderstanded, but do giue occasiõs of grosser imaginations, I thinke it better to abstayne frõ them, & when we do talke in the Church of Sacraments, to vse such woꝛds as be conforꝛmable vnto holy Scripture, and easier to be vnderstãded of Chꝛistes people.

It appeareth therfoꝛe then, that a sacramẽt doth cõsist of thꝛée parts, that is to say, the woꝛd, the Matter, & Element: oꝛ else of the Woꝛd, the signe, and the thing signified: oꝛ else of the woꝛd, the inuisible grace & the visible foꝛme. They which doe deuide the sacrament into two parts only, do some of them omit the effect of the sacramẽt, as Augustin whẽ he sayth: There cõmeth ỹ woꝛd to ỹ Elemẽt, and ther is made a sacramẽt. Some leaue out the woꝛd, as Irenæus, whych sayth, that the sacrament consisteth of two things, an earthly, and heauenly: & other, of the signe, & of the effect of the signe, oꝛ of an inuisible grace, & a visible foꝛme. Wherfoꝛe theyr diuision is insufficient, so that the discrete reader maye way wyth himself what part of the sacrament is left out in the diuision of it. Foꝛ it helpeth much to the plaine & redy vnderstãdyng of the sacramẽts, if the diuision of them be considered full, and not lackyng any part.

And although that there be made thꝛée partes of a Sacramente, yet in my opinion we must beware, that the woꝛd Sacramente be not giuen to euery of thẽ indifferẽtly. Foꝛ it is not méete that we call either the woꝛd, either the effect and inuisible grace, the sacrament. We do cal the Elemente, an outwarde foꝛme and figure, the sacramente, as in baptisme the water, and in the supper of the Loꝛde, the bꝛeade and wine: which be not sacramentes of their owne nature, but by the loꝛds oꝛdinaunce. So saith Augustine, that the Sacrament is carnally, visibly, and with tæth chawed of them whiche dwelleth not in Chꝛist, but that the effect it selfe is not so. And the Maister of the Sentences sayth, that they which do receiue it vnwoꝛthily do not receiue the thing it selfe, but the sacrament.

The Sacrament is receyued vvhere the effecte of the Sacrament is not receyued.

We muste marke also well, that they do call that a sacrament, which without the effect of the sacramente is receyued by the vnwoꝛthye and strangers from Chꝛist, not by spirit and faith, but carnally & with theyr téeth. Therfoꝛe both it is a sacramẽt and there is receiued the sacrament, yea there where the effect of the sacrament is not receyued. And that Augustine ment when he sayd: The woꝛd ioyneth to the Element, and so is made a sacrament. In this respect the sacramẽt cõsisteth in two things, the woꝛd and the element. Ye maye receiue them both, whiche doeth receiue it bodyly without faith, foꝛ hée receyueth the woꝛde with his eare, ỹ elemẽt with his mouth oꝛ whole bodye, and so he is sayde to receyue the sacramente, although he be vtterlye void from the effect of the sacramẽt.

V. Of the number of Sacramental signes of the nevv Testament.

Seuen Sacramentes of the Papistes.

THe Maister of the Sentences in the fourth booke doth recken vp seuen Sacraments of the new law: that is to say, Baptisme, penaunce, confirmation, the Loꝛdes supper, the last annoynting, oꝛder, and Matrimony. And the Schole diuines, whiche folowed him, appointed vnto the Churche seuen sacraments, wherof I do marueil much, seeing that ỹ Maister of the sentences did but gather togither the opinions and sētences of the Fathers, and is for that cause called the Maister of the Sentences, out of whyche of the Fathers wrytings and Sentences, he picke out thys deuise of the number of seuen Sacramentes. Ambroses boke of Sacramentes (if it bee hys that is named vppon hym) maketh mention of Baptisme only, and of the supper of the Lord.

mon y

The Fathers knewe not the nūber of seuen Sacramentes.

Ambrose.

The nūmber of the Sacramentes not knowē to the fathers. De dedic. Christiana lib. 3. cap. 9.

And Augustine writeth in thys wyse of the Sacraments of the new Testament: but by this time, after ỹ there is appeared by ỹ Resurrectiō of our Lorde, a most manifest token of our libertye, we be not now burdened with anye greuous worckyng of the same signes which we do vnderstande, but the Lord himselfe, and the doctrine of the Apostles, haue giuen vnto vs certayn few sacramēts in stede of many, and them most easy to be done, and most noble in vnderstanding, and most pure in obseruation: as the sacramente of Baptisme, and the celebration of the body and bloud of the Lorde. Which when euerye man receiueth, he acknowledgeth in the receiuing, whervnto they bee referred, so that hee maye reuerence them not in a carnall bondage, but rather in a spirituall liberty. Thys sayth he. Wherin he reckeneth but two sacramēts only, giuen by the Lorde hymselfe, and the doctrine of the Apostles, Baptisme, and the supper of the Lord. And in this saying he speaketh of the sacramentall signes gyuen by the Lorde, whych he reconneth to be only two. But in other places, hee addeth others to these two, saying: The gift of the sacraments in Baptisme, in the supper of the Lorde, and the other holy sacraments, what a gift is it? And in an other place also: When he had sayd, wherfore he linked in the company of his new people, with sacramentes most fewe in nūber, most easie to kepe, most highest in meaning, as the Baptisme is, which is consecrated in the name of the Trinitie, and the communion of his body and bloud, and whatsoeuer else is set forth in the Canonicall scriptures. And against the Epistle of Parmenian he sayth, that orders is a sacramēt not renewable, applying it to the purpose whiche he reasoneth vpon. And against the letters of Petilian he sayth thus: And in thys ointment he wyll haue the sacrament of vnction to be ment, which is holy and sacred in the kind of visible signes, as Baptisme is it selfe. And in ỹ Canonical epistle of John he sayth: The sacrament of annoynting is the very inuisible vertue, the inuisible vnction is the holy spirite, the inuisible vnction is that charity. And in an other place he doth make wedlocke a sacrament. But we must conceiue that those sacraments whiche ought to be accounted for mysteries simply without any ordynaunce of the Lorde (in whych sense the worde of Sacramente is taken oftentimes vnproperly) are called Sacraments in one sense: the sacramentall signes ordayned by the Lord himselfe, and giuen vnto the Church

Church in place of ỹ sacraments of the olde Testament, are in an other sense. The fyrst be many, more than seuen, but these latter be onely two. Bernard doth recke vp the washing of the Apostles feete among sacraments, when speaking of sacramēts, he maketh mention of Baptisme, washing of feete and of the bodye and bloud. Augustine where he speketh of annoynting, he meaneth nother the last anoyling, nor confirmation, but the annoyntment whiche men do vse in baptisme. But the Papistes do recken neyther of thē both among the sacraments. And in that sorte there shoulde be accounted not seuen Sacraments only, but nyne. Wherfore we muste make a diligēt distinction betwirt the sacraments, that is to saye, the mysteries, and the sacramentall signes, which were so giuen by Christ, that they should belong to the vse of the whole Church, and to be occupied of all faythfull. Secondlye, let vs loke that they agree with the wordes of Augustine: The word commeth to the element, ỹ there is made a sacramēt. But let vs passe ouer eche of the Sacramentes in order, which they do recken vpon besides Baptisme, and the Supper of the Lord.

They saye that Penaunce is a sacrament: In deede it is a very necessarie thing penaunce, but it commeth short in the definitiō of a sacramental signe. For it lacketh the element, the signe, and the visible forme: so that it agreeth not wyth the wordes of Augustine. The worde is ioyned vnto the element, and so there is made a Sacrament: nor it agreeth not with the definition of a Sacrament, whereas it is called a visible forme of an vnuisible grace, and a signe of a holye thing. Wherfore the famous doctour M. Luther, although he had rehearsed penaunce amongst the Sacraments, yet towardes the end in his boke he sayth thus: Our meaning is to call them properly sacraments, whiche be promised vnto the signes annexed, others that be not tyed vnto some signes, are but bare promises. Wherupon if we will speake straightlye, there be but two Sacraments in the Church of God, Baptisme, and the breade: for as much as we see that in them only the signe is ordayned by God, and the promise made of forgiuenesse of sinnes. For the Sacramente of penance which I accompted with these two, do lacke the visible signe instituted by God: and I sayd that it was no other, but the way and repayre, vnto Baptisme. For the Scholastical Doctors can not say, ỹ their definition can agree vnto penance, for they doe attribute also a visible signe vnto ỹ sacramēt, which do represent vnto the senses a forme of that thing which it doth inuisibly worke, but penance or absolution hath no suche signe: wherefore they shall be driuen also by their owne definition, eyther to deny that penance is a sacramēt, or so diminish the number of them, or else to bring an other definition of sacramentes. This sayth he.

Luther in lib. de capt. Babylonico.

As concerning the last anoyling, we beseech thē to shew vs the word of ỹ ordinance of it, without whiche no element is made a Sacramente. They do allege the place of James: Whē any body is sick amongst you, let let him bryng in the Papistes of the Churche, and let them praye ouer him, annoynting him with Oyle in the name of the Lord, and the prayer of faith shal saue the sicke, and the Lorde shal relieue hym: and in case he be in sin, it shall be forgiuen him.

Extreme vnction. Iac. 5.

We answere, that Iames did not institute it a Sacramēt of the churche, and of the new law. For not we only do deny that he had any suche authoritie, but Doctour Duns also, which sayth: Of whence coulde he haue had authority to binde ỹ whole Church, wheras he was Bishoppe, of the Church of Icrusalem onely? Unlesse you wil say, that that churche was the chiefe Churche at the first, and so consequētly that he was the chiefe Bishoppe, which they of Rome doe not graunt. He speaketh of that whiche the Apostles were wont to doe, and of the maruellous annoynting, when they annoynted the sicke with oyle, and healed them, whereof we may see in the Gospell, where we reade in this wise: And going abroade, they preached that men shoulde doe penance, and they did cast out many Deuils, and they did anoynt many sicke persons with oyle, and they were healed. So that this annoynting was myraculous, done to this intent of the Apostles, that by it as by an outward meanes being common and accustomed in those countries, the sicke might be healed by the power of Christ. For Iames doth not hide thys when he sayth: Annointing him with oyle in the name of the Lord, and the prayer of faith shal saue the sicke person. He ment from death, and therefore hee addeth: and the Lorde shall restore him vp. This much was vsed in ỹ primitiue Church, & other myracles also, to the cōfirmatiō of Christs Gospell, but afterwardes they were left. What hath the Sacrament of extreme vnction to do nowe, whereby they annoint none but when they be at the laste casse, and ready to dy by and by? Why did they not make sacramētal signes of other myracles also, wherby the shadow of Peter, & the handkercher of Paule, and laying on of their handes, whereby the sicke were healed, might haue bene sacramentes of new law? So this Popish sacrament is neither institu-ted by Christ, nor by the Apostles, but in processe of time, when the gift of healing in the church ceassed, that myraculous custome of annoynting & healing the sicke, was chaunged into a mysticall action and sense: and to keepe the olde honoure to the annoynters, there was ioyned vnto it an opinio of a sacramēt.

Mark. 6.

They do make confyrmation also a Sacramente, but therein is nother the worde of Christes institution, nor the Element. The Apostles did confirme Churches with doctrine and exhortation. And vnto thys ministerie they were sente by the holy Spirite. Of the Sacramēt we do reade nothing. When we require Christes word for it, they doe bring vs the promise of Christ, wher in he promised that the father should giue the holy spirit vnto them whiche should aske it. Some say that ỹ Element is the Chrisme wherwith the Bishoppe doeth marke the forehead of him that is Baptised: Some say it is the laying on the hāds, whiche the Apostles vsed. But there is no no testimony of ỹ Chrisme in scriptures nor yet we reade that the Apostles vsed it. And laying on of ỹ hāds, was nether deliuered by the Lorde, nor vsed by the Apostles in stede of a Sacrament. The vsage of it was brought to the Church, of the maner of the Iraelites, without any commaundement. The laying on of the Apostles handes, was of the myraculous working by the giftes and power of the spirite, which after the times of the Apostles ceassed, when the Churche was well confirmed. The Bishops haue reserued the example of it, wherby they might seme the more to be successours vnto the Apostles: & to the intent there should be some countenaunce of it, and to haue an occasion to make it of a miraculous working mistical they haue put oyle vnto it, and forged an opinion of a Sacrament, and haue challenged the doyng of it vnto Bishops onely. But seeing that there is in it nother the institution of Christ, nother the authoritye of the Apostles, and that the opinion of the sacramēt is nothing but the deuise of Bishops and that the verye vse of the Apostles example, is corrupt in the outward working of it, and that it lacketh the olde efficacy thereof: there is no reason why that faythful folke shold take this falsse named Confirmation in stede of a sacrament.

Of Orders whiche they wil haue to be a sacrament, the Maister of the sentences writeth in this wise: If it be demanded what it is that is here called Orders, truely it may be sayd, that it is a signe, that is to say, some holy thing, wherby the spirituall power and office is betaken vnto him, that is instituted & ordayned. Therfore the spirituall marke at that time that the spirituall proceeding or preferment is giuen, is called Orders or degrees. And these orders be called Sacraments, because that in receyuing of them, there is giuen a holye thing: that is to say, grace, whyche those things doe signifie whiche be done at that time. This sayth he. So that he supposeth, that the same indelible or euerlasting marke (wherwith they that be instituted, be consigned like as souldiers, not vnto Christ, but vnto the high priest and captain of Rome (is a figural thing) able to conferre a special grace, and that therfore it is called a sacramēt. We say at one word, if they do mean by Sacrament, the othe and deuout bande whiche is vndertaken, let the order (for all me) be a sacrament, such as the Sacramente of saluation of souldiers in warfare was wont to be. But if they doe meane it of the sacramente of the Churche, suche as baptisme, and the supper of the Lord is, they must giue me the Word and the Element, wherof true sacramēts be made. In deed Christe gaue vnto his Church, Apostles, Prophets, Pastors, Doctours, & so forth, but that he did ordain them orders to be an euerlasting marke & sacrament of the Church, it can not be proued.

How and vvhat Sacraments orders may bee.

Wherfore it is but a fained thing, that they do talke of this sacramēt: as that is also, that they doe make here in seuen degrees and orders, according vnto seuen folde grace of the holy spirite: and they do reckē vp, dore keepers, readers, coniurers, wayters, subdeacons, deacons, and priests, which al they do cal clerkes.

Seuen degrees of orders.

Let them answer me vnto Pope Anacletus, which saith thus: Wher thā these two orders of prieſtes (and he meaneth Bishops whiche were placed in stede of the Apoſtles, & prieſts in stede of the seuentie Diſciples,) there were none appoynted vs from God, nor the Apoſtles taught vs of no other.

Anacletus. Epiſt. 3.

They doe recken Matrimony also among the Sacramentes of the Church: But let them shew vs, wher is it appointed by Christ for a sacrament of the new lawe, since that it was ordained by God in Paradiſe, euē from the beginning of mankind, and that the vse of it doeth belong vnto al the natiōs of ỹ whole world, and refuseth no kinde of men: but ỹ Sacramentes of the Church be giuen vnto the faythfull onely. They doe alleage that place of the Apoſtle: For this, a man shal forsake father and mother, and sticke vnto his wife, there shal betwo in one flesh: this sacramēt is gret. But I mean in Christ and the Church. But firſt there is no such word in the Greeke, to signifie a Sacrament of the new law, but it is μυστήριον, that is to say a secret. In deede euery Sacrament of the Churche is a mysterie, but not the other way, euerye mysterie is a sacrament of the Churche. The Apoſtle speaketh of the mysterie of iniquitie, whiche you can not call aright, The sacrament of iniquitie. Beſides that there be many mysteries of our fayth, which we can not wel wrest to sacramēts of ỹ church.

Matrimony

Ephe. 5.

1. Theſ. 2

Secondly, thys mysterie is declared well inoughe what it is, by the Apoſtle, in specifying the matter afterwarde: I saye, (sayeth he) of Christ and the Church. Ergo this miſterie conſisteth not in ỹ carnal wedlocke of man and woman, but in the spiritual Matrimony of Christ and ỹ Church. Augustin vpon John saith: This sacrament is great. And leaſte that any mā should mean the greatneſſe of this sacramente to be in all sortes of men which haue wiues, he addeth: but I say in Christe and the Churche. What is this great Sacrament? There shall be two in one flesh. So therfore Christ cleaued vnto the Church, that there were two in one flesh. Thus sayth he, Ergo this miſtery pertaineth not vnto the carnall wedlocke of men and women, but vnto the spiritual coniunction of Christ and the Church.

It is a maruel to me, howe they make Matrimony a sacrament of ỹ Church, and yet eſteeme it so foule and filthy, that they do reſtraine thē that be maried, frō the miniſteries of the Church. Wherupon Syricius the Pope in his decrées alleaged that place of the Apoſtle: They which be in the fleshe, can not pleaſe God, as though it had concerned lawful wiues, to take away wedlock from the Miniſters of Christ: and added thys also: To them which be vncleane, nothing is clean, but vnto thē which be cleane, al things be cleane. Such is the blyndneſſe of this Popishe kingdome, and contrary vnto it selfe.

Pope Syricius. Epiſt. 2. Ad Himer.

Wherefore we do not allow this counterfayting of Sacramentes of the new law, partely bycause they be not inſtituted by Christ, and partly bycause they be not inſtituted as Sacraments of the Church. We do wel like the thinges themselues, as Penance, Confirmation of the faithfull that be weake and newe called, the order of the miniſterie of the Church, the Viſitation and comfort of the ſicke, and lawful Matrimony, as godlye and profitable: and that not only in the new Teſtament, but in the olde also: so that we woulde haue no man to slaunder vs herein, as though we refuſed thoſe things which be of thēſelues good and godly: but we do not like the deuiſing of Sacrament in them, to haue them to be reputed for Sacraments of the Church and of the new Teſtament, but we do determine that there bee but two ſacramentall signes of the new teſtament giuen vnto ỹ church by Christ himſelfe our Lord, that is to say, Baptiſme, and the Supper of the Lord, in which only the word of the Lordes inſtitution is ioyned with the Elemente, and so the true definition of a Sacrament standeth sure and fast.

VI. Why Chriſt did ordain outward Sacraments.

There is nothing done in thys matter without greate reaſon. The giuer of the Spirituall thyngs had no neede of outward signes, and the spirituall thynges themſelues be of that nature, that they may be giuen wout signes: lyke as they be giuen by the spirite of God, working spiritually in the hearts of the elect, things pertayning to our ſaluation, sometimes before, sometimes after, and sometimes withoute the signes. But as concerning partlye our common weakeneſſe, and partly custome, it hath a certayne ſpeciall strength, that it is wrought not onely by wordes, but by outwarde tokens also: and therupon it ryſeth, that tokens, rites, couenāts, & signes, be so muche vſed amongſt menne. Therefore the prouidence and louing kindneſſe of God, did abaſe it selfe vnto our capacitie, so that it did not onely yelde wordes vnto our eares, but viſible signes also to bee ſéene and felte by our eyes and other senses, wherby he woulde exhibite vnto our faith spiritual things, diuers and sundrye wayes to be credited and receiued. For if thou were ſt without bodye (sayeth Chryſoſtom) would he haue giuē thē those giftes also without body? But for as much as thy soule is ioyned vnto a body, they be deliuered to thē to be vnderſtanded in things ỹ be ſenſible.

In Matth. hom. 83.

That louing God our heauenlye father, which worketh all things in all men, doeth according vnto hys maruelous prouidence worke otherwyſe wyth heauenly spirites, otherwyſe wyth men, otherwiſe wyth beaſtes, and otherwiſe with thynges whiche haue no life: And yet he kepeth togyther al these his creatures with the power of his ſpirite.

God worketh otherwiſe with Angels and otherwiſe with men and other creatures.

Notwithſtandyng hee worketh wyth men, both by his ſpirite and word and signes, applying himſelfe to our capacity. And we should be in a maruelous daungerous caſe, if these thée things shoulde be not of God, but of man: and proceede not from God, but from the harte of manne: so that we were wrought not by the ſpyrite of GOD, but of Manne: by the worde not of God, but of man: by ſignes gyuen not from God, but from man. For so the authoritye of God should be lacking wout which, our consciences may be seduced, but not edifyed. Let the consideratiō hereof serue to this purpose, that forasmuch as the prouidence of God vouchsaseth to haue a regarde to oure weakenesse in the matters concerning our saluation, that we haue also regarde of the same, and doe therfore the more diligentlye and practise our fayth in the lawful and good vse of the Sacraments,

To what purpose the sacramentall signes be giuen.

The sacramentall signes therefore be giuen vnto vs to this purpose, that they should be the tokens of Gods grace, vnto vs, wherby we should put in vre our faith towards Christ. Therfore also the fathers defined them to be a visible forme of the inuisible grace. They be knit vnto the word of the Gospel, & vnto the word of grace and saluation: & they be giuen to no other vse, than the word it selfe was giuen, and yet they haue both of them a certaine peculiar vse to themselues, of whiche I will speake hereafter. The Maister of the Sentences sayth, that the sacraments were instituted for the abasing, instructing, and exercising of vs. And he meaneth that to bee the abasing, when we be so subiect vnto sensible things which be much inferiour vnto vs, that we doe seke saluation in them. And that this is the obedience which pleaseth God. But the instructing, when the minde is instructed, by that which is seene in a visible forme outwardly, to know the inuisible vertue which is within. The exercising, whereby we doe eschewe vaine and noysome busines, and he alleageth that of Ierome. Be euer doing some good worke, ỳ the Diuell maye finde thee occupyed. It is a foule matter that he saith, we be subiect vnto the things which be vnder vs. It is a foule doctrine ỳ he sayth, that it pleaseth God, that we should seke saluation in ỳ sacraments, wheras he confesseth that it commeth only of God.

That is vanain not to forget signes.

Wherefore we muste seke it in Christe, and not in the signes. They are wōt to sing aloud in their Masse: Sursum corda. Lift vppe your hartes, and their aunswer was, Habemus ad Dominum: We haue lift them vp vnto the Lorde. To what purpose doe they bidde vs to lifte vp our hartes vnto the Lord, if that we muste seke oure saluation in signes that be muche inferiour vnto vs? And it is small to the purpose of the sacramentes, that exercise whiche hee doeth attribute vnto them, wherby we shoulde eschewe noysome occupations, leaste the Diuel should finde vs vdle. The exercise of the Sacramentes doth serue to the confyrmyng and establishing of our consciences in fayth, and it hath speciall admonitions of the grace of God.

The opiniō of the word wrought in Sacramentes is not to be borne withal, whereby they doe iudge, that he which taketh them, doth deserue grace in the verye worke it selfe: so that he doe not lay a lette, whereby it is hindered, yea although he doe not beleue nor receiue them with any good remorse of his owne harte. It is a madde matter to make God such a one, as ỳ the outwarde worke should please him howsoeuer it were taken in hand. But let vs rather credite Paul, who affirmeth ỳ it is sin, whatsoeuer is not wroughte in faith.

Nor we do not like them nother, which do make nothing else of the sacramens, but signes of the Christian profession, whereby we may bee distinced from Iewes and al other nations that be not in the fayth of Christ: as we do not allow them nother, which are of the opinion that the sacramentes be giuen onely to this purpose, that they should be as tokens vnto vs of the christian societie, whereby we be knit into one body, and be linked togither with the chayne of mutuall communion. For albeit that none of these both be out of the nature of the sacraments, yet the principall consideration consisteth not in them, muche lesse the whole reason wherefore they were instituted. We declared in a place or two before, that there may be sundry occasions & causes of one thing. And wheras there be many causes of one matter, there are some of thē wont to be the chiefe, and some secondary causes, whiche is verifyed also in sacraments. But how vnfyt a matter it is, that one cause, & that the secondary cause, should be set for the chiefe & general cause, as though that there were neither mo nor any greater, ye may easily imagine.

And the very like do they, which do waye nothing else in the Sacramentes, but the allegories of the Christian mortificatiō, quickning, & regeneration, & secondly of the spiritual fode. These considerations bee not euil, but thei be not correspondēt vnto the principall cause, for which they were ordayned sacraments by God.

VII. What maner of Sacramēts the Lord hath instituted.

In this matter being so contentiously handeled, I suppose I shall not do amisse, to alleage much the iudgements of the fathers: not ỳ the truth of Christs sacramēts haue nede to be confirmed by them, but bycause there be a great sorte, that do giue more credite vnto them thā they do vnto those things whiche be neuer so lernedly & truly written in our days. Augustine sayth ỳ ỳ sacraments left by Christ, were in nūber few, easy to do, & excellēt in mening.

De doctrina Christiana libr. 3. cap. 9.

1 In number few, that is to say, two. In the olde Testamente there was a great number of signs. That people were yet vnder the yoke of the bondage of the lawe, and vnder the spirite of feare: and therefore as children they were trayned on with many figures, rites, shadowes, and sacrifices. But the people of the new Testament, as now more growen and endued with the spirite of libertie, be exercised, and confirmed in ỳ faith of Christ with few signes. Wherefore they that do burden the Church with a multitude of rites & signes, goe nearer vnto the childishe teaching of the Iewishe people, than to the liberty of the church of Christ. Of which thyng Augustine also doth complayn, saying. For albeit that cannot be founde, howe they be against the fayth, yet for all that they do ouercharge the verye religion with seruile burdens, whiche the mercye of God woulde haue to be frée wyth moste fewe and most manifest Sacramentes: so that the estate of the Iewes is more tolerable and agreeable, for albeit that they knewe not the time of libertie, yet they be ſubiecte vnto the burdens of the lawe onelye, and not vnto mennes preſumptions. This ſayth he.

In number fewe.

The multitude of our vvard signes and rites is not meete for the newe Testament

Augustine. Epist. 119. cap. 19.

Moſt eaſye to be done.

2 Secondly, the Lorde gaue vs ſacraments moſt eaſie to be done. And in this point he dydde foreſee, that he woulde not ouerburden his Church. There is nothing in Baptiſme, nothing in the Lordes ſupper, that is vneaſie, harde, or cumberſome, or elſe vnpleaſant, or ſtraunge to mens doings. Circumciſion was cumberſome, bloudie, & ſubiect vnto griefes, as appeareth in Geneſis, where the payne of them which were circumciſed, is declared to be the greateſt the thirde day. The ſacrifices of the Iewes had muche trauaile, beſides that, they were alſo bloudie. The worſhip of Baal and Moloch required the bloud of man alſo, which the Poet doth attribute alſo to ỹ Gods of the Gentiles, when he ſayeth:

The Sacramẽts of the Iewes were cumberſome. Geneſ.34.

Vergile.

Sanguine placatis ventos, & virgine cæſa,
Cum primum Iliacas Danai venitis ad oras.
Sanguine quærendi reditus, animaque litandũ
Argolica, &c.
By bloude, O Greekes, and Maidens death,
you did the ſtormes and windes withſtande,
What time you did your ſelues embarke, towardes this Troye lande.
By bloude you muſt ſeeke your returne, by death of one of your owne bande,

But in this caſe there is nothing ſo. All things be without bloude, eaſie, accuſtomed, without coſte, withoute labour, without payne. That which was harde and neceſſarie to be purchaſed by bloud, that our moſt kind ſauiour toke vpon him, to the intent to diſcharge vs of all trouble and daunger.

3 Thirdly, they be alſo of moſt noble vnderſtanding and meaning. In outwarde countenance and to ſight, they do ſeeme baſe in the eyes of the deſh, and of no exceeding importance. Wherefore Auguſtine ſayeth, that they be moſte excellent, not to the ſight, but in vnderſtanding. In dede the meaning of the ſacraments, is of things moſte great, heauenly, & godly, wherof the viſible frames doe appeare outwardlye, of which it is not now to ſpeake, for they ſhall haue a time to be expounded in their places alone. But as touching this matter generally, we be done to vnderſtand in what reſpect and howe the ſacraments of the Church be precious and noble. They be not noble in ſiluer or golde, nor for any outwarde pompe, & worldlye gaynes, but for their vnderſtanding, that is to ſay, for thoſe things whiche be ſet forth to be conceyued, not by ſight, but by vnderſtãding. They be of all moſt excellent. Ambroſe ſayeth: The ſacramentes ſeeke for no golde, nor theſe matters do not pleaſe for the gold ſake, which are not bought for gold. The gaines of the ſacraments, is the ranſome of captiues, &c. Wherefore it is to be loked for of Chriſtians in the vſe of Sacraments, that they be ſtrong of vnderſtanding, ſo that they ſtick not in the outwarde ſignes. It is for vnreaſonable folke to conceiue no farther than as farre as the bodily eye doth reach. It is a ſeruile weakneſſe, to take the ſignes for the things theſelues which be ſignified: witneſſe Auguſtine.

The ma[illegible] ning ma[illegible] excelle[illegible]

Horwe ſacrame of Chri be pre ous an noble.

Ambroſ. De offic. lib. 2. cap.

Wherefore firſt thoſe carnall perſons are to be reiected, which do vnderſtand nor iudge nothing elſe in ỹ ſacraments, but that which is ſeene with with the eyes, and ſo do iudge of the ſacraments, according vnto the qualitie of the outwarde ſignes. They doe ſee the water, they doe ſee the breade and the wyne, but they doe not aduance their mind any farther, than the conſideration of them. Theſe men do hang to muche vpon the outwarde element. Secondlye, the ſuperſtitious perſons are not to be lyked neyther, whyche doe vſe the ſignes, as though that they had the things themſelues before theyr eyes, nor they make no difference betwirte the ſignes, & the things ſignified. It wer wel done, ỹ they were admoniſhed to lifte vp theyr hartes vnto the Lorde. Sacraments be the viſible formes of the inuiſible grace. The inuiſible grace muſt be conſidered and waged wyth oure mynde, vnderſtanded and receyued with fayth.

Cyrill.

VIII. Of the difference of the ſacraments of the old and new Teſtament.

Some doe make difference betwirt the Sacramentes of the olde and new Teſtaments, & ſome do not. If they be compared one with an other, we ſhall finde a difference. Againe, there be ſome pointes in whych they differ not in diuers and ſundry reſpects. Firſt our ſacramẽts do differ from them of the old Teſtament in fewneſſe, for in the new Teſtament there be but two, and in the olde there were many, if all the figures, ſhadowes, and ſacrifyces are to be taken for Sacramentes, as the fathers ſeeme to doe, ſpecially Auguſtine. But otherwiſe if you loke to the orderly, and proper ſacraments, which are compriſed in the word of inſtitution, and the matter whiche doth ſignifie, there were but two nother of the old: that is, Circũciſion, and the Paſcal Lambe. The Apoſtle doeth adde vnto them the cloude, and the Sea, and the water of the rocke, and the Manna. But theſe things can not be referred vnto the lawful and ordinarye inſtitution of the Sacraments, albeit that they were ſo meruellouſly ordered, that the ſtrength of them had the vſe of Sacramentes. Therefore in that reſpecte that theſe be taken for Sacramentes, they doe exceede in number: but in reſpect of the conſideration of the lawefull and proper Sacraments onely, in which there is ioyned the word of the inſtitution vnto ỹ outward ſigne, in this reſpect the ſacraments of the old Teſtamẽt be euen in number with ours, ſo ỹ Baptiſme doth counteruayle Circũciſion, and the ſupper of the Lord, the Lambe of the paſſeouer.

1.Cor.10.

Secondlye, they doe differ in the variety of the ſignes. The Sacramentall ſignes of the olde and newe Teſtament be ſundry. For circumciſion is one thing, and Baptiſme is an other. And againe, the lamb of ỹ Paſſeouer is one thing, & the bread & wine the tokens of our Lords Supper, be an other thing. Yea, and touching the miraculous ſacraments, the cloude, and paſſing through the Sea, they were one thing, and the Baptiſme of ours, is an other: Item the Manna, and water flowing out of the rocke, was one thing, and the breade and wine in the Sacramentes of the Lordes supper an other. So the signes do varye on both sides.

Furthermore, the Sacramentes of the olde Testament did consist in the shedding of bloud, partly of men and partly of beastes: of man in the Circumcision, of beast in the lambe of the passeouer. But these of the new, though that they be the sacraments of Christs bloud shed for vs, yet of themselues they be voyde of bloud. If you compare the cloud, the sea, the Manna, and the water out of the rocke, vnto our Sacraments, ours do differ also from them in this pointe, that they were myraculous, and ours not so.

Againe, the olde sacraments are turned into other fashions by the succeeding of the newe Testament, albeit that the faith of the Sacraments did continue all one. But the sacraments of the new Testamente be not subiect vnto such change, but shal kepe their maner & fashion instituted by the Lord himselfe, vntyl the ende of ỹ world, after which we doe not loke for any newe manner of Sacramentes, but for the full and perfect manyfestation of the truthe it selfe.

So that in these respectes it may be sayd aright, that our sacraments do differ from the old. But in case that we do in both waye the better parte in the Sacramentes, wee shall fynde that they do differ in nothing.

How we our sacraments do differ from the olde.

1 First, as there is one God and one Lorde both in the olde and newe Testament, so there is one also author of the sacraments, one mediatour of Gods grace, wherof as well the olde as our Sacramentes were tokens. And as ours be grounded vppon the authority of Christe our mediatour, so were they also which went before in the old Testamente.

2 Secondly, If we doe consider the cause, why God did institute certain sacraments to his Church, we shal not fynd the cause of the sacraments of the olde one, and newe Testament other. For bothe they and these were giuē to thys intent, to bee tokens of gods grace towards hys Church, by which the faithfull should be fed and strengthned in the faith of hys couenaunt: Again, that the whole churche of the Israelites should be knit in one faith, & dissenered frō all other natiōs of the whole world. To these endes he wrought both by word and sacraments with that people, like as he doeth wyth the church of the new Testament.

3 Thirdly, like as in the Sacraments of the old testament, so of the newe Testamente also, the signe and that whiche is signified, be not both al one, or the Sacrament and the effecte of the Sacrament, concerning theyr substaunces and natures. For then there shoulde be no reason of Sacramentes in them, if the thing signified, and the signe were all one. That whyche doth signifye is one thing, and that which is signified, is another: wherfore Augustine sayeth also, that the same which is seene, is one thyng, and that whyche is sette forthe to be vnderstanded, is another. So that oure Sacramentes doe not in this poynte neyther differ from the Sacramentes of the olde Testament.

The signe and the thing signified, not one.

4 Fourthly

4 Fourthly, in case we doe consider the very thinges theselues wherof our sacraments be signes, we shal finde the same in the sacramentes of the olde Testamente. Circumcision was the sacrament of the regenerating and cleansing of oure nature in Christ, and our Baptisme is the very same. Circumcision was the seale of the iustice of Faith, our Baptisme is the same. The Israelites were incorporate into the Church of Christ by Circumcision, we by Baptisme. Circumcision was the signe of Gods couenant, baptisme is the same to vs. Also the Paschall lambe was the sacramente of the immaculate lambe, by whose bloud we shoulde be redemed from the bondage of Satan, sinne, and death: the bread and wyne is the same vnto vs, the sacramente of the bodye and bloud of the Lorde. The meate and drinke is one in both as we may see to the Corinthians. So that this wayes our sacraments doe differ nothing nother from the olde. As these bee visible formes of inuisible grace, so they were also. For this inuisible grace is not differente from that in the sacramentes of the old Testament, but it is one in both.

5 Fiftly, the sacraments of bothe Testaments do agree also in faythe. For there is one selfesame faythe in both, wherby they beleued in Christ, which should come to be theyr redeemer: and we do beleeue in him, whom the father promised in time past, and hathe sente him into the world, not a sundry one, but the selfesame in himselfe, and one to all the electe, and to all the faithfull as well of the old as of the newe Testament. This is the onely beginning, the fountayne, and ende of all sacramentes. Wherefore seeyng that the faithe of the sacramentes of both Testamentes is not diuers and sundry, but al one: nor the object of faith is not sundrye but one selfe same, why doe we not rather acknowledge and honoure the conformitie and vnitie, than any difference of the same.

The efficacie of the sacraments.

6 Sirtly, There remaineth to be considered the efficacie of the sacraments. The fathers do attribute this to be greater in our sacraments than in them of the olde, and in thys respect they do aduance oures much aboue them, so that they saye, that oures be effectuall signes of grace, not significatiue onely, as theirs, but also yeelding and giuing grace, iustice, and saluation, yea vnto them that be in deadly sinne: so that there is no faith requisite, if that there bee not a blocke in the way, whiche they call the Actuall purpose to sinne agayne. This errour is to be dryuen out of all faithful mens myndes. For it is very contrary vnto the doctrine of the iustifying faithe, whiche is so required, that without it the sacraments be not only vnprofitable vnto them which do receyue, but hurtfull also. As the sacraments be signes of grace, so they doe signifie grace, as well in the newe as in the old Testamente: as they be the seales of the iustice of faith, so they doe seale and confirme it, not onely in the newe, but in the olde Testament also: and they do confirme vs, not as the verye enseeling spirite himselfe doth, but as enseeling signes: as they be figures and formes, so in the outward similitude they doe figure and represente the things signified, like as the olde, so likewise the newe Testament also: as they be the first principles, so they doe firste instruct in the principles in them both: and as they be remembraunces, so doe they renue the benefites of the heauenly grace in ỹ minds of the faithfull, no lesse in the olde than in the newe Testamente. If wée do attribute vnto our Sacramentes any moze efficacie than this, wherby they may wozke grace, iustice, and saluation in them which do vse them, we do attribute that vnto them whiche is the onely wozke of the holye spirite, vnlesse we doe vse this moderation, that we say, that the efficacie of the sacraments is not reall but sacramentall: so that they whiche bée Baptised shoulde be regenerate, and iustifyed sacramentally, though they were not yet regenerate and iustifyed indéede. So the Apostle sayd that the Cozinthians were washed, iustifyed, and sanctifyed, whome hée dyd yet repzoue as carnal of those sinnes whyche doe exclude men out of the kyngdome of God. Hée spake sacramentally, bycause of Baptisme, the sacramente of washyng, iustifying, sanctifying. And thys kynd of speach dothe agrée not onely vnto oure sacramentes, but vnto them of the olde Testamente also. Wherefoze accozdyng vnto thys consideration also, we must make no difference betwirt the sacramentes of both testaments. But I doe speake not of all kinde of figures, but of the sacramentes, whiche bée properly sacramentes and in both. The fathers dyd very inconsiderately confound the figures of the olde Testamente, and the mysteries of the newe, with sacramentes, and dyd make the matter darke vnto theselues, and others also. Wzichy, that is a true saying: Not the sacrament, but the fayth of the sacrament dothe iustifye. Thys is true, not only in the olde, but in our new sacramentes also. Wherefoze the efficacie of oures and theirs is not diuers. And it was not aduisedly sayde of Augustine: The sacraments bée not one, bycause there were other sacraments which giue saluation, and other that promise the sauioure. Shall we say that the elders haue not the saluation whereof they had the sacramentes? God fozbyd. Agayne, Shall we saye, that our sacraments do saue, and not rather faithe in Chzist? God fozbidde that also. What can be sayde moze fondly, than that the elders were saued by faith, and we by sacraments? He sayeth muche better in an other place, where he saith: The faithe remayneth, and the signes be altered. There the rocke was Chzist, to vs Chzist is that which is laid vpon the altare of God. And they foz a greate matter dzanke the sacraments of the selfesame Chzist, the water which issued out of the rocke, and what wé do dzinke, ỹ faithfull folke do know. If thou consider the visible fozme, it is an other thing, but if a man consider the signification whiche is to bée vnderstanded, they dzanke the verye same spirituall dzynk. This is there. I beséeke you, is it al one to say, that the Israelites do eate and dzinke the same spirituall meate, & dzinke that we doe, that is, Chzist: and that the Israelites doe vse sacraments whiche doe onely promise Chzyste: and that wé haue the sacramentes whyche doe gyue saluation? Howsoeuer that saluation bée obteyned by the

Not the Sacrament but the faith of the Sacrament doth iustifye. In deede.

Crosse, yet foz all that the faithfull of the olde Testamente were neuer the lesse partakers of the same, than we be of the newe. Foz Chzyste was yesterday, to day, and foz euermoze, and hée suffered from the beginning of the wozlde as concerning the purpose of the father, and vertue of the redemption. But Augustine meante to aduaunce the happinesse of the newe Testamente, in that that the Sacramentes thereof doe not fyll promise the Sauiour to come, but do sette fozthe the grace of him, as presently exhibited.

IX. Whether there be grace annexed vnto the Sacramentes.

They whyche do lyue in the faith of the onely begotten of God, and be one spirite with hym, and haue hym dwellyng in them, haue him also as the foũtayne of al grace, of whose fulnesse they doe receyue grace foz grace. They do not dispute of the grace of God, whether it bée annexed and tyed to the sacramentes oz not, but when we do lacke faythe, and sticke vnto the outwarde vse of the sacramentes, and begin rather to deceyue, than to confozme oure selues, then we doe dispute of the sacraments, whether they be sufficient to saue vs oz not: and bycause we do knowe by the testimony of our owne conscience, that it is not possible that wé can be saued without the grace of God, wé doe séeke meanes, how wé may be made partners thereof, although that wé lacke faithe. And foz them that bée so affected, there be readye alwayes at hande, some false Doctoures that be sicke of the same disease. They doe so dispute of the sacramentes, that they do perswade the vnlearned and carnall men, that there is grace tyed vnto the Sacramentes. Wherefoze I thynke it néedefull to speake somewhat of this matter.

In that that they doe demaunde, whether there bée grace tyed vnto the Sacramentes, they doe sufficiently confesse, that grace is one thyng, and the Sacrament an other, and therefoze that the sacramente is not the verye grace it selfe: and reason. Foz the visible fozme is not the very inuisible grace, and the signe is not the thing signifyed. And in thys sozte the water of baptisme, is not the very regeneration and washing away of synnes it selfe: and the bzead of the Supper of the Lozde is not the bodye it selfe of the Lozde. Foz then nother that coulde bée the Sacramente of regeneration, noz thys of the Lozdes Body. Foz nothyng can be the signe of it selfe: but it is necessary that the sygne and the thing signified, must be sundzy things of their owne nature and substance. If the water of Baptisme and the bzead of the Lozdes Supper coulde bée Sacramentes of the heauenlye grace, in that sozte, that wythall they were the very grace it selfe, there were no cause why these folke shoulde demaunde, whether that there bée grace tyed vnto the Sacramentes oz no. Foz so they that were partakers of the outwarde Sacracramentes, shoulde bée wythall partakers of the grace also, and by consequente, of lyfe and saluation euerla-

VVho maketh question.

VVhy the question is made of this matter.

The signe is not the thyng signifyed.

on euerlasting. But forasmuch as they doe finde, that this is not true, they demaunde not whether the Sacramente be the grace it selfe, but whether that there be grace tyed vnto the Sacrament.

The sacrament auayleth not vvithout grace.

Secondly, they do vnderstand that the outward sacrament doth auayle nothing to them which do recepue it, without his grace whose sacramente it is. And so they do dispute of grace, without whiche they do knowe that they cã not be saued. And forasmuch as they do know, that it is offered by the worde of the Gospell, it can not be receyued but by Faith, they aske not whether that the grace be tyed vnto the Worde, but whether it be tyed vnto the Sacrament or no, whereas the Sacrament can not be withoute the worde, and that the Sacramente as a sacrament, hath nothing whych it taketh not of the worde. They doe declare that they doe despaire of the participation of the grace of God, whiche consisteth in faith: and therefore they do loke vnto the outwarde sacraments, of which the euil as wel as the good maye communicate: as well the Carnall, as spiritual: as wel the vnfaithfull, as the faithfull: and they doe desire to bée perswaded in this, that there is grace tyed vnto the sacraments. And they do erpressly vse the worde Tyed, meaning that they doe séeke suche a coniunction of grace with the Sacramentes, so that it should be so knit, and fast bound vnto them, that all they should indifferently be partners thereof, as manye as doe take parte of the sacraments.

What shall we say to this? Wée can not pull from the sacrament the grace of him whose sacraments they be: as it is not méete that the thyng signifyed shoulde be disseuered from the signe of it. On the other syde, wée can not tye grace vnto sacramentes in that sort, as carnal men do suppose it to be tyed. Let vs sée therefore how we ought to iudge, that grace is tyed vnto sacramentes, and how not.

1 Firste, that coniunction is naturall, whereby the strength of fedyng and drinking is ioyned to the Bread and Wine, whereof the heart of the eater and drinker is strengthned and refreshed. By this coniunction, grace is not ioyned vnto sacramentes, nor that shoulde not serue the purpose of carnall men. For like as if a sicke man doe eate bread and drinke, hauing an euill affected stomacke, he is nother strengthned by it, nor refreshed: so it shoulde come to passe vnto these mẽ, which touching their faith, doe not come well disposed vnto the communion of the sacraments.

2 Secondly, there is a Locall coniunction, whereby the meate and drinke be ioyned with the stomacke. Nor this coniunction nother dothe not agrée with the grace and sacramentall signes. Grace is not so nother in bread nor wine, nor in water, that it is conteyned in it, forasmuche as it can not be compassed or closed vp in any place.

3 Thirdly, there is a corporal coniunctiõ also, wherby the head is ioyned to the body, and one member to an other. But the heauenly grace can not away with this nother: whiche being spirituall, can not be comprehended in a corporall knot.

4 Fourthly, there is also an obligatorie coniunction, wherby memnes faith is bounde to be kepte in promises. We can not appoynt vppon thys nother in this case. For the Lorde hath not so instituted his sacramẽts, that he hath absolutely promised saluation vnto all whiche doe recepue them. He said not absolutely, He that is Baptised, but He that beléeueth, and is Baptised, shall be saued, and hée that beléeueth not, shall bée condemned. Wherefore we may not so enforce the worde of the institution and promise in the sacramentes, as though that by the vertue therof, the thing signifyed were so tyed vnto the signe, that they doe indifferently receiue not only the signe, but the thing signifyed also, whosoeuer recepue the sacramẽt, albeit, it be without faith. It was not the Lords purpose to institute such sacraments in which not onely the godlye, but the wicked also shoulde participate of his grace: nor the words of the institution do proue any such matter.

Fiftly, we maye not saye nother, that grace is annexed to the sacrament as the heate of the fyre is vnto Iron. For firste the coniunction is sensible, secondly it is truly so, whether it be to some vse or to no vse. For the fyrie Iron is hote, although that the heate of it be applyed to no vse, although it serue to vnlawfull, and noysome things. We ought not to saye the like of grace and the sacraments. For that which is a sacrament if it be vsed, is not a sacrament in case it be not vsed: nor it hathe no grace annexed vnto it, if it be turned to any abuse.

There remayneth the Sacramentall coniunction, whereby the thyng signifyed is annexed vnto the signe, and the effect of the sacramente vnto the sacrament. Therefore when it is demaunded, whether that there bee grace annexed vnto the sacraments, it may be aunswered, that it is thus farre forthe annexed vnto the sacramente of it, as belongeth vnto the partes of it whereof it is made. If you say, that the sacrament is the visible forme of an inuisible grace, according vnto this definition the grace is tyed vnto the sacrament, so that it is requisite, to make it ful, whole, and perfect. For else if grace be excluded from the visible forme, it shall not be a sacrament. But if you doe say, that a Sacramente dothe consiste of the word and the element, as Augustine sayth: The word commeth to the elemente, and there is made a Sacrament: by this definition grace is not accounted in the partes of a sacramente, and therefore it is not so tyed nother to the sacramente, but that a sacrament may be taken without it. Therfore according vnto the double definition of a sacrament, both maye be aunswered, as well that grace is not knitte vnto sacraments, as that it is sacramentally tyed vnto it: all alike as the parte is tyed vnto the whole, vnto accomplishment whereof it is requisite of necessitie. In this sense he whiche dothe communicate without faith, forasmuch as he dothe not participate of the inuisible grace, he receiueth indéede the visible forme of it, the outwarde part of the sacrament, but he recepueth not the whole sacramente. But as touching the other definition of sacrament, whereby it is sayde, that the worde ioyned vnto the elemente, maketh a sacramente, not onely they do recepue the sacrament, which be made partakers of the grace thereof by faith, but they also, whyche receyuing it without faithe, doe take the outwarde sygne only. So that in some sorte, that is to saye, sacramentally, there is ioyned grace to the sacramentall signes: and yet withall it is not so tyed vnto them, that hée can be partaker of it, which dothe receyue the sacramente without faith. And for an example, take Symon Magus, who when hée was baptised of Philippe, receyued indéede the sacrament of the inuisible grace, of regeneration, clensing, and iustification, but yet hée remayned vtterly voyde of the same grace. For he had no parte or lotte in the kyngdome of God. For his heart was not ryghte before God. But what néede wée anye example of scripture in so manifeste a matter: whereof we doe sée so innumerable examples dayly euery where?

Acts. 8.

Of the integrity or vvholenesse of Sacramentes.

De baptismo contra Donatist. lib. 3. cap. 4.

AVgustine disputeth in certayne places of the wholenesse of sacramentes, that it skylleth not what he beléeueth, and what manner of Fayth he hathe whych receyueth the Sacramente. For that that it is possible, that a man may haue the whole Sacrament and a naughty faythe: as it may be, that he may sticke fast to the whole wordes of the Créede, & yet for all that not beléeue arighte. Whys saying is true after that definition of a Sacrament, when it is defyned by the ioyning togither of the worde and the elemente. Accordyng vnto that the wholenesse of the Sacramente dothe consyst in the word, and the elemente: and it skylleth not to that, that we receyue the whole Sacramente, what wée doe beléeue. But it is an nother matter, in case the question bée of the partaking of the grace of God, and an other matter if we talke of the wholenesse of the Sacrament. Whyche Augustine hymselfe doth not hyde nother, when hée sayeth in the same place: In déede it maketh much matter to the waye of saluation, (what hée beléeueth whyche receyueth the Sacramente) but to the question of the Sacramente, it maketh no matter at all.

But in case wée bée of this opinion, that there dothe belong vnto the wholenesse of Sacramentes, not onlye the worde and elemente, but the inuisible grace also, so that whole Sacramente dothe consyste of the worde, sygne, and matter signifyed, as wée made mention before in the fourthe article, wée shall not allow that saying of Augustine which wée spake of. For so he whyche eyther beléeueth not at all, eyther beléeueth amisse, maye indéede receyue the wordes and signes of the Sacramentes, but hée can not receyue the whole Sacraments, byeause he doth not receyue the best parte of them, whiche is not receyued but by faith, and a cleane hearte. Like as it can not be sayde nother, that he dothe kéepe the whole Créede, which dothe obserue the wordes of it onely, and not the very effect of it also. For the wholenesse of oure Christian beliefe standeth not in wordes onely, but in faith also.

1 And howsoeuer we doe talke of the wholenesse of the Sacramentes, whether that wée doe saye, that there dothe belong grace vnto it, or denye it, we must bée assured of thys, that it is possible, and that it happeneth oftentymes, that the Sacramentes be receyued not whole, but in halfes. For a Sacramente is not a single matter, but a compounde, and that of partes: not of one, but of sundry natures, whyche bée not so tyed togither, but that the one may be receyued without the other. The common people whiche doe communicate in the Poperye, doe not receyue the whole Sacramente, for they bée restrayned from the word of the Lordes institution, by the adioyning of the whyche it is made of an elemente, a Sacramente. For the Priestes do chalenge that to themselues, and doe communicate it of purpose to theselues, that the people must vnderstande no péece of it, no nor heare it nother. But as Augustine sayeth in sundrye places: It is a greate madnesse to communicate in the Sacramente, and not to communicate in the worde. For the worde is more excellente than the elemente: and it is not possible, that the communion of the Sacramente bée whole, whereas men doe communicate in the signe onely, and not also in the worde.

2 But yet there is not a whole Communion of the Sacramente in the Popery: for that that the halfe of the Sacramente, that is to saye, the cuppe of the Lordes bloud, is with-holden from the faithfull people that doe communicate: whych is also of it selfe greate sacrilege, as wée shall sée when the tyme serueth.

3 Thyrdely, if wée be contented to recéaue grace also for one of the partes of the Sacramente, euen so also they doe not receyue the sacrament, whyche receyuyng without faythe, do remayne voyde of the grace of God. What then? In déede it is well done to kéepe and mayntayne to the sacramentes theyr wholenesse: But what shall it auayle, if we doe not withall kéepe the wholenesse of the communion? Albeit that the Sacramentes of themselues bée whole, yet to vs they bée not whole, vnlesse wée doe participate of all their partes wyth true and syncere faith.

Of Baptisme.

HItherto we haue spoken generallye of the Sacramentes, whych is a large fielde and wyde to walke in. But byeause wée wyll kéepe oure selues within oure boundes, nor wyl not passe oure lyttes, we wyll marke those things onely which may turne to some profyte to them that be godlye disposed. And nowe wée wyll procéede vnto the speciall treatye of eache of the Sacramentes particularly, fyrste of Baptisme, and then of the Lordes supper. We will make no very greate adoe in this matter, but we will content our selues with these foure partes, to declare fyrste what Baptisme is, secondly what the institution of it is, thirdly howe it is

The diſpoſition.

will or well ordered, and fourthly which is the true vse of it.

I. What Baptisme is.

The worde Baptisme.

The worde Baptisme commeth of the Greek, and it is as much to say in english, as dipping or drowning in. But forasmuche as it is not meante of euery manner of dipping, but of such a manner, wheras ther is one thing done outwardly, and another inwardly: it is necessarie that we make suche a definition of thys Baptisme, which maye expresse not that which is outwardly done in the element, but that which is set forth to the vnderstandyng by the visible forme of the element. We sayde before, that a Sacrament is a visible forme of an inuisible grace. And baptisme is a sacrament, wherfore baptisme is a visible forme of an inuisible grace. This is the generall definition. So that we must seke suche a one whiche doth specially expresse that inuisible grace, of whiche the sacrament is sette forthe in the visible element or signe. But herein be sundry opinions.

The sacramente of Penaunce.

1 Firste of all, some doe define it to be the sacrament or signe of Penance or Repentance. And they doe take the reason of this definition out of Marke, where we reade in thys wyse: John was in the wildernesse, baptising and preaching the baptisme of repentance, to the forgiuenesse of sinnes. Again, out of the Acts of the Apostles, where Peter sayeth: Doe penaunce, and bee euery one of you baptised in the name of Jesu Christ, to the forgiuenesse of your sinnes. Againe: John baptised the people in the baptisme of repentance. Indede baptisme maye be called and defined to be the sacrament of penaunce, but not so that it must be the full definition of it, as though that there were nothing else to be considered in baptisme but penaunce or the repentance of him which is baptised. For accordyng vnto this definition, baptisme shoulde not be the badge of Chyistes grace, but of the repentance onely of mans hearte. Againe, if there were nothing else in baptisme but repentaunce, and baptisme nothing else but the sacrament of repentāce, it shoulde seeme that it mighte be as often iterated as repentaunce is: and thys way there shoulde be no meane nor ende of baptising, nor there shoulde be accompted no difference betwirte the Christian Baptisme, and the lawishe purifications of the Iewes. And whereas all menne do confesse that baptisme is a sacrament not to be twice taken, it must so fall out, that besides that, it is in some parte the sacramente of repentaunce, so it must be also some other thing, whose grace can not be iterated.

Mark. 1.

Acts. 2.

Acts. 19.

2 Secondly, baptisme is defyned by some, to be the sacrament of faith, as of Augustine writing of the Baptisme of children, sayeth: Therefore like as in some wise, the sacramente of the body of Christe is the bodye of Christ, and the sacrament of the bloud of Christe, is the bloud of Christe, so the sacrament of faith, also is faithe. And he speaketh of Baptisme, which he calleth the sacrament of faith. And they which doe follow him, seeme to be moued by the wordes of Christe, where he sayth: Whosoeuer beleeueth and is baptised, shall be saued, where baptisme is ioyned vnto faithe. The lyke matter is that that Chrysostome defyneth baptisme to be the signet of fayth. And Tertullian sayeth, that washing is ỳ signet of faith. Both they were moued of the wordes of the Apostle, whereas he calleth circumcision, wherevnto baptisme succeded, the signet or seale of the Justice of faith. This definition also is not sufficient. For albeit that baptisme be the sacrament and signet of faith, and that Sayll sayth arighte, that we must be baptised as we haue receyued, and beleeue as we be baptised, yet for al that the same inuisible grace is not expressed in this definition, the visible forme whereof is set forth in the outward signe, and whiche the beleeuer and repentant dothe receyue, as we declared in the place of Faith. In deede both repentaunce and faith also do come of the grace of God, but yet they be not the fulnesse of that grace whiche is conferred by Christ vnto the elect, the toke, sacramente, and vpsealing whereof is in Baptisme.

3 Thirdly, Augustine in certayne places doth define baptisme to be the sacrament of new life. He considered that whyche the Apostle writeth in this wise: For we be buryed togither with him by baptisme vnto deathe: that lyke as Christ arose again from the dead by the grace of the father, so we shoulde also walke in newnesse of lyfe. Surely the condition of the obligation annexed vnto baptisme, is this, that he whiche is baptised, must cast off the olde life, and embrace a newe, so that hee muste be answerable vnto the misterie of the Lords death and resurrection. But yet wee haue not this way nother the ful definition of Baptisme.

The signe of christian profession.

4 Fourthly, there be some whych would haue Baptisme to be nothing else, but a token of Christian profession, whereby we maye be knowen from the vnbeleeuing and enimies vnto Christe. And it is somewhat greeable vnto baptisme, that by it as by an open confession of the christian faith, we do profesle of what religion we bee, and so be sequestred from the vnfaithfull, not onely in hearte, but also by ỳ outwarde signe of faith and sacrament. So Cusanus sayeth, that baptisme is nothing else, but the confession of the same faith. But yet for all this, the inuisible grace is not sufficiently touched in this definition, whereof baptisme is the sacramente. Besides that it mighte be renued agayne in iterating of it, euen as Monkes doe chaunge their coules whiche they doe weare for tokens of their profession.

Cusanus.

The sacramente of christian societie. Augustinus Epist. 28. ad Hieronymū. 1. Cor. 12.

5 Fiftly, there is a like definition of baptisme, when they define it to be the sacramente of christian societie. So Augustine calleth baptisme the sacrament of christian societie. The Apostle doth attribute the same also vnto baptisme, when he sayeth, that we be all baptised by the spirite into one body. And this is one vse of baptisme also, that we be incorporated by it into the societie and communion of the body of the Churche: but it is not such as can serue for the general definition of Sacraments, wherin they be called the visible formes of an inuisible grace.

The token of affliction

6 Sixtely, their definition is not sufficiente nother, whiche doe define baptisme to be the token of afflictions and troubles, whiche they ought to sustayne that do embrace Chryst. So Chryst himselfe did call baptisme his crosse and death. And you sayeth he, can you drinke of the cuppe, that I shall drinke? and be baptised with that baptisme which I am baptised in? For this is their lotte which doe follow Chryst, that they be lefte vnto the crosse. But yet it is one thyng to say what we ought to suffeyne or do for Chryste, and an other vnto what grace they which do beleeue in hym, are consigned, the token whereof is in baptisme.

Marke 10.

The vvashing avvay of sinnes.

7 Seuenthly, baptisme is defyned also and called the washing away of sinnes. This definition pricketh somwhat neere to the marke, and it doth agree with that which Peter sayde: Be euerye one of you baptised in the name of Jesu Chryst, vnto ỹ forgiuenesse of youre sinnes: and wyth that whych Ananias sayde vnto Paule: Goe and be baptised, calling vppon hys name, but yet the definition of baptisme is not complete nother this way: for in case that baptisme were nothyng else, but the washing away of sinnes, there were no let but that it might be iterated euery day: for as much as we do sinne daply, and therfore seke the forgiuenesse of oure sinnes. Therefore after so many definitions, it muste needes be that there is yet somewhat lacking, needefull towards the perfect definition thereof, wherefore it ought not to be iterated. Indede we doe acknowledge, that baptisme is the sacramente of penaunce, faythe, new life, Christian profession, and felowshyp of the crosse, and washing away of sinnes, but doe yet besides these loke for some points more principall.

Acts. 2.

Acts. 22.

8 Eyghtly, let vs see what they be. If we loke vppon Paule, he calleth baptisme the bath of regeneration. And in an other place he sayth: For all yee that are baptised, you haue put on Chryst, and to put on Chryste, is not only to liue his life, but chiefely to be professed, consigned, sanctifyed, and incorporated into him. These be the principall poyntes in the sacramente of Baptisme, and in them there consisteth that inuisible grace, whose visible forme is set forth vnto vs in the outward signe. Wherefore we shall define baptisme arighte, to be the Sacramente of regeneration, purgation, profession, sanctification, consignment, and incorporation into Chryst our Sauioure. For all these things be wroughte by the spirite of Chryste in the electe and faithfull, of which Baptisme is the sacramente: so that it may be said aright, that the same is wroughte in it, sacramentally, whiche is done in dede and spiritually, by the spirit of Chryste. And these things be done, at the will of the holye spirite, of Chryst, eyther before or after baptisme, or at the very doing of the baptising: least that any man shoulde suppose, that the spirite is so bounde vnto the outward sacramente, that it dothe worke this inuisible grace of regeneration, washing, initiation, sanctification, and consigning, either in the heartes of al them that be baptised, eyther allwayes in the verye acte of Baptisme it selfe, spiritually and effectually.

The effect of regeneration. Titus. 3. Gala. 3.

The ministre Baptiseth.

1 Ioh. 3. Rom. 4.

1 I knowe there is no man so mad that wyll saye, that the holye spirite dothe worke the effecte of his grace in the reprobate when they be baptised, baptised, whiche is appoynted for the elect and beleeuing. For we may call to remembrance the example of Symon Magus, of whome we made mention before. So Augustine agaynste the Donatistes: But in case that couetous persons haue not the spirite of God (saith he) and yet for al that haue baptisme, baptisme may be without the spirite.

2 Secondly, it were an exceedyng vnfitte matter, if we shoulde tye the most free worcking of the spirite vnto the outward acte of Baptising. The example of them is knowen, whyche receyued the spirite in Cornelius house before that they were baptised.

3 Thirdly, experience it selfe doth teach vs, that there be many of them that bee baptised, that be not conuerted long after theyr baptisme receyued by the grace and worcking of the holye spirite, vnto the studye of true godlynesse, yea and the moste parte neuer.

And therefore is that saying of Augustine: Lyke as in Abraham there passed before the iustice of faith, and there came after circumcision the token of the iustice of faithe, so there wente before in Cornelius the spirituall sanctification in the gifte of the holye spirite, and there came vnto it the sacrament of regeneration in the washing of baptisme. And lyke as in Isaac which was circumcised the eyghte daye after hee was borne, there passed before the token of the rightuousnesse of faithe, and forasmuche as he followed the faithe of his father, there followed hym (as he growe on) rightuousnesse it selfe, the token whereof passed before in the infante so there goeth before the sacramente of regeneration in the infantes, whiche be baptised also, and in case they doe holde on a Christian godly lyfe, there followeth also that conuersion in their hearte whereof the mysterie passed before in the body. Thys sayeth Augustine. And whereas he sayeth condicionallye, In case they doe holde on a christian godlye life, he dothe exclude the multitude of the reprobate, whyche albeit that they be baptised in theyr infancy, yet for all that they come not vnto christian godlynesse: and therefore we can not determine that there followeth immediately a conuersion in their hearte, of whiche the sacramente passed before in the bodye, so farre wider is it that the worcking of the spirite dothe accompanye the verye acte it selfe of baptisme in them. But withall I will not stande with any man in this poynt, whether they whiche be so baptised, that they be either long after baptisme, eyther neuer conuerted, do receyue ỹ whole or halfe sacramente, whereas both may be saide in some sense and some respect, as we declared before in the ninth article of sacramẽts generally.

The full & perfect definition of baptisme.

Let this therefore be the full definition of baptisme: Baptisme is the sacrament of regeneration, clensing, or if you lisk, of washing, admission, sanctificatiõ, and incorporatiõ, wherby they which do repent and professe the faithe and religion of Chryst, are incorporated and consigned vnto Chryste and hys Churche, that beyng washed from theyr sinnes, they may walke in newnesse of lyfe. In thys definition that mysterye of Baptisme is expressed, for whych VVhy baptisme can not be iterated.

it can not be taken twice. In that that it is deſyned to be the ſacramēt of our regeneration, admiſſion, and incorporation. For regeneration, admiſſion, and incorporation can not be capable of iteration, for he whych is once regenerated from aboue, and admitted vnto the grace of Chryſte, and incorporated to the church, if hée doe fall altogither from this grace, it is not poſſible that he can be regenerated, admitted and incorporated againe. Héerevnto ſerueth that place of the Epiſtle to the Ebrewes wher it is ſaide, that it is impoſſible, that they which be once illuminate, and haue taſted of the heauenly gyfte, and are made partakers of the holye ſpirite, &c. if they fall away, that is to ſaye, if they altogither fall out and runne backe, ſhoulde be renued vnto repentance. Therefore ſéeyng that the miſterie it ſelfe of the Sacramēt can not be iterated, they doe iudge aryghte whych doe ſay, that the ſacramente thereof oughte not to be iterated.

Heb. cap. 6.

Thus muche of the definition of Baptiſme, which is the firſte ſacramente, and whereby we be admitted into the Churche, the like vnto Circumciſion in the olde Teſtamente, whereby they which were circumciſed, were admitted into the couenant of God. Beſides this baptiſme, there be reckened other two alſo: that is to ſaye, the baptiſme of inſpiration, and the baptiſme of the bloud. Of the baptiſme of the ſpirite or inſpiration, that is to witte, of the holye ſpirit, Chriſte ſpeaketh in the Actes ſaying: But you ſhall be baptiſed within theſe few dayes with the holy ſpirite. This kinde of baptiſme is not to be meante of the worke of the holye ſpirite, whereby the inuiſible grace (wherof the outward baptiſme is a ſigne) is perfected in the electe and faithfull, but of that miraculous power of the holy ſpirite, with which the Apoſtles were indued in the daye of Pentecoſt, and were made perfect in the gift of languages, to goe thorough with their Apoſtleſhip or meſſage, throughout all the worlde, and the like matter was that, that ý ſelfe ſame gift of the holy ſpirit was powred vppon them that beléeued by the laying vppon them of the Apoſtles handes, whereof mention is made in the Actes. But notwithſtāding this, ý Apoſtles had obteyned before that inuiſible grace of the ſpirit, whereof baptiſme is the ſacrament. Whyche thyng I do note to this intente, that we ſhoulde not determine that there be two baptiſmes in the ſacramente of baptiſme, and ſo be contrarye vnto the Apoſtle, which ſaith, that there is but one baptiſme.

Baptiſm of the ſpirite & of bloud

Actes. 1.

Act.

Ephe.

Bapti. of bl.

Mark.

The baptiſme of bloud, is the martirdome, whereby the faithfull bée waſhed in their owne bloud, and bée borne into the heauenlye life out of this worlde. In this ſenſe Chriſt ſaid: I muſte be baptiſed in a baptiſme, and how am I troubled, vntill it bée done? Againe: Can ye drinke of the cuppe that I drinke, and be baptiſed with the baptiſme that I am baptiſed with? But this kinde of baptiſme is not giuen vnto the church for a ſacrament, nor it is not common vnto all faithfull folke, as though that there coulde be no Chriſtian man without it. It is a ſpeciall poynt, and for few, vnto whome the Lorde doth giue this, that they maye not onely confeſſe confeſſe with their mouth the ſame whyche belongeth vnto all faithfull, but that they may teſtifye alſo wyth their bloud of the faithe and truth of God: for whych cauſe they be called Martirs, that is afmuch to ſaye, as witneſſes as by a certayne ſpeciall prerogatiue.

Some doe diſpute of the baptiſme of John, and doe make ſuche a difference betwixt it, and the ſame which the Apoſtles vſed, and which we alſo doe yet vſe, that they ſaye, that John waſhed the bodyes only, and that hée cleanſed them not from their ſynnes withall: and that he baptiſed them vnto repentaunce, and not vnto forgiuenelle: but that the Apoſtles dyd cleanſe them from ſinnes, baptiſing vnto forgiuenes: and ſo they do make two baptiſmes of the newe Teſtament: one whereby Chriſt and hys Apoſtles did baptiſe, as in haife part only, and vnſufficiēt: the other, wherby the Apoſtles were baptiſed at the commaundement of Chriſt, full and ſufficiente. But that John baptiſed not to the law, but vnto the grace of the newe Teſtamente, of whiche hée was the precurſor or forerunner, it is no néede to be proued. For in hys baptiſing he directed all vnto Chriſt to beléeue in him, as we maye ſée in the Actes. Beſides that he preached the kingdom of heauen, for we reade in this wiſe: In thoſe dayes there came John Baptiſt preaching in the wildernelle of Jury, and ſaying: Do penance or repent, for the kingdome of God is at hand. If hys preachyng was the preaching of the kingdome of heauen, it was then of the newe, and not of the olde Teſtament: and it requires the ſame faithe in Chryſte, whiche the Goſpell requireth, that was preached by ý Apoſtles. Wherefore ſeeyng that the baptiſme of John is not of the olde, but of the new Teſtament, what make they elſe which would haue it ſundry from the baptiſme of Chriſte, but two baptiſmes of the new Teſtament, and do ſequeſter from vs in baptiſme, Chriſt and the Apoſtles, whiche were in deede baptiſed of John, as though they were baptiſed after an other ſort than wée be? Whereas there is but one baptiſme of the new Teſtamente. For Chriſt and the Apoſtles baptiſed after in any other baptiſme, than wée be. And whereas the Maiſter of the Sentences ſayth, that John baptiſed into repentance only, and not alſo into forgiuenelle of ſinnes, it is contrary vnto the manifeſt truthe. For wée doe reade, that he preached the baptiſme of repentance vnto the forgiuenelle of ſinnes.

Ephe. 4.

Matt. 3. Luke 3.

When I conſider this, I can not put any difference betwixte the baptiſme of John and the baptiſme of Chriſt, inaſmuch as the ſame alſo is ordered corporally in water by the miniſters of Chriſte. We baptiſed in water, ſo he baptiſed alſo. We doe baptiſe vnto Chriſt, and we do admit men into ý kingdome of heauen, and we incorporate thē into the church of God, and he did the very ſame. Ours baptiſme dothe require profeſſion of repentāce and of faith in Chriſt, and the baptiſme of John required the ſame. Ours baptiſme doth promiſe forgiuenes of ſinnes vnto thē whych do repent and beléeue, and John promiſed the ſame. Ours hathe the outward ſigne of ý inuiſible grace, which the ſpirit of Chriſt doth worke in the beartes of the elect and faithfull, and he had the same. John baptised not in the holye spirite and fyre, but dyd leaue that vnto Chriſte only. Nor they nother whyche do baptise nowe adayes, can take that vpon them, vnlesse they will do Chriſt wrong, and deceyue Gods people. What neede many wordes? Like as our baptisme doth offer the same in the sacrament, whiche the preaching of the Gospell doth in worde, so the baptisme also of John did not offer vnto the Israelits one thing in worde, and an other in the sacramente. Wherefore seeyng that there is no difference betwixte them, but that the one was firſt, and giuen vnto the Israelites onely, and this later was communicate vnto ỳ Gentiles also, I thinke we ought not to agree vnto them whiche doe make two sundrye baptismes thereof. Nor the Apoſtles nother did baptise anye other at the firſt, but Israelites, before that they were sent out into the worlde, and yet there is no mã so mad, that wil attribute two baptismes vnto them, one of the Israelites, and an other of ỳ Gentils: like as we ought not to make two Gospels nother, bicause that Chriſte and the Apoſtles did firſt preache vnto the Israelites, and afterwardes vnto the Gentiles.

The compariſon of the baptiſm of Iohn, & of the Apoſtles.

But some man will obiect. If the baptisme of John and the baptisme of Chriſt be all one, then the Apoſtle had no reason to baptise the twelue diſciples in the name of oure Lorde Jesu, whiche were baptised before by John. For to what purpose was it to dippe them twice in one baptisme? Did not some of the Fathers, and Anabaptiſts of oure dayes, take the foundation of their baptising vppon this? Wherefore to mainteyne the fact of the Apoſtle, and to ouerthrow the erroꝛ as well of the old as ỳ new Anabaptiſts, it wer wiſelier done to sequester the baptisme of John from the baptisme of Chriſt, than to make them both one. For the rebaptising is not to be blamed, when they bee rebaptised not in the same, but in a sundry baptisme. This I say, may be obiected vnto vs.

Paule baptised again the twelue diſciples. Act. 19.

And vpon the occasion of this present matter, it were worth the labor, to way thys doyng of Paule wyth some diligence. The old writers and some also of the newe be of the opinion, that these twelue diſciples were twice baptised, once with the baptisme of John, and agayne with the baptisme of Chriſte. Some others of the newe men, do denye that they were twice baptised, affyrming constantly that they were baptised but once onely. And they doe so vary among themselues, that some doe denay that they were baptised before that they came vnto Paule, and therfore that they were baptised but once by hym, and that aryghte: Some doe holde that they were baptised by John before that they were acquaynted wyth Paule, and that therefore they were not baptised agayne by him. The firſte do take the baptisme of John not for a sacramente, but for a doctrine and instruction without any sacramẽt: but that the baptisme of Chriſt whych Paule gaue, was not a doctrine and worcking of the spirite onely, but a sacrament also, and the latter doe take the baptisme of Chryſte, for the doctrine and worcking of the spirite withoute the outwarde sacrament: and that of John,

Scripture pinion this Paule.

John, not for the doctrine onely, but for the outwarde signe of baptisme also.

After the twelue diſciples were twice baptised.

My opinion is, that these diſciples were twice baptised, and the playnesse of the wordes maketh me to thinke so. To iudge of anye matter, we muſt principally conſider, what it is that is called into queſtion. In this present case the queſtiõ is, whether that those twelue diſciples were twice baptised or but once onely. Wherefore we muſt way in Paules wordes what he demanded of them, and what not. For as much as he sawe that they were reckened amongſt the diſciples, he presumed that they were not only beleuers, but baptised also: and therefore he asked not whether they were belcuers, but whether beleuing they had receyued the holy spirite. And when they had answered: No we haue not so muche as heard that there is a holy spirite. Then againe he doth not aske them, whether that they were baptised or no, but as presuming that they were baptised, forasmuche as they were diſciples, he asked them whereunto they were baptised. As though he hadde sayde: Seeyng that you be diſciples, no doubte you be baptised, therefore tell me in case you haue not hearde of the holye spirite, vnto what you be baptised: what manner of baptisme you be baptised in? and vnto whome you be profeſſed: Hereunto they did not answere: We bee not baptised, for they were not asked of that, whether they were baptised or no, but they sayde, We bee baptised with the baptisme of John. By these wordes it appeareth well, that they were baptised of Johns baptisme. He that asketh of me what kind of man I am, declareth playnely that he beleueth that I am a man. So by order he shoulde firſt haue asked, whether they were baptised or no, if he had doubted of it, rather than into what they were baptised.

Likewise I do gather of the seconde baptisme whiche is of Chriſt, by the demaund and answere of the Apoſtle. And also that there was a lacke in the baptisme of John, in that that they were not baptised in Chryſte. For whereas he sayeth, In deede John baptised with the baptisme of penaunce, speaking to the people of him whiche shoulde come after him, that is to say, of Chriſt Jesu. And whereas it is added: And hearyng this, they were baptised in the name of the Lorde Jesu, what meaneth it else, but that they were voyde of the baptisme of Chriſt: yea and ignorant of the holy spirite, and that for thys cause they were baptised agayne in the baptisme of Chriſt. So I thinke it is a cleare case that they were baptised not once onely, but twice.

And yet for all that, there is no gap opened by this opinion of mine, vnto the Anabaptiſtes to rebaptise. For ỳ Anabaptiſts haue not the like occasion, as the Apoſtle hadde with these twelue diſciples, whiche were indeede twice baptised, but not wyth one, but sundrye kindes of baptisme. That rebaptisme is vtterly to be reiected, which is of one very selfesame sacrament. For it is written. There is one baptisme, like as there is one Lorde, and one faith. What maketh matter but that the Jew which is so oftẽ washed in ỳ law, might be washed againe if he come to chriſt? But ỳ Donatistes and oure Anabaptistes doe washe them agayne which haue bin once washed, and that with the very same sacrament. And that these twelue, before that they came vnto Paule, were not washed with ỹ baptisme of Christ, but with ỹ baptisme of Johan, so that they neyther vnderstode ỹ they were baptised in Christ, nor had heard of any working of the holy spirite, it appeareth wel ynough by the very texte. In case that they were not baptised in the name of Iesu, in what name were they baptised then, but in the name of Johan? But lette it be in any, surely it was not in the name of Iesus Christe. For then Luke should haue sayd very vnaduisedly: And when this was heard, they were baptised in the name of Iesus. So that in case they were not baptised before, neither in the name of Iesus, nor had receiued any thing of the holy spirite, what remaineth else, but ỹ they were baptised eyther of false Apostles, eyther by some counterfait disciples of Johan? In this case what could the Apostle do else, but admitte thē by an expresse consignement vnto the Lord Christ in baptisme? For in case that the Corinthians, of whome we doe reade, had bin baptised in the name of Paule, certaynely they muste haue bin newe washed, not wyth the same, but wyth a sundrye sorte of baptisme, that is to saye, of Chrysk. But bycause that they were baptised in the name of oure Lorde Iesu, albeit that of a naughty zeale they stucke vnto other Schoolemaisters, and deuided the vnitie of Christes bodye, yet for all that there was no cause to washe them agayne wyth the selfe same baptisme, but to bée putte in mynde of the baptisme of Chryste, and to bée perswaded to kéepe the vnitie of the Churche. For thys cause wée doe reproue the elders, bycause they dyd rebaptise agayne wyth the selfesame Sacramente, suche as hadde béene once admitted alreadye vnto baptisme, and nerte vnto them the Anabaptistes also of oure dayes, whiche vpon a madde gier do rebaptise them, whyche haue bene already baptised, in none other name, but of the father, the sonne, and the holy spirite: and in no other signe, but in that whyche was institute by Chryste hymselfe. And therefore they do vpon no good grounde abuse thys example of the Apostle, to the defence of theyr error. And so it can not bée proued by thys facte of the Apostle, that the baptisme of Johan was one, and that of Christe an other, although that Augustine was of thys opinion: from whyche Ambrose for all that, dothe differ, who wryteth thus: Thys gyfte of God was opened vnto men, to sette forth the beginnings of the faythe, as it came to passe at the verye beginning among the Apostles and other disciples, and also in those twelue, whiche bycause that they were in a counterfait baptisme vnder the name of the baptisme of Johan, not clensed, but defiled, the Apostle Paule commanded them to bée baptised in the name of the Trinitie, vppon whome when handes were layde, there fell vpon them the holy spirit, and ministred vnto them the talke of dyuers tongues, wyth the interpretation of the same, so that no man durst denye that the holy spirit was in them. This saith he.

1. Cor. 1.

Ambros. Epist. ad. [illegible]

He

He did more wisely say, that the baptisme of those twelue men was counterfayt which dyd rather defile than clense them, than Augustin did which saith, ỹ they wer baptised by Johan. The Baptisme of Johan was not counterfaite, but from heauen, nor it did not defile folke, but did clense as many as did beleue vnto the forgiuenesse of their sinnes. It is no doubt a great lacke of consideration, that they whiche are of the contrarie opinion, do not way what it meaneth, that Christe himselfe & the Apostles were baptised of Johan: of whom for al that it is not writen, that they were eyther Baptised againe, either of any other baptisme, than we be baptised, innow a dayes.

Aug. cont. Petil. lib. 3. cap. 32

II. Of the institution of baptisme.

WE mayperceiue that Johan was the first that ministred the sacrament of Baptisme at the beginning of the new Testament, & that his Baptisme was called by Christ The counsel of God, and that it was from heauen. And that the disciples of Christ did baptise before his passion, which we muste not thinke was done without his commaundement. As for the expresse commaundemēt of Baptising, giuen to the disciples after the resurrectin, as of the expresse institution of the preaching of the Gospel (albeit that the Apostles preched also before, as it appeareth in Matth.) we may sée in Matthew, and Marke the lasse. And although that absolutely the first institution of Baptisme was not made at that time, yet it was then so instituted, ỹ not only such as beleued of the Iewes were not therby consigned into the kingdome of God, as before, but such as beleued also of the Gentiles: lyke as the preaching of the kingdome of God also was then at length appoynted and ordayned to be such, as shoulde be opened not onely vnto Iewes, as it was before, but vnto the Gentiles also, whiche was not lawful before that season.

The Maister of the Sentences supposeth that it may be better sayd, that the institution of baptisme was made at that time when Christe was Baptised of Johan in Iordane. How this doth agrée wyth that opinion whych he followeth, that they make the baptisme of Johan a sundry baptisme frō ỹ baptisme of Christe, let himselfe be iudge. Let vs way ỹ institution of Baptisme which doth concerne the Iewes not onely, but vs also, whiche doe beléue in Christ of the Gentiles. Of the same we do reade in this wise: And when Iesus came, he spake vnto them, saying: All power is giuen me in heauen and in earth: Therfore goe ye, and teach al nations, baptising thē in the name of the father, the sonne, & the holy spirit, teching them to obserue al things, which I haue commaunded you. And loe, I am wyth you euerydap, vntil the accōplishmēt of the world. This he sayth in that place. In which words, these three points be plainely ynough set forth: first who instituted ỹ baptisme wherby we be washed. Secōdly, vnto whō Thirdly, how it should be ministred.

The Maister of the Sentences.

Math. 28.

Who instituted Baptisme.

First, it is no small skil by whom the tokens of Grace be instituted, & who be the authors of them, ỹ they become not as voyd, but ratified and established. It is necessarie, that the verye same be the author of the Sacrament, signe, and token, whiche is the author also of the grace, whose visible forme is in the Sacramente.

The authoritie to make sacramẽts, is to be attributed vnto none, vnto whom the authority of the inuisible, grace can not be attributed. And the same can not be attributed vnto any man, but vnto him which receaued it of God his father. He is none of the Apostles, nor yet of them which do boast themselues to be the successours of the Apostles, but onely Christe the onely begotten of God, who onely receyued all power in heauen and in earth from God hys father. Of this power of Christ, how full and iust it is, and not only earthly, but heauenlye also, we haue noted in our Cõmentaries vpon Matthew. We do se therfore by this institution of baptisme, not onely that it is no deuise of the Apostles, but ý commaundement of the Lord: but we doe se also wt what authoritie it is instituted by him; that we shoulde not doubt, but that the same is the author of the sacramẽt in him, whiche is the author of the grace, and ý he is not of the Earth, but of heauẽ:
and that it is not the counsel of mã, but of God. This consideration serueth our consciences to this end, that we may know, that we do baptise and be baptised, not by any authority of man, but of God.

Cap. 28.

Vnto vvhõ baptisme is appointed.

Secondlye, it is expressed vnto whome baptisme & the preaching of the Gospel is appointed by the cõ-sel of God, & commaundement of our Lord: Go (sayth he) and teach all natiõs, baptising the. &c. Therfore not ý Israelites only, but we also whiche be of ý Gentiles, doe so belong vnto ý kingdome of Christ, that we be no lesse partakers of al that grace, than they be. For he doth declare sufficiently by ý, that he would the doctrine and baptisme to be cõmunicated vnto al ý nations of the whole world, ý he wold haue al ý grace also wherof baptisme doeth containe the visible forme, to be cõmunicate vnto all nations, ý they might be also partakers of the washing away of sins, regeneration, sanctification, iustification, ensealement, & incorporation therof.
And this is it which the Apostle calleth the misterie hidden frõ ý world, and opened vnto the Apostles. And the Acts of the Apostles do declare, why ý this misterie was hardly and scarsly knowen vnto the firste Christians, that were of the Israelites, yea after that this general commaũdement was receyued from Christ.

Ephes. 3. Actes 10. Gen. 12.

Thirdly, there is added also the ministring of the Baptisme, whiche the Schole doctors do cal the forme.
He sayeth not absolutely, baptising them, but he addeth, In the name of the father, &c. whiche is reade two wayes: for some do read it, In the name of ý father, the son, & the holy spirit: & some others into the name of the father, the sonne, and the holy spirit. And both these speaches be founde in the holy Scriptures. For in the Acts we reade thus: Repent of your sinnes and be baptised euerye one of you, in the name of Iesus Christ. And in the place whiche I touched before, whiche way so euer we doe reade it, both is to be taken in one sense. When he sayth, Bap-

The firste author why he spake not in the name of the god of Abrah. Isaac, and Iacob.

The ministrer of baptisme.

Actes 2.

tising them Into the name, or In the name, of the father, the sonne & the holye spirite, he doeth not simply commaunde them to Baptise suche as doe beleeue, but to consigne them in Baptisme into the name, that is to saye, into the possession, right, religion, and grace, of the father, and the sonne, and of the holy spirite, to be the people of God, the partakers of his couenaunt and grace. And if we doe expounde Into the name, that is to say, into the fayth and confession of hys name, or into his possession, power, and iurisdiction, or into the strength and power, or into the couenant & grace of the father, and the sonne, and the holy spirite, it is no matter. For all this is true, and agreeing with the nature of baptisme.

But some body will aske me here,
why Christ sayde not Into ý name of the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob, or Into the name of the lord God of Israel? Is not that only and true God, into whose name we be consigned ouer, the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob, and of their sæde, into whome we which do beleue in Christe of the Gentiles, are grafted in by baptisme, as into the naturall Oliue tree? I answere.
No doubte it is no other GOD into whose name we be Baptised:
and certaynely it can not be denied, but that we be grafted oute of the wilde Oliue into that kindely Oliue of Israel, by baptisme. But yet for al that, it is not without great reason, that there is not prescribed vnto vs such a forme of Baptisme, whereby we should be baptised into the name of the God of Abraham, Isaac, & Ia-

The second question vvhy hee sayde not, In the name of god, the vvord, and the Spirite. Psalme. 33.

cob, & Israel, but wherby we shoulde be Baptised into the name of the father, the son, and the holy spirite.

For firste there might be some daunger, least we should seeme to be Baptised vnto all the ordinances & institutions and order of Moses law, wherunto the church of ý Israelites was consigned by circumcision: specially seeing that the firste beginning of the gathering of the Churche of Christ proceeded of the Israelites, and that the Apostles, the ministers of Christes kingdome, yea and Christ himselfe, came of the Israelytes, yea & seeyng that the same lawith principles and Introductions of Moyses, was stirye stucke vnto by the Churche of the Israelites, as we may perceyue in the Actes. Also that reporte of God, that he is the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob, and of their sæde, doth better agree vnto the olde Testament and vnto Circumcision, by whyche the one-ly people of Israell was consigned vnto GOD, than to the newe Testament and to Baptisme, wher-by not one nation alone, but generally all the nations of the whole world are sealed vp vnto hys name and peculiare possession, grace, and faythe, who is the GOD, not of ý Iews only, but of the gẽtiles also.

Secondly, it may be demaanded:
why he said not, Baptising them in the name of God, the worde, and the spirite, if hys meaning was, that the misterye of the holy Trinitie shoulde be reueled in the world: specially seeing ý these words, God, ý word, and the spirite, be knowen in Scripture.
As: The heauens be established by the word of the Lord, & al ý strength of them by the spirite of his mouthe? I answere, First that the knowlege of the holy Trinitie is not yet sufficiently comprehended in this, albeit a man do know, that the onely God, is God, the worde, and the spirit, whiche not only the Iewes may knowe by the Scriptures, but the Philosophers of the gentiles also did know, as their writings do testifie: but it is requisite also, that we do knowe by fayth, that the same worde wherby al, things were made, is of one and equall essence in his nature to God, as the sonne to the Father. And that the same also was sent from the father into this worlde, and was incarnate, that is to saye, that God the father sent his onely begotten sonne for our saluation, by whom, beyng giuen vnto death and offered vpon the Crosse for our sins, we shoulde be redemed: whereof there passed a certayne figure before in Abraham and Isaac. And therevpon it commeth, that Christe doeth oftentimes vse these wordes of father, and sonne: manyfestly declaring, that God the father can not be knowen aright, but by the sonne: nor the sonne, but by the father: and that there doeth consyste lyfe euerlastyng in thys knowledge, to knowe God the Father, and hys sonne Iesus Christ whom he sente. Wherefore to set forth thys mysterye of the Father, and the Sonne, in the nature of God, to be somewhat better knowen, and to be honoured also with the grace of that matter which was taken in hande, the lorde did appointe vs this manner of fashion and forme of Baptisyng. So that when we be baptised in ỳ name of the father, the sonne, and the holy spirit, we be wont any nay, sealed vp vnto the fayth of the holy Trinitye, and according vnto this fayth we be admitted vnto the seruise & honor of the father, the sonne, and the holye spirite. So that Basile sayde aryght: We muste be baptised as we haue receiued, and beleeue as we be baptised, and glorifye as we haue beleeued, the Father, the Sonne, and the holye Spirite. This argument we must vse also stoutly against the newe Arrians.

Thirdly, some men doe demaund that where as Christe commaunded menne to baptise in the name of the father, and the son, and the holy spirite, how chaunce we read not ỳ the Apostles did vse that forme, but that they did Baptise absolutelye in the name of our Lorde Iesu: as Peter sayd in the Actes: And let euery one of you be Baptised in the name of Iesu Christ. Item: Men and women were Baptised in the name of Iesu Christ. Againe: Peter did bid them of the household, kinsfolke, and frendes of the Centurion, to be baptised in ỳ name of Iesu Christ: I answere, that it can not be affirmed ỳ the Apostles did not Baptise in the name of the father, and the sonne and the holy spirit, by that it is not read, that they did so baptise. For the scripture doth not make mentiō neyther with what wordes they did Baptise, but it setteth forth this only, that they did baptise in the name of Iesus Christ, that is to saye, that they did consigne thē which beleued in Christ, vnto hys name. Againe, to Baptise in the name of Iesu Christ, is not to Baptise seuerally in the son of God, but in the father himselfe also, and in the holy spirit. In case that he whiche beleeueth in Christ doeth not beleeue in Christ only, but in the father also, as the Lord himself saith: He that beleueth in me, doeth not beleeue in mée but in hym onely whych sent me, what apleth it, but by the same reason he should be baptised in the father, which is baptised in Christ: To be baptised in Christ, is to be baptised in the annoynted of God, yea and (as Ambrose doth note right well) in the father also whiche annoynted him, and in the holy spirite also, by whom he is annoynted of the father. Besides this, the name of Christ was wel knowen, cōmon & wel liked of ỳ people in the Hebrew tong משיח of whence ỳ firstlings of the Church of Christ was gathered, so ỳ it was not without cause, ỳ the Apostles commaunded suche as beleeued at the firste, to be baptised in the same: specially seeing that the misery of the holy Trinitie did not wel like that people.

The third question vvhy vve reade not that the Apostles vsed this fourme of baptising. Act. 2. Act. 10.

of

Fourthly, we must beware, least we giue occasion to the ignorant by this place, to make thrée Goddes, as though that the Father were seuerally a God, the son a God seuerally and the holy Spirite seuerally another God. For asmuchas the names of the thrée persons be as it were seuerallye reckened in this forme of baptisme. We be not baptised in the names, but in the name: not of many Gods, but of one in nature and essence, and triple in persons & properties. Nor it is not so hard a matted to conceiue of the Trinitie in Unitie. and of the Unitye in Trinitie, seeing that it is playnely to be perceiued not onely in the nature of God, but of men and other liuing things also. There is in manne the soule, the spirite, and the bodye, thrée distinct substances, which for al that do make but one man, and not thrée. In the soule there is the mind, the vnderstanding, and the wil: but these doe not make thrée soules, but one only. In the Sunne there is the verye substaunce of it, the heate, and the lyghte, and yet there be not thereby made thrée sunnes, but one. Take the lyght and shynyng from the sunne, and thou shalte see the bodie of it no more: take awaye the heate, or warmeth, and thou shalte not feele whether the sunne be in the skie or no. The shewing of the sunne is in the shyning and the heate. Take away the worde and spirit from God, & we shal come by no knowledge of him at al. Therfore whereas the sunne, and the spirite are ioyned vnto the Father, it doeth further nothing to the makyng of manye Goddes, but to the manyfestyng of one true God, whiche was to be spred throughout the worlde by the Gospel,

And we must beware of this also, that we suppose not that the sonne is lesse than the father, and the holy spirite lesse than the sonne, bicause that the Father is sette in the first place, the Sonne in the seconde, and the Spirite in the thyrde, as Donatus thoughte as Augustine doeth witnesse in hys Booke of Heresies Ad quod vult Deum. These wordes or appellations of the Father, the sonne, and the holye spirit, be not so set one after the other, that they should make the persons sons

There is set foorth no equalitie of persons.

sons in the godhead the one highest, the other mean, and the other infinit, but they be so rather ioyntly linked togyther, to ascertaine the equalitye of Godhead to ech of them. And this knitting togither of them is suche, that it giueth no place to anye creature in this case of Sacramental admission, that we should not be Baptised vnto anye creature, and turne the honor of the Creator, redeemer, and releuer, vnto creatures. Wherfore we must conceyue, ỹ this coniūction of thre persons hath ỹ strength and force of making equal, and not of makyng lesse, so that we maye therby right wel defende and maintayne the godhead of ỹ father, the sonne, and the holy spirite to be one and true God, to be al one and equal.

Of the administration of Baptisme.

NOw that we haue cōsidered of ỹ institution, we must next see of the administration of it. For it can not be sufficient to the holesome vse thereof, that Baptisme of it selfe is holy, and instituted by Christe himselfe, onelesse it be also lawfully dispensed and bestowed, like as a medicine though it be neuer so good of it selfe, and giuen of neuer so cunning a Phisition, yet it can not be auaileable, vnlesse it bee well vsed. And herein are three things to be cōsidered. First vnto whom Baptisme may be giuen: secondly vnto who it ought not to be giuen: thirdly, howe it must be ministred.

The order of this Article.

I. Vnto vvhom Baptisme may be giuen.

No man ought to put from the baptisme of Christe.

ALthough that there be an innumerable sorte and diuersitie of nations, and people, of kindes and seres, of ages and estates, of behauiour and degrees of men, yet there is no man, what nation, kinde, sere, age, estate, and degree so euer he be, whether that he be an Ethnike or a Iew, man or woman, yong or olde, free or bound, rych or poore, although that he be subiecte to neuer so grieuous faults, that ought to be put frō the Baptisme of Christ, for almuch as Christ himselfe doth cal all vnto him: and came vnto thys world for this purpose, that he woulde be the sauioure of al: And gaue this charge vnto his Apostles, to teach and baptise al nations. And seeing that he woulde haue the preaching of hys grace common vnto al, and therfore commaunded it to be set forth vnto all liuing men, who may not see that Baptisme also whiche is annexed vnto the preaching of ỹ gospel, may be communicate vnto all them vnto whom the grace it selfe (wherof it is the Sacrament,) is communicated by the Lords cōmaundement: And to this purpose ther do serue many places of holy scripture, as this: So god loued the world. &c. And Paul saith: One died for al. Agayne, that he by the grace of God should taste deathe for all men. Item, Who wil haue all men to be saued & come to ỹ knowledge of the truth. &c. Ergo the signe of this grace also, ỹ is to saye, Baptisme, is to be communicated vnto al men.

And

And this vniuersall communion of the heauenly grace which is proposed vnto all, consisteth in two things. 1. The one is the common necessitie whereunto al kinde of mē is so subiect, that without the grace of Christ, whose sacramente Baptisme is, none therof can be saued, no not the infant of one houre olde. And therupon is that sayd of the Apostle: All haue sinned, and haue nede of the glory of God. And, In Adam all do dye, and in Christ al be restored vnto life. And for this cause some of the fathers and of them Augustine namely thought that the infantes which were taken from this life withoute Baptisme, were condemned: as thoughe that the infantes could by no meanes be partakers of the grace of Christ but by Baptisme only, whereas Iacob being yet in his mothers belly, was beloued of God, and obtayned ỹ grace, not afterward by circumcision, the sacrament of admission. In dede they iudged aright in this point, that they thought that they nor the infantes neither, could be saued wythout the grace of Christes bloud: but this were a very hard point, and not agreable to the grace of Christ, that they which are bereft by any occasion from Baptisme, shoulde be in like case, as they which are bereft of the grace it selfe. The Pelagians did vpholde, that infants dying without Baptisme, be not damned: but they did it for such a cause, as can not be allowed of the faithful. For they dā̄ that they had no sinne in them why they might be damned, and ỹ therefore they were saued by their owne innocency. And to withstand this errour, the fathers sponne me such a thred, or grosse corde rather in their argumentes, that they denyed, that the infants of the faythful were saued, which were taken away by death before Baptisme, and not only bycause that they were cōceyued and borne in sinne, but for that they supposed, that when they were bereft of Baptisme, they were bereft also of the verye grace of Christ.

2 Secondly, the vniuersal cōmunicating of the grace of Christ stādeth also vppon that will of God, whereof we spake in the places of the scripture before recited. And in the Gospel of Iohn: This is the wil of the Father, &c. Those things whiche we haue touched before hereof in the matter of fayth, that fayth in Christ belongeth vnto the elect only, doth not hinder, but that the grace of Christ shoulde be proposed vnto al men, as in preachyng, so in communicatyng also of the Sacraments.

Iohn. 3. 1. Timo 1. Iohn. 6.

II. Vnto vvhom Baptisme ought not to be giuen.

Euery man is not immediatly to be baptised.

ALbeit that it is apparant, that both the grace of Baptism, & the preaching of the Gospell is to be set forth vnto all, and that the Sacrament therof ought to be denied to no man, yet for all that this is a cleare case also, that Baptism is not without respect to be giuen vnto euerye man. For it is one thing to say, that it shoulde neuer be giuen: and another matter to saye, that it ought not as yet to be giuen: and as ther is no

no man of whome ye may say, that the Sacraments of ꝑbaptisme ought neuer to be giuen vnto him: so there be many also vnto whome you may say, that it ought not as yet to be giuen.

Two impediments of baptisme. If a man be not elect.

Wherfore, there be certain lettes and impediments to hinder, that the grace of baptisme cā not take place. And they be of two sorts, the one is secret, the other is manifest. That is secrete, in case that a man be not of the number of the Elect, but be of the reprobate. And albeit this let do alwayes make the man vnpe of the grace of Christ, yet it can not be so obserued in the church of Christ, as touchyng the administration of the sacraments, that we can baptise the elect only, and admitte them to the communion of the lords supper only, and put awaythe reprobate, no more than it could be done in ꝟ olde Testament, in which God himselfe did so institute the sacrament of circumcision, the signe of his couenant, that he would not haue any differēce made in the administration thereof betwixt the elect and the reprobate, by the presumption of man, but he did so reserue the knowledge of his difference vnto himselfe, that he cōmaunded, ꝟ the sacramente of hys grace should be ministred the eyght day to all infants, as wel reprobate as elect, as wel vnto Esau whom he hated in his mothers wombe, as vnto Iacob whom he loued before that he was borne. Therfore seeing that this difference of the elect and reprobate of the new borne infants is so hidden from our iudgement, it is not meete that we should enquire vpon it, when baptisme ought to be ministred, least by ouersight we may reiect the vessel of grace, and least we should seme to seeke to be wiser and more circumspect in the administring of the sacrament, than God himselfe was in the first institutiō of ꝟ same.

The manifest impediment and the let thereof, is the manifest refusall & repyoke of the grace preached and offered by the gospel of the kingdom of God. In respect of this he ought not yet to be Baptised, which doeth by incredulity eschewe and refuse ꝟ the grace of Chriſte preached vnto him, as long as he doth continue in that obstinacye and incredulitie, and kepeth that impenitent hart. Albeit it chaunceth oftentimes, that such a one may be appointed by Gods predestination vnto life, and maye be a vessel of grace: the example whereof hath passed before in Paule, who albeit that he were of the number of the elect, and was partaker of that grace, the Sacramente whereof consisteth in Baptisme, yet for all ꝟ he coulde not be partaker nor capable of baptisme, as long as he dyd withstand the preaching of grace by incredulitie.

The manifest refusall of Gods grace.

For this cause the Apostles dyd require repentaunce and confession of the fayth in Christ, of them whiche were of yeres of vnderstanding, before that they would baptise thē. So Peter sayde: Repent, and be euerie one of you baptised in the name of Iesu Christ, by which words he did assuredlye signifie, that it is required of them that be of vnderstanding, that they repent, for as muche as the sacramente of the grace of God ought not to be bestowed vpon them which be impenitent. And in ꝟ same chapter we read thus: therfore they which receyued his word, were Baptised. Ergo they which receyued not his word, but withstode it, were not Baptised. Againe: And when they beleued (sayth he) Philips preaching of the kingdome of God, they were baptised both men and wome, in the name of Iesu Christ. And in the same chapiter of the Eunuche: Lo here is water sayth he, what is ꝟ let, but that I may be baptised? and Philip sayde: In case thou doest beleue with al thy harte, thou mayest be. And he answered and said: I doe beleue, that Iesus Christ is the son of God. And he badde that the charet should stay. And they went down both into the water, Philip and the Eunuche, and he Baptised him. By these places it appeareth, that there is required of them which be of vnderstanding, a repentant hart, receyuing the word of grace, and beleuing in Christ: so that they which be impenitent, and refusing the worde of grace, and vnbeleuing, can not be yet able to receiue this grace, albeit that they be of the Elect, vntil that they be conuerted.

Of the Baptism of children.

The Anabaptistes doe argue vpon this place, In case (say they) that repentance be requisite before Baptism, then infants are not meete to ꝟ receiue Baptisme, for they can neither repent nor beleue ꝟ preaching of the Gospel. Therefore they ought to be Baptised at such time, as they come to yeares of vnderstandyng, and be able to do both. And hereunto they doe apply that whiche Christ spake, setting sayth before Baptisme: He that doeth beleue and is Baptised, shall be saued. Besides that, that the Apostles also did baptise onely suche as were of some vnderstanding, and did professe their faith: and they say also, that it is not readde in Scriptures, that they did baptise infants. And they be moued by these argumentes vtterly to condemne the baptisme of children, and therefore doe bring in Rebaptising.

Infants can not beleue

First, whereas they do say, that infants can not beleue the preaching of the gospel, nor professe repentāce, they be not the first alone that do so saye. Albeit there be some in oure dayes whiche in disputation of the fayth of infantes doe holde, that they maye beleue: which opinion we can not allowe, as we declared before in the place of fayth, in the seuenth Article. And it is not sufficiente in thys case, to haue a secrete fayth, but there is requisite also the profession of fayth, whiche can not doubtlesse be ascribed vnto infantes, although ꝟ Papistes oodemaūde the same of them at their baptisme particularly, one peece after another throughout al their Crede, as wel as they do of them that be of vnderstanding.

Euerye thing is not required vpon infantes, whiche is required of thē that be of vnderstanding.

Secondly, whereas they do argue hereupon: Seing ꝟ they ought not to be baptised whiche can not professe repentance & faith, but infantes cā professe none of thē both: Ergo infants ought not to be baptised. Albeit we graunt the seconde part of ꝟ argument, yet we do stick in the first part, and wil haue that more specially sifted, & we do denie the conclusion. If the question be touching the that be of yeares of vnderstanding, we do allow the first part, but in case it be touching infants, we do not so. For the case of infantes is otherwise also before God than the case is of them which bee of yeares of vnderstanding: nor it is not itte, that the very same in matters of religion be required of infants, whiche is of necessitie required of them that be of yeres of vnderstanding. Wherof we haue noted more at large in our Commentaries vpon Math. 8. Wherefore some men haue written very inconsiderately in our days, that if it doe appeare that infants haue no fayth in Christ, they doe admise vs that we shoulde vtterly and spedily forbeare from the Christening of them, whych kynde of writing I beleue hath ministred greate occasion of erroure to the Anabaptistes, albeit that they whych wrote it, wer cleere inough frō their error.

The faulte of incredulitie cannot be imputed vnto infantes.

Furthermore, although that infants haue not yet fayth, yet for al ỳ incredulitie can not be charged vpō them, much lesse the manifest wythstanding of it, whiche proceedeth of incredulitie. Nor we can not attribute impenitence vnto them, which do let them that be of ful vnderstanding, nor there can not be required repentaunce of them, such as maye be of them that be of yeres of vnderstāding, to returne vnto innocency of life, and to be made like infantes, according vnto saying of Christ: Vnlesse you conuert, & become like as children, you shall not enter into the kyngdome of heauen. Therefore seyng that infants be such, that they be set forth for an example vnto thē, that be of ful vnderstanding, that by repentaunce they may be made like vnto infantes, who is so grosse to iudge that repentance is as much to be required of infants, as it is of thē that be of yeares of vnderstanding: Wherefore they be but vaine matters which the Anabaptists do apply vnto infants to haue faith and repentance in them before Baptisme.

They doe also oftentimes alleage those definitions of Baptisme, which we sayd before, be insufficient, which they do, bicause that they wolde proue by some colorable definition of baptism, ỳ infants are not mete to take it, and that therfore they ought not to be baptised. But they do not way what that principal grace of Christ is, of which baptisme is the Sacrament, and wherof infantes also may be receiuers, as of the couenaunt of God, the regeneration, the washing, the sanctification, the consignement, & incorporation. They do in their colorable argument gather this vpon the insufficient definition: Baptisme is the signe of repentance, but infāts cā not repent Ergo they ought not to be consigned with the signe of repentance. Item: Baptisme is the signe of faith, but infantes haue no fayth, Ergo be not to be admitted vnto the signe of Faith. Item: Baptisme is the signe of mortification and of newe life, infantes be yet voyde of mortification and newe life, Ergo, they ought not to be baptised. They might argue likewise also of Circumcision: Circumcision was the signet of the righteousnesse of fayth, which was in Abraham, but the infantes of the Israelytes coulde not haue the fayth by the eyghte daye, Ergo

Ergo they ought not to haue bene consigned with the signet thereof, & circumcised. The circumcision of the flesh required, the circumcision of ỳ hart, as we may see in Deuternomie, infantes could not do that by the eyght day, Ergo, they shoulde not haue bene circumcided the eight day. And what doe they else by thys manner of arguing, but exclude not onely the infantes of the faythfull from the grace of GOD, the tokens whereof they will not haue communicated vnto them, but reproue and condemne the counsel and purpose of GOD also, whereby he would haue them consigned and admitted vnto the grace of his couenant: They consider not, that Baptisme is the sacrament, not onely of faith, repentance, and newe life, but principally also of the couenaunt of God, and of his heauenlye grace. Like as Circumcision also was the signe of the couenaunt whereof infantes of the Iewes were partakers, although that they hadde not yet obtayned the fayth of Abraham. They were circumcised into the fayth of Abraham, not so that they then hadde it, but so that they shoulde be brought vp in it, and endued withal. The case of Abraham was otherwise. It was required of him, that he shoulde beleue and walke before God with an vpryghte hart, before that he was consigned with the signe of the couenant. So nowadayes also the case of them is otherwise, which do come vnto baptisme being of ful vnderstanding: of them is iustly required repentance, conuersion, faith, and newnes of life, before that they be baptised.

As cōcerning the words of Christ: He that beleueth and is baptised, shall be saued, and he that beleueth not, shal be condemned, the answere is easy.

He that beleeueth, & is baptised.

1 First, Christ doeth not prescribe here who ought to be baptised, and who not, but whiche be saued, and which be condemned. He sayth not, He that beleueth, let him be Baptised: and he that beleueth not, let hym not be baptised: but he that beleueth, and is Baptised, shall be saued, and he that beleueth not, shall be condemned.

2 Secondly, Although that he had said thus: He that beleueth, let him be baptised, yet it were not to be vnderstanded but of them that be of yeares of vnderstanding. Such sayings of Faith, hope, loue, obedience, fear, & seruice of God, conteyned in ỳ scriptures, are not to be applyed vnto infantes, but vnto them that be of full yeares of vnderstanding, which be of capacitie to receiue them by age. As these be to the Ebrewes: Withoute faith it is impossible to please God. And whatsoeuer is not of faith, is sinne: Again: Whosoeuer calleth vpon the name of God, shall be saued, and, Blessed is the manne that feareth the Lord. Item, He that is of god, heareth the words of God. Item, Blessed are al they, which do trust in ỳ Lord, & such other like, as this saying is also of Christ: He that beleueth and is Baptised, shal be saued, but he that beleueth not, shal be condemned. The first foundation of our saluatiō is nether faith, nor hope nor charitī, nor ỳ feare of god, &c. but ỳ election of God, by which are saued not only they which ar of ful yers of Hebr. 11. Rom. 4. Rom. 10.

The first foundation of our saluation, is election.

derstanding doe beleue, hope, loue, feare, cal vpon, and obey God, &c. but the infants also, albeit that they be taken out of thys life, not only wout Baptisme, but also without fayth, and al the rest whiche is required of them that be of full yeares of vnderstanding.

That the Apostles baptised them that were of vnderstanding.

Besides that, the doings of the apostles in Baptising of them that were of full yeres of vnderstanding, and beleued, is not so to be taken, as though that they Baptised onely such as were of full age and none else. It is no good argument. The Apostles did Baptise such as were of ful age, Ergo they Baptised no infantes. God is called the GOD of the Israelites in the Scriptures, whereby a manne shoulde grounde but an vnfauored argument to saye, Ergo he is not the God of the Gentiles. Christ was promised vnto Abraham and his seede, and yet it followeth not therupon, that the Gentyles also doe not belong vnto hym. The harte of the king is in Goddes hande sayth Salomon, but that is no let but that the hartes of the rest of men be also in the hande of God. So there is nothing to lette, of that that the Apostles Baptised men of ful age, but that they Baptised also their infantes and children.

That it is not read, that the Apostles baptised infantes.

Nor it is not to any weyght that they say, that it is not read, that the Apostles did Baptise infants, Ergo they did not Baptise infantes. By lyke reason we may say: We reade not that the Apostles were Baptised theselues, Ergo they wer not baptised at al. Christ himselfe baptised none: Then who baptised ỳ apostles? If we maye argue in this sorte, we shal conclude that the Apostles were not Baptised. If they were not baptised, how could they being not baptised themselues, Baptise others? But they did Baptise others, yea & that before the passion of Christ. So it appeareth that the argumente is weake, to argue from not written, to not doing. When they say: It is not written that the Apostles baptised infantes, Ergo they did not Baptise infantes,

Iohn. 4.

There was no cause of necessitie to write of infantes, nor it was not fit that the Apostles should worke any other waye in this case, than it was prescribed vnto them before in Circumcision: & they could no other way demeane themselues, but firste to preach the Gospel vnto thẽ which were of full age, and to require repentance and faith of them, and so to establish the beginning of the churche of thẽ: and after that, not to exclude the Children of them neyther, whiche beleued and were consigned vnto Christ, from the grace of the couenant, nor to sequester them frõ their parentes, in whiche sorte God wrought also with Abraham and his children, and set them for an example to administer the signe of the couenant vnto, which maner of consignement Christ would neuer abrogate. And the same no doubt, the Apostles folowed, as it appeareth in the Acts in the house of the woman whyche solde purple, and wyth the keper of the prison.

But the Anabaptists do obiect againe: There was set forth a special commaundemente of God for the Circumcision of infantes, but there is no expresse commaundement for ỳ Bap-

Baptising of infãts. I answer. This maketh nothing against vs, but võ vs. If there were not extant some peculiar commaundement of God, for the consigning of the infants of the faythfull into the couenaunt of grace, and to incorporate them into the church of God, we shold not haue bene assured of Gods wil, touching the maner of the administration of the sacraments of our first admissiõ. But now seing that it is playnly expressed, so that it is a cleare case, that the infants of the faythful (whose father Abraham is) be partakers both the grace and signe of the couenant, and that it is not read that euer it was taken awaye, what nede is it after so manifest expressemẽt of it, to seke an other commaundement for it in the newe Testament? In that, that Christe dyd commaunde nothyng especially of it, what should be done of the infants of the faithful, he doth sufficiẽtly signifie to ỳ Apostles as Iewes, and brought vp amongst Iewes, that he taketh not away that grace, whereby he woulde be the God, not onely of them whiche beleued, but of their seede also, and would haue the same signed vp by the signet of his grace. Yea in case hys wordes be well wayed: Let chyldren come to me, &c. it is exceding manifeste, that he doeth not exclude infants from his grace & the kingdome of heauen, but that he would haue them brought vnto him: wherof if any man liste, he may loke vpon my Commentaries vpon Matthew.

Wherefore we do conclude, that although that infantes of the faithful can nether prophesie repentance nor fayth, yet it is no stoppe, but that they may be Baptised, seeing that it is a cleare case that they doe belong vnto the couenant of Abraham, and that Christ woulde haue them brought vnto him, for that the kingdom of heauen did belong vnto them: and bycause no man is so madde that dare goe about to lay in theyr waye the stoppes of Gods grace, as impenitence of the harte, vnbeliefe, contempt of grace, refusing and striuing againste it, whiche commeth of incredulitye, which points do hinder ỳ bestowing of Baptisme, in them which be of full age, and do not beleue.

And yet for al that, I see not how thys can be wel lyked of wyse men, that they be so careful and superstitious, to make so muche haste wyth theyr children scarse borne, to receiue baptisme, they care not how. I do not commend it, if a man doe fondly and neglygently differ it, but yet for all that, I do not alowe that busie haste of theirs. Gregorie Nazianzene doth aduise, that in case there be no daunger, the Baptisme of childrẽ shold be differred for three yeres, vntill that they might both heare, & answere somewhat of the misteries. But as the behauiour of men is in our dayes, I woulde wishe thys rather, that the yõg childrẽ of the faithfull, myghte wyth sounde faith and vnderstanding be broughte vnto the Sacramente of admission, nor to carefully nor too neglygentlye, nor ouer hastlye nor yet ouer slowly.

Women doe haste to christen their infantes to baptisme. Sermone de baptismate.

If it be so vsed, that questions of the Scholemen shall take no place, where they do dispute, whether that derstanding doe beleue, hope, loue, feare, cal vpon, and obey God, &c. but the infants also, albeit that they be taken out of thys life, not only wõut Baptisme, but also without fayth, and al the rest whiche is required of them that be of full yeares of vnderstanding.

The question of the Schoolemen.

That the Apostles baptised them that were of vnderstanding.

Besides that, the doings of the apostles in Baptising of them that were of full yeres of vnderstanding, and beleued, is not so to be taken, as though that they Baptised onely such as were of full age, Ergo they Baptised no infantes. God is called the GOD of the Israelites in the Scriptures, whereby a manne shoulde grounde but an vnfauored argument to saye, Ergo he is not the God of the Gentiles. Christ was promised vnto Abraham and his seede, and yet it followeth not therupon, that the Gentyles also doe not belong vnto hym. The harte of the king is in Goddes hande sayth Salomon, but that is no let but that the hartes of the rest of men be also in the hande of God. So there is nothing to lette, of that that the Apostles Baptised men of ful age, but that they Baptised also their infantes and children.

That it is not read, that the Apostles baptised infantes.

Nor it is not to any weyght that they say, that it is not read, that the Apostles did Baptise infants, Ergo they did not Baptise infantes. By lyke reason we may say: We reade not that the Apostles were Baptised thẽselues, Ergo they wer not baptised at al. Christ himselfe baptised nme: Then who baptised ỹ apostles? If we maye argue in this sorte, we shal conclude that the Apostles were not Baptised. If they were not baptised, how could they being not baptised themselues, Baptise others? But they did Baptise others, yea & that before the passion of Christ. So it appeareth that the argumente is weake, to argue from not written, to not doing. When they say: It is not written that the Apostles baptised infantes, Ergo they did not Baptise infantes,

Iohn. 4.

There was no cause of necessitie to write of infantes, nor it was not fit that the Apostles should worke any other waye in this case, than it was prescribed vnto them before in Circumcision: & they could no other way demeane themselues, but firste to preach the Gospel vnto thẽ which were of full age, and to require repentance and faith of them, and so to establish the beginning of the churche of thẽ: and after that, not to exclude the Children of them neyther, whiche beleued and were consigned vnto Christ, from the grace of the couenant, nor to sequester them frõ their parentes, in whiche sorte God wrought also with Abraham and his children, and set them for an example to administer the signe of the couenant vnto; which maner of consignement Christ would neuer abrogate. And the same no doubt, the Apostles folowed, as it appeareth in the Acts in the house of the woman whyche solde purple, and wyth the keper of the prison.

But the Anabaptists do obiect againe: There was set forth a special commaundemente of God for the Circumcision of infantes, but there is no expresse commaundement for ỹ

Baptising of infãts. I answer. This maketh nothing against vs, but wõ vs. If there were not extant some peculiar commaundement of God, for the consigning of the infants of the faythfull into the couenaunt of grace, and to incorporate them into the church of God, we shold not haue bene assured of Gods wil, touching themanor of the administration of the sacraments of our first admissiõ. But now seing that it is playnly expressed, so that it is a cleare case, that the infants of the faythful (whose father Abraham is) be partakers both the grace and signe of the couenant, and that it is not read that euer it was taken awaye, what nede is it after so manifest expressemẽt of it, to seke an other commaundement for it in the newe Testament? In that, that Christe dyd commaunde nothyng especially of it, what should be done of the infants of the faithful, he doth sufficiẽtly signifie to ỹ Apostles as Iewes, and brought vp amongst Iewes, that he taketh not away that grace, whereby he woulde be the God, not onely of them whiche beleued, but of their sede also, and would haue the same signed vp by the signet of his grace. Yea in case hys wordes be well wayed: Let chyldren come to me, &c. it is exceding manifeste, that he doeth not exclude infants from his grace & the kingdome of heauen, but that he would haue them brought vnto him: wherof if any man list, he may loke vpon my Commentaries vpon Matthew.

Wherefore we do conclude, that although that infantes of the faithful can neither prepare repentance nor fayth, yet it is no stoppe, but that they may be Baptised, seeing that it is a cleare case that they doe belong vnto the couenant of Abraham, and that Christ woulde haue them brought vnto him, for that the kingdom of heauen did belong vnto them: and bycause no man is so madde that dare goe about to lay in theyr waye the stoppes of Gods grace, as impenitence of the harte, vnbeliefe, contempt of grace, refusing and striuing against it, whiche commeth of incredulitye, which points do hinder ỹ bestowing of Baptisme, in them which be of full age, and do not beleue.

Men ought not to be ouer curious in searching out the causes of Gods secrete counsels.

And yet for al that, I see not how thys can be wel lyked of wyse men, that they be so careful and superstitious, to make so muche hacke wyth theyr children scarse borne, to receiue baptisme, they care not how. I do not commend it, if a man doe fondly and negligently differ it, but yet for all that, I do not alowe that busie hast of theirs. Gregorie Nazianzene doth aduise, that in case there be no daunger, the Baptisme of childrẽ shold be differred for thrée yeres, vntill that they might both heare, & answere somewhat of the misteries. But as the behauiour of men is in our dayes, I woulde wishe thys rather, that the yõg childrẽ of the faithfull, myghte wyth sounde faith and vnderstanding be broughte vnto the Sacramente of admission, nor to carefully nor to negligentlye, nor ouer hastlye nor yet ouer slowly.

The question of the Schoolemen.

If it be so vsed, that questions of the Scholemen shall take no place, where they do dispute, whether that child being wholy in ỹ mothers belly, and appearing nothing outwarde, ought to be Baptised or no: and in case any part of it doe appeare outwardly, whether it may be baptised: specially if it be the head, hand, or fote: whether it be borne with the skinne of the secondine called the cal, it may be baptised or no? and whether it ought to be baptised, if it be a monster? Such questions be not worthy to be vsed amõg christiãme.

The sacrament muste be ministred fully and vvholye.

III. Hovv Baptisme ought to be ministred.

HEre be three things to be considered belonging vnto the maner of Baptisyng. The first is, that it be done fully, and perfectly: secondly, that it be done in conuenient order: Thirdly, that it be done, so that it be vnderstanded. First it is requisite, that it be done fully and wholye: ỹ is to say, that the partie be Baptised both according vnto the institution and nature also of this Sacramẽt. And I thinke that ther is none, that can skill of the sacramentes, wyll require any more. And thys sacramente is so instituted, that it is accõplyshed in water with the word ioined vnto it. The nature of it is that it cõsisteth in the Worde and in the Element, In the wõrde is the forme of the Baptisme, (as we men call it) and in the Element, the matter. But we commonly, al the sorte of vs, doe call this elemente Water, which as it is a Sacrament, it is a visible forme of an inuisible grace, hauing a similitude of that, wherof it is a Sacrament. Therfore seeyng that this Sacrament is so instituted, that it is performed in water, and standeth in the worde and the element, or as the Schole doctors doe speake, of a Matter and a Forme, and that the matter is nothing else but water, who perceyueth not that all the rest of the trompery whiche is added by the Papistes, be not of the substance of the matter, but accessorie, nothyng at all perteyning to the wholenesse of the sacrament: For they were not instituted by any commaundement or vse of Christ or of the Apostles, but added by mans deuise, of Bysshops, ouer-much gyuen vnto ceremonies. And yet they be religiously and catholikely obserued, as they were requisite of necessitie vnto the wholenesse of Baptism, as oyle is, which by the Greke word is called creame, salt, spettle, burning candels, conioring, halowing of the water, thre times dipping in of the childe, and suche other like. In whych we do not read that eyther Iohn or ỹ apostles dyd baptise.

Accessaries to be vsed by the Papists.

Oyle.

Oyle is very muche vsed among the people of the East countreys, and not so much amongst vs. They doe annoint their wrestlers and runners when they go to their game, and in the Lawe the priestes and kings and prophets wer annointed. Therupon the Bishops of the Easte partes, applyed the vse of annointing vnto baptisme, as conuenient to the purpose, after their owne iudgemente, but without the word and authority of Christ. The Latines folowyng them, haue charged our countries with the ceremony of annointing, to little purpose to them, which neuer vsed the maner of annointing. The old men do expounde the significatiõ of it, meaning that they whyche be be consigned vnto Christ, be kings, priests, & wrestlers, or maisters of fence, to fight against Satan, sin, and the world: but they whych came after them, so couered this matter, ỹ it semed to the common sort of christian men, as a straunge pointe and paradore, when they be taught in our days out of the holy Scriptures, that all Christian men be Priestes. No doubte it is a greate abuse, that they do not teache the same whiche the Apostles taught, and yet withal, doe such things in their Baptising, which the Apostles did not.

The vse of salt in the olde Testament was appointed to the Iewes by the lawe prescribed by Moyses, to them that were vnder the law. If it had bene Christs pleasure, that his ministers should haue loked backe vnto the rytes of Moyses, and taken out of them suche as they liked, he would either haue had declared the same, or els Thapostles wouldbe haue done it. Wherefore our opinion is, that this vse of salt, also in Baptisme is to be attributed vnto the wil-worship of the bishops.

The spettle whereby they do not lighten but defile and beray the infant, they take out of the myraculous fact of Christe, wherewith he did stroke ouer the eyes of him that was borne blinde, with spettle and claye, and opened them. Thys myracle the Apostles did see, but for al that none of them stroke their spettle in the eyes of them that shoulde be Baptised. What faithful man would not wishe to haue the spettle of Christe for himselfe or hys friendes? But I thinke there is no manne that greately longeth for the spettle out of the mouth of a sinner, yea and peraduenture an whoremonger. Why doe they not rather tell the faythful people ỹ significatiõ of this myraculous fact in theyr teaching?

Burning Candles

And whereas they do bring thyther burning Candels, and that at none dayes, it muste nedes come frõ the superstition of the Ethnykes. The old Christian mẽ vsed burning Candels, but it was in the nighte time, bycause they durst not assemble togither in the day seasõ, and it was not very hãdsome to sit in the darke. Wherupõ Ierome also sayth: we do not light candels at broade daye, as you do slaunder vs without cause, but by thys comforte we doe delaye the darknesse of the nighte, and doe watch by light, least like blynd folk, we should slepe in darknesse, like as thou doest.

Contra Pelagianium.

Exorcising

For the Apostles vsed not the Exorcising in Baptising, wherby they do coniure the Diuell to go out frõ the Infantes that shoulde be Baptised. This they do also altogither wythout any example of Christe or the Apostles, not onelye as concerning the ceremonye of Baptising, but also all other wayes. For which of them euer coniured Satan to depart out of him that was subiect vnto sinnes, and possessed of him not in body, but in mind? The Apostles did deliuer suche as were possessed with Diuels commaunding the spirits to go out in the name of Iesu Christe, but we read not ỹ they did any such thing with sinners. And I thinke ỹ our aduersaries be not so madde to say, that infantes be corporally possessed of Satan, for then Christ shold haue driuẽ out the euil spirits out of them which wer brought vnto him, which thing for all that he did not. But if they saye that this is done bycause of Originall sinne, in respect wherof infantes be in bondage to the kingdome of Satan, then I pray you, why did not Christ so vnto the Publicans and sinners, and the apostles vnto al them which they baptised, beyng also conceyued & borne in sinnes: I knowe that this custom of Exorcising was in the Church in the times of Cyprian and Augustin, but I seeke not what the fathers did, but what Christ did institute, and what the Apostles dyd.

them

The halowyng of water.

And wheras they did halowe the water twise a yeare, that is no suche matter, neyther that it is necessarily requisite vnto the substaunce of Baptisme, or set forth by the exāple of the Apostles. The true and righte halowing of this element standeth in the institutiō and word of Christ, whereby it is also made a Sacrament.

The dipping of the children. De Ecclesiast. dogmat. cap. 74.

Lastlye, as touching the dipping downe of the childe that is to be Baptised, I thinke it is not so necessarie, but that the Churche is at libertie to Baptise eyther by dipping in, or else by sprinckling. We may see in Augustine, that this libertie was kept in the Church: He that is to be Baptised (sayth he) doth confesse his faith before the priest, and doth answere as he is asked. &c. And after his aunswering, he is eyther sprinckled with water, or dypped into it. Cyprian doeth vpholde the vsing of sprinckling in Baptism, but yet so, that he sayth, it is at mens libertie. Lib. 4. epi. 7 ad Magnū.

Therefore we can not otherwise thinke of al these matters, forasmuch as they can be commended neyther by the institution of Christ, neyther the example of the Apostles, but that they do not belong to the perfect administration of the sacramēt of baptisme as ought of the matter, but accessorie: and therfore as they wer inuented by men, so they may be omitted also without any scruple of conscience. The Maister of the Sentences noteth in this wise: Therfore the Sacrament of Baptisme doeth consist in two things, that is to say, in the Word, and the Element, so that although that the other things be away whiche were instituted for the better beautifying of the Sacramēt, yet for all that it is neuertheles a true and whole Sacrament, in case that the Worde be there and the Elemēt. For both in this and in other Sacraments also, there are accustomed to be done some things to the beautie and comlinesse, and some thyngs which doe belong to the substaunce and cause of the Sacrament. The word and the Element be of ỳ substaunce of this Sacramente, the reste is applyed to the solemnitye of it. This sayth he, Of whiche I like wel, that he doth acknowledge, that the wholenesse & substaunce of Baptisme doth consist in two things, ỳ is to witte, the Word & the Elemēt: and that the Sacrament is true and holye, if it haue these two things, though ỳ rest be away. But wheras he doeth refer the rest vnto beautye, comlinesse, & solemnity, what followeth therof else, but ỳ John and the apostles did Baptise neither beautyfully, comly, nor solemnly: forasmuch as they vsed none of these things.

The Maister of the Sentences.

So

Secondlye, it belongeth vnto the manner of Baptising, that the partie whiche is to be baptised, be baptised as it is conuenient for him. And I meane not of the conuenience of the Ceremonies whiche men haue imagined vnto it, but of that conuenience whiche is aunswerable vnto the qualitie of them which are to be baptised. As for example: If he which is to be baptised be of yeares of vnderstanding, let him be first instructed in the faith of Christ, so that he be firste exercised in the Religion before hee be baptised: and afterward when hee shall be baptised, let him confesse hys faith before the Church of Christ, if it may be: if not, at the least way before them by whome he is baptised. But if an infante shall be baptised, there oughte not to be required of him neither faithe, nor confession of his faithe, as it is of him that is of full vnderstanding, forasmuche as it were altogither without purpose to require that of an infant, whiche neither God himselfe dothe require of him, nor which he is able to haue or expresse for lacke of age.

Wherefore I see not howe it can be maintayned, that they do demand of the infant when it shall be Baptised, whether it dothe renounce the workes and pompes of Satan or no, and then the witnesses do answer that he dothe renounce: and whether that he do beleeue in God the Father almightie, maker of Heauen and Earth, and in Jesus Christ his onely begotten Sonne, and in the holye Ghost, and his Godfathers doe aunswere in his steede vnto the three questions of the faith, three sundrye times, that he doth beleeue. Wheras there is no man so shamelesse, whych if he be seuerally demaunded of the infant, whether that he dothe knowe and vnderstand those things that bee conteyned in the Creede, as if there be a GOD, and whether that he bee one, and the father almighty, maker of heauen and earthe, &c. Item whether he beleeue that Jesus Christ be the only sonne of God our Lorde. Item, Whether that he do loue, feare, and honor God, &c. but he will be afrayde to aunswere that the infante doth know these things, and is able to performe them. Then what necessitie is it, that for cuckome sake, men must doe and say those thynges in the Church, which can not be spoken vpon any likely or sure ground? Augustine saith: If we wil in words declare that the little children doe know Godly matters, which doe not yet vnderstande worldly matters, I feare least we shall seeme to do wrong vnto oure verye senses in so saying, whereas the playne euidence of the truth dothe easely surmount all that strength and meanes of our sayings. Augustin. Epist. 28. ad Dardanum.

I knowe what Augustines aunswere was vnto this question to Boniface the Bishop, where he writeth in this wise: It is answered that the chylde doth beleeue, whiche hath not yet any affection of faith. It is aunswered that it hath faith, bycause of the sacrament of faith. Thus sayeth he. He calleth Baptisme the sacrament of faith. But in case that the sacrament of faith be faith, how is it said that the infant hath faith, which hath not yet baptisme, & is therefore demanded whether that he doth beleeue, to the intent that he maye receyue Baptisme? Againe, the que-tion is not whether that he hath the Sacrament of faith or not, but whether that he dothe beleeue. The question is of faith, and not of the Sacrament of faith. Although that he haue Baptisme, whiche is the Sacrament of fayth, yet for all that it can not be truely reported, that hée hath faithe therefore. And so it is a very fœble answere that this great man maketh in this matter, for as much as the infant when he is thus demanded, hath neither faith neither the Sacrament of faithe. For howe should he haue that whiche he hathe not yet receiued? But yet this they are compelled to answer the matter, which wil nèeds mainteyn and kéepe this custom vsed in the church, without any ground of it. And this being so fonde a custome, that it can not be defended, risen first of this, that the Bishops did disorderly applye that forme of baptising of such as wer of perfect yeares of vnderstanding, vnto the baptising also of infants, and so began to demaunde of infantes, of the abrenouncing of Sathan, and of the fayth in the holie Trinitie, as well as they did of them that wer of yeares of full age.

It is the fathers parte to require baptism for his chylde, & to make confession, of his faith & to promyse to bring vp his child in the same.

In my iudgemente it were more conuenient, if the father of the infant that is to be baptised, were present at the fonte to require baptisme for his child, and that he should be openly examined of his faithe by the Minister, in presence of them that stande by, of the Faithe, not whiche the infant hath, but which he himself hath, in Christ our Lord and sauior: and whervnto he will bryng vp and teach his infant, & being so asked, it were good that he shuld declare with an open and loud voyce the Christiã beléefe, and after hys Confession so made, that he shoulde reuerently require to haue his child consigned vnto this faith and grace of Christ. I doe prescribe or gine order vnto no man, but by other mens leaue, I doe only declare what I think more profitable and expedient.

Thirdly, baptisme muste be celebrated not only perfectly and conueniently, but so also, as it may be vnderstand. And, as touching the infãt that is broughte to be baptised, & for God himself also it is all one, what language soeuer he be baptised in. But in respect of them which do stãd by, & for the Gossips or sureties, that they may also be edifyed, yea and for the church it self, in presence of whõ it were conuenient, that not onely the Lords supper, but baptisme also should be dispensed, it behoueth that all thinges be done in the common and countrey language, that al that is sayd and done may be vnderstanded, and that all persons may be admonished of the grace of Christ (the forme whereof is in the visible baptisme, and to praye altogither vnto God the father, to obtaine the gift of the spirite as well to themselues, as to the infantes also. The Baptisme ought to be bestowed with an exceeding high reuerence, fayth, and deuotion, not only of the Minister, but of the parents & sureties also. But we do sée, how great lightnes ther is crept in, touching this matter, emõgst the Papists. And it cõmeth most of this, that all things be so saide & handled, that they cannot be vnderstanded of the standers by. There is no maruel therfore, frõ whence is issued so great a cora corruption of our christian faythe, seyng that the admission and fyrste entrie of it, is so irreligiously bothe beStowed and vsed.

And in that that we do teach that baptisme oughte to be administred perfectly, conuenientlye, and so as it maye bee vnderstanded, and that all things are to be cut off from it whiche doe not agrée with the institution of the Lord, and with the example of the Apostles, the nature of the Sacramentes, and with the edifying of the Churche, we doe open no gappe vnto rebaptising, but we doe admonishe men of the reformation of the abuses in Baptisme. Wherefore let no man aske me and say: Forasmuch as we be most part of vs all baptised with these ceremonies, of oyle, salte, spettel, burning candles, conjurings, &c. must we not therefore be baptised a new, purely and simply, accordyng vnto the institution of the Lord: We be baptised nother in the name of anye sainctes, nor of the Bishoppe of Rome, nor into the primacie of the Romish Churche, but in the name of the father, and the sonne, and the holy spirite: wherein there doth consist the verye wholenesse & substance of baptisme, which those things take not away that were added to by mens deuices. The ground of baptisme was leste whole, which is not to be remoued or translated in them that be baptised. Let those things that be superfluous and vnprofitable in baptisme be shred off, and cast away.

Of the vse of Baptisme.

Lastly, we muste consider also of the lawfull and true vse of baptisme. And I doe call the vse of baptisme not the very dœde of baptisme, the consideration whereof dothe belong vnto the bestowing and administration of the sacrament, whereof we haue spoken: but that applyemente of it, whereby he that is baptised hauing once receyued the Sacramente of Baptisme, dothe so employ hymselfe all the dayes of hys lyfe, that hée dothe agrée therevnto, and dothe atteyne the efficacie and frute of it, so that the fulnesse of the Sacrament maye bée truely accomplished in hym and not be a barren and a vayne signe.

And the generall fulfilling of all the Sacraments, not only of the old, but of the newe Testamente also, is that the same which is once done sacramentally, or as some saye in the signe, must be truly fulfilled, and in effect throughout al the life lõg. The circumcision of the forefkin was fulfilled by the circumcisiõ of the heart, whiche Moises did require of them that were circumcised, and he dyd promise it also to them which should turne to the Lord in the latter days. The vse of the Passeouer was, that they shoulde be mindefull of the redemption whiche they had receiued, and be thankefull vnto God theyr redéemer, and stedfastly depend vpon him in true faith. Besides this, (hauing the truth it selfe of Christe the true lambe, which the Iewes might well beléeue on and loke for but not perfoyme) what was the Circumcision and Passeouer among the Iewes else, although that they were solemnised in the Sacramentall acte, but vayne and naked signes, as it were a bodye wythoute a soule?

Deuter. 10.

Deut. 30.

In

In like sorte we muste iudge also of the vse and fulfilling of Baptisme. We doe then vse it aright, when the same whiche is done in our body Sacramentally, is in deede and truely fulfilled in vs, throughout al our life. Faith being ioyned there vnto.

The fulfilling of baptisme is two pointes.

The true and reall (as I may call it) fulfilling of baptisme, consisteth in two partes. For the qualitie and condition of the things of whiche baptisme is the Sacramente, is of two sortes.

1 For some be fulfilled of Christ only by his Spirit, and some agayne be loked for of arighte of them that be Baptised. Of Christes part there is fulfilled in the electe and faithfull the washing away of sinnes, the regeneration of the mind, and renuing of the Spirit, the consignment, sanctifying, and incorporation into the grace, flocke and kingdome of God. And I speake not of the Sacramentall and outward consignement, sanctifying, and incorporation, whych is done by the Minister and dispenser of Gods misteries in baptising, but of that whiche the holy spirite dothe truely worke in the heartes of them that be baptised, whereof the Apostle maketh mention saying: In whome also when you do beleeue, you be sealed vppe with the holy spirite of promise. Whereupon this spirite also of God is called the Spirit of sanctification. For this accomplishmente of Baptisme, they which be baptised, muste daily praye and sigh from theyr heartes. For it is not of that sorte that it is done at once alone, but it is made vp by the increase of it in dayly continuance therof, as long as we be in this fleshe.

Ephes. 1. The spirite of sanctification.

2 It is principally required of the that be baptised, that they haue fayth aunswerable vnto their baptisme, so that according vnto their baptisme, their faithe be in the father, and the sonne, and the holye spirite, one and true God, in whome we be baptised. It is a wicked matter to wil a Christian man to beleue in him, to whom he is not consigned by baptisme, as the Saincte seruers do in oure dayes: Doest thou not beleeue (say they) in Saincte? In this sorte they doe require of Christian men to beleeue in dead Saincte, which they know were baptised not in the name of Saincte, but in the name of the Father, the Sonne, and the holy Spirite. They be not contented with the faith whiche is correspondente to the Sacrament of Baptisme, but they do drive men vnto that, whiche ought to bee farre from al Christian folke. They might better aske, whether that wee do beleue in the father, and the sonne, and the holye Spirite. But in case that it be necessarye for vs to beleeue also in Saincte, then let vs adde also of Saincte, in the forme of baptisme: and baptise not only in the father, the sonne, and the holy spirite, but in Saincte also.

1 And whereas we doe saye, that there is required of him that is baptised, a faithe conformable vnto the baptisme, we do not meane of the historicall faith onely, but of that also whereby we doe call vpon that God also, honor and serue him in whome we do beleeue: whereof we spake before in the place of Faith, and whereby we doe beleeue also the grace of baptisme, that is to say, the washing from sinnes, the consignement, iustification, fication, and sanctification to be gyuen vnto vs in the name of the Father, and the Sonne, and the holy spirite. And I meane of the washyng away of sinnes obteyned by the bloud of Christ, whereby not only the originall sinne and the others that passed before baptisme, but all they also whiche we doe committe after baptisme, are washed away, that is to saye, forgiuen. For it is the one selfesame grace of Christes bloud, whose Sacrament baptisme is, whereby al our sinnes gathered both before and after baptisme, are forgiuen to the true faithfull and electes. And therefore John sayd in his Canonicall Epistle: And his bloud dothe cleanse vs from all our sinne. Item. My sonnes, I write this vnto you, to the intente you should not sinne. But in case that any man do sinne, we haue an aduocate with the father Jesus Christe the iust, and he is the appeasemente for oure sinnes. Unto this grace wee be consigned and sanctifyed by baptisme, and it endureth for all our life long, like a continuall running fountayne, alwayes washing the electe: whereof indeede the Sacramentall signe baptisme is receyued but once, but it selfe doth stil wash and cleanse vs by the continuall and euerlasting effect thereof. So that the faithe of this grace is exceedingly decayed by them, which do attribute vnto it the washing away of the sinnes past, only, and doe leaue the riddance of them that followeth, vnto our owne righteousnesse and satisfaction. And therfore it was, that in times past verye many did put off theyr Baptisme vntill the extremitie of their life, to the intent that they would depart out of this life, faire and cleane, and so they wouldne not be baptised but at the very poynt of death, by sprinckeling of water vpon them in their bed, whom they called by the Latin worde, Clinikes, that is, beddemen, after which sort we do reade that the Emperour Costantine also was baptised. They do euen the like, which for theyr money doe purchase themselues from Rome pardons in the Popery, by the vertue of whiche they would be absoyled from their sinnes at the verye poynt of death. None of this geare would be vsed among Christian me, if they did acknowledge the grace of Christ, whose Sacrament Baptisme is.

Clinick.

Newnesse of lyfe.

2 Secondlye, it is required of them that be baptised, that they followe the baptisme in newnesse and holynesse of life. And therefore the Apostle saide: What shall we saye then? Shall we remaine in sinne, that grace may abounde? God forbidde. For howe shall we liue stil in sinne, which are dead to sinne? Knowe you not brethren, that as many of vs as be baptised in Christ Iesu, be baptised into his death? For we be buryed with him by Baptisme into deathe, that as Christ rose from the dead by the glory of the father, so we shoulde also walke in newnesse of life. Thys the Apostle counselleth them that be baptised, that they shoulde truly performe by newnesse of life, the same whiche was wrought in them sacramentally, when they were baptised.

Rom. 6.

We be dead (saith he) vnto sinne. Againe: We be buried with Christ into deathe. Howe be we dead vnto sinne, and buryed with Christ to death? If we be so in very deede, [illegible] nedeth this aduise? But [illegible] so in deede, how is it then: He sayeth, By Baptisme: that is to saye, sacramentally. As much as the sacramentall signe of baptisme dothe signifie. And he doth adde the thing it selfe, of which the signe passed before in baptisme, saying: That as Christe rose from the deas by the glory of the father, so we should also walke in newnesse of lyfe. Ergo it is required of them that be baptised, that they doe mortifie the olde man, that is to say, the body of sinne, and dye vnto sinne, and rise agayn vnto newnesse of life, that is to say, to puritie and innocencie, & not to suffer sinne for to reigne in their mortall body, to followe the lustes therof: and that they doe not yelde their membres vnto sinne, but vnto God, in true endeuoure of righteousnesse.

So that these two things bee required of them that be Baptised, as necessary to the accomplishmente of their baptisme. One, that they do renounce themselues, and mortifie the body of sinne, that they liue no longer to the lustes thereof, and to sinne. Yeere be reiected all dead and seruile workes, that is to saye, al that desire to sinne, wherevnto the olde Adam is subiecte, the bodye of sinne lurking and raigning in them, whiche be not of the grace of Christ, although that they be vnder the lawe, or worldlye wisedome, or in anye superstition, though it be neuer so monkishe and religious to the outward shew, much more they that liue vnder the spirite of Epicures.

Another is, that they walke in newnesse of life: for it is not ynough to be dead vnto sinne, and not to follow the lustes and workes of sinne, nor to serue wickednesse, and vnrighteousnesse, but it is requisite also, that we doe liue to godward, and serue to righteousnesse by newnesse of life. It is not ynough to proue a tree to bee good, if it beare no euill fruite, vnlesse it do also beare good fruites. It is not the qualitie of a good tree to be barren, but of an euill tree. But howe farre be we yet from the fulfilling of the truth of baptisme, which haue not yet forsaken the desire of sinne? We are not gotten vp to the first steppe: when shall we gette to the other? Surely as long as we be in thys flesh, this mortifying and renuing is not altogither so accomplished, that there may nothing more bee desired therein. Wherefore Basile also in a certayne Epistle vnto Gregory Nazianzene doth write, that he had lefte the life of the Citie, as the occasion of many euils, but that he coulde not yet leaue himselfe. Nowe then there must needes be greate difference betwixt them whiche haue no desyre nor endeuours of this mortifying, but be yet drowned vppe in the bondage of sinne, and them whych haue made an entry of this renuing, & whome sinne dothe no longer gouerne, as it dothe the reprobate.

Basile.

And to this purpose also that appertayneth, that the same Apostle dothe argue vpon this grace of baptisme sacramentally receyued, saying: And this you were sometymes, but you be washed, but you be iustified by the name of oure Lorde Jesu, and by the spirit of oure Lorde God. He had said before: Be not deceiued, nother whoremongers, nor worshippers of Images, nor adulterors, nor wantons, nor mē louers, nor

1. Cor. 6.

nor

It is not ynough to be dead vnto sinne, vnlesse that we do also liue vnto righteousnesse.

nor couetous, nor drōkerds, nor backbiters, nor extorcioners, shal receiue the inheritance of the kingdome of God. And forasmuche as the Corinthians, neglecting the grace of ỳ baptisme, whereby they were sacramentally washed from the filthinesse of this life, and being sanctifyed and iustifyed vnto newnesse of life, dyd yet apply themselues vnto sinne, as well as the Gentiles: he doth admonithe them as men that were baptised, to consider that they were washed and sanctifyed from their sinnes, and that so they should liue not vnto sinne, but vnto righteousnesse. Who seeth not how inconueniente a matter it is, after that mē haue bin cleane washed, to runne backe againe, like swine, vnto their olde filthinesse? What auayleth it to be washed and made cleane, when we haue a desire to bee defiled againe? to be sanctifyed and iustifyed, if an vngodly life and purpose of vniust dealing do not exclude vs after that wee bee once washed, sanctifyed, and iustifyed sacramentally, from the kingdome of God? Wherof Christian men ought to take warning, I meane that they bee washed, sanctified, and made cleane in ỳ baptisme of Christ, so that they shuld declare the grace receyued throughout all their life: but faithfull folke be not onely not admonished of thys matter, but the whole opinion of holynesse is so turned into saintes onely, that it were a great offence to cal any man in this life, holy, sauing only the Bishop of Rome, whome hys flatterers are wont to call, Most holy of all, in that sense, that the Poet calleth the honger and desire of gold, Holy. Furthermore, least that thys newnesse of like which is required of them that be baptised, should bee appoynted at the deuice of mans heart, this commaundement was added by Christ, that they whiche were baptised, shuld be taught to kepe al things which he commaunded. Teachyng them (sayth he) to obserue all whatsoeuer I haue commanded you. Therfore like as there be in the doctrine of Christ two partes, one concerning faith, the other obedience: so they bee both also requisite of them that bee baptised. For baptisme is added to the doctrine of Christ, so that a man may say aright in this case: I doe testifie to euery man that is baptised, that he is a debter to accomplishe the whole doctrine of Christ, as well as the Apostle sayde vnto the Galathians: I do testifie vnto euery man that dothe circumcide himselfe, that he is debter to fulfill all the lawe. For like as to the sicke person there is not only ministred medicines, but there be preceptes or diets also prescribed vnto him to follow, least the operation of the medicine should bee hindered: so Christ commanded that his preceptes whiche do serue to the following of true godlinesse, shuld be layd vnto them that be baptised, least they should fall from hys grace, vnto the Sacrament whereof they be admitted and consigned.

Matth. 28.

Two partes of Christes doctrin

Comparison.

Lastly, it is to be considered also, that by baptisme we be al consigned and sanctifyed into one body, one spirite, one Lord God and father, and one faith: Therefore let baptisme also admonithe vs, howe we ought to followe the vnitie of Christes bodye, that wee swarue not from the sacrament of Baptisme. What that

We must followe vnitie.

vnitie

vnitie of Chrystes body is, we declared before in the place of the church.

Hytherto we haue expressed somewhat of baptisme, what it is, what the institution of it is, what is the dispensation and vse thereof, not according vnto the greatenesse and worthinesse of the grace of it, but we haue briefly past it ouer after our order. We know that there be yet many things which might not vnprofitably be spoken of this sacramente, but we meane not to make whole bookes of euery matter. And in case a man lyke scrupulous questions, let him seeke the Scholemens summaries. I graunte that there be many poyntes, wherein the vnlearned desireth to be informed. But no man is able to prescribe of all particular cases, bycause of the varietie of the circumstances: but in such cases wee must take counsell of the ministers of other Churches, whiche be elder and better learned. Or else it may be ordered in particular Synodes, if it be nother contrarye vnto scriptures, nor breedeth any offence to ỳ church.

Of the Supper of the Lord, the other Sacrament of the grace of Christ.

The decay of the vnderstãding and minde is verye hurtfull.

THere be two principall things in man, that is to witte, the vnderstanding, and the minde, the decay of whyche turneth all oure life from the high way of truth and righteousnesse, and bothe nowe and then ouerthrowe it into foule errors, and innumerable turmoyles and troubles. The olde serpente did decay them both in vs, in that sort, that we can neyther vnderstande nor desire such thinges as be true, and appoynted vnto our saluation. And the true good things be of that nature, that they would not only haue oure vnderstanding to be suche, that they mighte be vnderstanded aright, but they would haue our mind also greedy and feruently affected towards them. They would not onely be knowen, but loued also, and earnestly desired. Wherefore no man can atteyne them by vnderstanding only, but it must be done with hartie and earnest desire also. Yet for all that, the vnderstanding doth help the affections, when it doth declare vnto them what is to be desired. Wherefore they that will speake of ỳ Lords supper, must be very carefull, diligẽtlye to instructe the vnderstanding of vnskilfull meane, that they may vnderstande what is done therein, and inflame the mindes of such as do vnderstand it, that they may deuoutely desire, and embrace with their heart those things, which they do conceyue in their mind. I suppose that in both these intentes we shall speake more profitably of the Lords supper, than if we should follow the contentions of this present time, which I beseech God I maye see ridde out of those Churches that be sequestred from Antichrist by the benefite of the holy spirite, before I depart to the Lord out of this world.

And to consider all those thynges particularly and orderly that are necessarie to be knowẽ, we will make the same diuision of this matter that wee vsed in ỳ sacrament of baptisme. For I suppose that not onely ỳ worthinesse, but the conformitie also of both the sacraments is such, that the selfe same members effectually considered in both, may serue to the sufficient vnderstanding of them. For whereas they do aduance this other, whereof we are about to speake now aboue baptisme, and doe searche and determine of muche more hydden matter in this than in that, it proceedeth of the scrupulositie and superstition of oure carnall witte, and not of the nature of the Sacrament. Therfore we will consider.

1 What the Lords Supper is.
2 What the institution of it is.
3 Which is the right dispẽsation and administration of it.
4 Which is the true and lawfull vse of it.

I. What the Lordes Supper is.

FOr the full and readye vnderstanding of the Lordes Supper, there is somewhat to be spoken before that we set forthe the definition thereof. First the reader must vnderstand, that it is to be wayed not as a simple matter, but as a compounde. For it is a mysticall thing. And mysticall things be those, wherein there is one thing seene or heard of, and an other thing vnderstanded, in the sort of whiche things the verye Canons, take out of the words of Augustine, doe playnely graunt, that the Lordes supper is to be accompted. And the very nature it selfe of the sacramẽts, of which we spake before, doth sufficiently proue, that it is not a thyng simple, but compounde of the signe, and the thing signifyed: or according vnto Augustine, of the Worde and of the Elemente, or of the Visible fourme, and the Inuisible grace, vnlesse that wee will haue it to be none of the Sacramentes of Chrystes grace.

Simply and compound. things are diuerly to be cõsidered.

And as simple and cõpound things doe differ one from an other in theyr quality, so they must be sundry ways considered of. Those things that bee simple, do require to be simply considered: but those things whiche bee compounde, be more confounded thã opened by the simple consideration of them, whether we loke to the nature, cause, or condition of them. Wherfore we must vse a distinction when things cõpound are to be iudged of. As for an example. A man is a compound creature, made of flesche and of a reasonable soule, as Athanasius saith in his Creede. If it were a question, whether that man bee an earthly or an heauenly creature, mortall or immortall, no man coulde cõueniently aunswere it without a distinction. For the partes of man are to be considered whereof he is made, and the question must be aunswered according vnto the varietie of the partes, as that he is earthly touching his body, and heauenly touching hys spirite: mortall in body, and immortall in spirite. In like sorte also we must consider of the Lordes supper, which as Ireneus writeth, is made of an earthly and an heauenly thing. And what varietie there is betweene heauenly and earthly things, I needs not to tell you, for although that in their composition they do make some one thing, yet they do differ in the diuersitie of their natures. And so, in case the answere shall be made of this sacrament of the Lords supper, whether that it be an earthly or an heauenly thing, we must answere, that in part it is earthly, and in part heauenly: earthly in the signe, and heauenly in the matter that is signified: earthly in the earthly bread, heauenly in the heauenly bread, Christ, (for it is made of two breads of sundrye natures one to an nother) earthly I say, in the visible forme, heauenly in the grace inuisible.

Irenæus.

The vnitie of thinges compounded.

And albet that we must acknowledge the sundry natures of thinges compound (for the knowledge of the doth much help to the understanding of the whole compounde) yet for all that, the thing compounde dothe receiue a certaine kind of vnitie, which is specified & expressed in one name, wherein the partes also, whereof it is made, be comprehended. So we do call the Word incarnat, being made of God and man, two things most diuers in nature, by one name, Christ, and the flesche and ỹ reasonable soule, being sundry things and made one, we call also by one name, Man. It is in like maner also in the sacramẽts, which though that they be also made of diuers things of their owne nature, yet by the vnitie of the sacramente, they doe gette them some one name, whereby they be expressed. So we doe call baptisme The regeneration, washyng, consigning, admission, and sanctification, by reason of the sacramẽt: and by what names the Lordes supper is called, we wyll se hereafter.

I suppose that there shoulde not haue rysen so muche contention and confusion in the Churche of Christ, eyther touching our Lorde Christe hymselfe, eyther touching his Sacramentes, in case that the manner and reason of the things compound, had bin firste well and distinctly considered, as touching the diuers natures of the things compounded: and secondlye if the vnitie made by the composition of them, were wel wayed. So in this matter of the Lordes supper, whyles that some do iudge of it only accordyng to ỹ inward thyng, and some accordyng to the outwarde onely, or else when they do make an other manner of composition of the partes of it, than can agree with the orders of the Sacramente, what can rise vppon it else, but desire of strife and debate, and no discussing of the matter, but rather the darkening of it? Wherefore we had nede to vse a diligent and discrete iudgemente, to consyder, that the Lordes supper is a thyng compounde, and that the partes thereof be diuers of nature: and one to an nother, but yet vnited in the sacramente, and that we doe attribute vnto eache of them, that whiche is proper to euerye of them particularly: and when they be vnited, that whiche the nature of a Sacrament doth require.

Secondelye, we doe distincte the Lordes Supper from profane matters, acknowledging it to be a moste holy thyng, and that it ought to be religiously handled. Furthermore, that it is not onely holy, but mystically also, as to be esteemed hygh and honorable, not onely for the vse of it, but also for the mysterie sette for the in the same. Yea and not onely mystically, sticall, but ceremoniall also or vnitu-all, as I may call it. The brasen serpente hadde a mysterye in it, but it hadde no ryte. The stones whyche were layde after the passyng ouer of Iordan, hadde a memorye of the passing, but they hadde no ryte. But the Lordes Supper is not only a holye thyng, but it conteyneth also a memorye, a mysterie, and a rite, or if you lik so to tearme it, a Solemne ceremonie instituted by the Lorde, which we do celebrate in the solemne concourse of people, by his commandement.

Therefore the Lordes Supper, in respecte that it is holye, muste haue the guestes holye, and it refuseth them that bee prophane: and in respecte that it is mystically, it muste haue suche guestes, whyche are able by theyr well practised senses, to distincte the inwarde mysteryes, from that whyche appeareth to the eyes.

Thirdly, in that it hath a remembraunce, it requireth a mindful heart of the good turne receyued.

Fourthly, for as muche as it conteyneth a rite giuen to the Churche of the faithfull, it must haue men to be Church like, whiche will esteeme and obserue the rite of the Churche, left vs by the Lord.

Now to procede, I thinke it were good to the further opening of thys matter, if we cõsider the name whereby the Lordes supper is called. For by the common iudgemente of all menne, euerye thyng is to be called that, whyche it is in dede, or that wherefore vpon some speciall cause it is taken, though of his owne nature it be an nother thing. And in dede the names of things be some proper, and some improper, and there is muche difference betwixt the definitions of Sacramentall and naturall things: but yet vnlesse that the names doe conteyne a certayne and sure declaration of thyngs, and doe teache vs what we ought to iudge of them, it is not possible but that he muste fall into some errour, whosoeuer following the sense of them, doe iudge the same of the thinges as they be named. Now where as the vse of names or wordes is onely to be signes of things, signifying what we shoulde iudge of them, I thinke I shall not doe amisse, if to make a definition of the Lordes supper, I doe consider orderly, by what names it is called.

The names of the lordes Supper of three sorts.

There be three sortes of them, for some were spoken by the Lord hymselfe, some by the Apostles, and some vsed by such as came after them, euẽ vntill these dayes. Firste when the Lord did institute this Sacramente, he sayd: Take, eate, this is my Body, which is betrayed for you. This doe in remẽbrance of me. Item, drinke al of thys. Thys cuppe is the new Testamente in my bloud. &c. Doe thys, as often as you do drinke, in remembrance of me. Ergo, the same whyche we do call ỹ Lords supper, the Lorde himself called it His body and bloud, and the Newe Testamente in hys Bloud. These wordes we will expounde in the processe of this treatie. But yet we muste carrye in mynde to knowe that the Lordes Supper is called by the Lord himselfe, hys bodye and bloud in the new Testament.

The bodie and bloud of the lord.

Secondly, ỹ Apostles called it the Breaking of bread. Actor. 2.

breaking of bread. So the Euangelist Luke doth write, no doubt following the custome of the Apostles: And they were continuing in the doctrine of the Apostles, and communion and breaking of bread. Thys speach is taken vp of the holy rite or ceremonie of breaking of bread, whiche the Lorde vsed not only at other times, but also at the institution of this Sacrament. Of the mysteries of the breaking of the Sacramentall bread, we will consider hereafter.

The bread & cuppe of the Lorde. 1. Corinth.

Thirdly, the Apostle calleth it the Bread, and the Cup of the Lorde, as Augustine doth also when he sayeth, that Judas dyd eate the Lordes bread against the Lord. This speach doth not expresse the misterie of thys Sacramẽt but it doth only admonish vs, and this bread is not a common and prophane bread, but holy and misticall, commended by the Lorde to the Church of his faithfull.

The Lords Supper.

Fourthly, the Apostle calleth this holy thing The Lordes supper, saying: When you come togither, you do not nowe eate the Lordes supper, for euerye man goeth on before to eate his owne. But by this kynde of speach we be admonished to referre our minds vnto the last supper of the Lord, and that for two causes. First, for the example of the Lords doings, and againe, for the institution of the Sacrament. Our aduersaries should at the least way, for the reuerence of the Apostles speach, I say not for the honorable mention of the Lords supper it selfe, forbeare their scoffes and scornes, which they do taũt vs withall, bycause we doe call the forenone Communion of the Lords body and bloud, the Lordes Supper. And they would forbeare so to do, but that they doe perceyue, that the same whiche they doe, were quite contrarye vnto that, whiche the Apostles did, being taught by the Lord himselfe, and therefore called it the Lordes Supper.

Fiftly, this supper of the Lorde is called also the Communion of the bodye and bloud of the Lorde, whereas he sayth: Is not the cuppe of blessing whiche we do blesse, the communion of the Lordes bloud? and the breade whiche we breake, is it not the communion of Christes body? And the Apostle in so saying, dothe declare that whiche is the chiefe poynte in the sacramente, that is to witte, that thys breaking of bread, and cuppe of blessing, is the communion of the bodye and bloud of Christ, offered vppe and shed for vs vppon the crosse. And this communion is the partaking of all those things which Christ, dying for vs vppon the crosse, did deserue and procure vnto mankinde, by the offering vp of his body and bloud.

Sixtly, it is called by the same Apostle, the Lords table, when he sayeth: You can not be partners of the Lords table, and of the Deuils table also. By the name of Table, this holy thing is distincted from a sacrifice. Unto a Sacrifice there doth belong an aulter, and to the communion of the sacrifice, a table. The aulter of Christes sacrifice was ỹ crosse, but there was a table appointed for the communion thereof, where the faithfull should take part of that offering made for our sinnes vpon the aulter of the crosse. Thus farre wee haue rehearsed the wordes of the of the Lord and of the Apostle, whereby the Lords supper is called in the holy Scriptures: nowe consequently lette vs see also those whiche were broughte into the Churche after the Apostles dayes. First the Grekes called it σύναξιν, that is to saye, the congregation, for bicause that it was celebrated at the solemne congregations of the people with some special deuotiõ, and so that the solemne mẽtings and commings togither, dyd seeme to be made therefore bycause of it. And besides that the prophane people were suffered to be at ỹ publike preachings, but when the verye communion of the Lordes Supper should begin, then they were cõmanded to departe, and the holy to drawe neere, vnto whome it doth belong onlye to repaire to the communion of the Lords table. Wherof it was also called aright by this name, σύναξις.

They called it the holy table, by which speach they that do communicate bee admonished to thinke that they be feede not with earthly, but with the heauenly foode, of Christ the feast maker, and therefore endeuour to yelde them selues as holy guests to the holy table. This manner of speach was vsuall in the time of Antony the Greate, as it appeareth in the Ecclesiasticall histories, where it is redde of this vision, that he sawe the holy table ouerthrowen by Boyes. Thirdly, they called it also the publicke ministery, whereof the Angels be called λειτουργοί to the Hebrewes, and the magistrates also to the Romaines, and the relieffe to the poore bestowed by the publike ministery: to the Romaines in the. vi. Chapter.

The memorie of the Lorde.

Fourthly, it is called also the memory of the Lord, which name came of that that Christ sayd, when he did institute this holy thing: Doe this in remembrance of me. But this speach hathe not the full declaration of thys sacrament.

Thankesgiuing. εὐχαριστία.

Fiftly, it is called by the Grekes εὐχαριστία, that is to say, thankesgyuing, which word is so accustomably vsed, that it is very well knowen also to the Latine Churches and commonly vsed. The reason of it is, bycause that in this Sacramente the Church doth giue thankes vnto our redeemer, when they declare and celebrate his death, according vnto the institution of the Apostles, whereby they do acknowledge themselues to be saued.

Loue. ἀγάπη.

Sixtly, it is called also Loue, to the intent that Christian men when they goe aboute to solemnise this sacrament, they shoulde nourishe and practise mutuall loue one towardes an other by workes of charitie, as being all members of one body: and therefore the vse of gatherings was added vnto thys Supper, whereby the poore and needy shoulde be relieued.

The sacrament of the body and bloud of the Lord.

Seuenthly, it is commonly called among vs, The sacrament of the bodye & bloud of the Lorde, which name would to God it were knowē aright vnto all menne, as it is vsed of all. What a Sacramente is, it is declared before.

The sacrifice of the bodye and bloud of the Lorde.

Eightly, this sacrament was called also by the old men, The sacrifice of the body and bloud of the Lorde, whiche they did not so meane, as though that Christe were offered vp agayne for the forgyuenes of sinnes, as the Papistes do hold (whereof wee will speake whē the place doth serue) but bycause that the memorie of the onely sacrifice, and once done vppon the crosse, is celebrated in the Lords Supper. So Augustine sayth, that this visible sacrifice is the sacramēt, that is to saye, the holye signe of the invisible sacrifice. Againe when the host (sayeth he) is broken, when the blood is poured out of the cuppe into the mouthes of the faithfull, what is else signified, but the offering of the Lords body vppon the crosse, and the shedding of his blood out of his side? And Chrysostome sayth. What thē? Do not we also offer dayly? We doe offer, but we doe make the remembraunce of his death. And this is one offering and not many. How is it one, and not many? Bycause it hathe bin once offered. And the same is caried into the Sancta Sanctorum, Thys is the type, that is to saye, the figure of that. And a little after. We doe this (saith he) for the remembraunce of that which was then done. For he saith, Do this in the remembraunce of me. We do not make a sundry oblation as the chiefe priest did, but alwayes one, yea we do rather make a remembrance of the oblation. This sayeth he. So that this sacrament is improperly and not properly called of the fathers, The sacrifice of the body and blood of the Lorde. Not it can not bee, that this sacrifice should be referred vnto the Popishe Masse. For they dyd not call it so, but they called it the Communion it selfe of the Lordes Supper, by that name.

1 Cor. 10. de Civ. Dei c. 5 Dist. Consecr. Dist. 2.

Chrysost. ad Heb hom. 17

We doe allowe and like all these speaches, whereby the sacramente of the bodye and blood of the Lorde is expressed, in case they be well understanded. But so for all that, that wee suppose that that last that the fathers beganne to call the Supper of the Lorde a Sacrifice, that is to say, a memory of the sacrifice, is not very conuenient for the Churche, bycause of the olde abuse of it, whereby our later men vnder this name, haue broughte in theyr most fylthy merkating into the Churches, and perswaded the people that they did offer an expiatory sacrifice at their Masse, for the sinnes of the quicke and the dead.

Abuses the vse of

At length the Papistes beganne to call their sacrifice the Masse, whyche word it is best to cast off as new, and not knowen to the old churches. And whereof it beganne, we will tell you in an other place.

When we doe well way all these speaches of the Lordes Supper, and heape them as it were into one body, we suppose that the godly and faithfull person shall lacke nothing pertayning vnto the definition, or if you list, the description of this sacramēt, if we doe define it in this wise, that the Lordes supper is the gathering togither of the faithfull of Christ, and the publike ministery of the newe Testament, in which the sacramente of our Lords body and blood is giue and receyued according vnto the institution of our saviour Christe, by the misticall breaking of bread, and the blessing of the cuppe, in the communion of the Churche, from hys table, and with all the memory of the only sacrifice, whiche was once performed for oure saluation vppon the aulter of the crosse is celebrated with thankesgiuing, and with the exercise of Christian loue. All these things be so concurrent in this case of ỹ Lords supper, that I see not what maye bee left out thereof, without the empayring of the perfection of the same, when the Apostle saith, Is not the bread whiche we do breake the communion of the Lords body? no doubt he dothe open vnto vs the two substanciall partes of this sacramente, that is to witte, the outwarde signe whiche consisteth in the breaking of the breade, and blessing of the cuppe, and the mystery whiche standeth in the communiō of the body and blood of the Lord: which two do serue well enough for the matter that he had in hand, to ouerthrowe the communion of the Deuils table, and to call home them from it whiche did sitte at the Diuels table with the vnfaithfull, to communicate in the bodye and blood of the Lord, vnder the mystical breaking of bread, and the blessing of the cuppe: but he did not yet comprise all the partes of this matter in that substanciall definition whiche we haue added vnto it, to the intente that the reader maye see, as it were paynted before him in a table, what he ought to iudge of the Lords supper. Wherfore those thynges whyche shall bee spoken hereafter, shall serue to the fuller expounding of thys definition.

The

II. What is the institution of the Lords Supper.

FIrst, is to be had the consideration of the institution of ỹ Lords supper. For without this all that ceremonie shoulde be to no purpose which the Churche dothe vse in thys respecte, that it is the sacramente of the Lordes bodye and blood. And for this matter we must take not euery where, but in the scriptures of the Euangelistes and the Apostles only, that out of their certaine teachings and testimonies, we may bee assured of some grounded authoritie of Gods ordinance, whiche the consciences of the faithfull may safely followe.

The same is redde of in Mathew, Marke, Luke, and in the first Epistle to the Cozinthians, whiche places brought all into one frame, are thus much to say: I receiued of the Lord, that which I haue also deliuered vnto you, that the Lord Iesus, the same night that he was betrayed, when they did eate, hee tooke bread, and gaue thankes, and brake it, and gaue it to his Disciples, and sayde: Take, eate, this is my body, whiche is giuen and broken for you. This do in the remembrāce of me.

Likewise hee tooke the cuppe also after he had supped, and gaue thankes, and gaue it vnto them saying: Drinke all of this. And they dranke of it all. And he sayd vnto them: This cuppe is the newe Testament in my bloud, which is shedde for you and many, for the forgiuenesse of sinnes. This do as often as you drinke, in remembrance of me. For as often as you doe eate this bread, and drinke of this cuppe, you do declare the Lords death, vntill that hee come. This is the institution of the Lordes supper, which we do comprise in certaine members, that is to saye these.

The institution of the Lordes Supper. Matth 28. Marke 14. Luke 22. 1. Cor. 11.

1 Who did institute it.
2 What he did institute.
3 What hee did commaund vs to doe.

I. Who did institute it.

The author of the Lords supper.

FIrst, the Apostle dothe set forthe vnto vs the author of this misticall supper. And he doth it not without reason. For when we way the authoritie of the ordeyner of it, it doth further exceedingly to make vs to vse that rightely and lawfully, which we haue receyued of his goodnesse. When Christ woulde reforme the faultes of matrimonie, he did alleage God for the author of it, and concluded the matter in that sorte, that he warned them that they ſhuld not passe that boundes which the author himselfe of matrimonie had set, and that they ought not to be separated, whome he ioyned togither: wherby he did sufficiently declare, that the corruption of matrimony came of that, that the rashnesse of man, leaning to followe the author thereof, did not vouchsafe to loke vnto the first institution of the same. And can wee thinke any other in this matter, that all the abuses thereof came of any other thing, than hereof, that they whiche haue gotten the gouernaunce of the Churche, making lyghte of the authoritie of the beginner, haue not bin afrayd to take away or adde, or chaunge anye thing as they lift themselues?

Of whence are the abuses in the Lordes Supper.

Therefore let vs heare of the Apostles wordes, with what faith and religion he dispensed the misterie of the Lords supper in the Church, and what authoritie he did set forth to the faithfull, not of his owne, but of the Lords: and how he called them backe thervnto, when they were swarued from the right vse, saying: I receiued of the Lorde, that which I haue also deliuered vnto you, ỹ the L. Jesus, &c.

So that we haue this mysticall supper not from the authoritie of the Apostles, much lesse of men, but from the Lord himselfe. The Lord himselfe our sauiour and redeemer hath instituted and recommended vnto vs that be his faithfull, the misery of his bodye and bloud, by the offering vppe whereof he hath redeemed vs. Paule did lay his authoritie to the Corinthians, and set it before that whiche hee meante to speake of his owne, to the intent that he might so reforme that which he went about to reforme, and withall shewe, that it did vary from the institution of the Lorde. For it is somewhat quicke that he saith, For I haue receiued that of the Lorde, whiche I haue also deliuered vnto you. For it is as much to say, as if he should tell them: Whereas you are gone frō that whiche I deliuered vnto you at ỹ beginning, you haue done it not so much against my ordinance, as against the institution of ỹ Lord. For I receyued it of the Lord, I dyd not presume vpon that of mine owne head whiche I betoke vnto you, and from which you are gone. He might haue sayd: I your Apostle: or else, I by the authoritie which I occupy as the Apostle of Christ, haue so deliuered it vnto you. But he had rather lay vnto them the Lords institution, thā his owne authoritie. Wherfore they be muche out of the way, whiche doe not sette forthe those things to the Churche which are deliuered from the Lorde, but suche things as they presume vppon by the rashnesse of menne, wyth the képing of whych, they doe more straightely charge the faithfull, than if they were deliuered by the Lord himselfe. It is the duty of a faithful minister, to be the dispensor of those things whiche he hath receiued of the Lorde, that he may be able also to say: That which I haue receiued of the Lord, I haue deliuered vnto you. These two must go togither, to receyue, and to delyuer: to receyue from the Lord, and to deliuer vnto his church. It is the condition of false folk, to chappe and chaunge that whiche they haue receyued of the Lord, and not to delyuer it truſtily vnto them that be of the familye. It is the condition of false folkes, not to receiue of the lord that whiche they doe deliuer to the churche, but to deliuer things to the Churche, to the intent ỹ they would receyue again: to deliuer vnto them the chips of mens traditions, and to receiue theyr gold and siluer.

Where the Apostle doth confirme his ordinance of the Author.

The diffe rence of faith full and mat.

That the Pastors are ordeyned to feede.

2 Secondly, it is the duety of religious and Christian people, vnderstanding the institution of the Lord, so to reuerence his authoritye, that they will earnestly conforme themselues vnto his rule, and flée immediately from all straunge fyre layd vppon Goddes aulter: nor he maye not herken vnto them, whiche doe alwayes tatle, fathers, councels, custome, the sée of Rome, the Apostolike sée, the Catholike Churche, I wote not what other like: but he must more esteéme one word of the Lords institution, than al the fumes and smokes of these wordes, wherwith they are wonte to blinde the mindes of the faythful. They crake that James the Apostle and brother of the Lord, was author of a Popish sacrament. I beseech you, if they had kept that which was deliuered from the Lord, what had it néeded to haue made any other author therof than ỹ Lord himself? We haue nor James nor Peter, nor any other of the Apostles to make the author of the lords supper, but the Lord himselfe. And when we haue the authoritie of the Lord and mayster, what néede we crake of the authority of the seruāt? But thus they are compelled to do, whiche can not without shame laye vnto the Lords ordinaunce, whyche they do vse, for ỹ they know, that their doings do not agrée there wall.

II. What the lord did institute.

Bothe the doing and the wordes of Christ are to bee considered.

FOrasmuch as the Lords institution doeth consiste not onely in wordes but in doings and wordes both, we must consider both of them, as wel his fact as his words. It was not without great cause, that he dyd institute this sacrament neyther by act without wordes, nor by wordes without doing, but he did so ioyne both togither, that ỹ disciples should both sée in déede and heare in worde, wherby they might be instructed of this sacrament, and so there shoulde be left no occasion to the headdinesse of men to imagin any thing of their own, or to corrupt any piece of this sacrament. Surely he was very diligent & carefull, that they ſhuld not afterwards vse any other thing thā his wil was they ſhuld, or mistake & expound the same that he would haue vsed, otherwise than the misteric of the fact doth require. He did the same firste before their eies, whiche they ſhould doe afterwards, and deliuer vnto the churche: and then he did expounde pound his doing (bicause it was mystically) by a mistical declaration also. The matters of the churches haue so much set at light this diligence of the lord, ỳ they haue changed ỳ simplicitie of the facte into an other fashion, and haue so wrested the exposition ỳ was added vnto it, from the true sense, ỳ they haue deuised a most gainefull wickednesse & marcating in this matter, & haue after ỳ sort set it forth ỳ church. But let vs see euery parcel in order.

The fact of Christe.

As for the doing of Christ, for as much as perteyneth to the institutiõ of this sacrament, he toke bread: and secondly, gaue thankes, no doubt to the father: thirdly, when he had taken the bread, he brake it: fourthly when he had broken it, he gaue it vnto his disciples, which he had with him at supper: fiftly, he toke in hys handes likewise also the cup, ỳ is to wit, of wine, of the braunch or grape of the vine: sixtly, he gaue thanks againe: seuenthly, he gaue this also to his disciples. In these parts is cõteined ỳ fact of doing of Christe & the very outward forme also this saccament.

1 First wheras he toke bread into his handes, gaue thankes, brake it, & gaue it to his disciples, it mighte seme ỳ he did it after his custome & maner, for so he was wõt to do. But the order of ỳ wordes which he added for ỳ declaration of his doeing, did sufficiently shew, that this facte was not to be taken as customably vsed, but that it was a meane and an institution of the sacrament.

2 Secondly, we must consider, why he would institute this sacramẽt of ỳ new testamẽt in bread & wine: but of this matter I haue spokẽ vpõ Pat.

3 Thirdly, it may be known what bread he vsed, by the circũstance of the obseruation of the law. It was the feast of the Passeouer, at whiche it was not only vnlawful to occupy any leauened bread, but there coulde be found no such bread at al. For it was a solemne matter in ỳ lawe, to cleanse & rid away all leauen at the beginning of the passeouer, whiche thing the apostle doth set forth to the faithfull for a figurall lesson, saying: cleanse out the old leauen, ỳ you may be a new sprinckling. So that the Lord vsed vnleauened bread at hys supper, not bycause that he might not haue vsed other, if that he had instituted this sacrament at an other time: but bycause there was no need to vse leauened bread thereunto, and also if he had done that whiche was against the law, he shoulde haue giuen a great offence to his disciples. In deed it was the obseruation of ỳ law and of the Iewes, that he occupyed vnleauened bread, at the seasõ of the passeouer: but he did yelde therin to the time and to the weakenesse of his disciples, specially seeing that the dispensation of the law was not yet fulfilled. Wherefore in my iudgement, ther was no reason why the Latin church should so condemn the custome of the Grekes as vnlawful, in that they vsed leauened bread at the Lordes supper: nor the Grekes shold not so haue abhorred vnleauened bread, that they shoulde for ỳ respect haue suffered theselues to be sequestred frõ the Latine churches, seeing that it maketh no matter at al, whether that we do communicate in leuened or vnleauened bread, as VVhat bread he vsed.

1. Cor. 5. VVhy he occupied vnleauened bread.

VVhat was the syr. Mat. 26. Mar. 14.

The cause wherefore the Greekes and Latines of the breaden Lord Supper.

Exod. 12. 13. Deut. 16.

(as we do read that the Grekes did afterward acknowledge in the eight Synode in Eugenius the fourthes time) but it maketh exceeding greate matter wt̃ how sincere & true faith we do cõmunicat. We do stick fast to vn leauened bread in this sacramẽt, but we haue long agone for the moste part shaken of the newe sprinckling of our hartes. We do cast out the leauen out of the breade, but in the meane while we do kepe still the leauen of malice and wickednesse in our hartes. This holy & mysticall table must nedes haue vnleauened harts & not of necessity vnleauened bread. When the apostle sayd: Cleanse out the olde leauen, he meant not of the braune but of the figuratiue leauen, which he terneth the old leauen, ỳ is to say, of the old life, the leauen of malice & wickednesse. The leauen ỳ is to be abhorred in this sacrament, is the wickednesse of the hart, vnbeliefe, idolatrie, and the vncleanesse of ỳ old life. This shold be abhorred.

4 Fourthly as concerning the cup, I suppose that there is no man that wil deny but that there was wine in it, wheras the lord said that he wold drinke no more of this branch of the vine, vntil he dranke newe wyth hys friendes in the kingdome of God. Wherfore we do millike firste the water drinkers, whiche vsed water, only at this supper, whom Cyprian doth refute: secondly them also which it is written in the Decrees. Thirdly we do millike all that the Papists do vse to mingle water with theyr wine in the chalice: & that not as a custome at liberty, (which might be borne withal) but as so necessarie, that they do make them as damned soules, which do vse wine alone without water: wherein in blaming of other, they declare themselues to be worthy of blame, & that for two causes. First, bicause they do poure water into the wine, without the example of Christ. Secondlye, bycause ỳ they doe condemne the vse of cleane wine, which is conformable to the example of Christ, they haue this in theyr Decrees: For there ought not to be offered either wine alone or water alone in the Lordes cup, but let ther be offered both mingled together. If he had sayd: There muste not be offered water alone, it might haue bene borne withal. But when he sayth, Wine ought not to be offered alone, it is nothing else to saye, but that it ought not to be done: which christ did. We do read of wine only, there is no mention made of water. The Cannon sayth further: For we do reade that both issued out of his side at his passion The Canon Non oportet, hath the same in the same distinct. But let them answere vs, where it is written, that both issued out of Christes side, I meane bothe wine & water. We do read of bloud & water, but we reade not so of wine & water. I beseech you what may we iudge of this argumẽt? we must offer neither wine alone, nor water alone in ỳ cup, but both mingled together. And why? He sayth not, bicause ỳ lord did so order it, but bicause both issued out of ỳ side of Christe. First, wheras he saith, ỳ wine issued out of Christs side, it is an opẽ lie. Secõdly, albeit ỳ water did issue out of it, yet for al that it ought not to be take to the vse of the sacrament, seing ỳ we

De consecr. Distinct. Can. In sacramentorum obla-tionib.

They doe mingle water to the wine.

haue

haue neither ỹ doing of Chriſt to auouch it, nor his word neyther. Cyprian doth inforce marueilouſly and that aright, that we muſt do nothing in this ſacrament, but that whyche the Lord himſelfe did firſt, and commanded vs to doe. And yet contrary vnto this rule, he doeth alſo defende the mingling of the water in the cup. So eaſy a matter it is to know the rule of the truth, but ſtoutely to folow it, it is not ſo eaſye. As touching the water of Chriſts ſide, Cyprian himſelfe ſayth, that it perteyneth nothing to the cuppe: and doeth turne it vnto Baptiſme, as the Maiſter of the Sentences doeth alſo. Wherfore they proue nothing at al by the iſſuing out of bloud and water out of Chriſtes ſyde, Cyprian.

Li. 4. di. 5112

I doubte not but it was an vniuerſal cuſtome & maner in that East countries, where there groweth very excellent and ſtrong wines, to delay ſomewhat the ſtrength of the wine by pouring in water. Wherof the word in Ebrew is read alſo in ỹ ſcriptures, whiche ſignifyeth, to mingle, and it is vſed ſometimes in the ſenſe of powring in, as we maye ſée in the Prouerbes and Eſaye. And I ſuppoſe it came of that, that the Byſhoppes of the Eaſte countries, and after them the Italians, beganne to mingle water with theyr wine, as well in the myſticall vſe of it, as alſo in the prophane vſe. But yet for all that, they ſhould not haue ſet lawes thereuppon to the Churches, and colour their commō cuſtome with myſticall expoſitions or gloſes, and condemne them whiche do communicate without mingling of water.

The maner of the East countrey.

מסך

Pro. 9. & 23. Eſay. 5. 22.

5 Fiftly, whereas he gaue thankes at both, as wel at the dyng of the bread as of the wine alſo, he did it in deede of cuſtome: but ſo no doubt, that he vſed a ſpeciall feruencye in thys caſe, whereby he was kyndled vnto it, according vnto that of Luke: I haue deſired with very earneſt deſire to eate this Paſſeouer with you before I ſuffer. And it is our parte, as often as we do eate and drinke, to giue harty thankes vnto GOD the giuer of all, but it behoueth vs at the Communiō of this ſacramēt, to doe it ſo muche the more religiouſly and feruently, the more excellent that the meate of the minde is, than the meate of the bellye. But what thanks giuing is, & to whom it belongeth, and how it perteyneth vnto Chriſt our lord, we haue noted in our Commentaries vpon John. This trade and endeauour of thanks gyuing vnto God, was ſo greate a matter in the Church in times paſt, that the fathers beganne to call all this whole myſtical action, Thanks giuing.

Of the kinges of Iſrael.

Luke. 22.

Iohn. 6.

Of this we ſpake in an other place, ỹ the Euangeliſtes and Paule do vſe theſe two wordes εὐλογεῖν and εὐχαριστεῖν, in one ſenſe: for to giue thanks. So that wheras Marke ſayth here, ỹ the lord did bleſſe, it is not to be referred vnto the bread, as though that he did conſecrate it by bleſſing, & turned it into his body, but vnto God ỹ father, vnto whō he dyd refer al the grace of our redemption, as the firſt fountaine thereof, and taught vs alſo by his example to do the ſame.

6 Sirtly, he brake the bread. It is very likely ỹ it was an vnleauened cake cake and brokie. It is meant that he toke it whole into his hands, for that it is ſaydo, that he brake it: and he brake it for to diuide it. And ỹ was his cuſtome. The aftercommers béeing more ſuperſtitious than religious, haue abuſed this ſimplicitie of breaking, into a partition into thrée parts. They ought ſo to breake the Lords bread vnto the faithfull, that euery one might haue his portiō: but they haue left off this breaking of ỹ Lordes, and the communion of the Churche, and do breake the hoſt (as they call it) into thrée parts, whereof they doe apply the firſt vnto them in heauen, the ſecond vnto them that do yet liue vpon the earth, and the third vnto the dead: after that the prieſte doth eate the firſt and the ſecond, and hurleth the thirde péece into the chalice, & ſwalloweth it vp in his drinke. None of this geare came frō ỹ Lord. The ſpirite of diſcorde ſwaruing frō the Lordes ordinaunce, deuiſed thys geare. They do breake it not to haue it diſtributed, but leaſt they ſhoulde ſéme not to breake it, as though that the breaking without the diſtributiō did fulfill the Lordes inſtitution. Bread is broken to be diſtributed to the féeding of them that are hungry. Wherfore ỹ breaking is not ſuche a thing, that it ought to be done for it ſelfe, but for ſome other thing, and ſo that breaking is to no purpoſe, wherunto there followeth no diſtribution. The purpoſe and ende of this breaking, is the communion. And there ought to goe in the mids betwirt the one and the other, the diſtribution, whereby the ſacrament of the body and bloud of the Lord is communicated to the church. So that theſe thrée points do hang togither: To breake, to diſtribute, and to communicate. To what purpoſe is it then, that they do breake it, when they do not diſtribute the bread after it is broken, but do eate it vp alone? Whē Chriſt did breake his bread, he brake it not to offer it vnto God his father, but to make it méete for euery man to take part of it, and to diſtribute it among his diſciples. He ſaith not: he brake it and offered it: but he brake it & gaue it them. If they do that which Chriſt did, why do they it not after the ſame manner, and to the ſame intente that he did it? The Apoſtle ſayeth: The bread which we breake, is it not the communion of the Lords body? Ergo, the Apoſtles dyd ſo breake bread in the church, that it ſhould be the communion of the Lords body. That can not be truly reported of the Papiſtes bread: bycauſe it is not broken to that intente, that it ſhoulde be diſtributed to the communion of the faithfull.

VVhy he brake the bread.

VVhy he gaue it not to the Diſciples to be broken.

He brake it (ſaith he) and gaue it vnto his diſciples. He brake ỹ bread himſelfe with his owne hande, and when it was broken, gaue it vnto his diſciples. He gaue it not whole vnto them, and to be broken by them, but he gaue them the bread which he had broken, he gaue it not them to the intente that they ſhoulde diſtribute it, but that they ſhould take it as diſtributed by him, and eate it. The Apoſtles were at the Supper of the Lorde, not as diſpenſours of the myſteries of god, but as gueſts, as faithfull, as diſciples, as communicantes: but Chriſte was as the feaſt maker, as ỹ maiſter, by one ſelfſame meanes both inſtituting and diſpenſing alſo with

with his own handes the sacrament of his grace, and sáctifyings with al the dispensation and ministerry therof to come, and declaring that it is not possible, that any man can participate thereof, vnlesse that he do dispence it by the vertue of his spirit, Wherfore we may not herein wayle theyr Apostolical worthynesse, but ỳ ecclesiastical cómunion perteyning equallye vnto the faithful. I do not speak this in vaine, it shall serue to some purpose hereafter.

Take, eate and drinke of this all.

It is to be referred also vnto this fact of Christ, that he said: Take eat. Item, drinke of this al. He gaue it not vnto them to lay it vp in store, to kepe it, to carry it about, and to worship it, but to eate and to drinke it. He gaue it not to one of thẽ alone, which shoulde eate it, and drinke it for other men, but vnto all that were presente, that euery one should take it, eate it, and drinke it. But of thys matter I haue spoken also in an other place. Wheras he sayde of the cuppe: Drinke all of this: and sayde not of the bread. Eate of this al: it is likely that it was done bycause that he gaue about of the bred ỳ he brake a peece to euery one, but not so of the cup. For that he gaue to some one of them first, as it was whole, to drink of it himselfe, and so euerye one to drinke of it afterwardes in order. Whether ỳ ther were many cuppes vpon the table, or but one alone, it is no matter, he wouldе haue them all drinke but of one selfe same cup. So when he gaue the cup first, he saide: Drinke all of this. Yet we may not hereby condemn their custome, whiche for the multitude of the cómunicantes, doe vse many cuppes at the Lords supper: And yet for al ỳ the vsing of one cup, doth helpe well, to signify the mystery of one & self same bloud, wherof all faythful are equally giuen to drinke of. Nor I do not misslyke the opinió of some, that this was the cup of which the Lord himselfe did peculiarly drinke of al that Supper, so that, in that respecte, it should be called aright, the lords cup. There is no cause why we shoulde affirme, whether that he did eate & drinke first himselfe of this breade & cup, as Chrysostome thoughbt, and that Cannon doeth signifie. In ỳ, that he doeth make hymselfe to be in thys Supper both the guest and the feast it selfe, the eater, and hym that was eaten, we nede not to stãd in it. And yet wythall, there is no cause why we should stoutly denye it. For it is verye likely, that lyke as in that, that he was Baptised of John, he did sanctifie vnto vs the sacrament of admissiõ, euẽ so he wold also sanctifie the Sacramente of communion, and therefore dydde eate and drynke of it firste hymselfe.

Hytherto we haue considered the outward fact of Christ, for as much as it belongeth to the institution of the mystical Supper, now we must procede and see of his words whiche: he added to declare his doing, as Thys is my body, which is giuen & broken for you. Do this in remembrance of me. Item: This cup is the new testament in my bloud, whyche is shed for you, and for many, to the remission of sinnes. Do this as oft & as you drinke, in the remembrance of me.

By these wordes we haue a declaration therof expressed, sufficient for a godly and a faithfull man. Hytherto we might occupy ỳ outward senses, and the natural vnderstanding to iudge of this outward facte of Christ: but now when we muste enter into the very secrete partes of Christs mind, & see in what sense vpõ what cause, & to what ende, he gaue bread & wine to his disciples, whẽ he shoulde die: we muste sequester the iudgement of our outward senses, & we must get a faythful mind, which may receyue and embrace Christes mind & meaning in this fact. Here our mindes had nede to be pure and spirituall, as theirs be whiche lyke cleane cattel do chaw within theyr hartes, that whiche they do see and beare outwardly, and do make gwo difference betwirt the outward facts and minds of the doers.

Wherfore it is cõueniẽt, ỳ the vnskilful & ignorant folke be informed of ỳ vnderstãding of it, before ỳ they come to this table of the Lordes. So the lord cõmaunded ỳ Israelites to cõmunicate the vnderstanding of ỳ Passeouer vnto ỳ yonger mẽ, saying: When you be entred into the lande which the Lordyour God shall giue you, you shall kepe these ceremonies. And when your children shal say vnto you: What religion is this? you shal say vnto them: It is the offering of the Lords Passouer, when he passed ouer by the houses of the children of Israell in Egypt, striking Egypt, and deliuering your houses. And he commaunded also of the consecrating of the firste begotten vnto the Lorde, that their children shoulde be instructed of the manner therof, as of the testimonies, iudgementes, and lawfull ceremonies. I beseche you, how much more diligently ought the ignorant to be instructed emongst vs, that they may vnderstande the nature of the Lordes Supper, by the very wordes of the Lorde? least whẽ they be ledde by naturall iudgement onely, they sticke still in the outward facte, and either make light of it, or else for lacke of the true vnderstanding, obserue it to superstitiously. For so men may wander out of the way as wel to farre vnto the right, as also vnto the lefte hande, from the true and naturall vse and meanyng of it.

Exo. 12. Deut. 6.

His purpose to keepe modestie.

And for as much as the wordes of Christe, whereby his facte is declared, and the Sacrament of the newe Testamẽt instituted, are more darkned, than lightened now adayes by vnchristian cõtentions, I haue determined vsing all Christian modesty, to forbeare from that kinde of brawles, so that albeit I fall sometimes into the mention of them, yet I will so handle it, that it may appeare that I do it not to maynteine any contentiõ with any man, but rather that I may truely and faithfully sette forth mine owne iudgement, and that whiche I thinke that all Christian menne ought to iudge therof, & yet wil leaue the determination therof to our brethern, whiche all I doe louingly embrace in the Lorde, though that they do dissent in this matter from me, or emongst thẽselues (so that they maintaine not the Popishe impiety & marketting) as vtterly voyde from that bitternesse, whiche some vse nowe a dayes, in cursing & betaking them to the Diuell, whiche doe dissent from them, and doe make spitefully at them with innumerable and most biting blaspheames & tauntes, which no Christian man can reade without great sorow and shame. And by thys dealing there is not set forthe the séeking of the truth, as it is pretended, but the bitternesse of mens heartes wonderfully pestered with rayling and tanting, and the truth nothyng opened, but brought into greater suspition to be false. But let them passe, and let vs cõsider the matter itselfe.

Two Sacramentes as well in the newe as in the old Testament.

This is a clére case, that as there were two sacraments of the old Testament, Circumcision and the Passouer, so there be two institutes also by the Lord of the new Testamente. I meane Baptisme, and that which the Apostle calleth the Lordes Supper. Baptisme dothe counteruayle Circumcision, and the Lords supper the Passouer. And the fathers doe agrée vppon baptisme and circumcision: wherfore Augustin also speaking of baptisme against the Donatistes, doth compare circumcisiõ with baptisme, which thing Bernard doth also muche later than he, in his sermon of ỹ Lordes supper, and in his Irby. Epistle, that the Lords supper dothe counteruaile the Passouer, it is declared both by the abrogation of the one, and institution also of the other, which both Luke doth more diligẽtly describe than the rest. Of the abrogation of the Passouer he speaketh in this wise: And the day of the swéete bread was come, at whyche tyme it was necessary to offer the Passouer. And he sent Peter and John saying: Goe, and prepare the Passouer for vs, that we may eate it, &c. And as they went, they found as he had told them, and they prepared the Passouer. And when it was due time, hée sate hym downe, and hys twelue Apostles with him, and said vnto them: I haue had a great desire to eate this Passouer with you, before that I do suffer. For I tell you, I wil not eate any more of it after this, vntill that it be fulfilled in ỹ kingdome of God. And taking ỹ cuppe, he gaue thanks, and saide: Take this and deuide it among you. For I tell you, that I wil not drinke of the fruite of the Vine, vntill that the kingdome of GOD come. Thus much of the olde Passouer, which shoulde be fulfilled immediately by the killing of the immaculate Lambe, and to be abrogated by the succession of the newe sacramente. And adding the institution thereof, he saith: And taking bread, when he had giuen thankes, he brake it, and gaue it to them, saying: This is my body, whiche is giuen for you, &c. The very contexte and order of Christes doing, to leaue the matter it selfe, doth sufficiently declare, that this mysticall supper did so succéde the old Passouer, the Sacrament of the old Testamẽt, that an other Sacramente of the newe Testamente might be ioyned vnto baptisme, to counteruayle the olde.

Lib. 4. ca. 24

Luke. 22.

How he made the newe Passouer vtter the olde.

And the Lorde dothe so determine the olde Passouer, that the disciples might playnely perceiue the going from that, to the institution of the new, yea and that they might easely and readily vnderstand those thynges that he did. For he did declare vnto them playnely, that they shoulde not afterward eate of the old, but of the new Passouer of the new Testamẽt: as though he had saide, Hytherto the olde Testament hath endured, now the the beginnyng of the newe is at hande. The confirmation of the olde consisted in the bloud of the Lambe which your fathers killed in Egypt at Gods commaundement, by the meanes of whose bloud, they were deliuered frõ the Angel which stroke Egypt, & sone after from al the bondage of Pharao, the remembraunce also wherof they kept euery yeare in a solemn feast of this Passouer. But hereafter it shall be no more vsed. For the old Testament beyng once determined, the Sacraments thereof bee also determined. And they be determyned by the succession of the newe Testament, and this figuratiue Lambe which we doe now presently eate, shall be fulfilled immediatly with the figure thereof by the successiõ of the truth, when the true Lambe shall bée slayne, to the begynnyng and confirmation of the newe Testament. Wherefore I doe with feruent desire sitte downe, to eate this Passouer with you, knowyng that this is the laste wée shall haue, and that the fulfillyng of it is at hande. I doubte not, but when he toke that figuratiue Lãbe into his handes, he gaue thankes firste vnto his father, and spake such like wordes vnto his Disciples, as it is mentioned that he spake also of the cuppe, of the Passouer: whereby his Disciples might vnderstand not only that he should suffer, but that he shoulde also fulfill in the kingdome of God, and determine the figure of the olde Passouer by his death.

So that when he had made this introduction before, & take his leaue of the figure of the olde Testament, meanyng to institute the new Testament, he toke bread, gaue thãkes, brake it, and gaue it to his Disciples, and sayde: Take, eate, This is my body, whiche is giuen for you. This do in the remembraunce of me. Likewise the cuppe also when supper was done, & sayd: This cuppe is the newe Testamente in my bloud, which is shed for you. Thus he doth institute the new Testament to succeede the Old, & euen in the very beginning of it doth institute a Sacrament of two partes, to counteruayle the Sacrament of the old Passouer which was of two parts also. There was in the figural Passouer, meate & drinke, both Sacramentall & memoriall also. The meate was the Lãbe with the sweete breades. The drinke was the cup of the Testamẽt, wherin was the memory of the bloude, whiche beyng daubed and sprinkled vpon the postes of the houses, did deliuer the Israelites. It was an vnkindly matter to drinke bloud, but it was no vnkindly matter to eate the flesh of a rosted Lambe. Wherfore the memoriall of the testamentary bloud was not so vsed of them in the Lambes bloud, as the memoriall of the Lambe offered, was in the Lambes flesh: but they did vse it in a cuppe of wine, whiche they dranke in the remembraunce of the testamentarie, and sauyng bloudde, wherof we sée mention is made here in the texte of Luke. The Sacraments of God bée not so appointed, that they doe require to haue any done, more beastly, than méete for men.

The sacramente of two parts.

After this sorte there is institute also meate & drinke, in the sacrament of the new Testamẽt. The meate is Meate and drinke in the Sacramente of the newe testament.

the body of Chriſt, offered vp for vs vpon the Croſſe: the drinke is hys bloud, ſhedde for our ſinnes vpon the Croſſe. The Lord inſtituting the ſacrament of them both, vſeth not the fleſh of the Paſcal Lambe, leaſte it might be applyed vnto the old teſtament, and to the Sacrament of the figural Lambe, but he vſed breade, both commonly vſed, and eaſy to be gotten, and the cuppe of wine, which both they were wonte to haue in the ceremony of the old Paſſouer. He vſeth nothing that was not vſed at that ſolemne and accuſtomed ceremonie, but he doeth tourne thoſe things which were vſed in it, to the Sacrament of the new Teſtament, and not vnfitly. For as the changing of the figure into the truth, and of ỹ ſhadowe into the body is done by an alteration of things not farre fette a ſunder, but of things nere & allied one to an other, ſo thoſe things alſo which were vſed in the Sacrament of the figural Paſſouer, are not vnfitly tranſlated to the Sacrament of the true Paſſouer.

This is my bodye.

Therefore he toke that vnleauened breade, the bread of the olde Paſſouer, and the cuppe alſo thereof, which both they were wont to vſe at that ſolemne ceremonie of the Paſſouer, and when he had giuen thankes to the father, he brake the breade, and gaue it to his Diſciples, ſaying, Take, eate, Thys is my bodye, which is giuen for you. He doth not ſaye: Let this be from hence forth the body of the Paſcall lambe, which your fathers in time paſt killed in Egipt: but he ſayth, Thys is my body, whiche ſhall ſhortlye be giuen to be offered for you. Nor he doth not ſay of the cuppe: Thys cuppe is the old Teſtamente in the bloud of the Lambe, whiche was ſhedde ſomtimes in Egipt, and was ſprinckled, vppon the walles for the deliuerance of your fathers, but: This cup is the new teſtamente in my bloud, whiche is ſhedde for you, (and as it is in Matthew) for manye to the remiſſion of ſinnes, as though he ſhoulde ſaye, You ſhall ſée that I ſhall ſuffer, and be offered vp as a true Lambe for the forgiuenelle of your ſins, and of manies, and that I ſhal confirme the new teſtamente by my bloud. Wherefore you nede not hereafter to eate the figuratiue Paſſouer of the old Teſtament. Lo I doe ordaine a newe one for you. Thys breade which I do breake and diſtribute among you to eate, and ỹ cup which I doe offer you to drinke, be not to be referred to this old Paſſouer, nor they muſte not be taken ſimply as breade and wine, to fede and moyſten the body, but as the ſacrament of the new Teſtament: I do commende vnto you my bodye and bloude, of which I do inſtitute vnto you here a Sacramente and communion. This bread is my body the body of the true lamb which ſhal ſhortly hereafter be offered vppe for you. This cup is not the old Teſtament, but the new in my bloud, the bloud of the true Lambe which ſhal be ſhed for you. Therefore like as this figurall lambe is taken for the Paſſouer of the old Teſtamente, ſo ſhall this breade and the cuppe be taken hereafter for the Sacramente of my bodye offered, and my bloud ſhedde in the newe Teſtamente. This I ſuppoſe was the meaning of Chriſt Chriſt in theſe wordes, that like as Moſes the mediator of the olde Teſtament, did ordeyne the Paſcall Lambe, and did begin a Jubilie and a ſolemne memoriall thereof, before that he was immolated, and that he ſhould turne away the ſtriking Angell by his bloud, and ſo did inſtitute it for a ſacrament of the olde Teſtament: ſo he alſo meanyng to make an ende of the olde Teſtament, and to beginne the Newe, ſhoulde inſtitute this ſacrament of the newe and true Paſſouer, that is to ſay, of his body and bloud, before that he ſhoulde be offered vp vpon the croſſe, for the deliuerance of mankind. And this ſenſe is playne inough to the mindes of the faythfull, and it was no harde matter for the Apoſtles to vnderſtande what this newe ceremonie meanie (brought in by the ſo handſome a conueyaunce from the olde Paſſouer. But let vs conſider eache parte in order.

Take, (ayth he) and eate. This is my body. Firſte of all we may not referre the pronowne, This, to any other thyng, but to the bread, whiche he brake himſelfe, and gaue to his Diſciples to eate. He mighte haue ſayde: This breade is my body, as he ſayde of the cuppe: This cuppe is the newe Teſtament: but there was no nede of any ſuche ſpecification, when they had the breade yet in their hands whereof hee ſpake, and dyd eate it. I knowe that ſome of our bretherne haue referred this worde τοῦτο, that is to ſay, This, not to the bread, but to the very body of our Lorde, as though that hée had poynted to himſelfe, and ſayde: This my bodye, whiche you ſée here before you, ſhall be giuen for you: Againe, ſome other by the pronowne, This, ſuppoſe that there is ſignified the miſterie of the ſpirituall foode, as thoughe that the Lorde ſhould haue ſayde: My bodye which ſhall be giuen for you, in the kinde of ſpirituall things is thys, that is to ſay, ỹ bread of life, &c. But if we do harken vnto Paule, where he ſayth: The bread which we doe breake, is it not the communion of the Lordes body: and to that whiche was ſpoken by the Lorde of the cuppe: This is the newe Teſtamente, &c. I ſuppoſe it ſhall be manifeſt ynough, that it is not reported and ſayde of the Lordes body, that it is bread, but of the bread, that it is the lords body. The ſubiect or the matter conſiſteth in ỹ word, This, but the thing reported, is in ỹ which is added, Is my body, whiche is giuen for you.

VVhich is the ſubiect.

He ſpeaketh not ſimply of bread.

Yet for al that we muſt admoniſh the ignorant, that they vnderſtande not, that the lord ſpeaketh of bread, as bread, but as of bread ſanctified by thankes giuing, broken, and diſtributed to the faythfull, to take part of it. So the Apoſtle doth not ſay ſimply, bread, but the bread whiche we do breake, is it not the communion of the lords body? I do note this, to exclude the Papiſtes bread, which they do vſe not to diſtribute & to cómunicate, but to cloſe vp, to carry about, & to worſhip finally in that ſort, that the prieſt only may eate it.

VVhat the Lord ſayth of the bread

Therefore ſeing ỹ the pronowne (this) is to be referred to the bread ỹ is broken and deliuered vnto the diſciples, & that ỹ ſubiect of this ſpeci conſiſteth in it: conſequẽtly we muſt ſée what is reported of it by the lord.

He taketh bread, he giueth thankes to his Father, he breaketh it, and giueth it to his disciples, and he doeth this, not now in the beginning of the supper, as he was wont to doe, but when he hadde made an ende of his Paschall supper. Therefore the circumstances of this doing wold that he should expound what he woulde do. And so he doth saying, Take, eat, this is my body, which is giuen for you. Therefore he sayth of the bread which he had broken and gyuen to hys Disciples, that the same was his bodye. In thys case the naturall man is sodenly abashed and offended, as the Capernaytes were. I se (sayth he) bread, and I do heare that it is the body of the Lord. How shal I agre my eyes and mine eares togither? Myne eyes doe say, It is bread that we se: mine eares say the contrary, we heare (say they) that it is the Lords body, and that by the very mouth of the Lord. Whiche shall I credite? If I credite myne eyes, mine eares telleth me an other tale. If I herken to mine eares, myne eyes go an other way, whose witnesse is wonte to be better regarded than the witnesse of heare saye. If I will credite myne eyes and my eares both, I can not se how the same speache can be allowed, where one thing is reported to be both breade and the Lordes bodye: whiche two doe so much differ betwirte themselues in nature, substance, condition, and worthynes, that they can not stande both in one subiect.

This is my body.

The naturall man abasheth.

The deceiuing of the Papistes.

And by this mauer of reasonyng, the Papistes are deceiued, which for as much as it is not possible, that the same material bread should be both bread & the lords body, & ỹ two sundry substãces shuld really be comprehended in one subiect, do cõclude, ỹ ỹ substances of the bread altogether chãged into the bodye, and that by the vertue of the Lords words, This is my body: and by this sense they doe make a new article of our faith, which they do cal Transubstantiation. By this sophisticatiõ, they do vtterly extinguish the Testimonye of the eyes, and do make men blinde, not onely in minde, but in body also.

Transubstantiation of the bread.

The fyneffe of Sophistes.

And to this purpose serueth the Seraphicall fyneneſſe of the Sophisters, where they do dispute, whether that euery priest vttering ỹ words, do the same that Christ did: how the accidents of the bread may be without a subiecte? how a body bearing quantitie, can stand togither wyth another quantitie? how a thing of greater quantitie may be togither wyth or in a thing of lesse quãtitie in an euen place? how the body of Christ maye be vnder the kinde of breade, seeing that it forsaketh not heauen? how can it be in sundry places togither? how long it continueth vnder the shape of bread? what it is when it is no longer there? What if it be burned? eaten of vermine, hoyed, & many such like matters, which commeth into question vppon this false reasoning of the Papists.

We intend not at this present to speake against this error of the Popishe Transubstantiation: we haue said in our Cõmentaries vpon Mathew, that it is cõtrary to the words of Christ, and of Paule, & contrarie vnto the testimonie of our eyes, contrary vnto the opinió of Augustine, to the to the definition of a sacrament, to the nature of the subiecte and predicate: finally, to the nature of the sacrament which Augustine maketh. It is noted by others how it is contrarie to the iudgements of the olde fathers, & how trifling the Papistes reasons be in this point, and what inconueniẽces doe folow of this erro.

But our opinion is, that it is so sayd of Christ, that this bread is his body, ỹ there falleth out no necessity to denay the substance thereof, but that it is necessary, that the substãce must remayn whole and sound. For there is nothing to let, but that in the sacramentall sense, in whiche Christ speaketh here, this bread may be sayd to be his body, and yet for al that kepe his substance stil.

But we must make a difference betwirt that which is naturally said or spoken, and that whiche is sacramentally sayd: Those things that be naturally sayd or reported, do declare what that Subiectes be, of their nature, wherof they be sayde or reported: as if it be said or reported of that which Christ brake at his Supper, and gaue to his Disciples, that it is breade, it is a naturall saying or report, declaring that it is bread. But those things whiche be sayde or reported Sacramentallye, doe teache vs, not what the subiectes be of thẽselues, whereof they sayde or reported, but for what they oughte to be taken and vsed. So when Christ doth say or report of this bread, saying: Thys is my bodye, he teacheth, vs not what it is of his owne nature: nor it was no neede to teach that, for as muche as it was otherwyse manifest, nor it mad: nothyng to the purpose and intent, but he doth teach what he would haue it to be vnto his Disciples and the faythful, that is to say, for what they ought to take and eate it sacramentally. It is one matter to say of any thing what it is in deede of it selfe, and an other matter to say, what it is in this place, at this present, in some special deede & purpose, according vnto the wyl and meaning of him that appointeth and gaue it. If a man take thys saying in the natural sense, it is made impossible and vnreasonable. For it is not possible, that bread shoulde be naturally the Lordes body. But if a mã take in it that Sacramentall sense, as the very institution it selfe of the Lord doth require, it shall be sayde of bread, not what it is naturally & substantially, but what the Lorde would haue it to be Sacramentally, and for what he woulde haue it taken, and to what vse he appointed them the breaking, distribution, and communion of it. He would haue the bread to be the Sacramente of hys bodye, whiche shoulde be immediately delyuered vnto death for them, and he woulde haue the partaking thereof to be the sacramental communion of his body, and the remembraunce of hys death. Wherfore wheras he sayth, Take, eate, This is my body, if a man can not take it as the wordes do sounde, but requireth some addition, whereby that may be declared, which sundry men haue sundrye ways attempted, euerye man vppon good intent, I thinke it shal not be done amysse, if we saye that it is all one, as to saye, Thys is the sacrament of my bo-

The Lord vvoulde haue bread to be the Sacrament of his body body, or according vnto ỳ exposition of Paul, where he sayth: The bread which we do breake, is it not the cõmunion of the Lords body? This is the communion of my body. Augustine saith in one place: The lorde doubted not to say, This is my body when he gaue the signe of hys body. After this Sentence, that which the Lord said, This is my bodye, is all one, as to saye, This is the signe of my body. No doubt he gaue breade. So that if the breade be the signe of the Lordes body, then he gaue it not as a bare table bread, but as the sign of his body. And wheras he calleth it his body, what doth he meane else, but ỳ he giueth in this sign hys own body: & he wold ỳ, ỳ this bread should be receiued of the faithful, not for bread, but for his body? And this I ment when I did enforce the Sacramentall giuing in Matthew: And ther is nothing wherin these expositions doe differ one from an other. Alwayes the bread of the Supper is the Sacrament, cõmunion, and sign of the Lords body. Wherfore no mã can say, that I do bring sundry expositions, and that I doe wrest and corrupte the simple terte to diuers meanings. I do kepe the text of the Lordes words whole, nor I would not haue it otherwise expressed, then it is expressed by the Lorde. It is plaine ynough to me, by the grace of the Lord, that he sayth, Take, eate, This is my body. Those things that I do note, I do note for the simpler sortes sake, not that they shoulde make an other text out of my words but that they might somewhat better vnderstand that texte whiche we haue of the Lorde, that they be not ledde out by the Popishe Sophistrie into all kind of errors.

1.Cor.10.

But what and I saye, that This is my body, is all one as to saye, In this, or vnderthys is my body: Was Christe at that pointe, that he would tel his Disciples either wher his body was then, which sat in the middes of them, brake breade, and distributed it, & did the other things whiche be mentioned: either where they should seke it afterwards which shoulde be assumpted into heauen in their sightes: What and if I say, that he did it rather to teache them to what intente he gaue them this breade whiche he brake, and in what meaning and affection also they ought to take it? I think there nedeth no greate kynenesse of witte to vnderstande, that it is not altogither one thing to saye, This is my body, and in this, or vnder this, is my bodie. He doth not say of his body, that it is vnder bread, or in bread but of bread, that it is his body. He saith that of his body, which did much profite his disciples to know: that is, that it should be giuen for them to death, when he sayth: Which is giuen for you. And he saide alls that of bread, which did muche auaile hys disciples to knowe, that is to say, that it is his body, that is to saye, the Sacrament of his bodie. So be ther in these words two subiects & two things sayd of thẽ. The first subiect is breade, and of it is sayde or reported the bodye of the Lorde, in a saying not naturall, but Sacramentall, as we haue tolde before. The other subiecte is a body, expressed in the pronoune, (whiche.) And therof is sayd, ỳ it should be gyuen uen for the Disciples. Which (saith he) is giuen for you, So I suppose, we be taught plainely ynough, what we ought to iudge and saye, as conuenient to this sacramente of the bread of the Lords supper, and also of the Lordes bodye. But that the Lords body is corporally eyther in the bread, eyther vnder the figure of bred, I se not how it may be proued by these his words. Our brethren do vehemently inforce vs, ỳ we oughte not to flee from the Lordes wordes. And I do in case like wel that we do most religiously stande to these wordes of the Lords, and that we wrest not, nor wry any of them. I do know that the wordes be so spoken, that the Lordes meaning is sufficientlye expressed therby, and that it coulde not haue bene better spoken, so that they be not wrested to bringe blinde contention, and incuerrently tolled & tombled, to enforce them vnto such a a sense as doth disagree with other places of Scriptures. He saith, This is my body. I can not apply the pronown, This, to any other thing, but to the bread broken, and distributed by the Lord. He sayth not aduerbially ὧδε, ỳ is, Here but τοῦτο, ỳ is This. Nor he sayth not ἐν τούτῳ, or ὑπὸ τοῦτο, ỳ is to say, In this, or vnder this. He sayth none of al this: wherfore I can not like that any of them should be allowed: but that we must stand vnto that which was spoken by the Lord. And in so doing, I se not how he sayth of his bodye, ỳ it is included, adioyned, or coniogned corporally vnto the breade, as I made mention before. Wherfore we can not maintaine by the Lordes wordes, that the Lords body is corporally present in the breade, by the vertue of his words. For the Lorde sayd not so. Nor I se not howe that sense can stand with that whiche he spake. For if that the breade be the lords body, according vnto his word, then his body cãnot be corporally & really in it. For so eyther the bread shoulde not be the Lordes bodye, contrary vnto his expresse worde, but should contain the Lordes body in it, otherwise then the Lord spake eyther we shoulde haue a double body of his in the Supper, one which representeth of the breade, saying, This is my body: the other whiche he speaketh not of, but whiche we say is bodily present, either vnder ỳ breade, or with the bread, or in the bread. If I do wel, I can not allow none of these, because I may not go from the very wordes of the Lord, It is not lawful for me to say, that the breade of the Supper is not the Lordes bodye. For in so saying, I should say contrary vnto the Lorde which sayde, This is my body. If I should say that the Lordes bodye is corporally presẽt, either in the bread or vnder the bread, or with ỳ bread, I do not abide in the Lordes word: For this were besides the Lordes word. I can not put two bodies of the Lord in the Supper, because of that which foloweth: Which is giuẽ for you doth restrain that, that wil before, to that one only body whiche was giuen vp for vs vpon ỳ Crosse. I may not think ỳ there is no difference betwirt these two speches: this is my body, & in this is my body. For this imaginatiõ should deceiue me, & bring me out of ỳ right. For it is not al one to say, nor in word nor in sense, saye, In this my bodye is corporally present, and that whiche the Lorde sayde, This is my bodye: as if wée lyke to leaue contention, it doeth appeare by our common sense. For in the Lordes wordes, This is my body, the Subiect is in the Pronoune, This, that is to witte, in the bread, and the Predicate, or reporte of it, is in the wordes whiche foloweth, Is my body: so that it is reported of bread, that it is the Lordes bodye. But in these wordes, In this, or Under this, or Wyth this, is my body, the order of the subiect and the predicate is altered, so that the Subiect is made the Predicate, and the predicate the subiect. For it is there reported not of the bread that it is the Lordes bodye, but of the Lordes bodye that it is in the breade, or vnder the bread, or with the bread. Wherfore by imagning this way I shoulde lose both the right and ỳ sense also of the Lordes worde.

The lordes body is not in the bred by vertue of the wordes.

To change the Lordes vvorde.

Neither can I anoyde it if I shold say: I do not alter the Lordes word, I doe not forsake the plaine texte, but I stedfastly holde mée to that, This is my bodye: yet for all that, why may I not say in talk, or otherwise in treating of this matter, that the Lordes body is presently in the bread, to expresse my faith in that I doe beleue, that the body of the Lord is corporally present in the breade? For in so expressing my fayth, I doe not make a new texte, nor I doe not say, that these my words be ỳ words of the texte: but I do retaine the true and onely text, This is my body. May I not expounde myfayth in what wordes I lik, and saye. The lords body is vnder the bread: This is but a weake deuise. For it is not méete to beleue that of the Lordes body, whiche is not expressed by the Lord, and to set forth the faith by expounding of the Lordes words, being wide of the right, and of hys meanyng. If I doe beléeue the lords wordes, I can not beleue that hys body is corporally present vnder the breade, but that the bread giuen by ỳ Lord, is his bodye: and this fayth of mine I may not expound otherwise, but to say, that the bread of the supper is the Lords body. If the Lorde had sayde, Take, eate, In thys my body is present: or vnder this you haue my body corporally present. I shoulde beleue aright that the Lords bodye is corporally presente in the Supper vnder the breade: and wold expresse my fayth also in the like wordes. But now séeing that he neyther sayd so, nor as it appeareth did meane so, then how may it be, that I do not chãge the text of his words and yet doe deuise my selfe both a faith and an exposition contrary vnto it, and do vphold that it is true & right, according vnto the Lordes worde? Wherfore I would that in any wise we sticke fast to the Lords wordes, in that same meaning and sense that they were spoken by him: and that we neyther beleue nor say, that hys bodye is corporally presente vnder the breade: but that the breade of the Supper gyuen by the Lord, is his body. Truely I had rather say a hundred times, the breade of thankes giuing is the Lords body offered for vs vppon the Crosse to ỳ Father, than that vnwritten worde & contrary vnto the Lords meaning once, ỳ the Lords body is corporallye lye presente vnder the bread. For in the one, the Lords word maketh for me, whiche is the only foundation of true faith, in the other, it doth not so. And in the one there is not so muche daunger as in the other, least ỳ faithfull man may conceyue in himselfe two superstitious imaginations.

The Lords body is not in the bread by vertue of the vvordes.

What then? Is it possible that the bread can be the Lords body, gyuen for vs vpon the crosse, whereas it is impossible that the selfesame bread shoulde bée of hys owne nature and substance the baked bread, and also the Lords body crucified? Hathe not the Papistes for this cause deuised a translation of the bread, whereby it is so chaunged into the Lordes body, that there remayneth nothyng but the figure of the bread, to the intente that it might be truly reported therof, that it is the Lords body? But we do not allowe their deuice, but do reteyne the true and naturall substãce of bread in the supper. Therefore we muste sée, what way the bread is the true body of Christ giuen for vs vpon the crosse, so as it nother léeseth his owne nature and substance, and yet taketh vnto it that whiche is of Christes body, nother that Christes body doth cast off his nature and substance, and take vpon him that of the bread. For this is moste true. The bread which the Lord giueth, is hys body, and yet withall it is bread, as well before, as in the verye communion. The Lords body is in verye déede of man, and reteyneth the nature of a true bodye, and yet for all that, it is héere reported by the Lord himselfe of bread. In my iudgement, he that dothe earnestly beléeue the wordes of Christe, may reasonablye consider with himselfe the way, how both these do stand togither.

I suppose that no man doth saye, that the bread of the Supper is naturally or personally the Lordes body. And Luther himselfe that godlye man, doth playnely denye both. I can not tell whether that any man will say, that it is really. For really, bread is bread, and a bodye is a body. And we can not in one sacramente make two realties (as I may call it,) of one thing. For if the bread be really the Lords body, wheras the body it selfe is in any wise really the Lords body, it shoulde follow, that in this Sacrament two things of sundrye natures one to an other, should be really one thing. Wherefore I can not say, that this bread is really the bodye of the Lorde. What and if I say that it is corporally? That way can not frame nother, for euerye body is the same Corporally, that it is naturally and really. The corporall being of anye thing is in that, that it is accordyng vnto the nature of the body, and to the property of the nature. No body can receyue vnto it the corporall essence of an other thing, but changing hys owne essence. So the bread corporallye is nothing else but bread. It taketh not vnto it the corporall essence of Christes body, whiche is left vnto the bodye it selfe, as long as the nature thereof abideth safe and whole.

V Whether bread be naturally, personally, or really the Lordes bodie.

V Whether corporally.

Wherefore I can not by any probable reason say, that the bread in the supper is the Lordes body naturally, personally, really, and corporally. And yet for all that the truth of the Lords word which saith, Take, eate, this is my body, whiche is giuen for you, compelleth me to graunte, that it is the Lords body. Wherefore we muste seke an other way howe we may say truly and agreeably, that the bread is the Lordes body.

V Whether spiritually.

I perceiue that it remayneth, that we muste say it is eyther in a spirituall sort, or figuratiue, or significatiue, or Sacramentall. The spirituall way dyd not mislyke some of the fathers. And there be some later men which do not mislike it nother, if spiritually be taken for inuisiblye, so that they may gette, that Chrystes body is presente in the bread inuisibly.

In thys sense it were a readye shifte to saye anye thing of matters inuisible. But I do take, Spiritually, to be in a spirituall sorte, that is, in such sort as appertayneth to spirites. Wherefore when we doe saye, that Christe is spiritually presente in the supper, we do not meane of the inuisible presence of his body, whiche the Papists do appoynt vnder the forme of bread, but of that way, that he is present by the working of his spirite, feeding, and refreshing their mindes whiche doe receiue with sincere and true faith, that which he gaue at hys last Supper. Thus I se that one word is diuerslye taken, which can by no meanes serue to make vp agreement. But yet for my part, as I doe not enforce, so I will not let, but that this Aduerbe, Spiritually, maye be allowed in thys case taken in that sense, which dothe agree aryght with the proper signification of the worde, and of the thyng whiche is in hande.

Figuratiuely.

Some of the olde and newe writers also haue sayde, that the bread is typically or figuratiuely the Lords body, whyche opinion they doe vnderstande that doe suppose it to be there corporally. They doe make a greate difference betwixte the figure and the truth, as betwixte the olde and the newe Testament, and they doe in reprowe call them Figuristes, whyche doe lyke this figurall way, as though that they dyd with the Manichees denye the truthe of mans bodye in Christe. But I wyll not contende wyth them vppon thys figural way: sauyng for all that, that sense vpryghte, wherein some of the fathers vsed this worde, and that without blame.

Furthermore, forasmuche as the Lord did not say, This doth signifye my body: but, Thys is my bodye: some are not contented that we shoulde saye, that bread is the Lords bodye significatiuely. Of which matter we haue noted somewhat in our Commentaries vppon Mathewe. And albeit that I doe perceyue that this way is not sufficiente to agree theyr myndes that doe vary herein, nor so necessarie, but that it maye bee otherwise erpounded, yet I cannot allowe that thys word, Signe, in this place, which the Fathers vsed, is so condemned of some of our brethren, as if it were wicked and vngodly. Augustine sayde, and it is in the decrees of the Popes, that the Lord doubted not to say, This is my body, when he gaue the Signe of hys bodye. And the Churche dothe vse in Latine, There is no cutting of the thyng, onely the breaking of the signe, whereby neyther state nor stature is decayed, of that whyche by the signe to vs is layde. They doe giue thys definition of a Sacramente, that it is the signe of a of a holye thyng. But wee meane not to contende muche in this point neyther.

Spiritually

Lastly, Seing that the breade is not the Lordes body, neyther naturally, nor personally, nor really, nor corporallye, nor some men will not haue it spiritually, nor figuratiuely, nor significatiuely: and yet for all that, as Augustine sayth: The Sacramente of the Lordes body is not absolutely, but after a certaine sorte the Lordes bodye, yet remayneth after all this, that we muste saye that the bread of the Supper is the Lordes bodye Sacramentally. And that may be sayd agreeably of al men. It helpeth wel, that it is nother strange nor newe, that this breade is called the Sacrament of the Lordes body. For it is moste vsuall in the Churches: and I thynke that there is no wyse man that will denye it.

Luther, whereas he disputeth of the vnion of thys bread and the Lordes bodye, after that he had rehearsed a sorte of wayes, he endeth at the last in thys, that he determineth it to be Sacramentall. Ergo if the bread be the Sacramente of Chrystes body, it remaineth that the same is a Sacramentall speache, and to be erpounded Sacramentally, which is spoken by the Lorde of this bread, Take, eate, This is my bodye. In this sense there remaineth safe and sounde vnto bothe, the bodye and the bread their owne nature, so that we nede neither to denise the miracle of transubstantiation, nor to flee to the argumente of Gods omnipotencie: nor there is nothing lefte that is discrepant with the holy Scriptures, if that we do holde the righte vnderstanding of the sacraments, agreeyng with the definitiõ of them, and runne not from it in argumente more lyke Sophisters, than Diuines. Neyther can there be a more conuenient exposition, than when the Sacramentall wordes be Sacramentally erpounded, the proper, properly, the spirituall, spiritually, and the mysticall, mystically. Or if you will (for I perceyue that some doe sticke in thys poynte,) lette the Sacramental matter it selfe (though it be lette for the in wordes, that hathe their proper signification) bee erpounded in such order, as is mete for Sacramentes.

That there is no word herein spoken, but in the proper sense.

They holde, that there is no word here, but spoken in hys proper sense. For they saye, that Thys, is referred to very bread, and Body, to the true bodye of Chryste: and that the worde, Is, dothe signifye nothyng else, but as it soundeth, and therefore that there nedeth here no Sacramentall exposition, but the proper and true meanyng. But thys shyfting in my opinion is more than nedeth. I doe not take the worde, Body, in anye mysticall or syguratiue sense, nor of anye other thyng thã of the true body of Christ: but I doe searche the way how it is spoken of bread, not ymaginarily, but true, and I doe fynde it to bee Sacramentall, as oure brethren also doe determine, whyche in thys poynte woulde shyfte the matter, and denye that the Sacramente is to bee erpounded Sacramentally. For the Sacramentall wordes, requyre none other meaning or interpretation, than euen as they be spoken: but the manner of the thyng whyche is declared and vttered in them, is not proper, but Sacramentall, for the which I do say, that Sacraments are Sacramentally to bee expounded. As for example, Circumcision is the couenãt, and the Lambe is the Passouer. I take no word here otherwise than in the proper sense. Circumcision as it soundeth, is the very carnall cutting of the foreskin, and the couenant is nothing else, but the same which God made with that people. And the Lambe was but a naturall lambe, which they killed at the Lords commaundement: and the Passouer was spoke of no other, but of the Angell which stroke the Egiptians. And yet for all that, the manner of speech whereby the circumcision is called the Lords couenant, and the Lambe the Passouer, is not proper and naturall, but sacramentall. For it can not be said, that circumcision properly and naturally is the couenaunte, and the Lambe the Passouer: but as that was the signe sacramentall of the couenant, so was thys also of ỳ passage of deliuery. In like maner in this present case, Whereas the Lord saith, This is my body, it is a sacramentall speech, because of the sacramental maner of the predicate, or of that which is reported, for that it is reported of bread not properly, but sacramentally, that it is ỳ Lords body giuen for vs. I do leaue to other word his proper significatiõ, that the bread be very bread, the body ỳ very body of the Lord, and that Is, bee Is: but I can not make the manner of the predicate or reporte to be proper (vnlesse I should make an vntolerable confusion, and very vnreasonable in this matter,) but Sacramẽtall, and couenient to a Sacramẽt.

Therefore, let vs agree in iudgement, that the bread of the Supper is the verie body of Christ, crucifyed and deade for vs, as he sayde: Take eate, this is my body which is deliuered for you: and so let vs kẽpe these words euery one in their proper signification, and when the manner is asked, howe bread is the Lordes bodye, let vs say, that it is a report or speache, not naturall, but sacramental, so that the bread is the Lords bodie, neyther naturally, nor corporally, nor personally, nor really, but sacramentally.

Then let vs determine in a sound and concorde sense, what it is for the bread to be the Lordes bodie Sacramentallye. And I suppose that the man that is not contentious, must iudge of this matter, that he will say that to be sacramentally, is to be according vnto the nature and meanes of a sacrament. As the breade in as muche as it is the Sacrament of the Lordes body, in that respect it is the Lordes bodye giuen for vs, in suche order and waye as is conuenient to sacraments, lyke as by the order and way of his owne nature it is bread. And it is therfore called the Sacrament of the Lordes bodye, because that by his ordinance, it is the holye signe and remembrance of hys bodye gyuen for vs. By the breaking and distribution of whiche, he dothe recommende the communion of his bodie and remembrance of his death vnto his Churche. And that a sacrament is a signe of a holy thing. I declared before, where I spake of Sacraments generally: Whiche definition nother the fathers dyd refuse, nor anye of the latter men is able to disproue. According vnto this definition, the bread of the Supper is the sacramentall signe of the Lords body, and is so called the Lords bodye, because that Sacramentes doe take the names of those things of whyche they be Sacraments. Wherfore we do say, that it is the body of ỳ Lorde, not that it is transubstantiated into the Lords body, or that it dothe conteyne the Lordes body presently and corporally in it, or vnder it: but because and in respect that it is the Sacramente of the Lordes body whiche was giuen for oure sinnes vpon the Crosse.

Whe facramentally.

Some man will say here: But in this sorte we may haue the Supper without the presence of ỳ Lords bodye and bloud. I answere: When we be gathered togither in the name of the Lord, and do deuoutely accomplish that whiche was instituted and deliuered by him for the remembrãce of his death, and for the communion of his bodye and bloud, yea and haue bin presente in the middes of vs, according vnto that whiche hee sayde, (Wheresoeuer be two or three gathered togither in my name, there am I in the middes of them,) and do communicate of his body and bloud, as well spiritually in faithe, as Sacramentally in the sacrament, howe haue we the Lords supper withoute the Lorde and without the body and bloud of the Lord? Is there not a nother manner of partaking of the bodye and bloud of the Lorde, than that corporall is, whiche consisteth in the corporall presence of them in bread and wine? Doe we seke Gods presence? That is promised vs by the Lords owne mouth, as we haue said. Doe we seke the corporall presence of his body and bloud in the bread and wine? Of this we haue not as much as one iote in the whole institution of the Lordes Supper: nor I see not how it may be certainely proued of the Lords words, and yet we doe not lacke the body and bloud of our Lord in the supper, in whych according vnto the Lordes institution, we haue their Sacraments. Neither is it mete that we haue them any other wayes, than as they be giuen vs from the Lord himselfe. So he gaue them, and so we haue them. And because he gaue them verely, it is ours verily that he gaue. We doe not sequester the truth from the Lordes tradition, God forbidde: but we doe kepe the way and manner in whych he deliuered vs hys body and bloud. If the Lord had giuen me all heauen for a halfepeny, I myghte boast me that heauen were no lesse mine, than if I had it fast in my owne handes. The truth of the Sacrament deliuered by Christe, is not in the corporall presence of his body in the bread, but in the truth of the worde, and in the efficacie of his inuisible grace.

Of the clarified body of Christ & the personall vnitie.

Our brethren doe alleage arguments to proue the corporal presence of Christes body in the bread, by the subtiltie or finenes of Christes clarifyed body, whereby he did at his resurrection passe thorough the stone that was layd vppon the graue, and afterwardes wente in vnto his Disciples thorough the doores when they were shutte. Item, by that personall vnitie whereby his body is conioyned to the godhead of the worde, and of the omnipotencie and right hande of God, whereby he may be, yea and is spredde abroade in euerye place: yea and they will haue vs not to followe the iudgement of reason in this case, but to goe on as it were by moste grosse darkenesse, and to grounde vs vpon the only worde with moste assured faithe, for that it can not be knowen, how the Lordes bodye is presente togyther in Heauen and in Earth, and that in many places, yea and in euerye place. But the verye matter whereof they doe dispute, is not of that sorte, that it muste be so argued. For if we be assured of the sense of Christes word, no Christian man will seeke further how it maye be true.

Wee haue no other worde but Christes worde, as where hee saide: Take, eate, This is my body, whych is giuen for you. And we doubt not, but that this is true. Yet for all that, we doe seeke for the sense of it. If it were as much to saye, as In thys is my body, we wold not seeke the maner of it, but permit it to the power of Christ. For to what purpose is it to dispute of the clarifyed bodye of Christe, seeyng that this bread was his bodye at the last Supper, before that he arose agayne and went vp to Heauen, and sate at the right hande of the father, and seeing that it is not meete that it shoulde otherwise bee now, than it was at that time. Loke in what sense the Lorde saide at that Supper of his body, whiche was yet mortal, This is my body, euen in the very same sense we muste beleeue at this day, that the bread is his bodye, without that miraculous abilitie of the clarifyed body.

And as touching that that they do attribute vnto Christ such a body after his resurrection, as is spredde abroade euery where, I hadde rather hold my peace than say much. It pitieth me to see the Church of Christe so sundrye wayes and sore assaulted, more in these latter times than euer. What the fathers iudgemente was of this poynt, their writings do testifie. Of whiche Augustine writeth in this wise: Doubt not therefore but that the man Christe Jesus is there from whence he shall come, and consider in thy minde, and firmely holde the Christian confession, that hee is risen from the dead, went vp to heauen, sitteth at the righte hande of the Father, and shall come from no other place but from thence, to iudge the quicke and the dead. And the voice of the Angell doth testifie, that he shall come so, as he was seene going into Heauen, that is to say, in the same fashion, and substance of flesshe, whereunto no doubt he hath ioyned immortalitie, and yet not bereft it of his nature. According vnto thys forme or fashion, we may not thynke him to be spred abroode euery where. For we muste beware that we do not so affirme the godhead of the man, that we bereaue him of the veritie of his bodye. And it followeth not, that any thing that is in God, be so euery where as God is euery where. For the scripture is moste true which saith of vs, that we doe liue, are moued, and be in him: and yet we be not euery where as he is. But that man is otherwise in God, forasmuche as God is otherwise in that man, after a certaine proper and singular sorte. For one person is God and man, and both be one Christ Jesus, forasmuch as he

Of the quicke Christes bodie.

as he is God, in euery place: and in heauen, forasmuche as hee is man. And in the conclusion of the Epistle: Doubt not (saith he,) but that oure Lord Christ the only begotten sonne of God, equall to the father, and the selfesame is the sonne of Mā, whereby the father is greater than hee, is both euery where presente as God, and is in the selfesame temple inhabiting as God, and is in some certaine place of Heauen for the forme of his true body. And in an other place. He spake (saith he) of the presence of his body, for according vnto his Maiestie, according vnto hys vnspeakeable and inuisible grace, that is fulfilled which is said of him: Loe, I am with you vnto the ende of the world. But according to the flesshe, which the word toke vpon it, according to that, that he was borne of a virgine: according vnto that, that he was caughte of the Iewes, that hee was nayled to the tree, that he was taken downe from the crosse, that hee was wrapped in sheetes, that he was layde in a graue, that he was declared by his resurrection, you shall not alwayes haue me with you. Why? For hee kepte companye with hys Disciples the space of forty dayes, according to the presence of his body, and in the conueyance of theyr owne saying, but not of their following, he went vp to Heauen, and is not heere. For there hee sytteth at the righte hande of the Father. And heere he is. For hee departed not away touchyng the presence of his Maiestie, else according to the presence of hys Maiestie we haue Christ alwayes: according to the presence of the flesshe, it was sayde aryghte to the Disciples, But you shall not alwayes haue me. For the Church hadde him after the presence of the flesh for a few dayes, but now it holdeth him by faith, and seeth him not with eyes. This sayeth he. Howe some of these things be expounded by some of our brethren, I am not ignorante. But seeyng that they do leaue that which is moste manifest, vntouched, as that he sayeth, that it followeth not, that the same whiche is God, be euery where so as God: and that Christe, according as he is man, is in some place of Heauē, bycause of the forme of the true bodye, and that he is not spredde abroode euery where, they do sufficiently declare, that they do otherwise iudge of Christes body, than the fathers did in the Christian Faithe and simplicitie.

See Cyrill vpon Iohn Lib. 5. c. 14. & li. 9. c. 21.

Wherefore I beseeche them for Christes sake, that they handle this matter more moderately and circumspectly in their writing and teaching, least if they continue in theyr conueyance of thys contention to our posteritie, they leaue withall the seedes of moste sore dissentions, and daungerous Doctrines to the Churche after them. Briefely, all this contention dependeth vppn the ryghte sense of Christes words: This is my body, if that be once well vnderstanded, all thase arguments are nothing to the purpose at all, whereby they doe contende that Christes bodye may be in many places at once, yea euerye where, to the entente they maye prowe it to bee corporallye vnder the breade. For seeing that it is not so said by the Lorde, there is no cause why a Christian manne should dispute therevpon.

The Lord saith: Take, eate, thys is my body, whiche is giuen for you. We do credite these wordes, and doe iudge and saye, that the bread of the Supper is the Lordes body, not that it hathe it corporally included in it, but that the Lorde woulde haue it to be the Sacrament of his body. It is a very miserable matter, if a Christian man do not understand howe the bread of the Supper is the Lordes body, seeing that the Iewe is not ignoran, howe circumcision is the couenaunt, and the Lambe the Passouer. Truly they do too muche shut vp the eyes of their minde, which do so darken this case sette forthe by Christe with so greate simplicitie, thorough their scrupulousnesse, that it can not be understanded, and withall they saye, that it is not needefull that wee should understand, how that it is true which Christ saith. The ignorannce of the Sacramentall way, hath filled Christes Churches, with horrible superstitions, with blinde and fonde argumentes, and most sharpe strife and contentions, for which we maye thanke partly oure owne sinnes, and partly the scrupulositie of some learned men. I beseech the Lord, that we may shake off all scrupulositie, and ý he will restore vnto vs that Christian simplicitie, whereby we maye participate all in one mind of his bodye and bloud, not in the Sacrament only, but in the very truth also. But let vs returne to the text of Christes wordes.

This is my body (saith he,) which is giuen for you, for as the Apostle hath, Broken. This as I said before, is the other predicate, which ý Lorde referreth not of the bread, but of hys body, that it should be giuen or broken for his Disciples. Yet there bee some which doe refer this predicate, not to the body of Christe, but to the bread already broken, and giuen to the Disciples, as though he shoulde saye, Take, eate. This bread is my body, whiche is giuen, or broken, for you. But by their leaue, I thinke there was no reason, why God shuld haue said of the bread, that it shoulde be giuen for them. For if we shall understand it of the distributiō therof, in that there was giuen to euerye one of the Disciples his portion, to, what purpose had it bin to informe them by hys wordes of a matter so manifest? Whiche of them knew not that they had bread giuen them? But if we do understand it of that which was to be accomplished the next day after vppon the Crosse, the sense can not stand wherein it is said of bread, that it is giuen for the Disciples vpon the Crosse. But such a predicate doth agree only with the body which was giuen for vs to deathe. And besides that, the very wordes themselues doe declare, that the Lorde speaketh not of bread, but of his body, in that he saith not, whiche is giuen to you, but whiche is giuen for you. Like as in that whiche is before, we doe not reade, that he gaue the bread which he brake for his Disciples, but onely that he brake it, and gaue it to hys Disciples: so if he had in this place spoken of the bread, he woulde not haue said, Whiche is giuen for you, but simplye, Whiche is giuen vnto you. It is an other maner of matter to be giuen to the Disciples, and to be giuen for the disciples. The bread was giuen to the Disciples, as a sacrament crament of the Lordes body: but the very body it selfe should be giuen vpon the Crosse, not to the Disciples, but to God the father vnto deathe, for the Disciples.

V Whiche is giuen for you.

And this was the very poynt whiche he wouloe haue knowen to hys Disciples, and wherein the substāce, as it were of this Sacrament, should consist. For our whole saluation doth stand in this poynte, that the body of the onely begotten sonne is giuen for vs to God the Father vnto deathe, to be an offering of propiciatiō or mercye, and the raunsome of our redemption. And this the Apostle doth sundry tymes reporte of Christ, saying: Whyche gaue hymselfe for oure synnes. Agayne, Who gaue hymselfe for me. Also, He gaue hymselfe for it: that is, for the Churche. Item, He gaue himselfe to bee an offeryng for vs. And, Whyche gaue hymselfe to be the raunsome of redemption for all. Item, Whiche gaue himselfe for vs. And no man nede to obiecte, that he sayd not, Which I will giue for you, but Which is giuen for you. For firste he gaue the bread whiche he brake, to hys Disciples, and yet he sayeth not, Whiche I will gyue, but Whiche is giuen for you. If they can neuertheless expounde this of the breade whyche he gaue, howe can they not expounde it of the body whyche hee shoulde gyue also for hys Disciples vnto deathe? Besydes that, not he only should giue his body for vs, but his father also should giue it. As the Apostle sayeth: Who spared not also his owne sonne, but gaue hym for vs all: so that hee may also therefore saye aryghte: Whyche is giuen for you. The father gaue hys sonne for vs vnto deathe, the Sonn gaue hymselfe for vs, obeying hys father, for an oblation of redemption and attonemente. Wherefore in both respectes he sayd aright: Which is giuen for you.

Therefore we do in these wordes of the Lorde, make a difference betwixte the Sacrament of the Lords bodye it selfe. He brake and gaue to hys Disciples the bread, whiche hee calleth hys bodye, bycause he woulde haue it to bee the Sacramente of hys bodye: but he brake not hys bodye at the Supper, nor he gaue it not at Supper for hys Disciples: but hee gaue it for them vpon the crosse. Hee woulde haue the bread whiche hee brake to be the Sacrament thereof, and gaue it to, and not for, his Disciples. Both can not be sayde of it, but we must attribute vnto breade that which is conuenient to a sacramente, and the grace it selfe to the Lordes bodye, whose sacramente hee would to be in the breade, that is to witte, the yeelding of it, when it was giuen for vs to death. I doe muche marueil howe it maye be, that in so playne a case, the true meaning of the Lordes wordes shoulde be obscured by straunge expositions. Is it possible for vs not to knowe what is giuen to the Disciples, and what for the Disciples? The matter it selfe is manifest, and the wordes doe agree fayre and well. To the Disciples was gyuen the Sacramente of the body, and for the Disciples, the body it selfe.

But you wyll say: Seeing that hee sayde of the breade whyche hee gaue to hys Disciples, Take, eate, This is my body, dothe it not follow that he gaue his body not onely to God the father for the Disciples, but vnto the Disciples also: Yea certainly it followeth so. And this was his intent in the institution of this Sacrament, to assure vs by that Sacramentall giuyng, that hys bodye is ours, his bloud ours, whyche hée would giue for vs to that intent, that wée myght bé redéemed. And this is the Communion of the Lordes body and bloud, the Sacrament wherof is the bread and the cuppe, wherby wée bé partakers of all those thinges whiche hée purchased vnto mankinde, by the giuyng of hys bodye and bloud.

He gaue his bodie also to his disciples.

And it is no matter that he speaketh in the presente tyme: Whyche is giuen for you. The very giuyng of him was at hand, and was done a greate parte of it by Judas and the Priestes: Wherupon he sayde vnto Judas, not that whiche thou wilt doe, but in the presente tense, That which thou doest, doe quickely: wherfore he spake in this sorte, to giue warning thereof to his disciples.

But marke that he saith not: This is my body whych shall rise againe, goe vp into heauen, sitte at the right hande of the father in Heauen: but whiche is giuen or broken for you, not onely giuen, but giuen for you. So, that he doth beate into hys disciples heades, his death, whyche hée shoulde take for vs, and doeth sette it forth to bée remembred in thys Sacrament: wherefore he saith to hys Apostles also: As often as you do eate of thys breade and drinke of this cup, you shall declare the Lordes death vntil that hée come. Wherefore what doe our brethren which do set forth vnto vs in the Supper the bodie clarifyed, deifyed, sitting at the right hande of the Father, percyng all things, and present in all places, & withall doe enforce vpon vs these wordes, This is my body: There is set forth vnto vs in the Lordes Supper, the Sacrament of his body gyuen to death for oure sinnes, and of his bloud shedde vpon the Crosse for vs, not clarified and deifyed. Christs bodye (saye they) sitteth at the right hande of the Father. The Fathers righte hande is euery where, Ergo Christes body is euery where, Lette them say rather in this sort. Christe sitteth at the right hande of the Father, and that pearceth all thinges: Ergo Christ also pierceth all thyngs. And in so saying, no Christian man will contrary them. But when wée doe speake of the Lordes Supper, & that we must exponde those his wordes, to what purpose is it to dispute of his Ascension, and syttyng at the right hād of the father, seing ỳ there is set forth vnto vs in thé the sacrament of Christes bodye not yet glorified, but giuen to death for vs, and crucified. But let them weigh with vs this poynt, wherin the Lords bodie is sette forth, giuen for vs as the raunsome of our redemption. Wée wer guiltie of euerlasting death, and the children of wrath bycause of sin, wée coulde not bée delyuered but by him, whiche was pure from all sin, and the immaculate Lamb. He therfore gaue hymself for vs. And forasmuche as hée gaue hymselfe not in vayne, but to good effecte, it foloweth that we be made frée from sinne and death. For he gaue his body, and did shedde shead his bloud for vs, to this intent that we should be deliuered from all guilt, blame, and punishment, and be reconciled vnto God the Father.

He saith not This is my bodye vvhich shall rise againe.

The Sacrament of this grace, is set forth vnto vs in the Lordes supper, wherunto the verie wordes do leade vs: This is my body, which is giuen for you: and This cuppe is the new Testament in my bloude, whiche is shed for you. Therfore to what purpose is it to refer that which he sayeth here: Which is giuen or broken for you, not to the lords body, but vnto the bread, and to make light of the very substance and pythe of this sacrāmente, whiche is sette forthe by these wordes.

As touching the worde of breaking whiche is in Paule, the Lorde vsed it to apply himselfe to the sacramentall breaking of bread. For like as the breade when it is broken, is broken for them among whome it is distributed to eate, forasmuche as vnlesse it were broken, it coulde neither be distributed nor eaten: so the Lordes body, the liuely bread, sente from heauen to be our meate, was broken, that is to saye, slaine for vs vppon the Crosse. For it must not seme any newe matter that hée calleth the killing of hym, the breaking: whereas it is written: You shall not breake a bone of hym, séeyng that hée doeth attribute destruction vnto it, saying: Destroye thys Temple, whiche the Euangelistes do signifie to bée spoken of the Temple of hys bodye. Therefore the Lordes bodye is in thys respecte broken for vs vpō the Crosse, in that that it is dead for vs thereuppon. But the breaking of the breade in the Supper, can not be attributed vnto it, as they do confesse in theyr song. There is not cutting of the thing, it is alone the breaking of the fygne, whereby neither state nor stature is decayed, of the thing signified. They say ỳ the word of Breaking, hath the sense of parting & distributing, as often as it is vsed in bread or other meat, and that therefore it can not be applied to the lords body. It is true in that ỳ we do read, he toke bred, gaue thāks, brake it, and gaue it to his Disciples. This perteineth to the bread, & doth teache vs of the sacramentall breaking, partition and distributiō therof. In like sort Paul saith: The bread which we break &c. But in this particle, Which, is broken for you, the worde of Breaking is not take in ỳ sacramētall sense of breaking, partition and distribution: for it is spoken not of of bread, but of ỳ lords body. Wherunto such breaking as mē do breake bread doth not agrée. For it is not so broken that it maye bé deuyded into partes, but that as destroyed by Deathe, it myghte be the meate of saluation vnto vs, if it be taken with true fayth. 1.Cor.10.

I doe perceyue that these words, Which is giuen for you: Itē, Whiche is broken for you, bée verye vnconstantlye applied by some of oure brethren in contention, not to the bodye of Christe, giuen and broken for vs vpon the Crosse, but to the bread, the Sacramente of that, by the distribution whereof, the Lordes body is giuen and broken at the Supper, wheras when they do not so conferred, they do apply thē vnto the worke of our redemptiō, wherby the Lords bodye was gyuen and broken for vs VVhich is giuen and broken for you.

vs vppon the Crosse. Agayne, there bee some of them, whyche doe take the wordes of Paule, Whiche is broken for you, in an other sense thā the wordes of Luke, Whyche, is gyuen for you. They doe applye the relatiue Whyche in Luke, vnto the very body of the Lorde giuen for vs vpon the Crosse, and in Paule to the breade of the Supper: as thongh it were credible, that Paule did say one thing, and Luke an other in the selfesame matter, yea that Christe spake in sundry senses. If in Luke he spake it of his body Whyche is gyuen for you, howe maye we beléeue that in Paule hée saide it of the bread, Whiche is broken for you: both myght be said by him Whiche is giuen for you, and broken, but not in sundrye respects, but of one, that is to witte of his body, which shoulde be giuen and broken for vs vpon the Crosse.

It is not so easie a matter my brethren to be assuredly ware, that wée do not our selues the same, which we doe blame in others, You doe gather the argument of the erroure vppon that, that sundry menne doe sundrye wise expounde the selfesame wordes of Christe. This is my bodye: and yet withall you do not marke howe your poure selues do diuersly and vnconstantly expounde in sundry senses these wordes of Christe, Whyche is gyuen and broken for vs. O howe easie a matter it were to agrée oure sayings, if the defyre of contentions coulde bée leste, and everye manne consyder, not so muche what others, but what he himselfe dothe amisse.

Of the cup he said thus, after that they hadde dranke: This cuppe is the new Testament in my bloud. Luke doth adde, Which is shedde for you. Mathewe, And for manye to the forgyuenesse of Synnes. For that that Paule and Luke hathe, This cuppe is the newe Testamente in my bloudde: Mathewe and Marke doe write that the Lorde sayde, Thys is my bloud of the new Testamente. Thys is the other parte of thys Sacramente, which he doth expound also. And the exposition of it hathe as manye partes as the first: that is to witte, two Subiectes and two Predicates.

The fyrste subiecte is in the pronowne, This, which is vsed of Mathewe and Marke, and that it is to be referred vnto the Cup, Luke and Paule doe sufficiently declare when they doe recyte the Lords wordes in this wise: This Cuppe is the newe Testament, &c. Thus the holye Spirite meant to prouide, that it shoulde not be referred vnto the verye bloud of the Lorde, as some do for all that, and therefore doe like more to reade Mathew and Marke, than Luke and Paule. And they be so vnadui sed, that whereas they wyll haue, the pronowne, This, in the firste part to bée referred vnto the bread, and that arighte, they doe not perceyue that in this parte likewise it is not to be referred vnto the bloud, but vnto the cup. Truly the Lord doth say of thys subiecte, Cup, that it is his bloud, after Mathewe and Marke: but after Luke and Paule, that it is the newe Testament in his bloud. The other subiecte is in Christes bloudde, of which he reporteth and sayth: Which is shead for you and many, to the forgiuenesse of sinnes.

And we may not iudge otherwyse of the first Predicate when it is said of the cuppe, that it is the bloude or newe Testament in the bloude of Christe, than wée do of that when it is saide of bread, that it is the body of Christe. Like as he saith there, not by naturall, but sacramentall speache, that it is his bodye: so hée doth say here also of the cuppe, that it is his bloud not naturally but Sacramentally. And lyke as there wée said, that this is my body, is al one to saye, as this is the Sacramente of my bodie: so also whereas he sayeth hére: Thys is my bloud, or Thys cuppe is the newe Testamente in my bloude, wée saye it is all one to saye, This cuppe is the Sacrament of my bloude, or thys Cuppe is the Sacramente of the newe Testamente in my bloude. Thys Cuppe naturally is a Cuppe of Wine, but Sacramentally it is the Cuppe of the Lordes bloudde and newe Testamente. And thys latter vertue it receyued not of mans will, but of the Lordes institution, bycause the Lorde meante to recommende hys bloude in this Cuppe to hys Disciples and to the faythfull, he called it hys bloude, not that hys bloud is really in it, but that it shoulde be the Sacramente of hys bloud. By thys kynde of speache we be gyuen to vnderstande, with what faithe, what respect, and what affection we ought to vse the Sacramentall signes in the Lordes Supper, where as he calleth thys bread his bodye giuen for vs, and the Cuppe of Wyne, hys bloud shedde for vs. That whyche is seene (sayeth Augustine) is the bread and the Cuppe, whiche our eyes doe also tell vs. But that whiche oure faithe requireth to be instructed of the bread is the Lords body, and the Cuppe his bloudde. That whiche both be, is of nature visible and subiecte vnto the testimonie of the eyes, whiche doe witnesse it to be breade and Wyne: but as for that whiche they be not of nature but by the institution of the Lorde, that is not visible, and it requireth the testimonie not of oure eyes, but of the Lordes worde, that whiche he wouldde haue them to be vnto vs not naturally of themselfe, but Sacramentally: that is to saye, his body and bloudde that whiche we receyue by fayth, and deuoutely embrace, crediting ỳ Lords worde. The faithfull man dothe not loke for the corporall presence of the Lords body and bloud in the breade and cuppe, whiche he knoweth is not promised vnto hym by any worde of the Lords, but yet for all that, for asmuch as he doth beléeue that ỳ bread and cuppe of the Lords supper is the Sacrament of the Lordes bodyeand bloud, he cõsidereth in them not what they be of nature, but what ỳ Lords institution doth recommend in them vnto vs, that is to witte, the Lordes body and bloud.

In this respect Cyprian sayd: We doe cleaue vnto the Crosse, and suck of the bloud, and fasten our tongue betwixte the verye woundes of the Redéemer: and he sayeth, that they whiche doe participate of the Lords Cuppe, doe sauour of the bloude of Christe by the taste of the Wyne. Who is so madde to thynk that these wordes be spoken properly, and not rather sacramentally? Howe fonde a matter were it for a man to saye, that hée dothe cleaue reallie vnto Chriſtes Croſſe, to ſucke the bloud, and to faſten his tong betwixte the woundes of Chriſt: And it is euen as fonde a poynt to holde that the bloud of Chryſte whyche was once really ſhedde vpon the Croſſe, is really in the Cuppe. But if a man will ſaye this in the ſacramentall ſenſe, as the thinges themſelues be ſpoken of the Sacramentall ſignes, whoſe Sacramentes they be, there is no inconuenience in it.

Cyprian, vvee doe cleaue to the Crosse, and sucke the bloud.

To fauour Chriſtes bloude, by taſte of VVine.

In this ſenſe, by the taſte of the Wyne, we doe ſauoure the bloud of Chriſt. Why? Bycauſe thys Wine was giuen vnto vs by Chriſt, not as wine, but as the Sacramente of his bloud. And yet it kéepeth the taſte whiche it hath of nature, the ſauour wherof to the faythe of a Chriſtian man, is rather of Chriſtes bloud thã than of Wine. Acknowledge in the taſte of wine the naturall condition thereof, & in the ſauour of Chriſtes bloude, the inſtitution of the Lords Sacrament. The Chriſtian faithe dothe take that the naturall taſte of the Sacramentall Wyne dothe ſauoure of Chriſtes bloude, by the reaſon of the Sacrament, and not of the corporall preſence.

It is the Teſtament, howe it is ſaide of Paule.

This cuppe (ſaith he) is the newe Teſtament. In Luke and Paule it is ſaide of the cup, that it is the newe Teſtament. It is ment that it is the Sacrament of the newe Teſtament, in reſpecte of the olde Paſſouer Sacramente, whereof hé did make an ende, then at the laſte ſupper, and did ſubordinate this newe one vnto it.

VVhat is a Teſtament.

For being ready to dye, hé erected the newe Teſtament. And what a Teſtament is, it is ſo well knowen, that it needeth no declaration: the laſt wil of one that is redy to dye, wherby he doeth diſpoſe hys goodes, and giueth them frankly to whome hé lyſte.

The conditions required by a Teſtamente iuſtified.

1 And it is firſt requiſite to make the Teſtament allowable, that the teſtator haue frée power ſo to doe, ſo that hée muſte be frée and his owne man as wée ſaye. If a manſeruant or woman that is bounde, or ſonne or Daughter that is in the houſe, or vnder the iuriſdiction of the goomã of the familie, woulde make a Teſtament, it were not allowable. Howe is it then that Chryſte the ſonne of God, being in the houſe of his father made a Teſtament when he ſhoulde dye? I aunſwere. The father gaue him all things into his handes, and made hym heyre and Lorde of all things, both in heauen and in earth. So that he had frée power to make a will. Againe, the Father woulde haue him ſo to make his wil, and to that entent ſente him into the worlde to confirme this newe Teſtamente by his death, which he had promiſed: Hieremie in the [illegible]. chapiter, wherof ſée alſo to the Hebrues in the eight Chapiter.

2 Secondely, it is requiſite that thoſe things which be bequeathed in the Teſtamente, be no other folkes goods but his owne. For no mã can make a will of that whiche is another mans. So that in this poynte there lacketh nothyng in Chriſtes Teſtament, ſeing that he is the only begotten of God, and heire of all.

3 Thirdly, the wil muſt be ſo made that there be no wrong done to the naturall children, and brethern, if there be any: For they be heyres by the

Heb. 9.

the priuiledge of Nature. And it ſhould be a wrong to pull the inheritaunce from them, and to tourne it vnto ſtraungers, vnleſſe it be vpon iuſte cauſes. If the Aungels of heauen hadde bene of nature allyed vnto Chryſte, truely the inheritaunce ſhoulde haue pertayned vnto them. But they be not ſo. Nor the onely begotten of God hath any ſuche alyance, whiche maye by priuiledge of nature bée his heyres, but onely by adoption. So that he myght alſo by this reaſon make his bequeſt to whõ he woulde.

4 Fourthly, that cannot be bequeathed by Teſtament, which is due of deſert. For a deſert drawyth vnto a dette, and a dette excludeth grace or fauor, whiche the frée god will of a Teſtament doth require. Wherfore whatſoeuer procéedeth of deſerte, is not of grace. Therfore thoſe things which the only begotten of God doth giue by this his Teſtament, muſt be ſuche, that no man maye boaſte or crake vppon anye deſerte or dette of them.

5 The order of a teſtament doth requyre, that there be ſome appointed to be the executors of the will. Theſe he made his Apoſtles to whome hée committed that charge, that they ſhold ſeruiſeably diſpoſe the grace of this Teſtament by preaching: And therevppon the Apoſtle ſaide: Lette men eſtéme vs as the miniſters of God, and the diſpoſers of Gods miſteries.

6 Laſtly, it is requiſite to the ratifying of a teſtament, that there paſſe the death of the teſtator. For whiles hé is aliue, the teſtament is not yet confirmed. Whereof wée doe reade to the Hebrews, in this wiſe: Whereſoeuer there is a teſtament, there muſt nédes paſſe the death of the teſtatour. For a teſtament is confirmed in the dead. Otherwiſe it is not yet good whiles he liueth, that hathe made the teſtament. But thys teſtatour the onely begotten of God is dead, and hath confirmed the Teſtament that he made by his bloud. And whereas hé is aliue agayne, it auaileth not to make the ſame voyde whiche he confirmed by hys deathe, but rather to bring it vnto hys ende and perfection. For he aroſe agayne for oure iuſtification. So that this newe Teſtament is in all poyntes lawfull, allowable, ſtrong, and perfecte.

In my bloud howe the newe Teſtament is in Chriſtes bloude.

This cuppe (ſaith he) is the newe Teſtament in my bloude. Mathew and Marke ſaith thys: This is my bloud, whiche is of the newe Teſtament. The olde teſtament conſiſted in beaſtes bloud, the figural and ſhadowing bloud: whoſe truthe was to be accompliſhed in Chriſtes bloud: but the new Teſtamẽt ſtandeth not in the bloud of beaſtes, but of Chriſt the true immaculate lambe. And to declare that he ſayde, This cuppe is the newe Teſtamente in my bloud: or, It is my bloud, whiche is of the new teſtament. The ſelf ſame thing is expreſſed by dyuers and ſundrye wordes: that Chriſtes bloud is the cõfirmation of the new Teſtament. Therfore it is called the bloud of the the newe Teſtament, & the new Teſtamente is ſayde to be in his bloud: Wée néede not to toſſe theſe wordes. Let vs auoid ſcrupuloſitie, and ſtand to the truthe. Thys Teſtamente is is confyrmed by Chryſtes bloudde, shedde vpon the crosse. Wherefore it is all one to saye, it is eyther the Testamente in hys bloud, eyther the bloud in the Testamente, or of the Testamente. If a man saye, the Testamente is in death, or deathe is in the Testament, what else is meante, but that the Testamente is confirmed by the deathe of the testatoure? But by the shedding of bloud there is signified a bloudie death.

VVherevnto this particle is applyed, VVhiche shall bee shedde for you.

Whiche is shedde (sayeth he) for you, and manye, for the remission of sinnes. Lyke as he sayd of his body, Whiche is giuen for you: so he speaketh more playnly here of his bloud, saying: Which shall be shed for you and for manye, to the remission of sinnes. Here some do argue vpō that that it is not redde in Luke. Whych is shedde for you, to be spoken of the bloud whiche was shedde vppon the Crosse for oure sinnes, but in thys wise: This cuppe is the newe Testamente in my bloud, whiche is shedde for you: so that it shoulde bee spoken not of the bloud, but of the Cuppe, whiche shoulde be powred out for vs at the table, so as Wine is filled or powred into the cuppes, and distributed among the guestes. And to make this opinion more probable, wherein for all that they are not well stayed, they saye that For you, maye be as much to say, as In your sight, or Before you. Thus when they are chafed with the furie of contention, they doe apply these wordes, Which is broken for you, and which is shedde for you, in whyche the profyte and fruite of thys whole matter is sette forth, not vnto the deathe of the Crosse, and to the shedding of the bloud vppon the Crosse, but vnto the sacramentarie communion of the Lordes Supper, whereas for all that the contrarie is expressed in the translatiō of the new Testamente. For so is that translated to the Corinthians: Whyche is broken for you. Take, eate, thys is my bodye whyche is broken for you, whiche is not referred to the breade, but to the body, &c. But let thys deuice passe, whyche is growen of the Spirite of contention, and putte in writing contrarie to the manifest truth. Whereof can we hope to bee assured, when in so playne and simple wordes of the Lorde, there is soughte (as it were) a knotte in a rushe: I doe impute thys not to the malice, but to the heate of contention, wherein they thoughte that they fought most handsomly for the truth of Chrystes wordes: and whyles they charged others wyth vnstedfastnesse and slitting in the wordes of Chryste, This is my bodye, they themselues seeme to be not very well assured in thinges more manifest. So by ouermuche striuing, the truthe is lost goe.

The vse of the

And I thinke that it appeareth by Matthew, that the word of shedding in Luke, is not to be applyed to the bloud of the Sacramente, but vnto the bloud of Chryste, shedde vppon the crosse. For there we doe reade in this wise, This is my bloud which is of the newe Testamente, whiche is shed for many, where not onely the Disciples, which were present at the Supper, but all the electes also are appointed to bee partakers of the bloud that was shedde. Nor it maye not be abidden by to say, that it was otherwise meant of Luke, than it was of Mathew. For that were as cuil to be be liked, as if any man would hold, that the same, This is my bodye, were taken in sundry senses of the Euangelistes. Wherfore that in Luke, τὸ ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν ἐκχυνόμενον, is nothing but τὸ ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν ἐκχυνόμενον, not to be referred to ἡ cup, but to the bloud, euen as it were τοῦ ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν ἐκχυνομένου.

But let this new exposition passe, and let vs returne vnto the wordes of Chryst.

Whiche shall be shedde (sayth he) for you and for many to the forgiuenesse of sinnes. Let the diligent reader marke here, that like as he sayth not, This is my body, whiche shall rise againe, shall be glorified, & shall sitte at the righte hande of the father: but whiche is giuen for you, meanyng to death so he sayth not of his bloud neyther: This cup is the new Testament in my bloud which shal be clarified and exalted vnto heauen: but, Whiche shall be shedde for you and for many, to the forgiuenesse of sinnes: doth he not speake playnely of his bloude whiche the wicked did shead in scourging and crucifying hys body? Yes no doubt. He speaketh not of the bloud that was not shead. And how can the argumentes of the clarifycation agree thereunto, whereby our brethren go about to proue, that Chrysts bloud is bodyly present in the chalyce? Did the Apostles drinke Chrystes bloud at the Supper? They did. And what other bloud, but that which shoulde accordyng vnto his word, be shedde vppon the Crosse? For he sayth not only, This cuppe is the new Testament in my bloud: but he addeth: Whiche is shed for you. The bloud of Chryst as he satte at his suppe, & instituted the Sacramente, was not yet shedde. Wherefore that whiche he speaketh of here, is not to be referred to it, but vnto the bloude which the wicked did shedde the day folowing. And whether it be that bloud of Chryst whiche was shedde vppon the Crosse, wherewith he arose againe, went vp vnto heauen, and sytteth at the right hand of the Father, let other men be iudges. We do not attribute vnto Chryste sundrye bloudes: but we doe sticke vnto his wordes, and seeke for the true meaning of them, and for the mysterie of this Sacrament.

The opinion of the corporall presence.

To what purpose is it therfore, to bring into ỳ church an opinion of the bodily presence, by the glorifyed and deifyed body and bloude, seeing that the very wordes of Chryst, touching his bloud, cā not be vnderstanded, neither of the bloud as he had it at the table, nor as he shoulde haue after his resurrection, but as it should be shedde vppon the Crosse? And as he recommended this vnto his Disciples before it was shedde (not corporally in the cuppe, but Sacramentally) so likewise after this resurrection, the Churche hath it shedde not corporally, but sacramentally in the cuppe, and spiritually in the hart by faith. That which yet is not, can not be hadde by corporall presence, but it may by a sacramētal presence Chrysts bloud was in Chrysts body at ỳ supper, but ỳ bloud was not yet in very deed shed, whiche being shed, might be corporally present in ỳ cup, & giuen to drinke. Of the glorified we neede not to argue, forasmuch as Chryst speaketh not therof. Thus me thinketh, the verye wordes of Christ do lead vs as it were by the hand, and shew vnto vs, that that opinion of the corporall presence of Christs bloud in the cup, can take no place, but that this is spoken in ỹ sacramental sense. We nede not to argue what became of christs bloud after it was sheadde in the ground, whether that it were receiued into his glorified body or no. There is left ynough and that sufficiēt for the Church of the faithfull, vntyll the ende of the world, to be dronke not corporally. but sacramentally in the sacrament, and spiritually by fayth: there is left (I say) the efficacie therof, vnto the appeasment for the sins of all the elect and faythfull, to the iustifying, pacifying, sanctifying, and cleansing of our consciences: whyche efficacie thereof may so indure, that it may be the bloud of the euerlasting Testament, of which matter the minister of the word may with more fruit reason, than of his corporal presence in the chalice.

There is recommended vnto vs in this sacrament, the substaunce of the Lords bodie and bloude, not corporally presente, but an host offered for our sinnes to God the father, a bloudy death, as it is of an hoste, a sheading of bloud, which was done vpon the aulter of the Crosse, the efficacie whereof is not in the corporall presence vnder bread & wine, but in the hartes and consciences of the faythful. The very breaking of Christes body, and the sheadyng of his bloud, of which he maketh mention, saying: Whiche is broken for you, and whiche is shed for you and for many, to the forgiuenesse of sins as sone as they be once past in fact they can not be corporally iterated: and yet for al that they be iterated in the Churches of the faythful by the sacrament of remembrance, not by the corporall presence, whereby the bloud may be in the cup bodyly without bodye, or the bodye in the bread without the bloud, nor ther is not one word spoken in the scriptures eyther of the Euāgelists or of the apostles, of the profite or consideration of this presence. I saye nothing what an absurditie it is, to deuise such a bodilye deuision, as that the body shall be present without bloud, and the bloude bodily without body. In dede there was suche a bodilye diuision vpon the crosse, where the bloude was by shedding separated from the bodie: but at the verye supper, as after the resurrection also, it was not corporal, but sacramental, and recommended vnto vs in thys sacramente, to this intente, that we should acknowledge, and with moste assured faith embrace, that the same which passed before figurallye, and seuerally in the Lambe of the Passouer is truely fulfilled in the verye body and bloud of Christ.

What is the reason and profite of the shedding of the bloud of Christ.

WHich (saith Christ) shal be shed for you and for manye to the forgiuenesse of sins. This is the profite and the cause why Christs bloud shoulde be sheadde. That is to saye, forgiuenesse of sinnes, whereof there is mention made also in Ieremie, in the Prophecie and promise of the new new Testament, which the Epistle to the Ebrewes doth diligentlye expresse. Of this we nede not to speak in this place, bycause we haue spokē of it in a seuerall place before. And the dispensation that he toke vpon him of mediatiō, is declared in that that he saith, For you, and for many. He became the Mediatour betwixt God, and vs, & toke vpon him the cause of vs all, wherfore he suffered also for vs, to pay that which we and not he, did owe, and to satisfie God his Father for vs. But of this matter, and why he sayde not onely For you, but also For many, and also what is to be obserued of all this place, wee haue noted in our Commentarie vpon Matthewe.

Let the godly reader cōsider here what it meaneth, that he sayth his bloud should be shedde not onely for many, as for such as should beleeue in him, but for the very Apostles also, in that he saith, Whiche shall be shedde for you, to the forgiuenesse of sinnes. Ergo he should shed his bloud also for the sinnes of the Apostles. And yet for asmuche as they did already beleue in him, they were iustified and make partakers of euerlasting life, of whiche none of thē both coulde be done without the forgiuenesse of sinnes. Therefore seing that they had obteyned this before by faith, it may be demaunded what he nēded to shedde his bloud for their sinnes.

I answere. Like as the bloud of Christ was the satisfaction for al the sinnes of all beleuers, euen from the begynnyng of the world, before that his bloud was shed vpon the crosse, so it was also for the sinnes of the Apostles. And they we made partakers of this satisfaction by faith, but the very actuall satisfaction it selfe, was in fine to be accomplished vpō the crosse. Therefore like as he should shedde his bloud for the sinnes of all the Patriarches, Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob, whiche were also iustified by fayth before his death, so he shoulde shedde it also for the sinnes of the Apostles, as well as for the sinnes of them whiche did not yet beleeue in him.

What the Lord Commaunded vs to do in the matter of the Supper.

THis piece also doth depend vpō the institution of the Lordes supper. For there be two parts of it. The first doth comprise what Christ hym selfe did at the supper, and the last what he commaunded vs to do. Of ỹ first we haue already spokē according to our final abilitie, now we must say somwhat of the last. How, why, & to what end, he did institute the sacrament of his body and bloud in outward tokens, we haue declain our Matthew.

This do sayth he in remēbrance me. And in that that he doth bid vs to doe this, he declareth that those things which he did himselfe, be not so done of him, that the whole institution of this sacrament is determined in them: but that we shoulde be instructed to the solemnising of them, and haue an exercise wherby this grace of our redemption may be renewed in our mindes. In that that he died for our sinnes, it was a dede which was once done, and not to

This do in remembrance of me.

me thinketh, the verye wordes of Christ do lead vs as it were by the hand, and shew vnto vs, that that opinion of the corporall presence of Christs bloud in the cup, can take no place, but that this is spoken in ỹ sacramental sense. We nede not to argue what became of christs bloud after it was sheadde in the ground, whether that it were receiued into his glorified body or no. There is left ynough and that sufficiẽt for the Church of the faithfull, vntyll the ende of the world, to be drunke not corporally. but sacramentally in the sacrament, and spiritually by fayth: there is left (I say) the efficacie therof, vnto the appeasment for the sins of all the electe and faythfull, to the iustifying, pacifying, sanctifying, and cleansing of our consciences: whyche efficacie thereof may so indure, that it may be the bloude of the euerlasting Testament, of which matter the minister of the word may with more fruit reason, than of his corporal presence in the chalice.

There is recommended vnto vs in this sacrament, the substaunce of the Lords bodie and bloude, not corporally presente, but an host offered for our sinnes to God the father, a bloudy death, as it is of an hoste, a sheading of bloud, which was done vpon the aulter of the Crosse, the efficacie whereof is not in the corporall presence vnder bread & wine, but in the hartes and consciences of the faythful. The very breaking of Christes body, and the sheadyng of his bloud, of which he maketh mention, saying: Whiche is broken for you, and whiche is shed for you and for many, to the forgiuenesse of sins as sone as they be once past in fact they can not be corporally iterated: and yet for al that they be iterated in the Churches of the faythful by the sacrament of remembrance, not by the corporall presence, whereby the bloud may be in the cup bodyly without bodye, or the bodye in the bread without the bloud, nor ther is not one word spoken in the scriptures eyther of the Euãgelists or of the apostles, of the profite or consideration of this presence. I saye nothing what an absurditie it is, to deuise such a bodilye deuision, as that the body shall be present without bloud, and the bloude bodily without body. In dede there was suche a bodilye diuision vpon the crosse, where the bloude was by shedding separated from the bodie: but at the verye supper, as after the resurrection also, it was not corporal, but sacramental, and recommended vnto vs in thys sacramente, to this intente, that we should acknowledge, and with moste assured faith embrace, that the same which passed before figurallye, and seuerally in the Lambe of the Passouer is truely fulfilled in the verye body and bloud of Christ.

What is the reason and profite of the shedding of the bloud of Christ.

WHich (saith Christ) shal be shed for you and for manye to the forgiuenesse of sins. This is the profite and the cause why Christs bloud shoulde be shedde. That is to saye, forgiuenesse of sinnes, whereof there is mention made also in Jeremie, in the Prophecie and promise of the new

new Testament, which the Epistle to the Ebrewes doth diligentlye expresse. Of this we nede not to speak in this place, bycause we haue spokẽ of it in a seuerall place before. And the dispensation that he toke vppon him of mediatiõ, is declared in that that he saith, For you, and for many. He became the Mediatour betwixt God, and vs, & toke vpon him the cause of vs all, wherfore he suffered also for vs, to pay that which we and not he, did owe, and to satisfie God his Father for vs. But of this matter, and why he sayde not onely For you, but also For many, and also what is to be obserued of all this place, wee haue noted in our Commentarie vpon Matthewe.

Let the godly reader cõsider here what it meaneth, that he sayth his bloud should be shedde not onely for many, as for such as should beleeue in him, but for the very Apostles also, in that he saith, Whiche shall be shedde for you, to the forgiuenesse of sinnes. Ergo he should shed his bloud also for the sinnes of the Apostles. And yet for asmuche as they did already beleue in him, they were iustified and make partakers of euerlasting life, of whiche none of thẽ both coulde be done without the forgiuenesse of sinnes. Therefore seing that they had obteyned this before by faith, it may be demaunded what he nẽded to shedde his bloud for their sinnes.

I answere. Like as the bloud of Christ was the satisfaction for al the sinnes of all beleuers, euen from the begiñyng of the world, before that his bloud was shed vpon the crosse, so it was also for the sinnes of the Apostles. And they we made partakers of this satisfaction by faith, but the very actuall satisfaction it selfe, was in fine to be accomplished vpõ the crosse. Therefore like as he shold shedde his bloud for the sinnes of all the Patriarches, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, whiche were also iustified by fayth before his death, so he shoulde shedde it also for the sinnes of the Apostles, as well as for the sinnes of them whiche did not yet beleeue in him.

What the Lord Commaunded vs to do in the matter of the Supper.

THis piece also doth depend vpõ the institution of the Lordes supper. For there be two parts of it. The first doth comprise what Christ hym selfe did at the supper, and the last what he commaunded vs to do. Of ỹ first we haue already spokẽ according to our final abilitie, now we must say somwhat of the last. How, why, & to what end, he did institute the sacrament of his body and bloud in outward tokens, we haue declain our Matthew.

This do sayth he in remẽbrance me. And in that that he doth bid vs to doe this, he declareth that those things which he did himselfe, be not so done of him, that the whole institution of this sacrament is determined in them: but that we shoulde be instructed to the solemnising of them, and haue an exercise wherby this grace of our redemption may be renewed in our mindes. In that that he died for our sinnes, it was a dede which was once done, and not to be accomplished by anye but by him. For it is not required that we should dye also for our sinnes: But thys mysticall and sacramental deed of Christ is set forth to be done of vs also, for it doth not depend properly vpon the redemption of mankinde, wherevnto his death doth serue, but vpon the ecclesiasticall ceremonye and exercise, that we may be trained vp and practised in the faith thereof.

This do in remembrance of me.

to

Cyprian. This do (sayth he.) Cyprian doeth referre This, vnto that whiche the Lord himselfe did, when he sayeth: We must do that, which the Lorde did first, and cõmaunded to be done. And what he did first, it is sufficiently expressed in that which wente before: He toke bread and the cuppe, he gaue thankes to God the father, he brake it, and did distribute it among his disciples, he had them eate and drinke it: and with all did declare what he did institute and recõmend vnto them by this rite. Ergo when he sayth: Do this, he commaundeth them also to take bread and wine, to giue thankes, to breake it, and to distribute it amongst them, and to eate it and drinke it.

He sayeth not, Offer this to God the father. He sayth not, Offer this to God the father, but do this. He himself did not offer his body and bloud at the table, but he woulde offer it vppon the crosse. Wherfore he doth not bid them to offer, but to do ẏ same which he had done at the table. That which he shoulde doe vppon the Crosse, he would do alone: but he would haue that which he did at the table, to be rather our worke than his own. For he did it this intent, to institute thys rite of breaking of bread, & to recõmend it to be kept of his church.

This do (sayth he) Ergo, he speaketh of such a matter whiche he shoulde not himselfe doe afterwardes, but whiche the faithfull should & might also doe. Therfore he doth not bidde them to chaunge the substaunce of bread & wine into his body & bloude, For that passeth all mens power, & cannot be done with out great miracle. And it is to no purpose to saye: that the same which can not be done by the priestе, maye be done by the Lord himselfe. For he doth not saye: This I wil do againe: but This do ye. That which he doth commaunde vs by these wordes todo, is altogither suche, that it must and may be done by vs. Wherfore there is nothyng commaunded here that is miraculous, so that all that prehemmence and prerogatiue is altogither a vain imagination, whiche the Popishe priestes doe chalenge vnto them in this respect, and do boast full prouidly of, that they be able to change the substance of the breade and wine into the very body and bloud of christ, yea and to call Christ himself down from heauen. They do attribute this to the strength of Christes wordes, but Christ sayde neyther, Say this, and by these wordes turne the substance of breade and wine into my body and bloud, nor his very words do signify any suche thing. He sayde Do this: which is as muche to saye, as breake and eate this bread with thankes giuing, and deuide and drinke this cuppe among you, wherupon the Apostle also sayeth: The bread which we do breake. Item, As often as you eate of this breade and drinke of the Lords cup. Wherefore although these wordes be a thousand times spoken: This is my body, and This is my bloud: yet for all that no man is able to compasse thereby, to change the substaunce of bread and wine into the body and bloud of the Lorde. For this was no piece of the Lordes wyl, for as much as it is not expressed in his commaundemente.

He bids vs do which can do.

bishop

times

Wherupon John also sometimes bishop of Rotchester here in England, in the defence of the kings Assertiõ, against the Captiuity of Babylon of Martine Luthers. N. 8. and D. writeth thus: But first let vs go to this and teache, that besides the interpretation of the fathers and custome lefte vnto vs from them, no man shall proue by the verye bare word of the gospel that any priest in these our dayes doth consecrate the very body and bloud of Christ. Not ẏ, that this matter is so doubtful, but because that the certainty thereof is had not so much of the wordes of the Gospel as of the interpretation of the fathers, and the custome of so long a time, whiche they lefte vnto their aftercommers. First if anye man will graunt (which Wickliffe yet doth not vtterly deny) ẏ Christe did vtterly make his body and bloud of bread and wine, it can not be inferred thereof, that euery Priest shal likewise change the breade into the body, and the wine into bloude. For it is out of doubt that christ did many things which now no man can doe, though he be neuer so holye or wise. Wherefore vnlesse it be plainly promised in the foresayd words, that whosoeuer he be, priest or laye man ẏ shal attempt the same thing, that the like effect shal folowe of it, we shal be at no certaintye in thys matter. But there is no suche thing promised in the Gospel as shall appeare.

And in the same place: Thus much (sayth he) hath Matthew, who doth also onely speake of the new Testament. For there is no word founde here to proue that there is the true presente of Christs flesh and bloude in our Masse. For albeit that Christ made his flesh of bread and bloud of wine, it followeth not therefore, that we shal also do ẏ same as ofte as we wyl attempte it, by the vertue of any word that is there.

Item. It can not therfore be proued by any scripture, that eyther a lay man or priestе, as often as he shal go about that matter, to make likewise of bread and wine the body and bloude of Christe, as Christe himselfe did, seing that this is not comprised in the scriptures.

Further. By this I thinke (sayth he) euerye man vnderstandeth that the certainty of thys matter dependeth not so muche vpon the Gospell, as it doth vpon the vse and custome, whiche is recommended vnto vs in so many hundred yeares, from the very first fathers. For so it pleased them to interpret this peece of scripture vnto vs, by teaching of the holy spirite, and thus they thoughte good to vse it in their times, so that whosoeuer woulde nowe bring in a sense or vse, he shall algates wythstand the holy spirite, by whose instinct the first father did deliuer this rite and ceremony in the consecration of the sacrament of thankes giuing: For he that is not ignorant of the Gospel, may be mosse assured, ẏ the holy spirite (which was giuen to be a cõtinual teacher vnto ỹ church) would neuer haue suffered it to erre in a matter of so great a waight, in such & so long a succession of tymes.

be a

This saith he. And although ỹ he was exceedingly wedded to the Papisth priesthod, yet for all that he did acknowledge and opẽly confesse by these wordes, that it can not be proued by any writings of the gospels, that bread & wine is consecrated into the very flesh & blond of Christe.

One thing vvas done by the lord once, and another by vs to be done contynually.

It is one thing whiche was done of the Lord himselfe in few wordes once, touching the sacraments, & an other thing whiche we muste do continually: As in the Passouer it was one thing whiche was done by the Angell once, & an other that was to be done by ỹ people euery yere. In this sacramẽt the worke of the lord was that which was done but once, not the Transubstantiation of the bread & wine, but the gyuing vp of his body vpon the crosse, & the shedding of his bloud, the Sacramente whereof he would haue to remayne in the breaking of bread, & in the cõmunion of the wine: but our worke is that which muste be done vntil the Lordes returne, the breaking & eating of this bread, & the cõmunion of the cuppe. It is a wonderfull ouerthwartnes, that the Papistes do take vpon them to do that which neither was done of the Lorde at the Supper, nor cõmaunded to vs to do, neyther can be done of vs, & that whiche is commaunded and ought and may be done of vs, they will not doe.

The ouerthvvartnes of the Papistes.

Wherfore, wheras Chrysostome saith: There be not sette forth the workes of mans strẽgth. He which did the same at that supper, euen he doth the same now also. We do stãd in the place of ministers, but it is he which doth sanctifie & chaũge them. It is spoken rather by a rhetoricall amplificatiõ, than according vnto ỹ simplicitie of the case. For whereas he saith, that there be not set forth ỹ workes of mãs strength, & that the Lorde euen now also doth the same which he did at the laste supper in sanctifying & changing, if it be referred vnto that whiche he cõmaunded vs to do, saying: Do this in remembrãce of me, it doth vtterly varie frõ the simple truth of the Lordes commaundement. For the Lord did not cõmaund vs that we should sanctifie & change the bread & wine, but that we should breake it and distribute it amongst vs, & with thankes giuing eate it, & drinke it in remẽbrance of him, as the sacrament of his body & bloud, which sacramẽtall ceremonie doth not exceede the strength of man. For it is not requisite, that he should sanctifie the same by doing it again & againe, which he did once sanctifie by the worde & deede of his institution. For the institution once done, doth sanctifie the sacramẽtall signes vnto the vses of the Churche, vntill the end of the world. For he did not chaunge the substance of the bread & wine, but he did turne their natural vse appointed to fede & moysten our bodies, into a sacramentall vse, to serue to refresh our mindes, & to cõforte our faith by ỹ working of the holy spirite. And this whiche he did once, is unapleable in all churches vntil the end of the world. He sayde once: This is my body, This cuppe is the new Testamẽt in my bloud, Do this in remẽbrance of me. And by by these wordes he hath once instituted and sanctified this ceremonie, and changed the thing from the naturall vnto a sacramentall vse.

Chrisostom In Matthæ homil. 3.

This do, saith he. We haue considered that the Lord sayde: This do. Now cõsequently let vs see to what ende we muste do this. Unto the remẽbrance of me (saith he.) It is not without good cause, that he vsed the worde, This, not once onely: but for almuch as he did institute the sacrament of his body & bloud in two distinct membres, he did adde it vnto both of them, reciting them aparte: This do in remembrance of me: to expresse not onely to what purpose he would haue vs to kẽpe this ceremonie in the churche, but also to enforce ỹ he wold haue both the parts therof deuoutly and perfectly kepte. Wherof we shal speak in ỹ nert article, where we shal set forth ỹ right administration of this Sacrament.

Do this in the remẽbrance of me. I see not what could be not only spoken, but also driuẽ into mens heads by the Lord himself, streyght way at the first institutiõ more briefly, more simply, more openly, yea and withall more effectually against al kindes of errours, scrupulositie & superstition. For he saith not: Do this to my presence, that is to say, to the end, that you may haue my body and bloud corporally present in the bread & the cuppe; but do this in the remẽbrance of me, truely we haue no occasion to thinke of the corporal presence of ỹ lords body & bloud in ỹ bread & wine of the supper: but wee haue rather great cause to reclaime our mind frõ it to the heauenly things by the vertue of the remẽbrance therof. And to this purpose the Lorde meant to institute a memoriall of him, by this sacrament of the new Testament, ỹ we should direct our mindes from al the troubles & temptations of this present life, vnto him to Heauẽ, wether he would ascende, and that we should seeke cõfort frõ thence, wherupõ that was vsed: Surſum corda. Habemus ad Dominũ. That is to say. Up with the hartes. We lift the vp vnto the Lorde. And the Apostle dothe diligently admonish vs, ỹ we should seeke those things whiche be aboue, where Christ is. He shoulde returne after his resurrection vnto his Father, and take away his bodily presence from the earthe. And that he meante when he sayde, Doe this hereafter in remembrance of me. As though he should say: Hereafter you shal not haue me corporally present. Wherefore I will haue you to doe that, whiche I doe now betake you to doe, to kẽpe and kindle the remẽbrance of me in your hartes. For I will haue this to be a memoriall sacrament of me.

Bernard. Serm. 33.

I beseech you, doth this worde of Christ agree with the opinion of his corporall presence at the Supper? Bernarde vpon the Canticles, doth attribute remẽbrance vnto this present time, wherein we do walke by faith, & presence vnto that to come, in whiche wee shall walke in very forme & shape, & see face to face. For this he sayth there. The vtter barke of the sacramẽt is not receiued with like pleasure, as the fatnesse of the corne, faith & shape, memorie & presence, eternitie & time, the cõtenãce and the glasse, the image of God and the fashion of a seruant, &c. by which wordes

wordes he doeth so deuide remembrance from presence, that he doeth attribute the one to the lyfe wherein we be, and the other to the lyfe to come.

VVhether vve haue the memory of Christ absent at the supper.

But some man will saye: Doeth thou so take the remembraunce of Christe, that thou doest excluse hys presence from the Supper, & iudgest that we haue the remembraunce of Christ not present, but absent? Answer. I do know that the Lord sayeth: Lo I am with you, vntill the end of the world. Wherefore God forbid, that I should reiecte the presence of Christ so playnly promised. I do speake of the corporal presence of his body and bloud in the bread & wine, wherof no man (as farre as I know) is able to bring any testimonie of the holy scripture. Vnto that I do lay this sacrament of remembraunce, knowing withal, that the Lord is present with vs, not onely at the supper, but also in all assemblies of the faithfull, by his holy spirite working in their hartes. For howe should the head be absent frō the body, and the true vine from hys braunches? God forbid. We haue not such a Christ, which as thoughe he were altogither absent, must haue a vicegerent, by whom those things that do appertaine to the head, should be wrought in the body of ỹ church. To attaine vnto those things which do procede from our sauiour, mediatour, king, and head, that it is to say, for such things as be necessarie vnto our saluation, there is nothing lacking in Christ our Lorde, albeit that he be not corporally present with vs in the bread & in the cup, but doth nourishe and governe both vs and all our things, by the vertue of the godhead of his spirite. And yet for al that, this is a cleare case, that the remembraunce is not of the presente, but of the absent, as hope is not of the present, but of things to come. And Christ did institute this Sacrament for the remēbrance of him. Ergo he did institute it, not in respect that he is present in spirite, but in respect that he shoulde be absent in body. For both is said of him aright, both that he is presente with vs vntill the end of the world, and also that he is absente vntil he returne at the daye of iudgement. So he sayd, that he woulde depart to the father and returne: so he was sene of his Apostles taken vp into a cloud, and carried vp; and going into heauen: so it was sayde vnto them: You men of Galylea what stand you loking vp vnto heauen? This Iesus whiche is taken vp from you into heauen, shall come so as you sawe him going vp to heauen. I knowe howe some of our brethren do confounde ỹ spirituall and corporall presence of Christ, and do expound the saying of Paul, Vntil he come, not of the bodily comming, but of the glorious appearing: not why he shal come down corporally from heauen, but when he shal change his inuisible presence into an open presence. Howe thys doth agree with the simplicitie of the Christiā faith and of holy scriptures let wise men be iudges. When that point of the sacramente is to be expounded: This is my body, men doe stifly enforce, that there is not one iote in the wordes which is not to be taken in his proper and common sense, and yet they doe wreste the wordes not almost in what sense they should beleue, and confesse the article of our faith. I say by my bretherns leaue, that I haue not redde in any place, that to ascend into heauē, is almuch to say, as to vanish into the ayre and to be inuisible: to sitte at the right hande of the father, to be deuided in body euery where, bycause that the right hand of God is euery where: & that to come to iudgement, is not bodily to come downe from heauen, but of inuisible to bee made visible, and to appeare glorious. Woulde God that this newe doctrine as it is bredde in contention, so it might be by the benefite of the restitution of concorde be taken away.

The argumyng of some bretherne.

Moreouer, we must marke that he doth not say, Do this to the forgiuenesse of sinnes: but In remembrance of me. In deede he doth attribute forgiuenesse of sins to his bloud, and yet not as it is sacramentally dronke at the supper, but as it is shedde vpō the crosse. This is my bloud (sayth he) which is shed for you, to the forgiuenesse of sins. But he dothe not attribute forgiuenesse of sinnes vnto this sacrament, whiche he did recōmende vnto vs to be celebrated in the remēbrance of him. Nor it is not conuenient that we should ioyne it vnto this remēbrance, least ỹ we should attribute ỹ vnto our worke, whiche doth belong to the hoste only whiche was offered vpon the crosse for our sins. The Christiā man doth cleaue with Cyprian to the crosse, & seeketh forgiuenesse of sins in Christes bloud, which was shed vpō the crosse, & doth drinke it by faith, and so drinking receyueth forgiuenesse of sinnes, and is iustified. He doth vse withall the sacrament of this grace in the church, to practise this his faith by ỹ publike remēbrance of Christ, according vnto his institutiō, & to giue thākes vnto his redēmer. We muste specially beware, ỹ we chaunge not the pricke & marke which Christ himself set vp vnto vs, saying: Do this in remēbrāce of me, or knit vnto it such geare, as is not knit vnto it by himselfe.

Some of our brethren argued after this sorte: The new Testament is in the Lordes supper, therefore there must nedes be in it also forgiuenesse of sins, the spirite, grace, life, & true felicitie, & al these things be comprehēded in the word. The word is first, for without it, neyther the bread, nor the cup should be of any estimation. Secondly, without the bread and the cuppe, the body & bloud should not be there. Thirdly, without the body and bloud of Christe, there should not be there the newe Testament. Fourthly, without the new Testamet, there shold not be the forgiuenesse of sins. Fiftly, without forgiuenesse of sins, there should not be their life and felicitie. Thus the worde doth comprise the bread & the cuppe, that they may be a Sacrament. The bread and the cuppe doth cōprise the body & bloud of Christ, and the body and bloud of Christ doth contayne the newe Testament, the newe Testament hath forgiuenesse of sinnes, and forgiuenesse of sinnes doth conclude life and true felicitie. And all these things be in the worde of the supper, & we doe cōceaue thē by faith. This say they. Wherevpon we haue thought good to note some things. As touchyng forgiuenesse of sins, the truth & simplicitie of Christes word nedeth not this gradation, or talke in degrees, for it doth not attribute it to the supper, but simply to the oblation of the body and bloud of the immaculate Lambe, which was once made vppon the crosse, which Christ himself ment when he said: Thys is my bloude of the new testament, which shal be shed for you and for many, to the remissiō of sinnes: in which wordes, there be conteined these poyntes: the shedding of Christes bloude done vppon the crosse, the new testament, the sacrament of the bloud which was shed, & the forgiuenesse of sinnes. The beginning of this grace is not in the word of the Supper, but in the shedding of the bloud, which this worde doth preach and recommende vnto vs. Thereof speaketh not onely the sacramentall worde, but the whole gospel also, whereby there is preached vnto vs repentance and forgyuenesse of sinnes in the name of the Lord crucified. The redēption which was made vpon the crosse, was first. There followed the word of redemption and of reconcilement. In thys word is the preachyng of the Gospell, the ministers, Baptisme, the lords supper, al which do set forth vnto vs forgiuenesse of sinnes, to be sought in the bloud of Christ, shedde vppon the crosse. For without shedding of bloud, there is no forgiuenes of sinnes. Secondly, the newe Testamente is confirmed by the shedding of Christes bloud, whiche was appointed from euerlasting of God, to the saluation of the electes. Further is in it the death of the testator, whereof we spake before. Thirdlye, there is in the bread and the cup, the sacrament not simply of ỹ body, but of his body giuen for vs: and of the bloud, not simply, but of hys bloud, shed for vs vpon the Crosse.

Fourthly, there is mention made of remission of sinnes: but it is not spoken of the sacrament of the lords supper, but of the bloud which shuld be shed vpō the crosse, the sacrament wherof is in the mystical cup, & how ỹ is the bloud of Christ shed for vs, we haue sufficiently noted before. Briefly, forgiuenes of our sins doth truly consist in the bloud of our lord once shead for vs vppon the Crosse, not in the sacrament therof, whiche we doe ofte tymes renue. For then christ shuld haue said, Do this to your chase forgiuenes of your sins, rather than Do this in remēbrance of me. And the Apostle shoulde haue sayde wiselyer, As often as you do eate of this bread, and drincke the Lordes cup, you doe atteyne the forgiuenes of your sinnes, than in saying, You do declare the Lords death vntil that he doe come. For it is the calling to remembraunce of the redēmer, and the declaration of his death in them which are iustified by the faith of the bloud shed vppon the crosse, and doe giue thankes vnto their Redēmer, wherevpon this Sacrament also is called Thankes giuing. Wherfore the vse of this Sacramente was not instituted by the Lorde to this purpose, that we shuld receyue in it forgiuenesse of our sinnes, and be iustified, but to the intente, that beīng iustifyed by the faythe of Chrystes bloud, and deliuered from our sins, wee shoulde gyue thankes vnto the Lorde, and bee the better stayed in thys faythe. Thys the man of worthy remembraūce D. Luther bydde acknowledge, when he sayde: Thys Sacrament doth iustifye no manne, nor maketh him faithful, but it requireth that thou be iustifyed, and faythful before that thou come vnto it.

acknow-

Therefore, to what purpose is it to striue by this argument of Gradation of the sacrament, to seeke the forgiuenesse of sinnes in the supper? Thou mightest saye more aright: There is in the supper the word, the sacrament of the Lordes bodye and bloud, by whiche both, the forgiuenesse of sinnes obteined for vs, by the bloud once shed for vs vpō ỹ crosse, is preached & set forth. Item, There is in the supper according vnto the Lords ordinance, the remēbrance of the lord, & the declaratiō of his death wherby the faithfull ỹ be redemed & iustified, do giue thankes vnto theyr sauiour, for the forgiuenesse of their sinnes, receiued by faith.

But these are right and truely reported of the lords supper, according vnto his word. And in case we take pleasure to gather by a gradation or argument of degrees, where the forgiuenesse of sinnes is to be sought, I suppose we may do it better in thys sort: The word of the gospel hath the crosse, the crosse hath the Lords body and bloud, in the Lords body & bloud shed for vs, there is the newe Testament. In the new Testament ther is forgiuenesse of sinnes, life & health euerlasting, Ergo there is forgiuenesse of sins in the crosse. &c. Unto this gradation the Apostle doth agree where he reporteth, ỹ the word of the crosse is the power of God to them that be saued, And that Christ hath reconciled vs vnto God in one body by the cros. Also, that he hath made a peace by the bloud of his crosse. Againe, he sayth, that he hath pluckt away and fastened vnto the crosse the hād writing of the decree which was against vs. In this there is neyther doubte nor danger. But what errours and superstitions hath ben bread vnto vs of that, that in the Poperie they haue tyed grace vnto the sacraments, they haue found which in our dayes haue stoutely denied and withstanded it. Wherfore we do conclude, that it is a dangerous speach, & contrary vnto the word of Christ, to auouche that men should seeke forgiuenesse of sins in the supper.

What the vertue of the Lords remēbrance is, we haue noted in our Cōmentaries vpon Matthew. And loke howe necessarye it is, that they which be deliuered, should giue thāks vnto their deliuerer and sauioure: so necessarie is this remembrance of ỹ Lord vnto thē, & for that this sacrament of his body & bloud was instituted by him, & recommended vnto ỹ faithful. For there is no thanks gyuing without the remembrance of a benefit receyued.

What is the right disposing and administration of the Lords Supper.

I Thinke it good after the consideration of the Institution, to passe on, to the very Administration of this Sacrament to be considered also in some part, wherin we wil see in order:

1. By whō this Sacrament ought to be ministred.
2. To whom it ought, and to whō it ought not to be giuen.

3. When it ought to be ministred.
4. How it ought to be ministred.

I. By vvhome the Lordes Supper ought to be ministred.

The lordes supper is not to be ministred of euery man.

FIrst it is a cleare case, that it is not for euery mã to minister in the church of god, specially to dispose and bestow the mysteries of Christ: but for thẽ vnto whome this charge is committed, as lawfully called to serue the Lord Christe in preaching of the gospell, & bestowing of the sacraments, in whome it is required that they be found faithful. They cã not be accounted suche, whiche in the Popery do run of their owne accord vnto the Suffragane byshops, & for mony be annointed with oyle, not to preache the gospell of Christe, but to offer and sacrifice for the quicke and dead, vnto whom the Suffragan sayth, when he giueth them the cup: Take vnto thée the power to consecrate, and to offer for quicke & dead. This kind of men, vnder the pretẽce of Priesthode, is ordeyned not to dispose the mysteries of God, but to make a market of Masses, and to prophane the Lordes supper.

In some places the ministers of the vvorde do not administer the sacramẽtes.

I knowe that it is vsed in some churches, ỳ the ministers of the word do occupie the place of prophets and doctors, & do leaue the administratiõ of the sacramentes vnto the parishe Clerkes and simple people, with the deacõs. Yet for all that, this custome may not be preiudicial to other churches, where the very same ỳ do dispose the worde, do minister the sacramẽts also, in case ỳ they be able well to execute both the partes of the ministery. Els it were better according vnto the sayings of the Apostles that they should leaue off the ministery of the tables, & apply the prayers & the administratiõ of doctrine, for asmuch as there may be more founde able to dispose ỳ sacramẽts, than able to dispose holsome & sound doctrine aright in ỳ church. And what mãner of ministers the apostolical Canõ doth require, it is noted before, where wé spake seuerally of ỳ ministers of the word. The Papists do compell thé whome they do anoint, to forsweare lawfull, honorable, & holy wedlocke, whiche they do cõtrary vnto the maniefest doctrine of the Apostle, the custome of the primitiue churche, & the Coũcels of Nice & Gaũgrence. And yet they do alow them concubines & whores, cõtrary vnto their Decrées, and contrary to the opinion of Pope Zacharie, who saith in his Epistle to Boniface: What wise man will iudge them to be Priests, whiche do not abstayne asmuch as from fornication? But these holy folke be fitte ynough for the holy things that they do. They doe dispute of this, whether the administration of the sacramentes whiche is done by naughty parkes, be not as alowable as that which is done by sincere and vpright persons. And they doe suppose that as golde is golde, of whome so euer it is gyuen and receyued, so the sacrament is truely a sacrament, whether it be giuen of a good or of a naughty mynister. I am not agaynst it, in case the Sacramentes bée considered of themselues euen as the worde it selfe alie, but that the authoritie dothe not depende vpon the qualitie of the minister, but vppon the institution, truth and power of Christ.

Acts 6.

But

But yet it maketh much to the matter, that the administratiõ of the sacraments be effectuall, by what ministers they be dispensed, good or euill, reprehensible or irreprehensible. For it is not possible that the Lordes people cã be so well moued with the ministerie of a vayne, wicked, & mischieuous person, whose minde & life they sée doth much differ from those things, which he sayth & doeth in the churche, as by the ministery of him, whom they perceyue to sauour all of the Lordes zeale, in hart, mouth, and in his whole life. And to what purpose serueth the integritie of the sacramẽt, onelesse it procéede to the purposed end, (that is to say) to the edifying of mens consciences?

Carthage the fifthe Councell. Cano. 6.

II. To vvhom the Lordes Supper is to be ministred, and to whome not.

THe administratiõ of the supper standeth not in a priuate wage, as belõging to some chosen & apointed persons, but it is publicke and cõmõ vnto the whole church, so that as many as be reckened amõgst the members of the churche, for whome Christes body was giuen, and his bloud shedde vpõ the crosse, are to be admitted therevnto. And the very tradition of the Apostle, and the custome of the primitiue churche doth sufficiẽtly declare, that the vse thereof is common vnto al faithfull, in so much ỳ the fathers did admitte the infants of ỳ faithful also, as we may sée in Cyprian and Augustine. The Papists do dispẽse their Masling sacrifice also to the dead, so that it is a wonder to sée, what the third Coũsel of Carthage meante, that it decréed after this sort: It hath pleased vs, ỳ the sacrament of thankes giuing be not giuen to the bodies of the dead. For the Lord sayd: Take, and eate, whereas the dead carkases can neyther take, nor eate. This is there. But what nede ỳ dead carkases to take and eate it, if the Masling priest may take & eate it for them? What reason is this? The sacrament of the Lordes body and bloud doth not pertaine to the dead. Why? Bycause they can not eate and drinke. Then what doth he whiche dothe sacrifice for the dead? It was vsed in ỳ church after the Apostles times, that at the cõmunion & seruice, there shoulde be mention made of the faithfull that were dead, specially of the Martyrs, not so that the efficacie of the sacramẽt should be dispensed vnto thẽ, but ỳ there should be thãks giuen to the lord for their stedfast faith, & that the faithfull people might be prouoked vnto the folowyng of them: and that mention was made secretely before God, but openly & plainly in the peoples eares. But for asmuch as afterward Pelagius the. 62. Pope, apointed the cõmemoratiõ of the dead vnto the secretes of the Canon of the Masse, it began to be done in silence, whiche before time was done openly, to the intent the people might heare it, & be edified, for it was now no lõger done to the intent to set forth the cõstancie of the faith of the Martyrs to the church to be folowed, but that the vertue and efficacie of the Masse might be communicated to the dead.

Mentiõ of the dead in the communion.

Pelagius Pope.

Wée do say that the cõmunion of Christes body and bloud ought to be dispensed sacramentally to the faithful of Christ that be aliue, whiche cã not only receue & eat it, but giue thãkes also to their redemer, & embrace that by faith, which is giuen thẽ. As the preaching of the gospel is not to be ministred to the dead, but to thẽ ỳ be aliue: so the dispensation also of the Lords supper doth not pertain to the dead, but to ỳ faithful aliue. Yet for al ỳ we do not exclude the faithfull that be dead, frõ the efficacie & vertue of Chriſtes death, by which they be also redemed: but we doe make a difference betwixt the very effect of the sacramẽt, by the vertue of whiche they be also saued whiche are dead in the Lord, and so be partakers of the cõmon redemption, & betwixt the dispensation of the Sacramentall signe whiche doth belõg to them that be aliue only. Like as to the faithful & one ỳ is cõuerted to the Lord, in case he dye without baptiſme, not for that that he did neglecte it, but coulde not be baptised, bicauſe he was otherwiſe letted, the baptiſme is not dispensed vnto him, forasmuch as he hath already gotten the fruit therof by faith: so the sacramental cõmunion of the Lords supper is not to be diſpẽsed to the faithfull that be dead, forasmuche as by faith they haue alreadie atteyned to the vertue and efficacie of the Lordes bodie and bloud.

The Lords Supper to be ministred not to the dead but to the liuely.

VVe doe not exclude the deade from the efficacy of Chriſtes death.

Two kindes of dead folkes.

And there be two sortes of dead folkes in the church, vnto which the sacramentall cõmunion of the lords body and bloud ought not to be dispensed. The one is of them whiche be dead in body, whether they departed out of this life in faith or without faith. For the one sort hathe no nẽede of it, and it doth not profit the other, so that it may be dispensed to none of thẽ both. The other sorte is of thẽ whiche liue yet in body & are able to come to the ecclesiaſtical cõmunió, & take ỳ which is giuen thẽ, & eate it, but yet for all that, they be dead to Chriſt in spirit, & do liue vnto sins, mete to be accoũted vñ them of whõ the Lord said: Let ỳ dead burie ỳ dead: & with ỳ widowe, whiche ỳ Apoſtle saith be dead whiles they be aliue, bicauſe they do liue in pleſures. The first dead cãnot cõmunicate sacramẽtally, these cã sacramẽtally: but yet for al that, not spiritually & truly, bicauſe they do not liue vnto Chriſt in spirit & faith, but do liue to ỳ worlde, to sin, & to Satã. And forasmuch as they ſtaũder the churche of God, by their open folowing of sin, & do excõmunicate, & set them selues out of the fellowshyp of the kingdom of God, nor will not abide to be reformed, they be not worthy to haue this Sacrament ministred to thẽ. And where as the Papiſts at their liſt, do excõmunicate whõ they wil, yea for very smal dets or duties we let their holineſſe alone withal.

1 Cor. 11.

Of them which are ready to dye, and yet liue.

After these two kinds of dead persons, to whom the dispẽsation of this sacramẽt doth not belong, we muſt consequently speak of them that be redy to die as of ſicke persons & priſoners which are iudged to deth for their offẽces. In this point ỳ Churches do vary. For some do minister this sacramẽt to the ſick in case they do demaund it, and some not. They that do miniſter it, are of sundry opinions. The Papiſtes doe suppoſe that there is no way to heuen, without this laſt communion of the dying. Wherfore they do determine, that such as do depart out of this life without their howſel, shal not be buried in the cõmon christian buriall. And they do cal this communion or howſel the paſport, or ſafe conduct, as though that they which haue it, were wel appointed to depart happily out of this life. But yet for all that, in that sorte that they goe not streight way into heauen, but to the Popes fire of purgatory firſt, to be purged at the ful, and that yet neuertheleſſe they muſt be clenſed & redemed by the sacrifices of Maſſes, the firſts, and ỳ seuenths, trentals, & yere obites as they cal thẽ, wherunto is added also at length the Popes pardons. But in some churches whiche do profeſſe the gospel, although the opiniõ of ỳ Papiſts be banished, yet for al ỳ ther is kept, ſtil the priuat & laſt communion of ỳ ſicke, to the intent ỳ by the body & bloud of ỳ lord, they may be the more confirmed in their faith, & be made the abler to wſtand the tẽtations of Satan, and to abide the pangs of death. This opinion they haue of the sacrament of ỳ body and bloud of the Lord. And to the intent ỳ the ſame which they do, may be called a communion, the miniſter himſelfe which doth miniſter, and they of the house, and the kinſfolkes & neighbours, doe cõmunicate also with ỳ ſick person. They be in danger to fal into the opinion of such as do attribute to muche to the worthyneſſe of outward worke, which is wrought, and to be entangled with the superſtitiõ of the ſimple and vnlerned, which do ſeruilely attribute more to the sacramentall signes, than is conuenient.

Other churches do forbeare from this priuate & domeſtical cõmunion to the ſick, for these causes. The firſt is, bycauſe the Lord wold haue this communion to be ecclesiaſtical and publike, as we may ſee in the tradition of the Apoſtle. The secõd cauſe is, in hope of the priuate and laſte communion, men should forſake the publike and eccleſiaſticall communion, and so it should come to paſſe, that they ſhould ware rare & more ſeldome than doth become a wel ordered church. The third is, that ther be no gap opened vntõ priuate and domeſtical Suppers, to the opinion of attributing to much to the work which is wrought, and to the prepoſterous and rathe truſte and hope, wherby like as the Papiſts do hang vpon their priuate Maſſes, so the carnal gospellers do depend vpon ỳ sacramentall signes, receiued as it were, for a safe conduct. And these reasons doe ſeeme vnto me to bee waighty and pithie ynough, so ỳ the ſicke be diligentlye inough viſited of the paſtors & miniſters of the word, and refreſhed and confirmed by the comfort of Chriſtes word: & also the eccleſiaſtical communion oftener vſed.

And it ſeemeth that there ſhoulde be an other way taken for them ỳ do fal, and are excõmunicate frõ the church, if they do amẽde, & seke to be reconciled vnto the church, before ỳ they doe departe out of this life. Of thẽ there is an hiſtorie in Euſebius whiche Dionyſius of Alexandria writeth in this wiſe: There was a certaine faithful old man among vs called Serapion, which had liued a great while without blame, but at the perſecution he fel. And he desired oftetimes to be receued in again, but:

Of them that doe fall, an hyſtory of one that fell. Euſebius. lib 6. cap. 44.

no man harkened vnto him, bicause he had sacrificed. And being fallē into sickneſſe, he continued three whole dayes dūme & deſtitute of the power of his sences. Afterwardes beyng somewhat recouered, the fourth day he called his sisters sonne vnto him & sayd: My sonne, how lōg do you hold me backe? I pray you make speede, & dispatch me quickly. Call to me one of the Priests: & after he had so said, he waxed dumme againe. The boye ranne to the Priest: And it was night. And the Priest was sicke, so that he coulde not goe with the boy. But for asmuch as I had cōmaūded, that such as were ready to dye, shold be receyued againe, in case that they did desire it: yea and specially in case that they had also hūbly requested it before time, so ỳ they might departe encouraged with good hope, he gaue the boy a litle of the sacrament, and bad the boy to put & poure it into the old mans mouth. The boye returned and brought him the Sacrament. And when he was not far off, before he came in, Serapion sayde agayne: Cōmest thou my sonne? I perceyue that the priest cā not come, but come thou immediatly, and do that which he commaūded thee to do, and let me goe. And the boye did put and poure it into the olde mans mouthe. Who when he had tasted a litle, streyght way gaue vp his spirite. This is there. Whereby we do sée what cōsideration is to be had of thē that haue fallen & are excommunicate, in case they fel into daunger of death before that they were receiued againe vnto the communion of the Churche.

He gaue a litle of the Sacrament to the boy, and bad him to put it into the old mans mouth.

O. Prisoners.

No prisoners & such as shal suffer, the sacramēt is not giuen in the Poperie. And yet for al ỳ, the hope of the grace of Christ, & of euerlasting lyfe is not cut from them, but if they do make the confessiō of their sinnes secretely into the eares of some Frier or Priest, thē they be absolued from their sinnes, & do receyue promise of euerlasting life, without the Sacrament of the Lords body, so that they dye in the Christian fayth. Where we sée in this case it is alowed in the very darkneſſe of the Poperie, that forgiueneſſe of sinnes, & hope of euerlasting life is to be giuē to repentāce & to the faith in Christe, without the sacramentall communion: though in some others it be dissēbled. And this I speake of the vse & custome of the Papists: but besides this the doctors doe not denie, but that it shoulde be graunted vnto them, if they do desire it. In the Churches whiche doe professe the Gospell, in some places the sacrament is giuen to prisoners: and in some not. There be reasons for both suche as we allcaged before of the sicke persons.

Of them which are put to death.

Wée doe reade of them whiche are put to death, in this wise: It is demaūded by some of our brethern, concernyng them which are hanged for theyr offences vpō the Galowes, after theyr confession made to God: whether theyr corses shoulde be caried to the Churches, and offerings bée made for them, and haue Masses sayde for them or not. To whome wée do answere: In case when men haue made cleane confession of all their sinnes, & haue worthily repented, the communion also ought to be giuen vnto them at the ende, according vnto the preceptes of the Canons: why do the Canons forbidde them them the communion or burial, which doe suffer extreame payne for their offences, and do confesse themselues, or doe desire to be confessed? For it is writte, God doth not iudge twise vpon one thing. This decrée is in the Councell of Maguntia.

It is knowen that the sacrament was giuen to the childrē of the faithfull also in the tyme of Pope Innocent, Cyprian, and of Augustine, as well in Europe as in Afrike. Neyther do I read that the custome was contrary in any place of Asia. There is a story redde in the Sermon of Cyprian, De lapsis, of a yong wench that was brought by hir nurse in the time of persecution to the sacrifices of the Gentiles, whiche was afterwardes, when all was quiet, brought by the mother to the sacrament of thankesgiuing of the faithfull. There is mētion made in many places of Augustine of the sacrament of thankesgiuing, giuen to litle children. But after the time of those fathers, that vniuersall custome beganne to decay by little and little, vntill that the cōtrary preuayled so much, that he is to be taken for a mosse ranke heretike, that dothe holde that the sacramente of the Lordes supper is to be giuen to infants. In Lorrayne there is left vntill this day some piece of that custome. For there when the infante is baptised, the minister or priest which did baptise hym, fetcheth out of the Vestry to the altare the pire wherein certaine parcels of the sacramentall bread, as they call them there be be kept, and he holdeth one of the pēces vp to shew to the people: afterwardes he layeth it vp againe in the pire, and putteth forthe his two fingers wherein he helde it, to the Sexten to washe with wine, and of that wine he doth droppe into the mouth of the infante, saying: The bloud of our Lorde Iesu Christ profite thée to life euerlasting. These leauings of the old custome remayned not onely in the Churches of Lorrayne, but in many others also, as I suppose. And that saying of Christe also did moue the fathers to giue the sacramente of the supper vnto infants: Vnleſſe you do eate the flesh of the sonne of man, and drinke his bloud, you shall not haue life in you. Wherevpon they thoughte it necessarie to admitte the infants also vnto the Sacramente of the Lords Supper, that they myghte be made partakers of the grace of Christ, and of life euerlasting. For they did turne the same to the ceremonie of the Sacramente, whiche Christ spake of the spirituall eatyng and drinking of his flesthe and bloud, and of the fruite of his deathe, and their aftercommers were moued by the saying of the Apostle, to withdraw the vse of this sacrament from the infants: Lette a man proue hymselfe, and so let him eate of that bread and drinke of the cuppe. For they gathered vppon that, Infantes can not proue themselues, Ergo it is not lawfull for them to eate of this bread, and to drinke of the Lords cuppe.

Iohn. 6.

Let them sée héere which do crake vpon the fathers, that they do not in sundry wise, but agréeably expounde the holye Scriptures. Cyprian, Augustine, and Pope Innocent knewe well ynough that the Apostle sayde: Let a man proue himselfe, and so let him eate of that bread, and drinke of the cuppe. Neyther were they so ve-rye Asses, but that they knewe that infants wer not able to proue themselues. Agayne, they also which followed them, knew, that the Lorde had sayd: Unlesse you do eate the flesh of the sonne of man, and drinke hys bloud, you shall not haue lyfe in you. Then howe did the one sort so take the saying of the Apostle, that they iudged ỳ it doth not lette, and the other iudged ỳ it doth let, that the infantes may not be partakers of the Sacrament of the Lordes supper: Agayne, how did they vnderstand the saying of Christe to gather vpon it, that the infants of Christian men coulde not be saued, vnlesse they wer partakers of the sacrament of the Lords Supper: and yet these men haue thought, that no suche matter ought to be gathered vpon it, in so much that they? opinion is, that the infantes of the faithfull may be saued withoute the sacramentall communion? This diuersitie of expositiõs is such, that the one doth reproue ỳ other of errour, and ỳ in a matter of greatest waight: that is to witte, concerning the saluation of our Children, which we do care most for nexte after our selues. Is this expounding of Scriptures after an agreeable sense, I doe not enuey againste the Fathers, God forbidde: but I do blame their ouerthwartnesse which do condemne the giftes of God for heresie, in them whiche doe in this our age expounde the holye Scriptures, bycause that they doe in many poyntes differ one from an other. If the disagreeyng exposition of Scriptures be Heresie, lette them charge the fathers also with all, or else harken to that saying of the Lord: Iudge not according to the outward appearãce, but iudge right iudgement. As for me, I am so farre from condemning the labours of learned men, whether they be olde or new, bycause that they do in some places sundrye wayes expounde the holy Scriptures, euery one after his owne vnderstanding, that I doe for that cause reade them the rather, thã if they were all so seruily restrained to some one Doctors iudgemente, that no man might freely declare his owne iudgement. The diuersitie of opinions and expositions doth profite the wise man, so that no body do vnaduisedly condemne him, which doth dissente from him, and so breake the band of peace in the Church.

How vve agreably the fathers doe expounde the holye Scriptures.

As concerning this matter whereof we talke, I suppose we shall not vnfitly consider it, if the doyng of the Elders, whiche did admitte infantes vnto the sacramentes of thankesgyuing, be discretely wayed a part frõ the reason of it, whereby they were moued vnto it, ¶ that we may iudge thereof according vnto other godlye and probable reasons also, of which I will set forth some to be considered by the reader. The firste is, that the signe seemeth not to be denied vnto him, which is partaker of the thyng that is signified. The seconde is, that Christe is the Sauiour of his whole body, that is to say of the church, and that the infants also do belong vnto the integritie and wholenesse of the ecclesiastical body. The third is, that Christe sayde himselfe: Let the little ones come vnto me, and forbid them not: for to such doth belong the kingdome of heauen. For vpon these reasons me thinketh we may gather in this wise. Firste, if he which is partaker ker of the thyng that is signifyed, may be made partaker of the sygne, and the children of them that do beleue, be partakers of Christes death, that is to say, of the redemption purchased by him: Ergo they may be partakers also of the Lords supper. Secondly, if our little children be parcel of the Church, which is the bodye of Christ: it followeth that they do perteyne also to the communion, whereby according vnto the saying of the Apostle, we be one body, whiche doe participate of one bread, and of one cuppe. Christ is the feeding of hys whole body, Ergo of our childrẽ also. Wherefore like as the little children of the Iewes did apperteyne to the Passouer, the Sacrament of their redemption, as well as their parents: so our children also do as wel belõg vnto the sacrament of our new Passouer, as we. Thirdly, if Christe dyd vouchsafe to haue children come vnto him to embrace them, to lay handes vpon them, and blesse them, how shal we iudge them vnworthy to be admitted vnto the Sacramente of hys body and bloud, seeing that there is no mã, I suppose, that wil esteeme it to be preferred aboue christ himself?

With what cretiõ ought iudge the con sion of fantes.

And it seemeth that an aunswere may be shaped to the place of Paule: Lette a man proue himselfe, and so eate of that bread, and drinke of the cuppe: that it is to be vnderstanded of them onely, in whome it is daungerous, least they should vnworthily eate of the Lordes bread, and drinke of the cuppe, and so becomming giltie of the Lordes body ¶ bloud, shoulde eate and drinke their owne iudgement: as the text it selfe doth euidẽtly inough declare. But there is none of this to be feared in the little children of them that do beleeue: whyche I see not why we shoulde saye, that they be vnworthy of ỳ Lords table, seeing that they be worthy by ỳ grace of Christ, to be incorporate vnto him by Baptisme, although that they can not yet (bycause of theyr tender age) beleeue, much lesse cõfesse their faith, and trie themselues, which things be required of them that be of perfecte yeares of vnderstanding. And whereas the Apostle doth warne vs to trie our selues before that we do participate of this bread and cuppe of the Lordes, it doth not serue to make vs able to come to the Lordes table by this endeuour of proouing our selfe: but that we should not rashly, lightly, and otherwise disposed than it becommeth vs, vnworthily vse, yea abuse the Sacrament of grace, and offende againste the body and bloud of the Lord. This reason doth not hinder, but that the little childrẽ of such as doe beleeue, may be partakers of this bread and cuppe of the Lordes.

Thus I suppose a godly mã may thinke of the doing of the elders: and maye attribute the reason of hym whome Augustine did greately consreyne vnto the common opinion, whereby these thinges that are spokẽ of the spirituall eating, are drawẽ to the sacramental eating. And grace applyed vnto the sacramẽtall signes.

Some man will saye, Ergo doest thou so allowe the doyng of the Elders, ỳ thou doest condemne all that which hath bin receiued in all other churches after them? I aunswere, I condemne nor this, nor that, nor I wil not be authoz to any man, to goe aboute to bring in the Communion

Howe I doe allowe the doing of the Elders, and not impeache the prest vse.

of

Iohn, 7.

of infantes into the Church againe. Or that he shoulde iudge it mete to be vsed, & giue any occasion of strife. So that those things which doe concerne their saluation in Christe, doe remayne fast and sure. To be shorte, I doe not allowe that saying of Augustine, that infantes if they be taken out of this lyfe without the outwarde participation of the Sacrament of the Lords Supper, can not be saued: but I do allow that which is nowe a dayes holden, that it is not necessarie for them. Nor I will not striue, if it be sayde that for some incommodities, it is better that they should not be brought to the communion of the Church: but as for that, whether that it be lawful or no, that they may be admitted vnto it, my opinio is, that it may be talked vpon by wise men and discretely learned in Christe, so that it be done with a conuenient temperancie, and without all contentious reasoning. But of this matter I haue sayde peraduenture more than ynough, whyche I thoughte good to touche, to minister some matter to the settlyng of the consciences of godly folk, which are careful for the saluation of their little children.

III. When the Lords Supper ought to be Ministred.

The opinion of the elders not agreeable touching the tyme of the celebration of the Lords supper.

THe Elders did not all agree neither in thys opinion. There were some that helde the opinion, that in respecte of the example of Christe, the supper of the Lord should be celebrated onely at euening, and some in contrarye wise, in the morning: which is also nowe commonly vsed in the churches. The Lord hymselfe did prescribe nothing in thys poynte, touching the determination of the time, but sayde only, Do thys, as often as you drinke, in the remembrance of me. And the Apostle also when he added: As often as you doe eate this bread, and drinke this cup, you do declare the Lords deathe vntil that he come, he expressed nothing of the time certayne, yet for all that there is no man of vnderstanding but wil say, that it is mete it should be done in the morning, than at euening, although it were conuenient that we should be so disposed, that we should be as mete to holy things at euening, as in the morning. It was appoynted to the people of the lawe vnder an expresse determination of time, but the obseruance of time was set at large to the people of the new Testamente, that as the time falleth out moste conuenient for euerye Church, we may be at libertie to doe that whiche we haue receyued of the Lord.

Agayne, in Augustines time some thought that the Lords supper should be celebrated euery daye, as the Papistes do also of their Masse, on the other side some thoughte good to haue it seldener vsed, to purchase a greater reuerence to the matter. Augustine sayth thus: Some doe communicate in the bodye and bloud of the Lorde dayly, some do receiue it some certayne dayes. In some place there is no day ouerpassed, but that there is offering: in some other place it is vsed vpon the Sabbath or holy day, and Sunday also, and in some other, vpon the Sunday only. All those kinde kinde of matters haue their obseruations at libertie. Men do reade in Chrysostome vpon Matthewe, that these mysteries were celebrated in euery congregation of the Churche. And in Iischius vpon Leuiticus, we fynde this: It was the daye whiche is called the Lordes, or the Dominicall day: in whiche it behoued the Apostles in any wise to doe the mystical and holy things. For we also following their tradition, doe sequester the sunday vnto godly metings.

Dayly Augu.

Epist. ad Ianuar. cap. 2.

At length when the feruentnesse of the Fathers waxed colde in them that came after, and that the Ecclesiastical and brotherly loue beganne exceadingly to slake, it fell oute eyther by the negligence of the bishops eyther by the slouth of ỳ people, that the publike & ecclesiasticall Supper of the Lord began to be kept onely three times in the yeare, and that by a constitution Synodall, as it is red in the Councell of Agathense in this wyse: Let the secular persons which do not communicate at the feasts of the birth of the Lord, at Easter, and at Whitsontyde, not to be taken for Catholike men. But lastly this continued not neyther in ỳ Poperie, but it fel to kéeping the cõmunion of the Churche but once a yeare, onely at Easter. Thus the Lordes Supper came to be drowned by the Popishe Masse, so that it remayned stil in the church, but at that paint only of Easter: and that not whole, but the one halfe of it vtterly taken away.

In my iudgemẽt it is not so much required of the faithfull, that they should often celebrate the Lords supper, as to vse it wel, worthily and to their profite, for there appeareth no Decree, neither of the Lords, nor of the Apostles, howe oftentymes it shoulde be kepte in the yeare: nor at what tymes, but we haue an earnest admonition of the Apostles, that in no case we doe vse it vnworthily. They doe not offende whiche doe communicate oftener, nor they doe not offende, which do it seldomer, but they doe sinne agaynste the body and bloud of the Lord, whiche doe communicate more vnworthily, than it is mete for them. And I maye make the same aunswere vnto them, which do vary amongest themselues, howe often they shoulde haue the holye sermons: for some bée of that minde, that they would haue the preaching vpon the Sundayes onely, & some twice or thrise a wéeke, and some would haue them euerye daye. In those cases where there is no certain determinatiõ of the Lord, it is at libertie for euery Churche to assemble either oftener, or seldomer, according to the condition and commoditie of euery of them, so that it bée done deuoutely, Godly, and profitably.

IIII. Hovv the Lords Supper oughte to be celebrated.

WE wyll not entreate here of those wayes of celebrating the Lordes supper, which be at mens liberties to obserue, and may without offence eyther be kept or left, but of those only which be so requisite, that without greate offence they can not be neglected and omitted.

And first it is requisite, that thys sacramente be fully and wholly administred,

This sacramente is to be wholly minister.ed.

ministred, as it was instituted by the Lorde hymselfe, and deliuered vnto the Churches of the faithfull by the Apostles, and we do call that the full administration, whiche concerneth not the circumstances, but the substance of it. The substaunce of it is, that when the sacramentall signes, I meane when the bread is broken, and the cuppe of the Lorde distributed vnto the faithfull, the communion of his body and bloud must be celebrated vnto the remembrance of him. The circumstances of it were, that this Sacrament was instituted and deliuered at nyghte tyme, after Supper, whiles the Disciples were sitting at the table. These circumstances be not so necessarily requisite, but that it is lawfull for vs to minister this Sacramēt to the faithfull out of Supper seasons, in the day time, and as they do stand. For these poyntes be not of the substaunce of the Sacrament. We heare that it is well liked in some Churches now a dayes, to communicate without respecte sitting at a table, bycause they doe surmise that this manner of sitting dothe resemble the example of the Lorde. But that table at whyche it is redde that the Lorde sate wyth his Disciples at his laste Supper, was made ready to eate the old Passouer, nor there was no ceremony in it, which should be appoynted to the celebration of the mysteries of the new Testament, and sette for an example to them whiche shoulde come after, to followe. But it was some olde solemne vsage of that nation, wherewith none of the Disciples were offended. Wherefore we be not so childishly nor folishly, that we will surmise, that bycause the Lorde vsed the sitting at the table at the institution of this Sacrament vpon the occasiō of the old Passouer, that it was done to that intente, that he woulde prescribe a rule and example of sitting vnto vs at the Communion of the newe Passouer, like as there is no law set vnto vs herein nother to followe, in that he did institute thys sacrament not in the morning, but at nighte. Againe, it is not so handsome for a greate multitude of communicantes to sitte at tables in a Church, as it was for the Lorde to sitte with a fewe, that is to saye, with twelue Disciples at one table. Therefore I can not allowe that, whiche Martine Luther, otherwise an excellent man, wrote of this matter in the exposition of the Epistle vpon S. Stephens day in this wise. And the Papistes did bereaue the faithfull of Christe of the whole administration of the Lords Supper, giuing the one kinde only, (as they sayd) that is bread, and withdrawing the cuppe. These men do offende firste againste the manifest institution of Christ, who did not only institute the sacrament of his body by the breaking of the bread, but of his bloud also by the communion of the cuppe, and sayd expressly of the cuppe, Drinke all of thys. And it is very wicked and abhominable, that Eckius in his places durst auouche that the same was spoken by the Lord vnto the Apostles only, Drinke all of this, and that it doth not belōg vnto lay men (so he calleth the Lords people) bycause wee reade not that there were any lay men at that supper. If this reason may serue for the cuppe, it serueth also for the bread:

and

and so no piece of this sacramente shall appertayne vnto the Lordes people. For we do not reade of anye thing that was done by Christe, that maketh anye difference in them, and so what can followe else of this, but that not only the vse of the sacramēt, but that the effecte also of the sacramente shoulde appertayne to the Apostles only, and that it was in vaine that the Lorde sayd: Which shall bee shedde for you and for manye, vnto the forgiuenesse of sinnes.

Secondly: they do offend agaynste the very fulnesse of this sacramente, not without great sacrilege, of whiche thing we doe reade in this wyse: We do finde that some do receyue a portion of the holy body only, and do abstayne from the cuppe of the holye bloud, whiche men for as much as I knowe not vppon what superstition they be taughte to restreine, let them either receiue the whole sacramēts, or be restreined from the whole. For the diuiding of one selfesame misterie, can not procede but of some great sacrilege. Thus much in that place. And it is nothing to the purpose that the Glosar sayth, that it is written of priests only: for the text speaketh not of particular persons, but of ỹ whole receyuing of the Sacramente: and dothe playnely pronounce, that the diuision of one selfe same misterie, can not come but of some haynous sacriledge. Which should be false, in case that the receiuing of one kynde only, might be defended as lawfull.

Thirdly, they doe offend specially and enormiously against the ratification of the newe Testamente, the mystery whereof is specially instituted and recommended by Christe in the sacrament of his bloud, when he said: This cup is the new Testamēt in my bloud, which shal be shedde for you and for many, to the forgiuenes of sinnes. And the signification of his bloudy and violent death, forasmuch as he meante it to be an host for vs, dothe consist in the shedding of hys bloud. They consider not vpon what reason the Lord speaking specially of the cuppe, doth call it the new Testamēt in his bloud. Let them yet reade the. ix. Chapter of the Epistle to the Hebrues: whereas this mysterie of Christes bloud and of the newe Testament is expoūded in these wordes: Wheresoeuer there is a Testament, there must of necessitie be the deathe of the Testatour. For a testamente is ratified in the dead, for it is yet of no strength, as long as he liueth that made the will. Wherefore nother the firste was ordeyned without bloude. For when the lawe was redde by Moyses to all the people, he toke the bloud of calues and Goates, wyth water and purple woll, and hysope, and sprinkled the very booke, and all the people, saying: This is the bloud of the Testamente, which God commaunded vnto you. Thys is redde there. Loe all the people were sprinkled with the bloud of the firste Testamente, whiche was a shaddowe of this new, bicause it was the bloud of that Testamente, whiche God commanded vnto the people. And what mā of meuer so meane vnderstanding seth not, that Christe had a respecte herevnto as a figure, when he ordeyned the new Testamēt in his bloud, and saide: This is my blonde of the new testamēt, which shal be shed for you and for many, to the forgiuenes of sinnes: and that therefore hee added: Drinke all of this. So that they do offend againste this confirmation of the newe Testament, whiche doe vpon their owne rashe heade take awaye thys Sacrament of Chzistes bloude from the faithfull people, and do rent the Testament of the Sonne of God a sunder, whereas it is not lawfull to breake the Testament of any man: to the Galathians in the thirde Chapiter.

of

Of that that they say, that there is as much in one kinde as there is in both. Eckius in suo Enchiridio.

How is it then, that Eckius saith in his places, that there is as muche in one kinde, as there is in both: because that Chzistе is whole vnder eche kind, both in body and in bloud: and so saith he: The laye man vnder the kinde of breade, doeth drinke the wine also: and besides that, he doeth also in the person of the priestе that doth offer, spiritually communicate, not of the body onely, but also of the bloude. What doth he else in so saying, but condemne the institution of Chzistes Testament of foolishenesse and vainenesse: as though that when he saide severally of the cuppe. This cup is the newe Testament in my bloude, which shall be shedde for you and for many to the forgivenesse of sinnes: drinke of this all: He knew not belyke, that bothe the partes of thys Sacrament was in the breade, and that hee whiche shoulde receyue it, should participate not of the body onely, but of the bloude also. O blind bayardes, I will saye no more. The Lorde woulde haue the Sacrament of his bloude to be not in the bread, but in the cuppe: nor it is not possible for ever, that anye man can Sacramentally communicate thereof, but as it is instituted by him. Heare me you disguisers of the Testament of God: If there bee as much in one kinde as in both, and if the communion of the bloud be also in the bread, why be not you also contente wyth that one kynde alone? So that by your owne tale you do communicate twise: once in the bread, and secondly in the cup? Doe you not make that communion to be superfluous, which you do iterate in the cup, as much as in you lyeth, in vayne? But not in vaine, but for a moste abhominable gayne?

4 Fourthly, they do offend againste the tradition of the Apostle, whiche Paule dothe set forthe, saying: For I haue receyued from the Lord, which I doe also deliuer vnto you, &c. And yet withall they would be the successors of the Apostles.

5 Fiftly, they doe breake the custome of the Primitiue and pure Churche, in whiche the faithfull of Chzistе did many yeares communicate of both the partes of the sacrament, according vnto the Lordes institution, so that there was no difference betwixte the Ministers of the Churche, and the people of the faithfull, as concerning the communion, eatyng that they did dispense it, taking of it themselues, and giuing it also to others, as it is song in theyr Churches, to whome it is so conuenient, to take and to giue vnto the rest. And that the faithfull people in the primitiue Church did communicate vnder both kinds, there be testimonies prough and prough in the writings of the Fathers, and in the Ecclesiastical histories, and Decrees of the Popes. Cyprian writeth of the Lords supper vnto Cornelius in this this sort: For how do we teache and prouoke them to shedde their bloud in the confession of the name, if wee doe denye them (goyng as it were to warfare) the bloud of Chzistе? Or howe shall wee make them meete to the victorie of Martirdome, if we do not admitte them firste to drinke the Lordes cuppe in the Churche, by the righte of their communion? And in his Sermon De lapsis, the facte of the deacon is manifest, whiche did poure the bloud of the Lord into ỹ maydes mouth refusing it, whereof we made mention before.

And Hierome sayth, The Priests (saith he) which do serue at ỹ Lordes supper, and do deuide his bloud vnto the people, doe wickedly againste the lawe of Chzistе, supposing that the words of him whiche prayeth vpon it, doe make the Sacrament, and not his life.

And Ambrose to Theodosius the Emperour. Howe shalt thou (sayeth he,) stretch out thy hands, frō which the wrongfull bloud doth yet droppe downe? Howe shalt thou with suche handes receyue the Lordes bodye? With what ouersighte shalte thou take the cuppe of the precious bloude with thy mouth, when by the furie or rage of thy wordes, there is so much bloud wrongfully shedde? And in the Decrees we reade thus: Whē the host is broken, and when ỹ bloud is powred out of the cuppe into the mouthes of the faithfull, what is signified else, but the offering of the Lordes bodye vpon the Crosse, and the shedding of his bloud out of hys syde? And hereunto serueth the hystorie of Serapion, whiche we alleaged before out of Eusebius.

And this manner and custome endured not onely vntill Gregory the thirde, for the space of. 759. yeares, whiche wrote in this wise to the Bishop of Thuring: Let the participation of the Lords body and bloud be giuē to leapors also, if they be faithfull Chzistians: but also farther vntill Thomas of Aquines dayes, who dyed in the yeare of our Lord. 1274. there cōtinued whole and sound the communion of bothe kyndes in the churches, to the vse of the Chzistian people. For so he writeth: Forasmuch as the multitude of Chzistian people is growen great, in the which are both olde and yong menne, and little boyes, of whiche some be not of suche discretion, that they can haue worthye consideration concerning the vse of the sacramente: therefore it is well prouided in some Churches, that the bloud is not giuen to be receiued of the people, but that it must be receyued of the priest onely. Thys sayeth he. Wherby wee doe perceyue, that thys communion of one kinde was not yet vniuersall in his dayes, but in some superstitious Churches onely. For he sayeth not, Therefore it is prouided in all: but it is well prouided in some Churches, that the bloud should not be giuen to the people. And why saide he, Well prouided? Bycause of the olde, yong, and little ones, of whiche some haue not so great discretion, that they can vse worthy consideration aboute the vse of this sacramente. I thinke hee meaneth of that, that Paule sayeth, let the mā proue himselfe, &c. Whereof we spake before. But I beseeche you, is this a Chzistian prouision, to take away the vse of the holy cuppe from

They did communicate vnder both kinds in Thomas of Aquinos dayes.

Parte. 3. quæstion. 80. articulo. 12.

from all Chriſtes people, bycause of them which can not trie themſelues, and therein to breake the Lords Teſtament: Could they not haue bin reſtrayned ſo long whyles from thys Sacrament, vntill they ſhould come to full yeares of diſcretion? Agayne, Myghte not the Sacramente of the Lordes bodye be denyed vnto the Churche of Chriſte by the ſame reaſon alſo? For the Apoſtle ſpake it not of the cup only, but of the breade alſo, let the man trye himſelfe, and ſo eate of that bread, and drinke of the cuppe. But they would prouide leaſt they ſhould be thought to haue taken away the whole Sacramente from Chriſtes Churche: and yet withall they woulde haue a difference betwixt the prieſts and the lay people in the vſage of this ſacramēt. Marke by ẏ way that he ſpake of little children: whereby we may coniecture, that the communion of little children continued yet in the churches in hys dayes: and that firſt they began to be reſtreyned from the communion of the cuppe, till that at length ẏ whole Sacramente of the Lordes Supper was taken from them alſo.

A booke called Agendam in the Church of Auſburg.

Moreouer in ẏ yeare of the Lord, 1520. at the aſſembly of the Lordes of the Empire at Augſburgh, ther was founde a Booke in Sainte Maurice Church, whiche they called Agendā, in which there was a rubrike in this ſorte: Let the Deacon ſtande at the lefte ſide of the Altare, and gyue the Lordes cuppe vnto the communicantes.

To be ſhort, the vſe of both kinds cōtinued amōg the people of Chriſt, euen from the firſt inſtitution thereof, and at the lēgth in the yeare 1414. at the Councell of Conſtance, it was vppon a wicked headineſſe vtterlye forbidden. There be mentioned certayne inconueniences in apparance, why it was not mete that the people ſhoulde be admitted to the communion of the cuppe: but this was the very thing that they meante: In caſe (ſaid they) that the people ſhould communicate vnder both kinds, then there ſhould be no difference betwixt them and the prieſts. But howe friuolous a reaſon this is, and aduaūcing more the pride of the Prieſtes, than true religion, it dothe appeare not only by that which is before declared, but alſo by Chryſoſtomes wordes, who ſayth thus: Sometimes there is no difference betwixte the Prieſt and him that is vnder hymas when they ſhall take the vſe of the terrible myſteries. For to receyue them, we be reputed all a like worthy. Not as it was in the olde lawe, when the prieſte did eate a part, and the people alſo a parte, and when it was not lawfull for the people to be partaker of thoſe things of whyche the Prieſte was partaker: but it is not ſo now, but there is vnto all men giuen one body and one cuppe. Thus ſaith he: Therefore let the office of the miniſtration, and not the righte and authorite of the full communion, make the difference betwixte the miniſters and Chriſtes people.

We do conclude therfore, that the Papiſtes doe offende in this matter againſt the inſtitution of the Lord, againſt the integritie and wholeneſſe of this ſacrament, againſt the confirmation of the newe Teſtamente, againſt the tradition of the Apoſtles, and contrarye to the cuſtome of the primi-primitiue & moſt pure Churche: ſo ẏ it may appere hereby, that they practiſe to be Lords ouer Chriſtes flocke, and preſume to haue all thinges at their commaundement, rather than to do thoſe things, that of right or lawfull miniſterie ought to be done, as their owne wordes doe teſtify, when they ſay, that the laye men ought to be cōtent with that one kind: as that the people of Chriſte were boughte & ſolde vnder their dominion, & that they ſhoulde deſire no more, than it may pleaſe them to giue them. Wold God they woulde once come home, & acknowledge the enormitie of thys offence, and would reſtore the whole tradition of the Lorde to Chryſtes churches. At the leaſt way, let them read that which Cyprian wrote: For in caſe (ſaith he) it be not lawfull to breake the leaſt of ẏ Lords cōmandementes, how muche more is it not lawfull to breake ſo great & ſo hygh commaundementes, ſo belonging to the very ſacrament of the Lords paſſion, and of oure redemption: or by mans tradition to change them into any other thing than was inſtituted by the Lord? For to expounde the inſtituyng, & the teſtament of the Lord, and not to doe the ſame whiche the Lorde did, what is it elſe, but to caſt off his ſayings, and to neglect ẏ lords diſcipline, and to commit not earthly, but ſpirituall theftes and adulteries, when a man ſtealeth our Lords wordes out of the truth of the Goſpell, and doth corrupt and adulterate Gods commaundements.

Conſtā. Confeſſ. enſis.

Vpon ſecond Epiſtle to the Cor. Homil.

The Lords ſupper muſt be miniſtred conueniently.

Secondly, it is requiſite, that the Lords Supper ſhuld be conuenientlye miniſtred. It maketh a great matter whether the ſacramente whiche the Lord gaue, be diſpenſed whole or mangled. But the miniſter of Chriſt muſt not be ſo contented only: if he take nothyng from the tradition of the Lorde, but though he do miniſter the ſame wholly whiche he hath receyued, it is not ynough, vnleſſe hee be do it alſo conueniently, that is to ſay, by mete and conuenient meanes. For not onely he which doth receiue it, but he alſo which doth miniſter it vnworthily, maketh him ſelfe guiltie of the Lordes body & blood. And it were much better not to miniſter it all, than to miniſter it after an vnworthy ſorte. For it doth offende and hurt more, than if he doe not miniſter it at all.

Three reſpects of conuenient miniſtratiō.

And I ſuppoſe this may be in three reſpectes. Firſt of the perſon, whiche he repreſenteth that dothe miniſter. Secondly, of the thing it ſelfe, in the miniſtration wherof he doth ſerue. Thirdly, of the people whiche doeth cōmunicate. The miniſter doeth repreſent the perſon of the good ſhuard, that is to ſay, of the diſpenſor of the myſteries of God, of whom it is required, not onely that he be founde faithfull, but alſo that by the exāple of his faith and feruencie, he ſtir vp the familie of Chriſt which he hath taken in hande to fede, and do prouoke them by the worde to the myſticall table to folow him, and to his power, to make them ſo deſirous of heauenly foode. It can not be expreſſed how loathſome the vayne & light miniſter dothe make the gueſtes of this banket: and on the other ſyde how much the feruēt zele of the miniſter doth inflame their harts, if he doe ſauor thereof without fayning, both in wordes & life. Let him be bold of the hypocriticall players gesture of the Popishe Masters, meeter to make them that be presente to laugh at him, than to stirre the affections of any godly minde. Let his wordes, life and gesture agree together, so ỳ they al may be testimonies of a godlye disposition, and of the feruencie of a faithfull minister of Christ. Let him neuer forget what becommeth him to doe, so that he may honestly, and comely performe his ministery, not wittingly giuing occasion of offence to anye man. Let him eschewe the examples of Masking priestes, whiche though they be for the moste part vaine persons, yet they get thē neuertheless to the aulters to do sacrifice. Let him differ from their vanitie and manners, whose sacrifices and life he doth blame in wordes.

2 Secondly, he doth minister conuenientlye, in case he haue a consideration of those things which he doth dispence, and doth aptly applye himselfe vnto the same. He doth dispence the communion of the Lordes bodye and bloud. The bread which we doe breake, saith the Apostle, is it not the communion of the Lordes bodye, and the Cuppe of blessing, whiche wee blesse, is it not the communion of the Lordes bloud? Therefore let him administer this sacrament so conuenientlye, that it be a communion, and not a priuate Sacramente. He dothe dispense the remembrance of the Lord, or as Augustin saith in a place the sacrament of the remembrance. He shall do it conuenientlye, if hee doe ioyne the declaring of the Lordes death to the mistical communion, according to the saying of the Apostle, which saith: As often as you do eate this bread, and drinke this cup, you do declare ỳ Lordes death vntil that he come. For so he ordeined thys ceremonie in the Church of the Corinthians. It is not meete that the communion shoulde be dumme or in silence. But let some thing be redde to the people or song, of the historie of the Lordes death, as it is begunne to be vsed in manye Churches in oure dayes. He doth dispence the Eucharistia. The Eucharistia is a thankesgyuing, and a sacrifice of praise. Therefore let him loke ỳ this holy communion be concluded and ended wyth a publike giuing of thankes. He dothe dispēce the banket of brotherly loue. Therefore it is cōuenient that there shoulde be vsed some open exercise of Christian loue, & mutual cōmunion. Wher vnto he must traine and accustome the people, not onely by exhortations at the very acte & doing of it, but also by appointmēte of some certain order for the same. These be the principal points, whereof the dispensor of the Lordes table ought chiefly to take care and consideration, that he may conuenientlye and worthily frame himselfe vnto this sacramēt.

The third respect is of the people that dothe cōmunicate. The simpler & ruder ỳ they be, so muche the playner ỳ minister ought to speake of the misterie of the Lordes supper, that he may apply himselfe to their capacitie. And he must by all meanes beware of those two dangerous faultes of ỳ people: superstition & contempt. Of superstition, least they worship & honor that which is the signe, in stēd of the thing it selfe. Contempt, least they doe dwell in the bread & Wyne onely, not makyng the difference of the Lordes body: and therefore vnderstāding nothing aboue the iudgement of their eyes, do cōtemne that, whyche they percepue by syght and taste to be breade and wyne. Augustine gaue the like warning, where he sayeth: It is ynough for the wyser sorte, as touching the Sacramente whiche they shall receyue, to heare what the thing doth signifie: but we musse worke with them whiche bee duller, with somewhat more wordes and similitudes, least that they doe contemne that whiche they doe see. This sayeth he. In fewe wordes he must beware that he fall not neyther to the Corinthians, neyther to the Papistes, in this case of the Lordes supper. And to the intente that the people may receiue that which is giuen vnto them, not onely with theyr hands and mouth, but also with faith and hart, let hym speake all thynges which are to be sayde, in the vulgare and accustomed tongue: not the exhortations only, but the very wordes also of the Lordes institution, the prayers also, and giuing of thankes, so that he may be able to vnderstand all, and to assent vnto it in his heart, according vnto the admonition of the Apostle.

In case the number of the communicants be great, he must beware by all meanes, that nothing be confusely or negligently handled, as it is wont to be when they be many. Let hym bestowe all things into an order, that all maye communicate in honest and comely sorte. Let them reach out their hands with reuerēce, and receiue that which is giuen thē: which was the manner of the faythfull before that the Popish superstition reigned in the Churches. Loke in the Ecclesiasticall historie, and the wordes of Ambrose vnto Theodosius the Emperour, of whyche I made mention before. Lette the Minister way with himselfe, whether it be good for Chrystes people to communicate ofter or seelder. Lette hym marke the qualitie and condition of his Churche, and apply himselfe vnto it, rather than to the example of others, and he shall specially beate into their heades that saying of the Apostle, Let a man trie hymselfe. &c. And he must beware, that hee bestowe not the Lords Sacrament vnto suche as shall take it vnworthily, and to their condemnation: he can not bee thoroughly ware that there shall none at all come vnto it vnworthily: but for all that, he maye beware, that it bee not done thorough his negligence and wincking on, if he be not slacke in exhorting and admonishing them. Neyther lette him compell anye man to come vnto it, neuertheless in case he do see any man come vnto it, whyche he iudgeth to be vnworthy, lette him talke with him after the communion, to learne how, and why he came. And in case he come againe to it afterwardes, and not reformed, lette hym see that hee be called before the elders of the Churche, and so bee reformed. And in case the Minister wil frame hymselfe to these meanes and respectes of hys owne person, and of the Sacramente, and of the people whyche dothe communicate, it is possible ynough, that hee maye conuenientlye dispense the Lordes Supper.

Augustine against the Manichels. lib. 20. ca. 21

Eusebius de Ecclesiastica hist. lib. 7. cap. 9.

V. What is the true and lawful vse of the lords Supper.

A double vse of this sacrament.

HItherto we haue briefly touched that, whiche wee haue thoughte meete to be spoken of concerning the definition, institution, and ministration of the Lords supper, now it remayneth that lastly we speake of the vse thereof. And what the vse of Sacraments is generally, we haue mentioned before in the matter of Baptisme. And there is a double vse of this Sacramente, as there is also of Baptisme. One which is fulfilled by Christe only: an other the fulfillyng whereof is required of vs. For likewise as to our corporal feeding there be two things required: One that there be giuen vs good meate, which is able to feede and refreshe him that eateth thereof, else it shall be eaten in vayne: the other is that it be receiued, & conuerted into a whole and hungry stomacke, to be concocted and digested. For the meate can not norish vs, vnlesse we receiue it, no nor if it be receiued nother, vnlesse it be of a whole and hungry stomacke: of whiche the firste is to be loked for of the banket maker, the other of hym that eateth: and euen so we muste thynke in this matter also, that it is requisite firste, that there be giuen vs true meate from Christe the banket maker, wherewith we may be fedde vnto life euerlasting. This meate hee onely doth giue as the only and true sauioure. And therefore he crieth: Come to me all you that trauayle and be burdened, and I will refreshe you. Laboure for the meate (sayeth he) which doth not perishe, but which dothe remayne to euerlasting lyfe, which the sonne of man shal giue vnto you. Item: I am the breade of life. He that commeth vnto me shall not be hungry: and he that beleeueth in me, shall not thirst for euer. Item, And the bread which I will gyue, is my flesshe, whiche I will giue for the life of ỹ worlde. And, Verely, verely, I saye vnto you, vnlesse you doe eate the flesh of the sonne of man, & drinke his bloud, you shall not haue lyfe in you. He that eateth my flesh, & drynketh my bloud, hath life euerlasting, and I will rayse him at the last day. For my flesshe is meate in dede, & my bloud is drinke in deede, &c. So that there can be nothing required more neither in Christ the banket maker, nor in the meate whiche he hath prouided for vs, but that the same may be truly fulfilled in vs, which is done sacramentally at his supper, vnlesse that we be vnmeete to receiue thys meate. Christ himselfe doth feede vs, in that he dothe refresh vs, confirme and strengthen and conserue and keepe vs by his spirite vnto euerlasting life, by his body and bloud gyuen for vs: and so dothe vouchsafe to dwell in vs, and make vs incorporate vnto him.

VVhat is required of Christe.

Let vs see nowe what things be required of vs for our part, so that we may be fed of Christ, & what things be truly perfourmed by vs when wee be fed: which we doe make the other, of the vses of this Sacramẽt. And it is required of thẽ which are to be fed herewith, ỹ they vse not the Lordes table vnworthely, nor vncõuenietly.

Matth. 11. Iohn. 6

1 Firste, that we do not contemne it, like as it is mentioned in the parable of the Gospell of them, whych wer wedded vnto worldly matters, and refused to come: of whome the Lord doth pronounce, that they were vnworthy. These folke Christ surely will not feede. For howe shoulde hee feede the despisers of his supper: hee doth feede such as be desirous therof, and hungry, albeit that they be letted and restreyned against their willes from the outward communion of his bodye and bloud, but as for suche as do loath it, he leaueth them vnfedde.

2 Secondly, although that we do not contemne it, but doe communicate with other, according to the vse of the Church: yet for al that it is requisite: that we doe it conueniently, and accordingly, that is to say: Firste that we be members in the bodye of Christ. For he that is not yet grafted in Christ, but is still the member of a harlot, of Antichrist, Satan. &c. cã not be fedde with this meate, wherewith Christes body, that is to saye, the Church is fedde. Of this matter Augustine speaketh in this wyse: Therfore he that is in the vnitie of his body, that is to say, in the consert of Christian members, the sacramẽt of which body, the faithfull whiche do communicate, are wont to receiue at the Altare, he may be sayde truely to eate the body of Christ, & to drink the bloud of Christ. Item, But they also which do vnderstãd a right, that he is not to be reputed to eate ỹ body of Christ, which is not in the body of Christ. Itẽ, For these two sayeth he) meaning him which was fallen into hereſy, and him which liued wickedly in the catholik church) can be said, that they do eate the body of Christ, forasmuch as they be not to be accounted among the members of Christe. For to make fewe wordes, they can not be both at once the members of Christe, and the members of a harlotte. Finally, He that sayth: He that eateth my flesshe and drinketh my bloud, dwelleth in me, &c. declareth what it is to eate the body of Christe, not toaching the sacramentall eating, but truely. For this it is to dwell in Christ, ỹ Christ also maye dwell in him. For so he speaketh this, as though he sayd, He which dwelleth not in me, & in whõ I do not dwell, lette him not saye or think, ỹ he doth eat my body, or drink my bloud. This sayth Augustine. "

2 Secondly, it is required of them that doe communicate, that they doe not eate and drinke in mouth only sacramentally, but truly also in heart. Vnlesse that the heart be in all thys sacramentall vse of the Lordes supper, in the eares, eyes, hands, mouth, and stomacke, the truth of the sacrament can not be fulfilled in the communicants. For how shoulde the inwarde man be fedde when it neyther toucheth nor embraceth, neyther eateth nor drinketh this meate, & drinke of euerlasting life? The outward mã is not fedde, vnlesse hee doe receiue some meate to be digested in the stomacke. And how shal the inward mã be fedde, vnlesse he be made partaker of thys meate after his sort and condition.

VVith vvhat hart vve muste communicate.

3 Thirdlye, it is a greate matter with what maner of heart we come vnto this Sacramente, as it maketh muche to the matter also with what stomacke wee take thys corporall meate. Lyke as there is in that required therevnto a whole and a hungry stomacke, so there is required also hære a whole and hungry heart. The healthe of the hearte is true faithe, and the hunger is the good appetite vnto heauenlye foode. And it is not euery faithe that is requisite, but that whiche groundeth vpon the wordes of Christ, where he saith: This is my body, which is giuē for you, and, This cuppe is the new Testament in my bloud, which shall be shed for you and for manye to the forgiuenesse of sinnes. So that wee must beleue that the body and bloud of Christe was giuen and offered vp vpon the Crosse for the remission of our sinnes, & that the new Testamēt is confirmed, and the Sacramente thereof set forth and recōmended vnto vs in this supper. Whereby wee shoulde solemnise and celebrate the publike remembrance of our sauior and redemer. The hunger of ỳ heart is the grēdie desire of the grace of Christ, and of the heauenly foode, purchased vnto vs by ỳ death of Christ. This hunger can not bee in them, which be fed either of themselues or of some other, supposing that they may atteyne vnto euerlasting life, either by their owne righteousnesse, after the maner of the Turkes and Iewes, either by the iustice of others, as of dead Saincts or Monkes, Friers, Masse and Priestes. Nowe they which eyther come not to the Lordes table vpon contempt thereof, eyther although that they doe come vnto it, be not of the body of Christ: eyther came not worthily vnto it as they ought to come to the communion of an heauenly meate with their heart, and that a faithfull and hūgry heart, albeit that they do eate and drinke it sacramentally, yet for all that they do neither eate nor drinke the body and bloud of Christ in deede. Yea and to be yet more playne with you: whosoeuer dothe receyue these externall sacramentall signes, the breade and cup of the Lorde, without the vnderstanding of them, as the Corinthians did: and so do turne the mystical supper of the Lord, vnto a prophane Supper, not making a difference of the Lordes bodye, they do not truely eate nor drinke it. Yea and though that a man do vnderstand al ỳ points thereof exactly as they be taught by the wordes of Christe, and yet beleueth them not to be true, for lacke of the historicall faith: he vnderstādeth what Christe hymselfe reporteth of his body & bloude, and in what sense hee gaue the bread and wine to hys Disciples, and howe he did institute this outward actiō vnto the remembrance of him: thus farforth his vnderstanding is good, but for lacke of faith, he dothe not beleue that those things be true, which are appointed vnto vs to be kepte in solemne memorie, that is to say, he dothe not beleue that Christes deathe is auayllable to the redemption of ỳ worlde, to the forgiuenes of our sinnes, & for our reconcilement with God the father. Item, though ỳ a man haue this historicall faithe, and yet for all that dothe not appropriate vnto himselfe the grace of this redemption, but only vnto some certain saincts and iust persons, and therefore can not saye with the Apostle: Which loued mée and gaue himselfe for me. Item, though a mā do beleue ỳ Christ died for him, & yet for al ỳ doth not muche regard ỳ benifit therof, nor is not moued by the remembrāce thereof vnto thankes thankes giuing. Neyther is it to be wondered at, howe that should come to passe, seeing that we doe finde by dayly experience, that it is no straūge matter in the nature of mā, to make light of good turnes, and to giue smal thankes to the giuer of them, thoughe wee knowe that the benefites be neuer so great, and proceēding frō neuer so kinde a hart. Whosoeuer is of this disposition, doth not take of ỳ meate of euerlasting life, ỳ Lordes body and bloud, although that he amongst the reste do participate of ỳ bread and cup of the Lord. And we haue the like iudgemente of thē also which are not endowed with ỳ spirit of brotherly loue, and which by their mischiuous life do declare thēselues to be none of the members of christes body.

The hunger of the hearte.

VVho doe not eate nor drinke the bodye and bloude of the lord.

But I supppose it were laboure wel spent bycause of the vnlearned, to treate somewhat more at large of the eating of the Lords body. Firste as concerning the worde of eating, (and it is like also for the drinkyng) no man wil deny I thinke, that in this matter it muste bee taken in a Metaphoricall sense, and not in the proper sense. In this matter I saye, when we do speake not of the bread and of the cuppe, but of the body and bloud of the Lorde: The breade is properly eaten, and in his kinde, but Lordes body is eaten improperly, & Metaphorically. And there be some that do deny, that the very body it self of our Lord, which was giuen for vs vpon the crosse, is eaten, & the bloude it self which was shed for our sinnes dronke: and there be some on the other side that do affirm it to be true. Augustine doth deny it, and it is alleaged in the Decrées. The wordes be these. You shal not eate thys body whiche you doe see, and drinke that bloud which they shall shed whyche shall crucifye me. I haue recōmended a sacrament vnto you, if it be spiritually vnderstanded, it shall reuiue you. And albeit that it be necessarye to be visibly celebrated, yet it muste be inuisibly vnderstāded. And in the Decrées, the wordes of Ierome be alleaged, whiche in a place vppon Leuiticus sayeth thus: In dede men maye eate of thys bodie, whyche is marueilously wrought in the remembraunce of Christe, but of that which Christ offered vpon the aulter of ỳ Crosse, as of it selfe no manne can eate. And in the Decrées the wordes of Augustine be rehearsed, where he sayeth. This doeth offende you, that I sayd: I doe giue you my flesthe to eate, and my bloude to drinke, but in case you shall see the sonne of man going vp where he was before. What meaneth he by thys? Here he declareth the thing that moued them, and openeth verye plainelye wherein they were offended, if they could vnderstande it. They thoughte that he woulde gyue them out hys bodye. But he sayde, that he should goe vp to heauen euen whole. When you shall see (sayth he) the sonne of Man goyng vppe to heauen where he was before, surely you shall see then at the leaste wayes, that he doeth not beestowe out hys bodye in that sorte as you thynke, ye shall yet vnderstande then his grace is not consumed by byting. This saith Augustine.

De consecr. dist. 2. Cuncti. Dicit ie quidem.

Can. 1. quidem. August. in Ioan. tra. 27

On the other side there be some

Such as do affirme that the flesh of christ is eaten.

which do affirme, that the same very body of the Lord is eaten at the supper, which hong vpon the crosse, and the verye same bloude dronke, which was shed vpō ỹ Crosse. They haue respecte vnto the wordes of Christ, where he sayth, Take, eate thys is my body which is giuen for you: and, Take, drinke, this is my blood of the new Testamen whyche shal be shead for you, and for manye to the remission of sinnes. Thys sense as it is conformable vnto Christes wordes, so it doth also differ nothing from the first, if it be cōsydered a righte. For those places whiche wē alleaged out of the Decrees, do take the word of eating in the proper sense, as we say, that the meate of the body is eaten, and as the bread of the supper is corporally eaten wyth the mouth, and the cup dronke off. Surely in this sense, they do wel to deny, that the very body of our Lord, which was giuen for vs, is eaten, and the bloud it selfe which was shedde for vs vpon the Crosse, dronke of. For I thinke that there is anye wise body wyl saye, that it is so eaten and dronken of. And yet withall they doe not denay, but that the verye flesshe of Christe is eaten, and the bloud dronke of, in a conuenient sorte, like as they do not deny, but that the breade in some sorte is the body, and the cup the bloud of the Lord.

Wherefore there is no cause why that the faithfull shoulde striue vpon thys matter. If anye manne do saye, that the very bodye of Christe is receiued and eaten, and his very bloud dronken of at the Supper, we nēde not to be againste hym in so saying, so that he do take the wordes of receyuing, eating and drinking in the Metaphoricall, and not the proper sense: On the other side, if an other shall saye, that we neyther eate the very body of Christ which dyed vpon the Crosse, and was raysed againe from the dead, and was taken vp into heauen, nor drinke his very bloude, whiche was shedde vpon the Crosse, but the Sacramente of eche of them, that is to say, the bread and cuppe of the Lorde: we may not be againste him neyther that speaketh in this sorte, so that he vse the wordes of eating and drinking not in the Metaphoricall, but in the proper sense. Onlesse this difference be obserued in the Church there shal be no stay, nor ende of striuing, whereby the truth at length is darkened, and displeasure of them that do contende one againste an other. The one rageth and crieth out, heritike, heretike. Loe he eateth and drinketh nothyng at the supper, but bare breade and mere wine. For he denyeth that the very body of the lorde is eaten, and his verye bloude dronken of at the Supper. The other againe on the contrary part chargeth them with rawe flesshe eating, and raw bloud drinking. O what do you my brethren? Onlesse you had a wil to contende, you might long synce haue broken off thys contention by Christian discretion, and vse a peace and quietnesse in Christs Churche, but let vs procede.

Now we must consider of the sundry sorts of the eating of the verye bodi of Christ, and of the drinking of his bloud. I say of the sundry sortes, bicause we do not vse this meate and drinke drinke all in one sorte. There is one whiche is vsed for the tyme and moment, as we may terme it, and such as may be oftentimes iterated: And there is another continuall, perpetuall, and neuer ceasking.

That which is for a season and iterable, is when Christes bodie is eaten, and his bloude dronke of (as Augustine calleth it) so farre as perteyneth to a Sacrament, or in the sacrament, that is to saye, Sacramentally, as it is in the Communion of the Church, where the body is eaten by parcels, when the parcelles of the breade that is broken, bee receyued and eaten: and the bloud is dronke, when the cuppe of the newe Testament is receyued and dronke. The bread and cup of the Lord is eaten & dronke corporally: but that is eaten dronke sacramentally, whose Sacrament the bread and the cup be in the verye same sorte, as the sacramente of the bodie is called the bodie, and the sacramēt of the bloud, the bloud. Whereof we noted before in the exposition of Christes wordes. In this sense we do saye aright, that they do receyue, eate and drinke the Lordes body and bloud, whiche doe receiue eate and drynke the breade and the Cuppe, that is to saye, the Sacrament of his bodye and bloude in the mysticall Supper. If any man will contende herein, that it is done corporally: make mē a difference, so that thou graunte of the sacrament, that it is euen so eaten and dronke corporally; but as concernyng the substance it self, the sacramēt wherof is corporally receiued, you maye not grant that it is otherwise receyued than sacramentally.

The sacramental maner of eating Christs body is yterated.

This sacramentall sort of eating of Christes body, is iterated as often as the Lordes supper is celebrated, which is not yterated oftētimes to this ende, that we should yterate the receauing of the Lordes body in very dēde, lyke as we doe with corporall meate, which doth perishe after that it is eaten: but to the intent, that in celebrating the remembrāce of the Lordes death, according vnto his institutiō, we may fēde our faith in him, and offer a sacrifice of prayse vnto our redeemer. For as the bread of life once truely receyued, wanteth not after it is receyued, so it dothe not requyre to haue the yteration of receyuing. For it sticketh by them, fēdyng them vnto euerlastyng lyfe whiche are once made partakers thereof. Hereof I doe admonishe men, bycause of the ignorant, that they doe not referre the yteration of this receyuing to the very heauenly meate it selfe, but vnto the Sacrament thereof.

The cōtinuall and vncessing sort of eating of Christes body, is not sacramentall, but spirituall, and that onely hath power & efficacy to fēde vnto euerlasting life: whereunto we must apply those things whiche we alleaged before out of the sixte chapiter of John. This is obteyned by fayth onely, by whiche wē be incorporated into Christ: and beyng once incorporated, doe line in a continuall fruition thereof, by the grace of the redemption purchased by his flesshe and bloud. To eate and drinke the flesh and bloud of Christ in this sort, is to be continually refreshed, & continually to enioy this heauēly fode. For as wē alleged before out of

The continuall and vncealing manner of eating christes body.

Augu-

Augustine, this grace is not consumed with bitings. This manner of eating is to enioye the euerlasting lyfe, purchased by Christs death, not only in faith, but in verie dæd. Euen like as if a man shoulde saye, that a people deliuered from destruction, do eate and drinke the flesh & bloud of their captain, which suffred death to deliuer them, that is to say, to enioy life and heith, purchased through his death. Or else if a man shoulde saye, that we which be grafted into Christe by faith, do so eate his flesh and drinke his bloud, as the braunches doe eate and drink the sleth and bloud of the Vine, into which they be naturally grafted: which is lyker vnto the grace of oure Redemption, and refreshing: bicause they do vnceassingly e and contynuallye receyue bothe lyfe, and their whole nourishment, & power to beare fruit of the same. So in the Decrées Augustines wordes be alledged: They (sayth he) whiche do eate and drynke Christ, doe eate and drinke lyfe. To eate hym, is to bée refreshed, and to drinke him is to lyue. And vpon the wordes of the Apostle he sayth: To eate that, is to be refreshed, but thou art so refreshed, that it decayeth nothing, wherof thou art refreshed. To drynke that, what is it else, but to liue? Eate lyfe, drink life, thou shalt haue life, and the lyfe is whole still. For then this shall be done, that is to say, the body and bloud of Christ shall be lyfe to euery manne, if that whiche is receyued visibly in the sacramente, be spiritually eaten, and spiritually dronke in the very truthe it selfe. For we heard the Lord himselfe saye, It is the Spirite whiche dothe giue lyfe, the flesthe profyteth nothyng at all. The wordes whiche I haue spoken vnto you, be Spirite and lyfe.

We be verily made partakers of this continuall fruition of the Lords body and bloude, as sone as we bee incorporate and grafted into him, the Sacramente of the whiche grafting in, is baptisme. Therefore albeit that we neuer haue the vse of the Lordes supper, yet we be neuerthelesse partakers of thys heauely meat and drinke. And therevpon is ỳ spoken. Noman must in any wise doubt but that al faithful folk be thē made partakers of the body and bloude of the lord, when they be made the mēbers of Christ in Baptisme, and that they be not voyde of the felowshippe of that bréade and cuppe, thoughe that they do depart out of this world before that they doe eate this bread and drinke this cuppe, so that they do stande in the vnitie of the body of Christ. For he is not bereaued of the participation and benefit of that sacramente, whiche is founde to be in that, whyche thys Sacramente doeth signifye. These be the wordes of Augustine in that place. Nowe in case that there be a signification in the Lordes supper, of the true helthful, endelesse, and spirituall fruition, wherein we be refreshed of the flesh and bloude of Christe vnto euerlasting lyfe, and that the very attainment therevnto commeth by the sacrament of our grafting in: who seeth not, what manner of menne wée ought to be when we doe come vnto the mysticall table of the lord: Surely not such as should séeke the fruition of the Lordes body and bloude Augustin. De consecra. dist. 2. cum Quimans dicat. Serm. 2.

Iohn. 6.

How we be made verily the partakers of the continuall fruition of Christs flesh and bloud.

De consecra. dist. 2. Cum quimans.

What manner of men we ought to be when we come to the Lordes Table.

first therin, as being yet without feeling therof: but such as haue ben already partakers therof before by faith, and do couet to confirme and strengthen more and more the grace once receiued in our hearts by this Sacramental cōmunion of the Lordes body and bloud, and remēbrance of his deathe, and to giue thankes therfore to our redeemer.

You wil say then: Do you make the Lordes Supper to be only a Sacramentall eatyng of the bodye of Christe? Howe is it then that the fathers do attribute therevnto not this eating onely whiche is by the mouth of the bodye, but that also whiche is with harte and spirite through faith, whiche they doe call also spirituall? I answer. The spirituall feeding which I do also acknowledge to be in the Lords Supper, doth derogate nothyng of that whiche I haue said of the continuall and vnceasing fruition of the bodye and bloud of Christe. For that is nothing els, if it be wel considered, but a certain putting in remembrance of this, wherby & by ỳ efficacy of calling to remēbrance (like as certain clean cattel do fetch vp again those things ỳ they haue once eaté in the pastures, to chaw the cudde, and fully to digest them, the grace of Christ once receiued, is reuiued again in the harts of the faithful cōmunicāts, by the faith in christs word, which is set forth in the Supper. And this kinde of chawing the cudde, which is vsed in the Sacrament of the Lords bodye and bloud by faith, is not vnfitly called, The spirituall eating, forasmuch as by it the heauenly meate is called vp againe into the mouth of the hart to be ruminated: And doeth so by the swetenesse therof moste pleasantly refreshe our spirite: and the meate is also by thys order made more sauorie and effectual. And to speake further hereof by a similitude: Is not loue a certaine continuall life in the hart of the louer, so that he liueth rather in him whom he loueth, than in himselfe accoyding to thys saying, he that loueth is more presently wher he loueth. It is so no doubt. And yet as oftentimes as he is touched with ỳ special remembrance of the benefits of him who he loueth, so oftentimes the loue which he hath continuallye nourith in his hart, doth by some certaine newe increase growe and auaunce greater, so that he loueth his friende yet more than euer he dyd before. After the lyke sorte is thys spirituall eatyng of the Lords body. In déede it is not firste begonne in the communion of the Sacramente, but it is as it were renued sometymes, and made more effectuall therby with faith, and the remembrance of our redemption ioyned vnto it. Wherefore wée doe not take from the supper the spirituall eating of Christes bodye, in that that wée doe require the same to bée in all them that shal communicate, wherby they bée continuallye alwayes nourished with the body and bloude of Christe.

Here is moued a question, whether that the wicked also do eate the Lordes body at the Supper? Some do hold with it, and some be against it. In my opinion a Christian man ought not to bestow any labour to contende of the wicked, with whome they haue nothyng to doe, whether that they also doe eate Christ, seyng that they be the members of his body. They whiche doe affirme this, least they should seeme to teache curiouse things, & nothing to the purpose, doe holde, that this question of the euill and wicked is one of the chiefe poyntes of the doctrine of the Lordes supper, and that it is profitable and necessarie. That is their iudgement, and they do seeke the confirmation of their opinion out of the wordes of Paule, where he threateneth iudgement vnto them, which do vnworthily eate of the Lordes supper, for asmuch as they doe become guilty of the Lordes body and bloud, and specially out of the wordes of Christe This is my body: and so they thinke to proue, that the wicked also doe eate the Lordes body by the very same reasons, whereby they do proue that the body of Christ is corporally in the bread. It is (say they) Gods worde, This is my body, that is to say, In this is my body. The worde of God is not one thing to the faythfull, and an other to the vnfaythfull, but the selfe same vnto all. For the truthe thereof is not altered, by the vnbeliefe of men. For lyke as the worde of God is not true therefore, because that we doe beleue it to be true, euen so it is not false therefore, because that we do not beleue it. Ergo that is true as well to the vngodly as to the godly, whiche Christ saith: This is my body, and therefore bothe the one and the other doe eate his body at the supper. This is their principall argument, whiche is inough and inough, in case it be sufficient to proue that whiche they entende to teache, if not, the rest serueth to no purpose. Wherefore we will specially speake of that.

It is in deede the worde of God whiche Christ sayde: This is my body and that of it selfe is faste and firme, and whether we doe beleue it or not beleue it. There is no doubte in this, but by their leaue, that whiche they doe gather vpon it, is not so sure as they take it to be. They doe gather herevpon: Ergo, at the supper the wicked as well as the godly receyueth the body of Christ. Why: Bycause Christes body is corporally in the bread, according vnto the immutable truth of Christes worde. But as a certayne man sayth, Nil valet exemplum, à quod litem lite resolvit. That is to say: The example is nothing worth, whiche openeth one doubte by an other doubte. For that whiche they doe gather vppon the wordes of Christe, that the corporall presence of Christes body is in the bread, as though he had sayde: Take, eate, in this is my bodye: (whereof I spake before in the exposition of these wordes:) is not graunted to be true. The wordes of Christ are true and stedfaste, but the sense is not therefore streight way true and firme, whiche they doe attribute vnto it. He sayde, that the bread which he gaue, was his body, which shoulde be giuen for vs. He sayde not, that his body was corporally presente in the bread. And how he spake this, it is declared before. He would haue this bread to be the Sacrament of his body whiche shoulde bee giuen for vs vppon the Crosse. And so farre forth as the Sacramēt of the body is the body, so farre forth this this bread is called his body: and so farre forth the Lordes body, is eaten of them whiche do eate the bread of the supper. But yet for all that, it is eaten otherwise of the godly, than it is of the wicked. The godly doe eate it not onely sacramentally, but also truely, bycause they do eate it not onely with theyr mouth, but with theyr hart also: but the wicked doe eate it, not truely, but Sacramentally onely, bycause they do not eate it with theyr harte, but with theyr mouth onely: and so they doe eate the Sacrament onely, and not the very effecte of the Sacrament, which is not eatē but by faith onely: whiche Cyrill doth witnesse also against the obiections of Theodoretus: saying, For our Sacramēt doth not auouche and maintayne the eatyng of a man, leadyng the myndes of the beleuers irreligiously vnto grosse imaginations, and endeuoring to subdue vnto mans thoughts those things which bee conceyued by onely pure and assured fayth. This sayth he. In case that our sacrament dothe not auouche the eating of the man Christ, but of those things onely, whiche bee conceyued by fayth alone: how then doe the wicked eate Christ at the supper, seyng that they do eate and drinke this Sacrament without faith? The Christian religion knoweth but two manners of communicating at the supper, the one Sacramental, & the other spirituall. It doth acknowledge that the sacramentall way is comonly vsed of all communicantes, as well the euill as the good: but the spirituall, of them onely which do receyue and eate not only the sacrament with mouth, but the effect of the Sacrament also thorow fayth in theyr hart. Wherevpō came that in the Decrees: He that doth disagree with Christe, doth not eate his flesh, nor drinke his bloud, although that he do receyue the Sacramēt of so great a worthinesse vnto the iudgement of his destruction. This is in that place. What is it else to disagree with Christe, but to be vtterly a straunger vnto him and none of hys members? And surely the wicked be none of his members, whiche as Augustine dothe holde, doe not eate truely the Lordes bodie, for asmuch as they be not of the Lordes body, as wee declared before.

It is not there right the L vvord that vvith cate Lord &c.

1. Cor. 11.

De consecrationi, dis. sanctione. 2.

Augustine.

As touching the place of the Apostle, Whosoeuer eateth this bread, or drinketh the Lordes cup vnworthily, shal be giltie of the Lordes body and bloud. We do answere plainly: A man may eate of the Lordes bread vnworthily, but of the Lords body he can not but Sacramentally. They whiche doe eate it vnworthily, do two things. First they eate it, and secondly they doe sinne in eating vnworthily. What they do eat, it is playnely expressed in the Apostles wordes, when he saith: Whosoeuer eateth this bread, &c. he saith not Whosoeuer eateth of the Lords body, or drinketh of the Lordes bloud vnworthily. And in this doing they do sinne: against what? Here he doth not say, against the bread and cuppe of the Lordes bloud vnworthily. And in this doyng they doe sinne: against what? Here he doth not say, against the breade and cuppe of the Lorde, but against the bodie and bloud of the Lorde: he shalbe guiltie

1. Cor. 11.

(sayth he) of the Lords body & bloud. Therefore when the question is of the vnworthy eating of the wicked, what they doe eate and drinke vnworthilye: I thinke he shall not be made an heretike whiche doeth aunswere with Paul, that it is the bread and the cuppe of the Lorde. But whē the question is of their sin, we do say aright with the same Paul, that thei do offēd against the body and bloud of the Lord. Why? Not for that, that they do eate the very body of ỹ lord, and do drinke his bloud, Unworthyly: but for that, that they do eate & drinke vnworthily the bread and the cuppe, which be the Sacramente of the Lords body and bloud.

Iudas.

Here they do bring Judas for an example, and they do enforce, that he dyd eate the body, & dranke the bloud of the Lord togither with the rest of the Disciples. Wher vnto we do aunswere, that of so uncertain an example whiche the fathers doe so muche contende vpon, there can be nothing proued of certaintye. Hilarie doeth plainely deny that Judas was stil at supper wyth the Disciples, when ỹ Lord did institute the Sacrament of his body and bloud. For he sayth: After which things Judas the traitor is discouered, without whō the Passouer is made in receyuing of ỹ cup and breaking of the breade. For he was not worthy for the Communiō of the eternal Sacraments. For it is understanded ỹ he departed streight way from thence, for that, it is declared howe he returned agayne wyth great companye. Neyther coulde he of a truth drinke with him bycause that he shoulde not drynke wyth hym in the kingdome, whereas he promysed that all whiche at that time dranke with him of that fruite of this vine, shoulde drinke with him afterwardes. Thus sayth he. And forasmuche as the declaration of the Lords supper whych Luke did seite forth, semeth to mean otherwise, Rupert the Abbot doeth diligently shewe, howe it ought to be taken, that it varie not from the other Euangelistes: and what was the cause of it, whose exposition I will not refuse to set hereunto.

Hilarie doth holde that Judas was not presente, whē thys Sacramente was instituted. Mat. Can. 30.

Rupe. Abbo. poun. the p. of L.

The very same order of narration (sayth he) is in Marke, that is, that ỹ traitor was discouered whiles they were eating and drinking. Whyles they did eate the old Passouer, that is to saye, the roasted Lambe wyth the vnleauened bread, and that wilde Lettuce, in saying, Verely I say vnto you, that one of you shal betraye me, and so forth, as the text doeth declare, vntil that, that he sayde vnto Judas, Thou, hast sayde. And then that after the Lord did giue the Sacrament of his body and bloud to his Disciples, where there was now no mention made of that traytor, but the texte or order of the letter is otherwyse in Luke. For he doeth firste describe both the Passeouers, that is to witte, the olde and the new, in a whole narration, and then at the laste he addeth these wordes of the Lord: But lo, the hand of him which doth betraye me, is wyth me at the table. This diuersitie in the order of the narration hath bredde diuerse and sundry opiniōs, in great and catholyke fathers about Judas the traytor: where as some saye, that he was presente when the Lorde gaue the forsayde Sacramente of his his body and bloud to his Disciples. And a little after that: Therefore if it be needefull to know, or if we doe desire to know, whose reasen is the stronger, we must consider wel first, how that Luke doth not differ from the other Euangelistes, Matthewe, and Marke, in this narration, for as much as S. Augustine did not doubt of theyr agreement in this poynt, when hee semeth to folow the narration of Luke, but for them that do searche further of the matter, I find that when Luke had sayde, And taking bread, he gaue thankes, & brake it, and gaue it, saying: This is my body whiche shall be gyuen for you, do this in the remembraunce of me. Likewise the cuppe also: and hee concluded the narration, so that he sayde, After he had supped. Surely if it were after that he had supte, then it was also after those wordes: But loe se the hande of him whiche doth betray mē, is at the table here with mē: for (as it is sayde before) according vnto the other Euangelists, he spake these wordes not after he had supped, but as he was at Supper, and toke a pece of meate at supper, and dipte it, and offered it vnto Judas, who as John also declareth, wēt out immediatly.

Now the question is here, what this Euangelist neded to vse such a manner of narration. For it is the same whiche is called a Recapitulation. &c. And a little after. This is therfore the question (as it is sayde before) why the Euangelist Luke, writing of the Supper of the Lorde, would vse suche a manner of narration: And to them which do demaūd this, we must firste of all declare that he onely (I meane Luke) did note that these wordes of the Lorde were spoken at that firste supper of the figurall lambe, or Paschal labe, which he did eate with his Disciples after the custome, and manner of the olde commaundement: I haue much desired (saith he) to eate this Passouer with you, before that I suffer, for I say vnto you, that from henceforth I will not eate it, vntill it be accomplished in the kingdome of God. And taking the cup he gaue thankes, and sayd: Deuide it among you. For I say vnto you, that I will drynke no more of this kinde of vyne, vntill the kingdome of God be come. Thus Luke onely (as it is sayde before,) regarded to wryte, that the Lorde sayd, that he had much desired to eate the Passouer of that yeare, with his Disciples, whiche was the .33. yeare of the takyng vppon him of mankinde, and that he added this to bee the cause of his desire, bycause that he shoulde not eate that Passouer, and drinke the cuppe of the figuratiue Passouer, vntil it should be fulfilled in ỹ kingdome of God. Therefore it was cōuenient that he should set forth immediatly the manner of the fulfillyng thereof: and therefore putting ouer vntill an other time those things whiche were spoken at the same Supper, (he sayde) that taking bread, he gaue thankes, & brake it, and gaue it vnto thē saying, This is my bodie, which is giuen for you: This doe in remembraunce of mē. Lykewise the Cuppe also. &c. So that this wyse that was fulfilled in the kingdome of God, whiche was figured in that firste Passouer, and firste cuppe, for from that tyme th-kyngdome of GOD came on, the beginnyng of whiche kingdome was his passion, whereunto he was deliuered that same night to rise againe the thirde day after. So that I suppose that we haue tolde a mete occasion, why Luke onely would goe on with the narration of the old and new Passouer togither, & afterwards by a way of recapitulation or rehersall agayne, returne to the wordes, whiche as the other Euangelists do witnesse, were spoke before the Sacrament of this new Passouer. Thus much sayth Rupert. And Theophylactus, though he did somewhat stagger in this matter, yet he gaue this note vppon it: Some say (sayth he) that he gaue this Sacrament vnto the other Disciples, when Judas was gone. Therfore we muste do so likewise, and sequester euill men frō the sacrament. In whiche saying, though he doe not affirme the same which Hilarie and Rupert do hold, yet for all that he doth not so muche reiect this opinion, but that he dothe set forth an example therupon, to restraine euill folkes frō the vse of the sacraments. And I doubt not at all, but that Judas was gone away to performe the mischieuous treachery whiche he had entended, before that this sacramente was giuen by the Lord vnto his disciples. But let our brethren wrestle hereupon almuche as they like, they shal neuer obtayne that whiche they doe seeke: for although that it were manifest that Judas was partaker of the sacrament with the other Disciples, yet for all that it followeth not therupō, that he receyued any more, but that whiche he might receyue with his hande, mouthe, and stomacke, like a wicked person as he was. That is to say, the Lordes bread and cuppe, agaynst the Lorde, as Augustine sayth, but not the very body and bloud of the Lorde, for asmuche as he was voyde of Christe: not beyng a mēber of his body, but a betrayer of him.

Theophylactus.

But they doe reply, and say, that like as the worde and the gifres of God, the sunne and rayne be comon, and all one aswell to the euill as to the good, so be the sacramentes also. Of naturall gifts there is no doubt, God byngeth forth his sunne vpon the good and the euill, and rayneth vpon the thankefull & the vnthankefull, and the Sunne is not after one sorte vnto the good, and after an other to the euill: and the rayne doth asmuche good vnto the euill persons fielde, as it doth to the good and godly persons grounde, vnlesse it be by the speciall iudgement of God. And the sēde is good of it selfe, though it fall into a barren soyle, and beare no fruyte. And golde is golde, as wel to the euill as to the good. And meate doth as well fēde the thiefe, as him that hath gotten it by his true trauayle and labour. So standeth the order of naturall giftes through the abundance of Goddes goodnesse, but whether that the order of spirituall giftes be such, especially of Sacramentes, there may well be some doubte. The Lorde would haue (say they) his Supper to be common vnto all, as well to the euill as to the good: and whereas he gaue the Sacrament of his body and bloud, he gaue it to be bestowed vnto ỹ whole church, in which there be many euill

VVher the truth is craued comon wel, the euil to the good.

and

and good. Ergo the euill doe as well communicate of his body as the good. But howe is this proued? Chrysostome sayth, that the Lordes table dothe receyue neyther Judas nor any couetouse persons, but the Disciples onely. And the Deacon was wonte openly to crie: Approch you holy, depart you which be vncleane. If God wolde haue his table to be common vnto all, as well euill as good, then it is not lawfull to restraine the cuyll from the communion thereof, vnlesse that we may doe contrary to the Lordes will. Of the worde of the Lorde we muste thinke otherwise. That he wolde haue the preachyng thereof to be set forth indifferently vnto all menne. And that hath bene allwayes obserued in the Churches. Neyther are the Iewes, nor the Gentyles excluded frō the hearyng of Gods worde, yet not withstandyng they be excluded from the societie of the Sacraments, vntill that they be turned vnto the Lorde by fayth.

The worde is all one, whether it fall vpon the euill, or vpon the good. Surely it is all one in it selfe, but not all one in the myndes of the hearers. And the sacramente of the Lordes body and bloud is all one, whether it be receyued of the good, or of the euill. In it selfe it is all one, but vnto them which do receyue it, is not all one. The Gospell in it selfe, is the power of God to sauing, and it doth also saue, But it is not al a lyke to the vnbeleeuyng, as it is to the beleeuing. This sacrament is of it selfe the body of Christ, but to the wicked whiche doe contemne it, and to them which do receyue it vnworthily, it is farre otherwise. But we do not seeke now what it is of it selfe, which is giuen by the Lord, & what is set forth vnto vs in the Churche: but what is receyued of them that doe communicate, whether it be all one that is receyued by the euill and wicked, as that is receyued by the good and godly. The bread of the Supper is the Lordes body. So the Lorde did institute it, I do acknowledge and confesse it, and all faithful doe acknowledge what is gyuen of the Lorde, but vnto whome hath the Lorde gyuen hys body and bloud in this sacrament? I finde his Disciples, but the wicked and straungers from Christe, I finde not. Neyther is this sacrament the same vnto the that it is to the godly, nor they doe not eate the same in it, whiche the godly doe. And this opinion dothe neyther binde the truth of the sacrament vnto the persons of them that doe communicate, neyther dothe it make all things in it vncertayne, as some men doe finde faulte. God himselfe although that he be neuer so vnmutable of himselfe, he is not all one to the good and to the cuyll. For with the holy he is holy, and with the frowarde he is frowarde. Shall we therefore say, that his truth doth depende vppon the qualitie of the persons, and that we haue nothing left in him that is certayne and sure? God forbidde. Therfore to conclude, it can not be proued by the worde of Christe, This is my body, neyther by hys will, neyther by the qualitie of the wicked, nor by the condition of the Sacramentes, nor by that which is alleaged of Judas, that the wycked doe eate the Lordes body, and drynke his bloud at the Supper, onlesse we say, that they do it in this respect, for as muche as they do eate and drynke the bread and the cuppe of the Lorde: but I leaue of. They will not seme to be suche as shoulde holde with the Papistes, whiche doe maynteyne that the wicked doe receyue the body and bloudde of the Lorde: and yet for all that, they doe so tye them vnto the sacramentall signes, that they do suppose that they can not bee touched, no not of the wicked, but that the body and bloud of the Lorde bee touched withall. The Papistes, for as muche as they doe affirme that the substaunce of bread is turned into the Lordes body, are become to bee such laughingstockes, that they doe call into question what the brute beastes and myce doe eate, in case they doe eate of the bread: where some doe suppose that the Lordes body is deuoured of thē. Some say nay. Some say: God knoweth: The lyke matter is that also that they call into question, how long Christes body is in the mouth or stomacke of hym that dothe eate it. To whiche question some do answere, that it doth remaine there vntill that the breade doe beginne to leese his shape and forme: some say as long as it is mete to the nourishment of man, vntill that the operation of the nourishyng bee done: some say, that it is no longer the Lordes body when it goeth once towardes the place of anoydance: Other some say, that the body of Christe is taken vp into heauen, as sone as the bread is bruised with the teeth. Into these straights be they brought, whiche with their scrupulositie do ouerthrow the simplenesse of Christes worde, and presume therevppon to grounde the presence of his body, some in the bread, some in the forme and likenesse of bread, far otherwise than he meante.

Hitherto wee haue briefly noted what things be requyred of them, whiche shal be truly fedde of Christ at his table: and what it is to eate the flesshe and to drynke the bloud of Christe: and what we thinke is to be iudged of the eatyng of the wicked: nowe consequently wee haue thought good to say more, howe they do behaue thēselues in this matter, whiche be in deede the members of Christe, and do verily participate of his body and bloud.

Horrer true lyf full doe haue the selues the Lo supper.

1 First of all before the communiō, and before they doe enter into the church of God to communicate, for asmuch as they doe know that they be called vnto the Lordes table, and to the moste holy communion of hys body & bloud, they doe tarie the time of the supper with ioye, and prepare themselues vnto it with thoughtes passing before the same, and will most carefully take heede, least that if they do present themselues among the Lordes guestes with vnwashed handes (as the Prouerbe sayth) and without a wedding garmēt, it might be sayde vnto them: Friende, what do yon here, hauing not your weddyng garment?

2 Secōdly, when they be at the cōmunion, they do behaue themselues comly towardes ỹ outward things, which they doe conseyue with theyr eyes & eares. They do diligētly harken to the doctrine of the truthe, & to the wordes of the Lordes institutiō.

They

They doe pray faithfully with the churche, they do giue thankes vnto their redeemer for his vnspeakeable loue, that he offered by himselfe an hoste of reconciliement vnto God his father for the sinnes of the whole worlde. If it be the custome of the church, that the people shoulde sing Psalmes, they do open their mouths also to the sacrifice of prayse, and do with their lips also reioyce in ỹ lord their God: whē they come to the cōmunion of the Lordes table, they do receyue the bread & the cup, and doe eate & drinke it reuerently, as the sacramentall signes of the Lords body and bloud instituted by him. These things they doe outwardly with the reste of the faithfull as deuoutely as they cā: but inwardly in their harts they be cōueyed vp into heauen, and do looke vpon Christe himselfe with the eyes of their fayth. By thus doyng, they breake the shell, and enter to the fruite, the true meate & drinke of the soule, the truth and lyfe it self, and then they doe spiritually eate & drinke the body & bloud of Christe, that is to say, they do ruminate and renewe in themselues Christ which dwelleth within them, and are fedde & filled with his spirite. And beyng thus furnished, they do depart, being ready to suffer all aduersitie in this worlde for Christe their redeemer, so that they may truely say with the Apostle: I liue not now as my selfe, but Christ liueth within me.

3 Thirdly, when they be in this wise fedde and incorporate, not only into Christ as into the vine, but into the faithfull also as the branches of him, they doe liue of the spirite of Christ, and be kinde towardes theyr brethern, merciful towards the troubled and afflicted, liberall towardes the poore, humble & lowly towardes all men, taking nothing vpon them, but hanging wholly vpon the grace of Christ theyr Lorde, and redeemer. And where this is not, men doe but in vayne talke of the Lords supper. These fruytes ought to be seene to come of it, and al that stryuing vpon the corporall presence of Christes body and bloud in the bread and the cuppe, and vppon the eatyng of the wicked, ought to be sette a parte. Thus we haue as briefly and plainly as wee coulde, made vp the tale and laide parte of this matter of the Lordes supper, and haue declared what the Lorde commaunded vs to doe in this matter, and to what ende, and therefore doe ende this present treaty of the sacrament of the Lords body and bloud, accordyng vnto the diuision thereof made before at the beginnyng. My purpose was not to swarue from my accustomed temperancie, as nere as I could: sauing the truth which hath bene exceedingly tossed and troubled in this case. And I thinke I haue not ranged far from it. If this matter mighte be handled and opened according to the desires of all godly persons, there is nothing that I haue more longed for a great while, than that God would sende some mete and conuenient reconciler of disagreyng opinions, by whom this noysome and most hatefull variance might be taken quite away: so muche doe I misliyke to poure oyle into the fire, whiche burneth ouer fast already. And in case I haue sayde any thing that seemeth not to be direct inough to the purpose, let the godly reader consider how harde it is, yea impossible so to wade in a matter full of contention, that a man shall speake nothing at all that shall offende one or other of the contenders. In my opinion, for as much as it appeareth now by the experience of so many yeares, that this matter can not be attayned by wryting, bicause that mens mindes be so sunderly diseuered one from an other, the beste way were, that the churches should make their earnest prayer vnto the Lorde, & as it were fyre him vp, that he may put these great blastes and stormes to silence, wherewith the quietnesse of the Church is troubled, & mercifully restore vnto vs the cleare weather of moste pleasant vnitie, and concorde.

Of the Popish Masse.

The custome of euery age is the tyranny mercof.

HOw great the stregth of an inueterate custome is, he wisse full well, that called it the Tirannie of euerye age: whereof we doe fele too many proofes for our tyme in the corruption of our religion, and especially in the Popishe Masse. For asmuche as we se, that it dothe prevayle against the manifest truth, yea & that there be a number whiche would sooner speake agaynst the holy Scriptures, than departe from their superstitions rooted in them by the vse of so many yeares: so that it is no wonder, that the Iewes doe so obstinately sticke vnto the olde observation of Moses lawe, by reason of the wrong vnderstandyng of the manifest Scriptures. But what so euer becommeth of them, we muste preferre the manifest truthe before any custome, though it be of neuer so long continuaunce, and hath bene vsed so many hundred yeares. Wherefore nowe that we haue dispatched the matter of the Lordes Supper, the ease it selfe semeth to leade vs to speake next of the Popishe Masse, as the spitefull enimie and aduouteresse therof. And I thinke there is no ancient prescription to let vs, but that we may faithfully informe menne what they ought to iudge therof out of the Lordes worde. And the order of that whereof we will speake, shal be deuided into two partes, first touchyng the errours whiche are in the substaunce of the Popishe Masse, secondly of some accessarie errours & abuses thereof.

I. Of the Substaunce of the Masse.

TO vnderstand aright what the Popishe Masse is, we muste searche what the substaunce thereof is. For we doe not call the Masse commonly, those outward things which be beaten into the eyes and eares of the standers by: as those counterfayte gestures, the duckyngs, the knéelings, the apparell, and manner of the Masse, nor the Epistles of the Apostles, nor the Gospels, nor the Créede, nor the Pater noster, Kyrye eleyson, Sanctus, Agnus Dei, and suche other lyke, whereof we will speake whe the tyme serueth: but we doe call that rather the Masse, which the Priestes doe peculiarly ascribe vnto

That is the substaunce of the Masse.

The

The wordes of the Canon.

vnto their priestly dignitie and prerogatiue: so that it may be done by no Christian man, vnlesse he bée annoynted lyke a Priest, and ordeyned to say Masse. For euery man dothe not say Masse, that dothe reade any place of the Epistles or of the Euangelical Scriptures or Psalmes, or of the Créede, or that sayth the Lordes prayer. No nor if he doe reade the wordes of the Lords institution, and doe communicate of the Lordes breade and cuppe, he is not iudged by and by to say Masse. So that the substaunce of the Masse muste not consiste in those thinges whiche we nowe rehearsed: but in that onely whiche the Priestes, that be by speciall authoritie consecrated therevnto, may doe and none else. And that is that, whiche they doe affirme, that Christe is offered by the Priest at Masse to God the Father, as makyng meanes and intercession by that oblation betwirte God and the Churche. Whiche oblation shoulde bée auayleable for the forgiuenesse of sinnes, as well of the dead as of the lyuing. This opinion we doe call The substaunce of the Masse: so that it appeareth thereby, what we may call it, no doubte, a sacrifice for the sinnes of the quicke and the dead.

And that this is sayde of the Popish Masse, I thinke there is no Priest can denie. For they say at the Canō, euen at the first enteraunce vnto it: That thou wilt accept these giftes, these rewards, these pure holy sacrifices, whiche we doe offer vnto thée, chiefly for the holy catholike church. And after the eleuation which is as a token of the oblation, they do say: We doe offer vnto thy noble Maiestie of thine owne giftes & giuyngs, a pure hoste, a holy hoste, an immaculate hoste, the holy breade of euerlasting lyfe, and the cuppe of perpetuall health, &c. And at the ende: Let this doyng of our seruice please thee O holy Trinitie, and graunt that this sacrifice whiche I vnworthy haue offered vnto the eyes of thy Maiestie, bé pleasant vnto thée, and mercyfull vnto me, and vnto all the for whome I haue offered it, &c. And at the Masse for the dead: We do offer (say they) vnto thée O Lord, hosts and prayers, receyue thou them for their soules whose memory wee doe kéepe this day, make them to passe from death to lyfe. This geare is in those places to be sene.

VVhat things the Priests doe attribute vnto their Masse.

So that the Priests do clayme vnto them and to their Masses these three things. Firste, that when they doe Masse, (I speake as they are wonte to do,) they doe perfourme the office of the mediation betwirt God and his Churche, by the Masse. Secondly, that at the Masse they doe offer Christes body and bloud. Thirdly, that by the worke of this oblation, they doe obtayne at Gods hand all kynde of good things, and the forgiuenesse of sinnes, as well for the liuing as for the dead, and that they do apply the merite of Christes passion vnto whome they liste. If they be able to assure this, and make that come to passe by the authoritie of Gods worde, there shal be no reason to speake against their Masse, but if not, no Christiā mā ought to esteeme it, but rather with all their harte to reiect it, as the very hinderance and darkenyng of Gods truth.

Howe the Masse may be naught.

Wherefore we must first chiefly speake of this priestlyshe mediation, oblation, and efficacie of the Popish Masse: for in them there bothe consiste as it were the substaunce thereof, wherefore it is to be reiected. Wilfull men doe muche maruell for what cause this holy Masse, whiche is so gay a thing, and deckte with so deuoute wordes and ceremonies, shoulde be condemned. Howe can it be naught (say they) seyng that it hath so many good things in it, which no manne can finde faulte withall, onles he hath swoorne to be wicked. But they whiche be wise doe not iudge thereof accordyng vnto those things whiche be outwardely done: but they doe loke into the substance, and vnto the intent of them that doe sacrifice. When we doe say that a man is naught, we doe not blame those things in him whiche be created, and giuen him by God, but the malice of his harte, which commeth of Satan, whereby those thinges whiche be good in him, bee also made naught: likewise when we doe finde faulte with the Masse, we doe not finde faulte with the Lordes prayer, the Creede, the Epistles and Gospels whiche be in it, &c. but with the opinion of mediation, oblation, application, and suche other thinges whiche are creepte into it, contrary to Gods worde.

I. Whether that the Priest when he singeth Masse, doe play the mediator betwixt God and the Churche.

Gabriell Byell.

IF this matter Gabriell Byell writeth in this wise. At ỹ Masse our matter is hādled before the chief iudge Christe our God, by the priest as by the messenger going betwixte the bridegrome and the bryde, that is to say, Christe and his Churche, whiche doth speake in the behofe of the Church, obteyning for it by his prayers and sacrifice many giftes: sometimes the conuersion of sinners by grace, sometimes the preseruation of the righteouse in grace, sometime munition and defence against the perils of the worlde, sometimes the wardyng and sauegards of Angels, sometimes the refrayning of temtation, somtimes the deliuerie of soules out of purgatorie that should be purged, and so of many other things. This sayth he. And of this opinion it came to passe, that what soeuer they will obteyne of God, they goe about to get it by the office and sacrifice of the Masse. And this mediation the Papists do attribute not vnto their owne merites, but vnto the office of priesthode. For bycause it is the office of priesthode, to be a mediator betwixt God and the people, therfore as sone as they doe beginne to take priesthod vpon them, they do consequently vsurpe also this mediation. And that it is the office of the Priest to make meanes vnto God for the people, wee may see in the Epistle to the Hebrewes.

That the Priest is mediator betwixt the spouse and the spouse.

What shall a Christian manne thinke of this? I trowe nothing else, but that they ought of right to be required to proue this by holy Scriptures. For it is writte to ỹ Hebrues: No man taketh vpon him honor, as nother Christe did glorifie himselfe. Therefore wee doe require Scriptures, not to proue themselues to be lawfull Hebrew.

It must be proued that the Scriptures meane there is suche office ordeined of God. Heere.

lawfull Priestes and mediators betwixt God & the Church: but wherby they may teache vs, that God ordeined such an ouerwarde Priesthode of the new Testament, which should be like vnto that of Aarons, and of the lawe, not common to all faithefull, but for them only whiche be annoynted, and consecrated by the Bishoppes for to sacrifice. Wee will not inquire vppon the meanes, by which some doe endeuor themselues to atteyne vnto this their Priesthod, and the reasons and occasions wherby they be moued to be made Priestes: whereof there is muche indede to be seene in the Decrees of the Bishops: but the Bishops themselues take no care at all thereof, and so do at their owne will and lust admitte euery vile Iaueil into the order of priesthode, by whome the goodes of the Churche, whiche in tymes passe were appointed to the vses of the poore, are foolyly and filthily deuoured vp and wasted. How lawfully this is done, we will not seeke it out of the Scriptures: which we would doe if we did allowe that priesthode whiche they chalenge vnto themselues. Let them teache vs, that it is instituted of God in the Churche of the new Testament, and vsed by the Apostles. And let them teache it vs not out of the writings of the Fathers, nother out of the Councels of the Bishops, nor by the prescription of the inueterate custome, but out of the holy and Canonical Scriptures, by which only the consciences of the faithfull may be certifyed of the authoritie of Gods will, and institution in thys case, lyke as in all other cases also whiche doe concerne oure faith. And in case we seke and search the holy Scriptures, to see what ministers the Lorde gaue vnto hys Church in the new Testamente, we shal finde no mention of this Priesthode. But in a place alone before, where we haue spoken of the priesthode of the new Testament, we haue sufficiently declared, that this Popish priesthode can not be mainteyned by any holy scriptures: but that it is a meere inuention of Antichrist, wherby this worlde is blinded with innumerable superstitions, and ouerwhelmed with false religion. Wherfore we do send the reader vnto that place, as concerning this priesthode.

VVhether that Bishops and Elders were Priestes.

They say, that Bishops and Elders were Priestes. And in case, to be a Bishop and an elder be all one, as to be a Priest, then to be a Priest is to be a Bishop and an Elder. And so they should haue as many Elders and Bishops, as Priests, which none of them wil euer grant. But in case it be not all one to be a Bishop or an Elder, and to be a priest, & so he that is a Priest, is not streight way a Bishop or an Elder: then the order of Priestes is a sundrye thing from the order of Bishops and Elders, in so much that Gabriel Byell in his fire and twentie Lesson sayeth, that the Masling priest hath the highest degree in the policie of the Church. So that it is nothing which they do pretend, that Bishops and Elders were made Priestes by the Lord. In deede we doe reade, that the order of Bishoppes and Elders came from the Lord: but not so of Priests. Wherefore they must proue, that the Lorde did institute Priests in the Churche, when he did institute Bishoppes and

The office of a bishop and Elder.

Elders. The office of a Bishop is, that he be Superintendente in hys Churche, and take the charge of all: whiche is also ỹ office of the Elders, as we maye see in the Decrées, so there were many Bishoppes of one Churche, as we may see in the Actes, bycause that there were manye Elders, so the Apostles called themselues Elders. And whereas in the times following ther was one of the Elders chosen to be aboue the rest, it was done, as Hieronye writeth, to auoyde Schisme. But this serueth not to priestes, whome they can not for shame call Bishops and Elders.

Dist. xcij.

Acts. 20. 1 Pet. 5.

2. & 3. epi. Iohan.

They doe saye, that the Apostles, Bishoppes, and Elders were called Priests in the old Councels and writings of the Fathers, and in ỹ church stories: and they do alleage, Epiphanius, the Epistles of Cassiodorus, Platina, Eusebius, and Dionysius. If we did striue only vpon the name of Priestes, and not rather vppon the priesthode it selfe, which they do chalenge vnto them: they shoulde seeme to say somewhat. But seeyng that the question is not of ỹ name Priest, but of the Popishe priesthode: they must proue that by ỹ name of priesthode, there was ỹ same thing meant at that time, as beganne to be vnderstanded by it afterwardes, ἱερεύς in Greeke, is a minister of holy thynges, not he only whiche is consecrated to make sacrifice of hostes: but whosoeuer is set ouer the charge of godlye things. Wherefore they saye, that ἱεράτευμα is the charge of those things whiche do belong vnto God, and ἱερουργὸς, he that worketh in the holy things. In this sense no doubte the Apostles, Bysshoppes, Elders, Pastors, and Doctors, were surely Priestes, bycause that they were appoynted by God vnto the godlye and holy mysteries of the Kyngdome of God. But no mã can readily proue, that they were called Priests in the primitiue Churche. But we do not stande onely vpon the name Priestes, but we doe constantlye denye, that this Popish and Massing priesthode was institute by the Lord: whereby the sacrificers (receyuing the ceremonie of priestish anoynting from the suffragan Bysshop) doe receyue authoritie to cõsecrate for the quicke and dead, and to applye the merite of Christes passion to whome they list. Wherefore we saye, that the same priestishe mediation, which they doe vse in the Churche, as appertayning peculiarly to the office of a Priestes, can not be proued nor allowed.

Whether that the body and bloud of Christ be offered to God the Father, at the Masse.

The words of the Canon.

They say at the beginning of the Canon of the Masse: Wherefore we do humbly pray and beseeche thee most mercifull Father, by thy sonne Iesus Christe oure Lorde, that thou wilt accepte & bless these ✠ giftes, these ✠ rewards, these holy ✠ pure sacrifices. &c. Here is to be considered of what sacrifices they do speake of heere. They do speake not of some one sacrifice, but in the plurall number of manye: wherfore these words can not bee meante of the onely oblation of Christe, specially seeyng that they bee spoken before that there is made an alteration of the bread into the bodye, and of the Wyne into the blonde, whiche they doe attribute vnto theyr Consecration.

In case they do call the bread and Wine pure Sacrifices, they do it besides the ordinaunce of the Lordes Supper. For Christe did not offer bread and Wyne to God his Father, but hee gaue them vnto hys Disciples, and would haue them to be the Sacramente of his body and bloud.

They doe alleage to this purpose the history of Melchisedek, of whom it is redde in Genesis, that he mette with Abraham, when hee returned home, after ỹ slaughter of the Kings of the Eastes Countries, and broughte him forthe bread and wyne, in which fact they doe surmise that they doe fynde a figure of their Masse, bycause that Christe in the Psalme is called a Priestes after the order of Melchisedeck.

Gen. 14. Melchisedech. Psal. 110.

Hebr. 7.

But they shoulde haue marked more diligentlye, that Melchisedeck did not offer vnto God, but broughte forthe vnto Abraham being weery, bread and wine, wherewith his hoste might be refreshed, and that hee dyd it not as the Priestes of God, but as the King of Salem. And the Ebrew worde is not to offer, but to bryng forth. And the text is this: And Melchisedeck King of Salem, broughte forth bread and wine: and he was the Priestes of the high God, and he blessed him, and saide, Blessed be Abraham of the high God, who possesseth heauen and earth. This is the texte. Wherefore in that the common trãslation saith: For he was the Priestes of the most high God: as though that this were the cause, why Melchisedeck brought forth bread and wine, bycause that he was the Priestes of God: it doth not agree with the truth of the Ebrew text: forasmuch as hee did not that as Priest, but as King. For as priestes, he blessed Abraham: and so the same whiche is in the Ebrew: And he was the Priestes of the high God, is to be referred vnto that which followeth, And he blessed him. For Moses meaning is by an apt diuision, to expresse both the works of a king and of a priestes done by Melchisedek vnto Abraham: therefore he declareth of him first that he was K. of Salem, & that he brought forthe bread and wine to the meeting of Abraham. Secondlye that he was the priest of the high God, and that as a priestes he blessed Abraham. Wherefore when he should make mention of blessing, he set before, that he was the priest of the high God, least anye man shoulde thinke, that it hadde bin vnadvisedly done. And therefore it is, that the Author of the Epistle to the Ebrewes, when he doth compare the Priesthode of Melchisedek with the Priesthode of Christe, he maketh no mention of the breade and wine: but he speaketh of the blessing, where as he should chiefly haue spoken of the bread and wine, in case the bringing forthe of them had pertayned anye thing to the priesthode of Melchisedek, and of Christ. So that the Massing priestes can not father theyr offering vpon this history of Melchisedek, besydes that the bread and wyne can not serue to a propitiatorie Sacrifice, whyche they doe make theyr Masses to be. And what they doe obiecte vnto vs heerein, and what our answere is thereunto it appeareth in our boke called Anticochlam.

The oblation of the primitiue Churches.

In dede it appeareth, that this was vsed in the primitiue Churches that the richer sort did synde breade, wine, and other things for the refreshing of the powre, at the Communion of the Lordes Supper. For they did receyue and fede the needy at a common table, whiche was for that cause called ἀγάπαι, that is loue: wherof we do reade in the Apologeticus of Tertullia in this wise: Our supper doth declare the cõsideration of it by ỹ name. It is called ἀγάπη whiche in Greke is loue. What charge so euer it standeth in, it is profite and gaynes to be at the coste for Godlinesse sake. For in this refreshing we doe ayde all the nedie, This sayeth he. The lyke matter is touched also by Pontius Paulinus in ỹ boke De Gazophylacio. And this maner of cõtribution was called an holy, and an acceptable oblation vnto God, as we do reade also, that those things whiche were sent to the Apostle by Epaphroditus, for a relief from the Philippians, are called a good sauoure, and an acceptable oblation, and thankefull vnto God. But thys offering is not for some certain men only, as Priestes, but for all that be faithfull: which our massing priestes haue not a greate whyle any longer bestowed among the powre, but began to employ it to the maintenance of their lecherie and wanton lusts. Besydes that, there was no suche thyng attributed vnto thys oblation, as they doe attribute vnto theyr Masse.

Tertullian.

And after the beginning of theyr Canon they saye thus: Remember Lorde thy men seruants and women seruants. N. and N. and all that standeth heere about, whose fayth is knowen vnto thee, and their deuotion is also knowen, for whome we do offer vnto thee, or which do offer vnto thee, this Sacrifice of praise for them, and all theirs, for the redemption of their soules, for the hope of their healthe and saluation, and they do yelde vnto thee, theyr vowes, the euerlasting, liuely, and true God. Heere he maketh mention of a Sacrifice; but it is not suche, that it doth properly agree with their Masse, and that it ought to be offered by them only. For the sacrifice of praise, whereof they doe speake heere is generall vnto all the faithfull, so that it is to be offered of all meyne, as well priuately, as publickly: whiche they doe also testifie, when they say not simply, For whō we doe offer vnto thee; but do adde, Or which do offer vnto thee this sacrifice of praise, for them & al theirs, for the redemption of their soules, for the hope of saluation, &c. Which is nothing else, but which do praise and aduaunce thee, because that thou hast heaped vp vpon them & theirs, many and great benefites, thou hast redeemed theyr soules, and giuen the hope of saluation. Although manye of them do not say this in this sense, but do meane it of them only which haue bought the Masse for their money, whereat they doe stande. They doe apply this sacrifice of praise vnto them, bycause that it is offered by the Massyng Priest in their name & behoofe, albeit that they thinke of no suche matter, and be most vnapt and vnmete of all to sacrifice any sacrifice of fice of praise vnto the Lord.

The wordes of the Canon.

Whatsoeuer they make of it now, it is a cleere case, that the Lords supper was called by the old fathers the Eucharistia, that is to saye, gyuing of thankes, and sacrifice of praise: bycause that the faithfull did at that time vse to giue solemne thankes for the grace of their redemption obteyned by Christ. Whereunto the Lord had respect, when he sayd: Do this in the remembrance of me. And the Apostle saying: As ofte as you do eate of this bread, and drinke of this cup, you do declare the Lords death, vntil he come. And this sacrifice of praise doth peculiarly appertayne vnto the people of the new Testamẽt, so that after the sacrifice of our redemptiõ, it is to be offered in the Churche of Christe continually vnto the Lorde our redeemer and sauioure. And this God reserued vnto himselfe, when he did reiect the sacrifices of the Iews, as we maye see in the fiftie Psalme, where the Prophete singeth in the person of God, saying: He which doth sacrifice praise, doth honor me. And Augustine alleaging this place of the Prophete, sayeth, that the sacrifice of the newe Testament, is the sacrifice of praise. And Tertullian also against the Iewes, saith that the pure oblation is that, whiche accordyng vnto the prophecie of Malachie, is offered in euery place, from the rising of the sunne, vntill his going downe.

But this kinde of sacrifice also is not of some certayne men onely, shauen and annoynted, but of all Christian men, whiche being mindfull of their saluation whiche they haue receyued, doe gyue thankes therefore vnto the Lord, of whome also only it may be offered aright. For to the sinners the Lord sayeth: Why doest thou take my Testamente into thy mouth. And it is written also: The praise is not comely in the mouth of a sinner. Wherefore the Massing priestes did not much like with thys Sacrifice, but they deuised an other thing to be taken for the substaunce of the Masse, and to be offered by al, as well the euill as the good.

The wordes of the Canon.

This they do plainly declare, whē they say after the Consecration, We doe offer vnto thy noble Maiestie of thy gifts and giuings, a pure ✠ holk, a holy ✠ holk, an vnspotted ✠ holk, the holy bread of ✠ euerlasting life, and cuppe of ✠ euerlasting saluation. This can not be vnderstanded of the earthly bread and wine of the table. For neyther the bread can be called the bread of euerlasting lyfe, nor the Cuppe can not be called the cuppe of euerlasting saluation. Neither the Massers themselues do grāt that there remayneth still bread and wine vpon the Altare after the consecration, but they do hold, that they oughte to be taken for Christe hymselfe, for asmuche as he is the breade of euerlasting life: and so they doe affirme, that they do offer vp Christ himselfe at the Masse.

Fyrste, whatsoeuer they doe affirme, in case that they list to cõfesse that whiche is manifestly true, they can not doe that at the Masse with any truth, whiche Christ neyther did himselfe at his last Supper, nor dyd institute, nor commaunde vs to doe. Reade those things which be writtē by Mathewe, Marke, Luke, & Paule (for else there is nothing to be found of this matter in the writings of the Euangelistes and the Apostles) and see whether that Christe did at ỳ supper offer his bodye and bloud vnto God the father, and ordeyne that we should do the same. He brake bread, he gaue thankes, he gaue it vnto his disciples, and said: Take, eate, this is my body, which shal be giuē for you. And likewise he distributed the cup among his Disciples, saying: Take and drinke all of this: This is the cuppe of the new Testamente in my bloud, which shall be shedde for you, and for many, to the forgiuenesse of sinnes. And in both places he added, Do this in the remembrance of me. I praye you what is there in these wordes that may be applyed to the offering of Christes body and bloud at the Masse: Christ offered his body and bloud not at the supper, but the day following vpon the Crosse. And he did not commaund vs to doe that which he should do vpon the Crosse, but that we shoulde doe ỳ in remembrance of him, which he had done at supper. And why it is not conuenient, that we shoulde do that in thys matter, whiche Christe nother did at the supper nor commaunded to be done by vs, let them heare Cyprian, who writeth thus: Wherefore if Christe only ought to be hearde, we must not regarde what anye person before vs hathe thoughte good to bee done, but what Christe, who is aboue all, dyd before all. Neyther must we follow the custome of man, but the truth of God: seyng that God speaketh by Esay the Prophet, and sayeth: They doe worship in vayne, teachyng the commaundementes and doctrynes of men. And the Lord in the Gospel, sayeth: You doe refuse the commandemente of God, to establishe youre tradition. And a little after: To expounde the iustifyings and Testamente of the Lord, and not to doe the same whiche the Lord did: what is it elſe, but to refuse his wordes and to despise the Lordes discipline, and to committe, not earthly, but spirituall robberies, and adulteries, when a man doth steale the Lordes wordes, and doings out of the truthe of the Gospell, and dothe corrupt and adulterate Gods doings; This sayth he. Therefore seeyng that they can not make the oblation of their Masse authentically, neyther by the doing, neyther by the institution of the Lorde, what remayneth to be considered of theyr doynges elſe, but that, whereas they doe sette forthe with intolerable headinesse, the tradition and doctrine of manne, vnto the faithefull in the Churche of Christe, they doe corrupte and adulterate therewithall the commaundement of the Lorde?

Cuan-

Cyprianus. Lib. 2. Epi. 3.

Christ not offred.

Heb.

Secondly, the offering vp of Christes body and bloud is of that sorte, that beyng once perfourmed and done vppon the Crosse, it can not bee done againe. For Christ by offering himselfe once, is dead, and risen agayne: and it can not be, that he shoulde dye hereafter agayne. Neyther can the offering of Christ whiche doth serue for the forgyuenesse of synnes, bee without bloud. As we may see to the Hebrewes. The oblation and death of Christe be so linked togither: that the one can not be wrought indeede without the other. Therefore they which do goe about to offer vp christ againe in very deede, and that for the forgiuenesse of sinnes, they do by the same reason also goe about to crucifie him agayne. Manye do so truly in crucifying of the sonne of God towardes themselues: but no man can crucifie Christe agayne in his owne person, no nor offer him nother. And thereuppon it is, that hee hathe consummate, finished and made perfecte them whyche be sanctifyed, by one oblation for euermore: bycause no doubte that the offeryng of hym requyred to haue a bloudye deathe: And as for hymselfe, hee coulde not dye oftentymes, but once alone.

Thirdly, Christ can not be offered by any, but by himselfe: for as much as he is the only mediator betwixte God and vs. It behoued that not only he shoulde be the offering for oure reconcilement, but also that he shuld bee offered by no other, but by hymselfe, as being the chiefe Priest. I say offered, bicause I speake not simply or only of the delinery, in that he was deliuered by God the father, by Judas, by the Iewes, and by Pilate: but I speake of the offering also, whereas hee offered hymselfe vnto God the father, as a Priest, mediator, and reconciler.

Furthermore, it can not bee that the offering shoulde be greater and more acceptable vnto God, than hee whiche dothe offer it: whiche for all that muste needes bee so, in case the Priest should offer vp Christe in hys Masse. And an oblation or offering dothe please God in respecte of hym which doth offer it, but if he whyche maketh oblation bee not accepted of God, then can not the oblation be accepted. The sacrifice of Abel was well lyked, bycause of the person whiche did offer it: The sacrifice of Cain was misliked, bycause ỳ Caine himselfe was not liked. So the oblation of Christ (I meane the bodye of Christ) deliuered vnto death, and hys bloud thedde vppon the crosse, dothe please God the father, bycause of his onely begotten and onely beloued sonne whiche doth offer it, for whose sake it is so acceptable, that it is effectuall for the redemption of all mankind. By these arguments, wherin is neither doubt nor darkenesse, it appeareth sufficiently, that it cā not be that Christe shoulde be offered agayne. And now we must declare also whether that it be needefull or necessarie, that Christe should be often offered or no, notwithstandyng in that we haue declared, that Christ can not be offered more than once, it is sufficiently declared, that it is not needefull nor necessarie to be done. For vnlesse those things whyche bee necessarie to be done, may be done, they be without cause necessary, I meane of those thinges whiche wee oughte to do. But let vs by some speciall argument declare that it is not necessarie, that Christe should bee oftentimes offered.

It is not necessary that Christ should be offered agayne.

The offering vp of Christe was done for our sinnes, and thereby our sinnes be forgiuen vs. For so he sayeth: Whiche shall be shedde for you and for many to the forgiuenesse of sinnes. Ergo when the forgiuenes of our sins is once gotten, it is not necessarie, that the offering of Christe be iterated. And that is proued by that which we do reade in the Epistle to the Hebrewes: But whereas there is forgiuenesse of them (that is to saye) of sinnes, there is no more

Heb. 10.

Any

any offering for sinne. This proposition is so certaine and manifest, that it needeth no proofe, whatsoeuer the aduersaries do alleage to the contrary. This is the nature of Christes Sacrifice, that beyng once done, it hath finished and perfourmed ẏ worke as well of our redemption, as of oure reconcilemente, so that there is no cause, why it shoulde be iterated, after that it hathe once purchased for vs the forgiuenesse of sinnes.

And that the same is obtayned by the bloude of the newe and euerlasting Testament, it is so thought in the place before alledged: and the holy spirite himselfe doth testifye it vnto vs also, where as he sayd long before: This is the Testament which I will make towardes them, after those dayes (sayeth the Lorde) giuing my lawes into their heartes, and I will write them in their myndes, and I will not remember their sinnes and wickednesse anye more. It appeareth that this was spoken of the newe Testament, out of the Chapiter of Ieremie, wherby it is proued, that God will not call to remembraunce the sinnes of his faithfull, whome he woulde haue to be partakers of the newe Testament. And this grace doth the Apostle diligently confirme, by the vertue and efficacie of Christes oblation, which being done once vpõ the Crosse, hath made perfecte for euermore, them that bee sanctified. In whiche will (sayeth he) we be sanctified, by the offering of Christes body once done. And euery Priest doth stande vp to do sacrifice dayly, and offering oftentymes the selfesame hostes, whiche can neuer take sinnes away. But this Priest offering but an host for sinnes, sitteth for euer at the right hand of God, abiding that whiche is to come, vntill that his enimies be made his foote stole. For by one only offring he hath made them perfecte for euer whyche be sanctifyed.

Hieremie.31.

And according to this, he frameth an exhortation and sayth: Therfore brethren, seeing that we haue libertie to enter into the holye places by the bloude of Christe, by that waye whiche he did dedicate vnto vs newe and liuely, by the vayle, (that is to saye) by his flesche: and seing that we haue a great Priest, the President of Gods house, let vs repaire vnto him with a true hearte in assuredenesse of faith, sprinkled in our hearts, and shaking off the euill conscience, and washed in our body with cleane water, lette vs keepe the confession of oure hope, not wauering: For he is faithfull whiche hath promised, &c. It appeareth therefore by the premysses, that there is forgiuenesse of sinnes in the newe Testament, and that the consciences of the faithfull be clensed by the only oblation of Christes bodye once done, and that therby we haue an open entrie into the holy places, euen vnto the verie throne of grace. Wherefore we doe conclude, that there is in the newe Testament no cause why Christe should be once againe or oftentymes offered for our sinnes: forasmuche as there is obteyned vnto vs whiche do beleue in the bloud of the newe Testamente, forgiuenesse of oure sinnes, the accomplishment of Saintes, the clensing of our consciences, and meanes to enter into the holye places to the throne of grace, with assured boldnesse, nesse, by that only oblation of bym done once vpon the crosse.

Heb.10.

Hærewithall agreeth that whych Chrysostome sayeth: Likewise as a medicine in case it be so effectuall, that being once taken, it riddeth the disease, needeth not to be vsed more than once, else it declareth that it is not effectuall, if it must be taken oftentimes: after the same sort is thys oblation of Christ also. The sacrifices of the olde Testamente, were dayly renewed, bycause they were vneffectuall: but the oblation of Christe once made, hathe giuen perfecte health, and saluation, so that it is needefull to reuoke it agayne dayly for the forgiuenesse of sinnes, as the aduersaries do teach.

The obiections of the Papists, here.

They doe obiect whatsoeuer they thynke may serue for the defence of their sacrifice, to kepe stil their great gaine and marting. I speake of them which do without shame practise the Masse Markettes in the Churche. I know that there be many which are ledde with a zeale without knowledge, which do thinke that they doe God the most highest seruice in religion, when they doe maintepne the Masse. I beseech the Lord to open their eyes, that they maye acknowledge the truth, and leaue off to fight for, and to defend lies.

It hath bin euer (say they) the office of the Priest to offer for ẏ sinnes of the people, according to this saying: Euery Bishop taken from men, is appointed for men, in those things which be to godward, to offer giftes and sacrifices for sinnes, whiche can also haue compassion on them that do amisse: for asmuche as he is also compassed with infirmitie: & therfore musse offer also for himselfe in lyke sorte, as he doth for the people: We doe aunswere that these things were spoken of the high Priest of the olde Testament, and of the lawish sacrifices, and that they can not be referred vnto the new Testament, nor to any kinde of priestes not expressly ordeyned of God. Under the lawe the priests did offer for the sinnes of the people, but theyr Sacrifices did not take away sinnes, nor they dyd not cleanse the consciences of them, that did offer them, which things doe belong vnto the sacrifice of Christ only. What doth this serue to ẏ tymes of the new Testament, in whych our sinnes be wiped away by the onely sacrifice of Christ, so that there is no other host remaynyng necessarye for our sinnes.

Hebr.10.

Secondly, they doe alledge also ẏ place of Malachie: I haue no pleasure in you, nor I will receiue no reward at your hande. For from the East to the west, my name is greate among the nations, & in euery place there is sacrificed & offered vnto my name a clean oblation. The prophet (say they) in this place did foreshewe the ceasing of the sacrifices of the law, & the institution of ẏ sacrifice of ẏ new law, ẏ is to say, of christs body whiche is euery where offred at the Masse as a cleane oblatiõ. First this place is not a prophecie of ẏ sacrifice of ẏ new Testament to come, but it doth rebuke the Priests of the lawe, which offered the lord through their heinous sins: and he sayth ẏ their sacrifices be not accepted of God, bycause hée was displeased wyth the Priestes: so that those things which hée sayde hére, doe make more to the reprose than to the commendation of the Masling sacrificers: whose sacrifices in case that they hadde bin institute by God, as they of the lawe were, yet for all that they should not haue bin of any waight in the sighte of God. I doe muche maruell what they meane, whiche doe alleage thys place for their sacrifice, seeing that God sayth by expresse wordes: I haue no delight in you, neyther I will receyue any reward at your hand. Ergo God dothe not receyue offerings of them, whose persons hée can not abyde. He had no pleasure in the sacrifices of the Iewes. Why? Bycause they did beskowde the offering of their Sacrifices not for hys sake, but for their owne gayne. Behold the studie and deuise of the whole order of the Priesthode that is nowe adayes, and finde me one among them all, bée they neuer so many, that dothe not sacrifice for hys bellies sake, and for idleneese: But they reply: Albeit that we do displease the Lordes eyes, yet for all that the sacrifice which we do offer doth please, I meane the bodye and bloud of Christ, that is Christe hymselfe. Ah, vile men, what and if God should saye vnto you: I knowe Christe my sonne, but what be you? hée offered hymselfe vnto mée once for the sinnes of the worlde, who byddeth you offer hym agayne a newe?

Malach.1.

A cleane oblation.

Againe, if this place of Malachie must be vnderstanded of the oblation of the masse: then ther was Masling in the Prophetes dayes, and that in euery place. But if ye wil not haue it spoken of the time whith was then present when it was spoken, but of the time which was thé to come, (whiche is nothing so for all that) it followeth, that after Christes byrth now adayes there is Masling in euerye place, frō the East to the West: which for all that was neuer so, nor neuer shall be, till the worldes ende. But this is well vnderstanded of the sacrifice of prayse, whereby the name of God is glorified thorough-out all the worlde of all the elected. And they saye that it is written also in Malachie: And he shall purge the sonnes of Leuy, and he shall purifie them like Golde and siluer, and they shall offer vnto the Lorde sacrifices in righteousnesse, and the sacrifice of Iuda, and Hierusalem shall please the Lord, as the dayes of the worlde, and the old yeares. Loe, say they, the sauiour hath purged the Priestes of the Gospell to offer sacrifices, not in bloud but in righteousnesse: that is to say, the Lordes supper. I answere: He speaketh not héere of anye other Priestes, but of the Priestes of the law, as the Prophete began héere euen at the first, and therefore he calleth them playnely the sonnes of Leuy. Wherefore it is wrested, and vntruly handled when they doe applye this vnto the Priestes of the Gospel. God threateneth the Priestes of the law, that he will trie and cleanse thē: that is to saye, take out the wicked from them, as the drosse by tryall is taken from siluer, that when they be gone, the rest may sacrifice the cleaner. He speaketh not of the alteration of the lawish sacrifices, but of the cleansing and fanning out of the Priestes. And whereas hée sayeth: There shall bée some offering Sacrifices in righteousnesse, he dothe not exclude the lawish sacrifices, bycause that that they were bloudye, but he foreshewethe that the verye same shall be offered more deuoutely and purely than they were before. If the sacrifice of righteousnesse had bin the oblation of the Masse, then Dauid would haue hadde commaunded the Iewes in his time to haue song Masses, whereas he saide: Offer yée the sacrifices of righteousnesse. But when it is added héere, As the dayes of the worlde, and the olde yeares, is it not playnely specified, that these thinges are not to be vnderstanded that the sacrifice of the new Testamente should be in the Masse, vnlesse that we will say, that there hathe bin Masling from the dayes of ỳ worlde, and in the olde yeares? Tertullian doth expound this place of Malachie to speake of the sacrifice of prayse.

Iere. 4.

Malach. 3.

Mat. 26. offer sacrifices vnto the Lord.

4 Yet they do lay vnto vs ỳ place of the twelfth Chapiter of Daniel, when the continuall sacrifice is taken awaye, and the abhomination left vnto desolation, a thousand dayes twoo hundred and ninetie. The continuall sacrifice (say they) is the Masse, which shall generally cease almoste foure yeares at the comming of the abhomination, that is to saye, of Antichrist, when the Churches shall be desolate. Therefore they whiche in particulare Churches do cause thys continuall sacrifice of the Masse to ceasse, be the forerunners of Antichrist. I do answere: The continual sacrifice was the morning and euening sacrifice of the law, which was taken away before the destruction of Hierusalem. The abhomination of desolation is expounded by Hierome in this wise: It may be eyther absolute taken of Antichrist, eyther of the Image of Cesar, whiche Pilate had set in the Temple, eyther of the Image of Adrian on horsebacke, whiche standeth vntill this presente daye in the verye Sancta Sanctorum. They called the abhomination also, after the olde writing, an Idoll: and therefore it is added, Of desolation, bycause the Idoll was set in the desolate and destroyed Temple. Thys sayth he. And Chrysostome: He hath sente them agayne (sayeth he) vnto Danyell. And he calleth the abhomination, the Image of him, whyche should destroy the Citie: in the whiche béeing desolate, and the temple ouerthrowen, he did sette it vp, wherefore he called it also Of desolation. This sayeth he. But there bée some that saye that the Prophete spake of ỳ desolatiō & destructiō of ỳ Temple, done by Antiochus, whiche endured thrée yeares and a halfe, as we may sée, in the Machabees. And what abhomination of desolation Christe meant, we haue declared in our Commentaries vpon Mathew. So that it is asmuch as nothing, ỳ oure aduersaries do alleage out of this place of Daniel, for ỳ defence of their Masse.

Chrysost.

Mach. 1. 2. & 4.

Math. 24.

5 They doe also alleage the writtings of the Fathers, which after the manner of theyr tymes, doo call the Lordes supper The sacrifice of Christes bodye, But they spake neyther of the Popishe Masse, neyther after the proper, but in the improper sense, giuing that the name of a sacrifice, which is not a sacrifice, but a calling to remembraunce of the onely sacrifice of Christ. So Chrysostom saith: What then? Doe not wée also offer dayly? Wée do offer, but so that wée doe make a remembraunce of hys deathe. This is one offering, and not many. And howe is it one, and not many? Bycause that was once offered, and that is carried into ỹ Sancta Sanctorum, and thys is the figure of that. And a little after: This is done to the remembrance of the same, which was then done. For this (sayd he) doe you in the remembrance of me. We doe not make an other offering, as the chiefe Priest did, but we make euer the selfe same: yea rather we doe make a remembrance of the offering. This sayeth he. And dothe he not teache vs playnely, that the same whiche the Lord commaunded vs to doe, is not properly a sacrifice, but a remembrance of the only sacrifice? Wherefore we will not suffer oure aduersaries, to call theyr Masse a sacrifice of the Lordes body and bloud, in such sort that the bodye and bloud of the Lord shoulde not be able to be attributed vnto the Lords supper, nor yet that they shoulde ascribe vnto their Masse an oblation for the quicke and the dead, to the forgiuenesse of sinnes. But lette vs procede to the rest.

The writtings of the fathers.

III. Whether that by the Masse all kynd of good things be obteyned of God, and whether the forgiuenesse of sinnes be bestowed with all the Merite of Christes death.

Gabriel Byel Lection. 26.

Gabriel Byel writeth of thys matter: You must diligentlye marke, that the Priest by his office, is the messenger of the Churche vnto God for the people, and therefore when he offereth his sacrifice in the person of the Church, he may apply ỹ fruite and vertue thereof peculiarlye to some one or more. For this authoritie hee receyued at hys institution, when it was sayde vnto hym, at such time, as the chalice and breade was deliuered vnto him: Receyue power to offer for the quicke and the dead. Wherefore his office is not only to offer vnto God the prayers of the Churche, and the sacrifice in theyr name, but also for as muche as he hathe the chiefe degree in the policie of the Church, he may by the reason of his order of priesthode, determine and appointe the vertue of the sacrifice, and oblation. And further in the same place: For the vnderstanding of these things, we must nowe conceyue, that the merite or vertue of the Masse, may be vnderstanded to be auaylable in three degrees: that is to say, most specially, most generally, and in a meane sort, or specially. After the firste way, that is to saye, most specially, it is auaylable only to him, which saith the Masse at the left way, if he do it worthily: for asmuche as it is auaylable vnto him, as ỹ merite of euerlasting life, and of his essentiall reward, bicause of his charitable motion towards God, that hee will say Masse of his charitie, and finally for Gods sake, whome hee loueth aboue al things. This fruite he can not apply vnto an other man: for albeit that one maye deserue for an nother the first grace, or the increase of grace, yet for all that no man can deserue for an other the essentiall reward. For that is the same whych is aunswerable vnto the personall merite of euerye man, accordyng vnto that: Their workes do followe them. Most generally it is auaylable vnto

That the sacrifice may apply and determine the vertue of the Mass specially.

They say that the vertue of the Mass is auailable, most specially most generally, and in a meane sorte.

vnto the whole Churche, and from this vayle or gayne the Priest ought to exclude no man, at the least way, if he be a member of the Churche. The thirde way it is auaylable vnto him, vnto whome it is specially applyed by him that sayeth the Masse: and as concerning that auaile which is in a meane sort, there be appointed certayne special prayers and collects for diuers persons, and for sundrye thinges to be obteyned, and dyuers offices of the Masse for ỹ quick and the dead, by the Church, whyche hauing the spirite of hir spouse, doth not erre, in so ordering the matter. And yet this order were in vayne, if it shuld be auailable equally vnto al.

And as concerning this vayle or valne of the Masse, there is in thys meane degree an application appointed by the ordinance of the Churche, which doth institute in sundry parishes sundry parishe Priests: whyche are bounde to applye the Churches and sing Masse, specially for their parishioners quicke and deade. So there be sundrye menne instituted in sundry Colledges, benefices and prebends, to celebrate, specially for their founders, and for them for whome they be bounde by their foundations to pray for, then for thē, vnto whome they be bound by naturall right and kindnelle, as for their parents and other benefactors, which do giue them things both temporall and spirituall. But whereas there is no such bāde, it is at the libertie of the Priest, to applye it vnto whome he lift, in thys third degree: Whether it be to one alone, or to many equally, or to many not equally by euen parcels, but in sundrye degrees. But how muche is due to this man or to that man, in this or that degree, he onely knoweth which did institute this office, and in him there is offering made vnto the father for all, and the fruite of the Masse is deuided and parted, according to the determination of ỹ priest.

Lect. 27.

Item, Neyther dothe the malice (saith he) of the priest, excommunication or suspension, hinder in this maner of application. For they doe not take away the vertue of the sacrifice, whiche it hathe by vertue of the worke which is wrought. For as touching this vertue, that sacrifice hath not his efficacie by the goodnes of the Priest, but by the institution of Christe, and the merite of the Church, whose messenger the Priest is, when he saith Masse. Thys sayeth Gabryell.

1 Vnto this geare we aunswere briefly. First that they muste proue where this office (as they call it) to offer Christe vnto God the father, and to apply the merite of his death with all manner of good thinges, at the libertie of the Priest beyng the highest office in the policie of the Church, was institute eyther by the Lord, eyther by his Apostles.

2 Secondlye, let them teache vs, how that can be a meritorious sacrifice to deserue by the very worke as it is wrought, forgiuenesse of sinnes, and Gods grace: whiche is neyther instituted of God, nor taughte by his Apostles. The holy scriptures do acknowledge but one meritorious sacrifice alone, wherby we haue grace, forgiuenesse of our sinnes, and euerlasting saluation: and it is that whiche was offered vppon the Crosse. Thirdly, whereas they saye, that the priest may at his pleasure apply the grace and vertue of Christes Sacrifice to whome he list, it is as easily denyed, as spoken. The minister of Christe doth dispense the worde and sacramentall signes: but Christ doth himselfe apply the grace and vertue of hys sacrifice to whome hee will.

Fourthly, wheras they doe saye, that this sacrifice of the Masse hath efficacie by the merite of the Church, it is spoken to the iniury and derogation of Christes deathe. For all the whole merite not onelye of oure redemption and reconciliatiō, purchased vpon the Crosse for vs, but of the application of it also; dothe belong vnto Christe onely, and not vnto the Churche. The Churche is redeemed, and therefore in thys matter there belongeth no glorying nor boasting of merite vnto the Church, but gyuing of thankes. No man in ỹ world may be partner with Christe of the glory of merite. Fiftly, let vs consider also the manner of this applicatiō. First, the Masse priest dothe apply the merite of euerlasting life vnto himselfe, by vertue of the worke which he worketh. And this he dothe most specially. For orderly charitie (say they) begimneth at hir selfe; according vnto this saying.

Si fueris quarum diuisor particularum,
Hanc discas artē meliorē da tibi partē.

That is to say:

If thynges in partes for to diuide authorised thou be,
Learne well thys arte, that the best part thou alwayes keepe to thee.

For he that deuideth the partes, must learne to take the beste share vnto himselfe: So that a man maye wonder, how it were possible that any of them should miscary, whyche cā in one halfe houres space appoynt himselfe euerlasting life by saying a Masse. And what dothe Gabriell meane in adding. At the lest if he celebrate worthily, seeing that this merite, by their iudgemente, standeth not in worthinesse of the Maker, but in the institution of Christe and the merite of the Church, neyther is any thing at all hindered by the wickednesse of the Priest: Is there a respect of worthinesse to be had in celebrating when he dothe apply the merite of euerlasting life vnto himselfe: and is there no respecte of worthinesse to be had, when he doth applye, I wote not what grace, vnto others: Dothe the vertue of the worke wrought not profite hym when hee worketh for himselfe, and doth it for all that profite when he worketh for others, although he worketh it vnworthily: If this be the manner of the worke, I see not what certaintie there can be of this merite to him whiche sacrificeth for himselfe: forasmuch as he cāneuer be assured that he dothe worthily celebrate, Secondly he doth apply the vertue of the Masse most generally vnto all the members of the Churche. But there is no greate accompte made of this application, for it warmeth not their kitchen. It maketh a gay face to set forthe the dignity of the office of priests, that they haue power to sacrifice for all Christian men, as well quicke as dead: and to applye the merite of Christes sacrifice vnto them all. What is the better way to gain, that they do offer

Christe

Christe specially for their founders, benefactors, parentes, kinsfolke and friendes, and for them whiche doe bupe the Masse with theyr money, & that they do bestow the vertue of the Masse vpon them. Out of this heade spring and fountayne did flowe that innumerable multitude of the priuate Masses, of Massing priests, prebends, chauntries, and other foundations. And therupon it came, ỹ suche as were become riche by spoyle, extortion, vsurye, or any other vnlawful trades: whensoeuer that deathe drewe on, and that they felte the remorse of their consciences, and fell into the feare of hell fyer: they fledde to the defence of Masses, and founded certaine Masses, as they call it, and endewed them with yearely Chauntries or reuenewes. And thereof came also that filthy and foule marketting of Masses, when after the burial of the dead, they do for a pēce of money celebrate as many Masses, as the superstitious creatures themselues desire to haue.

But now if I may be so bolde as to aske them: In case that it is in the libertie of the priest, to apply the vertue of this sacrifice particularly vnto whome he listeth, & that to the redemption of soules: why doth he not then so redeeme that soule, for which he doth sacrifice out of hande with one Masse, that there shoulde nēd no more. To what purpose is it to Masse oftentimes, for the deliuery of one pore soule, if the vertue of one Masse be sufficient for the redemption of many soules, and that the priest may specially applye it, at his owne lust to whome he will? Is the vertue of the sacrifice of Christ insufficient for the deliuerie of one soule, if it be but once applyed? or be not the priests assured how farforth it is applied aright, and sufficiently? They saye that Christ onely dothe knowe what will serue for euery man: and yet for all that they do adde therevnto, that he doth dispence the vertue of the Masse, according to the application & determination of the sacrificing Priest. So sayeth Gabryell: I beseeke you can we call them any better than most mischeuous deceyuers & falce packers, which do stand vpon such vncertainties, and do not onely teache, but also sell so slipper ware in Christes Churche, and that in so earnest a matter.

2 Secondly, lette them tell vs the reason, why the rich mans soule that must be deliuered out of that purgatorie, which they haue deuised, should haue nēde of any more Masses, thā the pore mans soule, which they doe redeeme with one Masse alone: Yea rather they care not for the redeeming thereof, although they may do it with one Masse, vnlesse there bee some money to bee gotten thereby. When there dyeth a rich man, there is not an altare in the Churche, but there be Masses at them all, one still after an nother, and that not only at the buriall, but at the seuenth day, at the thirtie daye, yea, and the yeares day, to be payde by the heyres or executors: which are compelled still to paye, leaste theyr yearely gayne, (whyche they haue appoynted to remaine for euer) shoulde decay. Bee the riche mennes synnes more greeuous before GOD than the pore mennes sinnes, that they can not bee quickely cleansed by the vertue of the

Masse:

VVhy they saye the soules without Masse, so hurtfull vnto vs.

VVhy the rich mans soule hath neede of more Masses than the poore mās soule.

Masse: or is there more good to bee done for the Priests at the buriall of the rich, than of the poore? It is euen so.

The more is bestowed vpon Masses, the more Masses there needeth.

So that it followeth, that ye more cost that there is bestowed in Masses, the more Masses it is neede to haue: and the lesse cost that there is bestowed, the fewer sacrifices there needeth at the funeralles of ye deade. And therof doth arise this prouerbe, No peny, no pater noster. And a gayne, Small prayers, tyll we know who shall pay vs. Thus these market Mediatours do either vtterly despise the soules of the poore, or else they doe quickly dispatche them, passing them lightely ouer with a fumbled Masse or two: but they runne by heapes to the funeralls of the riche, as Rauens to a carren, and they doe fayne that they will deliuer theyr soules with their often yterating of their Masses.

How the soules of the dead in the Apostles tyme could be saued, when the Masse was vnknowen.

Thirdly, I would aske them this also, how it came to passe that the Apostles neyther knewe any thyng of this vertue of the Masse, nor taught the Churches nothyng therof: so that it is to be maruelled, what shift there was in their tymes to saue the faythfull. For we doe not reade any where in the holye Scriptures, that they vsed to sacrifice for the quicke and the dead. We doe reade of the breakyng of breade of the Lordes Supper, and of the Communion of the Lordes body and bloud: but wee doe not reade of the sacrifice and application of the Masse. And why that after this opinion of the sacrifice of the Masse was broughte into the Churches, the number and multitude of Masses toke not place immediately, but that there was vsed fyrste but one Masse in a daye, and that vppon the Sundayes, and afterwardes vppon the holye dayes, and at length dayly: so that in the olde Abbeyes, though there were there neuer so greate a multitude of Monkes, yet there was but one Priests in the house, and but one Masse in a weeke. It can not bee denyed, but that there was neyther so great a multitude of Priestes nor of Masses in our forefathers dayes, as there hathe bin in their tyme that hathe succeeded them. Were not our fathers trowe you as religious as they that came after them? Or dyd they not vnderstande thys vertue of the applying of the Masse? Or was not the number of them so greate which were meete to say Masse, by cause of the yoke of chastitie that was layde vppon them? Or dis they not yet knowe that chastitie was charged vppon the Massers, to thys intente onely, that there shoulde bee pretended a singular couloure or countenaunce of holynesse, whereby thys Masse myghte haue the more estimation and name? not to the intente that there should be euer a whit the more perfecter holinesse of lyfe, which doth not consist in abstayning from mariage, but in lawfull wedlocke, and so it was in the olde fathers dayes, and may be also in these our dayes. And therefore among the Priests this saying was muche sette by, that it was Sainte Bernardes rule: If not honestly and chastly, yet wisely and warely, that all the world perceyue them not.

Si non caste, tamen caute.

Besides that, the vse of concubins was not yet admitted, whiche was allowed afterwardes among the banishers and forswearers of lawfull wedlocke. Or was the effect of the Masse more effectuall at that tyme: so that there needed not so greate a multitude of Massers? or were there not so many and so fatte prebendes or chaunteries for the Massers, as there hath bene founded since euery where, through the superstition of the common people? For there is an order that no man should be admitted to the degree of this Priesthod, vnlesse that he haue some prebende or chaunterie whereby he may be fedde and maintained in idlenesse.

Lastly, let the Papists aunswere me, howe he can haue neede of this sacrifice of the Masse to be deliuered out of purgatorie, whiche hath purchased and bought him for his monie the promise of euerlasting life by the Popes pardons: so that by the vertue of them, he beyng absolued by his confessor at the poynte of death, shall immediatly without all doubte goe pure and cleane, not into the fyre of Purgatory, but clyme vp vnto the ioyes of heauen. If the Popes marchandise be approued to be good and effectuall, they do thrust the Massers quite out of the doores. If the Pope by his pardons do conuey the soule of the dead man immediatly vnto heauen: what good shall the Priestes doe him with his Masses? And in case that notwithstanding the Popes pardons, we haue neede still of Masses to deliuer suche a silly soule: then muste the Pope needes be a decepuer, and his pardons but baggage and trifles. But if we haue no neede of Masses, then is the masking Priestes a decepuer, and his masses but meere trifles. Thus that saying of Peter is verified in the one of them, yea truely in them bothe: They shall make marchandise of you with fained wordes. It is a wonder to see how the order of Priesthode can away with the Pope, which sendeth out his Bulles like a fishers angle, and selleth euery where in the Churche for monie the assured deliuerance of soules out of hande, before that there be any sacrifice of the masse made for them: and so decayeth and maketh theyr office to be starke naught. On the other side, it is as muche to be maruelled at, why the Pope dothe not stryke the masking priests with the lightnyng of excommunication starke dead, whiche doe vtter their Masses also vnto them, whome he hath absolued by his pardons from all their sinnes, at the very poynt of death, and conueyed vp vnto heaue by his authoritie. For in that that they do presume to sing masse for them also: what doe they else, but condemne the Popes pardons of falsehode and deceyte, and withall do chalenge vnto themselues this office of deliuering of soules?

The history of a certaine shoomaker.

These maters be so manifest, that without the light of Goddes worde, very shomakers and coblers may vnderstande them. When Martine Luther in the begiming of his race, began to dispute agaynst the Popes pardons, for that that Leo the Pope, had sent a certayne Friar with the marchaundise of his pardons, to bee solde euery where in Almaigne, and promysed forgiuenesse of sinnes and euerlastyng saluation vnto all them that would by them, & solde withall at a pryce a pardō to eat flesh, chese, milke and egges, whiche was in the 1517. yeare: It chaunced at Hagenow, that a certayne shomakers wife, for a peece of golde, bought hir a Bull of these pardons, that shee might be the better assured to be saued, and escape the fire of Purgatorie, and goe streight to heauen as some as hir soule were out of hyr body: For so that Bulle made hyr a promisse vnder the full power of the vicare of Christe. A whyle after, the woman began to be sicke, and was like to dye. And forasmuch as shee was out of hope of this presente lyfe, shee sents for a Frier, and shewed him the Popes Bull: and when shee had made him the confession of hir sinnes, she receyued full absolution of them, and so died. Hir husbande was not content that hys wyfe had gyuen a peece of golde for the Bull. Notwithstanding he saw hys wyfe bestowed to the earth: but as for those things (whiche the custome was,) shoulde be done in the Churche for hyr soules health, hee was at a poynt. Hee cared not for them, nor would haue none of them.

When the Curate of the parish vnderstood it, he was mislontent with all, and complayned vpon the shomaker to the head ruler of ỹ towne, that he was a contemner of Christes religion, and vngodly towardes his wyfe that was dead. The shomaker was sente for to come to the magistrate, and he toke the Popes Bul with him, and made his appearance. The Burgemaister sayde vnto him: Is thy wyfe dead? Ye saide he, shee is departed. What hast thou done for hyr (sayth the Magistrate) nowe that shee is dead? Mary (sayth he) I haue buried hir body, and commended hyr soule vnto God. Then sayde the Magistrate, Hast thou done nothing else? Hast thou had no care to haue hadde Masses song for the sauyng of hyr soule? No sayde the shomaker, I haue no care of that geare, for shee hath no neede to be saued by Masses, for that that shee was immediately conueyed to heauen, Conueyed to heauen (sayd the Magistrate)? Howe arte thou sure of that? I am well assured of it (sayth he) for I haue an assured and a trusty testimony thereof. Hast thou an assured testimonial thereof, and worthy to be credited sayde the Magistrate, that thy wyfe is in heauen? Shewe mee that testimoniall. The shomaker drew forth ỹ Popes bul, & deliuered it to the magistrate, and desired to haue it read. And hee toke the Bull and deliuered it to the priest to be read: who was also ther presente for the same matter, as his accuser. When he sawe the Popes bull, firste he was abashed and refused to read it: at length he was compelled by the magistrate to reade it. And when it was reade, they were all ashamed bothe the magistrate & the parrishe Priest also, and durst nothyng say agaynst it. Then sayd the Shomaker: Bee you Iudges whether I haue a sufficiēt testimoniall for my wiues soule or no, that she is conueyed not into Purgatory, but into Heauen. This testimoniall cost my wyfe a peece of golde. And why then doth our maister Curate beare me in hande, that my wyfe whiche is deade, muste of necessitie be deliuered by his Masses? If he do well in it, then my wyfe is deceyued by the Pope. If she were not deceyued by him, then maister Curate goeth about to beguyle me. And when neither the Magistrats nor the parishe Priest had any thyng to reply agaynst it, they discharged the shomaker cleane from them. For they durste not finde faulte with the Popes Bull. But no more of this matter.

Nowe that we haue refuted that false applying of the merite of christ whiche they doe attribute vnto the Popishe Masse, wee haue thought good after that to set forth the same whiche is true and consonant to the holy Scriptures, bycause of the simpler sorte of men. And in this matter wee muste firste see to whome the authoritie doth belong, to apply and dispece the merite of Christes death. Secondly, whose parte it is to minister vnto this applycation, and how. Thirdly by whome, and howe it is receyued.

Firste, no man can say the contrary, but that all power whiche may serue to saue sinners, pertayneth vnto Christe onely, giuen vnto him by his father by whome also he is ordayned the Lorde of all things that be in heaue and in the earth. So that the free power is in him to dispense and apply the merite of his death, to whome, howe, and when he willeth. He sayth: All power is giuen to me of my father. And, No man knoweth the sonne but the father, Nor no man knoweth the Father but the sonne, and he to whome the sonne will reueale him. There is one lord, sayth the Apostle: if there be one Lorde, that is to witte Christe, then there is but one that hath free power to dispense and apply of his grace, to whome, as much, and when he will. And he dothe reueale him selfe by his spirite, by whome he dothe also dispence his giftes.

Secondly, there be in deede sundry mynisteries, but there is but one selfe same Lorde. He hath set mynisters in his Church, Apostles, Euāgelists, Prophets, Pastors and Doctors: there is no mention made of Masking Priestes, by whome his body, whiche is the Churche, may be edified. These be the assistant workers of Christe, the mynisters of Gods mysteries, who onely dothe gyue the increase.

The mynisterie of those folke, is to reporte the Gospell of the kyngdome, and to sette it forth vnto the worlde, and truthly to preache the worde of lyfe. By this preachyng they doe, (as much as in them lyeth,) dispence vnto men the grace of reconcilement, gotten by the bloud of Christe. The Gospell sayth (the Apostle) is the vertue of God, to saue: and the preachyng thereof the Lorde committed vnto them. For so it pleased God that by the foolishnesse of preaching, he might saue the beleeuers.

Thirdly, it is not possible that the grace and merite of Christes bloude (in as muche as it is dispenced by the mynisterie of the preachyng of the Gospell) can be receyued of any others than of them, whose harts God openeth by his holy spirite. The exāple of the woman that solde purple is well knowen. And they be those, whome God hath predestined and ordayned vnto lyfe.

To whom the ministery of this dispensation belongeth. 1. Cor. 12.

How they do minister

Math. & Marc. vlt. 1. Cor. 1.

By whom, and howe this dispensation is receiued.

Acters. 16.

Actes.13.

Rom.1.

1.Cor.11.

They do take holde of this grace by faith, when they do earnestly beleue the worde of grace. So the Apostle, when he had sayde, that the Gospell is the power of God vnto saluatiō, he added. Vnto euery beleuer. And to the Corinthians, he saith not absolutely that it pleased God by the foolishnelle of preachyng to saue, but he added, ỹ beleuers. For this cause the same is oftentymes driuen into our heads by Christe: He that beleueth in mẽ, hath euerlastyng lyfe: & the Apostle doth stiffly ascribe iustification vnto faith. And Christ himself doth attribute cõdemnation vnto vnbeliefe, saying: He that beleueth not, shall be condemned. And he that beleueth not is already condẽned, because he dothe not beleue in the name of the only begotten sonne of God.

Iohn.3.

Hereby I suppose it is made manifest, that the true and lawfull minister of Christ hath no more power in the Churche, than is committed vnto him: and that it can not be, that he may apply bothe more of ỹ grace of the bloud of Christe, and also vnto other men, than so much, and vnto such as be appoynted by God to embrace those things by faith whiche are set forth and offered. Wherfore the Massing priest hath not onely no power to dispence the merite and grace of Christes bloud (as it is pretended) particularly to whome he listeth, but he hath not so much as the ministery or office to serue the Lord in any suche dispensation. For the Masse is not an instrumente of this application, forasmuche as it is not instituted by Christe. Neyther doe the Massers once preach the Gospell to them that be aliue, much lesse to them that be dead: Vnto whome for all that they do vainely say, that they do apply the merite of Christes passion by the vertue of the Masse. So that all whatsoeuer the Papists do teach vs of the vertue of this application, is nothing else but a crafty deuice of barterynge, and makyng marchandise in the Churche.

The conclusion of this part.

The Seconde parte of the Popish Masse, of the accessorie errours and abuses thereof.

I Saide, that I would speake in the seconde place of this matter, of the accidentalles of the Popish Masse: which the Papistes do make so necessary, that they can not be omitted without deadly sinne. And that I may in some order talke of them, I will folow that difference of them, whiche Gabriell Byel doth set forth. He saith that there be some things necessary vnto the priest, and some things to be necessary vnto the very action of the Masse. As for the abuses, of whiche some they doe defende, and some though they defend not, yet amende none: of them all we will speake afterwarpes.

I. Things necessary to the Priest.

THose, he sayth, be of two sorts. And that some be absolutely necessary, so that without them the bread and wine can not be consecrated into the body & bloud of Christe: and that some things be necessary onely of congruence: and yet so for all that, that if the Priest doe omitte them but vppon necessitie, he sinneth deadly.

Things absolutely necessary be these, sayth he: Firste the authoritie to consecrate, receyued from the Bishop, and declared outwarde by the shaning and anoynting. Secondely, by the habilitie of speache, so that he may pronounce euery thing distinctly. Thirdly, a stedfastnelle of intent and purpose, that is to say, that the Priest haue an effectuall intent and purpose, which may be discerned frō an actuall intent, to doe that whiche the church doth purpose and intend, albeit that he doe not beleeue that there is any thing done: so that it is inough, if he haue that effectuall intent in the beginnyng, so that there fall not out a contrary intent in the very acte, for then he muste not consecrate.

He deuideth such things as be necessary of congruence, into the puttyng away of impediments, and the application of things conuenient. Of the impediments we will speake in the laste article.

1 The things conuenient be, saith he, firste, that he whiche shall say Masse, must be fasting from the midnight before, so that he take nothing that is nutritiue or medicinable: and in case he hath taken any such thing, he muste not celebrate. And they haue suche scrupulous Decrees in this poynt, that they haue deuised by a certayne singular wisedome what is to be done, in case that after midnight the spittle chaunce to slippe downe his throte that shoulde saye Masse: or if any thing sticking by vnwarenelle in his teethe of that whiche he did eate the night before, fall downe into his stomache before he celebrate: or if he beginne to receyue the water powred into the chalice alone by negligence, &c.

2 Secondly, that he be cleane of body, so that he come by no vncleanelle of this bodye, throughe hys dreame.

3 Thirdly, that he washe his hãds, and kembe his head, and come not to his sacrifice with vnwashed handes, or not finely kembed.

4 Fourthly, that at the least he say his Mattins before, and the entry to the aulter, appoynted by Celestine.

5 Fiftly, that he weare the garmẽts prescribed vnto him, mete for the sacrifice. That is, the albe, the girdle, the phannell or hande cuffe, and the stoale, and the planet or vestment. There be added also the signification of euery one, not very well knowen sometimes to the Priestes themselues. For what skilleth it to know what euery of the garments doe signifie, when it is sufficient for the consecratiō to haue a stedfast intent to doe that whiche the Church hath instituted?

Thinges necessarie to the action of the Masse.

THese be the things generally, say they, which be instituted by the Church and appointed vnto this action. And they doe meane of those things whiche be brought in by the Bishops

They do graunt that there is nothing sette forth by Christe besides the institution of the sacraments.

Bishops of Rome. For Gabriell also himselfe dothe graunt, that there was nothing thereof lefte vnto vs by Christe besides the institution of the Sacrament, but that all the rest was accessorie, brought in by a little & little, not al at one tyme, but at sundry seasons: and that at length they were all packte vp togither into one heape by the Pope Gelasius, whiche was the. 51. after the Apostle Peter. Agayne, the very histories themselues doe declare sufficiently that the olde fathers did begynne the communion, at that place where they doe sing: The Lorde be with you: Lifte vp your hartes, and, Lette vs gyue thankes, &c. puttyng therevnto the Lords prayer, and the wordes of the Lordes institution, and that all the reste was added by Bishops of Rome.

The author of the Canon.

And that the Canon also was made by one that was called Scholasticus: as Beatus Rhenanus dothe note, wryting vpon Tertullian.

Necessarie of congruence, they do make this geare.

1 First the Introite of the Masse, the Kyrie eleyson, Gloria in excelsis, the Colleats, the Epistles, the Grayles, and the Gospels, and all such things as be therein vsed.

2 Secondly, that the place be Consecrate by some Bishop.

3 Thirdly, there muste be an Altare of stone Consecrated also by a Bishop, wherein muste be layde vp some reliques of saincts, & it must be couered vp with two white linne clothes, and a corporasse, as they call it.

4 Fourthly, a Chalice of golde, siluer, or tinne. 5 Fiftly, Candels burning vpon the Altare.

6 Sirtely, as touchyng the time of celebratiō, the publyke Masses must be about nyne a clocke, and the priuate Masses muste be celebrated frō the beginnyng of the day, vntill nine a clocke: and they doe limite the beginnyng of the day so scrupulously, that it muste be one howre, and one fifte parte of an howre before the rising of the body of the sunne. And they will not haue it to be lawfull to sing Masse in the nighte season, but vpon the dayes of the byrth, and resurreation of the Lorde.

7 Seuenthly, that the Canon and Consecration of the Lordes body & blonde, muste be done vnder silence, and so that the Lay menne doe not come acquaynted withall, that these great mysteries growe not to be of lesse reputation, whiche are committed vnto so holy persons.

8 Eightly, that there be water mingled with the wine.

9 Ninthly, that the Hoste be deuided into three partes, whereof one muste be caste downe into the Chalice, and the other twoo eaten vp togither.

10 Tenthly, that there be nothing omitted touchyng the crossings and gesture.

And as for the questions and cauteles they can scarsely bee numbred that be earnestly talked of in this matter of the Masse: As by whome the Masse should be sayde: Whether that euery Priestе may consecrate: Whether that hee also that is in deadly sinne: Or whiche is maymed in body may celebrate: Whether that many Priestes may consecrate one hoste at once: What and if hee that celebrateth do remember whyles he is at Masse, that hee did eate or dynke before: What and if any meate doe sticke in his teeth: What and if the Priestе chaunce in the mornyng wallyng his mouthe, to swalowe downe a droppe of water: What and if hee hath not slepte all night before: Whether he be bound to say Masse bare headed: Whether that there be requyred any intention, or no, and what: What and if any thing be lefte out: If another substaunce be administred vnto the Priestе than ought to be consecrated: What and if a flye or spyder fall into the Chalice: If there fall in a droppe of bloudde: If when he hath receyued the bloudde, there remaine yet some in the chalice: Whether that a droppe of wine stickyng vpon the foote of the chalice be consecrated: What and if there be no water put into the chalice: What and the wine be frozē in the chalice: What and if the Priestе doe remember that he hath not sayd somthings that should haue bene sayde: What and if the hoste be broken before the consecration: Whether that a Masse of Saincts be as vayleable for the soules of the dead, as a Masse of Requiem? Whether that there may bee a Masse said without a Masse booke: Whether that it may be sayde in a place not halowed: Whether it may be sayde at night: Whether more than once in a day: Whether it may be sayde for children that be dead: Whether that the merite bee all one, if a Priestе say one Masse for three folkes: Whether that hee may goe to his breakefaste as soone as Masse is done: And an infinite number of suche lyke, whiche they doe scrupulously talke of, with great circumstaunce. But lette vs see what is to be thought of them, and firste of those things, whiche they say, be absolutely necessary for the Priestе.

Of those things vvhiche be absolutely necessary for a priest, as they say.

And therein they doe chiefly require the power of consecration whiche is gyuen from the Bysshop by these wordes: Receyue power to consecrate for the quicke & the dead. But we doe assuredly iudge and affirme, that it can not be proued by any holy Scriptures of the Euangelistes, or the Apostels, that thys power was giuen from Christe, that by hys worde, the breade and wine, by the Consecration should bee Transubstantiate into his body and blonde. For whereas they say, that these wordes of Christe, Doe this in the remembraunce of mee, were spoken to the Apostles onely: and that thereby they were made Priests, and receyued power to consecrate for the quicke and dead: it is so fonde a deuice, that there is no man so dull headed, but if hee do consider the matter well, he shall see immediatly that they bee very lopes and tryfles.

They doe refer that, Doe this, to the Priests onely.

But I beseeche you, in case that it was not spoken of Christe vnto all the faithfull, Do this in the remembrance of me, but vnto the Apostles only, and to them that woulde fayne be accompted to bee the successours of the Apostles: by what authoritie and power did the congregations of the faythfull communicate of the body and blond of the Lorde from the tyme of the institution thereof, and the Apostle recommended this Communion to the Churches as delyuered by the Lorde? If that were done without the Lordes commaũdement, the Apostles did naught, & the faithfull people were decepued, and the Apostle ought to haue sayd, Let no man eate and drinke of this bread and cuppe of the Lorde, but the priest onely, leste he be guilty of the Lordes body and bloud, and let the priest trie himselfe, and so let him eate of this bread and drinke of the cuppe. For in case that the same doe not belong vnto lay men, as they cal them, Do this in remembraunce of me, then it foloweth, that it is not lawfull for them to communicate of this bread and cup. So that it should not haue bene sayde to the Churche of the faythfull: He that eateth vnworthily, eateth his own iudgemẽt. And, let the man trie himselfe, and so eate of that bread, and drinke of that cup. For so the faythfull lay manne both eate and drinke his iudgement, not in vnworthily eating, but in case he doe eate or drinke it at all. And therevpon it should folowe also, that the Lordes body and bloud was giuen and shedde vpon the Crosse, not for all faithfull, but for the Apostles and Priests onely.

Neyther can they say: We do not exclude lay men from the communion, that is to witte, frõ that which the Lorde sayde: Take eate, This is my body whiche is giuen for you: Take drinke, This is the cuppe of the new Testament in my bloudde, which is shedde for you, and for many, to the forgiuenesse of sinnes: but we doe exclude them from it whiche foloweth, Do this in the remẽbrance of mee, bycause the same pertayneth to the Priestes onely. For there is nothing in all this action of the laste supper of the Lordes, whereby this Communion was instituted and recommended vnto the aftercõmers, but this cõmaundement of the Lord in these wordes, Do this in remembraunce of me, beyng twise expressly spoken. The rest dothe belong to the very action of his last supper, which should no wise concerne vs, or be celebrate by vs, vnlesse that it had ben in this wise instituted and commaũded by the Lorde, in these wordes: Do this in the remembrance of me.

Doe this (sayth he) is as much to say, as Consecrate this, or Offer this: and therefore it belongeth not to the people of the faythfull, but vnto the priests onely. By these words he did ordeyne his Priestes, and enioyned them this office to doe that which he did. And he did consecrate the bread and the wine, and changed it into his body and bloud. Let them proue these two poynts, that ỹ Lord chaunged the substance of bread into his body, & the substaunce of wine into his bloud: and offered it at supper to God his father. Secõdly, that he commaunded his Disciples, that they should also doe the same. What he did, it is playnly inough expressed by the Euangelists, He toke bread, brake it, gaue thankes vnto God his father, and gaue it to his Disciples, saying: Take, eate, this is my body, whiche is giuen for you. Do this, &c. Likewise he toke the cuppe also, he gaue thanks, and gaue it to his Disciples, saying: Take and drinke all of this. This cuppe is the newe Testament in my bloud, which shall be shedde for you and for many to the forgiuenesse of sinnes. Doe this, &c.

This

This the Euangelists doe declare, and the Apostle bothe. Is it not manifest inough, what he did, and what his disciples did by his commaundement? Yea, and with what wordes he did set forth his doyng? and what he cõmaunded vs to doe afterwards, and to what intent?

But let vs see their deuise for the Consecration. Howe doe they performe this worke of consecration & transubstantiation? The power to doe it (as I sayde) is a meere imagination. And the very worke (as they say,) they doe perform by wordes. No doubte it passeth altogither mãs strength and power, and it is a very declaration of Gods power, by wordes to chaunge the substaunces of things, into one thing or other, cõtrary to the course of nature, and specially into the very body & bloud of the Lorde. Wherefore we haue good cause to aske what wordes those be of so wonderfull an efficacie? yea rather to aske whose wordes they be: their owne, or some other bodies. The wordes whereby they bragge that they worke this matter be the Lordes, and not theyrs. But the sense in whiche they doe vse them, is theires, and not the Lordes. The wordes be: For thys is my bodie: and This is my bloud: They doe so speake thẽ ouer the bread and wine, that the breath of theyr mouthe with the signe of the crosse also must touche the breade, and the cuppe: so that by the vertue of them they may be transubstantiated into the body and bloude of the Lorde. And they will haue this to be the sense of these wordes, whiche they doe gyue vnto them: This, that is to say, this body, is my bodie: And this, that is to say, This bloude, is my bloude: Or This, that is to say, this forme of breade, is my bodie: Item, This cuppe, that is to say, This forme of wyne, is my bloud. For they doe strongly affirme and say, that the Lorde speaketh not of bread and wyne, but eyther of hys bodie and bloude, or else of the forme and shape of breade and wyne. And this they vpholde to bee the sense and meaning of the Lordes wordes, whereas it is not the Lordes, but theyrs. For the Lorde did speake of nothyng else, but of breade and wine as it appeareth playnely by the wordes of the Apostle. Wherefore they doe attribute this strength and power vnto theyr sense and meanyng whiche they doe deuise of the Lordes wordes, that it dothe Transubstantiate the bread into the body, and the wyne, into the Lordes bloud.

But suppose it were so, that the Lorde spake not of bread and wine, but of the forme and shape of bread and wyne, when he sayde, This is my bodie, and this is my bloud. So that when hee sayde, This, the bread was no longer bread, but the forme of bread, nor the wyne was no longer wyne, but the forme of wine onely. Let them tell vs then, when and by what wordes he chaunged the substance of breade and wine into his bodie and bloud, before that hee sayde, This is my bodie, and This his bloude. For he did not this in saying, This is my bodie, and This is my bloude, in case that hee spake this (as they will haue it) not of breade, and wyne, but of the formes of the breade and wine onely. For then he shoulde haue sayde of the breade, Let this be my body: and of the wyne, Let this bée my bloud: or to the bread, Be thou my bodie, and to the wyne, Be thou my bloud.

Gabriell Biel. Lectione. 36.

Gabriel Byel graunteth, that the Doctors be not all of one opinion in this matter. For Christe (sayth he) in as much as he is very God, might haue Consecrated the substaunce of breade and wine, that is to say, haue chaūged it into his body and bloud, without any worde speakyng, lyke as he made heauen and earth by his will onely: or else he mighte haue spoken some wordes secretely, & haue Consecrated by thē: or else he might Consecrate by these wordes, This is my body, and This is my bloud, by the whiche wordes (saith he) wée doe also consecrate at his commaundement. Or he might first haue Cōsecrated, and haue distribute it afterwardes, and say, Take, eate, this is my body, &c. Or else he might distribute it firste, and Consecrate it afterwardes in saying: This is my body.

They say that it is not certain by the holy Scriptures how christ did Consecrate.

But which of these he did, (marke this well reader) it is not certayne (sayth he,) by the holy Scriptures. This, sayth he, so wauering they be in their doctrine. And that not without cause, for nothing cā be certaine, that is not grounded vpon a trueth. If it doe not certainely appeare by Scriptures, howe, and by what wordes Christe did Consecrate, and chaunge the substaunce of breade and wyne, into his body and bloud. Howe then shall it appeare? It standeth with reason, that they can not proue theyr deuise by the holy Scriptures, bycause it is not taken out of the holy Scriptures, but wrested to this purpose by mannes presumption, not without the counsell of him, who is the Father of all lyes.

And yet for al that, they do ground themselues vppon that, that Marke dothe vse the worde of Blessyng: ἐυλόγησας, ἔκλασε, that is to saye, When hée had blessed, he brake it. For they do surmise, that to Bleste, in this place, is as muche to say, as by a secrete vertue to chaunge and Cōsecrate the substance of the bread into ỹ body. But to Bleste is not to Consecrate, but to gyue thankes, and to speake well of a man: Wherfore Erasmus also did translate it in Marke: When hée had gyuen thankes, he brake it: And I passe ouer, that neyther Mathewe, nor Luke, nor Paule, vsed the worde of Blessyng in this matter, but did set expressly, ἐυχαριστήσας, that is to say, When hée had gyuen thanks: wherby it appeareth well, that the same which they called, To giue thanks, is that whiche Marke meante by Blessing. Wherefore it is vtterly to no purpose, that they goe aboute to grounde their errour vppon the worde of Blessing.

Therefore seyng that they can not shewe out of the holy Scriptures, that Christ did turne the substaunce of breade and wine into his body and bloude, neyther when, nor by what wordes, neyther that hée commaunded them to doe the same, as the 15. Bishoppe of Rochester doth not onely playnely confesse, but standeth vnto it also: as wée touched before in the place of the Lordes supper: Who sayth not, but that all this brabble of Consecration and Transubstantiation is nothing else, but a mére imagination of certayne Spirites of errours and seducings, whiche doe beare rule in the Churches? Rochester dothe attribute it vnto the tradition of the Fathers: and why not to the tradition of the Apostles? Bycause that the Apostles were not of this opinió. Agayne, why dothe he not expresse the fathers names which did first teach this sense? But graunt that some of the Elders were of this opinion: what credite shal we giue vnto their sense, whiche neither they thēselues, nor they whiche came after them, coulde vntill this day, proue out of the holy Scriptures and institution of the Lorde? in so muche that Cyprian sayeth, that wée muste not in this matter regarde what any man eyther hath done, or thought god to bée done, before vs: but what Christe him selfe dyd firste, who is before all, and what hée appoynted to be done.

before

But lette vs sée howe this Popishe Consecration and Transubstantiation dothe agrée with the Sacramente of the Lordes body and bloude, according vnto those things whiche bée reade thereof in the writyngs of Augustine, & in the Popes Decrées.

The saying of Augustine is: The worde commeth to the Element, and there is made a Sacramente. There is no man that is yet against this saying, as far as I know. And he calleth the Element in the Baptisme, the water. And forasmuch as the consideration of Sacraments is all one, this saying is also applyed aright vnto the Sacramente of the Lordes body and bloud: wherein the breade and wine (although they bée not reckened among the naturall Elementes,) yet they doe stande in the same stéde that the Element of the water dothe in Baptisme. For lyke as the water is in the Sacramente of Baptisme, so dothe the bread and the wyne also as the nourishement of the bodye, stande in place of the outwarde signe and visible forme, in the Sacramente of the heauenly meate and drynke. And a Sacramente is as well made of them, by the addyng of the worde vnto them, as it is of the Water, by ioynyng of the worde therevnto. This I say to the intent no manne houlde pyate as Cochlens dothe, and denie that thys saying of Augustine may bée referred vnto the Sacramente of thankes gyuing. If Augustine hadde sayde, The worde is ioyned to the Water, and there is made a Sacramente, it had bene all one. So thou shalte not say amisse, The worde is ioyned to the breade and wyne, and there is made a Sacramente. For the truthe of this Sacrament dothe not depende vpon the reason of an Element, as though that it coulde not bée a Sacrament, vnlesse that the worde bée ioyned vnto a naturall Elemente: but it dothe depende vppon the ioyning of the Lordes worde, although that it came not vnto any Element, but vnto other visible and palpable creatures: as wée doe sée it is in the Sacrament of the Lordes body and bloude.

There commeth (sayth he) the worde vnto the Element, and there is made a sacrament. What worde? Not euery mans worde (for thereby there is not made a sacrament of inuisible grace,) but the worde of Christe himselfe: and that not euery manner of worde, but the same which was spoken of him for the institution of this Sacrament. If the worde of the institution whiche was once spoken by Christ, be applied vnto the breade and wyne, it maketh of them a Sacrament. And that is it which he spake in commaundemēt, Do this in the remembrance of me. This worde commeth to the breade and wine, not in respecte that it is spoke by the minister, but in respect that it was once spoken by Christe himself, and maketh a sacrament: as often as folowyng this institution, we doe breake this mysticall breade among vs, to the ecclesiasticall communion, and remembraunce of the death of Christe, and receyue this cuppe with thankes giuing.

The element is not only not taken away by that worde is, but is also required to be.

And when he sayth, the worde commeth to the Element, and there is made a sacrament: he sayeth before vs two things whereof the Sacrament is made, that is to say, the Worde, and the Element. These two things he so requisite vnto a Sacrament, that the Element dothe not onely remayne vntaken away and vnchaunged by the worde, but is rather the more requisite to be there. Things whiche be necessarie, doe not take away those things whereunto they doe come: but doe neede to haue them to be still there, for that otherwise they cā not come vnto them. He dothe not say, succeedeth or ensueth, but commeth vnto it. Neyther dothe he say: Taketh away or chaungeth the Element. In Baptisme the worde commeth vnto the water, and there is made a Sacrament. Hereby no manne dothe gather: Ergo the substaunce of the water is chaunged, that it may be a Sacrament. But all menne rather doe graunt, that the water in Baptisme doth not hinder Baptisme to bee a Sacrament. If therein the truthe of the Sacrament can stande for all the coniunction of the worde, and water: by what reason can it not stande also in this sacrament by the coniunction of the worde, and the breade and wine. Yea, and in case this saying of Augustine can not be agayne sayde, it is necessary that there should in both the sacraments remayne the outwarde things, water, breade, and wine: whereof the worde of the Lordes institution cōmeth vnto them, maketh Sacraments.

Now in case that the priests haue power to take away the substāce of bread and wyne, it folowyth that by theyr consecration the truthe of the Sacrament is taken away: whiche can not be preserued nor kept, onlesse that bothe the partes thereof doe remayne vndiminished: that is to say, the worde, and the breade with the wine. Some menne doe take the worde of Christ after the letter, and not after the naturall or right sense therof. For if they take it aright, it is so farre frō takyng away the bread and wine from this Sacrament, that it dothe rather require to haue it there. In case that they haue a worde of Consecratiō, wherby the substāce of of the bread and wine is take away, they haue the worde not of Christe, but of Antichrist. If they haue not the substaunce of bread and wine, they haue not the breade and wine, bothe whiche this Sacrament must nedes haue. And so it is tried, that they haue not the truth of the sacrament instituted by Christe, but that they haue in steede of that, the Idoll of mens hartes in theyr Masses.

That whiche is seene is bread.

And in lyke manner Augustine writeth: Vnlesse that the Sacramentes had some likenesse of those things, whereof they be sacramēts, they shoulde not be sacramentes at all. Than let the priests tel vs, what lykenesse there is betwixte the Sacrament and Christes body & bloud, whose Sacrament it is. If there be none, then it is no Sacramente: if there be any, it can be none other thā of nourishment, as to feede and to moysten, whereby our lyfe is maintayned, so that we may vnderstande thereby, that the flesh of Christe is verily meate, and his bloud verily drinke, as Christ saith in John. But this similitude or likenesse can not be in the Popish Sacrament, where there remayneth not any longer the bread and wine, but as they doe affirme the forme and figure onely of bread and wine, wherein can be no efficacie of feedyng and moystening. But they doe very handsomely to sequester the lykenesse of the heauenly feeding from their Sacramēt, because that they haue not the true sacrament of Christe, but the vaine imagination of mans harte.

Hereunto serueth that, which is alleaged out of the wordes of Augustine, in this wise: That which is seene, is the bread and the cup, which the eyes do also tel vs. But y which the faith desireth to be instructed of, the bread is the body of Christ, & the cup, y bloud. These be therefore called sacraments, bicause that there is one thing seene in them, and another vnderstanded. That whiche is seene, hath a bodily forme: and that which is vnderstād, hath a spirituall fruite. This is in Augustine. Doth he not specially recognise the bread and the cuppe in the Sacrament? Doth hee not alleage y testimony of the eyes? If the substaunce of the bread be so taken away in the Popish Consecration, that there remayne nothyng of it but the outwarde forme, why doth he not say: That whiche is seene, is a bodily figure or forme? But sayth, That whiche is seene, hath a bodily figure or forme? He sayth, the same that whiche is seene, is bread, and hath a bodily forme. So that there be two things in this Sacrament all signe, the bread whiche is seene, and the bodily figure thereof. To haue a bodily figure, is one thing, and the very corporall figure whiche is had, is an other thing. That outwarde colour whiche is represented to the eyes of the lokers on: is the bodily figure, not of Christes body, but of bread. For that (sayth he) whiche is seene: is bread, and hath a bodily figure: but that which is not seene but vnderstanded, hath not a corporal figure, but a spirituall fruite. If these things be true, then is the Cōsecration of the Massing priests not true, but counterfayte.

Againe, howe can it be true that Augustine saith: But that which our faith requireth to be instructed of, is that the bread is the body of Christ, in case that there be no bread in this Sacrament? Is not this the nature of a predicate, that it taketh not away the subiect, wherof it is sayd, or reported, but doth rather cõfirme it? It is sayd of the bread, ỳ it is ỳ body of Christe. Ergo, it is necessary that that thing be bread, whereof it is reported & sayde, that it is the body of Christ. This is not sayde of the outward figure & forme of bread, but of the bread it selfe, which hath a bodily forme and shape. Wherefore they be but trifles & toyes that Cochleus talketh of, that the outward forme & figure is called bread, bicause of the colour and tast of bread. But we do stand to long in the refelling of this deuise of Transubstantiation, seyng that the forged imaginatiõ therof is cleane cõtrary vnto the holy Scriptures, & sayings of the fathers. The Apostle doth oftentimes call this sacrament, The bread and cup of the Lord. And the Canon of the councell of Nyce doth so likewise. And Cyprian calleth it the halowed bread. And Augustine saith, that this sacrament is bruised with teeth: And it is song in their church, that there is no breaking of the thing, but of ỳ signe: of which none cãbe attributed vnto the outwarde forme, but must of necessitie be applied vnto the breade. Whereby it appeareth sufficiently, ỳ this opinion of Transubstantiation was not knowen vnto ỳ old fathers. Hitherto we haue spoken briefly of the power of Consecration, whiche they say is giuen from the Bishop by these wordes, Receyue power to consecrate for the quicke & the dead. Now let vs goe further.

That vvhereof our fayth requireth to be informed that breade, is the body of Christ.

They say, that it is necessary for the makyng of the consecration perfect, that ỳ priest saying Masse, haue an intention to doe the same whiche the church intendeth, other wise that it can not be, that he shoulde consecrate. But we do say, that the truth of the Lordes supper, dothe consiste neyther in the intentiõ of the priest, nor of the Church, but in the Lords institution. I pray you, how can the faithful be assured of the right intẽtiõ of the minister? Is it not a clere case, that the most parte of Massing priests do principally and chiefly intend, how to gaine by their Massing, and care but litle whether that their Masses be effectuall or no? Ergo they which do say Masse with this intẽt, do not Consecrate: and so commeth it to passe by their owne talke also, that the people standing by, do commit idolatry in adorying it. We doe pronounce the wordes of the institution with a playne voyce, and able to be vnderstanded, that the people may heare it, and communicate in fayth. Wherefore there is no man deceyued among vs, for asmuche as the wordes of Christe be set forth vnto all men, and he whiche beleueth them, can not erre.

But as concernyng those things, whiche they say be necessary of congruence, as well to the partie that doth say Masse, as to the very action of the Masse it self, this is our iudgement: that is, that some of them be superstitious, specially bycause of the careful and scrupulous obseruation of them, as though that of themselues in case they be diligently celebrated, they be of some reputation in the sight of God: & that some of them be of a mean sort, so that of thẽselues they bee neyther good nor euill: and that some be good of themselues, as those things whiche be sayde at the Masse out of the holy Scriptures: and yet that they be all to be misliked, bycause that they be brought in to adorne the Popish Masse, whiche is in so many respects worthy to bee cõdemned, and bycause they be estemed for a seruice and worshippe of God. Whereas they be added vnto this Sacrament, not by the institution of the Lorde, but by the deuise of menne. Among all whiche those things which be good of themselues, doe make this Masse neuer the better, but doe make it rather more dãnable for the abusing of the good things. Such things as be of themselues good, ought to serue truth and not falshode: they ought to serue the worde, worke and will of God, and not mens inuentiõs: they ought to serue for the saluation of menne, and not for the deceiuing and destruction of them. As in the Masse the vsing of the name of God and of his only begotten sonne our Lord Iesus Christe, of the holy Scripture, the Epistles, the Gospels, the Lordes prayer, the cõfession of the faith, Sanctus, Agnus Dei, the wordes of the Supper, and such other lyke, whiche things we do not blame, though that we do reproue the Masse it selfe, but wẽ doe acknowledge and confesse, that of themselues they be good. If the action, and saying of the Masse were of it selfe blameles, and agreable vnto the Lordes institution, it might be born withal, if these things were added vnto it, so that it were at libertie, with moderation, and to profite. But seyng that this Masse is of a contrary nature, we muste haue a contrary iudgement also of the shifting in of those things, which are most iustly reproued in this matter, bycause that they doe paynt out so poysoned an abhomination with the deepe colour of godlinesse: yea of the most highest seruice of God: and therefore the more plausible, and the better lyked that this geare is the worse it is: euen like as a cuppe of wine mingled with poyson, the pleasanter and fayrer that it is to see, the more it doth allure him that is dry to drinke of it, and it killeth him the spedyter. By this gay glose of the Masse it is fallen out, that in respect of it the very true Supper of ỳ Lord is set at right naught.

Of the Canon of the Popishe Masse.

Amongst those things which they do say be absolutely necessary to the action of the Masse, they doe recken also the Canon (as they terme it,) bycause that the same is as it were a certayne rule of the celebratyng of the Masse. And they will haue that to bee so passyng holy, that it muste bee preferred before all holy Scriptures: and therefore they doe mumble it moste superstitiously and softely, takyng good heede leaste any Laye manne standing behinde the Priestes backe, shoulde heare the wordes of it, and happly vnderstande them, which they would take for a maruelous highe offence: and they vpholde that it is not lawfull for any Lay manne to reade it, wheras for al that it is layd [illegible]

Chriſtian men to read euery part of the holy ſcripture: But as for this Canon, men were not acquaynted withal in the times of the Apoſtles, & of the fathers which folowed thē, Tertullian, Cyprian, & Auguſtine, but it was patched vp nowe at the latter caſt, & encreaſed by peecemeale by the Popes Leo, Gregorie, Gelaſius, & Sergius: & yet they haue ſuch a diſordered deuotion and reuerence vnto it, that it is ſcarſely lawfull for the Prieſtes themſelues out of the Maſſe time, to reade any peece of it, or to ſearch to vnderſtand the ſenſe & minde therof. But when they be at the very Maſſe, after that they haue read all the reſt from the beginnyng thereof, with runnyng eyes & wandering mindes, whē they come once to the Canon, they be ſtrayght way in a great dumpe, ſtroke with a terrible feare & quaking, leſt ſome peece of it be negligently handled, or not perfectly inough ſpoken: ſo that in caſe they chaunce to ſtut or ſtumble at any worde, they ſweate, & ſounde wel neere for care, leaſt they fal into ſome deadly ſinne, and do ſtāde in no leſſe feare in readyng of this Canō, than the ſothſayers & coniurers doe when they ſpeake their wordes of coniuryng, in expreſſing certayne characters, preſcribed vnto them, in careful feare, leaſt they do omit any thing, & ſo giue occaſion to the euill ſpirites to hurte them. And yet for al this, though that ſome of them doe ſay or ſing theyr Epiſtles & Goſpels negligently, without harte, without faith, without vnderſtanding, they are not touched with any conſcience of ſinne at all therefore.

But in what poynts this Canon is to be found faulte withall, others haue noted before me. And I reherſed ſome things before, wherein it is founde to be worthy of blame. But I will adde yet ſome more vnto them, & that groſſer geare. Firſte of al, it is very haynous that the prieſt a ſinfull man, dothe prayp vnto God the Father, that he will accepte his Sonne, & giue him a fauorable loke. For after the Eleuation he ſayth in this wiſe. Vppon whiche, (Gabriell expoundeth it, that is to ſay vpon the body and bloud of Chriſt the ſonne) vouchſafe to loke with a fauorable and milde countenance, and accepte them, &c. We ſinners haue obteyned grace and recōcilement by the ſacrifice of Chriſtes body and bloud, and beſides that what ſoeuer we obteyne of God, we doe obteyne it by Chriſt the beloued ſonne of God: And dareth the ſinfull man prayp vnto God the Father, to accept or like well his ſonne? Why do they not rather prayp that he will accept vs in his ſonne, as it is in the Epiſtle to the Epheſians? It is a cleare caſe, that the holt whiche Chriſte his onely begotten ſonne did once offer vp for vs vpon the Croſſe, dothe excēdingly pleaſe God the father, ſo that he ought rather to prayp, that he woulde for this holte and ſacrifice of Chriſtes ſake, loke mercifully vpon vs with a fauorable and milde contenaunce.

And he addeth vnto this, & ſayth: Like as thou didſt vouchſafe to accept the gifts of thy iuſt childe Abel, and the ſacrifice of our patriarch Abrahaam, & that which the high prieſt Melchiſedek did offer vnto thee, to be a holy ſacrifice, an immaculate holte, &c. Who can away with this compa-

VVhen the Ca is to be found faulte vvithall

Gabriel Super C man. Mi

Epheſ. 1.

compariſon? What did Abell offer? An vnreaſonable creature. What Abraham? he offred eyther a beaſt, or elſe a man conceiued and borne in ſinne? What did Melchiſedek offer, as they ſay, bread and wine? But in verie deed there is not one word red any where of his Sacrifice. But of hym we haue ſpoken before. So that the Maſſing prieſt dothe prayp that the offering of Chriſt, that is to ſay, his body & bloud may ſtand in ſuche ſtede in the ſight of God the Father, as did the beaſtlyſhe ſacrifices of Abel and Abraham, and (that which they doe vntruly attribute vnto Melchiſedek) of bread and wyne. In caſe that the ſacrifice of Chriſte, be of no more regarde with the Father, than they were, farewell the ſalnation of the worlde.

But Gabriell coueting to conuey away cleanly the abſurditie of thys prayer, doth expoūde it in this wiſe: To be accepted (ſayth he) not in conſideration of the offering in it ſelfe, whiche beeing the onely begotten of the Father, can not be but acceptable: but in conſideration of thē that do offer it, through whoſe filthineſſe it may wel be refuſed, foraſmuch as appertaineth to the power of reconcilement of the offerers, bicauſe of their vnworthyneſſe. Secondly, hee doth adde, that the body and bloude of Chriſte is not compared here vnto ỹ ſacrifices of the old Fathers, as touching their value and worthines, but that the Prayer is, that it may be accepted of God in reſpecte alſo of the faithe of the offerers, like as in time paſt the ſacrifices of them whiche offered in faith, were acceptable vnto him.

1 Firſt, we doe not denie, but that the ſacrifices of Abraham and Abell pleaſed God, they pleaſed, but not for themſelues, (for God is not pleaſed with burnte offerings, nor will not haue ſacrifice and offering) but onely for the perſons of them whiche dyd offer, and ſo Caines ſacrifice did not pleaſe him, but Abels did pleaſe him, bycauſe he lyked the one, and miſlyked the other. Pſalme. 51.

2 Secondly, we do allowe that alſo that he will not haue the ſacrifice of Chriſt compared with the ſacrifices of the Fathers, bycauſe that hee dothe in infinite degrees paſſe them, and goe beyonde all the ſacrifices of the old Teſtamente, but we doe diſallow that they do not ſtand only vpon him, ſo as he is once offered for the ſinnes of the whole worlde, and can be offered no more, but that they doe as much as in them lyeth, decaye the efficacie and ſtrength thereof by dayly offering him agayne, and doe make Chriſtes offering lyke vnto the lawiſh ſacrifices, whiche were oftentimes offered agayne, bycauſe that they were ouerweake to cleanſe away ſinnes.

3 Thirdly we do demaund them, howe that can be maynteyned, that (as Gabriel ſaith) the Prieſte dothe prayp, that Chriſt (whome he maketh men beleeue that he offereth) maye pleaſe the Father, bycauſe of ỹ faith of the offerour: whereas hee dothe pleaſe him well ynough already, and is ſo well accepted, that there can be nothing added therevnto by vs, whereby hee maye bee commended more. The common condition of the ſacrifices is, that they maye pleaſe for their ſakes that do offer. And the offering of Christe hymselfe had neuer wiped away oure sinnes, vnlesse that it hadde incomparably pleased for the persons sake of the onely begotten of God. Wherefore it standeth not with reason to praye, that Christe may please God, bycause of the faithe of the offeroure: whereas this his sacrifice is much better thā they be, which do take vpon them to say they do offer it. How much more aright doth the Apostle Peter aduise vs, to offer spirituall hostes, acceptable vnto God by Jesus Christe? And I saye moreouer, to what purpose is it to praye to God that hee wil accepte this sacrifice, bycause of the faithe of the sacrificers, seeyng that they manifestly mayntayne that it skilleth not what the Priestе be that doth sacrifice, good or euil, accepted of God or misliked; for as much as the worthinesse of the Masse is so greate before God, that it is wonderfull acceptable vnto him of it selfe, by the working of the worke, and not of the worker. Thus they do perswade the common people one thyng openlye, and in silence mumble out the contrary in this their Canon. 1. Pet. 2.

Secondlye, that is no lesse vnreasonable, which they do say after thys in the Canon: We doe humblye beseech the Almighty God, commaund this to be carried by the hands of the holy Angel vp to thy holy Altare, into the sighte of the godlye Maiestie. They do say: Commande this to bee carried. What? Heere ỳ expositours of his holy Canon, are at their wits ende, and can not tell what to say. It muste be vnderstanded, saye they, eyther of the vowes of the faythfull, eyther of the Churche Militant, either of the bodie and bloude of Christe. Truly ỳ very processe of the wordes will not suffer that it may be taken of anye other, than of these thinges which were spoken of before, that is to witte, of the body and bloud of the Lorde. But I beseeche you how doth this agree vnto Christe, that he must be carried by the handes of an Angell into heauen, and sitte before the Father, whereas hee is in Heauen long since, and dothe appeare before the face of God for vs? For Jesus is not entered into the holye places made by hands, the patterne of true things, but into Heauen it selfe, to appeare nowe before the face of God for vs. And he beeyng the onely host offered for our sinnes, sitteth for euermore at the right hande of God. If they saye: Wee meane it not of Christe, but of the body and bloud of Christ presente vnder the formes of bread and wine, whiche we doe offer vnto God the father: Ergo they do separate the body and bloud of Christ, really presente, as they wyll haue it from Christe hymselfelfe, so that in this Sacramēt they haue not Christ himselfe, but the bodye and bloud of Christ, without his spirite and Godhead. But to auoyde this absurditie, they thinke it better to vnderstande it of the vowes of the faithful, whereby they may in themselues offer vp the body and bloud of Christe vnto God the father, in their harts, which vowes of theirs the Priestе may desire to haue caried by the handes of the Angell into the sighte of Gods Maiestie. So some of the Patrones of the Popishe Masse do instruct the faithfull people now a dayes, that at the Masse tyme they doe offer Christ Heb. 9. Heb. 10.

in

in their heartes, that is to saye, praye God the Father, that he will be mercifull vnto them, for the offeryng of Christe hys sonne: whereby the sinnes of all the worlde is once wiped away. If they be of this iudgemente, why do they not openly teach so in the Churche, that is to witte, that this sacrifice of the Masse is in very deede nothing else, but a memorie of the only sacrifice of Christe: in whiche sense the Fathers did call the table of the Lords communion a sacrifice? And thys sense shoulde not haue made a diuersitie betwixte the Masse and the Lordes Supper, neyther shoulde it haue serued to suche greedye catching vppe of greate riches and spithye gayne, neyther shoulde it haue aduanced the ministers of the Churche into so hygh a prerogatiue and dignitie, for as muche as this manner of sacrifisyng and offering Christe vnto God the Father maye be common vnto all faithfull folke.

Thirdly, it is not to be allowed, that in this Canon they do flee to the Intercession of dead Saintes, and say: And by the intercession of the blessed and alwayes glorious virgyne Mary the mother of God, and thy blessed Apostles Peter & Paule, and Andrewe, wyth all Saintes, giue vs mercifull Lord peace in oure dayes, that beeing ayded wyth the helpe of thy mercy, we may bee both euer free from sinne, and safe also from all trouble. This sayth the Canon. But let them shewe vs but one iote out of all the holye Scriptures, whereby it maye be proued that the dead Saintes doe make intercession, and praye for vs in Heauen. The Scriptures doe teach vs nothyng of this matter. And in case that they do make intercession for vs in deede, and that we must flee vnto their intercession, I see not howe the Apostle dothe truly attribute vnto the holye Scripture, that it is profitable for comforte, doctrine, and instruction: seeyng that it maketh no mention at all of a matter of so greate waighte and importance. I beseech you what faith can the faithfull man conceyue in his mind, of those things whyche are affirmed to be done in Heauen, and yet haue no testimonie of holye Scriptures for them, I meane of Gods worde? Besydes that, howe can thys agree with so holy a Masse, that whyles they doe presente and offer Christe the onely begotten of God vnto the Father, as they say they doe, that in so hygh a deuotion, they do turne their thoughtes from thence vnto the merites and intercession of dead Saintes, and desyre God, that he will vouchsafe vppon their mediation to be mercifull: as though that the offering, merite, mediation, and Priesthode of Christe the sonne of God were not sufficient to please Gods Maiestie, vnlesse that they should withall flee vnto the merites and intercession of Saintes.

Woulde God they woulde once knowe, what the vertue, efficacie, and prerogatiue of the onely oblation of Christe once done vpon the Crosse is, and howe greate good things be gotten vnto vs therby, and howe sure and safe a waye there is set wyde open vnto vs vnto the throne of grace. If they wold acknowledge this, and embrace it with true hope and confidence, the opinion which

whiche they haue conceyued of the intercession of the dead Saintes, would sone fall from them. Thys I saide by the way of the Canon of the Masse, whiche all they that haue a true faith and knowledge of Christ, must nedes disalowe. Wherefore they haue god occasion to committe it vnto the shaueling and greased crowes onely, to mumble it vp in silence, who doe abuse and peruert all sacred thinges and sacramentes, to make of them their priuate gayne and lucre.

Of the outwarde abuses of the Popish Masse.

Hitherto in this seconde parte of thys treatie, we haue spoken of the accidentalles of the Popish Masse: whereof they doe make some to bee so necessarye for the Priest, and some for the very action of the Masse, that none of them can be omitted without deadly sinne: Now it remaineth that we speake of some outwarde abuses, of whiche they do maynteyne some as good and vprighte, and some though that they doe not maynteyne them as good and vprighte, yet they do not correcte nor amend them.

They doe saye Masse in a strange toung.

The first of them whiche they doe mainteyne as good and vprighte, is that they do sing Masses in a strange tong, and to the faithfull people vterlye vnknowen, wherein they doe seeke nothing else, but a wonder and admiration of the people, whyche hathe this peculiar qualitie, that the lesse they do vnderstand those things which they do see and heare, so much the more they doe wonder at them, and the more also esteeme them: yea and can be contente also to bestowe the more cost vpon the Sacramets, and the Priestes also, when they vnderstand them not. For this purpose they doe celebrate their Masses not in the vulgare but in the Latine tong, which is not commonly vnderstanded, and howe muche this is againste the doctrine of the Apostle Paule, we may perceyue by him in that he doth expressly finde fault with their fondnesse, whiche do talke so in Gods Church in an vnknowen language, that the people whiche heareth it, can not vnderstand them, and therefore hee commaundeth that all should be done to edifying. Whereof we doe gather this arighte: That in case that all things must be done in the Church vnto edifying, Ergo those things which do not edifie, ought not to be done there: but it can not serue to edifying, when the holy things be done in the Church before the people in strange and vnknowen languages, vnlesse there be made an interpretation of them. Hereof the Apostle speaketh in this wise: He that speaketh in a tong, meaning a straūge tong doth edifie himselfe: but he whiche dothe prophecie, that is to saye, doth speake out, so as he may be vnderstanded, dothe edifie the congregation. Item, And nowe brethren, if I come vnto you, speaking in tongs, what shal I profite you: vnlesse that I do speake vnto you, eyther by reuelation, eyther by knowledge, eyther by prophecie, eyther by doctrine? And further, for if they doe blesse in spirite, how shall he that standeth in the place of the vnlearned, say Amē, vnto the giuing of thankes? for as muche as he can not tell what thou sayest: notwithstanding thou doest well in giuing thankes, but an other man is not edified therby. This sayeth the Apostle. Ergo those thynges which are to be done in the Churche before the people of God, ought not to be done in vnknowen tongs, vnlesse they be interpreted. And in thys poynte the Papistes doe not only despise the tradition of the Apostles, although that they do glory neuer so muche of the see Apostolike: but they doe also boldely and carelesly contemne the Lords commaundemēts. For so he concludeth this poynte: If any man seme to be a Prophete, or to be spirituall, let him knowe, that these things which I doe write vnto you, be the Lords commaundemēts.

1. Cor.

I beseeche you, in case that the Apostle dothe not suffer him to speake or sing in the Church of God, which speaketh in a strange tongue, whereas he vnderstandeth not the vulgare tongue of that Churche wherein hee is, vnlesse that he haue an interpreter, to expounde his wordes vnto the Churche, when will he allowe them, which whereas they do vnderstande the vulgare tongue better than the Latine, yet they had lieuer to speake and sing in Latine before them that vnderstandeth no Latine, than to speake or sing in a language that is vnderstanded to edifie the Churche of God thereby. But we nede not speake much in this matter at thys time, for as muche as we haue treated more at large thereof in oure Commentaries vpon the firste Epistle of Paule.

2 The seconde abuse is, that they doe not declare the Lords deathe at their Masses, whiche they doe celebrate in their Churches, as well publike as priuate, whereas the Apostle sayeth expressly: For as often as you do eate this bread and drinke of the Lords cuppe, you shal declare the Lords death vntill that he come. To declare the Lordes deathe, is not secretely to mumble, leaste anye man should heare and vnderstand it: but with a loude and intelligible voyce, earnestly to denounce vnto the eares of the Church, the benefite of our redemption obteyned by Christes deathe: so that all the standers by, may be throughly moued vnto the sacrifice of prayse: that is to saye, to the celebration of the sacramente of thankesgiuing. But the Apostle spake of the Lordes supper, whiche the Lorde himselfe did institute for the remembraunce of himselfe, and not of the Popish Masse. Wherfore a man may peraduenture do foolishlye and vnaduisedly, to loke for the declaring of the Lordes deathe of them, which do presume to celebrate a sacramente farre wide from that, which was deliuered vnto ỹ church by the Lord.

1. Corinth. 11.

That they do Masse vvithoute Cōmunion. 1. Corin. 11.

3 Thirdly, it is a manifest abuse also, that the Priestes dothe eate and drinke alone at the Masse. For that is not to eate the Lordes supper, but his owne supper: which thing the Apostle findeth fault withall, and saith in this wise: Therefore when you do assemble into one place, that is not to eate the Lords supper when euery man taketh his owne supper to eate: and at the ende of the Chapter: Therefore my brethren, sayeth hee, when you doe assemble togyther to eate, tarry you one for an other, and in case that any man be hungry, lette him eate at home, least you assemble togither vnto condemnation. When the Lorde dyd institute this Sacramente, and committed and betoke it vnto his Disciples and followers, he did nother eate nor drinke it alone, neyther commaunded that anye of them shoulde eate and drinke for others, but he sayde, Take, and eate, and Drinke all of this. For hys will was to institute a mysticall communion of his bodye and bloud, not a Priestish sacrifice, of one Priestе sacrifisyng for others. This the Apostle declareth saying: Is not the cuppe of blessing which we do blesse, the communion of Christes bloude? The bread whiche we do breake, is it not ỳ cõmunion of Christes body? For we being many, are one breade and one body: for as much as we do all participate of one bread. Accordyng vnto this institution of ỳ Lorde and tradition of the Apostles, before that the priuate Masses were vsed, the ministers, and the people dyd communicate togither, and there be yet founde certayne tokens thereof in the Bookes whiche they call the Secretes and Complends: and there was but one communion, and that publike euery Sonday, from whych they that did not communicate, were driuen out, as we may see in the sermons of Chrysostome and in certayne Councels, in whyche it was decreed, that they shoulde be putte out of the Churche dores, whyche woulde not communicate. And in the Decrees we doe reade thus: When the consecration is done, let all communicate, whyche wyll not bee thrust out of the Churche. For so the Apostles also did order the matter, and so the Church of Rome doth holde it styll. Thys is in the Decrees, whiche the gloser woulde restrayne, to be spoken of the ministers only, but so for all that, that hee addeth, Or else thus it was in the olde time, for we doe see that it is not so left now. Surely that which was of olde, the Churche of Rome did forsake, but we doe aske, whether that they myght leaue that, whyche they do graunt themselues was left them from the Apostles, or no: If thys decree of the Ecclesiasticall communion was of olde, Ergo this is newe which they do now vse in this Priestishe Masse, in the which one eateth and drinketh alone, and the rest doe stande by and do not communicate. What will they saye to this, whyche doe crie out, that those rites and customes which the Churche of Rome doth vse, hathe their beginning from the Apostles, bycause that ỳ Church hath constantly kepte the traditions of the Apostles? If thys be true that they saye, howe can that Decree bee true, whereof we made mention euẽ now: But if the Decree be true, then is that false which they doe obiect, so that wee maye saye aryght with Augustine, that the weste Churches of whyche Rome is one, did not obserue those things whiche were taught by the Apostles.

Surely the Ecclesiasticall communion of the Lordes Supper as it was fyrste instituted by Christ, and after that deliuered vnto the Churches by the Apostles, continued vntyll that there grewe dissentions, whereby the Priestes dyd sequester themselues from the Bysshoppes, and bryng Schismes into the Churches,

1. Cor. 10.

In tyme passed the Minister and the people did communicate togeather.

De cons. dist. 2. c. Presete. The che che of R me forso that vn the vnu olde.

Ad Casu num Epi.

Wyrthey wil rather in Masse priuately, than to cõ municate togither.

How lo the Eccle siastical cõmun continue ches, and so neglecting the communion, beganne seuerally to celebrate the Lordes Supper. And thys mischiefe by little and little waxed so greate, that the Bishops did not onlye dissceuer themselues from the Priestes or Elders, but the Elders also varried among themselues, one from an other, and dyd their sacrifice eache man seuerally a parte, so that in case there were a hundred assembled vnto one place for to sacrifice, yet for all that they did euerye one celebrate a parte withoute communion. And the richer sorte of the people following them, and they whiche passed the rest, made themselues priuate Chappels, and priuate Priestes, and Sacramentes. And since that this corruption hathe gotten the vpper and stronger hand in the Churches, Chrystes poore Shéepe are thereby compelled to vse, honor, and to maynteyne to their greate charges, these manner of sacrifices, béeyng neyther Apostolike nor Churchlyke, but playne false and counterfayte.

If you aske me the reason why that ecclesiasticall communion first, and after the communion wyth the Priestes was left, and that so euerye man delyred rather to Masse priuately, than to communicate wyth the Bysshoppe, or wyth the Churche: I thynke thys may be saide therein for a truth: That for as muche as that Priesthode was deuised, and broughte into the Churches by the counsell of the most craftie and wyly Fox the Deuil, to the end that by the vse thereof his craftinesse myght bee exercised not generally only, but in euerye Priestе seuerally also, so that eache of them receiuing the power to consecrate and to sacrifice for the quicke and the dead, might seuerally practise the same. The prerogatiue and priestly dignitie of whom, should not haue so high preheminence, in case that when one dyd consecrate and celebrate, the rest shoulde cõmunicate with him, yea and it shoulde haue muche lesse, in case that they should communicate in commõ with al faithful people. It was altogither wrought by the spirite of errour and falshode, to aduance this newe deuised priesthode, that at the Synaxis or communion, the annoynted Priests shoulde be sequestred from the communion of the faithfull people: wherby there was found out a difference betwixt the priestish and layish communion, and the one, I meane the last, so light estéemed in comparison of the other, that in case a Priest for some haynous offence were thrust from the priestish communion, yet he mighte be worthy to goe to the layemennes communion. Afterwardes bycause that it séemed to be more for the reputation of the Bysshoppes than of the Priestes, if that the priest shoulde not communicate wyth the Bysshoppe at the Lordes table, they fell also from that communion vnto ỳ celebrating of priuate Masses. And so it fell out, ỳ they forsoke the Ecclesiasticall cõmuniõ, and did celebrate not togither the Lords supper, but euery mã apart said his Masse alone.

And to the same end, I meane for their honor and reputation, they take to themselues the whole communion of both kyndes, as they call it, and suffer the laye menne to haue but the one halfe of the communion in one kynde: whereof we spake in the place before of the Lordes Supper. The Masters meante by thys difference to aduaunce the dignitie of their Priesthode. And vnto thys purpose serues also the bringing in of their abstayning from Mariage. For they will so aduance the dignitie of Priesthode, that the married man must be vnworthy to be admitted to say Masse: but he may be worthy to communicate vnder one kinde alone with the people, notwithstandyng that the Apostle doth require that a Bishop be the husbande of one wyfe. But at that time Bishops were no Priestes, nor there was no Masse, nor authoritie to consecrate for the quicke and the dead. And therefore it was not required of the Bishops and Elders, that they should refraine from Marriage: for suche as were married were also worthy ynough to preach the Gospel, and to dispense the mysteries of God, whiche afterwards began to be vnworthy to say Masse: as though that the excellency of a Masling Priestе were greater, than the office of the Apostleship of a Bishop, and of the ministery of the Gospell. These things be so manifest, that they can not be denyed.

The sole life of Priests.

We haue spoken briefly of the outwarde abuses of the Popishe Masse, which the Priests do not onlye not reproue, but also maynteyne: now let vs consider the rest, which in deede they dare not maynteyne for good, yet for all that they doe not reforme them. The firste is, that the most part of them do say Masse without vnderstanding, that neyther they wote what they saye, nor what they meane by certayne of their appointed gestures: neyther haue anye care to vnderstand it. For they make suche vnlearned Priestes, that they can not some of them verye perfectly reade. And in some Dyoceses there is no more required in the makyng of them, but that they can reade, or sing a little. In the Decrees is declared of a Priestе which was so ignorannte of the Latine tong, that in Christening of a childe, he sayde in the Latine tongue, Ego baptiso te in nomine patria, & filia, & Spiritua sancta. And they laugh & haue a good sporte at it, when suche Masling Priests be made. In the third Booke of Moses called Leuiticus, Priestes are forbidden the vse of wyne at the tyme of their ministration, that they may be able to iudge betwixt the holy and vnholy. And the Prophete Malachie saith: The lippes of the Priestе doe kepe knowledge, and let men seke the lawe at his mouth. But thys is spoken of the Priests which be instituted by God. This kind of Priestes whereof we talke, hathe no nede at all of knowledge, for it is ynough for them, if they doe vtter certayne prescribed words, and intende to doe the same that the Church intendeth, although that they vnderstande nothing at all, neyther what they saye, nor what they doe. Wherefore it is not necessary that they shuld be verye great Clearkes.

They doe say Masse without vnderstanding.

Secondlye, they can not deny, but that there bee a number of Masses sayd without any religion or deuotion: yea so whipt vp and fombled together in such hast, that when a man woulde thinke they had scarcely begon, they are runne straighte to the Canon. And the sooner hee can dispatche patche his Masse, the better he is accepted of them that be present. They take it to be ynough if they haue the purpose and mynde to consecrate, though they doe it not in acte, yet in the effect of their minde onely. For what needeth anye deuotion in the worke, whiche is not vndertaken to the intent to worke effectually wyth God, but to serue his chauntery, and the people that be present? Who can sufficientlye way and consider howe much this hypocrisie doth offende the eyes of Gods Maiestie, when wyth their curious duckings, and gestures they doe not lawfully sacrifice, but play like foles and dissards in a stage play, and therein we may saye wyth the Prophet and with Christ: Thys people honoreth me with their lips, but their hearte is farre from me.

V Without religion and deuotion.

Thirdly, this Masse for the moste parte sauoreth of nothing else, but of gayne, and bying and selling, whych Christe declared twise by his owne doyng, that he could not suffer in hys Church. Firste the very beginning of this Massing priesthode, as touching the Bishops which be the ordinarie makers of them, is defiled with the hereste of Symonye. For they bee made Bishoppes eyther for entreatye, or for money, or for their diligēt seruice, and be so defyled with Symony, that they can not lawfully ordeyne others if we may credite their owne Decrees. Wherein wee doe reade in this wise: Whē the Bishop was made, that whiche he gaue was golde, and that whiche he lost, was his Soule: when he made an other, that which he receyued, was Golde, and that which he gaue was the Leprosie. Ergo the Symoniacall Bysshoppe can not giue Priesthode, vnlesse the Priesthode be Leprosie, that is to say, Hereste. For as we reade in the same place: Hee can not giue that which he receyued not himselfe. And he receyued it not, bycause that he receyued not the same freely, whych can not to be taken but freely. Therefore the Priestе whyche is made by such a Bysshoppe, eyther for money, eyther freely, can receyue nothyng else, but that whiche he could gyue. But if the Priestе bee made also by gyuing of money, he is subiecte vnto the lyke curse, and can not gyue blessing. Wherefore in the same place we finde, that who soeuer doe sell or buy holy orders, can not be Priests: whereof it is written, Curse to the gyuer, and curse to the taker. Thys is the Symoniacall hereste. Ergo if they be accursed, and not holy, howe can they make others holye: and when they be not in Christes bodye themselues, how can they giue or receiue Christes body? Howe can hee blesse which is accursed? Thus much in that Canon.

Con. Grana.

Canon. Qui cunque.

Secondly, the verye coueting and seking of Prebends and promotions of the Churche, is Symony, for you shall hardly finde one or two among a thousande, that come by this geare aright and lawfully, or wyth emptie hands.

Thirdly, the very celebration of the Masses also, with all that pertayneth thereunto, both prayying and singing, is infected with the leprosie of Symony. For it is set forth to bee sold for money, so that you shal haue none without ready money, & therof came our olde Prouerbe. No penny, no Pater noster. Truly if there were nothing else to be blamed in this Popishe Masse, but this mischiefe of wicked gayne, it were cause ynough why it ought to be reiected, that is to saye, for the Heresye of the Symonicall wickednesse, whereof there is so muche redde in the Decrées, whiche be shortlye knitte vppe in thys wise.

By the authoritie of Pope Leo, they that doe committe Symonie, receyue nothing but the spirite of lyes. And accozding vnto Gregorie, the Prieſthode doth not remaine with them that be in Symonie, their blessing is turned into cursing: there is curse both to the giuer and to the receyuer, for that they be not holye, nor placed in the body of Christ, for as muche as they bée curſed themselues, and can not sanctifye others, neyther giue nor receyue the bodie of Christe, nor bée able to blesse others. But after Ambzoses iudgemente, they be condemned to beare the repzoſe of cursyng, and are separated from the participation of the Lordes bodye and blond. When they receyue Golde, they deliuer Lepzosye for it: and for asmuche as the wicked cryme of selling of the ministerie can not be purged nor satisfyed, for accozding vnto the Councell of Calcedone, they be nothing the better by suche ozdeyning: and accozding vnto Gelasius, they bée wzapped in the damnation of Symonie: and accozding vnto Gregorie Nazianzene, they can by no meanes neither continue in the holy ozder, nor bée renued in it: they bée cast into the Lepzosye by Elizeus, and by Peter they bée condemned vnto destruction, and by Chzysse they bée cast out of the Temple, &c.

And in the same the Symonikes bée compared and associate vnto Judas the Traytour, and what be the Aultars of the Pallers but the Tables of the money chaungers: no lesse worthy, yea better worthye to be ouerthzowne, than those whyche Chzisse did ouerthzowe in the Temple at Hierusalem.

Fourthlye, what shall wée saye of the manifeste and shamelesse whozehuntyng of the Pallemongers? These holye thinges whiche are thoughte to be of moste hyghe reputation in Chzystes religion, are committed vnto whozehunters and concubinaries, whiche were wonte to bée secluded from the Communion of the Churche, if they were manifestlye founde suche, as the Prieſtes bée for the moste part now adayes, bycause that they hadde neither parte nor felowshippe in the kyngdome of God. If anye of Aarons sonnes bée vncleane, they bée shifted from the Prieſthode, bycause that the vncleanenesse of the Prieſtes is the defylyng of Gods name. Whyche lawe Hierome dothe suppose to bynde the Ministers of the newe Testamente also. The Lozde sayeth vnto the wicked. Why doest thou take my Testamente into thy mouthe? If thou sawest a Thiefe, thou dyddest runne with hym, and diddest putte thy portion wyth the adulterour. And in Esay God dothe refuse their sacrifices, whyche had vncleane handes. And Malachie sayeth: I haue no pleasure in you, and I wyll not take anye rewarde at youre handes. What doth he elſe say here, but that hée wyll not accept theyr offerynges, in whome he hath no pleasure nor delite? And that hée hath no good lykyng in whozemongers and adulterers, althoughe I speake not of wickedder things, ther is no doubt at all. Gregozie doth alledge oute of the lawe, that the vnclean person doth not offer vnto god in any wise, and giueth a reson why, bicause that he can not vndoe other mennes sinnes, whiche is burdened yet with his owne sinne. And again we reade this. In case that there be any Prieſtes, Deacons, or Subdeacons, lying in the crime of fornication, we do forbid them to enter into the Church in the behoof of God, the Almightye Father, and by the authoritie of S. Peter, vntill suche time, as they do repent and amende. And in case that there be anye that lift to continue in their sinne, sée none of you presume to heare their Masse. For their blessing shall be turned into cursing, witnesse the Lord by the Prophet: I will curse (saith he) youre blessings. But they whiche will not obey this moſt holsome precept, shall incurre the sinne of Idolatrie, as witnesseth Samuell. And Gregozie teacheth the same. For it is the sinne of witchcrafte, not to obey, and the mischiefe of Idolatry, to refuse to be taught. The verye same we may sée in the Decrées.

But in so playne a detestable matter they séeke shiftes, not to auoyde the filthinesse of theyr vncleane life by reformation and amendment: but to saue the estimation and marketting of their Masse among the vnlearned. Therefore they deuised that pretence of the worthynes of the worke which is wrought, according to the which they do saye, that the Masse is good of it selfe, as well if it be sayd of a wicked and vncleane person, as of a iuſt and cleane person. And to this ende they doe apply the vertue of the Masse vnto the worke whiche is wroughte, whiche Gabriell doth also. The cleanelle of the Prieſte (saye they) giueth not to the Masse that vertue which it hath, but the vertue commeth of the very worke which is wrought, what so euer the worker be. Ergo the vncleanesse of the Prieſt doth take nothing from it: like as the qualitie of the tauerner dothe neyther encrease, nor decay any thing at all the qualitie of the wine, being of it selfe good. For it is good, whether that he which selleth it be good or euill. Wherefore the Masse of ỹ whozemonger Prieſt, is no more to be eschewed, than the Masse of him that is, chaſt: and sole: neyther is the one to bée estéemed more than the other, bycause that the Masse pleaseth God of it selfe, albeit that the wicked and vncleane Prieſt doth not please him. This saye they. The blynde buſſards do not see, that if the Masse bée to bée compared wyth wyne whiche is good of it selfe, for that the Masse is good of it selfe, whatsoeuer the Maller be, as the Wyne is good whatsoeuer the seller of the Wine is, that it followeth that the wicked man dothe as well participate of the vertue thereof, as the faithfull and iuſt, if hée buy it for his money. For so goeth the vertue of the wyne, that it is not onely all one whether that it bée solde by the good or the euill, but it dothe also worke all alyke, whether that it bée dzuncke of the good or of the euill. If this be the condition also of the Masse, what is the lette, but that we may leaue all endeuour of godly life, and be saued all by the Masse?

1. Cor. 11. Truely it is manifeste by Paule that he eateth & drinketh his iudgement, which eateth and drinketh vnworthely: and therefore it is requisite, that he which will eate & drynke it, doe trie himselfe, and so eate and drinke, least that he be guiltie of the Lordes body and blood. And it is no matter whether that a man eate and drinke it for himselfe or for others, for in both he is made guiltie of the Lords bodye and bloud, who so euer doth eate and drinke it vnworthyly. But Gabriel sayeth, that the euill Priest in celebrating dothe helpe others, and condemne himselfe. But howe dothe he help other menne, by such a worke as he cõdemneth himselfe by? It maye bee so in the ministerie of preaching, but it can not bee so in the Masse. For in the Masse the matter is handled by blessinges and prayers, but the blessing of an euill Priest, as we alleaged a little before out of the Decrees, is turned into curse: And how shall the Priest helpe them by cursings, for whome hee doth celebrate. For God is not pleased with curses. This Gabriell perceyued, and therefore although that he did also follow the opinion of the worthynesse of the worke whiche is wroughte, yet he did warne ỹ priests in this wise: Let the faithful priests haue god regarde with themselues, with howe greate puritie of conscience, and preparation of minde, and deuotion of hearte, they ought to come to offer this pure, holye, and vnspotted hoste, the bread of life and cuppe of euerlasting saluation: least if they offer beyng subiecte vnto sinne, theyr offeryng bee lyke hys, whyche dothe sacrifice the same in the sight of the Father, least if they come to it, not tryng themselues, they doe rather crucifie the sonne of God agayne, than offer hym for a pleasaunte sacrifice to God the father, to the forgiuenesse of sinnes. This sayeth Gabriell. And what needed this warning, if the worke it selfe (as it is wrought) do please God alike, whether it be done of a good Priest or of an euill? Agayne, howe shall the oblation of the Masse, done by an euill Priest please God, if it bee no otherwise regarded of him, than if hee shoulde kyll the sonne in the sighte of the Father, yea whiche is yet more horrible, than if he shoulde crucifie Christe agayne? But they whiche be so folishe to defende the whoremongers Masses by the opinion of the worke whiche is wrought, do by a manifest argument vtter themselues, that they be farre wide from all zeale of Christian religion, and that they haue reiected not only the holy Scriptures, but the Decrees also of the Bishops, and the writings of the Fathers.

Gabriell Byell.

Whose. 48.

The like shift is that also, that as in the former respecte of the worke which is wrought, so in this respecte also of the Churche, they goe aboute to mainteyne the estimation of their Masse, and saye, whatsoeuer the Priest is, yet for all that his Masse is good, bycause that hee dothe celebrate in the name of the Churche. Wherefore although that hee bee a whoremonger, or a Symonist, or in anye other respecte haue neuer so euill a name, yet notwithstandyng, his Masse is to be regarded neuertheless. But we doe charge them agayne, that it can not be proued, that this was institute by the Lorde, that any man should offer and eate in the name of the Churche. It is Christe whiche offered for the Churche, gyuing himselfe vppon the Crosse, to cleanse the sinne by his bloud. None of the Apostles did offer and eate for the Church. This is in the institution of Antichrist, and not of Christe, of Apostatas, and not of ỹ Apostles.

The pretence of the Churche.

Furthermore lette them tell vs: what Church that is, which doth appoint open whoremongers and Symonistes for it selfe to Godwarde. For Christes Churche as it was institute by the Apostles, dothe excommunicate suche, and dothe not take them for members of the Churche. Whereof we may see to the Corinthians, and to the Ephesians. The Church of Christ hath appoynted no man to any office to the intente that he should be giltie of the Lordes bodye and bloude, eate and drinke hys owne iudgemente, and to crucifye Christ rather than to offer him, and to prouoke the anger of God rather than to appease it. Yea what neede hath the Churche to make any man mediatour betwixte God and it: after that it hathe gotten Christe the only begotten sonne of God to be the mediatour: muche lesse to appoynte therevnto whoremongers and Symonistes? It happeneth nowe and then, that a iust man maye praye for the vniust, but who can suffer that the vncleane person should praye for the Churche, or in the name of the Churche, and of that Church, which is of so great reputation with God, that through hir worthinesse it may excuse the vnworthynesse of the Priestes, and make it tolerable. Agayne, howe shall they praye vnto God, and offer in the name of the Church, which can not be reputed among the members of Christes Churche. I pray you can there bee a greater blotte and shame come to the Churche, than that they do attribute vnto it, that for the celebration of Christes Sacraments it doth appoynt Priestes, which shoulde praye and offer in hir name: and make themselues not only giltie of the bodye and bloud of Christe, but also doe defyle the Sacraments, and do prouoke the most heauie wrath of God: And in case that this be done in the name of the Churche, is not she also guiltie of so haynous offences? speciallye seeyng that she doth not onelye not speake agaynste it, but also maketh hir selfe partaker of such sacrifices.

Among the Masters are many good folke.

But they doe say, God forbid, but that there shoulde be found in the order of Priestes some that be neyther Symonistes, neyther whoremongers, neyther vnlearned, nor irreligiously disposed. For you shall fynde manye among them whiche vnderstandeth the holye Scriptures, & handleth them religiously, and liueth also vprightly: and why be their Masses also condemned? I aunswer: Our meaning is not to reiect the Masses, bycause of ỹ seruices of the Priestes, and the impuritie of their life: but rather for that, that the Masse is of it selfe naughte and very wicked, as we haue declared before. And wee touched those grosse abuses & faultes of Priestes, bycause that we would declare fully to the vttermost, howe that it is in all partes culpable, as well by reason of the faulte of them which do celebrate the Masse, as also of the Masse it selfe. As for them whiche seeme not to be altogither so euill, I am sory for their case wyth all my hearte, and yet withall doe much marueil, howe, and with what conscience they can endure in the filthye dregges of so manye wicked Masses. If they be good, why doe they communicate with the reprobate? Why doe they not reade in the Decrees those things whiche belongeth to thys purpose, where it is written to neglecte or make light of it, when a man may trouble and disappoynt the wicked, is nothing else, but to cherish them. And he is not without the scrupule or suspicion of secrete felowship, whiche forbeareth to meete with a manifest mischiefe. And agayne he seemeth to consente with him that dothe amisse, whiche goeth not about to cutte off the euils whiche ought to be reformed. And leaste this shoulde be referred vnto Bishops only, we reade in an other place in thys wyse: As well Priestes as all other faithfull ought to haue speciall care of them, that do perish, to the entent that by their reprouemente they maye be reformed from their sinnes, or if they seeme to be past amendment, that they may be separate from the Church. This and manye other suche lyke there be in the Canons. But in case this euill be growen so strong, that lyke vnto the goute it can not away with Phisike or any Medicines, then they are to be excused which are taken to bee the good, if they do flee from the company of this wicked sacrifice and sacrifisyng Priestes, and seeke to saue their owne soules.

Distinct. 83. Cano. Error.

Canone. Consent. vt. 23. quest. 5.

Thus farre wee haue recounted suche thinges, as we haue thoughte worthy reprehension in the Popishe Masse, sufficient to enforme the godly creature that serueth God, and is desirous to know the truth. There might yet manye thinges be touched more, if a man woulde consider those things which be sayd, song, and done at the priuate Masses: specially of suche as be appointed to the honor and seruice of Saintes. But wee meane not to employ that little leysure that we haue, vpon these manyfolde erroures, whereof there is so wyde and large a sea, and leaue off to be better occupyed. I beseeche God it may please him of his singular clemency and mercy, to delyuer and cleanse his Churches at length, from all erroures, superstitions, byeing and selling: and from the corrupt dealing of all filthy persons.

Of the true Seruice of God.

FOr as muche as the Popishe Masse is set forth vnto men to be the chiefe seruice of God, and that therefore they whyche doe make their gaine thereof, crye out that the seruice of God is abolished, when the Masse is abolished: I thinke it shall be verye conueniente, nowe that we haue shewed for what causes causes it ought to be taken away, to treate nexte of the true seruice of God: that it may appeare, that it is nothing so, that the true seruice of God is abolished, whē that ỹ Masse, whiche is in so many respectes wicked, is abolished.

I. What it is to vvorship.

WHereas the Latine worde of Worshipping is of that nature, that it signifyeth both to serue, and obserue, and honoure, it is aptlye referred vnto God, so that all that seruice, obseruaunce, reuerence, and deuotion, whereby we do worship God as well inwardly in our hearte, as outwardely in deede is called, The worship of God.

II. That God is to be VVorshipped.

THere be two most waighty causes why God oughte to be worshipped: the one is, that it is our dutie: the other that it is for oure commoditie, yea rather for our necessitie. All things liuing bothe in Heauen and in earth, owe vnto him of dutie, worship and obedience. Let euery spirit (saith Dauid) praise ỹ Lord. This iurisdiction he hathe ouer all things. He is the Lord of all, & therefore he saith most worthily in Malachie: If I be the Lorde, where is the feare of me? He is the creator of all thinges, and in that respecte also hee hath iurisdisdiction ouer all thinges. For there is nothing that was not made by him. And no doubt he is vnworthy to be and to liue, whosoeuer doth not worshippe the fountayne of his being and life, and by not worshyppyng him, doth despise him. Yea he is vnworthy to haue anye place eyther in heauen or in earth, whych supposeth not that he ought to worshyppe the Lorde of Heauen and earth.

That is worship.

Secondly, if we will consider our necessitie, it behoueth vs to worship and to serue God in the respecte thereof also. For our saluation dothe depend vppon him only. And yet wee maye not so worship him, as though that he had anye neede of our seruice & attendance, God forbidde: but for that, that we be not able to endure for a little while, much lesse for euermore, without his grace. So sayeth Augustine: Neyther hadst thou neede of me, neyther I am anye suche good thing, whereby thou art holpen, my Lorde and my God: not ỹ I do serue thee in suche sorte, that thou shouldest else be weary in doing, or that thy authoritie should be the lesser if thou lacke my seruice: neyther that I shoulde so mainue and till thee, as men doe the earthe, or that else thou shuldest be vnderseled, if that I should not worship thee, and serue thee, to the intente that I may haue good of thee. From whome I haue it, that I am able to receyue good. Thus dothe he attribute the cause of Gods seruice, not vnto his neede, but vnto our profite and necessitie. And therewithall that agreeth whiche Dauid saith: My good is nothing vnto thee, as though he had sayd: In case I do any good, it profiteth not thee but me. For thou hast no neede of my good things. For howe shoulde hee haue neede of anye thyng, whiche dothe supplye all mennes needes of hys

The second cause is for our necessitie.

Augustl. 1. lib. conf. Iuuinia. 13. cap. 1.

Psalm. 16.

owne? Wherefore in the Ebrewe God is called Sufficiēt in al things. And therefore he sayeth vnto them whiche doe surmise, that he taketh pleasure in their sacrifices, rewards, and burnte offerings: Heare me my people, and I will speake: harken Israel, & I wil testifie vnto thée: I am thy God, I wil not trie thée in thy sacrifices, thy burnte offerings be alwayes in my sight, I will not receiue Calues of thy house, nor Goates out of thy flockes, for al the wild beastes of the woods be mine, and the cattell vpon the Hilles, and Dren, I know al the birds of the skie, and the beautie of the fielde is with me. If I bée hungry, I wil not tell thée, for all the compasse of the Earthe, and the fulnesse thereof is mine. Shall I eate ỹ flesh of Bulles, or drinke the bloud of Goates? &c. They shoulde not haue néeded to haue bin admonished hereof, if they had not so worshipped God with giftes and sacrifices, as though he had bin more pleased with the receiuing of them, than with the gyuing vnto them, of whiche condition all they be ỹ stand in néede to be holped with other mens doings and liberalitie, as not béeing able to serue their owne turne in all poynts. But the estate of God, who is sufficiente in all poyntes, is farre otherwyse than is the estate eyther of Angels, eyther of menne, yea though they bée neuer so mighty Kings and Princes. For whatsoeuer they haue, they haue it not of themselues, but from elsewhere: neyther doe they encrease their goodes by giuing them out, but decrease them: and do encrease them by receyuing. Neyther be they able and sufficiente to serue theyr owne turne, but they haue néede of the ayd of others, without the which they cā not continue. But God hath all, and is able to doe all of himselfe, and of himselfe giueth vs all thinges to enioy, as Paule witnesseth: And yet for all that, his riches and wealth decayeth not one whitte, nor he can not be holpen with oure worshippe and seruice. Wherefore he is serued to oure greate profyte, and to none of hys owne.

And these two causes, for whyche it is méete that we shuld serue God: firste bycause that we doe owe vnto him our seruice, and secondly bicause that our profite and necessitie dothe so require, be two respectes in hym whervnto they be referred well and aright. The first is that he hathe power ouer all, as the God, Creator, & Lord of al: the second is the euident, and vndoubted proofe and trial of his Goodnes and Loue towards mā, and of his Righteousnesse and of our impotencie, wherin he is good and mercifull towardes all them whiche doe hartily serue hym, and a righteous iudge towards the wicked, and such as doe contemne his Maiestie. The eyes of the Lorde (saith Dauid) are vpō the iust, and his eares vnto their prayers, but the Lords countenance is vpon them, whiche doe euill, to destroy the memorie of them from the earth. He is not blinde, deafe, nor strange towardes the vowes and desires of the faithfull, which doe serue him. Wherefore it can not be, that we may serue him vnprofitablye or in vayne, so that it be done vprightely, directly, and faithfully. He dothe not lye, where he saith: I will glorifie them which do glorifie me.

But

But they are in an other minde that say: There is no God. This sorte of men doe laugh at all seruice and obseruaunces of God in theyr harte, and doe condemne it as a foolishnesse: for that that they do thinke there is no God: whiche Cicero also doth touche. And they do also thinke otherwise, whose wickednesse is reproued in Malachie, to be the denying of the prouidence of God: He is a vayne mā (say they) that doth serue God: or as it is in the Ebrewe: It is in vaine to serue, or to worshipp God. And what profite commeth thereof, that we haue kepte his seruice, and that we haue walked after a mourning sort before the Lord of hostes? And we call the arrogant men happie, and they be maynteyned whiche do wickedly: yea and they which do tempt God are deliuered. Thus doe these folke thinke of God: they confesse in déede that there is a God, but they thinke, that it is but in vaine to serue him, for that that he doth neyther saue his seruāts, nor condemne the wicked, but rather make them happier men than the rest. But the godly, and such as doe feare God, be of an other manner of minde, which doe not onely knowe that there is a God, but are also assured of his special prouidence, which he doth faithfully and for euermore vse towards them, whiche do feare and serue him. Their study & endeuour is to stirre then one an other in the Loue, obseruance, & seruice agaynst the wordes of the wicked folkes. Whereof wée do reade in the place before alleaged of Malachie, in this wise: Then spake they whiche doe feare God, euery one to his neighbour, saying: The Lorde dothe bothe heare and herken, and there is written a booke of notes before hym, for them which doe feare the Lorde, and thinke vpō his name.

III. Which is the true seruice of God.

All they whiche doe stryue about the true seruice of God, doe confesse that wée ought to serue God: whiche kinde of stryfe and contention is growen maruelous great in the Churche in this our age. For albeit that we doe all graunt that wée ought to serue God: yet for all that wée be diuided into partes and sects in this question. Whiche is the true seruice of God. Some thinke that it skilleth not in what things a man worship and serue God, so that his intēt be to serue him in those things. Theyr saying is, that whiche a man dothe of a good meaning, doth please God well. They doe measure the truth of Gods seruice by the good intent of the man, and they will not be driuen from this opinion by any doctrine of the Holy Scriptures.

2 Where be some that doe sanctifie those things whiche were institute and brought into the Church by the fathers, for a seruice of God. For they do attribute them vnto the prouoking and direction of the Holy spirite. The most parte do not so much as thinke in theyr minde, who they be, whom they do serue. So that we do dissent from all these, and doe not only after the common meaning determine that God ought to be serued, but doe also limitte the seruice of God vnto these conditions, that VVe do al cōfesse that vvee ought to serue God.

Some think that it skilleth not in vvhat things a mā serue God.

Some doe referre the seruice of God vnto the institutions of the Fathers.

Some do not thinke vvhat they be vvhome they doe serue.

אל שדי
El shadai.

owne? Wherefore in the Ebrewe God is called Sufficiēt in al things. And therefore he sayeth vnto them whiche doe surmise, that he taketh pleasure in their sacrifices, rewards, and burnte offerings: Heare me my people, and I will speake: harken Israel, & I wil testifie vnto thée: I am thy God, I wil not trie thée in thy sacrifices, thy burnte offerings be alwayes in my sight, I wil not receiue Calues of thy house, nor Goates out of thy flockes, for al the wild beastes of the woods be mine, and the cattell vpon the Hilles, and Oxen, I know al the birds of the skie, and the beautie of the fielde is with me. If I bée hungry, I wil not tell thée, for all the compasse of the Earthe, and the fulnesse thereof is mine. Shall I eate ỹ flesh of Bulles, or drinke the bloud of Goates? &c. They shoulde not haue néeded to haue bin admonished hereof, if they had not so worshipped God with giftes and sacrifices, as though he had bin more pleased with the receiuing of them, than with the gyuing vnto them, of whiche condition all they be ỹ stand in néede to be helped with other mens doings and liberalitie, as not béeing able to serue their owne turne in all poynts. But the estate of God, who is sufficiente in all poyntes, is farre otherwyse than is the estate eyther of Angels, eyther of menne, yea though they bée neuer so mighty Kings and Princes. For whatsoeuer they haue, they haue it not of themselues, but from elsewhere: neyther doe they encrease their goodes by giuing them out, but decrease them: and do encrease them by receyuing. Neyther be they able and sufficiente to serue theyr owne turne, but they haue néede of the ayd of others, without the which they cā not continue. But God hath all, and is able to doe all of himselfe, and of himselfe giueth vs all thinges to enioy, as Paule witnesseth: And yet for all that, his riches and wealth decayeth not one whitte, nor he can not be holpen with oure worshippe and seruice. Wherefore he is serued to oure greate profyte, and to none of hys owne.

1. Tim. vi.

And these two causes, for whyche it is méete that we shuld serue God: firste bycause that we doe owe vnto him our seruice, and secondly bicause that our profite and necessitie dothe so require, be two respectes in hym whervnto they be referred well and aright. The first is that he hathe power ouer all, as the God, Creator, & Lord of al: the second is the euident, and vndoubted proofe and trial of his Godnes and Loue towards mā, and of his Righteousnesse and of our impotencie, wherin he is good and mercifull towardes all them whiche doe hartily serue hym, and a rightuous iudge towards the wicked, and such as doe contemne his Maiestie. The eyes of the Lorde (saith Dauid) are vpō the iust, and his eares vnto their prayers, but the Lords countenance is vpon them, whiche doe euill, to destroy the memorie of them from the earth. He is not blinde, deafe, nor strange towardes the vowes and desires of the faithfull, which doe serue him. Wherefore it can not be, that we may serue him vnprofitablye or in vayne, so that it be done vprightely, directly, and faithfully. He dothe not lye, where he saith: I will glorifie them which do glorifie me.

Two speciall causes why God is worthy to be serued.

Psalme 50.

Psalme 33.

But

But they are in an other minde that say: There is no God. This sorte of men doe laugh at all seruice and obseruaunces of God in theyr harte, and doe condemne it as a foolishnesse: for that that they do thinke there is no God: whiche Cicero also doth touche. And they do also thinke otherwise, whose wickednesse is reproued in Malachie, to be the denying of the prouidence of God: He is a vayne mā (say they) that doth serue God: or as it is in the Ebrewe: It is in vaine to serue, or to worship God. And what profite commeth thereof, that we haue kepte his seruice, and that we haue walked after a mourning sort before the Lord of hostes? And we call the arrogant men happie, and they be maynteyned whiche do wickedly: yea and they which do tempt God are deliuered. Thus doe these folke thinke of God: they confesse in déede that there is a God, but they thinke, that it is but in vaine to serue him, for that that he doth neyther saue his seruāts, nor condemne the wicked, but rather make them happier men than the rest. But the godly, and such as doe feare God, be of an other manner of minde, which doe not onely knowe that there is a God, but are also assured of his special prouidence, which he doth faithfully and for euermore vse towards them, whiche do feare and serue him. Their study & endeuour is to strēgthen one an other in the Loue, obseruance, & seruice against the workes of the wicked folkes. Whereof wée do reade in the place before alleaged of Malachie, in this wise: Then spake they whiche doe feare God, euery one to his neighbour, saying: The Lorde dothe bothe heare and herken, and there is written a booke of notes before hym, for them which doe feare the Lorde, and thinke vpō his name.

III. Which is the true seruice of God.

All they whiche doe stryue about the true seruice of God, doe confesse that wée ought to serue God: whiche kinde of stryfe and contention is growen maruelous great in the Churche in this our age. For albeit that we doe all graunt that wée ought to serue God: yet for all that wée be diuided into partes and sects in this question. Whiche is the true seruice of God. Some thinke that it skilleth not in what things a man worship and serue God, so that his intēt be to serue him in those things. They say is, that whiche a man dothe of a good meaning, doth please God well. They doe measure the truth of Gods seruice by the good intent of the man, and they will not be driuen from this opinion by any doctrine of the Holy Scriptures.

VVe do al cōfesse that vvee ought to serue God.

Some think that it skilleth not in vvhat things a mā serue God.

2 There be some that doe sanctifie those things whiche were institute and brought into the Church by the fathers, for a seruice of God. For they do attribute them vnto the prouoking and direction of the Holy spirite. The most parte do not so much as thinke in theyr minde, who they be, whom they do serue. So that we do dissent from all these, and doe not only after the common meaning determine that God ought to be serued, but doe also limitte the seruice of God vnto these conditions, that there be no creature serued but god: not a counterfaite God, but a true God, not ioyned with others, but alone, not what way we lik, but according to his expresse will.

Some doe referre the seruice of God vnto the institutions of the Fathers.

Some do not thinke vvhat they be vvhome they doe serue.

Idolaters. 1 Firste of all they whiche doe serue Images and Idols, and therefore be called Idolaters when they doe serue them by fallyng before them, by makyng them altares, by burnyng of Candels and sacrifices: truely they serue not God, but creatures. For albeit they be not so mad to thinke that the dumme, deafe, and insensible Images, be Gods: yet for all that they do serue them as Gods, and call them also Goddes, whereas they be in deede the workmãshyp of the hands of men. Of them we do read in this wise: Unhappy be they and among the deade is their hope, which haue called ỹ workes of mẽs hands, Goddes, golde and siluer, and the inuention of arte, and the similitudes of beastes, or an vnprofitable stone, the worke of an auncient hande, &c. And a little afterwarde: And he when he maketh any vowe, inquireth of the Image concernyng his substaunce, and for hys children, or for his mariage. He is not ashamed to talke with him whiche hath no soule, & he prayeth to that whiche is weake and feeble, for health, and to the dead for lyfe and calleth vpon the vnprofitable for ayde, and for his iourney he asketh counsel of him whiche can not goe himselfe, and he seeketh vpon him, to obtayne, and to bryng to passe any matter, and for the successe of al things of him whiche is good for nothing.

Sapient. 13.

Diuell seruers. 2 Secondly, they do not serue the true God, but counterfaite Goddes, whiche doe folowe the wickednesse of the Heathen, and serue the Diuell vnder the name of Iupiter, Saturne, Mars, Mercury, Uenus the Sunne, & of the Mone, after whose names the dayes in the weeke be named yet among Christian menne, so that the Lordes day is called Sunday, Dies Solis, and the second day of the weeke is called Monday, for the Mones day, Dies Lunæ, the thirde, tuysday, as the day of Mars, Dies Martis, the fourth Wednesday, of Mercury, Dies Mercurij, the fifte Thursday of Iupiter, Dies Iouis, the sixt of Uenus called Friday, Dies Veneris, the seuenth of Saturne Satursday, Dies Saturni, whiche leauings of Gentilitie, we may thanke the negligẽce of the Bishops for. What shall we say of thẽ whiche do apply ỹ seruice of images vnto dead Saints? Do not they also serue not God but creatures? But of them we haue spoken in the Decalogus. Albeit that they do say, that they serue no straunge God when they doe worshyp saintes, yet for all that they can not denie that they be creatures and not the creator, which they do worshyp and serue, wherefore they seruice is also to be blamed, bicause that they do not serue the true God, but creatures.

Liquis est anima tua.

VVorshippers of Saintes.

They vvitche vvorship alone.

3 Thirdly, they be not in the true seruice neyther whiche doe serue the true God: and yet notwithstanding doe not serue him onely and alone, but doe also ioyne others vnto him, contrary vnto the expresse commandement of God, where he chargeth saying: Thou shalte haue no other Goddes with mée. But of all this whole matter we haue spoken in the exposition of the firste precept of the Deca-

Decalogus, where we did also declare the reasons why God will not be ioyned with others, but be worshipped alone: and what answere is to be made vnto the obiection of the Papistes, whiche matter we haue touched also in Mathew, where our Sauiour aunswered the Diuel that tempted him, saying, It is written, Thou shalte honor thy Lorde God, and serue him onely. Augustine doth dispute vppon this, that God onely ought to be serued in this wise: what soeuer the soule dothe serue as God, it muste of necessity thinke it better than it selfe. And we muste beleue, that neyther the earth nor the Sea, nor Starres, nor Sunne, nor Mone, nor any other thyng that may bée felte or séene with these eyes: neyther the heauen it selfe whiche wée can not see, is to be thought better than the nature of the soule. Yea all these thyngs be farre worse than any soule, as is proued by good reason, when the true louers thereof dare constantly and obediently folow hir leadyng, through the vnwonted, and therefore harde places. And in case there be any thyng else in nature, besides those things which be knowen to our senses, and whiche haue any space of place, wée say surely that the soule is better than they all. So that if there bée any other lyke things of Gods creation, some may be worse and some equall: worse, as the soule of a beaste, equall, as Angels, but nothyng better. And in case any of those things chaunce at any tyme to be better, it is by the reason of the sinne of the soule and not of hyr nature. And yet for all that, it is not thereby so muche the worse, that the soule of a beaste is to be preferred before it, or to bée compared vnto it. Therefore it ought to serue God only, who onely is author of it. But any man what soeuer he be, though he be the wisest and perfectest that euer was: or any soule hauing reason, or neuer so blessed, is onely to be loued & followed, and wée may giue vnto it that which is meet for it, according vnto the deserte and degrée thereof. But you shall onely honor the Lord God, and serue him onely. This sayth he. So that the effect of this disputation is, that man muste worshyp and serue that onely, which is better than man. For it is a very vaine & vnséemely thing for a man to honor that whiche is equall to himselfe, or worse than himselfe. But God onely is better than man, whome he made in the beginning according vnto his image & similitude, & auaunced him in that worthynesse aboue all things. Ergo, man ought to serue and worshyp God only.

God is to be serued after his owne vvill.

Fourthly, it is requisite to the true seruice of God, that the true & onely God be serued, but that he be serued also, according vnto the order of his will, not at our owne or any others appoyntment. To serue God, is to gratifie him: and no man doth gratifie him, but in doyng that whiche pleaseth hym. Wherefore all willworships be refused in his sighte as vnthankeful and voyde. And that by the testimony of Christe where he sayth, They doe serue mée in vayne teaching the doctrines and cõmaundements of men? Who will say that he serueth well, whiche serueth not according to his maisters will, but as he listeth himselfe? How much ỹ more than

there be no creature serued but god: not a counterfaite God, but a true God, not ioyned with others, but alone, not what way we lift, but according to his expresse will.

Idolaters.

1 Firste of all they whiche doe serue Images and Idols, and therefore be called Idolaters when they doe serue them by fallyng before them, by makyng them altares, by burnyng of Candels and sacrifices: truely they serue not God, but creatures. For albeit they be not so mad to thinke that the dumme, deafe, and insensible Images, be Gods: yet for all that they do serue them as Gods, and call them also Goddes, whereas they be in déede the worckmáshyp of the hands of men. Of them we do read in this wise: Unhappy be they and among the deade is their hope, which haue called ẏ̀ workes of més hands, Goddes, golde and siluer, and the inuention of arte, and the similitudes of beastes, or an vnprofitable stone, the worke of an auncient hande, &c. And a little afterwarde: And he when he maketh any vowe, inquireth of the Image concernyng his substaunce, and for hys children, or for his mariage. He is not ashamed to talke with him whiche hath no soule, & he prayeth to that whiche is weake and feéble, for health, and to the dead for lyfe and calleth vpon the vnprofitable for ayde, and for his iourney he asketh counsel of him whiche can not goe himselfe, and he séeketh vpon him, to obtayne, and to bryng to passe any matter, and for the successe of al things of him whiche is god for nothing.

Sapient. 13.

Diuell seruers.

2 Secondly, they do not serue the true God, but counterfaite Goddes, whiche doe folowe the wickednesse of the Heathen, and serue the Diuell vnder the name of Iupiter, Saturne, Pars, Percury, Venus the Sunne, & of the Mone, after whose names the dayes in the wéke be named yet among Christian menne, so that the Lordes day is called Sunday, Dies Solis, and the second day of the wéke is called Monday, for the Mones day, Dies Lunæ, the thirde, tuysday, as the day of Pars, Dies Martis, the fourth Wednesday, of Mercury, Dies Mercurij, the fifte Thursday of Iupiter, Dies Iouis, the sixt of Venus called Friday, Dies Veneris, the seuenth of Saturne Satursday, Dies Saturni, whiche leauings of Gentilitie, we may thanke the negligẽce of the Bishops for. What shall we say of thẽ whiche do apply ẏ̀ seruice of images vnto dead Saints? Do not they also serue not God but creatures? But of them we haue spoken in the Decalogus. Albeit that they do say, that they serue no straunge God when they doe worship saintes, yet for all that they can not denie that they be creatures and not the creator, which they do worship and serue, wherfore theyr seruice is also to be blamed, because that they do not serue the true God, but creatures.

Diuell seruers of Saints.

They worship worse alone.

3 Thirdly, they be not in the true seruice neyther whiche doe serue the true God: and yet notwithstanding doe not serue him onely and alone, but doe also ioyne others vnto him, contrary vnto the expresse commandement of God, where he chargeth saying: Thou shalte haue no other Goddes with mée. But of all this whole matter we haue spoken in the exposition of the firste precept of the Deca-

Decalogus, where we did also declare the reasons why God will not be ioyned with others, but be worshipped alone: and what answere is to be made vnto the obiection of the Papistes, whiche matter we haue touched also in Mathew, where our Sauiour aunswered the Diuel that tempted him, saying, It is written, Thou shalte honor thy Lorde God, and serue him onely. Augustine doth dispute vppon this, that God onely ought to be serued in this wise: what soeuer the soule dothe serue as God, it muste of necessity thinke it better than it selfe. And we muste beleue, that neyther the earth nor the Sea, nor Starres, nor Sunne, nor Mone, nor any other thyng that may bée felte or séene with these eyes: neyther the heauen it selfe whiche wée can not sée, is to be thought better than the nature of the soule. Yea all these thyngs be farre worse than any soule, as is proued by good reason, when the true louers thereof dare constantly and obediently folow hir leadyng, through the vnwonted, and therefore harde places. And in case there be any thyng else in nature, besides those things which be knowen to our senses, and whiche haue any space of place, wée say surely that the soule is better than they all. So that if there bée any other lyke things of Gods creation, some may be worse and some equall: worse, as the soule of a beaste, equall, as Angels, but nothyng better. And in case any of those things chaunce at any tyme to be better, it is by the reason of the sinne of the soule and not of hyr nature. And yet for all that, it is not thereby so muche the worse, that the soule of a beaste is to be preferred before it, or to bée compared vnto it. Therefore it ought to serue God only, who onely is author of it. But any man what soeuer he be, though he be the wisest and perfectest that euer was: or any soule hauing reason, or neuer so blessed, is onely to be loued & followed, and wée may giue vnto it that which is méet for it, according vnto the deserte and degrée thereof. But you shall onely honor the Lord God, and serue him onely. This sayth he. So that the effect of this disputation is, that man muste worship and serue that onely, which is better than man. For it is a very vaine & vnséemely thing for a man to honor that whiche is equall to himselfe, or worse than himselfe. But God onely is better than man, whome he made in the beginning according vnto his image & similitude, & auaunced him in that worthynesse aboue all things. Ergo, man ought to serue and worship God only.

God is to be serued after his owne will.

Fourthly, it is requisite to the true seruice of God, that the true & onely God be serued, but that he be serued also, accordyng vnto the order of his will, not at our owne or any others appoyntment. To serue God, is to gratifie him: and no mar doth gratifie him, but in doyng that whiche pleaseth hym. Wherefore all wilworships be refused in his sighte as vnthankeful and vayne. And that by the testimony of Christe where he sayth, They doe serue mée in vayne teaching the doctrines and cõmaundements of men? Who will say that he serueth well, whiche serueth not according to his maisters will, but as he listeth himselfe? How much ẏ̀ more than is it requisite, that we whiche must serue God, yelde our selues in all things vnto his will? Dothe not the very reason of seruice it self, and subiection of seruants, and the common opinion of all menne shewe the same? How els came that into Socrates minde to say, that euery God ought so to be worshipped and serued, as he himselfe should cõmaunde to be worshipped and serued. Which opinion Augustine also doth allege, and for that cause saith, that the Romaines whereas they had appoynted to serue all manner of Goddes, and therefore had a tẽple called The Temple of al Goddes, yet for al that they would not serue the true God, ý is to say, the God of the Ebrewes, bicause that if they should serue him any other way than as he appointed to be serued, they shoulde not serue him, but theyr owne deuice. For in case that they wold haue serued him after that sorte, as he appointed him selfe to be serued: they coulde not haue worshipped any other Goddes, whiche he had forbidden. So that he sayth, that they refused the seruice of the only true God, bicause that they would not offend all the other counterfayte Gods, fearyng more the displeasure of them, than truskyng that the fauour and good will of him should do them good. Then the auncient Romaines, whẽ they were yet straungers from the knowledge of God, and before that they became Christians, did acknowledge it to be better for them, not to serue God at all, than to serue him not after the appoynted order of his will: and yet theyr successors whiche doe so much crake of the faith of Christe, and of the knowledge of God, haue so lost the perseuerance of the cõmon sense, & are so folishe, that they do esteme the seruice of God to consist in those things, whiche be institute by the deuice of man, and not of God. Lette thẽ examine theyr seruice of Saints, and of Masses, and such other trumpery, as they vse in the Churches, with the rule of Gods worde, as the oracles, and answeres of Gods will, and let them consider whether that they be such as may please God, and wherby the consciences of the faithfull may be assuredly perswaded of the will of God.

than

Socrates.

De consensu Euang. ca. 18.

Math. 15.

πανδεῖον

IIII. Which be the partes of the true seruice of God.

FIrst of all, forasmuche as it appeareth, that the true seruice & worship of God is not to be measured by the iudgement of man, but by the will of God, it is manifest that it must nedes folow, that the first part of Gods seruice is true obedience. And that appeareth by the testimony of Samuell. And Samuell sayde vnto Saule: Suffer mẽ, and I will tell thée what the Lorde hath sayde vnto me this nighte: And he sayde vnto him, Speake on. And Samuell sayd. When thou wast litle in thine owne sight, wast thou not made the head of the Tribes of Israel: and the Lorde anoynted thée to be the king ouer Israell, and the Lorde sent thée on a iourney and sayde: Go and slay those sinners the Amalechites, and thou shalt fight agaynst them, vntill the vtter destruction of them. Why then didst thou not heare the voyce of the Lord, but hast turned thée vn-

Obedience the first parte of Gods seruice.

1. Sam. 15.

to the

to the spoyle, and hast done euill in the eyes of the Lorde? And Saule sayde vnto Samuell. Yes sir, I haue heard the Lordes voyce, and I haue walked by the way which the Lord sent me. And I haue brought away Agag the king, & haue slayne Amelech, but the people toke some of the spoyle, as shæpe and Oxen, the chiefest of the things which were slaine, to offer vnto their Lorde his God in Galgalis. And Samuell sayd: Will God haue burnte offerings and sacrifices, & not rather haue his wordes obeyed? For obediẽce is better than sacrifices: and to harken vnto him, better than to offer the fat of Rams. For to be disobediẽt, is like the sinne of witchcraft: and to be obstinate, is as muche as the mischiefe of idolatrie. Therefore forasmuch as thou hast caste off the Lordes Worde, the Lorde hath shaken thée off, that thou shalt not be king.

Thus muche in Samuell. By whiche wordes we sée it expressly meante, that the first parte of Gods seruice doth consiste in this poynt, if he be obeyed.

2 Secondly, that this obedience is requyred, whereby men muste obey his will, certified by expresse wordes, albeit he commaunde to haue many thousand of the wicked slayne, much more when he commaundeth to doe good vnto all men.

3 Thirdly, that this obedience is more worthy than al sacrifices, holks, and burnte offerings, we may sée in Ieremie the seuenth chapiter.

4 Fourthly, that to disobey, is as much as if a man commit the mischiefe of Idolatrie. So that they be farre wyde, whiche doe measure the seruice of God by outwarde & church seruices, sette forth by no worde of God. How much more meeter were it to admonish all men, and specially Princes, Magistrates, and Iudges, to do iudgement and righteousnesse, to loue well doyng, & to walke carefully with the Lorde their God: for this is good, and commaunded by the Lorde. But of this obedience wée will speake in a place a parte. And for this present let this be inough, to know that this is the first and chief parte of the seruice of God.

Math. 6.

2 The seconde parte of the seruice of God, is attributed aright vnto Inuocation. Wherof we sing in the Psalme: Make a Sacrifice of praise vnto God, and yelde thy vowes vnto the most high. And call vpon mée in the day of trouble, and I will deliuer thée, and thou shalt glorifie me. The people of the lawe supposed, that they did highly serue God in the Sacrifices of beastes, as though that he toke pleasure in receyuyng, and not rather in giuing and sauing. He findeth faulte with this folishnesse of theirs, and giueth order vnto them for the seruice whiche he requireth at theyr handes, and sayth thus: Call vppon mée in the day of thy trouble, and I will delyuer thée, and thou shalt glorifie mée. As if he sayde: If thou serue me as God, thy God, thou shalte not serue by thy giftes, which I couet not, but rather desire thou and receyue all things at my hande. And so doyng, thou shalte glorifie me as true God, whose wisdome this is, not to receyue, but to bestowe all things vnto his people. This glory is commonly for the Maiestie and magnificence of God, Invocatiõ, the seconde parte of Gods seruice.

Psalm. 50.

whereof it were seemely that Kings and Princes shoulde declare some resemblaunce, as suche as God himself in his Scriptures calleth Gods. Wee may consider withall the nature of exceeding goodnesse, whiche so excelleth in God, that he doth nothyng more readily, than good vnto all men: and therefore wee can offer vnto him nothing that is more acceptable, than the callyng for of his helpe, whiche in thys respecte is also moste rightly reckened amongst the partes of Gods seruice. And it is not without cause that Augustine dothe put Fayth and Hope amongst the partes of Gods seruice. For vnlesse that we doe beleeue and hope, wee shall neuer boldly call vpō the Lorde our God. For howe (sayth the Apostle) shall they call vpon him, in whome they do not beleeue? Wee must beleue that God is ready to do good vnto them which doe cal vpon him in truthe, and hope that he will heare vs when we call on him. Incredulitie and mistrust, maketh a man to be doubtfull, and not to call vpon him.

3 The thyrde parte of Gods seruice is gyuen to the Sacrifice of prayse: whereof is song in the foresayde Psalme. Hee that dothe Sacrifice of prayse, dothe glorifie me. And the Sacrifice of prayse ryseth vppon the feelyng of Gods goodnesse and mercy: whereby our mouthes be opened to preache and prayse him. For this openyng of the mouth the Prophete dothe pray, saying: Lorde open thou my lippes, and my mouthe shall shewe forthe thy prayse.

4 Vnto these partes of Gods seruice wee muste also referre Adoration, or the vtter submission, and prostratyng and bowyng downe of themselues, if yée will so call it. This peece of Gods seruice so farre forth as it pertayneth to the submission of the Spirite, is common vnto the reste, and of that nature, that without it the reste can not truely and fully be performed. For there is neyther true obedience, neyther true inuocation, nor yet true Sacrifice of prayse, where there dothe not also concurre this submission of the Spirite, reuerencyng and fearing God, wherefore Christe did toyne this adoration and seruyce of God together, saying: Thou shalte adore the Lorde thy God, and serue him onely. But so farre forthe as it is taken for the outwarde behauiours of the mynde. Whiche humbleth it selfe, it dothe include in it all those Rites, Ceremonies, and Seruices, whereby the godly doe worshippe and serue God accordyng vnto his worde. But vnto the firste sense, that is to be referred, which Christe sayde to the Samaritane: The houre is come, and euen nowe it is when the true worshippers shall worshippe the Father in Spirite and truthe. For the Father also woulde haue suche to worshyp him. God is a Spirite, and it behoueth them whiche doe worshippe him, to worshyp him in Spirite and truthe: whereof wee haue spoken in oure commentaries vpon John. In these partes I suppose is comprehended the true seruice of God, if there bee yet any moe, they may be well referred vnto these as to the more generall partes.

To

Psalm 82.

Adoration.

Psalm 50.

Fayth and Hope.

Rom. 10.

The sacrifice of prayse, the thirde part of the seruice of god

Ioan. 4.

To vvhome the seruice of God belongeth.

IF you will aske me to whome this seruice of God doth belōg, it may be well aunswered to all, and not all. Vnto all, in respecte that it is conuenient for all things created as well heauenly as earthly, to serue God. For why shoulde not all men, and all things serue hym, by whome all menne and all things bothe bée, and also be conserued: And it dothe not belong vnto al, for as muche as he is not serued of all, but is of many eyther vtterlye contemned, or not serued aright. Augustine sayth that the sincere seruice of God is in fewe. Surely if we consider those things, whiche we haue before touched of the true seruice of God: that is to say, what it is to serue god, & that none is to be serued but God, and none elle but he, & what the true seruice of God is, and what be the partes thereof, I suppose it shall be manifest inough, that there be not onely fewe, but also very fewe true seruers of God. In the Popery they be taken for true seruers of God, whiche be anoynted therevnto, to pray, to sing, and to say Masses in the Churches, if those things which they do be cōsidered and tried to the holy scriptures, as to ỳ touch stone: agayne if they be also considered of what they bée, and what they doe seeke for, in Gods Churche, I suppose it is put out of all doubte, that they be nothyng lesse than true seruers of God. For howe can he bée a seruer of God, whiche dothe neyther serue God in spirite nor in truthe, but in hypocrisie, as a belly slaue, & counterfayteth the seruice of God, and doth not those things whiche agreeth vnto Gods will, but is as far wyde thereof, as it is from the East vnto the West.

And what they be whiche may be taken for the true seruers of God, it is not harde to know, in case we vnderstande who be not the true worshippers of God. Whosoeuer is disobedient vnto Goddes worde, ought not to be accompted among the seruaunts of God, for as muche as the first parte of Goddes seruice is true obedience, employed hartely to the rule of his will. Ergo hée that dothe obaye Goddes worde and hys will, is the true seruer of God. Agayne, who so euer dothe not cal vpon God in true fayth and sincere truste of harte, surely he dothe not serue him, but hée that dothe so, doth serue him. Ergo the true callers vpon God, bée the true seruers of God. Furthermore whosoeuer doth not offer ỳ sacrifice of praise vnto God, cā not bée ỳ seruer of God: no more than he can whiche dothe not adore him with feare, lowlinesse, and reuerence, and that in spirite & truth. But he which dothe offer vnto him a sacrifice of prayse, & is an adorer of him, is verily also his seruer. Wherefore it followeth that there be very fewe true seruers of God, & that there be none other but the elect & faythful, whiche onely be obedient callers on him, desirous of Gods prayse, & adorers of him. Let vs here consider how farre they be wide, whiche when they doe heare of the seruice and seruants of God, doe conceyue nothing else, but those church seruices and degrées of the shauelings and annoynted folke.

Vvhich be the true seruers of God.

to

to whome be graunted pardons by kings charters, and priuileges from all publicke charges and burdens, with many other prerogatiues, to the ende they may the more at liberte serue God. Whereof it is chiefly come to passe, that they be fallen vnto all kinde of corruption, of whiche they can not blushe nor be ashamed, so that their owne lyfe doth crie out vpon them, that they be nothing lesse than Gods seruants.

VI. What kinde of seruice pleaseth God.

That God is delited in the seruice of the spirite.

LIke as our sauiour Christ doth gather vpon that, that God is a spirite, that he is to be honored in spirite and truthe, and that he dothe requyre that, to haue such adorers by whome he may be honored in spirite and truth: so we doe gather aright, that God is pleased with the seruice of the mynde and Spirite, because that he is a Spirite and delighteth in spirituall sacrifices. For each mã is delyted in things lyke vnto himselfe in condition. The fleshly man in fleshly lustes, the heauenly in heauenly things, the earthly in earthlye thinges, and the Spirituall in Spirituall things. This argument is so agreable vnto reason, that the Ethnikes also were acquaynted withall: wherevpon Cato sayde:

Seyng God is a mynde as verses do vs ensure,
Aboue al things thou must him serue, with harte and minde most pure.

That God is delyted with the seruice of a pure spirite.

God therefore loketh not for earthly nor bodily seruices, wherein he hath no delite, but for spirituall seruices. And for as much as the spirite is moste pure and holy, it followeth that hee is not absolutely delited with the seruice of the spirite and minde, but of a pure innocẽt and holy spirite and minde. The Diuell is also a spirite, and accordyng to hys nature deliteth in spirituall things: but forasmuche as he is an euill spirite, vniuste, and vncleane, he is delited with the affections, counsels and deuises of euill, vniust, and vncleane mindes, by the seruice of whiche he is serued. Therefore Cato, bycause he did vnderstande that God was a moste pure mynde, did very well in saying not absolutely, Serue him in minde, but Serue him in a pure minde. I would that they vnderstood so muche of God and of the true seruice of God, whiche will seeme to be the seruitours of God, as this Ethnike manne could perceyue bythe iudgemẽt of reason. Now seyng that God is delited with the seruice of a pure mynde, it followeth, that he doth abhorre all that seruice whiche proceedeth from them that be impure. Therefore he sayth to the wycked: Why doest thou declare my righteousnesse: &c. Wherby it appeareth what is to be thought of all the seruice of ỹ vncleane Popishe priestes: whereof we spake before in the place of the Popishe Masse.

Cain.

Psalme.

But some man will say, If God doe not regarde bodily seruice, what meaneth it that the Apostle sayth: I beseche you brethren by the mercies of God, that you yelde your bodies a lyuely hoste, holy and acceptable vnto God, your reasonable seruice: &c. And what meaneth it, that God regarded the sacrifice of Abell, and smelled a sauour of pleasing in the sacrifice sacrifice of Noe: whereas they both for all that offered vp one of theyr beastes. I answere, that the Apostle speaketh not of the body of the flesh onely but of the whole man, so that to yelde our bodies vnto God, is nothyng else, but to yelde our selues altogither to the seruice of God: wherein there is not considered the flesh, but the faithe and obedience, whereby our bodies bee offered vp into a liuely hoste, holy, and pleasing to God. And to giue vs to vnderstãd of what kind of seruice he speaketh, he addeth, Your reasonable seruice.

An obiection. Genes. 8.

Gen. 4.

And as touchyng the sacrifices of Noe and Abell, it is a cleere case that God had pleasure in them, not for the outwarde slaughter of the beastes, whiche hee maketh not account of, but for theyr faith, inuocation, Godly loue, and thankfulnesse: vppon these respectes he loked vnto the Sacrifices and seruice of Abell, but vnto Cayn he loked not. Thus muche wee haue noted of the seruice of God.

An Addition of the seruice of Angels.

AND whereas wee noted certayne poyntes before, touchyng the creation & fall of Angels, we declared by the way, what the Angels be of nature, and what by office, & that they be not gotten of God, but created by him. And nowe before that I proceede any further, I thinke it not amisse, to adde a little vnto this matter of Gods seruice, agaynst the seruice done vnto Angels, bycause of some superstitious persons.

That Angels ought not to be serued. Apoc. 19. Apoc. 22.

Firste of all that Angels ought not to bee worshipped or serued, it dothe sufficiently appeare by that that we doe reade in the Apocalyps in this wise: And I fell before hys feete, (that is to witte of the Angel,) and hee sayde vnto mee, See thou do not so, I am felowe seruaunt vnto thee and thy brethren, whiche haue the testimonie of Jesu: but honour God. Adoration is a parcell of the seruice of God, as wee noted before. And vnto whome the parte can not frame nor agree, vnto him can the whole not agree neyther. But to the Angels there agreeth not Adoration, wherefore neyther seruice nor worshippyng can agree vnto them. And further a Christian man muste eschewe all that is founde faulte withall by the Apostle. But he blameth this seruice or worshippe of Angels, Ergo, the seruice of Angels is to be eschewed of Christian men.

Coloss. 2.

Wee finde a place to the Colossians where wee reade in thys wyse: Lette no man ouerthrowe your victory of purpose by humblenesse and superstition of Angels. What which Erasmus doth trãslate Superstitiõ, is in the Greeke θρησκείᾳ τῶν ἀγγέλων, that is, in worshippe and seruice of Angels. The olde translation is, and in the religion and deuotion of Angels. Augustine readeth it seruice of Angels, and sayth, that the Apostle dothe speake of the principates, whiche men thought should be worshipped in certayne obseruations, as ouerseers of the Elements of this worlde. And the same Augustine in an other place dothe expresly reproue the seruice of Angels, where he writeth thus: Ergo the same which the chiefest Angell doth serue, the very same the basest man must also serue. For the very nature of man by not seruing the same, is made basest of all. For the Angell is not made wise & true by one means, and the man by an other meanes, but bothe through one immutable wisedome and truth: for that it was wrought by order of time for our saluation, that the vertue it selfe of God, and the immutable wisedome also of God, of one substance and coeternall with the father, vouchsaued to vndertake mans nature, wherby he might teache vs, that man ought to serue that whiche is to be serued of all creatures of vnderstãding and reason, and to let vs beleue, that the very beste Angels, and most excellẽt ministers of God, woulde also the same, that we shoulde serue all one God with them, in the contemplation of whome they be happie and blessed. For neyther be we happy by the sayings of angels, but by the saying of the truth. Wherefore we doe also loue the Angels, and reioyce with them: and a little after: Wherfore we do honour them in loue, and not in seruice. Neyther do we builde them temples, for they wil not be so honored of vs: for they do know that we our selues when we be good, bee the tẽples of the hygh God. So that it is written to good purpose, that the man was forbidden by the Aungel, that he should not adore him, but God onely, vnder whom he was also his fellow seruaunt, &c. See there what followeth.

Epist. 59. ad Paulinum quæst. 7.

Secondly, for as much as it appeareth that Angels ought not to bee serued, it followeth that none of those things doe agree vnto them whiche doe belong vnto the seruice of God: as inuocation, adoration, temples, sacrifices, holy dayes, and such other things appertayning vnto the seruice of God. That no Temples ought to be made for Angels, Augustine dothe witnesse where he writeth thus: If the holy Spirite were not God, surely hee should not haue vs to be his Temple. For it is written in the Apostle: Knowe you not, that you be the temples of God, and that the spirite of God dwelleth in you: And agayne: Knowe you not that your bodies be the Temples of the holy spirite whiche you haue frõ God? Shoulde wee not be accursed from the truthe of Christ and the Churche of God, if we should builde a Temple of timber and stone to any Angell though he were the most excellent of all? for that that wee should yelde that seruice vnto a creature whiche is due onely to God alone. Then if we should be accursed for makyng a Temple vnto any creature, howe is not God true, to whome wee make not a temple, but to whome wee our selues be a temple? This is Augustine.

Epistola. 49. in fabiolam quæstione.

And the very same man Augustine dothe denie, that wee ought to sacrifice vnto Angels, and sayth: There remayneth a spirituall creature, whiche is eyther Godly, or vngodly. Godly no doubte in suche men and Angels, and suche as doe serue God aright: but wicked in wicked men and the Angels, whiche we call also Deuils. And therefore we may not not sacrifice to any spirituall creature neyther though it be iuste. For the more godly and subiecte vnto God it is, so muche the lesse it dothe take vpon it that honour, whiche it knoweth is due to none but vnto God. Howe muche more pestilent is it than to sacrifice vnto Diuels, that is to say, vnto the wicked spirituall creature, whiche dwelleth in this darcke and dimme skie, at hand, as in his ayrie prysion, and is predestined vnto euerlasting punishment? Wherefore when men also doe say, that they do sacrifice vnto the higher powers of Heauen, whiche bee nat Diuels, and suppose that there is no difference but in the name only, that they doe call them Goddes, and wee call them Angels, it is nothyng else but that Diuels, whiche are delyted and in a manner fedde with the errours of men, doe goe about to mocke and delude them in sundry sorte of deceptes. For the Holy Aungels doe not lyke any Sacrifice, but that whiche by the doctrine of true wisedome and true Religion is offered vnto the onely true God, whome they doe serue in one holy societie and felowshyp. Therefore lyke as the wicked pryde eyther of men eyther of Diuels, commaundeth or coueteth these honours of God to bee done vnto them, so the godly humblenesse of men or of holy Angels hath refused those things, when they haue bene offered them, and haue shewed vnto whome it is due. Whereof there bee moste manifest examples sette forth in the holy Scriptures. This is out of Augustine. Therfore seyng that there dothe neyther seruice nor Temples, nor Sacrifice, pertayne vnto Aungels, it followeth moste assuredly, that they ought not to be called vpon, nor adored. For these matters bee so lynked together, that vnto whome so euer seruice, Temples, and Sacrifices doe not frame withall, it doth not agree with them neyther to be called vpon and adored: all whiche things are dewe vnto the onely true God alone. And this that we haue noted touchyng the seruice of Aungels, is suche, that it dothe at large proue, that all that seruyce is naught and wicked, where deade Saincts are openly and euery where serued, by Temples, Holy dayes, Sacrifices, Inuocations, and Adorations. A man shall hardely finde a Temple that is not dedicate vnto some Saincte, and named after some Saincte. Consider well what a worke this is of the suffragan Byshoppes, whiche doe consecrate no place, Temple, or Altare, vnlesse it bee dedicate vnto some Saincte. Augustine sayeth, that wee shoulde be accursed from the truthe of Christe, and committe Sacrilege in making a Temple to any creature, forasmuche as wee shoulde yelde that seruyce vnto a creature, whiche is due vnto God onely. Lette the seruitours of Aungels and Saincte make aunswere vnto Augustine. The tyme shall come, when they shall bee aunswerable for it vnto God, and lette them assure themselues that they can not deceyue nor disapoynt his iudgementes.

VVhy it is harde to forsake false Seruice.

BY this that we haue said before of the true seruice of God, it is to manifest, that all the Popery of oure tyme is packed vp with counterfait and false seruices: so that it is a maruel how it may be, that so many Churches doe so stiffly sticke vnto them. But if we doe consider with how muche adoe, they do acknowledge Gods truthe, whiche do eyther of themselues flée from the light of Gods woorde, or else are compelled by outwarde power to flée and forsake it, we shall no lenger meruayle howe this dulnesse cómeth to passe, specially, if we consider with what slayes and bydles the blynde multitude is broyded and kepte in their errour.

The title of Gods seruice.

The Poppyshe seruices be recommended vnto the vnlearned, vnder a gay and holy title, and be called the Seruice of God. For there is grafted in the mindes of all men a religion or deuotion towards God, so that there is no natiō any where, but iudgeth that the greate and terrible Maiestie of God ought to bée serued of all men. For though that there be alwayes a greate number wicked and vngodly, yet for all that the multitude is perswaded, that there is a God, and that he ought to bée deuoutly serued, though they haue not the true knowledge neyther of God nor of his seruice. Vnder this pretence the subtill witted men, and suche as séeke their owne gayne, vnder ỳ colour of godlinesse, haue giuen out what they lysted vnto the vnskilfull multitude, and haue deliuered it vnto them to be obserued deuoutely, & to please God withall: and that not in one or two, but throughout all the nations of the whole worlde: so that neither Iewes, nor Christians are frée from this euill. The hystories of the Iewes be knowē, but we be better acquainted with our owne, which shal also once haue an ende as well as the other. That maistership of menne whiche hath reygned thus many hundred yéeres in the Churche, is growen so great, that the Ceremonies whiche they haue instituted of their owne, not onely besides, but also cleane cōtrary vnto the woorde of God, are solde out for the seruice of God. Thus they haue deceitefully bewitched the people of Christ, and bound the consciēces of the vnskilful to obserue theyr statutes, and traditions with all religion, and deuotion that may be. And therevpon it commeth, that in our dayes they doe tormoyle al the worlde, and crye out vpon vs, that Gods seruice is decayed, when mens traditions, whiche bée contrary vnto Gods woorde, be abolished: and wherewith the Princes of this worlde be much offended: For it séemeth horrible, and very wicked in common iudgement, to thinke vpon any thing cōtrary to the seruice and Religion of God, much more to abrogate any such thing.

Horrible ignorance of Gods seruice is meth.

And the cause of this offence, is ỳ ignorance of the true seruice of God, bredde at that, that the Holy Scriptures be not knowen. Herof cōmeth all euil (sayth Chrysostome) that the Scriptures be not knowen. The deceptfull creatures haue taken away the light of Gods woorde, and doe in the darkenesse of ignorāunce sell vnto the people one thing for an other, drosse for Golde, the Idols of mans harte, for the very seruice of God. So it commeth to passe, that by the tytle onely of Gods seruice, there is holden faste by the téeth, all kynde of Superstitions and raging in Idolatrie. For they whiche haue a zeale of God without knowledge, are by no meanes easilier seduced and deceyued, than by the opinion of the seruice of God. There was neuer any Idolatrie that deceyued the vnskilfull and simple multitude, but by this title of seruyng God. For what should mē do else, but deuoutly kéepe those ceremonies, which be appointed by the Pastors and Doctors for Gods seruice, & be in that respect mainteyned by them in authoritie, & so do obteyne the generall opinion of Gods seruice? In déede this zeale is to be commended, when all that is thought to belong to the seruice of God, is religiously obserued: but the ignorāunce of the true seruice of God is not to be commended, but to bée blamed, specially among that people, where Goddes woorde may be had.

A wise Christian is not lightly deceyued in a matter of religion.

A wise Christian man will not be lightly deceyued in a matter of religion. For he iudgeth not of the seruice and seruaunts of God, according to the accustomed titles, which are oftentymes of no effect, but according to the iudgement of Gods woorde which can not lye. As for the that be commonly called Byshops, Priestes, Pastors, and Doctors, he taketh not them to be suche, bycause that they be so commonly called, but he wayeth their workes, purposes and endeuours, whether that they be truely such as doe performe in very déede the same whiche they are called to be. Likewise he dothe not credite the common sense also of the seruice of God.

The best pleaseth not the most men.

For the matter goeth not so well with men, as a certayne man sayth, that the beste things doe please the moste of men. Wherefore he marketh what truthe there is in all vsed seruices, not what is vsed and accustomed. And herein he vseth not his owne iudgement, but the iudgement of Gods woorde, whereby hée is informed whiche is the true seruice of God, and whiche is not. But they whiche haue not this Christian vnderstandyng, can very hardly be perswaded to iudge any otherwise in these matters, than according to the accustomed tytles, and therefore be not easily pluckt of from theyr accustomed manner of seruices.

The outwarde gaynes.

Secōdly, there is ioyned also vnto these Catholyke titles, whiche these false seruices haue, an outwarde and curious trimmelle, specially in notable Churches, Altares, Images, and Walles, whereby not onely the eyes, but the mindes also of the beholders of them be bewitched. Superstition bredde wealth, of wealth came that gaines and decking of the churches, which cōsisteth in Golde, Siluer, Precious stones, Silke, Ornaments, and personages after the fashion of the worlde, very gay to beholde. I speake nothing of those things whiche doe please their itching eares, and of that specia[ll] mistery of seducyng and errour, that the Sacraments are ministred in a language vnknowē, and by persons profeſſyng a sole lyfe: As all these things doe delite and contente the vnskilfull, euen so they do also make them astonied and dull of vnderstandyng. This is the beginnyng of errour (sayth Augustine) that those things are thought to please GOD whiche doe please vs: and to displeaſe God, whiche do displeaſe vs. Those things do please vs, which do eyther like our eyes with theyr glyſtering & gaynesse, eyther our eares with some speciall pleasauntnesse: and therefore wē doe thynke that they do please the heauēly God also. This is the childishe fondnesse of mans harte, wherewith we do read that the Iewes became straught and out of their wittes, whose eyes the seruice of the Gentiles, the altares, wodes, high altars that were in euery corner, the Images, &c. sēmed maruelous gay, & contrarywise theyr lawishe Ceremonies sēmed vile. They thought it also not religious inough, to sacrifice in one place only which the Lorde chose, and that so all other places shoulde lacke the seruice of God: but so despising that seruice of God whiche was appoynted in the law, they folowed the seruices of the Gentiles. The facte of Achab is well knowen. In like māner altogither, the Popishe seruice doth thorough the gaynesse thereof, allure the mindes, eyes, and eares of the vnskilfull folke vnto it, and bycause it is thought singularly to please God: Therefore it is stoutly maintayned and kept still.

The beginnyng of errour.

3. Reg. 16.

On the other side, so almuche as the true seruice of God is done in spirite and truth, and standeth not in any outward obseruations of Ceremonies, & requireth not any worldly beautie, but rather a spirituall beautie, whiche bothe consist in true fayth, hope, inuocation, and adoration, &c. Therefore it seēmeth to be little worth in theyr eyes, whiche do neither knowe God, nor his seruice aright. But vnlesse that they doe see stately Churches and many Altars, and curiously wrought Images, glistering with siluer and Golde & sundry colours, vnlesse they heare the roaring of the Churche song whiche they vnderstand not, and suche other like things they be offended, bicause that they do beleeue that God is not contented with base things.

The very same betideth vnto thē, whiche chaunced vnto the Iewes concernyng the person of Christe, whome for that he seemed to be the sonne of a Carpēter, and that al maters concernyng him were base in respect of the world, the place of his bryngyng vp, his parents, kinrede, and the very estate of his person, the cōpany of fishers being men obscure and of no estimation, they toke hym to be nothing lesse, than as he was in dede, that is to say, the sauiour & onely begotten of God. And it made his basenesse the more cōtemptible, bicause that he did solemnise, or institute himselfe no Ceremonies with his Disciples, neyther of the lawe, nor any other, he did not vse outward seruices, Altares, offerings, & purifications. He did also nothing esteeme the traditiōs of the fathers, whiche were most set by among the Iewes, and auaūced aboue the very com-commandements of God, yea sometimes he cōdemned them. He taught euery where in priuate houses, in the fieldes, in wildernesses, vppon hilles, vpon the sea, &c. Albeit that he wente once or twice to Hierusalem in the yeare, yet for all that hee did it for no other cause, but to instruct the people by his teachyng whiche had their recourse thither. They that were carnall, & vnskilfull of spiritual things, did vtterly despise such a one as did al things so basely, & sēmed to haue so little care of the outward seruice of god, but they iudged that the gorgiousnesse whiche they sawe in the Byshops, Priestes, Scribes, Pharisies, the best sorte of ỹ people in whome there was sightly and renowned Power, Authoritie, Holinesse, knowledge of Lawe, &c. and also in the stately buyldyng, greate solemnitie, and repayre of the Temple in the sacrifices, hostes, oblations, and burnte offerings, and other innumerable ceremonies was the very seruice of God. When the conuersation of Christ our Sauiour was cōpared vnto such exceding gorgiousnesse, what sēmed it to be else, but some vngodly lyfe wherein was no exercise of religion and seruice of God: yea it sēmed to be a manifest contempte of all Religion, and some moste wicked paterne of vngodlynesse. This kynde of offence whiche riseth vpon both the respects, as wel of the gorgiousnesse in the seruice of the Iews, as also of the basenesse in Christ, did muche hinder the lawishe people from comming vnto the truth of Christe.

The basenesse of the person, & condition and life of Christ.

But lette vs passe from this vnto the Churche whiche was gathered togither by the preachyng of the gospel, after that Christe was exalted vnto heauen. This Churche the Apostles did institute without all outwarde seruice of ceremonies, lyke as they had bene moste simply instructed by Christe theselues. They taught nothing of the stately buyldyng of Churches, of Altars, Differings, Priestlye Vestiments, Images, Walles, Burning candels, of the decking and dressing vp with golde, siluer, precious stones, and like: but of the true fayth in Christe, Hope, Charitie, pacience in aduersitie, and true amendment, & holinesse of life. When the faythfull assembled togither, the gospel of the kingdome was preached, mē prayed vnto God, they did communicate, the remembrance and shewyng of Christes death was solemnised by the breaking of bread. The controuersies of the brethern were determined, the relefe for the poore was gathered and distributed. These were the exercises of the Churche, base in the appearaunce of the eyes of the Gentyles and of the Iewes, whiche bothe were vsed to the gaynes & godlinesse of outward ceremonies, and were vnacquainted with the true seruice of God.

The basenesse of the primatiue Churche.

The exercises of the Churche. Act. 2. 1. Corinth. 11

If a man lyke to cōsider the times folowing after the Apostles, he shall find in very deede that the churches coulde not keepe that simplicitie and sincerite of Goddes seruice, whiche the Apostles had receyued frō God himselfe, and they from the Apostles. For there was immediatly brought in by the will worshyp of Bishops, sundry Ceremonies into the Churches, one after an other, as gay and sightly as coulde be deuised, the multitude of whiche so grewe by little and litle, that they gaue Augustine also cause to complayne of thē. For he wryteth in this wise: But I am exceeding sory for this, that many things whiche be most holsomely commaūded in the holy Scriptures, be little regarded, and that all things are full of sundry presumptions, that hee is more grieuously corrected whiche dothe within his eight dayes touche the grounde with his bare fote, than he whiche drowneth his minde in dronkennesse. And a little after hee saith: For although that neyther this can be found, how they be agaynst the fayth, yet they doe ouercharge the very religion with seruile burdens, which Gods mercy woulde haue to be free, with the vse of moste fewe and manifest Sacraments of solemnitie: so that the estate of the Iewes is more tolerable than oures, who albeit that they knewe not the tyme of libertie, yet for all that they bee subiect vnto the lawfull burdens, and not vnto the presumptions of men. Thus much saith Augustine in that place. But the more ceremonious and gaye that the deckings and vses of the Churches bee in the eyes of the vnskilfull, so much the more it seemeth to be the seruice of God. And therefore the simplicitie and baseneſſe of the religion of the Gospell, seemeth to sauour lesse of Gods seruice, because that there is no suche gaynes and glitterings of ceremonies set forth to the eyes of thē that do behold our Churches. In the meane whyle the doctrine of the truthe is despised and darkened, the Christian fayth corrupted, and innumerable superstitiōs, and kinds of Idolatry thrust into the Church, and all that outwarde seruice of Ceremonies, wherevnto the Churchemaisters haue wholy gyuen themselues, is turned into moste filthy gaine and lucre.

The Churches continued not in the basenesse of Gods seruice.

Aug. lib. 3 de doct. Chr. cap. 19.

The estate of the Iewes more tolerable than that of christian men.

The thirde bryde whereby the vnskilfull are kept backe in the false seruice of God, is the olde rotten custome, whereby they obiecte vnto the simple agaynst Gods truthe, that wee doe preiudice and wrong vnto an auncient prescription of tyme. But we muste set against that the authoritie of the truth, to which the falsenesse of any custome, bee it neuer so auncient and old, muste giue place. A custome without truthe, is the ancienty of errour, as it is alleaged out of Cyprian in the decrées of the Popes. In the seruice of God, it is not to be sought what is olde and what is new, but what may be proued to be true, out of the holy Scriptures. When the assured truth is shewed, any lye muste giue place, be it neuer so auncient and olde.

The olde custome.

Dist. 8. Consuetudo.

Therfore by these three restraints the multitude of the vnlearned is holden backe in the false seruices of the Papists, euen vnder the name of Gods seruice, through an exceeding worldly gorgiousnesse, and through an olde rotten custome. And the more that hereste and wickednesse is against the seruice of God, and the desire of newnesse is layde to the charge of suche as doe forsake the false seruice of God, and folowe the true seruice of God, the faster doe these bandes holde. The elect and faithful doe cutte off this three-folde corde of twisted falshode, with the sharpe axe of the only & moste simple Truth, Truth, knowing that there is saluation in the onely truthe, and not in lyes, though they be neuer so gorgious and auncient: but of that that they lay to oure charge a detestable newe-fangleneſſe, we thinke it méete nowe to speake thereof particularly.

Of the newneſſe of the Doctrine, Faith, Religion, and seruice of God, whiche the aduersaries do charge vs withall.

The pretence of Ancienty is to be borne withall, not only in the matters & manners of men, but also in religion: and on the other side, the studye of Newfangleneſſe is hatefull. And there bee reasons for both. For this worlde is of that nature, that the further wee goe and proceede from the former ages and times, the more all thinges doe goe out of kinde, into worse and worse. Wherefore they are thought to be muche to blame, which are gyuen to corrupte, or vtterly to take away the manners and customes of the olde auntiente honestly and godnesse, being both ciuill and holy, with a deuise of noueltie: for asmuch as it can hardly be beléeued, that the new things which be vndertaken, can bee as good as the olde, much lesse to bee better than the olde. And thereof it commeth, that sometimes the auncient is taken for the better, and the new for the worse. So the aduersaries of the truth, when they wil perswade the vnskilfull people vnder pretence of religion, to holde fast the aunciente superstitions of so manye hundred yeares, they do crake of the olde and aunciente religion, & charge vs with the newe which is nothyng else they say: but the running away and forsaking of the olde. Wherefore we muste consider, what truth or vntruth there is herein. And wée will make herein a three-folde diuision, whereby we may perceyue.

1 Whether that which is new, be alwayes euill.

2 Whether that our doctrine and religion bée newe in déede, and whether that we or they be the innouators of holy things.

3 Through whose fault it is, that our doctrine séemeth to be new, when it is not new.

1 Whether that vvhich is new be alwayes euill.

These things which be alwayes euill, be euill of their owne nature, absolutely, and of themselues. But to be new, is nother euill of nature, nor absolutely, nor of it selfe: but if it be euill, it is euill by chance: and things that be of that sorte, may as well be good by chaunce, as euill. Wherefore it is possible, that a new thing may be good as wel as naught, if the circumstances thereof be cōsidered. In worldly things it is a clére case, that manye thinges the newer that they be, the better they be liked, and also the better they be in déede. Who had not rather to haue a newe house than an olde? who setteth not more by a newe garment, than by an

To bee newe is not euill of it selfe.

olde: Such things as be woxne, or at the leaſt way decayed by vſe, occupying and oldneſſe, no doubt be better whiles they be newe, than after that they become olde. Ergo it is not ſo greately euill of it ſelfe to be new, but that oftentimes it is better to be new than to be olde.

An obiection.

But you will ſay, There is an other conſideration to be had in holye things, whiche do not periſhe by oldneſſe, as earthly things, but doe continue ſtill whole without blemiſhe: and therefore they can not without raſhneſſe be chaunged by puttyng newe in their ſtéede. I aunſwere. In this poynt alſo neweltie of it ſelfe is not euil, vnleſſe that it be made euill by circumſtances. For if neweltie were altogither euill in religiõ, then Chriſt ſhould vnaduiſedly haue had compared hys doctrine vnto newe wine. I doe giue you a newe commaundemente, that you loue one another. And at the laſt ſupper, Thys cuppe is the newe teſtamente in my bloud. And that is a naughtye newneſſe, whereby thoſe things whiche be good be taken away. But the doctrine of Chriſt was not ſuch, whereby the weake law was taken away, & that whiche it could not performe, was wrought by the vertue & newneſſe of the ſpirite.

Math. 9.

Iohn. 13.

VVhich is a naughty nevvelty.

That was a naughtye newneſſe, when the Iewes preſumed to ſerue newe and ſtrange Gods, which theyr fathers knew not. For by this neweltie, that true only and olde, yea the euerlaſting God of theyr Fathers was forſaken, whereof we maye ſée in Deuteronomy. That is a good neweltie or newneſſe, wherevnto ỹ Apoſtle dothe prouoke vs, ſaying:

Deut. 32.

A good nevvelty.

Clenſe out the olde leuen, that you may be a new ſprinkling. Agayne, If any man be in Chriſt, he is a new creature, for lo, the olde is gone, and all is become new. And againe, Put on the new man, which is created according vnto God. And Ezechiell ſayth: I will giue you a new hearte, and I wil ſet a new ſpirite amongſt you. Why doth the Apoſtle prouoke menne vnto this newneſſe? To this ende no doubt, that by the ſame the euill oldneſſe of the fleſhe, of the olde mans heart, of the old creature, that is to ſay, that man of Sinne, decayed by ſinne, and ſubiecte vnto concupiſcence, is put off and mortified by the holy regeneration, whiche commeth by the ſpirite of Chriſt. Is this Neweltie a prophane matter, and not rather a péece of Chriſtian religion: So that Neweltie is not alwayes euill, nother in holye matters, but ſometimes it is beſt.

1. Cor. 5. 2. Cor. 5. Ephe. 4.

Colloſſ. 3.

Eze. 36.

No doubt it maketh muche matter vnto whome the neweltye or chaunge in religion be ſet forth. For if it be vnto them whiche do alreadye kéepe the true religion ſafe and ſound, it is worthily blamed and condemned: but it is otherwiſe, if it be ſette forthe vnto them that be out of the way, and of long tyme haue bene led and roted in ſome falſe religion. There was newe doctrine ſet forthe vnto the Iewes and Gentiles, when the Goſpell of Gods kingdome was preached vnto them, wherevpon alſo it was ſaide. What newe doctrine is this? And the Atheniens ſayde vnto Paule. Thou doeſt put certaine new matters into oure eares. Was the doctrine of Chriſt naught therefore, bycauſe that it was new, and neuer

It maketh matter vnto whome nevv doctrine is ſet forth.

Mark. Actes.

heard

heard of before? God forbidde. It was the beſt of all other, and neceſſarie for the people which hadde bin entãgled and blinded tw long in oldneſſe of eroures. For by thys the Iewes were trayned from the oldneſſe of the letter, from the bondage of the Elements, from the ſhadowes of the lawe, vnto a newneſſe of Spirite, vnto a libertie of rightuouſnes, vnto the truth and light of the newe and euerlaſting teſtamente, and the Gentiles from their blyndneſſe and ſeruice of falſe Goddes vnto the true knowlege of one true God in Chriſt Ieſu. So that they did not only take no harme by this neweltie or newneſſe, but therby they were alſo called from deſtructiõ, vnto true ſaluation. Likewiſe in theſe dayes, if a man ſhould preache the Goſpell vnto the Iewes or Turkes, he ſhoulde ſame to preach a new doctrine vnto them, though it be not ſo of it ſelfe. And in caſe they ſhould withſtand it and ſay, we allow no newe doctrine, what ſhoulde he aunſwere elſe, but that euery thing that is newe, is not euill, and that a new doctrine is both profitable, and neceſſarie for them, that do erre in religion.

But it is farre otherwiſe, if a man ſhould attempt to thruſt in a new religion amongſt Chriſtian mẽ which haue already receyued the true doctrine, and the religion of the heauẽly kingdome. For he ſhoulde do euen a like, as if he ſhould ſuborne ate a newe huſband to a woman which hathe a huſbande already. And therfore the Apoſtle dothe ſtoutely beate into the Galathians heads, ſaying: Although that we or an Angell from Heauen ſhoulde preache vnto you an other Goſpell, than that whiche we haue preached vnto you, let him be accurſed. Like as I ſayde before, ſo I ſaye now agayne. If anye man preache vnto you any other Goſpel, than you haue receyued, let him be accurſed. Vnleſſe that the Galathians had receyued the true Goſpell alreadye from the Apoſtle hymſelfe, thys curſe ſhoulde haue taken no place, in caſe any man ſhould haue ſet for the a newe doctrine vnto them, after him. Wherefore there can not without greate offence any new doctrine be ſet forthe vnto Chriſtian men, to leade them from the true and Apoſtolike doctrine. If we did ſo, wée ſhoulde worthely beare the blame of vnlawfull innouation and raſhe preſumptuouſnelle. Thus I ſuppoſe it appeareth wel ynough by that we haue ſpoken, when a neweltie or newneſſe ſet forth in religion is euil and when it is not only not euil, but profitable alſo, and neceſſarie.

II. Whether that oure doctrine and religion be newe indeede, and whether we, or our aduerſaries be innouators of holye thynges.

BVt our aduerſaries doe inferre vpon this: Ergo you be ſeducers and innouators in Chriſtian religion. For you do ſette forth your doctrine neither to Iewes nor Turkes, but vnto Chriſtian men. And it is in theſe dayes verye newe and vnknowne vnto Chriſtian eares.

Bycauſe they do charge vs thus, wée muſte ſée, whether that it bée newe Doctryne in déede or not: and that ſhall appeare, when we perceiue ariȝhte, what is newe and what not. For euerye thing is not newe by and by, that seemeth to bee newe.

V What it is to be nevv

That is knowen to be newe, whiche neyther euer was before, nor hath bene yet seene or heard of, but nowe begynneth and cōmeth to light firste: and therefore Salomon saith, that there is nothyng vnder the sun that is newe, nor that it can be said: Lo thys is newe: for that, that it hath gone and bene before in times passed: In deede a thyng seemeth to bee newe, when that whyche hathe bene in time past, and is nowe corrupted and perished eyther by tyme, abuse, or negligence of men, by restoring agayne is renewed, not that it beginneth nowe firste to bee, but rather to be the same whiche it was before. And in verye deede, it is nothyng lesse than newe. For it is one thyng to make a thyng newe, and another to renewe a thyng whyche was made long agoe. They be sayd to make newe things, whiche do institute newe thinges before vnused and vnknowen, and they are saide to renewe, which doe restore thinges decayed vnto theyr olde estate and vse.

Eccleſi. 1.

Te is one thing to make nevv, and another to renevve.

So the lawe was newe whyche was giuen by Moses to bee kepte of the Israelites, when it was firste set forth in the mounte Sina: and the Gospell of Chriſte was new, when it was firste declared in the worlde by the Apostles. But the lawe was not newe, when by the care of godly Kynges, it was restored and renewed after that it had bene once corrupte. The histories of the Kynges Asa of Ezechias and of Josias be well knowen. Neyther was the doctrine of the Prophets newe, when they bidde rebuke the corruptnes of the lawish religion, and required the right and true obseruation of Gods lawe, althoughe it seemed neuer so new and strange.

2. Paral. 29. 34.

Likewise if those things whiche wee doe now teache in the behoofe of our religion, bee considered and examined to the rule of Gods truth, whether they haue bin also taughte, receiued, and vsed of Chriſtian men before time, and that in the Apostolicke Churches, which the Apostles themselues bydde institute: I suppose that all they whiche be desirous of the truth, shall manifestlye perceyue, that they be nothing lesse thā new, for as much as there is no new or vnused matter broughte in thereby, but that the ancient things whiche haue bin altered and decayed many yeares, are renued agayne.

But if those things be examined which haue bin thrust into the churches by Popes about which they do so bitterly contende now adayes, it shall playnely appeare, that they bee not olde but new, aduentured vppon by the rashnesse of men, after the Apostles times. If they say nay, lette them aunswere vs, whether this be not more auncient, that we do adore God only than that they do teache to adore dead Saincts also? And whether it can be referred to the antiquitie of the Apostles, that in the Popery there bee institute Tiplettes, Temples, Chappels, Altares, Images, feastes, and seruices, that they be esteemed for mediators and patrones, whereas there is but one mediator betweene God and menne, the the man Chriſte Iesus: that menne runne and wander out so farre in Pilgrimages, vnto places where their memorials are kept: that at the baptising of infantes euill spirites be coniured: that there is a faithe and a confession of faithe required of these infantes, that there is salt, oyle, and spettell added vnto baptisme: that the faithfull people be robbed of the communion of the Lordes bloud: that the Lordes supper is changed vnto a sacrifice of ỹ Masse: and is celebrate for the quicke and the dead: I say nothing of all the rest which is done in their Masses, contrarye vnto the Lordes ordinance. Whiche of the Apostles did firste institute Auriculare confession, and forbadde the eating of flesh vppon the Frydayes and certayne other dayes? Which of them gaue anye commaundement for the keeping of the Lenton fast? which of them sent out the Popes pardons into the worlde? which of them was author of so manye sectes of Monkes, Friers and Nonnes? which of them withdrewe lawfull mariage from Bishops and Prieſtes, and layd vppon them vncleanly chastitie? which of them gaue any doctrine of the fire of Purgatorie? whiche of them multiplied the Lordes sacramentes vnto the number of seuen? which of them sprinkled coniured water vppon the graues of the dead, and vppon the multitude vpon the faithfull? whiche of them taught to shut vp the Lordes bread, to carrie it aboute, to worship it and adore it with burning tapers? which of them deuised the dedicatiōs of Temples and Altares, and delinered vnto the Churches an innumerable sort of such other like matters? Were not all these geare newe whē they were firste instituted? Why dyd not ỹ Bishops crye out then? These things be newe, vnwonted, and vnused? No doubte there neuer lacked some godly menne, which did withstande these inuentions, but as the misterie of wickednesse preuayled, they could do no good. Now when we doe fynde fault with their innouations, and blame the corruption of the olde Religion, and crye out that the olde auncient Doctrine and Religion which is decayed, may be renued agayne, we be accounted raylers, and be condemned for newfangledneſſe, and ouerthrowers of the olde religion.

Therefore we do iustly chalenge vnto vs the Antiquitie of the Apostles in christian religion and doctrine, and do iustly lay vnto our aduersaries the faulte of newfangledneſſe. And in case they will not bee contented withall, let them marche with vs into the camp of truthe, and graunte that the same is auncient which is true: and that that is newe, which is false and counterfaite. For it is so ordered by God in all cases of all things, that the truth is of more auncientie than the falshode, euen lyke as God is more auncient than the Deuill. Euerye thyng is not straightwayes true that is olde. Truth can not so be reported of antiquitie, as the prescription of antiquitie is rightely attribute vnto the truthe. Wherefore it were muche wiselier done in matters of religion, to seeke what is true, than what is olde.

That vvhich is true is auncient.

III. By vvhose faulte it is come to passe, that oure doctrine seemeth to be newe whereas it is not new.

NOwe whereas we doe séeme to bring in a new doctrine and religion, when we trauayle in nothing elſe but to renue the true and old religion, the fault is not to be layd vnto theſe our times, but vnto ỹ times of our forefathers, when they began to turne theyr itching eares from hearing the truth vnto fables, and to heape themſelues vp maſters thereof, which turning away of them, the Lord did ſo reuẽge by his iuſt iudgement, that the more they turned thẽſelues from the light of the truth, ſo muche the more groſſe darkeneſſe of erroures they were wrapped in, and did credite lyes, for as much as they refuſed to credite the truth, and they ſerued the preſumptions of men, bycauſe they would not obey the word of God. Through this occaſion there crept into the Churches, ſeducers, & innouatours, whiche proceéded ſo far in their deuices and inuentions, that when libertie was once oppreſſed, and the truth darkened, then at lẽgth there beganne to raigne and rage that ſtudde of mens traditions, conſtitutions, ſuperſtitions, and ceremonies, wherevnto the multitude is ſo vſed, that what ſo euer is brought to the contrarye out of Gods worde, ſeemeth to be not the olde truthe, but ſome new falſhode and deceyte. So it falleth out, that the olde and Apoſtolike religion is not knowen of hir owne children, lyke as if the true mother whiche in time paſt hath bin thruſt out of hir owne houſe, and at length returning home again, ſhould not be knowen of hir owne children which ſhe had borne and bredde, but ſhoulde be taken for a ſtraunger and a forrayne woman: or like as if the behauioure of olde honeſt life beyng in time paſt decayed, ſhould be taken for new, when men goo about to reſtore it agayne.

They deſerue not to beare the blame of this error, which do bring home againe the olde religion, agreéable vnto Gods word, and go aboute to reſtore it into his place, ſeing that the faulte is in them which did firſte forſake it, yea and when it was once turned out of the doores, did ſubornate their owne inuentions, and traditions in ſtéede thereof.

What time the booke of the lawe was found in the dayes of King Joſias in the ſecreate corners of the Temple, and was exhibited vnto the King himſelfe, it might haue ſéemed ſome newe thing vnto them whyche hadde liued a great whiles without law: whereas in déede nothing ought to haue bin more vſed or knowen to the people. But through whoſe fault was it? was it not the fault of their auncetors whiche would no longer heare the wordes of that Booke? I meane of the Kings and Prieſtes, whiche leauing the ſeruices of the lawe followed the ceremonies of the Gentiles?

Cõpare herewithall thoſe things which are betyded vnto vs, hath not the holy Bible be-hidden and caſt into corners theſe many ages, and vnknowen to ỹ multitude of the faithfull, yea to manye of the Paſtors alſo, and in this oure age what time it is is tranſlated into all languages welnére, and ſette forthe commonly to be redde, is it anye otherwiſe taken of the ſuperſtitious Papiſtes, than if there were ſome newe and vnwonted doctrine thruſt into the Churches? You might haue foũd in times paſſed in the Poperie a number of Maſſyng Prieſtes and Paſtors, whych had neuer as muche as ſéene the holy Byble. Came not this thorough the fault of oure auncetors? Woulde God the heades and Princes of Chriſtian people woulde acknowledge it, and ſay with Joſias: Goe, and aſke counſell of the Lorde for vs, and for oure people. For the Lordes anger is great ouer vs, bycauſe oure Fathers hearde not the wordes of this Booke, and that they would not only acknowledge theyr faulte, but alſo with a godlye and holye endeuoure renue and ſet vppe agayne the decayed religion accordyng vnto the Lords word, and in ſo doing, they ſhoulde turne away the Lordes wrath from themſelues, and from their people.

So that it appeareth by this that I haue ſayde, that it is not ſtraighte wayes euill what ſoeuer is new, but that it maye be, that neweltie and newenelle in Religion alſo is good and profitable.

It appereth alſo that our doctrine is not new, but ỹ it is the verie ſame auncient doctrine whiche the Primitiue Churches receyued, as delyuered vnto them from the Apoſtles: and that the doctrine of the Papiſtes, as lately brought in, is faultie, newe, and worthie to be withſtanded.

Thirdely, it appeareth playne, thorough whoſe faulte it is come to paſſe, that the doctrine of the Goſpell ſeemeth in theſe oure tymes to be newe and counterfaite, where as it is the Olde, the Lordes, and the Apoſtles doctrine, and ſuch as ought of all things to be beſt knowne in the Churches of Chriſte.

This I meant to touche briefly, bycauſe of the vnlearned, againſt the ſlaunder of Newfangledneſſe, that they may conſider and vnderſtande the Grace of this renewmente, and embrace it heartily, profitably, and with thankeſgiuing.

Of Traditions.

FOraſmuche as it appeareth, that welneare all the ſeruices of the Popiſh religion be but patched vp out of mens traditions, we ſuppoſe that we ſhall not do amiſſe, if after the place of the True ſeruice of God, we doe adde ſomewhat to be conſidered of the Traditions of menne, ſpecially ſéeyng that there is muche controuerſie aboute thys matter, and thereof hathe alwayes riſen much adoe in the Churches agaynſt the truth of God.

I. What the vvorde of Trading is.

THe word Tradо in Latin, wherof tradition commeth, is of ſundry ſignification. For ſometymes it ſignifyeth to betake into a mannes power, sometimes to teache, sometime absolutely to saye, and sometimes to sell: but in this matter wée will holde that sense, whiche agréeth moste to the matter whereof we intende to speake, so that it shall bée as muche to say, as to conuey ouer anye thing to the aftercommers, to be obserued and kepte, not in wryting, but by words and ordinaunce, as it were by mens handes one to an other, so that a tradition in this sense is as muche to saye, as an vnwritten doctrine. They holde that all things be not written by the Apostles, whiche the faithfull of necessitie oughte to kéepe, but that there be many things vnwritten, deliuered vnto the churches, which be no lesse of authoritie, but as reuerently to be kept, as the things that be written. In déede the Apostle maketh mention of his tradition to the Thessalonians. Neither be we against it, but that there were many things deliuered vnto ỳ churches by worde of mouthe of the Apostles: but for asmuche as it is vncertaine whiche shoulde be taken for suche, we thynke it a surer way to iudge of the vnwritten, according to that which is written, than to iudge of those things which be written, according to the vnwritten. But of this poynte we haue spoken in an other place.

A Tradition.

Those whiche we doe héere call Traditions, some do call them Constitutions, and doe runne riot frō the traditions of the Apostles vnto the decrées of the Churche and Popes. And they which striue moze for mēs constitutions, than they doe for the kéeping of Gods commaundements do attribute the selfe same Authoritie vnto these, as they doe to the others. But we meddle not now with the constitutions but with the traditions, whiche they do attribute vnto the Apostles. As for the power of making decrées, which they will haue to be in the Bishoppes, wée spake thereof before in the place of the ministers of the worde. And in this matter, wée doe sequester Traditions from the doctrine of faithe and godlinesse, as it were ceremonies and outwarde rites, as waytyng on and doyng seruice vnto true faithe, and godlynesse.

Constitutions.

II. The kindes of Traditions.

AND we will not ouerscrupulously searche out the sortes of traditions, but we be contented with two only, the one is of them which the Apostles deliuered vnto the Churches as receyued from the Lorde. The other sorte is of them, whiche of theyr owne authoritie and diligence, they recommended to the aftercommers, being not receyued from the Lorde. In the firste sort, we must sette that whiche we do reade of to the Corinthians: I receyued from the Lorde, that which I haue also deliuered vnto you, that the Lord Iesus the same night whē he was betrayed &c. The Lord had ordeyned the remembrāce of his deathe. The same the Apostle as receyued frō him, deliuered faithfully vnto the Churches. Of the latter sorte be all those things, whyche without anye expresse ordinance of the Lorde, the Apostles deliuered to the vse of the Churches by the wisedome of the spirite of Christ. What they be, it can not for a certayntie be determined. Albeit that Augustine writeth of them in this wise: That whiche the whole Churche holdeth, and is not ordeyned by councels, but hathe bin alwayes kepte and obserued, is moste rightlye beléeued to bée deliuered onely by the authoritie of the Apostles. And in an other place: And those things (saith he) whiche we do kéepe as not written, but deliuered vnto vs, whiche are kepte throughout all the worlde, it is to bée deemed that they be kepte as recommended and decréed eyther by the Apostles themselues, or by full and sufficiente Councels, the authoritie of whiche is moste wholesome in the Churche, as that the Lordes passion and resurrection and ascension into Heauen, and the comming of the holy spirite from heauen, are kepte in a yearely solemnitie: and whatsoeuer other suche like thing, whiche is kepte of all menne, wheresoeuer the Church is found and spred abroade. This saieth Augustine. But in my iudgement, it is as vncertayne whether that those things whiche be vsed in the west Churches, were deliuered from the Apostles, as whether that those things whiche were delyuered by them in déede, be yet vntyll this daye faithfully obserued of the Churches: yea it is well to be proued, that like as many things be now obserued, which were not deliuered by the Apostles, so there be manye things also which they deliuered, decayed and put away a greate whyle agoe. The very same Augustine saieth, that it is reported of the Weste Churches, of whiche Rome is one, that many of thē obserued not those things whiche were deliuered them by the Apostles. Whereof is good testimony séene in the Decrées, where the olde rites, of whiche hathe bin no vse of long time, are reported to bée decayed. Wherefore we can not certainely determine, which rites be deliuered vnto the Churche by the authoritie of the Apostles. And as for the latter sorte of traditions, I sée it moste commonlye vsed, that the authoritie of the Apostles is pretended, to coloure mens presumptions and faultes, so that those be called the Apostolike Church, the Apostolike see, the Apostolike power, whiche be nothing lesse thā Apostolike. The lyke presumptuous rashnesse is vsed also in traditions.

III. To whome it belongeth to giue Traditions.

I Thinke no man doubteth, but that it is not lawfull for euerye man to deliuer out any thing in the house of God. For the thing it selfe declareth, that they can not delyuer anye thing which haue nothing that ought to be deliuered. I say, whyche ought not to be deliuered, not which can not be deliuered. It is one thing to haue that whiche maye be deliuered, and an other to haue that whiche thou oughtest to deliuer. There bée many faithfull folke in the Church, whiche though they vnderstand many things to be profitable, yet for all that they haue not that power & authoritie, to betake and commit those things which they do vnderstand, to others to be kept. There bée some things whiche be deliuered to be beléeued, and others be appointed be kept. Those things whiche muste be beleued, may be deliuered by the, whiche haue the knowledge of the truth, so that they haue withall the calling of God. But those thynges whiche are to be obserued, can not, nor ought to be deliuered, but by the which haue authoritie either of their owne, or else graunted vnto them: Of their owne, as that was whyche Christ had graunted vnto them, as that was which the Apostles hadde. And whereas the power is in hymselfe, I thinke no man is so shamelesse to be agaynst the deliuerer: but whereas that authoritie is not, there it muste be graunted from other. For it is not alwayes necessarie, that to whome so euer any thing is to be deliuered, the respecte of the authoritie be layde to their charge, whereunto they maye acknowledge that they ought to obey. Those things whiche are set forth to be beleeued, maye bee authorised by the word of the truth: but those things which are deliuered to be obserued, when they can not be approued by expresse word, they nede eyther the proper authoritie of the Lord, or else the graunted authoritie of the Apostle.

It is one thing to haue that whiche thou must deliuer, and that which thou ought'st deliuer.

Eckius. Eckius in his Places dothe trifle in this wise: The Apostles doe declare that men may make Decrées, in that they doe commaunde to abstayne from the things offered vnto Idols, and from bloude and choked beastes: and Paule declareth it, in that that he gaue so many lawes for making of Bysshops, for wyddowes, for couering of women, that women should not preach, that a man should not forsake his vnfaithfull wife: and yet Paule was but a man. This sayeth he. In deede the Apostles were but menne, but those things whiche they deliuered vnto the Churches, they deliuered them not as men, but as the Apostles of Christe, informed by ỹ authoritie and spirite of Christ. There is muche difference betwixte those things which the Apostles dyd as men, and those things which they did in Christes cause as Apostles. Those things which they did as me, may be done by all sortes of men, as things belonging vnto menne: but those things whiche they ordered in Churches, as the Apostles of Christ, be not suche, that they may or ought to be ordered of euery man. Wherefore it is very folishe and vaine that Eckius saith, that the Apostles doe declare, that menne maye make Decrées. What king is he vnder the cope of Heauen that is not a man: Inasmuche as he is a man, he hathe all things pertayning vnto man, common with all other men: but in respect that he is a king, he doth and commaundeth manye things, not as a man, but as a King. We muste haue the like iudgement also in this matter of the authoritie of deliuering any thing in the house of God, that therein muste nedes be, not the authoritie of man, but an authoritie giuen of God. I know what Eckius meante: he thought that we doe condemne all those traditions whyche haue bin made by men in the Churches, bycause that they be the doings of men. And therefore he obiected, that the Apostles were also menne, which he neded not to haue obieted vnto vs. For we do not teache, that euery thing which is deliuered vnto the Churches by men, is to be condemned temned immediatly for that respect, bycause it was not deliuered downe by Angels from Heauen: but we doe set lighte by those things whiche bee charged vppon the Churche by men, withoute anye lawfull authoritie to beare them. But he stode all vppon this poynt, to make good that the Bishops and Popes haue authoritie to deliuer and Decree what they list in the Church. And to that purpose hee wrested the example of ỹ Apostles, as though ỹ it were lawfull straight way for the Popes to do the lyke, of that whiche was lawfull for the Apostles. So he dothe alleage ỹ place to the Corinthians. I commend you brethren, that in all things you bee mindfull of me, and do keepe my commaundementes as I deliuered them vnto you, &c. As though ỹ this saying shoulde belong vnto all Bishops of the Church.

Gods traditions.

IIII. Some traditions be of God, and some of Men.

Mens traditions.

It is a cleere case, that all traditions be not of one nature, but that some bee of God, and some of men. And he muste be verie simple, that vnderstandeth not, howe greate difference ther is betwixt godly matters, and the matters of men, & that they be not to be estemed both alike. Wherfore we must haue a diligent consideration, lest vnwares (for lack of knowledge) traditions be so confounded, that those which be of men be not ascribed vnto God, and those whiche be of God mystaken, for the traditions of men.

We saye that those traditions be of God, which be either immediatly deliuered from the Lorde himself, or by meanes by the Apostles through the counsell and aduice of the holye Spirit. The order of the Lords supper was immediatly deliuered from the Lorde, whiche for all that came to the churches by the Apostles. No Christian man doeth denie but that the tradition of it is of God. They be mediatly or by meanes from the Lorde, whyche were deliuered to the Churches by the Apostles, and yet we do graunt that they be also of God, for as muche as they be of the spirite of God. For lyke as that doctrin of ỹ Apostles is of God, which they did set forth vnto mē by the instinct of ỹ holy Spirit: so their traditiõs also which they did deliuer vnto the faithfull, are likewise of God, bycause they were set forthe by the aduice and counsell of the holy Spirite.

Mens traditions be they, which be not only deliuered by mē, but by the counsell of man also. And we do not mesure mens traditions by the qualitie of the things wherunto they be applied, as though that those only were of men, which ar deliuered touching the political matters & affaires: but we do call them of men also, whiche are giuen in matters of religion, not by the counsell of the spirite of God, but by the mere deuice of manne, although in outward apparance they seme to be religious. That tradition of the Scribes and Phariseis semed verily to be of religiõ, whē euery one of them said to his father or mother: What reward soeuer goth from me, shall profite thee also: that is to say, what soeuer I doe offer to God vnto the treasurie, shall be vayleable not onely for my selfe, but for thee also, that is to say, for thy saluation. And yet for all that, Christe doth repute this amongest mens traditions, for that that the spirite of mans deuice and not of Gods counsel was the deuiser and beginner thereof. And in this number I may put those, which procéede neyther of God, neyther of the heart of man, but of the instinct of euil spirits: such as those be, when Marriage is forbidden in Christes Churche, and commandement giuen to forbeare certayne meates, which pointes the Apostle toucheth by expresse wordes: And the spirit telleth aduisedly, that in the latter tymes some shall fall from the faith, harkening vnto deceiptfull spirites, and to the Doctrines of Diuels, through the dissemblyng of false speakyng men, which haue a conscience marked with a hote yron, forbiddyng to marrie, commaundyng to abstayne from meates, whyche God created to be receyued of the faithfull with thankes giuing. &c. Wherein he referreth the latter parte to the doctrines and commaundementes of men. Suche kynde of Traditions may be called diuellishe, by the beginner of them from whence they come, notwithstanding that they be deliuered out by menne: like as those thinges whiche bée of God, be aright called Godly, albeit they be giuen vnto the Churches by the ministerie of men. But lyke as those things whiche bée not of God, are wonte to be imputed to men, to declare that they be not of God: so those traditions also be reputed among mens traditions: to signifie that they be not of God, and that therefore they ought not to bée taken for godly. And besides that, the Deuill is so greate a Prince of this worlde, and so raigneth in the heartes of men, that any thing maye hardly escape the daunger of Diuelishe instincte and deuice that procéedeth out of the heartes of men, specially in religion, without the instincte and motion of God. Wherefore by this reason also, they bée worthyly tearmed Mens traditions, whiche are deliuered out, through the speciall aduise of Satan, by men, in matters of religion.

Diuelishe traditions.

1. Time. 4.

Coloss. 2.

V. What Traditions ought to be obserued.

Albeit that there is muche controuersy now a dayes in the churche of God, whereas some do holde, that all Traditions without respect oughte to be obserued, and some on the other side without choyce, do reiect them altogither: yet for all that I suppose that they be in the ryght, whiche are in the opinion, that neyther al ought to be kept, nor al without regarde refused. For it pertayneth to the discretion of Christian men to trye all things, accordyng to the saying of the Apostle, and to hold fast that which is good: and wher as the Apostle sayeth, Proue all: no doubt he doeth admonish vs, that all is not to be refused, nor to be receyued neyther at the firste, but rather that things ought to bée cramined and tried by sounde iudgement. And where as he addeth, Holde fast that whiche is good: he doeth expressly ynough teache vs, ỳ we muste beware that we kepe not that which is euil, and Tithe and Traditions.

That not ther all tradition are to be reiected nor all be vsed.

Traditi.

and reiecte the good. For both those are the pointes of vnreligious or very vnwise folke, suche as Christian men can not be without shame and rebuke. And in the worde All, we may well recken traditions: wherefore whereas the Apostle sayd generally, that men must trie all, it ought to be referred vnto them also. Therfore lette vs trie oure traditions by some conuenient difference, that the euill maye bée perceyued from the good, and that those which are to bée obserued, may be obserued, and suche as be worthy to be refused, refused.

And it is an easie matter to saye generallye, that all good traditions ought to be obserued, and the euill to be reiected. But when we shall goe to the specialties, to sée whiche bée good, that can not be so easely determined, specially in so sundry iudgements of the faithful, of whych some are more affected to things accustomed, rather than true. Olde traditions séeme to be good, and méete to be obserued, bycause that they be olde. In déede antiquitie hath some prerogatiue in rites, ceremonies and traditions, if there be good proofe that they be good: but whether that they be good or no, it is to be decided, not by the auncientie but by the truthe. For euerye tradition is not good immediately whiche is auncient and olde. To be olde, helpeth nothing to the goodnesse thereof. The tradition whiche is good of it selfe, was no lesse good when it was new, than when it ware to be old. Yea it may so fall out, that the same which was sometime good, be now no longer good, and that it was better whyles it was newe, than it can be now when it is become olde: as when the times bée altered, and behauiors also of ỳ faithfull perhappes may become vnprofitable. Euery traditiõ hath his cause and his ende, when the cause of it ceaseth, and the ende is altered, the profite therof also ceaseth, although it were neuer so olde.

Therfore let vs sée whiche traditions be good. Peraduenture no man will think that it is to be doubted, but that those be good whiche be of God. For that ỳ there can be nothing of god, but that which is good. But in this poynt there is also muche a do, and great reasoning, which are to be taken to bée of that sorte. The Bishop of Rocheffer sayth, that the tradition of the Popishe consecration where it is sayde, that the breade and Wine be Transubstantiate into the bodye and bloud of the Lorde, is therfore of God, for that the Fathers receiued it, through the instincte of the holy Spirite, and deliuered it so vnto the churches, albeit that it can not be proued by anye writings of the Euangelistes & of the Apostles: Luke in the booke of the Kings assertiõ against Martine Luther. The Papists do pronounce the like of other traditions also of Popish superstitions: but that they bo of the holye Spirite, they doe not so stoutely proue, as they stoutely saye it. Wherefore they be not assured straight way to be good, whiche bée vpholden to be godly. If we say that they of the Apostles traditions bée good, we fall into the lyke daunger. For the Papistes are wont to father their traditions vpon the Apostles, when the Authors of them bée not knowen. And this is not lately come

The Byshoppe of Rocheſter.

The traditions of the Apoſtles.

vp. They did the same in times past, whiche did attribute a sorte of Bysshoppes Canons, vnto the Apostles, and called them, the Canons of the Apostles, of which notwithstanding we doe reade in the Decrees in thys wise: They whiche be called the Canons of the Apostles, for asmuche as the fee Apostolike hathe not receiued them, nor the holye fathers gyuen them their consente, for that it is knowē that they were made by heretikes in the name of the Apostles, albeit there bee founde some good things in them, yet for all that it is certaine, that their doings be sequestred from the Canonicall and Apostolike authoritie, and reckened among the Apocriphall or reiected Bokes. These things be written there. Wherefore we muste take our iudgemente, concerning traditions, vpon some better ground than vpon the name of the Apostles, whereby they maye be able safely to be sette forthe, and recommended vnto men, as things that be right vp and good, and suche as ought to be obserued & kept. And it is no matter for the obiection of the place of S. Augustine, whiche I alleaged before, where hee saith, that the same whiche the vniuersall Churche holdeth, and is not institute by Councels, but hathe bin alwayes vsed, maye verye well bee thoughte to be deliuered only by the authoritie of the Apostles. For although that it be well knowen that some traditions haue bin kept in the vniuersall Church, yet for all that it can not be certainely gathered therof, that it was deliuered from the Apostles, vnlesse that it be tryed that it hath bin alwayes from the tymes of the Apostles stedfastly kept in all Churches. As for an example: It is a generall poynt that children be not admitted vnto the mysticall table of ỹ Lordes supper in these later times: and is so obserued euerye where as farre as I knowe, in all Churches. But it hathe not bin alwayes generall: for as we noted before in the place of the Lordes Supper, it was sometime generall as well in ỹ East Churches as in the West, that children were also admitted vnto the Lords table. Wherefore the opinion of Augustine is to be vnderstanded with this moderation, that is, that it is requisite, that suche a tradition should not be taken to be generall or vniuersall, bycause it hathe bin vsed some certaine time or age: but that it muste appeare that it was vniuersall, euen from the times of the Apostles. And therefore also he added: Which neither was instituted by councels, but was alway vsed and kepte. And how can this condition which is added, be certainely proued in the traditions of the Popes, that is to saye, that their generall and vniuersall traditions, haue bin neither instituted by Councels, nor by Bishops: but alwayes and euery where vsed in ỹ Churches? Surely it is more likely that those things whiche were sometimes vniuersall and Apostolicall, be for the most part by processe of time worne out and altered: than that those things which are at this time generally vsed, haue bin euer and euerye where generall, but let vs proceede.

Canons of the Apostles. Dilmet. 16. Can. Canones.

It is not much to be generally receiued.

Which traditions are to be obserued.

1 It remaineth therefore that we muste saye, that those traditions bee good and mete to be obserued, of whiche it may be certainely proued:

First,

First, that they be not vnlawful and repugnant vnto Gods worde. But that tradition whiche is vsed in the Poperic of the communion vnder one kind only, is none such. For howe contrary the same is vnto the Lords institution, and sundrye wayes vnlawfull, we haue declared before in the place of the Lords Supper.

2 Secondly, it must be proued, that they be not only lawful, but also profitable. Profitable I saye, either for ỹ exercise of faith or loue, or some other true godlinesse. I saye not that it is requisite, that they were sometimes profitable: but that they must be suche as be profitable for the present vse. For in traditiōs it is not requisit to regard how profitable they haue ben in old times, but ther must be a present profite in traditions. It was profitable for ỹ primitiue churches which were gathered of Iewes and Gentiles, that ỹ Apostles made a tradition to abstayne from things offered vnto Idols, and from strangled things, and from bloud: and as long as it was profitable, it was also mete to be kepte: but in ỹ Churches whiche were after that, it was no longer profitable, and therefore it decayed and was taken awaye. So that it were no reason to giue eare vnto hym, whyche woulde striue to haue it called in againe as an olde, Godly, Apostolike, and in times past profitable tradition.

3 Thirdly, it is requisite also, that traditions be honest, comely, moderate, and easye to be kept. For it is not conuenient, that those thinges which do either offend men in some outward shewe of dishonestie, either doe shew forth any vncomlinesse, or else do by their exceeding multitude or hardnesse, wring or ouercharge Christes people, shuld haue any place in Christes religion. For albeit that as Augustine saith, that this can not be founde howe they be agaynste the faith: yet those things which be sette forth to be obserued, which be either to many or too sore & painefull to be kepte, do ouerlay the true religion with most seruile burdens, whiche Gods mercie wold haue to be free, & to be vsed in most few and manifest sacramēts. Neither is it mete also ỹ those things which be superstitious rather than religious, or which at ỹ least way haue the outwarde shewe of superstition, should be vsed in the Churches.

Augustine to Ianuarius

At one worde, my iudgements is, ỹ all those traditions ought to be refused, which be against Gods worde, which be ydle, vaine, & vnprofitable, which be dishonest, vncomly, & superstitious, although it be but in ỹ outward shew, whiche be grieuous and burdennouse, whyche serue more to gayne than to edifying, and whiche do bynde the consciences of the faithfull vnto anye bondage. But those whiche be not of thys sorte, but may bee allowed for good, profytable, godlye, honest, religious, easye and moderate, may be wel kept in Christes Churche, according vnto that saying of the Apostle to the Philippians. For the rest, my brethrē, whatsoeuer things so euer be true, honest, vpright, pure, conuenient and of good reporte, if there bee any vertue in them and commendation, thynke vppon them, whiche you haue both learned, receyued, seene and hearde in mee, these thynges doe. &c. And the God of peace shall be with you. These wordes of the Apostle, Eckius doth alleage in his Places, to perswade that the constitutions of the Churche ought to be obserued and kept. And yet for all that, he doth not proue them to bée suche, as these wordes of the Apostle maye agrée withall: If they were such, no godly man would be against them.

What traditions ought to be refused

Philip. 4.

VI. Hovv Traditiõs ought to be obserued.

That the causes of the traditions ought to be considered.

EVery tradition hathe some certayne causes and some certayne ende, why, and whereunto it is instituted. Therefore each of them is so to be obserued of the faithfull, that it maye agrée with the causes thereof, and be directed to the purposed ende thereof. And the diligence of the ministers is necessary to be had in thys matter, that the causes and endes of the traditions maye bée expounded vnto Christes people. For it is a moste seruile thing, and in Christes religion most vnsemely, that those things which are to be done, shoulde be done without knowledge and vnderstanding. We must beware, that there be nothing done eyther seruily, eyther superstitiously, or scrupulously, or negligently, and withoute regarde. There be sundrye reasons in traditions. Some do serue for faith, some for godlye lyfe, some for loue & cõcord, some for discipline of maners, and holynesse of lyfe: Let the Lordes people be taught to vnderstande this by the diligence of the Ministers, so that they maye apply them selues to euery of these traditions, with suche obseruaunce, as is méete for them. When there commeth a tradition sette forthe by the speciall authoritie, either of the Lorde hymselfe, eyther of the Apostles, it is méete that it be obserued also with a speciall reuerence. If there come one whereof the Author is not known, it muste be wayed what it is, eyther of it selfe, eyther for the vse of the people: whether it serueth for the profyte or for the honestie of the Church, and according vnto ỳ qualitie therof, lette it be eyther obserued or neglected.

There bee sundry causes of traditions.

Men must respecte charitie in traditions.

But in case a man be so far profited in the religion of Christ, that he can take litteil or no profite of anye tradition: yet if the tradition be such that it may serue the vnskilfull multitude to edifying, let him kepe it also for charities sake (in which respect they that be perfecte, be debters to the vnperfect) least he do hurt by his example those, whome hée ought in his whole purpose of lyfe to do good.

Yea though it apere to be a mere mannes tradition whiche is openly kepte in the Churche, the Christian man that is godly and desirous of quiet, shall keepe it also, though not with the reuerence which is due vnto godly things, yet for al that without contempt: so that he vnderstand ỳ ther be nothing in it vnlawfull or vnhoneste. Forasmuch as we be men and do liue also in the Church amõg men, it is not mete ỳ in the behauior, rites & traditiõs of men, we shuld be fownde to be ouerthwarte, crabbed, and crooked. Let godly thinges be obserued as godly things should be, and mens matters as maters of mẽ ought to bée, so farre forth as they maye be obserued with a frée and cleare conscience.

cleare

But I say not this to defende the Popishe traditions, rites, and seruices, God forbidde. And I call them Popish traditions, which doe eyther of theyr owne nature, or by abuse, serue to vngodlinesse, superstition & Popishe blindenesse, all whiche I woulde haue exceedingly eschewed. Neyther lette any man deuise with himselfe any interpretations, which to the outwarde shewe should séeme to serue his turne, whereby he may suppose that he may obserue the popishe traditions without any hurte of conscience. For the godly manne muste be exceeding circumspect, least by his example he doe establishe the blinde and decepued multitude in their errour, whereof we haue spokẽ in an other place more at large.

Hovve perillous, yea and somtimes pernicious mens Traditions bee.

WE néede not to teache you that those traditions whiche are begonne of the instinct of the Diuell, or of mens presumptiõ, and so thrust into the Churches, are hurtfull and pestilent. For no Christian man wil maynteyne such. Neyther néede wée to informe you, howe euill they be, whiche doe serue vnto vngodlinesse, idolatrie, superstition, false seruice of God, lucre and gaine, and biyng and sellyng. For there is no body that dothe stande in it, but they onely, whiche be so blinded vp in gayne or vngodlinesse and superstition, that they will take no warnings. Wherfore it is no speakyng of thẽ at this present, but of those Traditions rather, whiche though they be not euill of themselues, yet for al that they do bring destruction vnto the vnskilfull and rashly religious people, whiche doe misuse them.

The abuse of good tradition

And there is no tradition so good of it selfe, but it must nédes do some harme, if for lacke of the vnderstanding thereof it doe degenerate to an abuse, yea although it be giuẽ from God. Let the Brasen serpent be for an example, whiche albeit he were set vp by Gods commaũdement, not to hurte, but to ayde them that were in daunger by byting of Serpentes, yet for all that, he was made hurtful to the Israelites, through their own faulte: wherefore he was taken away by Ezechias at length, because he beganne to serue for idolatrie. What betided of the Lordes supper, it is to manifest, if those things be well considered whiche we noted of the Popishe Masse. These kindes of traditions the more they be cõmended by Gods authoritie, so much the more occasiõ they haue to do harme, not of theyr owne nature, but thorough theyr malice, by whome they be peruerted vnto a wicked abuse. 1.Reg.18.

If this dothe chaunce in Godly and Apostolike traditions, that they be made hurtfull through the faulte of the abusers thereof, I sée not how those that be of men, can be allowed to be profitable. The flesshe doth like these better, bicause they come of the flesshe: specially if there be ioyned withall, and olde custome and some gorgiousnesse and trimnesse whiche pleaseth the flesshe. The euil of mens tradition

1 The firste and the accustomed euill in those, is the opinió of seruice and worshippyng, when vnskilfull

The fo ormen ferui

folkes doe thinke, that they doe God seruice & honour, if they kepe deuoutly the traditions of the Church. But our sauiour crieth out to the cõtrary, saying: They doe serue mee in vaine, teaching the doctrines & commaundements of men. Hereof they ought to be admonished by the Pastors and teachers. But they doe vtterly dissemble this saying of the Lord, to fish the more readily for the gaine whiche they seeke for, at the hands of the vnskilful multitude, by the obseruance of the traditions. In the meane season wee doe see that it commeth to passe, that such traditiõs be turned into an idoll of mans hart, very abhominable vnto God.

Matth. 15.

The truste of merite.

2 There foloweth this opinion of seruice, an other euill as pernicious as that, that is, the truste vpon theyr owne merites, vpon their own righteousnesse, vpõ satisfactiõ & forgiuenesse of sinnes. And whereas this fellow taketh place in the harts of mẽ, there is the feeling of Gods wrath, & the accusing of his owne conscience extinguished in them: & so al the way is shut vp from the gospell of grace and true repentance, & frõ the fayth of Christ our only mediatour and sauiour, whom the father would haue to be our throne of Grace and our righteousnesse. Wherupon it cõmeth to passe, that no man dothe more resiste the doctrine of grace, than they whom this truste conceyued of mens traditiõs, hath bewitched. This euil is asmuch as the histories of the gospels do testifie. So that these two euils, the opinion of Gods seruice, and the euerthwart truste, folowyng one to an other, do make mens traditiõs very pernicious and hurtfull, when the Pastors do slepe or do stiffly and superstitiously (without knowledge) enforce the keeping of them, or seke theyr owne gayne and lucre.

The trouble of conscience.

3 On the other side, as it were cleane contrary, there riseth trouble of conscience of the opiniõ of the necessitie of them. For whẽ men do beleue that the traditiõs of men ought of necessitie to be kept, and that they can not be omitted without sinne, there riseth a seruile slauery, & a miserable torment of mens consciẽces. Herunto helpeth forward the power and authoritie of the Bishop out of all measure layde vnto mens charge as though menne shoulde obey it no lesse than the Lorde himselfe. This euil remaineth vnder false Pastors, whiche doe better beare with the transgression of the commaundementes of God, than with the neglecting of theyr own traditions, such as they were to whome the Lorde sayde: You do make the commaundemẽt of God of none effect, for your tradition.

Matth. 15.

Occasiõ of discorde.

4 And a man would not beleeue, what great occasion of discord there is in the Churches by mens traditions, when the hartes of the faithful bee lightned with the light of Gods worde, and ledde from vnlawful and noysome traditions. Yea there ariseth there vppon greate persecutions, whyles they bee all condemned of heresie, that doe for any cause shake off the yoke of mẽs traditions from them. Of bothe these euils there be euer-many examples shewed in this our age. These bee the fruytes of mens traditions, where the tiranny of Bishops, & the blindnesse of minde doth reygne. I speake not of the moste filthy lewdenesse of whorings and sundry wantonnesses, which haue ouer-flowen the Church by the tradition of solelyfe, and refrayning from Mariage.

Diuerse & vision of names.

Of the Name of God.

FOr asmuch as there is oft mention made in the scripture, and in the Churche, and in our common lyfe & worldly matters, and muche vsing & occupying of the name of God: and that it is mete that all men shoulde beware of the prophanation or dishonoring therof, and to be very carefull to vse it as lawfully, truely, and religiously as may bee, we haue thought good besides those things whiche wee haue spoken in the Decalogus, that is to witte in the thirde precepte, of the prophanation of the name of God, to open here in a sundry place in fewe wordes those things that doe concerne this matter, as:

1. What the name of God is.
2. What it is to do any thyng in Gods name.
3. To whom it belongeth to doe any thing in Gods name, & to whome not.

I. What the name of God is.

IT is a playne matter, that all thinges which be in Heauen and in Earth, be called by theyr owne names for a difference to be had, to the intent that euery thing might be knowẽ what it is, and that not only the generalities, but the specialties also might be discouered, whiche is very necessary for the vse of man. And whether that the Maiestie of God may be drawen into this consideration of names, it may be doubted. For it seemeth, that seyng God, according to the essence of his Godhead, is no manifold or diuers thing, but moste singular & onely one, there can no suche thing be determined of him. Neyther needeth he any proper name to be separated thereby from others, whiche eyther haue all one likenesse, or which be sundry one frõ an other. And yet for al that, there is a proper name giue vnto him in the scriptures, which he chalẽgeth sometimes to himselfe, as in Exodus where he sayth: And my name Iehouah, I haue not made knowen vnto them. And in Esaie he saith: I Iehouah, this is my name. But although that this name doe so properly agree vnto God, that it may not be cõmunicate vnto any creature: yet it is not such ỹ therby we may attaine to know the whole essence & substãce of his Maiestie, the knowledge wherof is vtterly incomprehensible: so that the same which is spoke in the booke of Judges, was sayde aright: Why askest thou my name, which is wõderfull: Of this name, Rabbi Moses an Egyptian in the booke called More, sayth thus: All the names of the Creator, that be founde in all bookes bee deriued of effects, sauing that name onely, Iehouah. And it is a name appropryate vnto ỹ most high Creator. And therefore it is called an erpresse name. He meaneth that there is signified and shewed therby

Exod. 6.

Esay. 42.

Indic.

Moses appoin More.

the substance of the creator, and that there is nothyng in it common vnto God and creatures. But the reste of his names haue some double or mingled significatiō, bycause they come of the workes lyke vnto them, which be deriued in vs. Thus ẏ Hebrewes doe speake of the name of God Iehouah: but wee doe thinke it good to leaue that name which is vnsearchable, and take it to be more profitable and conuenient for our capacitie, to call that the name of God, whiche is reported of him, whereby we may be instructed rather what manner of God, and how great he is, thā what God is. After this sorte it is sayde in Exodus: Almighty is his name. So it is reported of him, that he is our Lorde, our iudge, iuste, mercyfull, gratious, and kinorable, whatsoeuer of this is reported of God, that is his name. Secondly, his name is his glory and his prayse. In this sense the Scripture doth sometimes take his name for prayse, whereas it sayth: A good name is better than muche riches. So the name of God is called great: God is knowē in Iewry, and his name is great in Israel, that is to say, his glory is greate, and his prayse is large, and his name glorious, &c. And yet for that all these cōmeth to one. For what is the prayse and glory of God, but that which is religiously and honorably thought and reported of him, as that hee is good, mercifull, iuste, true & Almighty? &c. Wherefore it is song in the Psalme. According vnto thy name, so is thy prayse also.

That is the name of god vvhich is reported.

Exod. 15.

Psalm. 76.

Psalm. 48.

II. What it is to doe any thing in the name of God.

To do any thing in the name of God, is diuerslye spoken.

To do a thing to the glory of God.

1 Firste, it is to doe a thing to the glory of God. For it is a common matter in all our businesse almoste, when we begin any thing, to say: In the name of God, or in the name of the Holy trinitie: whiche is all one as to the glory of the Holy trinitie. So it is sayde to the Colossians: Whatsoeuer you doe, doe all in the name of Iesus Christe, that is to say, to the Glory of our Lorde. The Apostle expresseth the same to the Corinthians, where he sayth: Whether you doe eate or drinke or doe any other thing, doe all vnto the glory of God.

Colos. 3.

1. Cor. 10.

To doe a thing in the name of God, is to doe it in the truste of Gods name.

2 Secondly, to doe a thing in the name of God, is to doe it in the truste of Gods name. So the Psalmiste singeth: In the name of our Lorde we will auaunce vp our standerdes, as if he shoulde say, in respect & truste not of our owne strength, whiche is nothyng: but in respect of the name of our Lorde God, whome we know to be Almighty and a defendor of his people, we will auaunce vp our standerdes, and fight hande to hāde with our enimie. Item. They in Charets, and they in Horses, but we wil remember the name of our God: or else, wee will rise vp in the name of our God: by whiche wordes he doth signifie, that by ẏ truste of the name of God, they will ouerthrowe the strength of their enimies, though they be neuer so well armed. In like maner Dauid sayde vnto Golyath: Thou cōmest vnto me with sworde, shielde,

To doe a thing in the name of God.

Psalm. 20.

shielde, and speare, but I come in the name of the Lord of hostes, the God of the armies of Israell, &c. That is to say, In the truste of the Lordes name.

3 Thirdly, to doe any thing in the name of God is to doe it in the person, steede and power of God: after whiche sense he that is sent from any man, is sayde to doe that which his commission leadeth him vnto, in the name of him from whome he is sent. So Christe sayth in Iohn: I came in the name of my Father, that is in the steede, authoritie and power of my Father. Wherefore he sayth in an other place: The wordes whiche I doe speake, be not myne, but his who hath sente me. And, He whiche receyueth me, receyueth not me, but him whiche sent me. And in Luke, And that (sayth he) repentāce and forgiuenesse of sinnes be preached in his name, that is to say, in his behoofe & power. So Paule doth expounde it, saying: God was in Christe reconcilyng the worlde vnto him, not reputing theyr sinnes vnto them, and he hath set the word of reconcilement in vs. Therefore we doe vndertake this message for Christe, as though God shoulde exhorte you by vs. We beseeche you in Christes behalfe, be reconciled vnto God. To doe a message for Christe, and to beseech them in Christes behalfe, is to doe his message. And to beseech them in the name of Christe. Agayne: I (sayth he) though absent in body, yet present in spirite, haue already iudged as present, that he whiche hath done this, shall in the name of our Lorde Iesu Christe, &c. which is nothing else, but by the authoritie and power of our Lorde Iesus Christe. Therefore when any thyng is mentioned to be done in ẏ name of God, in Scriptures, wee muste see vnto whiche of these senses it is to be referred, which may easily be knowen by that whiche goeth before, and cōmeth after.

III. To vvhome it belongeth to do any thing in the name of God, and to whome not.

It is not for euery man to doe any thing in any Kings name, how much lesse is it meete for euery man to doe any thing in the name of God? Surely it is not for thē which haue nothing to do with god. Wherefore we must see to whome it belongeth to doe any thing in the name of God. And we muste consider it not slightly, but carefully, that we doe not vnaduisedly bereaue any mā of his worthinesse. Wee shall the better doe this, in case We will way in the consideration hereof those three senses, wherein wee declared in the article before, that a thing may sundry wise be done in ẏ name of God. Therefore as touchyng the firste, where we sayde, that to doe a thyng in the name of God is all one, as to do it to the glory and prayse of God, there be two things requisite.

It is not for euery man to doe any thing in the name of God.

VVhat manner thing it is that is done.

1 The one is, that such a thing be done in the name of God, which may helpe to the glory and prayse of his name. And that all things whiche be done by men, can not helpe to the glory of God, no man will denie. So that all things can not be done in the name of God, but those things only, whiche doe serue to the glory of his name.

name. And some men doe suppose, that nothing can be done to the glory of God, which is not expressly set forth in the Scriptures, & pertayne to the commaundementes of God. And that the rest as it serueth not to the glory of God, so it doth not belóg vnto him neyther. But they muste open their eyes a little wider. For al things could not be namely expressed in scriptures, which be requisite to the aduauncement of Gods glory. That orderly dispositiō of Gods gouernment, is much larger than so, ỳ al things belóging therevnto, might or ought to be comprehended in writing. It is sufficient that some brief and generall rules thereof be put into the Scriptures, wherevnto wee may frame al our life, and be instructed of these things whiche be particular and vnwritten. Loke vpon our life, and vpon the multitude and varietie of worldly things, and consider what a passing number there is of those things which ought to serue to the glory of God. Wherevpon the Apostle bathe require of vs, that what soeuer we either say or do, we should do it in the name of our Lord Iesu Christe, & to the glory of God, giuyng vs planely inough to vnderstand, that all our whole lyfe ought to be suche, that all as well wordes, as deedes therof may be done to the glory of God, and in the name of our Lorde Iesu Christe.

All things be not described in the scriptures vvhiche doe serue to the glory of God.

Col.3. 1.Cor.10.

How it is done.

The other thing that is requisite vnto this, that any thing be done in the name of God, that is to the glory of God, is that it be done in cōuenient minde & fashion, with a minde desirous of Gods glory, in such a fashion as becōmeth Gods glory. For it is possible for a man to do ỳ which of it self is right, and yet not to do it with a minde bent to the name & glory of God, & so he should not do it in the name of God, what so euer hee should pretend. Thus we may iudge what māner seruice of God that is, whiche the Papists do fayne & counterfaite. For first it is not such as of it selfe helpeth to the glory of God, for asmuch as it serueth neyther vnto true fayth, nor vnto Charitie. Secondly, they do it not neyther in that minde to auaunce the glory of God, but to hunte for gayne and lucre, and to serue their idle bellies withall: neyther doe they so practise it, that it may help to the glory of God. That saying of the Philosopher is knowen in the Ethikes: Suche things as be done by artes, are good of themselues, so that it is well inough howe so euer they be done, so that they be done, but those thyngs whiche be done according vnto vertues, are not rightly and wisely wrought when they be in any wise done, vnlesse he whiche dothe them, doe them in some sorte and manner. And a litle after, Besides that that a thyng be done well and a right, hee would haue it done at suche time, by such persons, towarde such, for suche cause, and in such sort, as it ought to be. Which circumstances if they be in any thing requisite, they be moste iustly requisite in this case whereof we talke now.

Ethicorum lib.2. cap.

By this it may easily be séene, to whome it belongeth to do any thing in the name, and the glory of God, that is to witte, to all the faythfull. But lette vs make our difference in this place. To belong or pertayne vnto

To vvhom it pertaineth to do any thing in the name of God.

vnto men, is two wayes sayd. First, bicause they can doe it. Secondly, bicause they ought to doe it. Bicause they can, as if a man shoulde say, it belongeth vnto menne to speake and not to beasts: it belongeth to birdes to flee, and not to menne: and it is not euery mans feate to bee a good traueller. And ỳ Apostle saith: Faith belongeth not vnto all men, that is to say, it is not gyuen vnto al men to beleue. Bicause they ought to do. As if I shoulde say, that charitie perteyneth vnto al Christian men, for that they ought to loue, bycause they bee bounde therevnto, by the Lordes cōmaundement. Now to the purpose: To do any thing in the name and to the glory of God, belongeth to the faithfull: first bycause they onely hauing faith can doe it, others that bee vnfaythfull and vngodly, can not: For they can not consider the glory of God without fayth, whiche they haue not. Secondly, it belongeth therfore also to the faythfull, bicause they ought to doe all things in the name, and to the glory of God. This they ought to doe, but not they alone. For all menne generally be bounde in this duetie: and therefore in thys sense, it belongeth not onely to the faythfull, but to all menne also, not to doe some thing onely, but to doe all things altogither in the name & to the glory of God. As according vnto the saying of the Preacher: It belongeth vnto all menne to feare God, and to keepe his commaundementes. So that to doe all things in the name of God, belongeth not to all men, but to the faithfull onely: and agayne it belongeth not to the faythfull onely, but also vnto all men. The faythfull onely, bycause they onely can doe it: and vnto all men, bycause all ought to do it. Yet for all that it belongeth chiefly vnto Christian men, whiche ought to practise, say and doe also al things to the glory of God, not only bicause of the common grace of our creation and conseruation, but also bycause of that speciall Grace, whiche they haue obteyned in Christe Iesu. For they be in two respectes not their owne men, but Christes, who dyed for them, and by his death redeemed them, wherevpon that was sayde by the Apostle: None of vs dothe liue to himself, and no man dieth to himself. And, You be bought vpō a raūsome, be not the seruāts of mē. And, For your mēbers be the temples of the holy spirite, and you be not your owne men, for you be bought. And Christ died for all, to the intent that they whiche do liue, should not lyue to themselues any longer: and therefore it is that we must make an accompt vnto God of all things. Why of all things? Bycause that we doe owe al things vnto him. First, in the right of our creation and generall prouidence. Secondly, of our redemption also. Wherefore it followeth, that we must do all things vnto his glory, & forsake all whatsoeuer seruceth not to this ende, & therefore the Apostle doth require that we should auoyde & flee not only those things ỳ be euill, but those things also whiche belong not to the matter: and go on with thanks giuing. He thought he had not sufficiētly expressed the boūden desire of Gods glory in cōmaunding them to eschue fornication, vncleannesse, & couetousnesse, knowing

Rom.14.

1.Cor.7.

1.Cor.6.

2.Cor.5.

2.Cor.5.

Ephes.5.

that

that not only those euils were to be auoyded, but those things also which doe not some way serue to the glory of God, and that whiche he termeth there to belong to the matter, he termeth in an other place to serue to edifying. Wherefore he saith immediatly in the same place: Haue not to do with the vnprofitable workes of darknesse, but reproue them rather. He saith not with noysome workes: for so he had not sufficiently expressed the matter: but, with vnprofitable workes, to warne vs, that idle doings be also euill in this respecte, because they be vnprofitable, and he addeth: Of darknesse, that is of ignorance: meaning that they which be the children of light, ought to doe all things that be fruitefull, and eschew the vnfruitefull things, vnlesse they will still continue in darkenesse. Yea he biddeth them also reproue the workes of darkenesse, lyke as the darknesse is confounded by the light. The like saying is in Matthew. For what soeuer idle worde that men do speake, they shall answere therefore at the day of iudgement. What is an idle worde? euen that which furthereth not to the glory of God, that whiche belongeth not to the matter, that whiche is vnprofitable and vnfruiteful, that which doth not edifie. The lyke reason is also of doynges. And why is there accompt to be giuen thereof? Bicause that whereas we be Gods, yet we neyther speake nor doe that is to Gods glory. No master doth thinke, that an idle and an vnprofitable seruaunt is worthy to be kepte in his house whome he hath bound vnto him in all respects. Euen so, therefore Christian menne not onely may, but ought also aboue all other men to doe all things in the name of God, and to the glory of God, as dwellyng in Gods house: so that it is to be taken for a greate faulte, if they say or doe any thing that is vayne and vnprofitable.

Matth. 12.

In very deede it is a moste pestilent doctrine, that the Papists do restrayne the housholde seruaunts of God, the faythfull people, vnto some certayne workes and prescripte places, more superstitious than Godly, to serue the glory of God in, wheras all our lyfe in all places, purposes, wordes and workes, ought to be nothing els, but the sanctifying of gods name, and the true seruice of God. Thus it commeth to passe, that they whiche seeme to bee the chiefe seruers of GOD, doe neuer serue God truely, and that they whiche seeme to doe moste to the glory of God, do further it nothing at al. But let vs procede to the reste.

All our life ought to be the true seruice of God.

We sayd, that in the second sense, to do any thing in the name of God, is as muche to say, as to doe it in the truste of Gods name, and let vs see to whome it belongeth to doe any thing in the name of God in this sense. In this poynt it is first requisite, that the same whiche is done, be suche as may be done in the fayth of Gods name. For lyke as all things can not be done to the glory of God, so all things can not be done neither in the truste of Gods name. But to be shorte, those things may be done to the glory and in the truste of Gods name, whiche be vndertaken not by the deuice of man, but of God. For otherwise, harke what Esay sayth: You take counsell, but not of mée.

To whom it belongeth to doe any thing in the truste of gods name.

Esay 30.

But

But what things so euer the vse and occupying of things necessary dothe require to be done, they may all be be done in the name and truste of God, and to Gods glory also.

2 Secondly, it is requisite that such things be done orderly & aright. For albeit that they bée good of theselues, yet vnlesse they be done aright, they cannot be done in the truste of Gods name. It is good of it selfe to marry, yet vnlesse thou doest it after a right & lawful sorte, thou canst not doe it in the truste of Gods name. Further it is good to seeke how thou and thyne may liue, but if thou doest it with deceyppte and with doyng other men wrong, or if thou be greédier than necessitie requireth, thou canst not do it in the truste of Gods name. And why? Bicause the ayde of the Lorde can not effectually be trusted vppon, towardes those things whiche be euill handled.

3 Thirdly it is necessary also, that in those things whiche be right and be handled aright, our minde be free from al the truste of the flesh, so that it may do all that whiche it doth, by the only hope & truste of Gods name: and that not onely when all earthly things doe fayle him, but then also when hée hath all things most plentyfull at hande. For the true truste of Gods name hangeth vppon God alone, not onely in prosperitie, but in aduersitie also: and as hée is not dismayed by aduersitie, so hée is not puffed vp neyther in prosperitie. This considered, wée doe easily perceiue also in this sense to whome it belongeth to doe any thing in Gods name: that is to say, whiche of all men may doe that which they doe in the truste of the Lordes name, that is to say the beléeuers only. For like as fayth is not in all men, so neyther the sincere truste of Gods, name can be in all men, but in the faithfull only. There is no man that hath altogither no fayth and truste, but yet though they haue fayth, yet it is not straight way alowable, and suche as is requyred in this case.

If you will aske mée, whether that they onely whiche doe beléeue, are bounde to this truste of the name of God: I aunswere, that they bée not so bounde onely, so that they only maye truste aright. For this truste dothe so muche belong vnto all men, and all menne bée so bounde vnto it, that the Apostle sayd expressly: Whatsoeuer is not of Fayth, is sinne. And why sinne? bicause we be all bounde to yéelde our hartie truste vnto the goodnesse and prouidence of God. Like as it is sinne not to pay a man his due, so it is sinne, not to truste vnto God. And besides that, they whiche doe not truste in God, doe truste altogyther vppon creatures. For it is not possible, that a manne shoulde doe any thing without all manner hope and truste, eyther of his owne wysedome and industrie, or wealth and friendes, or of some other thyng whatsoeuer it bée. And that hée is accursed that dothe make flesthe hys strength, and dothe truste in man the Prophete doth testifie. And well worthie. For hée placeth the creature in stéede of the Creator, and hangeth wholly vppon the Idoll of his harte: whiche is almoste the greatest reproche that can bée shewed vnto the Maiestie of God. Thus I suppose it is manifest.

Hier.

that in this seconde sense also, to doe any thing in the name of GOD, belongeth to the faythfull onely, in respect that they only can perfourme it: and that it belongeth not onely vnto them, but thoroughly vnto all men in the respect ỳ all men do owe this glory vnto God, as to depende vpon him in pure hope and trust.

To whom it belongeth to doe any thing by the authoritie of God.

Lette vs now see for the thyrde sense, in which wee sayde that to doe any thing in the name of God, is as muche as to doe it in the person, steede, and authoritie of God. And in this poynte also it is very needeful, that those thyngs which may be done, be done, vnder ỳ person, authoritie, and steede of God. And these can not bee any other things, but suche as bee charged to bee done by hys commaundement. For it were a thynge very folishe-hardie and vayne, to doe any suche thyng in his name, whereof hee gaue no commaundement: as they are wonte to doe, whiche doe pretende I wote not what reuelatiõs, or else do crake of theyr fulnesse of power in the Churche. Secondly it is requisite that those things whiche bee commaunded by the Lorde, and therfore not onely may, but also ought to bee done in his name, bee not done negligently, but as they shoulde bee done. And they shoulde be so done, that the meanyng of the Lord which did commaunde the doyng thereof, mighte be accomplished. Yee will say: But this is not in the power of the mynister, and of him that doth worke the commandement of God, as wee may perceyue in the Prophetes, Apostles, and in Christ himselfe: who complaynyng of this thing sayeth: Howe often woulde I gather togither thy Children, as the Henne clocketh hyr chickens vnder hyr wynges, and thou wouldest not? I answere: The commaundements of God bee so to be perfourmed faithfully and orderly, that the lacke be not in the Mynisters, but so that the counsell of God be fulfilled. And that is, when men doe not by negligence swarue from the mynde of the commaunder.

How the cõmaundements of God ought to be done.

Thirdely, this is necessary also, that the same whiche ought to be done in the name of the Lorde, bee done by them to whome it is commaunded. This is a cleere case and out of all doubte. Those thyngs which bee commaunded in the name of a King, can neyther bee done all, nor as euery man liste, nor of euery man: but those thyngs are to bee done whiche hee hath commaunded, and after that sorte whiche hee commaunded, and by them, whome hee commaunded to doo them. He which dothe that whiche is not commaunded by a Prince, or if it be commaũded by him, not so as it was commaunded, or else presumeth to doe that whiche he was not commaunded to doe, is neyther alowed of the Prince, nor it is meete to be reputed of any authoritie, howe much more be these conditions requisite to this, whereby any thing may be well done vnder the name, person, steede and authoritie of God?

Of the ministers of God.

This matter doth altogither belong to the ministers of God, which doe serue the Churche in his name. If they doe teache and set forth any thyng to the people vnder the name of Christe, whiche is not deliuered from

from him, what do they else but wickedly abuse the name of God? The Lord would haue his Apostles to beware of this, where as he sayde vnto them, when he sent the to preach: Teachyng them to keepe all that whiche I haue commaunded you. And Peter to admonish men of this matter, saith: That he whiche speaketh in the Churche, doth speake the wordes of God. The false Prophets were to be reprehended in this poynt, for that they didde sette forth to the church of God their owne dreames, vnder the name of God, saying falsly: Thus sayth the Lorde: whereas they had receyued none of those things of the Lorde whiche they did set forth. Where vnto agreeth also the saying of Christ: They do serue me in vaine: teachyng the doctrines and cõmaundements of men. Why in vayne? Bycause he dothe not acknowledge them vnder his name whiche be not deliuered by him but presumed vpon by mens deuice.

Secondly, although that the very worde of the Lorde be set forth vnto the church, yet for al that it is requisite, that not onely the letter thereof, but the Spirite also, that is to say, the very minde and sense of the Lord be set forth aright. Else it can not be set forth in the Lordes name, if it be sette forth in a straunge sense and not after his meanyng. For so there is sette forth not the worde of the Lorde, but the Idoll of mans heart.

This the Anabaptistes do in the sacrament of Baptisme. The Lords worde is, He that beleueth and is baptised shal be saued: Herevpõ they doe gather, Ergo infants ought not to be baptised, bycause that they do not beleue. But this is not the meanyng of the Lorde. He sayde not: Let him whiche beleueth be baptised: and he whiche beleueth not, lette him not be baptised: but who soeuer doth beleue and is baptised, shall be saued: and he that beleueth not, shall be condemned. By which wordes he doth not teache vs, who ought to be baptised, & who not: but what grace and felicitie they shall attayne vnto, which do heare the gospell of ỳ kingdome, beleue it, and doe yelde themselues by theyr open confession to be consigned with the seale thereof: and on the contrary side what dothe remayne for them, whiche doe refuse to beleue it. The lyke matter is that in Mathew, Sweare you not at all. Herevpon they doe condemne all othes, takyng the Lords worde contrary vnto the Lordes minde. And that whiche is spoken in the same chapter: Resiste not euill, Ergo say they, among Christian men there is no place for the Magistrate to resist euil men by ỳ power of the sworde. The Lorde thought none of these things, but of these places you may see in our worke vpõ Mathew. This abuse of Gods worde is a common matter among the Papistes. And would God it found no place amõg our Brethren which doe professe the founde doctrine of the Gospell. They had neede specially to beware whiche doe so glory of the Lordes worde, ỳ besides that they wil allow nothyng in religion which they will esteeme to be authorised (which they doe not without reason I meane lest they shoulde be trayned againe into theyr olde or some new errors) I say they had nede specially to beware, least they do thynke that they folow the Lordes worde, when they folow the sense in the letter thereof, not of the Lordes, but contrary vnto the Lordes minde. It is an easie matter for vs to boast of the Lords words, and to reporte therof, that it remayneth for euermore: and that it ought to be followed onely. Neyther is it any harde matter to refuse at once all the doctrines & cõmaundements of men, whiche are not committed vnto vs by any worde of God, much more those whiche be against it: but it is not so easie a matter, to conceyue, hold, and constantly folow the true and naturall sense of the Lorde himselfe, in the letter of Gods word.

The maner of Satan.

For this is the manner of most wylie Satan, to seduce them by, whiche allow nothing but Gods worde, he doth not sette forth the traditions of men, but the letter of the Lordes worde: and therein he doth lay before vs sundry errours, to seduce vs by, vnder the colour of the Lordes worde. What did he else, when he did reply again to the Lord himself, which layde vnto him Gods worde, and sayde: It is written: Man liueth not in bread only, but in euery worde whiche proceedeth out of the mouth of God, and sayde: If you be the sonne of god, cast thy self backward. For it is written, that he hath charged his Angels with thee, & they shal take thee vp in theyr handes, least peraduenture thou hurte thy foote at a stone. Did he not vnder this letter of Gods worde, sette forth a moste wicked sense, farre from the meaning of God, and vtterly repugnant vnto the assured worde of God, as appeareth by the answere of Christ: This manner of seducyng is moste noysome, and very daungerous for them whiche folowyng the authoritie of Goddes name, couet to hang wholly vpon the worde thereof. Vnlesse they haue an assured knowledge of the Spirite or meanyng of the Lorde, they be moste easily seduced by the pretence of Gods worde, whyles they doe allowe and folowe the imaginations of menne in stede thereof: like as if a man that loueth and desireth outragiously to haue Golde, without any assured knowledge of Golde, receyue and kepe in stede of golde gylted Copper. They whiche doe teache suche doctrine of Gods worde, doe falsely boast them of the name and worde of God, yea they doe outragiously offend against bothe. So that the thyrde condition is requisite to be in the mynister of the worde, whiche we sayde is, that the same which ought to be done in the Lordes name, be done by him, vnto whome it is cõmaunded by the Lorde. He whiche runneth vpon his owne headdinesse to teache, is worthy to heare that saying: They rãne, & I sente them not. Wherfore a chosing & calling is necessary & therevpõ the Apostle doth so oftẽtimes obiect his callyng vnto the false Apostles.

Matth. 4.

But you wil say: How can it appeare who is sent by God, and who not? I aunswere, we muste chiefly marke, whether that any manne doe step out of his owne accord to teach, called lawfully therevnto by no man. And there is two manner of lawfull callings. One whiche is by Christe immediatly: another which is by the Churche, or ỹ elders of the Church.

How appeare who is sente by God.

Lawfu callyng

Church. That whiche is immediatly by Christe, is not vsed nowe, as it was in times paste. It had certaine tokens of it, by whiche it might bee knowen, of which Marke the Euangelist maketh mention in his laste Chapter, saying: And they wẽt forth and preached in euery place, and the Lorde wrought with them, and confirmed theyr sayings with tokens folowing. The other is an ordinarie calling which the Church hath vsed, of which we haue spoken before. He whiche is called & teacheth by this, doth so far forth escape the blame of a false Prophet, forasmuch as it can not be proued, that he vseth the office of teachyng vppon his owne head. Secondly, it is to be marked, whether ỹ he do set forth Christes word vnto the Churche, neglecting mens doctrines or no. Thirdly, whether that he do conceyue the very minde of Christ, and expresse it in teaching. For these three be the markes of a true minister of Christe, whereby he may be knowẽ: if he be called orderly to teach, and preache nothing but Christes worde, and teach so, that he do declare vnto the people, not only the sounde & voyce, but the meaning also of Christes wordes. Such a Minister, the Church may safely heare in the name of the Lorde, and folow his teachyng.

Hitherto wee haue briefly noted what the name of God is, and what it is to doe any thing in the name of God, and to whome that dothe belong, & to whome not: which things diligently considered, may doe much good vnto godly disposed persons, as well primate, as to suche as be appointed vnto the ministery of God. For in case ỹ we do all generally direct all our endeuours to this ende that suche all things be done in the name and to the glory of God: specially in the assured truste also of his name: albeit we get no other profite thereof, yet wee shall be sure to liue more circumspectly, and offende our Lorde and master so much the lesse. For it is not possible but that hee whiche standeth altogither vppon this endeauour of godlynesse, that he directeth all his doings vnto the glory of God, and doth nothing but in the truste of his name, muste needes bee the more circumspecte in all his lyfe, so that he will with all care and diligence auoyde and eschewe whatsoeuer dothe not further to the glory of Gods name, and can not be well lyked of him. Again we shall be ryd of all truste, as well of our owne selues as of any creatures, if we doo accustome our selues to doe all things in the name and truste of God. Furthermore our good disposition towardes God, true fayth and loue, true obedience and seruice of God, and all other good thyng shall increase in vs. But as concernyng them whiche bee in the ministery of the worde, if they haue him alwayes in theyr eyes whose mynisters they bee, if they neuer forgette that they ought to doe all things vnder the name and power of God, and will not bee founde blame worthy in all thing that euer they doe, they will in any wise haue a speciall regarde of these two poyntes: the one that they take nothing from Gods commaundement: the other, that they adde therevnto nothyng besides the meanyng and will of the Lorde.

The mynister of the worde must euer say in his minde. Take hede what thou doest: thou arte the mynister of God, that which thou speakest vnto the people, thou speakest it in Gods name, and shalt make an account of it all. For if we shal all of vs giue a reckenyng for euery worde, how much the more shal they doe so, whiche vppon speciall commaundement doe speake vnto the people in the name of God? Wherfore take hede thou speake nothyng contrary to the minde and will of God, and see thou neyther adde nor diminish any peece of it. And besides this, in case they be thus affected, they shall haue a stoute courage and strength agaynst al daungers hanging euer theyr heads: without which they can not constantly and vprightly doe theyr duety: For who can make him afrayde, which knoweth and determineth in his minde, that he serueth not any rashe mans head, but the power & name of God himselfe? And that he is not withstanded onely, but God himselfe is withstanded also, when there happeneth any aduersitie vnto him, Amanne would not beleeue, howe vnabashed and stoute strength of the faythfull harte commeth therof, to accomplish their mynisterie.

Lastly, in case the people do know that the ministers of the worde bee suche, as doe faythfully sette forth the very wordes, Spirite, and meanyng of God in the name of God, no doubte they will heare his sayings the more deuoutly, and will regarde them in respecte of Gods name, and the fruyte of Gods worde shall be the plentifuller. For it skilleth much how deuoutly, and with what respect the worde of God be hearde. The Lorde sayd not in vaine: Take hede how you heare. Neyther it is without cause, that the Apostle commended the Thessalonians in this poynt, saying: You receyued it not as the worde of a man, but as it is in deede, the word of God, who worketh in you, which do beleeue. 1. Thess. 1.

Of the Nature of God.

The conceyuing of Gods nature very hard.

THey whiche haue written of the Nature of God, haue thought this to be a very harde and obscure question, & yet notwithstanding so necessary for the order of Religion, that vnlesse it be taken aright, men must of necessitie trauayle in great errour and ignoraunce of most high matters. Surely the knowledge of all things is of that sorte, that vnlesse the nature of them be knowen, they cā not be truly and perfectly knowen. For the knowledge which riseth vpō things accidentall and of chaunce, can not be sure and sounde, bycause that accidents, as they happen to come of outwarde things, and continew not alwayes, so they doe not expresse the true, and naturall qualitie of any thing. But that whiche is naturally in things, as it is of them, so it doth also declare the nature and naturall qualitie of them. Wherefore to haue a sure and sounde knowlege of those things whiche wee muste of neces-necessitie knowe, it is very necessary to knowe the nature of them. In like manner it is concernyng the knowledge of God: of whiche wee will speake when the tyme serueth. Neither can this knowledge of God be playne and perfect, vnlesse his nature be knowen. As long as this is not knowen of a surety, mēs mindes muste nedes bee in darkenesse, and wander they wote not whether, lyke blinde mē into al kindes of errours. And yet withall we doe acknowlege and confesse, that it is very harde to compryse, and muche harder to expresse, the nature of God, howe slenderly soeuer it be done, whiche by the opinion of Nazianzene can not be perceyued at all. Neyther our meanyng is to make any earnest or curious searche thereof, but to keepe vs within the boundes of the holy Scripture, least wee shoulde speake any thing vnaduisedly of the Maiestie of God, whiche may sauer more of mens Imaginations, than of the heauenly truthe.

How the knowlege of things is.

I. What Nature is.

FIrste wee muste see what Nature is. It is sundry wayes defined. Some doe take it to be a certaine strength voyde of reason, stirring by necessarie motiōs in our bodies. Againe, some do iudge it to be a strength whiche hath reason and order, as proceedyng some certayne way, and declaryng what the cause of euery thing worketh, and what followeth, the quickenesse and actiuitie wherof, no arte nor hande, neyther workeman is able to attayne vnto by imitation or followyng it. Epicure dothe call all things by the name of nature. Augustine defineth it after this wise. Nature (sayth he) is a certain strength and power put into things created by God, whiche giueth to euery thing that whiche belongeth vnto it. Surely ỳ very word seemeth to signifie, that nature is called to be ỳ same, which is proper vnto euery thing, & that as grafted and bredde in it at the very beginning, so that what soeuer any thing is of the birthe as it were, that is the nature therof. Lactantius saith: that nature is termed of the Latine worde, Nascendo, whiche is of birth. My opinion is not, that nature is the thyng it selfe, but the proper and peculiar strength of the thing naturally giuē vnto it, strayght way from the begimyng thereof, whereby it receyueth that qualitie, which it hath not onely of beyng, but also of doyng, bearing, begetting, &c. And how this definition of nature is to be allowed, we wil better examine hereafter. For it is not yet so perfect, that it dothe in all poynts agree to the matter, whereof we doe speake.

II. Whether that Nature haue any place in God.

AS nature is defined to be a certaine strength bredde and grafted in any thing, so farforth surely, it can not be attributed vnto God. For seeyng that hee is not borne, there can be nothyng bredde in him, or alied or knitte vnto him, or Originally grafted in him at his byrthe for as muche as he hath no birthe at all. Basile sayth, that to be borne & created is al one, so the nature and creature might seeme thereby to be bothe one. Suche manner of nature hath no place in God, who is not created, but is ỳ creato: of al things that bee. Ambrose sayth, that nature is the worke of the creato. In this respecte there is no nature in God, but in things created onely. Nature dothe conteyne that whose nature it is, and doth gouerne it. Wherefore it can not bee of any thyng infinite and endelesse, but God is infinite and endelesse: and can not be subiect vnto any lawes of nature. Therefore in this respecte, hee can haue no nature. And yet it is in all mennes mouthes, The nature of God. And Christe is called the naturall sonne of God: and there be two natures giuen vnto him, the natures of God & of Man. Howe can there be a godly nature, if there be no nature in God. If there be no nature in God, then there is not in God the nature of begettyng. If the nature of begettyng be not in God, then Christe shoulde not be the natural sonne of God: and so all our fayth whiche is grounded vpon him, shoulde fayle. And Peter sayth, that there be suche promises made vs, whereby wee bee made fellowes of Gods nature. Howe can this be true, if there be no nature in God? And Paule sayth to the Galathians: But then when you knewe not God, you serued them whiche of nature were not Gods: by whiche wordes in that that he doth deny that the counterfaite gods were Gods of nature, no doubte he doth herein distinct them frō the true God, whiche was vnknowen to the Gentils: for ỳ he is of nature god: ỳ they not of nature, but in the opiniō and errour of men. Therefore seyng that the true God is God of nature, surely there is nature in him. Besides that, seing that there is in God some qualitie whereby hee differeth from all things created, and is of that qualitie, as the true God muste nedes bee of: and seing that qualitie cōmeth not by chaunce or accidentally, or by any industrie gotte from any other, neyther is mutable but naturall, peculiar and vnchangeable, it foloweth also therefore, that there is in him nature.

Ambrose.

That there is nature in God.

2. Peter. 1.

Galath. 4.

Hovv many sortes of natures there be.

The thing wherof we do treate, is suche, that it is necessarie to put a difference betwixte nature and nature, that the same whiche wee seeke, may the better appeare. For there is as sundry a diuersitie of natures, as the thyngs bee sundry whereof they bee. Wherefore wee can not talke of the nature of God, without a difference makyng, least we steppe amisse.

And I doe finde generally two Natures. One not made, the other made. Wee cal that vnmade, which belongeth vnto God, not so muche for that that wee thynke that it can bee expressed by thus callyng it, what manner of nature it is, but to distinct it from that whiche is created and made, and rather to expresse what it is not, than what it is. And this is the firste degree to the knowledge of God, afore all to knowe what he is not, least wee cleaue vnto any thing whiche is not GOD: not that it is inough for vs if wee doe do not depend vpon that which is not God, but that from thence we maye be directed further, vntill we maye begin in some behalfe, parte at the least way, to knowe what he is. So we must doe in this matter also. Aboue all things we must determine by some conueniente difference, of what sorte the nature of God is not, before that we do procéede to knowe of what qualitie it is.

Two natures.

What manner the nature of God is.

Therefore the nature of God is in this respecte requestred from all other Natures, bycause all other bee made, and that is not made, it hathe not aboue it any God to be the worker and maker of it, but is of it selfe, yea it is the creato and worker of all things that be. This the wyse heades of the Ethnikes dyd well know. Wherfore it is called of Plato, δημιουργὸς, that is the worker. In this sense Seneca saith, the nature and God be all one thing.

And although the nature of God be most simple, and voide of all composition, as Chrysostome and Basile did well note, yet it maye be diuided into three partes, bycause of the three persons in Godhead. For like as they be differente one from an other in this respecte, that the Father only is vnbegotten, & the Sonne only begotten, and the holye Spirite onely procéeding, in that respect also the nature of god is in ỳ father only vnbegotten, in the sonne onely begotten, and in the holye Spirite only procéeding: yet so that there be not in God three natures, as there be not in him three Godheads, but one, and the very selfe same only. There be three properties of Gods nature, which be distincted one from an other, according to the difference of the persons, but there is but one selfe same essence thereof, accordyng vnto the whiche, the Father, the Sonne, and the holye Spirite, be one selfe same true and naturall God. The Manyches were worthily condemned bycause they belde that there were two natures in God, one of goodnesse, an other of naughtinesse, whiche mingled togither, the worlde shoulde bee made as of sundry beginnings, and contrarye one to an other, and yet notwithstanding continuing togyther for euermore. But we do holde, that there is but one selfesame nature in God, that is to witte, of most greate and onely goodnesse, whereby all creatures and all natures bee made in a good kinde of makyng, but through our owne fault corrupt and decayed in our kinde.

The Manyches were worthily condemned bycause they belde that there were two natures in God, one of goodnesse, an other of naughtinesse, whiche mingled togither, the worlde shoulde bee made as of sundry beginnings, and contrarye one to an other, and yet notwithstanding continuing togyther for euermore. But we do holde, that there is but one selfesame nature in God, that is to witte, of most greate and onely goodnesse, whereby all creatures and all natures bee made in a good kinde of makyng, but through our owne fault corrupt and decayed in our kinde.

Augustine writeth in thys wise: All nature eyther is God, who hathe no beginning, or is not God, bycause he is the beginner thereof. As for that whiche hath God for the begynner of it, by whome it is, some is not made, and some is made. That whiche is not made, and yet for all that is of him, eyther is begotten of hym, eyther procédeth from hym. That whiche is borne, is the only Sonne: that whiche procédeth, is the Holye Spirite. And this Trinitie is of one and selfesame nature. For these three be one, and each of them is God, and altogither one God, immutable, euerlasting, without any beginning, or end of time. But that nature whiche is made, is called a creature, and God is called the creato, I meane, the Trinitie. This saith Augustine.

Augustine. De ciuitate Dei. Petrum Lombardum lib. 2. c.

The made nature is so sundry and manifolde, that being deuided moste lyuely, and manye wayes, one from another, according vnto the diuersitie of the things that be made, it can not be knitte vp to be one selfesame thing againe. For there is a sundrye nature of spirites, and of bodyes: of thinges immortall and mortall: of things heauenly and earthly, of reasonable and vnreasonable, &c. but thereof we intend not to speake. We meante onely to note howe manifolde and diuers a thing nature is, and to sette a difference betwirte the Godly nature, whiche is neither created, nor made, and the other nature that is of creatures, leaste wee shoulde seeme to appointe vnto God suche a nature, as hee hymselfe hathe giuen vnto his creatures.

IIII. Whereby the nature of God may be knowen.

WE speake not of the full and perfect knowledge of Gods nature, for we do knowe that that passeth both our searching & capacitie. And of that knowledge of him Nazianzene meant, when he said, The nature of God can not be perceyued. And yet for all that (as we sayde before) it is in any wise necessarie that wee haue some knowledge therof, sufficiente for mens Godlye desires. We thinke it good for that intent, to admonish the reader, wherby it may be knowen: I meane as muche as is requisite for our saluation and godly disposition. The Godly disposed person, which diligently wayeth the case of oure religion, maye atteyne vnto some small knowledge of Gods nature: small I say, considering the inscrutheable greatenesse thereof: and yet verye large, considering the narrownesse of oure capacitie, if hee doe firste directly follow the lyght of the Holy Scriptures, and secondlye doe diligentlye ponder the workes of God.

This Tertullian vnderstood, whē in his firste booke againste Marcion, he sayde: We doe defyne, that God is fyrste to bee knowen by nature: Secondely to bee recognised by doctrine: by nature through hys workings, by doctrine through preachings, he speaketh no doubte of the workings of Gods nature, in whiche he bothe made and gouerneth, and withall conserueth all thinges. It is so prouided, that euerye nature by working dothe declare of what qualitie it is, whyche is verifyed not onlye in the created and made nature, but in that also whiche is not made, but is the maker of al. He who gaue this to the fyre, that it shoulde naturally burne and wast all thinges in burning, dothe hymselfe also those things naturally whiche doe belong vnto his nature, that is to say, which doe naturally perteyne vnto the true God.

But wee muste putte a difference betwirt the things that be wrought naturally and that be wrought accidentally or by chaunce. Those which bee naturall, bee done not once or twise, but often and continually: and they whiche be done by chaunce and accidentally, be not so. Whereas the Sunne doth gyue lighte, to the world it is a daylye and a common case, because it is his naturall worke: but whereas sometymes it dazeleth weake eyes, it is not naturall, but happeneth by chaunce. Whereas God doth sometymes strike and destroy, it is not proper and naturall vnto him, but straunge, and vsed to the intente to come to his owne. So we do reade in Esay. For the Lorde shall stande as it were in the mount of Perazim, and shall be angry like as in the vale of Gibaon, that the straunge worke of his, maye make his worke, that hys straunge working may worke his owne naturall working.

We do see in these wordes of the Prophete, that there is playnely expressed two kyndes of workes of God, that is to say, of his owne, and of others. That is the proper and peculiar worke of God, which pertayneth vnto him according to the nature of hys Godhead: and that is straunge, whiche is contrarie vnto the same. When he destroyeth the wicked and scorgeth his people, hee doth a straunge worke, to the intent, to doe afterwardes that whiche is proper vnto hym, according vnto the saying of the Apostle: When we be iudged by the Lorde, we be chastned, leaste we should be damned with this worlde. But concerning thys matter, loke in our Commentaries vpon Esay.

Therefore, for as much as he doth often shewe mercy and spare menne, and is slowe to anger, we may easily perceyue that thys is of hys nature to shewe mercy and to spare, so that it is not withoute cause sayde commonlye in the Collecte: God, whose propertye it is to shewe mercye alwayes, and to spare. Secondly, those things whyche bee naturally done, bee done neyther with an euill will, nor at any motion of others, but easely, and at hys owne voluntary motion, and suche is the condition of those things which be naturally done by God, suche as all the workes of hys prouidence bee, whereby manne may atteyne to the knowledge of his nature.

In deede Tertullian dothe attribute the knowledge of Gods nature vnto his workes. But in case we wil giue eare to the holye scripture, wee shal haue no small help from thence to know what the nature of God is. For the scripture doth teach & almost paint out before mens eyes, not only what and of what qualitie Goddes workes be, but also what his spirite, intente, and purpose is towardes mankynde, wherein no doubte the nature of God is declared. Wherefore it is to no small purpose, that wee ioyne the lessons of the holye Scripture vnto the workes of God, for as much as in them both we bee instructed of the nature of God. The knowledge whiche is of the workes is more generall, for as much as the inuisible poyntes of Gods nature and his euerlasting vertue and Godhead, may be seene in the vnderstanding of mans reason, by those things whyche haue bin done, and daylye bee donne in that, that God through the brightenesse of hys workes, dothe rebounde vppon the mindes of the wyse, and so dothe open himselfe vnto them. Besydes that, wee haue the dayly experience, which the long and continuall order of Gods workes dothe preelde and sette forth vnto wise menne. But that knowledge which is gotten out of the holy scriptures muste haue faith, wherebye to credite the testimonies of the holye Spirite. Thus by experience and faithe, the electe and faithfull may to their saluation attepne to the knowledge of Gods nature, but the reprobate vnto their iudgement.

V. Of vvhat qualitie the nature of God is.

ALbeit it may sufficiently appere vnto wise men by the experience of Gods wozkes, and to them which be exercised in the reading of holye Scriptures, if they do beléeue them, of what qualitie the nature of God is. Yet foz all that I thinke it méete, so much to serue the turne of the vnlearned, as in fewe wozdes to speake somewhat else hereof to their pzofit.

VVhiche vve make to be the qualitie of Gods nature.

We doe not determine the qualitie of Gods nature to be that, wherin consisteth the habite, disposition, naturall power, oz lacke of power, affection, fozme, fashion. &c. Whiche the Logitians doe consider in qualitie: but the same whiche hathe hys greatest pzopertie to distinct the nature of god which is not made, from all others which be made, accozding to the which God is of that qualitie, as agréeth vnto him, whiche passeth all things, not onely in wozthinesse, and Maiestie, but also that by hys wysedome power and greate goodnesse, he maketh, gouerneth and pzeserueth all thinges. And loke mée of what qualitie the wozkes of God, and the holy Scriptures doe declare him to be, of suche qualitie we may wel say is his nature. Foz he is such in the qualitie of his nature, as he is tried and found to be. And before in the firste place where wée spake of God, we distincted ỳ qualitie of god thzee ways, that is to say, what qualitie god is of in essence, what in person, and what in nature, so that wée nede not to say any moze here, of the qualitie of Gods nature. Neither is it necessarie noz possible, to searche out exactly the qualitie of his wozthinesse and Maiestie, muche lesse of his essence: but it is sufficiente foz the Godlie man, to adoze the wittie of his essence, and the excéding and incompzehensible bygbnesse of hys wozthinesse and Maiestie, in spirite, and to séeke ỳ qualitie of his nature, in his wozkes and in the holy Scriptures, and so to content himself with the testimonies of them both.

Let him learne thereby to knowe, that the nature of God in it selfe is to himselfe sufficient in all poyntes, that it is euerlasting and vnsearchable: and towards those things which he hath made almightie, and that he hathe power, and authozitie ouer all things, and ruleth all things that be in heauen and earth, that he is good and louing towards man, gentle and mercifull, fozeknowing all things, fozeséeing all, present euery where, slowe vnto anger, true, wyse, following of iustice, and iudging rightly of al, and suche lyke, which be repozted of God and of his nature in the Scriptures. All these qualities be in him, not as gotten by any study, by any teaching and instruction, by any custome oft vsed, but naturally, and therfoze it may be mosse assured vnto vs thereby, of what qualitie his nature is: and fozasmuche as these thinges be natural and peculiar vnto him, it followeth that they be not onely accustomable, but perpetuall, voluntary, and very ready in him.

VI. Whether that God do Communicate his nature vnto his workes.

FOzasmuche as the nearer that those things which be made by God, doe dzaw vnto his Nature, the moze happie they be, lyke as the neer any thing is layd vnto the Sun, the clérer it is: it may be demanded, whether that God do communicate of his Nature vnto those wozkes whiche he hathe made. In case he doe communicate, then euery creature is of the same nature that hys Creatoz is of, yea and partaker also of his Godhead. Foz it is not possible that the Godhead and nature of God should be separated. Mozeouer, fozasmuch as they that be of one nature be also of one substance, it shuld follow, that euery creature shoulde be of the lyke substaunce with God. If these thinges be as vnreasonable as if a man shold say, that the house and the carpenter were both of like nature and substáce, then it is a good consequent that God doth not cómunicate his nature and essence vnto his wozkmanship.

You will say: What meaneth it then that the Apostle saith: But we haue one God the father, of whome be all things, and wée in him: If all things be of God, how can they bée of any other nature, than of his nature? Can that which is of man be of other nature, than of the nature of man? that which is of flesh (sayth Christ) is flesche, and that whiche is of the spirite, is spirite. Is it not reason, that any thynge in the wozlde shoulde beare the nature of hys beginning?

I aunswere. It is one thing to be bozne of God, and an other thing to bée made by God. The communicating of nature dothe consiste in bearing, and not in creating and making. Therefoze the Apostle when hée sayth, Of whom all bée: hée meaneth not of the begetting of the creatures, but of the making of them. Neyther did Christ saye: That whiche is made of flesche, but, That whiche is bozne of flesche, is flesche, and that whych is bozne of the spirite, is spirite. Augustine saith thus: Therefoze the creature is sayde to bée of God, in suche sozte, that it is not made of the nature of hym. Foz it is therefoze saide to bée of hym, bycause that he is the occasion, that it is not so that it shoulde be bozne, oz pzocéede from hym: but created, framed, and made by hym. Some of no other matter, but vtterly of nothing: as heauen, and earthe, oz else rather the whole matter of the masse of the vniuersall wozlde created wyth the wozlde: but some of other nature alreadye being and created, as man of claye, woman of the man, and euery man of hys parentes: and yet foz al that, euery creature is of God, but so as creating it of nothing, oz of somewhat, not as begetting it, oz pzocéeding of it selfe. Thys saith hée. In case the creature bée of the same nature wyth God, then is the nature of God, though not of it selfe, yet in some respecte subiecte vnto vanitie and cozruption. In case that creatures voide of reason, shoulde come of the nature of God, and bée partakers therefoze, then it myghte bée that the nature of God shoulde in some thyng be voyde of reason. But farre is thys from Goddes nature, whiche is alwayes endewed wyth moste hyghe reason and wisedome, and farthest off from all vanitie.

VVhether that man be partaker of the nature of God.

But some man will say, Let it so be, that the creatures without soule or reason, doe not communicate of the nature of God, as the Heauen, Sunne, Mone, Starres, Earthe, Plantes, the Sea, and the brute Beastes, whyche bee voyde of reason, yet howe can it be sayde of man, that hee is not of the nature of God: whereas the Apostle dothe declare concernyng man, that hee is the kynd of God. If man bee the kynde of God, then he is of the same nature also wyth hym, lyke as menne beeyng of one kynde, that is of man, be partakers also of one nature. Is not manne of a myxte nature? For whereas hee is concernyng the fleshe earthly, accordyng to the soule and spirite hee is heauenly. Therefore in the flesh hee is partaker of the earthlye, corruptible, and mortall nature, but in soule he is partaker of an heauenlye, incorruptible, and mortall nature.

And it seemeth that the Apostle dothe reporte of hym accordyng to thys latter parte, that hee is the kynde of God. I aunswere, In case that kynde and kynred myght be ascribed vnto God, as it is vnto thinges created, then the argumente were good, but seeyng that the moste symple nature of God dothe not so admytte kynde and kynred, as creatures doe, wee maye not gather vpon the wordes of the Apostle, that as manne is the kinde of God, so hee is also partaker of his nature.

How a is called the kind of God.

Man is called the kynde of God, in the same sense that Poles wryteth that hee is made to the lykenesse of God. The kynde of a thing is oftentimes taken for the qualitie of the thing, in that it is like vnto those things whose kind it is called. If a mã shuld call such a Tyrãt as Nero was, the kind of a Lyon, shoulde wee thereupon by and by gather, that a Lyon and a Tyrante be both of one nature? In the thyrde Chapiter of Mathewe, the Scribes & Phariseys be called the generation of vipers, you woulde thynke hym a fole that woulde thynke to conclude thereupon, that they be of the same nature that Vipers be. They were called by Christe and John, The kynde of Vipers, bycause of the resemblance they had of Vipers in their poysoned malice. So man is called the kinde of God, that in the difference from brute beastes, he is signifyed to bee somewhat like vnto God. Wherefore there can nothing be gathered, to proue the communicating of nature. When God saide, Lo Adam is made as one of vs, knowing good and euil. He spake not of the communion of nature, but of the likenesse in that he seemed as some God, or hauyng some resemblaunce of God, for that hee was endewed with the knowledge of good and euill. So man is called the kynde of God, bycause of the prerogatiue of reason and spirit, and that countenance of gouernãce, in that he excelleth all other lyuyng things. If the soule of man shoulde come of the nature of God, and bee partaker thereof (as some mens opinion pinon hath bin, shoulde it not verily followe, that the nature of God in man shoulde be alterable, and subiecte vnto synne, yea and suche as myght be cast away and lost, vnlesse it were deliuered from condemnation through the grace of Christ, and so Christe shoulde be not only the redeemer and sauioure of mankinde, but of the nature of God also, besydes other inconueniences, whiche followeth vpon this opinion?

But wheras man is of compound nature, earthly and heauenly, it can not serue to this purpose, that hee may therefore be thought to be partaker both of the nature of God and of man, whiche prerogatiue is peculiar vnto Christe onely. For euerye thing that is spirituall and heauenly, is not Godly. The Angels be also heauenlye Spirites, and yet no man that hath any witte in his head, will say that they be of Gods nature.

Yet some man will say: Content, Let men as men, and the creatures of GOD, be none of the nature of God. But what shall we say of the electes, which Christe sayth to be of God, and of the faythefull, whyche John sayeth be made the children of God? And that they bee borne, not of bloud, nor of the wyll of the flesh, nor of the wyll of man, but of God. If the electes shoulde bee therefore of GOD, bycause they were created by hym, that is a general matter to them and to all other creatures, and vnto the wycked also, whiche be also made by God: and yet Chrysse in the place before rehersed, dothe denie them to be of God.

Wherefore the Electes must bee altogyther otherwyse of God, than other creatures bee. But if they bee not so partakers of Gods nature, it must needes be graunted at the least waye, that they whiche be borne of God, and be made the Children of God in beleeuing, be of the Communion of the nature of God. I aunswere, To be of God, is meant two wayes. First by byrth, and, Secondly, by the grace of Election and Predestination. By byrthe, Christe is the onely begotten and naturall son of God, yea and of the same nature that he is of. By the grace of Election and Predestination, all they be of God, which were elect, and foreordeyned vnto life before the makyng of the world. To be this way of god is not to be of his nature, but to bee made partaker of the grace of God. As concerning the place of John in the firste chapiter, I doe aunswere, That for the elect and faithfull to be borne of God, is nothyng else, but to bee renewed in spirite and mynd, by the Grace, and operation of the the Holye Spirite, and to be adopted in Chrysse, to bee the chylde of GOD. As this byrth is not of the nature of God, but of the worxking of the Holye Spirite, so it maketh not men partakers of Goddes nature. It is one thyng to bee borne of the substance and essence of god, and an other thyng to bee altered, and regenerate into a newe manne man by the grace and vertue of the holye Spirite. The fyrst byrth is of Nature, and belongeth vnto Christ onely: the latter byrthe is of grace and adoption, and is appoynted vnto the faythfull.

Lastly, some men will laye vnto me also that saying of Peter: Wher-

by

by there bee royall promises giuen vs, so that by thé you may be made partakers of Gods nature, if you flée from the corruption which commeth thorough concupiscence in the worlde. Is there not openly promised by these words, the felowship of Gods nature, vnto them which doe beléeue the promises of God, and do flée the corruptions of this worlde? I answere: The Apostle speaketh of the communion of the glorie and immortalitie which is to come, whiche is promysed vnto them that doe beléeue in Chriſte, if thorough their beléeuing and well liuing, they doe flée from the destruction of this worlde, And forasmuch as the greate dignitie of that glorie is such, that it doth infinitely passe all degrée of mans nature, and shall tourne vs as children and heyres of God, and felowe heyres wyth Chriſte, vnto the companie and fellowshippe of Chriſte in his kingdome, the Apostle thoughte good to speake in thys wyſe, and to vse the worde of nature, for the glorie whiche is prepared by God for the Electe, to the intente that they maye bée made lyke vnto the Aungels of God, Heauenly, immortall, glorifyed, and happie for euermore. What tyme wé shalbe cõformed to the glorifyed bodye of Chriſte, and be lyke vnto the Aungels of God, shall wée not then séeme to be turned to the felowshippe of Gods nature? Yes no doubt. And the Apostle perceyuing thys, saithe, that wée shall be made partakers of Gods nature. He doth not meane, that lyke as the onely begotten of God, and the Holye Spirite, bée of one same nature with God the Father, so wée should also bée made partakers thereof, and some parte of vs to become the nature of God. Wée sayde before, that Gods nature is God hymselfe. So that he whiche is receyued into the fellowship of God, in that respect is made partaker of gods nature. God is charitie, and he whiche dwelleth therin, dwelleth in God, and God in him. And in this respect he hath fellowshippe with the nature of God. The nature of God is to bée without affections, to be immortal, incorruptible, and happie for euermore. Thus farreforth we shall be partakers of Gods nature, what tyme we become to be suche in the worlde to come. Like as by the gifts of Gods grace in Chriſt Iesu, we do séeme in this lyke to represente the Image of Gods nature, what time we be new borne and sanctifyed, and doe expresse the disposition of our Father by our vpright liuyng, so wée shall also resemble the likenesse of Gods nature in the worlde to come by the gifts of glorie, when wée be immortall, glorifyed, and truely happie.

Nowe the question remaineth of Chriſte bëyng man, whether that the nature of man in hym were not chaunged into the nature of God, by deification, and conioyning of the euerlasting worde thereunto. A man may fynde some nowe a dayes that will vpholde it, as thoughe that the Euangelicke dicte saye: The flesshe is become the worde. They doe take awaye mans nature from the flesshe of Chriſte, attributing manifestlye vnto it, those thinges whyche can not agrée to any, but to the nature of God: with whose iudgemẽt we can not agrée. Wée doe attribute vnto Chriſte Chriſte the onely begotten of God, not onely the nature of God, but both natures of God and of man, neyther deuiding hys person, neyther confounding the natures, but leauyng vnto eache of them, that whyche is proper and peculiar vnto it. For the earthly body (sayeth Cyrill) coulde not abyde to bée turned into the nature of the Godhead, for that is impossible. For so we should decay the nature of the Godhead, as though it were made, and toke somewhat into it, which (as touching the nature of it) was not proper vnto it. Surely it is as greate a fondnesse to saye, that the bodye is turned into the nature of the Godhead, as that the worde is turned into the substance of the flesshe. For as thys is impossible, for that that it is proued, that it can not be conuerted, and altered: So that thys is not possible nother, that any creature maye bée conuerted, and turned into the nature, or essence of the Godhead. But the flesshe is also a creature. And therefore wée doe saye in déede, that the bodye of Chriſte is diuine and godly, for asmuche as it is the body of God, and byrghtened with vnspeakeable glory, and incorruptible, yea and wée doe confesse it to bée nowe holy, and that it doth giue life. But that it shoulde bée chaunged into the nature of the Godhead, that none of the holye Fathers eyther thoughte or taughte, neyther do wée thinke so. Thys sayeth Cyrill. And bëyng of thys iudgemente of the bodye of Chriſte, he sayde expressly: And the faythfull must beléeue, that though Chriſt be absent from vs in bodye, yet for all that hée dothe gouerne all thynges, and vs also, by his power, and that he is alwayes hymselfe present wyth them whyche doe loue hym. Therefore hée sayd: Verely, verely I say vnto you, where-soeuer be two or three gathered togither in my name, there I am in the middes of them. For like as whé he liued vppon the earthe as man, then also he filled Heauen, and forsooke not the companye of Angels: Lykewyse nowe when he is in Heauen with his flesshe, yet notwithstãdyng hée filleth the Earthe, and is with them whyche doe loue hym. Augustine hathe also the lyke, who sayeth plainely of the body of Chriſt. Hée gaue it immortalitie, but hée toke not away the nature of it.

Therefore séeyng that mannes nature passed not so, in Chriſte, to the Communion of the godlye nature that it was made one therwithall, it followeth that the same mosse hygh nature of God whyche is not made, but is the maker of all, can not be communicate vnto any creature, no not to the creature of Aungels substantially: but that the prerogatiue thereof dothe belong vnto the Father, the Sonne, and the holy Spirite only. To the sonne, I saye, not accordyng vnto the flesshe, but accordyng to the Worde, whiche was at the begynnyng both with God, and God, before that the foundations of the worlde were layde. And so we doe confesse, that one selfe same Chriſte hathe the nature of God concerning the Worde, and the nature of man, concerning the flesshe.

Of the Sufficiencie of God.

IF néede it hadde bin more conueniente, to haue had set forthe in the begiming, where we intreated of God, those things whyche we do nowe adde of the name, Nature, sufficiencie, and omnipotencie of God, &c. But it shall not be amisse nother to treate of it heere, if it be so handled, that Godly disposed persons may take profite thereof. And forasmuche as we haue noted somewhat touching the nature of God, I thinke my labour shall be well bestowed, if according to my small habilitie I do touch by the way, and leaue to men to be considered of those things whyche doe properlye belong thereunto, though not all, yet those pointes whyche may serue to edifying, such as is the sufficiencie of God: the omnipotencie, power, right, rule, goodnes, louingnesse, patience and suffering, clemencie and mercie, truth, wisedome, prouidence, foreknowledge, will, and suche other like, the consideration of whiche may helpe to the knowledge of Gods nature. And next after the Essence of the Godhead, and the persons of the holye Trinitie, thys séemeth principally to be considered in Gods nature, which the Grékes do call αὐταρκές, the Latinistes sufficiencie, wherein they doe scarsely expresse the strengthe of the Grécke worde. But yet for asmuche as it is vsed in the holy Scriptures, we will also kéepe it still. And to the opening of this matter whereof we purpose to speake, we will vse these wordes Sufficiencie, Sufficiencie of it selfe, Sufficiencie for others, Sufficiencie in all and for all, whiche are alwayes to be considered in Gods nature as peculiar vnto it. Firste wée do call Sufficiencie, that whiche excludeth all lacke, whiche is so furnished with all abundance of all thinges necessarie, that nothing more can be desired. This the Philosopher termeth Sufficiencie in it selfe, and doth attribute therevnto happinesse, and the most high and perfect goodnesse. But this doth belong vnto the nature of God onely, so that it can agrée to no man liuing. In him there is a continuall and an infinite abundance of all good thinges. If I hunger (sayth he) I will not tell thée: for all the worlde and the fulnesse therof is myne. &c. If there bée wisedome and power to be vsed, howe can anye of them lacke in that nature, whiche is very wisedome it selfe, and is endowed with moste absolute power, in all, and ouer all. And where as I doe attribute this sufficiencie vnto God onely, it is to be meante of the perfecte sufficiencie of all thinges, where nothing can in any wyse bée lacking, and yet godly folke can skill to be contente wyth things présente, gyuen them by the goodnesse of God, and saye, that they haue Gods plentie, though they haue neuer so little. So Paule sayde: For I haue learned to be contente wyth that, that I haue. But the vniuersall sufficiencie is one, and the particular sufficiencie is an other. The fyrste is in God only: thys last is gyuen by Goddes gifte vnto men, which we do also attribute vnto the riche. Againe, it is one thing to haue all thinges requisite vnto our lyuing sufficientlye, in that sorte that there can nothing more bée wished: and an other thing, to be so contented with a little, that a man maye wishe for manye things that hée hathe not, yet he despyeth or lacketh nothyng at all. Vnto thys latter sufficiencie, as to the best and readiest way of sufficiencie and fulnesse, wée be counselled by the Apostle when he sayeth: Hauing foode and clothing, contente youre selues withall. The couetous man whose mynde is vnsatiable, thinketh it not sufficient if he haue neuer so muche riches, yea the wealthe of Cresus. Such manner of men haue wealthe sufficiente, and not sufficiente: sufficient, for as muche as hée lacketh no necessaries: not sufficiente, bycause hée is neuer contented with anye riches: but the more he hathe, the more he coueteth. Wherefore there can come no better sufficiencie in thys life, than when the minde whiche despiseth earthly things, is contente with that which he receyueth of the hand of God, whether it be little or muche. But héereof wée will not speake much at thys présente. The trucksull, and perfect sufficiencie, belongeth peculiarly vnto Goddes nature onely: whyche bothe hathe all, and hathe vtterlye no néede of anye thing. Wée call αὐταρκείαν that, when one man hath all things from no where else, but of himselfe, and when one is sufficiente of hymselfe to all, and in all things. None of both can be attributed vnto anye mortall man, but both be proper vnto the nature of God onely. For firste of all it can not bée sayde vnto God, What hast thou but that whyche thou hast receyued? hée hathe all, and yet for all that, hée hathe receyued nothyng of any person. Who gaue him anye thing first, sayeth the Apostle, and he shall pay him home agayne? Who gaue vnto hym to be, séeyng that hée is the fountaine of all essence and being, and the beginning of all those thinges that bée? Who gaue vnto him to be God, séeyng that there is nothing aboue him, nothyng former and auncienter, nothing of greater power? Who gaue him anye of all those thynges whyche he hathe? Of whome receyued he the matter and stuffe, whereof the wisedome and strength, whereby he made the heauen, Earthe, Sea, and all that is in them? They bée foles, yea verilye wicked, whyche saye that GOD prouided not the matter and stuffe wherof the worlde was made. But thys fondnesse of theyrs, the Fathers haue well rebuked. And wée doe holde, that God is so sufficiente of hymselfe, that of hymselfe he hathe all, and hath receyued nothing of any person.

Secondly, he is in this respect also sufficient of himselfe, that not only he hath all of himselfe, but he doth also so suffice hymselfe, that he hath no néede neyther of any of the things whyche hée hathe, and whyche hée hathe made and created. He is sufficiente to hymselfe through al things, and vnto all thinges. He hadde not néede of any thyng before he created the worlde, either that which is aboue and heauenly, eyther this inferiour and earthly. Hée shoulde not haue bin a payne the richer, albeit hée had created a thousande worldes. Lyke as the lighte of the sunne is no whitte encreated by all the lightes that be any where, neyther any thing diminished though there bée none else but it. But there is no comparison at all to be made betwirte God and the Sunne, betwirte the creator and the creature: and yet for all that, a man may somewhat sée by the qualitie of the sunne, what we ought to iudge of this sufficiencie of God, for as much as he so created ẏ sunne, that it hath full plentie of light of it selfe, and so farre forthe sufficeth it selfe, that it nédeth no lyght of anye other.

The sunne.

And of all liuing menne, where is one so wealthy, so mighty, and so wise and happie in all pointes, that he hath néde of none, and is sufficient to himselfe alwayes, and in all things: doe not ẏ most mighty Princes, yea euen they whome men call by a proude title αὐτοκράτορας, that is, strong of themselues, for as much as they be not Gods, but men, néde the seruice of others, yea séely weake men, not onely to raigne and rule ouer, but also to lyue by? The Philosopher reasoneth, whether the happy man hath any néde of friendes, yea whether he nédeth them when he is vexed with aduersitie, or when hée flourisheth in felicitie. This question néded not, and yet for all that he cõcludeth ẏ saying, The happie manne shall haue néde of good friendes. Why? Bycause the weakenesse of mans nature is suche, that no liuing man is able to be sufficient vnto himselfe, when he is become strõg and mightie, muche lesse when he is yong and naked, néedy of all things, and new come forth of hys mothers wombe. But the nature of God is so sufficient of it selfe, that it nédeth the helpe and seruice of none other.

But you wyll say. Why doth hée then occupy not onely Aungels for hys ministers, but menne also, yea beastes, and creatures lacking lyfe, ayre, fyre, snowe, frost, windes, sunne mone, starres, &c. in case that he bée sufficiente of hymselfe in all points, not onely to lyue, but also to gouerne?

I aunswere, Whereas hée dothe vse the ministerie of hys creatures, he doth it not of necessitie, as though that without them he coulde not gouerne those things whiche he hathe made and dothe conserue, whereas without them he created thys whole masse of Heauen, Earthe, and Sea, by his worde only: which is of no lesse strength and power than it is to gouerne all that he hathe made. He is able by his becke only to do all what hée wyll. But lyke as he created all thyng for the declaration of his godlye Maiestie, so hée vseth also the ministery of all thyngs, to shewe hymselfe to bée not onely the maker, but the Maister also of all, and that it myghte be knowen to mortall men, for whose sake he made all these things, that all doth depend vpon the becke of hys wyll, and that there is nothing neyther in Heauen, nor in Earth, but (if he list) doth obey and serue hym. We all do knowe by experiencie the vsage of the Sunne, the Mone, the Ayre, Fyre, Lãd, Water &c. But wee doe not likewise all vnderstand, that none of these things hathe his course in vayne, but that all all serueth to the worde of their creator. Therefore it pleased the Holye Spirite to admonishe vs hereof by Dauid in the Psalmes, where hée doth briefely, but yet very playnely, sing vnto vs all this ditty, that God hath not only created all thinges by his worde, but also that all thynges doe obey the same. But yet in the meane season none of the things created could do any thing, vnlesse that God did himselfe through his power worke by them. Wherefore that the Sunne dothe shyne, the fyre brenne, the water moysten, the snowe and Ice make colde, &c. it is not theyr owne worke, but the worke of Gods power, working by them. And by this meanes he doth declare the glorie of his Maiestie much more excellently, than though he did worke all things inuisibly withoute the ministery of his creatures. Who woulde saye that there were anye glorye of Princely Maiestie declared in thys, if that the Prince hymselfe in hys owne person and wyth hys owne hande, withoute the ministerie of others, should do all those things, whiche were to be done in his realme, and not rather in that if he haue all the habilitie, wealth, and strength of all the inhabitantes of his realme to subiecte vnto his worde and becke, that he may at his owne libertie vse the ministerie of whome he list, and wherevnto he list.

Why God vseth the ministrie of creatures.

Thirdly, that ἐπαρκεία, is when a man is not only sufficiente to hymselfe in all things, but yéldeth vnto others also plentifullye to their vse. Ἀρκέω in Greéke signifyeth to ayde, to help, and to relieue, and ἀρκέομαι, to be contented, and to haue sufficient. Therefore saying that there is not only this kind of sufficiencie peculiar vnto God, that he dothe by all and in all things so sufficiently, that he nédeth nothing, but that hée dothe also liberally and plentifully bestowe vnto others whereby they may liue and be sustayned, we maye well also attribute vnto hym thys ἐπαρκείαν, whereby he doth also of his fulnesse and plentie yelde vnto the necessitie of others, that whyche is sufficient. And he doth this in that sorte, that he séemeth to haue all the sufficiencie of all things to this end, to suffice others thereby, more than himselfe.

The Ebrewes do so vse that word שדי, whiche is in the holye Scriptures applyed vnto God, and hathe a signification of sufficiencie, and is neuer found spoken but of God only. God only say they, doth depend vpon none other, neyther in substance nor in qualities, but he with all his appertinaunces is clére, and quite from all dependence. So that hée is absolutely, and in truth rich and sufficiente to himselfe, which nédeth no other. And this is God only. But of all others this is spoken as receyuing it from some other, and in respecte of some things. Therefore séeyng that God only is sufficiente to himselfe, this name שדי is aright attribute vnto him.

In déede these thinges be true, but yet they doe not well ynough expresse the sufficiencie of Goddes nature, and the strength of thys worde שדי. For as the nature of God dothe not onely suffice it selfe, but dothe also bestowe vppon others as muche as is sufficiente: so this word dothe not onely signifie him whiche dothe suffise hymselfe in all thynges, but him also whych doth of his sufficiencie giue vnto others sufficiently, to serue their turne.

Fourthly, when we doe consider that vniuersall prouidence of God, whereby he prouideth for the necessities of all creatures, we do well perceyue that the worde of ἐπαρκείας is not ynough to expresse the full sufficiencie of the nature of God, but that we must attribute also thereunto παναρκείαν, that is to say, that sufficiency, whereby there is giuen vnto all things generally that bee in Heauen and in Earth, that whereby they may liue and continue. The one selfesame God is the bottomlesse fountayne of all sufficiencie to all things that be created by him, sufficient to all, and alone. What soeuer is either in Heauen or in Earthe is of him: what soeuer hathe life, and what soeuer thing, al heauenly, and earthly creatures, and liuing in the waters, reasonable & vnreasonable, hauing soule or without soule, haue, it is of him. All matter, substance, essense, nature, life, sustentation of life, fode, powers, and qualities of soule, spirite and body, all vnderstanding, knowledge, wisedome and foresighte, all strength of Imagining, reasoning, iudging, remembring, louing, hating, desiring, and refusing, is of him, yea whatsoeuer thynges also doe outwardly come, eyther by Angels, eyther by men, or by beasts, and anye creatures of hys (sayeth Paule) to the Romaynes. And by hym, and in hym, be all things. Rom. 11.

Suche is therefore the nature of God, that it is in it selfe perfecte, and full of all good thynges. Secondlye, that it doth not keepe the good things whiche it hathe to it selfe only, but that it dothe communicate them also vnto others. Thys hys readinesse to communicate, bredde that common and proper Prouerbe, Euerye good thyng the communer it is, the Godlyer it is. The large dealyng in communicating, the Apostle expressed when hee sayde, Of him bee all thynges. Thirdly, that hee giueth not some fewe things, or many, but all. By all, you must not vnderstande all whyche God hymselfe hathe, but all whyche bee hys creatures, and bee hadde of all them. Agayne, you must not vnderstande it of euill, and sinne, whyche is not of God, but of the Deuill, but of all good thynges. Euery good gyfte, sayeth James, and euerye perfecte gifte is from aboue, comming downe frō the father of lyghtes. Euill doth not belong to the sufficiencie of God, but all kinde of goodnesse. As for naughtinesse, it dothe belong to the sufficiencie of the Deuill. For he is sufficientlye naughte, and the fountayne and beginner of all euill and naughtinesse. Euill is not of God. Iacobi.

Fourthly, the nature of God is, that it giueth not vnto some onely, but vnto all. The Apostle sayeth, Seeyng that hee giueth lyfe and breathe and all things vnto all. And James sayeth: If anye of you lacke wysedome, lette hym aske it of God, who giueth abundantlye vnto all, and casteth no man in the teeth withall, and it shall be giuen him. But it is not to bee vnderstanded of men onely, as though that hee gaue all things vnto them only. The sufficiencie Act. 17. Iacob. 1. The difference of Gods prouidence.

encie of God dothe yelde all thynges that bee necessarie vnto all cattell, and beastes. Therefore the Psalmist song: They doe looke for all thynges of thee, to giue them fode in season. When thou doest giue them, they doe gather it, when thou openest thy hande, all thynges be fylled wyth goodnesse, and when thou turnest away thy face, they bee troubled, &c. And agayne: The eyes of all thynges doe trust in thee O Lord, and thou giuest them meate in due season. Thou openest thy hande, and fillest euerye liuing thyng wyth thy blessyng. And in an other place, Whiche openeth the Heauen to the cloudes, and prouideth rayne for the earthe: whyche bryngeth forthe hay and grasse in the hilles for the seruice of menne, whyche giueth vnto cattell theyr fode, and to the yong rauens whyche doe call vppon hym. For he giueth all things vnto all, wyth care and foresight, whych is meete for God the conseruer of all. God (sayeth Salomon) hathe care of all. The Sunne giueth light vnto all. The fountaine giueth drynke to all, which wil take paines to draw it. This ayre serueth to all, that do breath of it. But this they do without care, it is otherwise with the nature of God, for it hath a very care of all the things which it hathe made. Psal. 104. Psal. 144. Psal. 146. Iacob. 1.

Yet for all that we must consider with what difference the prouidence of God doth giue all things vnto all. The goodnesse of God is of two sortes, as the care of his prouidence is also: of Gods goodnesse, some bee earthly, bodily, and transitory, & some be heauenly, spirituall and eternall. And some care of God is generall, and some speciall. The general care is that, which is peculiar vnto the Creator and conseruer of all, the speciall is that, when as a father hee hath care of his electe and faithful, in the generall care he foreseeth indifferentlye vnto the necessities of all. Therefore Christ said, Which bringeth forthe his sunne vpon the good and the euill, and raineth vppon the thankefull and vnthankefull. So hee bestoweth his bodily and transitorie good things, to the vses not onely of men, but also of beastes, not only of the iust, but of the vniust also: but of his speciall prouidence, by whiche he beareth a fatherly good wil towards them whome he chose into his kingdome, and vnto euerlasting felicitie before the makyng of the worlde, he giueth in deede temporarie, earthly and bodily goodes, according vnto his generall care, but he giueth specially heauenly, spirituall and euerlasting goodes to the sauyng of the faythfull by hys spirite, the spirite of his children, according vnto hys speciall benevolence and good wyll.

He doth both these as creator and sauiour: but freely of hymselfe, as owing nothing to any mā, bestowing them vnequally, but not vniustlye. For if we doe consider the qualitie of mans estate, he giueth to no man lesse than the necessitie of cure nature requireth. And to say the truth, the wealthynesse of the rich menne whiche consisteth in Golde, Siluer, and other lyke gaye geare, is not so muche to bee esteemed of it selfe, that it oughte so to bee preferred before the necessarye prouysion and substance, which the prouidence of God communelye giueth vnto all, and whyche they whiche be despised for their pouertie, doe vse more happily, than they whiche for their notable wealth and riches are taken to be most happie.

Of God and by God is all.

Of him (sayeth the Apostle) bée all things, and he addeth, and By hym, Ergo all things not onely be of God as the fountaine of all good thinges, but also by him: he bestoweth all his good things vnto all, how, as muche, and when he will. In déede he vseth the ministerye of creatures, but the verye worke it selfe of the dispensation and distributiõ, is not the creatures, but his. Therefore Dauid sayth: Thou openest thy hande, and fillest euerye liuing thing with blessing. He meaneth the very same, that the Apostle dothe, that is to witte, that not onely all things be of God, but by God also.

Then if all things be of him, and by him, it followeth that there is nothing of any other, or by any other, but all of, and by God only. So that he may be as well called μοναρκὴς, as πανάρκης, and truly so it is. Unlesse we doe receyue oure things of God, neyther Heauen nor Earthe, nor any other thing that séemeth to be of anye power, can doe any good, no nor the worlde can so fyll one mans hearte, that he shall desire nothing more. This perteyneth vnto God only, sufficiently to fulfill those things whiche he hathe made. Hée whiche hath God himselfe, hath not onely muche, but sufficiente in all things.

All things be in him.

Furthermore the Apostle sayeth also, And al things be in him. Wherefore all things be so of God, that neuertheless all whiche wée haue of him, is in him: we be both of him, and doe also liue, moue, and bée in hym. Those things whiche be of God, can not stande but in God, the essence and life of all things as it is of God, so it is also in God. He loseth nothing that hée gyueth. But the condition of vs is farre other, than that of God is. Those thynges which we doe begette of vs, can both liue and cõtinue without vs: and those things whych wée do gyue vnto others, wée doe so gyue them, that they bée no longer ours but theyrs, vnto whome wée haue gyuen them. But God so gyueth all thinges, that for all that hée loseth none of those things, whiche hée gyueth. It is neuer a whitte the farther from hym, there is no alienation made, for there is nothing taken from hym, although that all bée receyued from hym. The waying of thys, maye bée a great comforte vnto vs, and anayleth muche to the confirmation of the faith of Goddes prouidence. In vayne shoulde all thynges bée of God, vnlesse withall all things were in him, and consisted in hym: For without hym there is neyther lyfe, nor habilitie to stande by, and to continue. Lette our very life and motions that we moue by, declare vnto vs not onely of whome, but also in whome we bée. What a madnesse is it therefore, not to acknowledge hym of whome wée be, and of whome we doe receyue all thynges: and not to haue hym before oure eyes, nor to depende vppon his prouidence, in whome we be and doe lyue, and in whome all thinges be that we haue, and without whom neyther we our selues nor any thing that we haue, can stande and continue? Wherefore it is not possible, that we should without greate iniurie of Gods Maiestie séke ayde and helpe of any other, but of him when we néede any thing, of whome, by whome, and in whome, we be, wée liue, and we be moued? Howe is it possible that he whiche of his owne motion and godnesse made vs to be when we were not. He which dothe kay vs in him after we be made by him, dothe fede vs, mayntayne vs and saue vs, can forsake vs if with sincere fayth and truste we do wholy depende vpon his prouidence? Thus much we haue spoken as briefly passing ouer this treatise of the Sufficiencie of God.

Of the Omnipotencie of God.

Omn the Omnipotencie of God.

Neyther vnto the Sufficiencie of God, wée may well place Omnipotẽcie. For vnlesse that he were Omnipotent and Almightie, he coulde not be sufficient in all things.

The Ebrewes haue no worde to signifie Almightie, and therefore the Scriptures doe call God absolutely Mightie, full of power, & of strength. When Iob woulde giue vnto God the glory of Omnipotencie, he sayd: I know that thou arte able to do all things. And whereas we doe reade in Genesis: I the God Almighty, and, The Almighty God giue you. And in Exodus, I appeared vnto Abrahã, Isaac, and Iacob, in the God Almightie, &c. In the Ebrewe it is sufficient, whereof we spake before, but as we read in Exodus, Almightie is his name, in the Ebrewe it is, ὁ Epikét is his name. And it is turned in the Psalme otherwise: The Lorde is his name. Nowe that God is Almightie, it appeareth by the testimonie of Christe our Sauiour: who sayth: All things be possible vnto God. And, Abba father, al things be possible vnto thée. And the Angel sayde vnto Marie the Lordes mother, There is no worde impossible with God. And this is a clérely confessed case, not onely among Christian men, but with the Turkes also and Iewes, but yet there be but few that do vse the faith of the Omnipotencie of God aright.

Exo. 15.

Matth. 19. Marc. 14.

Luc. 1.

Howe might and powver differeth.

Firste, we doe make a difference betwixte Might, whiche the Grékes doe call δύναμιν, and that whiche they call ἐξουσίαν, whereof we will speake in a place hereafter by it selfe. For might standeth in strength, valiãt force, &c. But power consisteth in iurisdiction and authoritie, wherefore he that is mighty inough to any thing that he is able to doe, hath not alwayes Authoritie so to doe.

Of the difference betvvixte Might and Might.

Tvvoo povver

Secondly, we doe suppose that there be two mightes. One which is receyued from some other, and the other which is receyued frō none. That which is receyued from others, belongeth vnto creatures, & that whiche is receyued of no other, is peculiare vnto God onely. The first is not proper vnto them, but is an others. The second is no others, but proper vnto hymselfe. The fyrste also is not only an others, as receyued once of an other, but it standeth also by the strength of an other as long as it continueth: but the latter standeth at no time by the strength of anye other, but euermore by hys owne. There is no creature heauenlye, or earthly which hath so receyued any strength from God, that it is able afterwardes to vse the same by his owne strength. The Angels which haue once receyued the might of spiritual nature from God, cannot practise ỹ same by their own strēgth but they haue nede to be furnished in all things by the mighte of God. So that they themselues be not so much mightie from God, as God is mightie in them. At a worde, all the might of all creatures is of GOD, which worketh al in all. Whereas ỹ fire burneth and warmeth, the water moysteneth and coleth, the earth beareth fruite. &c. it is the worke of Gods might, which worketh thys by hys strength. But you can appointe me none by whose mighte God is mightie and worketh those things ỹ he doth: but he worketh mightyly in al things by his owne strength, and declareth hymselfe to be the true Almightie LORD of power onely.

All the mighte of all creatures of God.

The might which is receyued, is particular and limited. I cal it particulare, bycause it is not vniuersall. For there is none of them so mighty that doth receiue strēgth from God, that they be able vniuersally to doe al things. There is to no man giuen ful and perfect strength, (except christ the onelye begotten of God) but to one is giuen to do one thing, and to another an other. But the might of God, not receyued but proper vnto him, is not particular, but altogither vniuersal. Wherupon it is also called Almightynesse, bycause that ther is nothing impossible vnto it. And it can haue no determination, limitation, nor restraint, but it is vtterly frē ful, & absolute. The might of kings and Emperours is not frē and absolute, but restrayned within certain limites and boundes. There be an infinite number of things impossible vnto them, and those things that be possible, be not so possible vnto them that they can do them, but according to the limitation and measure sette them from God. But vnto God ther is nothing impossible, but al possible, and that without al limitation: so ỹ he can do what he wil, when, as far forth, and howsoeuer it pleaseth him to do. The mighty of this worlde be dread, bycause they cā kil the bodies. But that might is so limited, that they can not kil the soules, but after they haue slain the bodyes, they haue no more to do. But ỹ might of God being frē from this limitation, can when he lisse caste both bodies and soules into the pitte of hel. Furthermore this might of tirants be it neuer so greate, it is but for a time, so that it is determined either by death, eyther by some speciall iudgemente of God, yea and for the moste parte they make an ende with shame ỹ nought nought. But the almightinesse of God is continual, vnchangeable, and euerlasting: For it is not determinable by any processe of tyme, by anye chaunge of worldes or matters, neyther by any dessenie. As long as god himselfe endureth, who hath neither begynning nor ende, so long his almightinesse also endureth: so that not onely hee is euerlasting, but his Omnipotencye also is Euerlasting.

Might receyued.

Lastly, no person was euer so mighty to do what he list, subiecte vnto no passions, impediments, and incommodities, so that his will myght be withstanded by no man. No doubt the displeasure of Princes is great, and dredfull, but it is not so almightie to runne out in rage and furie, to do what it list: but it hath a bryde to be restrayned by, and maye by manye occasions be letted. But the almightinesse of God, hath in it these two points most perfect, that it dispatcheth speedily what it wyl, and can haue no passion, or impediment. Therefore Augustine wryteth, that God is therfore called Almighty, bycause he doeth what he wyll, and suffereth not that which he wylleth not. So the Prophet Dauid also whē he would set forth the glory of gods Omnipotēcie, he sayd: But our God in Heauen, doth what he wil. The other part of his Omnipotencie, whiche standeth in that poynte, that hee suffereth not that whiche he wylleth not. Esaias did set forth, saying: And there is none which shall take them out of my hande, and if I doe anye thyng, who shall lette it? So that in these two partes is comprehended the almightinesse of God, that is in doyng what he wyl, and in not sufferyng anye resistaunce whiche he wylleth not. And thus muche of the difference of the mighte of God, from the myghte of all creatures.

What is the vse of the Omnipotencie of God.

The larger tall vvor of Gods omnipo tencie.

WEe doe not take vppon vs to search out the exceding strength of the Almightinesse of God, wherof wee bee not able to comprehende the leaste peece and portion. And yet for all that it may doe menne some good to consider in parte the vse therof. Truly, God is of that nature, that hee dothe perfourme and dispatche all thynges whyche doe properly appertaine vnto the true God, and be impossible to any thinges created as to create of nothyng, to cause to multiplye, and to encrease out of an other, to dispose, gouerne and kēpe, to restore, regenerate, and renewe things that were lost, that they may be saued for euermore, to chastē the offendors, and by effectuall iudgement to punishe the wicked as well spirites as men. These be the generall workes of Gods might, of whiche the specialities bee infinite, and passyng anye mans capacitie.

The of potenc God in creatin

Firste of all, when he woulde create this worlde, the heauen, earth sea, and al that is in them, whereof shold he haue created thē, seeing that there was no matter or stuffe in any place, wherof to frame this engine after the sorte of a maister carpēter, vnlesse that by his Almighty strēgth he had created oute of nothyng fyre, water,

water, earth and ayre, whiche as it were the beginnings of his woꝛkes that he woulde make, he mighte in creatyng bryng the same to passe. Wherefoꝛe the firste and pꝛoper exercise of his Omnipotencie was, to create matter and stuffe of nothing, and therof to make the woꝛld. This vse & exercise of Gods omnipotency, they did not acknowledge which doe so attribute the woꝛkmãshipe of this woꝛlde vnto God, that they say, hee made it of some matter oꝛ stuffe whiche was layde out ready befoꝛe, and was from euermoꝛe. They that be of this iudgement, doe take away from God the chiefest glozy of his Almightinesse, in that they do denie that he is the creatoꝛ of the matter and stuffe, out of whiche all things doe pꝛocéede by his creation.

The omnipotencie of God in the making of things.

Secondly, it was requisite that of the matter and stuffe once created, he should make ẏ rest of his woꝛke, the light, day, and night, and to diſseuer the Heauen & the Earth from the water, and to decke them with theyꝛ furniture, to make the Sunne, the Mone & Starres, to bryng foꝛth Foule, and Fiſhe out of the waters, and all kindes of liuyng beastes, and man also out of the cley of the earth. Herevnto also serued the vse of Gods Omnipotencie.

The omnipotencie of God in multiplying & increasing. Gen.1.

Thirdly, foꝛ as much as to replenish the lande, it was nédefull that the beasts, which were made, should be multiplied, vsing agayne the vertue of Almightinesse, he gaue them strength to growe and to multiplie, whereof we doe reade in this wise. And God sawe that it was good, and he blessed them, that is to say, the fiſhe of the sea, saying, Growe, and be multiplied, and replenish the waters of the seas. Agayne after he had made man, he blessed him, and sayde: Growe and be multiplied, & replenishe the lande, &c.

Fourthly, it was meante that the creatures should not onely be multiplied, but also should be continued in eache kinde, during the seasons of all this woꝛlde. So that the Omnipotencie of God is nédefull herein also, whereby all kinde of liuyng things, beastes, fiſhe, fowle, plantes, & men, should conserue theyꝛ kindes by vertue thereof, from the beginnyng of the woꝛlde, vntill the ende thereof.

The omnipotencie of God in preseruyng.

Fiftly, there is requiſite a special might, whereby all things as well in heauen, as in earth be gouerned, diſposed, fedde, & pꝛeserued. Foꝛ vnlesse they were gouerned, fedde, and pꝛeserued by the stregth of the Omnipotencie, whereby they be made, they could not continue the space of one minute of an houre. Whereof commeth it but of the Omnipotẽcie of God, that the skie falleth not, that the sea ouerwhelmeth not the land, that it ouerthꝛoweth not all things in ragyng ouer all like a fludde, that the lande sinketh not downeward, whereas it is establiſhed about the waters, that the ayre doth not diſappoynt them of their necessarie breath whiche do breath, that the sunne with his heate doth not burne & marre all the fashiõ of the earth, that the earth loseth not hir stregth of bearyng fruytes, wherevpon both men and cattell do liue, that al kinde of nurrishment kéepeth his strength of fode, that the ozder sette in things of nature, is not confounded, and that an an vnnumerable suche other like things do continue eche of them in their office and dutie? The self same vertue of God is both the creatoꝛ, and pꝛeseruer of all, he which made vs, the selfe same doth also pꝛeserue vs. I made (sayth he in Esaye) I doe beare and saue.

Sirtly, it is necessarie foꝛ the conseruation of the creatures, that the feble be strengthened, that they whiche fal be set vp again, that the weak & sicke be healed, ẏ they which be out of the way be bꝛought home againe into the righte, that the blinde bee made to sée, the pꝛysoners deliuered, the hungrye and the thirstie relieued wyth meate and dꝛynke, so that the vse of the might of God doth pertayn herevnto also, by whiche all these things are gyuen to them that be in any daunger.

He coulde haue made vs of that sozte that we should be subiect to no infyrmities and daungers, but to the intent he mighte not onely by creatyng and making, but also by caring foꝛ, and reskozying those thyngs that be created, declare in vs the might of Gods woꝛd. He created vs such as mought fall, hunger, thirste, be sicke and sundzy wise in daungers, to the intente that we shoulde depende alwayes vppon the vertue and ayde of hys myght. Thys Dauid dyd acknowledge when he song, My soule blesse thou the Lozde. &c. Which healeth all my infyrmityes, whiche saueth my lyfe from pertshing. Item: the LORD giueth fode to the hungrye: the LORD loseth them that be tyed, the Lozd lyghteneth the blynde: the LORD reyseth vppe them that fall, &c. Item: LORD thou sauest bothe meune and beastes, he maketh a solemne remembꝛaunce, howe God rydeth them out of daungers whiche wander as captiues and slaues in deserte, and them that be daedly sicke, and suche as be in the daungers of the Sea. In deede he doth ascribe thys vnto the mercye and godnesse of God: but the godnesse and mercye of GOD shoulde bée of no effecte at all, vnlesse there grewe vnto them an efficacye from the Vertue of GODS might.

By the might of God we be regenerate

Seuenthlye, foꝛ as muche as he chose vnto him suche as he woulde saue, and make happy foꝛ euermoꝛe, befoꝛe the establishemente of the woꝛlde, there is of necessitie requysite the vertue whereby he should regenerate them from aboue, that they may be partakers of the kyngdome of Heauen. Thus he doeth by that might, whereby the heartes of the electe, be renewed, and of fleshly, made spirituall. This woꝛke of Goddes almightinesse is perfoꝛmed by the Gospell of Christ, with the working wythal of the holye Spirit. Wherefoꝛe the Apostle calleth it the vertue of God, to saue beleuers.

Rom.1. Saps. The might of God is reuenge.

Eightly, that is also the woꝛke of God, to punishe the wicked with iust and effectuall iudgemente. In deede iustice is the moderatoꝛ of iudgmẽt, but the stregth of the Almightinesse, doth arme all creatures to be reuenged vpõ the wicked and rebellious persons. Wherefoꝛe ẏ vse therof doth also necessarily reach herevnto, the Scripture doeth extoll thys might, whereas it doth attribute vnto God a myghtye hande, a stroye hand

hande of Vertue, and an hyghe arme.

The might of God to rayse the dead.

Nynthly, for as muche as God doth so trauayle ỹ goodly in this life, that they seeme to be nothyng lesse than happy, and suffereth the wicked to passe ouer this life in pleasures, so that very reason would wish for the resurrection of the dead, to the intent that there might be a diuision made, and the Godlye to be assured vnto eternall life, and the wicked caste awaye into euerlastyng fyre: thys execution also of the iuste and laste iudgement doth require an Omnipotencie, that the deade maye both be raysed vp agayne vnto lyfe, and that euery man vppon iudgement wythout all appeale, be rewarded accordyng vnto that which he dyd in hys lyfe, eyther good or euyll.

By the mighte of God this vvorlde is ended, and a new heauen and earth made.

Tenthlye, for as muche as the very estate of the worlde, when the wicked be rydde awaye, and the Godlye putte into euerlastyng lyfe and felicitie, requireth of necessitie, that when the present shape thereof is determined, it muste be turned into a newe forme, that there bee a newe Heauen and Earth: there is requisite also hereunto the vse of Goddes Omnipotencye, wythoute whyche thys chaunge can neyther be wrought, nor after it is once wrought, remayne so settled for euermore. When we doe consider these and suche other lyke matters, wee doe easily vnderstande, though not in all yet in some poyntes, the vse of Goddes Omnipotencie. It is in deede infinite, lyke as the very might of God is also infinite: but to auaũce our endeuor of godly exercise this may suffice whiche we haue by the way alleaged thereof. We could confirme and declare it by holy scriptures, vnlesse we knewe that wee nede not trauayle ouer busily in things manifest.

In vvhat vvorkes the Omnipotencie of God is to bee considered.

The vvorkes of God vvorkes.

IT might appeare sufficiently, by that we haue already spoken, in what workes the vertue of Goddes mighte is to be considered: but yet bycause of the simpler sorte, wee haue thought good to say somewhat of this matter also a parte. Of Gods workes some be visible, and some inuisible.

Agayne some were made long since, and that but once, some bee wrought dayly, yea and often iterated: agayne, some be myraculous and vnwonted, and some be naturall and accustomed: agayne, some be without vs, and some within our selues: lastly, some be farre from vs, and some bee euen before our eyes. In deede they be al the workes of Goddes mighte, and they doe testifie thereof, but the Godly person muste haue a regarde, that he doe specially apply his eyes and minde vnto those things, whiche hee findeth firste in himselfe, secondly, vnto those things whiche he seeth done without himselfe, eyther once done from the beginnyng, or euery yeare or dayly done. As for those things whiche bee inuisible and farre off, lette him leaue them to suche curious folkes, whiche are not contented with things visible, acquaynted, and and common.

When wee doe loke vppon our selues, wee finde a worke not possible to be wrought by any creature, so that wee bee compelled to confesse that wee be the worke of Goddes handes, as he acknowledged whiche sayde: Thy handes Lorde, haue made and fashioned me whole roũd about. Who giueth seede vnto man whereof wee be borne? Who dothe order the womans wombe to conceyue? to retayne, and nurrishe the seede once receyued? Who dothe frame the childe thereof: and fashion it to his shape? Who giueth it lyfe? Who dothe mynister foode vnto it, whereby to lyue? Who giueth it increase to growe? Who keepeth it, saueth it close in the matrix, that it be not chaoked vp? Who dothe dispose and direct it to the birthe, when the season is come that it is rype to bee borne? Who dothe conuey it out aliue, and vnhurt out of the mothers wombe?

In al this the care of the parents dothe auayle nothyng, neyther yet the ableneese or arte of any other men. Therefore let vs acknowledge in them the hand of Almighty God, whiche appeareth also as cleere as the Sunne in the feelde of our life.

The workes without vs, in Heauen, Earth, Water, Fyre, Ayre, Menne, Beastes, Plantes, &c. The nature, makyng, and conseruation of all whiche doe stande in the vertue of Goddes Omnipotencie. Of these some beyng once made at the beginnyng of the worlde, doe not onely continue still in theyr qualitie, but also in the continuance of so many ages, the very self same that they were when they were firste made, without any repayrement: and some doe sette forth the Omnipotencie of God in an yearly, and some in a dayly reuolution. The very earth doth quicken agayne and budde forth by the yearly recourse of Sõmer, which lay all the winter whyle, as it were stroken with a deadly colde, & spoyled of all hyr beautie. The Sunne which is the light of all the worlde, with his dayly departure & returne, dothe order the chaunge of day and night, after a most certayne succession of one after an other, all to our vses: I speake not of his cherishyng warmth, wherwith he doth al the somer whyle meruelously nurrish and relieue all this earth, with the dwellers therein, and all kinde of cornes and graynes. There bee a number of things, whiche doe al the yeare long, bothe winter and somer, monethly, day & nighte, come before our eyes, by all whiche the infinite mighte of God appeareth right well. We see the sunne which seemed at ỹ euening glad to goe quite away, returnyng newe & freshe early in the morning, lyke the bryde grome out of his chãber. Unlesse we did see this sight dayly, who would beleeue ouer nighte, that it were possible ỹ the darkenesse rushing in, and couering therewith all the halfe worlde, coulde be quite ridde away agayne by the returning of the brightnesse of the Sunne vnto vs? But seyng that this is dayly done, why doe wee not consider by whose might it is done: Is it by any others, but his, who created all these things by the worde of his strẽgth, and whiche by the same mighte that he made them, dothe also rule and gouerne them: Iob sayth: God doth hymselfe set forth hys myghte to be considered in the foundation of the earth, the shutting vp and bounding of the Sea, the rysing of the Sunne, the shaking of the Earthe, the depenesse of the Sea, the lighte and darknesse, the treasures of haile and snowe, the heate of the Sunne, whiche is in the Eastе and Southe partes moste feruent) the vehement course of rayne and showres, in the noyse of thunder, rayne, droppes of dewe, pce, pce ykels, frosse, the daye starre, and the euening star, the order, reason, and consent of the heauen, the cloudes, the lightnings, the destruction of the wicked, and ouerthrowe of tyrannes, which Iob doth not without cause recite.

and

Iob 38.

Iob 39.

There myghte many other thinges, yea and much more vaileable bene alleaged, but it seemed better to the holy Spirite, to sette forth those thynges vnto oure consideratyon whyche be euery yeare, moneth and daye layde beefore oure eyes. And the multitude of them is so greate, that we may truely saye: when wee saye muche, that wee saye nothyng: we lacke wordes. The Almightie hymselfe dothe passe all hys workes: he is dreadfull and exceedyng greate, and his myghte is maruellous. Although wee doe glorifye hym with all oure strengthe, yet for all that, hys wonderfull greatenesse doth excede, he is greater thã any praise. Although wee labour neuer so muche, yet we shall not comprehende the excellencie of hys myghte. And there bee manie thinges whiche we know not farre more excellent than those thinges which doe appeare. For we doe see scarcely the leaste part of his workes.

Hytherto wee doe speake of those workes of Gods myghte, whiche be bothe naturall and vsuall. But who is able to waye the vertue of them, whiche bicause they bee wrought after a strange sort, be called miracles and wonders? In deede they bee all whole wonderfull, if they bee compared vnto the weakenesse of oure strengthe. But bycause of the speciall seldomnesse of them, throughe the which also they be worthy twise as muche to be wondered and marueiled at, than thinges accustomed, and so doe more abundantly also auaunce the glorye of Gods Omnipotencie. The wonderfull workes in Egypte bee knowen, those which were wrought in the redde Sea, in the deserte, in the land of Canaan, in the furnesse of Babylon, and chiefly that whyche was by the dispensation of the worde incarnate, wherein is the moste vndoubted argument of Gods might.

The wonderfull workes of God.

Besides this, if a man lik to think of many things, which be not done, whereas they be easy to be done, yea so ready to be done, that they muste needs be done, vnlesse that they were stayed by the myghte of God, shall he not fynde the Omnipotencie of God also in thē? I beseeke you, what was more likely and naturall, than that the fyre shoulde haue burnt the children of the Ebrewes, whiche the Babylonyans dydde casse into it to bee burnte? Were it not an easyer matter for the sea to ouerwhelme al the vpper parte of the lande, and to ouerthrowe that whiche standeth in it, than to bee so holden in, enclosed with bankes? so that it can not ouerrage the boundes and bankes limited vnto it, without the speciall iudgement of God? Why doth not the earth sinke downe of his owne waycht, whereas it is founded vpon waters? Why doe not the cuill vtterly banniſhe the good and Godly, seyng that they doe excede them bothe in multitude, and also in strength? The myghte of God is to bee considered of the wyse manne, in many suche matters whiche bee not done, as well as in those whiche bee done. For lyke as this is the wisedome of the myghte of God to doe what hee will, so that is hys order also, that the same bee not done whiche hee will not haue done. So that to say briefly, The Omnipotencie of God is to bee considered of vs, firste in those thynges whyche haue bene done by him long passe: secondly in those thynges, whiche bee done each yeares, monethes, or dayes: thirdly, in those thynges whiche bee not done, whereas they might easily be done to our great dammage and destruction.

The wonderfull workes of God to be considered in those thinges also which be not done.

The article of our faith doe require the Omnipotencie of God.

Hovv necessary the beliefe of Gods omnipotencie is.

Hovv necessarie sayth is vnto saluation, we declared before in the place of Fayth. The generall necessitie of sayth muste haue this speciall sayth included in it, to beleeue that God is Almighty. For how shal we beleeue that he created Heauen and Earth of nothyng, and that by the worde of his strength, vnlesse we do beleeue that he is Almighty? We be not able to comprysse the knowledge of this matter by the iudgement of our reason, (where vpō some wise men were of the opinion, that the worlde hath bene for euermore) but wee doe reache vnto it onely by sayth. Wherefore the Apostle saith. By Fayth wee doe vnderstande, that the worldes were made by the worde of God. And therefore in our Creede we do sette in the firste parte before all, in the confession of our Fayth: I doe beleeue in God the Father almighty, maker of Heauen & Earth. Besides this, vnlesse that we doe beleeue that God is almighty, how shall we be certainely assured, that the worde was incarnate of the Virgine, of the resurrectiō of Christ, of his death vppon the Crosse, of hys ascendyng into heauen, of his sitting at the right hande of the Father, of the common resurrection of all the deade, of the euerlastyng life whiche wee doe trusse vpon: If wee consider the qualitie of Gods promises, wee can not be assured of the truth of the, vnlesse wee doe beleeue that he which promised them, is allwel almighty as true. There were things promised vnto Abraham, whiche he coulde neuer haue beleeued shoulde haue come to passe, without a firme fayth of Gods omnipotencie. As were the posteritie of his seede, to be equall to the multitude of the starres of the skye, whereas he himselfe was already olde, and his wife not onely olde, but barren also, & also the possession of the lande of Canaan. These matters seemed to be impossible altogether in the eyes of the flesshe, yet for all that, he did beleeue God whiche promised him, for almuchas he knew ỳ there was nothing impossible vnto him. Of this matter the apostle speaketh in this wise: Whiche besides hope in hope beléued, ỳ he should be ỳ father of many nations, accordyng vnto that which was said: Thus thy séede shall be. And not weakened in faith he cõsidered not his own body alreadye decayed, whereas he was well néere a hundred yeares olde, nor the decayed wombe of Sara, but hée staggerd not at the promisse of God through vnbeliefe, but became strong in faith, giuing the glory vnto God, conceyuing an assured perswasion, that the very selfe same whiche had promised it, was able also to performe it. This sayth the Apostle. Therfore Abraham did hereupon beleue the promisses of God, albeit to the outward shew they were impossible, bycause he was certainely perswaded, that he was so Almighty, that hée was able to performe his promisses; whereas the fayth of Sara somewhat slacked in this case, so that she laughed at the wordes of the Angels, when he prõmysed hyr a Sonne, and sayde: Now that I am in age, and my Lorde is waren olde, shall I now fall to pleasure and pastyme? It was replyed vnto hir with a checke, that nothing is harde vnto God. It appeareth that shée woulde not haue doubted of the promyse, if she had thought more vppon the Omnipotencie of God, than vpon the infirmitie of hir flesh. And it was a like matter also that chanced to the blessed Virgin, when she sayde vnto the Angel: How may this be, for as much as I know not a man? Wherfore it was sayde vnto hyr, that no worde is impossible with God. So that the promises of God bée well néere of this nature, that they finde not fayth of theyr truthe without the fayth of Gods Omnipotencie. We shall without it neyther beléeue those things to bée true, whiche be reported in the holy Scriptures of the workes of God that bée paste, nor yet with stedfast and assured hope loke for that whiche is to come. What reason can make the expectation of the cõmyng of our Sauiour Christe stedfaste in vs, when this worlde shall haue an ende, and the electe be conueyed to the glory of the children of God, and the wicked caste out with Satan into euerlastyng fyre, vnlesse that wée be certainely perswaded of the Omnipotencie of God? Therefore when the Apostle spake of this appearyng of the Lorde, saying: That thou kéepe the commaundement sincerely, and without faulte, vntill the appearyng of our Lorde Iesus Christe. He added: Whiche he shall shewe, who is the happie and onely Mightie. It séemeth to be vnpossible, that a man gotten into Heauen so many hundred yeares paste, should returne vnto vs againe. But let vs consider that God is Almighty, whiche shall shewe him vnto vs with heauenly glory, when the tyme commeth.

Hebr. 11.

Our prayers also whiche we muste make when we be in aduersitie & in trouble, would be very colde and slacke, when we perceyue al that is against vs to be strong and stout, that it séemeth vnpossible to escape that whiche is to come, or to be deliuered from the presente, vnlesse wée

sæke

Rom. 4.

Sara.

Gen. 13.

The blessed virgin.

sæke hys helpe, as strengthened by the fayth of Gods Omnipotencie. So Christe beyng in that agonie, when he prayed vnto God his Father, that the houre of hys Crosse might passe away, if it were possible, he did sette that before: Abba father, all things be possible vnto thée. And the Apostles, what time they prayed with the congregation of the faythfull, and besought the helpe of God against the threatnyngs & strength of their aduersaries, Pilate, Herode, and the Priestes, at the very beginnyng of theyr prayer they fell to the argument of Gods Omnipotencie, saying: Thou Lord hast made heauẽ and earth, the Sea, and all that is in them, &c. So by calling vnto their remembrance the fayth of the creatiõ, they cõfirmed in thẽselues ỳ faith of Gods Omnipotẽcie, & did arme thẽ with that agaynst the mighte of the wicked Princes, that they might be the stronger in theyr Prayer.

So that the fayth of Goddes omnipotencie is so necessarie, that those thyngs whiche bée sette forth in the Scriptures of Goddes workes, and whiche doe concerne the mysterie of mans redemption and saluation, can not be settled vppon any sure fayth and hope, or any of our prayers or Gods promisses be fakely trusted vpon, vnlesse that we be firste assuredly perswaded of his Omnipotencie. Wherefore we muste specially prouide, that we arme our hartes with the firme fayth of Gods might, agaynst all feares and doubts, which the imaginations of our flesshe dothe prompte vs withall. In déede we doe easily beléeue generally all the sorte of vs, that God is Almightie, or else we say in déede, that we doe beléeue it: but in those cases whiche do specially touche vs, and séeme sometimes in themselues to be lost, and impossible, we doe not streyght way loke to the Omnipotencie of God, but haue néede to be told of that, saying: There is no worde impossible with God.

Questions of the Omnipotencie of God.

SOme menne whiche be more curious than religious, do reason vpon the Omnipotencie of God, whether that GOD may doe all thyngs whiche manne may. If he may, say they, then he may be weary, hungry, a thyrste, sicke, dye, be consumed, yea lye also and sinne, and doe those thyngs that be naught, yea to take greate delite in wickednesse, if he can not doe thys, Ergo he is not Omnipotent.

Item, whether that he can make that whiche is done, vndone. Item, whether he cã do any thyng besides that that he hath done, and that eyther better or worse, as to make a better worlde, than he made. Item, Whether he can omitte & leaue vnmade any of those things, whiche he doth make: Whether he can make it any other, or after a better way than he dothe make it. Item, Whether it were possible for him to redéeme this worlde any other way, than by the death of his only begotten. Item, Whether he be able to do that alwayes whiche he did once, as to be incarnate, to dye, rise vp again, and suche other lyke. And Occams question: Whether it be rather con-

VVhet that G can doe thing, vvhiche man ca

Occ.

uenient for GOD, not to be able to doe that whiche is impossible, or for that whiche is unpossible not to be done by God.

By my aduise the godly person shall forbeare those curious questiõs of vile braynes, and beleeue this simply, that God is Almightie. It perteyneth not vnto power but vnto weakenesse, to be able to be weary, hungry, a thirste, to be sicke, to die, & to be consumed. For what else is it to be wery, thã not to be able, strõgly to doe and performe any troublesome thing without wearinesse: because of the faintnesse of his strẽgth: And what is it else to be hũgry and a thirste, than to haue an appetite to meate and drinke, to refreshe the strẽgth of the body, which we should not neede, if the body could continue lustie & strong without them. Wherefore to be hungry and a thirste, commeth of a weakenesse, and not of any strength. Whereupon it foloweth, that God could not continue the glory of his Omnipotency, if he were found subiect vnto these lackes. It is the like matter also to be sicke, die, t wasted, to decay, commeth not of might, but of weakenesse, and therefore is moste farre from him who is of all most mighty.

There is an abuse in this worde Maie, when we doe say that a man may be weary, hũgry, a thirst, sicke, &c. For the nature of the worde, properly dothe appertayne vnto those things whiche doe require mighte. Wherefore we say very improperly, that we may do those things whiche be not of might, but of infirmity. To be able, to be weary, hungry, a thirst, sicke, die, &c. is not properly to be able, but rather vnable. And therefore we say when we be in that case: I can no more: and I am able to go no further. So that whereas they doe inferre, If God can not do this, he is not Omnipotent and Almighty, wee must turne it the other way, and say: If God may suffer this, hee is not Almighty.

Maye.

V Whether that God can walke and talke.

They argue: God can not walke and talke as a man can: Ergo, he is not Almyghty. The Maister of the Sentences dothe well answere it: that the might is not straunge vnto God, whiche is of him, albeit hee doe not vse it in himself. To walke and to talke, commeth of no other but of God: so that he dothe walke and talke in manne, and wee say further: That it is not to bee taken for vnablenesse, not to doe the same, whiche is contrary to the propertie of euery mans nature. Lyke as we doe not say, that a manne is vnable, bycause he dothe not flie in the Ayre lyke as byrdes doe, seyng that it dothe not belong to the nature of a man to flie. So wee must not make an vnablenesse in God, bycause hee doth not these things, whiche agreeth not vnto his nature, but dothe belong to the nature eyther of man or beastes.

That God can not lye is not to be taken for vnabilitie.

Wee do answere in lyke maner also vnto theyr question, howe God is Almighty, if hee can not lye, sinne, and doe wickedly, whiche man that is muche feebler than hee, can doe. It is contrary vnto the nature of God, to lye, to sinne, and to doe wickedly. The lyer can lye, the sinner can sin, and the wicked person can doe wickedly, but GOD is neyther lyer, sinner, nor wicked, but truthe, and righteousnesse it selfe, so that he can not lye, sinne, nor do wickedly. It can not be founde as an inhablenesse in the sunne, that it maketh not a man colde, whereas it is not his nature so to do, but quyte contrary: and howe can it derogate any thing of the mighte of God, that he can not doe those things, whiche if he coulde, hee should goe from his diuine nature, and declare himselfe to be vnable, and nothyng lesse than true God. Not to be able to sinne, is the token of perfection, and not of imperfection, and of an incorrupt nature. What is it to sinne elles, but to fall from the rightnesse of Justice: but to fall, is rather an vnablenesse than an ablenesse. He whiche sinneth is ouercome, and dothe not ouercome: to be ouercome is not of ablenesse, but of vnablenesse; but when one can not be ouercome, it is of might and ablenesse. He that dothe sinne, is the slaue of sinne, to be a slaue, is farre from mighte and ablenesse. Who is so madde to say, that the Adamant stone is weaker than any apple, bycause the Adamant can not putrefie, whiche is the easiest matter in the world, for an apple to do: Sinne is the lyke vnto man that rottennesse is vnto an apple. Wherefore Augustine sayth aright, that it is a great might of God that he can not lye.

To vndoe that which is done.

To theyr question, whether that God can make that the same which is done, be not done: and in case that can not be, how should he be almighty: Wee doe answere: He can not, and yet for all that he is Almighty. That hee can not. Aristotell also knew whereas he sayde. It is not possible that the same should not be done whiche is done. And therefore Agathon sayd aright, that this only lacketh in God, to make that not done whiche is done. But wee muste better notify an Ethnicke. In this matter we say simply in this sorte, to search into the Almightinesse of God, is of no lesse irreligious and wicked, but it is the most abhominable, whe there things be sought there of whiche be eyther nee necessary, or ought not to be, neyther can be and as for this question it is one of them, that is neyther necessary, neyther that ought not, can be done.

Not farte.

For why were it necessary for God, to make that not done, whiche is done, seyng he is of that mighte, that nothing can be done, neyther in Heauen, nor in Earth without his knowledge: neyther hath any thing euer bene done, neyther shalbe, neyther is done, but that he coulde haue letted it from doing, if he had would. Therefore this kinde of might were superfluous in God, and is more meeter to be attributed to them, without whose knowledge innumerable things be wrought: yea whiche doe many things themselues, whiche afterwardes they doe wishe had neuer bene done: and against whose willes there be many matters done, which they woulde haue hindered if they had bene able. In deede this power mighte by some reason be in them. Whereby things done mighte bee made vndone, but not so in GOD. Wherefore it were altogither superfluous in him.

Vnl

Secondly: whatsoeuer hath bene done or is done, eyther it is good or euill. If it be good, it ought not to be made vndone, if it be euill it ought in like case not to be vndone. For the reason of Iustice, whiche ought to punishe the wicked, dothe not beare that the synne shoulde be made vndone, whiche is naughtily done, and subiecte vnto iudgement. Nor the glory of Gods mercy whiche pardoneth them that haue done euill could away with this, that the euill which is done shoulde be made vndone. If the adulterie of the adultresse woman, might haue bene made vndone, there shoulde haue no place bene left for the mercy and grace of Christe. If the euill things whiche be done in the worlde, might be made not done, there shoulde be no occasion of the last iudgement. Wherfore this kind of might were not conuenient for God. For it were not conuenient for him to doe that whiche ought not to be done. If the sinne of Adam might haue bene made not done, the whole purpose of that redemption of mankinde shoulde haue bene superfluous.

Iohn. 8.

Agayne, to make that not done, which is not vndone, but done, what is it else, but to chaunge the truthe into a lie? For if a thing be done, it can not be made not done, without vntruth, but that is moste contrary vnto the true God.

Impossible.

Thirdly it is also impossible, that the same whiche is done, be made not done. For it dothe include contradiction. For done and not done be cõtrary one to another. To be done, and to be no more done, is not contrary. Wherefore it is not impossible that the same which is once done, be nomore so: but it is impossible, that a thyng once done, to be neuer done bycause of the contradiction that the one taketh away the other. Is a thyng done? Then it is not vndone. Is it vndone? Ergo, it is not done. Bycause of this contradiction it is absolutely impossible, that the same whiche is done be not done, and those things whiche be absolutely impossible, can not be: For if they might be, they were not impossible: I do meane of things absolutely impossible. Otherwise there be many thyngs impossible vnto men, whiche bee not impossible vnto God, according vnto that saying of Christe: That whiche is impossible with menne, is possible with God. Wee conclude therefore, that seyng this kinde of might of whiche this question renneth, (whether that he may make a thyng done, not done) is both superfluous in God, vnlawfull, and impossible: wee muste forbeare this question, leaste wee prouoke the wrath of God vpon vs, and be found worthy to feele the might of the angry Iudge.

Grose.

Whether he doth all whiche he can do.

Vnto that where they aske, whether that GOD can make any other thyng besides that whiche he maketh, whiche may bee eyther better or worse, or any otherwyse than as he dothe it, and omitte any thyng of that whiche hee dothe, and whether he can doe that alwayes which hee dyd sometymes? I aunswere: that vnlesse hee coulde doe thys, hee had not a free strength and power, but restrayned and lymited vnto that whiche he dothe. Our GOD in heauen, dothe whatsoeuer hee wyll, howe, as, and as often as hee will. There is herein no contradiction, nothyng that is impossible to the

Whether that God can do anything beeter, &c.

the Omnipotencie of God, nothing vniust.

Decams question, Whether it bee rather conuenient vnto God, not to bee able to doe that whiche is impossible, or to that whiche is impossible, not to be able to bee wrought by God, is some soyled. To be absolutely impossible, and not to bee able to be done by GOD, be correlatiues. For whatsoeuer can not bee done by God, is impossible to bee done: and on the other side whatsoeuer is absolutely impossible to bee done, can not be done by God. But among Correlatiues nothyng goeth before or behynde another. For as some as the one is, the other of necessitie muste be withall: but it is contrarywyse in Contradictories. But lette vs leaue this geare vnto Logicians.

This I haue thought good by the way to say of these questions, which I take no greate pleasure in. And for that also, whether that God doe all thyngs whiche hee can doe, and why hee dothe them not, it is easily aunswered. If hee shoulde doe all that hee can do, he should ouerthrow bothe Heauen and Earth, and all that is in them, within one minute, and chaunge them into diuers and sundry formes infinitely. But hee dothe it not bycause he will not. It is one thyng to be Almyghtie, and an other to be all doyng. Lyke as he is not all willyng (as I may terme it) so he is not all doyng. Let it suffise vs to the knowledge and glorifying of his Almightinesse, to say with the Prophete: Our God in heauen doth whatsoeuer he will doe.

Of the VVill of God.

THe very order of our matters whereof wee speake, seemeth to requyre, that after the place of Gods Omnipotencie, we muste sette the same whiche is of the Will of God. For we can not to any profite trauayle in the consideration of hys Omnipotencie, vnlesse we doe therewith way and vnderstande his Will.

And our meanyng is not to inquire & searche for the Will of God, further than the measure and reason conuenient for godly lyfe and our Saluation shall leade vs. To be vtterly ignoraunt, what the Will of God is, is for blynde men, & them whiche be of no religion: and to wade too farre into it, by reasonyng ouer-scrupulously and curiously, is for irreligious and curious Creatures, rather than for Godly disposed persons. As those questions bee of the Schoolemenne, howe there is will in God: And whether it be all one to hym to will, and to bee: that the will of God shoulde be hys substaunce: & whether he be that which he willeth? Lyke as it is not conuenient for a seruaunt to enter into the searchyng of those thynges whiche be moste secrete poyntes of his maisters will, and do not belong vnto his knowledge, but rather to marke withal the diligence he can, to knowe what his will is towardes hym, as of the maister vnto his seruaunt, and to apply himselfe wholly therevnto: so it is not our parte to searche the secretes of Gods will, whiche doth not belong vnto vs, but to proue and vnderstande what the wil of God is towards vs. Wherof the apostle speaketh, saying. That you may proue what thing that good and acceptable and perfecte will of God is. Let it suffise vs to knowe, that will is not in suche sorte in God as it is in a man, in whome will is a motion and affection of the minde, to let goe or to take to himselfe any thing without any compulsion, whiche can not be applyed to God, least we shoulde turne the qualitie of mans will vnto God. It is not required of vs to searche of Gods wil, what thing it is. But it is required of vs, that we vnderstande what it is, and that not generally towards all thynges, whiche hee created, and gouerneth, but towardes mankind, and specially towardes the electes, and faythfull in Christe hys sonne.

VVe not o curio fearc the v God.

Rom.12.

VVill is not in god, as it is in man.

That the vvill of God towardes vs, is to be considered twoo wayes.

Hovve the mayster of the sentences speaketh of Gods vvill.

THe Maister of the Sentences sayth, that the will of God in Scriptures is taken twoo wayes. Firste properly of that onely, perfect, immutable, and euerlastyng will, whiche is in hym, and is his essence. Secondly figuratiuely of his preceptes, prohibitions, purposes, permissions, and workes. In the firste way he taketh, that of Dauid. All whatsoeuer the Lorde woulde, he did, and that whiche the Apostle sayth. Who shall withstande hys will? And agayne to proue what the good and acceptable will of God is, To the later hee dothe apply the saying of the Psalme: Greate bee the workes of the Lorde and excellent vnto all his willes: this is his minde.

Rom.9.

Rom.12.

Psalm.110.

But our opinion is, that the wil of God towardes vs ought absolutely so to bee considered, that firste wee may vnderstande, howe, and what hee hath determined from euermore in hymselfe, concernyng our saluation. Secondly what hee would haue vs to doe, or eschew, and what maner of menne hee woulde haue vs to bee, or not to bee. For lyke as there is suche twoo willes in the Father towardes his sonne, so that he dothe firste will and wishe to haue him as well prouided for as is possible, and directeth all things vnto his commoditie: and secondly he loketh to haue from hym a harty minde, and disposition, puttyng all his truste in him, vsing himselfe reuerently, obediently, and honestly in all poyntes towards hym: So wee must also iudge of that will of GOD towardes vs. Firste, that hee willeth vs to be saued: Secondly in that, that he willeth and requireth that to bee done by vs whiche wee ought to doe. For the firste parte our Sauiour sayde in John. This is the will of him which sente mee, my Father, that I lose nothyng of that whiche hee hath geuen mee, but that I shall rayse it vp agayne at the laste day: and this is the will of my Father which sente me, that whosoeuer seeth the sonne, and beleeueth in him, hath euerlasting life, and will rayse him vp at the later day. And the Apostle saith.

Of the vvill of God towardes vs.

Later part.

Reg.4.

Esay.10.

Matth.7.

John.6.

The firste parte of Gods will towardes vs.

Differēce betwixt the vvill of God to be marked

For this is good, and acceptable before God our sauiour, who wil haue al men saued, and come to the knowledge of the truth. Also: Who predestined vs vnto the adoption of sonnes, by Iesus Christe, in hym according vnto the purpose of his will, vnto the glory of his grace. &c. To this will the Apostle dothe attribute that it is good and perfect. And according vnto some mens exposition, we may cal it grace, and good will. The Scholemen do call it the will of good liking, and they doe deuide it into two, the one going before, and the other following, as they do grace into a preuenting grace, and a following grace.

And to the second part of Goddes will towards vs, all those places do appertayne, in which he doth eyther commaund what we shoulde do, or forbidde what he will not haue vs to do, as the Apostle sayeth: This is the will of God, your sanctification, and as seruaunts of Christ doing the will of God. And agayne, That doing the will of God, you may carrie away the promise. And in Mathewe we reade: Not euery one that sayeth to me, Lord, Lord, shal enter into the kingdome of Heauen, but whosoeuer doth the will of my father, which is in Heauen. The Scholemen do call this part of Gods wil towards vs, the will of the token and signe. For that his preceptes and prohibitions be as certayne tokens, whereby he may be knowen.

And there is in this will of God towards vs, a difference, necessarily and diligently to be marked. For he doth not require all things of al men indifferently, but some generally of all, some particularly of euery man, according vnto the difference of mens persons, callings, and conditions. He dothe generallye of all men requyre faith, hope, charitie, godlye life, Obedience, patience in aduersitie, righteousnesse, equitie, and mercy towards our neyghbours. &c. He will haue vs to credite his promises and to depend vpon them in assured hope, and patience. He will haue vs all generally to obey hys commaundementes, and feare him. But particularly he requireth sundry things of sundry men: one thing of the subiects, and another of the Magistrates: one thing of the faithfull people, and another of the Ministers: one thing of Maisters, and an other of seruaunts: one thing of parentes, and an other of the children: one thing of the vnmarried, and an nother of the married: one thing of the poore, and an nother of the riche: Euerye person and degree hathe his order, wherein it ought to obey the will of God, and according vnto the whiche each man is iudged to be obediente, or disobediente vnto him. Therefore euerye man muste haue a regard that he yelde hys due and bounden obedience to the wyll of God. Firste with all godly persons generally, and secondly particularly, in such speciall poyntes, as do belong vnto hym.

II. That the vvill of God is the foundation of Faithe, godly life and of oure Saluation.

WHereas Christe sayth in John. If you dwell in my worde, you shall know the truth, and the truthe shall deliuer you. And the Apostle sayeth, whiche willeth all men to bée saued, and to come to the knowlege of the truth. It séemeth no doubt the foundation of oure saluation, is in the truth of Gods woorde. But if wée looke déeper into this matter, we shal finde that the firste cause thereof ought to be ascribed vnto the will of God, accoyding vnto the purpose whereof he chose vs in Christ for euermore, and predestined vs vnto saluation, as it is plainely set forthe by the Apostle, where he saith. Who predestined vs to adopt vs to bée his children in himselfe by Jesus Christ, accoyding vnto the good lyking of hys will. And vpon this good lyking of hys will, is grounded his election, predestination, adoption, and as manye promises as there bée of his, all which his will goeth before, in some certayne degrée. For he would not haue vs to be saued bycause he chose vs, and predestined vs: but he chose vs and predestined vs bycause hée would saue vs. And the truth is referred to the woorde of the promises, before which his will goeth. What can be saide more certaine, and sure, than that we ought to ascribe to the mercy of God, that we be saued. So as the Apostle witnesseth saying, he hath mercy vpon whome he will, so that mercy then is of his will.

Ephes. 1. Election. Mercy altogither.

As concerning Faith, in déede the obiecte, and grounde thereof is the woorde of the promise, whereunto we do loke in our beléeuing. And like as that eternall will, whiche is willing to saue vs, is the fountayne of all promises, so it is also the foundation of our Faithe. For we doe in this respect, credit the woord, for that it doth testifie of ỹ wil of God towards vs. Faith.

In déede we do ground our selues also vpon the Omnipotency of God, so as we noted in the place before. But yet vnlesse we be assured of his will, we can not thereby be certifyed of our fayth, by that, that God is Almighty. But when we be assured of his will, then there is lefte no cause to doubt of his might. The Papistes do argue in the matter of the Lords supper, of the Omnipotencie of God, to proue that the substance of bread and wine, may be turned into the bodye and bloud of Christ: and some of oure brethren do holde, that the body of Christ may be corporallye presente not onely in the bread, but also euerye where, bycause of the incomprehensible and infinite Omnipotencie of Gods Maiestie. We do simplye and humbly in this matter also, séeke for the will of God: Let it bé proued that the Lorde willeth so to chaunge the bread into his bodye, or that he includeth his bodye in a corporall presence, within the breade, when there is certificate of thys hys will, then there shall bée no more ado. For we knowe that all whatsoeuer he willeth is possible. But when there is no certainetie of his will, all this arguing vpon his Omnipotency is to no purpose, and too weake for vs to build our faithe vpon. For the will followeth not the Omnipotencie, but the Omnipotencie followeth the will, mighte, and power, is minister to the will, and not the will to the mighte. Whatsoeuer he willeth he may, but not whatsoeuer he may, he will doe immediately.

Omnipotencie. They dispute the Omnipotency of God in the Lordes supper. The Omnipotency is minister to the will of God. Godlines

As concerning godlye life, it leaneth vnto no other foundation neyther, but vpon that of Gods wil. To serue serue God is godlinesse. But the true seruice of God, is to be measured by the wyll of God: Whereof we noted before in the place of the true Seruice of GOD. To obey God is godlinesse. But the obedience is to be applyed vnto his Will, to the end it may be true and sincere, as we shall note God willing, when the place commeth.

III. VVhereby the vvill of God may be knowen.

The Apostle knowing that the minds of men be starke blynde withoute the assured knowledge of Goddes Will, and that it is not possible as long as they be in doubte thereof, to be in anye certaynetie of saluation, and true godlinesse, dothe aduise vs to vnderstande it. And it is not withoute cause that he dothe vse this saying: That you may proue and trie what is the wil of God. To proue and trye what is the will of God, is not to haue a lighte opinion thereof: but to fynde it, and to knowe it without doubt, by certaine experience and proofe. For whereas Sathan also transformed into an Angel of light, as he began to doe immediately at the first beginning of mankind, and his ministers transformed into the Apostles of Christ, and oure verye flesshe also to séeme godlye and deuoute, dothe counterfayte manye things thereof, seruing vnto oure destruction. We had néede specially to beware, that we do not vnaduisedly, beleue euery thing in colour and pretence thereof, but that we doe surelye trie the spirites, whether that they be of God, or no. Wherefore we must search wherby it may be tried, what is the will of God towards vs, that we giue no place in vs, to such opinions, as do reigne in the Poperie.

And in déede ther be diuers waies of this triall, if they were particularly viewed. But there maye be noted thrée more generall. For God dothe commonly declare his Wil vnto vs, eyther by woorde, signe, or dowing. Wherefore wée maye trye it in hys Woorde, Signes, and Doings.

Gods vv is to be knowen vvorde, signes, doings. The vvo

In the Woorde, there bée hys preceptes and prohibitions, hys promises, and hys threatnings, his comfortes, and his iudgements. When hée dothe commaunde what hée will haue vs to do, & forbiddeth that whiche he wold not haue vs to do, he doth surely instruct vs of his wil. So that the Prophet singeth aright: The lordes precepto is bright, giuing light to the eies. When he promiseth hys grace, saluation, and euerlasting lyfe to the godly & faithful, which do fear him & depend vpon hym with an vpright heart: and threateneth wrath & condemnation to the vngodly, & vnbeleuers, doth he not two wayes declare his will? Firste in vsing vs louingly, & secondlye requiring vs agayne to behaue our selues vprightly in all things. And this is the scope and pricke of the whole Gospell, wherein the onely begotten of God doth certifie & assure vs of the wyll of God towardes mankinde. There be comfortes in the worlde whereby the heartes of synners, of the weake, of ỹ afflicted, & wailing be pluckt vp. They do testifye of the good will of God, when hée offereth hys ayde readye and at hande vnto all the afflicted. There be in the word also set forth forth the iudgementes of God, wherby he dothe punishe the wicked, the examples of whiche passed before in the flodde, in the fyre of Sodome, in the redde Sea, and the other like. By them a man may perceiue also, what the will of God is towards the wicked and reprobate.

Signes.

The signes which do witnesse of Gods will, be the Sacraments instituted and deliuered to vs by our Sauiour Christe: as Baptisme, and the Lords supper. By Baptisme we bee assured that hee will take vs for hys people, consecrate, and consigned vp vnto his name, and that he wil wash away the filth of oure sinnes, and iustify and sanctify vs by the bloude of Christ. By the sacrament of ỹ Lords supper we be assured that we bee of them, that be redeemed, when that he will haue vs to be mindful of ỹ death of his only begotten, by whyche wee be redemed, and for so vncomparable grace and fauor of his, he willeth vs to offer vnto hym a Sacrifice of praise. In that we doe call these two Sacraments, signes of grace, we doe not esteeme, and iudge them to bee voyde and bare Signes, but assured testimonies of Gods grace towards vs, witnessing of the good liking of his will towards vs. What farther is to be obserued of these Sacramentes, we haue noted in a seuerall place where we spake of thē before.

There be other signes also besides these, by whiche we be enformed of Gods will, as the raynebow whiche apeareth in the Cloudes, by the shewing of whiche we bee admonished, that God will no more ouerwhelme all the countenaunce of the earthe with a flodde of waters. And also there bee those terrible sightes of whiche the Lorde did tell vs before, that there shoulde be tignes in the Sunne, Mone, and Starres. For what doe they else but warne vs of the will of Gods wrath, and call vs vnto amendimēt of life, by the threatnings of his horrible plages. It is a cleere case also that the doings of God doe declare what his will is towardes vs, either angry, or well lyking and pleased, and it is not possible to recount them, for as much as of them, there is neyther number, measure, nor ende. For who is able to recken vppe particularly the benefites of his creation, multiplication, propagation, gouernance, ordering, deliuering, preseruation and other comfortes, by whych all he hathe declared, doth declare, and will declare his louing kindnesse towardes man, vntill the very ende of the worlde? yea whereas he dothe chasten them that do offende, with the rod of Discipline, what dothe he else but take care of vs that for impenitence, or lacke of repentance, we be not damned with thys worlde. In all these matters, the good pleasure of his wil is declared. But that is the most excellent, and the chiefest lesson, of hys will towardes vs, that he spared not his sonne, but gaue hym for vs all. Whereby we may be most assured and out of all doubt, that God is on our side.

The doings of God.

Doth he not declare in the giuing of lawes, of iudgemente, and iustice vnto his people, whereby they bee taughte, howe to behaue themselues towardes him, and towarde theyr neighboures, what care he hathe of them, whose God he doth vouchsafe to be, and also howe he woulde haue them to liue.

2. Cor. 11. Hebr. 12.

In sending his Prophets, his only begotten, his Apostles, Euangelists, Pastors, & Doctors, throughout all the worlde, to call all sortes of men vnto repentaunce, faith, and godlye lyfe, surely he sheweth his good will vnto mankynd. In dede these points be generall, but yet of that kind, that they may be lessons not only vnto al men generally, but also vnto euerye one man particularly, what wil God hath towards euery one, whatsoeuer he be, and that so muche the more assuredly bycause his wordes, Signes and Doings, be most farre from all coloure, counterfayting and lying. For he is not a dissembler like men. But in all poyntes, of all most true. A man may wel doubt of the wordes, signes, and doyngs of men. For there is no certaintie in them for the most parte, whereby men may be assured of their will: For as muche as the hearte of man is wicked, as the Prophet doth testifie, and vnsearcheable, so that it can not be knowen. But the wordes, Signes, and Doings of him be after another sort, who onely deserueth the commendation of incorrupted truth.

We haue taught to vnderstande.

Yet for al that you must take this withall, that albeit the wordes, Signes, and Doings of God bee so manifest, and true, that it maye bee certaynely tryed and vnderstanded, what hys wyll is towards vs: Yet for all that we be of that corrupte, and blinded disposition, that wee can not vnderstand it thereby vnlesse our minde, and hearte be renued by the vertue of his spirit. Wherefore the Apostle when he should say, that you may proue what is the good, acceptable and perfect will of God, bee set before: And applye not youre selues vnto the fashion of this worlde, but be transformed by the renuing of your minde: and then he added, that you proue, &c. Wherefore it is not so great a wonder that the wil of God, albeit it is set forth by most manifest proofes, yet for al that it is not knowē vnto the childre of this worlde, whose mindes be blinded, as it is no wonder ỹ the most bright shining Sunne, is not seene of blind eyes. The secret of the Lorde, sayeth the Prophete, is shewed vnto them whiche doe feare him: And Augustine, he that desyreth to know the will of God, let him become Gods friend.

What it is to doe the will of God.

Yf Dasmuch as Christ witnesseth that no man can enter into the kingdome of Heauen, vnlesse that he do not only know, but perfourme also the will of God. And therefore the Apostle dothe aduise vs, that as the seruantes of Christ we doe the wyll of God. We must see bycause of the simpler sort, what it is to do the will of God.

Matth. 7

Ephes 6

To vnd the wyll vnto G

First it is one thing to do or worke the will in God, and another to perfourme the will of God. To doe or worke the wyll in God, is to gyue him cause to wil. This is a common matter in the trade of vs men, that we be moued by wordes and dedes, to will that whiche we had no wyll vnto before. It may be demaunded whether that this hath place also in God. It seemeth to haue for as much as we do reade in Deuteronomy. If you heare the voice of the Lord God to do, and kepe all his commaundements, whiche I charge thee to doe this day, the Lord thy God shall aduance thee aboue all nations. &c. But if thou wilte not heare the voice of the Lord thy God. &c. All these curses shall come vppon thee. &c. And in Hieremie. If thys people repente from the euill, for the whiche I haue spoken agaynste them, I will also repent for the euill which I thought to doe, and straight way I will speake of the people and kingdome to build, and plante the same: but if they doe euill in myne eyes, so that they heare not my voice, I will repent mee of the good whiche I thought to do thē, this sayeth he. Whereby it appeareth, that vpon our disobedience, ther is dredde in God a wyll to reuenge and by oure obedience, a will to doe good. But if we should graunte this, we shoulde seeme to attribute vnto him alteration of wil, suche as is in men, whereas in deede we ought rather to iudge that his will is stedfast and firme, and not chaungeable. For it is written in Numeri. God is not as man is, that he can lye, nor as the sonne of man, that hee is chaunged. And in Malach. I am the Lorde, and am no chaungeling. But God forbidde, that suche alteration of wyll whiche is changed in men by lying, shuld be applyed vnto God. The wil of God is always one, fast and firme to do good vnto the godlye and obedient, and to punish the wicked and disobedient. But in case there be occasion to doe both in the selfesame parties, the blame of the alteration is not to be layde vnto God, who is not changed nor altered as man, but vnto them, whiche forsaking their holy intente, are changed vnto euill. The Scripture speaketh thus of God, after the custome and manner of men, which for al that he is most far from.

Deut. 28.

Hierem. 18.

The vvill of God is not chaungeable. Numer. 23.

Malach. 3.

To doe the will of God, is to doe those things which God hathe charged vs to do. For in this speach, Will is taken for that whiche he willeth and requireth of vs. And there is great reason why the Scriptur shuld speake in this sorte. For it dothe declare, that they doe truly kepe & perfourme the precepts of God, which do them, not slightly accoūding vnto the letter and outward shew: but so that they may satisfye the will of God: of which we must in all his speaking haue a speciall regard. Many do now adayes boast and crake of the worde of God, whereas for all that they do vnderstand neuer a deale of the true sense thereof, in whyche onely the will of God is comprised. The word and will oughte not to be separated one from an other. The worde consisteth not in the dead letter, but in the meaning of Gods will. There the worde of God is true and certayne, where hys will is certaine, and there is a moste poysoned deceipte and seducing, where as a straunge and ctrary meaning vnto Goddes wyll is brought in, vnder the letter of Gods worde. The Iewes did so sacrifice, that they would rather perfourme the letter of the lawe, than the wyll of God. They thought that he toke pleasure in oblations, and burnte offerings of beastes, and therfore they dyd kyll manye sacrifices vnto hym. Whereas his wil was to haue mercie, iudgemente, iustice, and true obedience,

To do vvill of God.

VVhe true f forme precep of God

The v and th vvill o God o not to afund bedience, and not sacrifice, as appeareth in the Psalme, in Esay, and in Hieremy. The Papistes in theyr Masling, do not the will of the Lord, though they do pretende it in saying, Do this: For they doe not this according vnto the meaning of ỹ lords will. Neyther doe they the Lordes will, whiche doe communicate of the bread and cuppe of the Lordes supper, to the intent by this doing to obteyne forgiuenesse of sinnes, for the Lorde did not saye: Do this for forgiuenesse of sinnes, but do this in remembrance of me. They doe not the will of the Lorde, whyche doe washe mens feete vppon Maundy Thursdaye, not to frame themselues vnto the mind of the Lords example, but to make a certaine shewe of humblenesse to the sighte of the lokers on. There bee a passing number of examples to proue that the most parte of Christian men now a dayes do so perfourme the preceptes of God, that for all ỹ they do not perfourme ỹ wyll of God: I speake not of them which doe measure the whole religion of Christe, welneere by the commaundements, and lessons of men.

Secondly, as concerning the word of working or doing, we muste not ascribe the accomplishment of Gods will vnto the outwarde fact, but rather to the purpose, and endeuor of the godly mind. He doth a thing truly in the sighte of God, whyche dothe that, that is to be done with minde, continuall meditation, and purpose, albeit that the outwarde facte doe not ensue. So that to doe the will of God, is so to obey his word, that we gine our selues with all our hearte, wyth continuall endeauor daye and night, to the fulfilling of his will. He that so dothe the will of God, doth it as knowing it. He doth it as making his choyce thereof, and chosing it, for it selfe sake, firmely, and immutably disposed vnto it.

How Iudas and the priests and Pylate did the vvil of God.

The Priests with Iudas, and Pilat did the wil of God, when they did crucifie Christ, but vnwares and vnwittingly. For they knewe not that it was so determined by God. Secondlye they did it not of purpose to perfourme Gods will, but vpon a further fetch. There be some also which doe the will of God of purpose and pretence: but not vnto this ende, that the will of God be done, but withall to do their owne affayres. Besydes this, it falleth out ofte times, that though a man doe the will of God wittingly and well, and godly disposed for the present, yet he may doe it vnconstantly, and vnstedsdyly, so that within a little while after hee maye be chaunged vpon a lighte occasion, and do cleane contrary. To doe the will of God after this fashion, is not to do it truly and rightly, whatsoeuer a man do in the outward worke:

VVhether that the vvill of God be the cause of all.

VVhiche is the firste cause vvherof all is done.

It is a common saying, there is nothing done without a cause, therefore seeing that whatsoeuer hath bin done any where in Heauen and in Earthe, and whatsoeuer is now adayes also done, yea and what soeuer shall be done vntil the worldes ende, can not be done nor wroughte withoute some cause, it is necessary that there bee some firste and chiefe cause, whereby all things be done.

As for the secondary causes we will not meddle with them at this present, whiche be beyonde all number. The Philosophers trauelled in searching of the causes of all thynges that be done, but they knewe not verye perfectly that only cause wherevpon all standeth, bycause they lacked the true knowledge of him which made all. We do referre it vnto the wyll of God, according vnto the Scriptures, which do testifye, that God doth what soeuer hee wyll in Heauen and in earth. If it had saide whatsoeuer hee knewe or whatsoeuer he cā, the cause of all things should be referred vnto his wisedome or might. But in saying whatsoeuer he will, it is a cleere case, that his wyll is the firste, and chiefest cause of all thinges. Wherefore if you aske me, wherefore God made all those thinges, I may well answere you, bycause he would. If you aske me why he did make this, and not other thinges, why thus, and not otherwise: I maye answere a right, bycause he would make thys, and not other, and after this sorte, and not otherwise: If he would haue had made other, and otherwise, without doubt he had made other, and otherwise. Why is it not alwayes day: why not euer night: bycause hee woulde so, why is it not euer Sommer: why not Winter: Bycause he woulde so. Why haue wee now and then sorowe among: Why is not euer mirth and toy: bycause he would haue it so. Whatsoeuer doinges of God thou searche into, thou muste haue no other but that, so he would, so he did.

The wyll of God is the chiefest cause of all thinges.

And we doe saye, that the will of God is the cause not onely of those things whiche be immediately done by God, but of all these thinges also which be done, and wrought by those things, which he hath created. So he, is the cause not onely of oure soules, bodyes, and life, but of oure will, vnderstanding, purposes, affections, motions, and doings also. Augustine whereas he sayth: That the cause of all things which he did, is his wyll: speaketh in deede handsomely to the matter, whiche hee handleth in that place. But not so sufficientlye vnto this matter, whereof we do speake, as he dothe in an other place, where he sayth more fully in this wise: The will of God is the firste, and chiefe cause of all bodily figures and motions, for there is nothing visibly and sensibly done, which is not commanded or suffered from the inwards, inuisible, and intelligible courte of the most high Emperoure, according vnto the vnspeakeable iustice, of the rewards, and punishments, thankes, recompences in this most wide and large common wealthe of all creatures. This saith he, which if it shuld be examined after the subtilities of the Scholemen, it should be wonderfully wrested, albeit it is so true, that it can not be denyed.

The will of God is the cause of thinges which be done by his creatures.

Augustine In Psal. 134.

Some idle persons which do lesse esteeme those things that bee manifest, and may profitably be obserued, than those things which may contēt their curiositie, are not satisfied with this sentence that we saye, that the will of God is the firste and chiefe cause of all those things whiche haue bin done, be nowe done, and shall bee done: and do demand, Whether that the euill thinges be also done by the will of God. If you say they be: then they they conclude. Ergo God is the author of euill: if ye say no, they reply: Ergo hee is not Almyghtye, if he will that euill bee not done, and that yet it be done agaynst hys will. For lyke as it perteyneth vnto the Omnipotencye of God, to doe whatsoeuer hee will, so doth that also that he should let & stoppe whatsoeuer he willeth not to bee done, that it may not be done. We woulde haue Godlye myndes to forbeare this question: For wee ought to giue absolutly this liberty and iustice of will vnto the almighty and most iust God, to will, and to do nothing, yea and that he can doe nothing that is euill. For how should the inestimable goodnes of gods nature, loue, will, or do any euill? Moreouer that he can not be an occasion of euil neither to any body. For how can he be the occasion to others, either to doe, eyther to wil those things, frō which he for his goodnes and iustice doth alwaies refraine. This I say, it behoueth vs to iudge absolutely of the will of God. And as touching euill thinges we be out of doubt, that none of them coulde be done, if God in all respectes would haue them not done, but why hee will not, that no euill be done by any which if he would not haue done, surely could not be done, for that we may not searche, least we prouoke his will vpon vs, which could by his might destroy from the whole earth, both euill thinges, and euill men in one minute of an houre.

Augustine de verbis Esaiæ.

And here I doe not mislike, that some menne doe alleage the place of Augustine, for this question out of his Enchiridiō in this wise. Neither is it to be doubted of, but that god doth well also in suffering of things to be euill done, for he doth not suffer this, but vpon iust iudgement: and of a truth all thyng is good that is iust. Therefore albeit that those things which be euyll, in as much as they be euill, they be not good: yet for all that, in that they not onely be, but also be euill, it is good. For vnles that this were good, that they also should be euyll, they should in no wise be suffred to be done by the almighty god, vnto whom no doubt it is as easy, not to suffer that which he willeth not, as it is easy to doe that which hee willeth, vnlesse we doe beleeue this the very beginning of the confession of our fayth is in daunger, whereas we dos confesse that we doe beleeue in God the father almightye: For he is not vpon any other cause truely called Almyghty, but bycause he is able to do what he wil. And that the effect of thys almighty will is not let nor staide by the wyll of any creature, this sayth Augustine.

Enchiridio ca. 96

¶ Whether that we may seeke the cause of Gods will.

NOt onely the auncient fathers, but the Schole diuines also which folowed them, do worthely thinke it meete to restrayne our rathe heades, in that wee presume to searche into the wyll of GOD: why hee doth that which hee will doe: For as muche as they doe all holde, that wee ought not to searche the cause of Gods will, whiche is the cause of all things. Of this matter Augustyne wryteth in this wise. They doe searche to know the causes of gods will, Whereas the will of God is it selfe the cause of all thinges. For if the will of God hath any cause, then there is some thing going before the will of God: which is unlawfull to beleue. Therefore when any man sayth, why dyd god make heauen and earth? he must be answered, bicause he would, for ỳ will of God is ỳ cause of heauen & earth, and therfore the will of God is greater than heaue and earth. But he that will say, why woulde God make heauen and earth, he searcheth a greater matter than the will of God is, and there can no greater matter be founde. Therefore let the rashnesse of man stay it selfe, and not search that which is not, least it finde not that which is. This saith he: Wherupon the mayster of the Sentences gathered, that the cause of gods will, ought not to be enquired vppon. Fyrst bicause that there is nothing before it. For as much as it is euerlasting. Secondly bycause there was nothing greater than it. Thirdly, for that, that seing there is no cause thereof, that should in vaine be sought for, which is not.

That we may not aske the cause of gods wil.

Degen contra Manicheos. li.

It is one thing to searche the causes of gods wil, and another to saye that there be no causes of his will.

Of this matter I will saye my opinion what I thinke is the right, without the preiudice of others. I lyke very well that they saye, that the cause of gods will oughte not to be searched, and that they doe call it the rashnesse of men, if it be done. But hereupon may ryse some controuersy, in that they say, there is no cause of Gods will: It is one thing to say, ỳ wee ought not to search vpon the will of god, for what cause he willeth that which he willeth, and an other to saye that there is no cause vnto God why he wylleth that whiche he willeth and worketh. We may not search why God wyll doe that which he doth, but reuerently rest vs thereuppon when wee vnderstande that he will so doe that which he doth. But yet in the meane season it foloweth not, that there be no causes of will in God. It is not lawfull for a Seruaunt to search why his Mayster wyll doe many thinges which he doth, the causes whereof he knoweth not: But it is mete for him to thinke that there be causes inough why he willeth and doth them. We must think in like māner of god also, yea more largelier than of man, not to say that god hath no cause why he willeth this, and after that sorte: But rather this: Thus he willeth and this he doth, why he willeth so I beleue it is not without reason. He himselfe knoweth the causes: it is not for vs to enquire vpon them.

The will of God not without reason.

And that the will of GOD is not without reason and some assured causes, it may be proued by manye places of the holy Scripture.

Genes.

1 Fyrst when he would destroy all flesh in the daies of Noah by the floude, wee can not saye, that he would doe it without cause. For we doe reade expressly in Genesis, that the Lorde dyd dysclose hys will, and the cause of his wyl vnto

Noah, saying: The ende of all flesh commeth before mee, bicause the earth is fylled with wickednesse in their owne sight or countenaunce, and I will destroy them with the earth. So that the will of God was to destroye all flesh from the earth, and the cause of thys wyll was, bycause that the earth was filled with the wickednesse of men.

2 When he would destroy the Cities of the Sodomites with fire cast from heauen, did not ỳ Angell declare the cause of his wyll vnto Abraham saying: The crye of Sodome and Gomore is multiplyed in my sight, and their sinne is aggrauate to sore.

3 The Apostle sayth, he did shut vp all vnder sinne: surely bycause he woulde, and he expresseth the cause of thys will when he addeth: that he might haue mercy vppon all. Therefore he had a cause why to doe this, he would ley the children of Leuy, and the scripture doth plainely ynough expresse the cause thereof in that place.

4 He woulde deliuer his sonne into the handes of sinners to bee crucified. Wonde he this without cause? Doth not Christ himselfe say in Iohn: So God loued the worlde, that he gaue his onely begotten sonne, that euery man that beleeueth in him, shoulde not perish but haue life euerlasting? So that the efficient cause of this will is loue, and the fynall cause, the saluation of the faithfull.

So that I suppose if men list to marke a number of like matters in the Scriptures, it shall appeare well inough that there is no wyll in god without cause. When an euill person willeth that which is euil, is not the first cause of this wil bicause he is euill: so to bee good is the cause of a good will. Euery man willeth those thinges which be agreeable vnto his disposition: such as the party is, such thinges he willeth, such things he delighteth in and careth for. What we say that god is otherwise affected, but that he willeth good things, bicause that he is good, iust thinges bicause he is iust, mercy rather than sacrifice, bicause he is kinde and mercifull. Is it not former in degree to be such, than to will such? But in this our noting we prescribe not, neither giue rules to any man: Peraduenture some finer heades may finde some what to obiect vnto vs, which we will not be miscontented withall, if they can maynteine it with the truth. For I would not derogate any thing from anye truth, specially in that poynt wherof I do now speake. And whereas Augustine sayth. There is nothing former, nothing greater, than the wyll of god, it may seeme likely if we vnderstand it of those thinges, which be without god, but not so, if it be spoken absolutely, and generally. And whereas he sayth that there is no cause of the will of god, we may worthily take it to be a matter doubtfull and disputable.

To doe good, goeth before to will good.

Whether that the will of God may be hindered or letted.

Gods will can not be letted.

WE saye at a worde, that Gods will cannot be letted by any. All my will sayth he, shall be done, and the Prophet: Our GOD in Heauen, what so euer he would he doth. This is requisite vnto hys Omnypotency. For howe coulde his will be Omnipotent, if it could be letted by any.

Occam maketh a difference, betwirte the will of good lykyng, and the will of signe or token. Agayne, hee deuideth the wyll of good lykinge, into the will goinge before, and the will commynge after: He graunteth that the will going before, and the wyll of signe may be letted. And so he reasoneth after the manner of the Schole doctors. But the Maister of the Sentences doth handle this matter out of Augustine playnely. Hee bringeth to the contrary two places of Scripture. One out of the wordes of Christ, where he sayth in Mathewe, Hierusalem, Hierusalem which killest Prophetes, and doest stone them which be sent vnto thee, how oft woulde I gather together thy children, as the Hen clocketh hir chickens vnder hir winges, and thou wouldest not: And an other out of the wordes of the Apostle. Where he sayth. Who will haue all men to be saued, and to come vnto the knowe-ledge of the truth. Wherevnto wee may adde that of ỳ Prophet, I will not the death of a sinner, but that he be conuerted, and liue. Upon the wordes of Christ, they do inferre: Lo hee would haue gathered the children of the Iewes together, but he could not, bicause they would not. Ergo, by the refusall of the Iewes, the wil of god was letted. But that which they do inferre is wyde frō Christes wordes, for he doth not say. And I could not, or thou didst let me of my will: But and thou wouldst not, that is to say: ¶ thou didst withstande it, thou speakest against it, thou didst refuse it. Hierusalem, saith Augustine, would not haue hir children gathered by him, and yet whether she would or no, hs gathered such of hir children as he would. For both in Heauen and in Earth hs did not will and do some thinges, and will some things and not doe them. But whatsoeuer he would, he did. Wherefore it can not be gathered vppon this place, that the Almighty will of GOD may be letted by mans malyce, and contradiction. He dyd gather, and doth also in these dayes gather his children, which he hath dispersed about the worlde, elected and predestinated vnto saluation, not onely maugre the hartes of the wicked, the children of this world, but of the very hel gates also. Moreouer it is not concluded aright, neither vpon the wordes of the Apostle, that the will of GOD is letted, for that that all men be not saued, wheras for al that he would haue all saued. This proceedeth vpon a false exposition, besides the Apostles meaning.

The mi-ster of the sentences.

Math. 23.

1. Tim. 2.

Augustine.

1. Tim. 2. who will haue all men to be saued.

He doth aduise all the faithfull to pray, not onely for their felowes of fayth, but also for their aduersaries, and for the Magistrates which did stande against the Doctrine. To perswade them to doe this, he added that it was good and acceptable

acceptable in the sight of GOD, which woulde haue all men to bee saued, and to come vnto the knowledge of the truthe: Which is nothinge els to say, but who excludeth no kinde of men from the entry vnto saluation, so that they refuse not the knowledge of ỳ truth. So that pace also, And to come vnto the knowledge of the truth, is added for a condition, to the intente we should not thinke ỳ God would saue all without difference, as them also which do refuse the truth, he sent his gospell the messenger of saluation into the worlde, to be set forth generally vnto all, but vpon that condition, that they onely bee saued which do beleeue, and the vnbeleuers to be condemned, according vnto the saying of our Sauiour himselfe. And according vnto this saying of our Lord, ỳ wordes of the Apostle must be vnderstanded, as spoken vpon this condition, to declare that the Lorde had determined to put off no man from the saluation gotten by Christ, that would not refuse the knowledge of the truth. So that by this condition, the vnbeleuers bee shutte off, whom he will not saue, but condemne. Wherefore these wordes of the Apostle ought not to be alleaged in patchemeale, but whole with the condition endorced. If any man will inferre, God will haue all men to be saued, but all be not saued, Ergo, that is not done which God willeth, and so his will is not Almighty. Charge him againe in this sorte: Indeede he willeth all men to be saued, but vnder this condition, if they refuse not the trueth. Els if you take the wordes of the Apostle without this condition, it foloweth that the saying of our Sauiour, where he sayth: He that beleeueth not, shall be condemned, shoulde be false, and contrary vnto the will of GOD. Moreouer to be shorte, it may be better alleaged, that no man shoulde perishe, but that all shoulde bee saued, rather than that GOD is not Almighty. For asmuch as we must for a certentie beleeue that GOD is so Almighty, that he omitteth none of these thinges which in his wyll he hath determined to do, as if he hath determined to saue al men, none except, it must be necessary, ỳ all shal be saued, as the Originistes dyd sometymes mayntaine, and in our dayes it is sayde one Denkius, dyd teache.

But in case this exposition lyke you not, bycause that the Apostle doth not say. If they come vnto the knowledge of the truth, but And to come vnto the knowledge of the truth, you may folowe the exposition of Augustine: I meane that which he putteth in his Enchiridien, sayinge in this wise. Or els truely it was sayde in thys sorte: Who will all men to be saued, not so that there was no man, whom he woulde not haue saued, which woulde not do his vertues of myracles amonge them, which hee sayth, woulde haue done penaūce if he had, but that we vnderstand by all men, all kinde of men, deuided in differēces of estates and degrees, kinges and priuate persons noble and base, highe and lowe, learned and vnlearned, weake and whole in bodye, wilty, and slowe harted, the folyshe, rish,

Augustinus in Enchiridion. cap. 103

Fren. and

and poze, men and women, infantes and shildren, &c. Young and olde, in all thinges, in all behauour, in all Artes, in all professions, being innumerable, in varietie of consciences and wylles, & whatsoeuer other difference there is amongest men. For what is there of them all, out of which GOD woulde not haue some to be saued, throughout all nations, by his onely begotten our Lorde, and doth it because the Almyghty can not in vayne will any thing, that he willeth. For the Apostle hadde commaunded, that there shoulde be prayer for all men, and hee added specially for kinges, and such as were in high estate, which might seeme to mislyke with the baseneese of the Christian faith, for worldly arrogancie and pryde. Therefore hee sayde. For this is good before GOD our Sauiour, that is to say, that there bee prayer made for such: and immediately to take away desperation he added, which will haue all men to be saued and to come vnto the knowledge of the truth. For this the Lorde thought good, that hee would vouchsafe through the prayers of the baser sorte, to performe the saluation of the higher sorte: which now we do se accomplished. This maner of speach the Lorde vsed also in his Gospell, where he sayde vnto the Pharisies, you do tythe Minte and Rewe, and euery pot herbe, for the Pharisies did not tyth all pott herbes, which were not their owne, nor of all straungers which dwell in other landes, therefore as hee doth here call euery pott herbe all kinde of potte herbes, so in the other place also wee do vnderstande all kynde of men, or which way els soeuer it may be vnderstanded, & yet so that we be not driuen to beleue, that the Almighty GOD would haue anye thinge done which was not done, which without any more adoe, both in heauen and in earth, as the truth singeth: Whatsoeuer he woulde y he dyd, & for a truth whatsoeuer he woulde not do, that he did not: Thus saith Augustine. As concerning the place of Ezechiell which we do reade in this wise. Say vnto them I liue, sayth the Lorde of gouernaunce. If I take pleasure in the death of the wicked, and not rather that the wicked returne from his waye, and lyue, Turne, turne, from your euill wayes, and why shall you die you house of Israell: there is nothing in this to derogate any whit from the Almightie wyll of GOD, for hee doth not saye, that hee willeth not that the impenitent wicked shoulde dye, but he affirmeth absolutely, that hee taketh no pleasure in his death, but in hys conuersion. In the meane season he willeth not that y wicked should lyue in case hee do continewe in his wickednesse, but he will destroye him in iust iudgement. And this hee hath done, doth, and will do still, but generally at the daie of iudgement. Wherefore we do conclude that the will of GOD is so firme and fast, that it can in no wise be letted. Whatsoeuer is colorably obiected to the contrary out of the scriptures, not wel vnderstanded.

(:)

Luc. 11.

¶ Of the truth of GOD.

Forasmuch as the truth is the foundation of al thinges that be, and of al things which ought to be beleued, knowen, sayde, and done, without whiche nothing can be, nor remayne. I thincke it not vnmeete after that which we haue spoken of the Nature, Sufficiencie, Omnipotencie & Wyll of God, to speake somwhat also of hys Truth. For in thys the whole certentie and clearnesse of our Fayth doth consist, whereby it is clered from all slaūder of falsehode, and sundered from all other arbitrary, & counterfaite religions.

But our meaning is not absolutely to speake of Truth, whereof men which hath leasure and wit at wyll, may haue a large fielde and scope to speake off. But I entend to stand vpō y tearme of Gods truth: not that it can be perfectly conceiued by the capacitie or vnderstanding of man, whereas it doth infinitely passe and goe beyonde all our vnderstanding: but because the knowledge thereof is very necessary vnto our saluation. Neither is it my mynde to enter into that schole disputations, whereas they do discourse & dispute of the theologicall truthes natural & supernatural, more scrupulously than is meete for the simple searching out of the plaine truth.

What is the difference of the truth of God & that of Creatures.

In case that the truth were all one and a lyke in God and in thinges created, then wee shoulde nede no distinction. But it is not all one. Wherefore before that wee do speake of the truthe of God, it is necessary y we distinct it fro al other truth by a conuenient differēce. And it is no matter, seing that al truths do agree. Neither is there nothing els ment by this sayinge but that the agreementes of truthes is such, which is, that ther is no one truth contrary vnto an other truth. For that agreement doth not take away the difference of truth, but hath the more made of it. Neither can there be anye constaunce or agreement but of sundry thinges as it were of certaine sundry voyces.

All truthes do agree.

How the truthe of God differeth from the truth of creatures.

1 Therefore the truth of God doth differ from the truth of creatures, and in the difference doth farre excell it. First in that, that the truth of creatures is not of it selfe, but from an other and the truth of God is first, and not proceeding of any other, but is in God without beginning.

2 Secondly, in that, that it is not onely first, but highest also, as much exceeding it, as a matter vncreated excelleth these thinges whiche be created of it. It is the highest, and therfore al the truth of all creatures doth depende therupon, from whence it doth hath hir beginning, and in which onely it doth consist.

3 Thirdly, in that also y it is euerlastinge and vnalterable, whereas the truth of creatures is but for a time, and chaungeable, yea and doth also alter and decaye often times, for it can not be otherwyse but that in a thing mutable & whych is but for a time, the truth should be mutable also and stand but for a time: like as in that which is immutable and euerlasting, the truth cannot be mutable and for a season, for as euery truth is the truth of some true thing, so eyther it abideth in that true thing, or decaieth with the same.

Therfore seeing that the truth of God, is chiefest of all others, highest, euerlasting and immutable, is it not meete that the consideration therof should be recompted of al men to be chiefest also, highest and continual, for as much as also ỳ truth which we haue, commeth of it and by it, and that we abide for euer more in no any truth but in it. Surely it is meete that in all thinges wee seeke and folowe the truth, and flye from all falshood: but we must doe it so, that we doe in all things most esteeme the first highest and euerlasting truthes, without which we cannot attaine vnto the true saluation, as for an example: In true wedlock ther is a truth, wherin maried folke ought to kepe & continue vnto their liues ende, and as long as ỳ lawes of wedlocke doe continue. But in case it so fall out that either the same or the truth of God must bee forsaken, which happeneth often times in persecutions suffred for religion sake, truely it is the parte of a godly person that hath regard of his saluation, rather to forsake that truth which is secondary, baser and transitory, than that first hyghest and euerlasting, and so to forsake the truth of the temporarye wedlocke for the truth of Chryste. Whereof Chryste himselfe sayth thus, And euery one that forsaketh house, or brethrē, or sisters, or father or mother, or wife or children, or landes, for my name, shall receyue an hundred folde, and possesse euerlasting lyfe. For loke as in all cases the promise due, and that ought truely to be kept vnto man, is to be forsakē for the promise due vnto God, and which ought in continuall truth to be kepte towardes him: so for the highest, and chiefest truth of God, we must giue vp all inferiour and later truthes.

How many kindes of truth there be in God.

WE doe knowe that there is but one selfe same truth in GOD. Wherby he is true in him selfe, and in all. But for the exposition thereof our question is, howe many kindes there be thereof. For like as there be not in GOD many wills, but one and that euerlasting, yet for all that a man might not amisse say that ther be two, that is one of grace, & the other of wrath: so in my iudgement it shall not be out of the waye to saye, that the one selfe same truth of GOD is of foure kindes, that is to saye, of essense, qualitie, operation, and word.

That the is foure kindes of truth in God.

1 First we doe appoint the truth of essence in god, whereby he is the true existent, and true GOD. No essence is without truth. Take that from God, and hee shall be nothing more God, than the Gods of ỳ Gentiles, which therefore be not gods, because they lacke the truth of godly essence. A falshode maketh not true Gods, but false. But in God there is a truth of godly essence, in respect of which, false gods beeing reiected, all honour of Godhead is dew vnto the one God alone. This truth of God the Dyuell hath so darkened in all the nations of the whole worlde, that the true God was vnknowen, and in stede of hym false gods were serued. It is knowen howe the Athenians did set vp an altar vnto the vnknowen God, in the which doing they declared that they were destitute of the knowledge of the true GOD. Whereupon the Apostle toke an occasion to declare the truth of the one true God.

The truth of essence.

2 Secondly there is the truth of qualitie in God, whereby all those thinges be true which be reported of him in the holy scriptures. For there be some thyngs reported of his essence, other some of his person, and other some of his nature. Of his essence, that according vnto that, hee is one GOD, and that the same essence is not a compounde thing, but single and pure, without body, wythout place, incomprehensible, inuisible, immutable, indiuisible, vnspeakeable, perfect and euerlasting. These things doe belonge to the qualitie of gods essence.

Of the persons it is spoken, that one selfe same essence is dystincted by three persons, which the Scripture doth expresse by these three wordes, Iehouah, the worde and the Spirite: but Chryst dyd expresse it by the names of the Father, the sonne, and the holy Spirite. Whereuppon our faith doth holde, that God is one in essence, and three in person. The father, the Sonne, and the holy Spirite: the Father, vnbegottē, the Son onely egotten, the holye Spirite proceeding from both. Of the nature of God it is reported, that he is God, and that he is louing of man, that hee is kynde and mercifull, that he is faithfull, iust, patient, and slowe vnto anger, &c. All this qualitie of essence, persons, and nature, standeth stedfast and firme in God, in an euerlasting truth, which we doe call the truth of qualitie.

Truth of operation.

We doe attribute also a truth of operation vnto God And we meane not onely of the worke of creation, but generally also of al other work, of which Chryst made mention, saying, My father worketh yet to. God in al his working is voide of al dissembling, fayninge, and falsheade. His workes as well visible as inuisible be truth: For the truth of Gods workes, doth chiefly consist in that, that none of them is vaine & false. Whatsoeuer he doth, is the same in very deed which it appeareth to be, heauen in deede, cloudes in deede, the very sunne, moone starres, ayre, fyre, water, men, beastes, cattell, trees, &c. all true and in very deede. The workes of the Diuell be false, and haue in them no truth. He is a deceiuer and deludeth the mindes of men wyth vaine sightes.

2 Secondly, the truth of gods workes is found also in that, that like as he is of his owne nature, such be his workes also wythout any counterfayting. Doth he good vnto vs: he doth it truely without fayning. Hee doth not thewe one thing outwarde, and hide an other after the fashion of our flesh, which doth rather fayne most parte of things outwardly, thã do them truly from their hart.

The truth of the vvord.

+ Fourthly, there is also in God the truth of worde. And we meane by Gods worde all his promises, al lawes and ordinances, all threatninges, all comfortes, all oracles and prophesies, set forth either by Angels, either by menne. In respect hereof the Apostle sayeth, that God is true in his wordes, and every man a lyar. And the Prophet Dauid sayth, that the worde of the Lorde is like Syluer tried by the fyre, purged seuen folde.

Rom. 3.

The truth of the vvord incarnate.

In this matter the chiefe point is the truthe of the worde incarnate, which is the waye, the truthe and life vnto all them which were ordained before vnto life, as well before his incarnation as after, of which matter se our Commentaries vpon John.

Ioan. 14.

The truth of the light.

By this briefe diuisiõ we thought good to admonish the reader wherevnto hee ought to referre the truth in God, so that he may godly and profitably cõsider thereof, and therevnto direct and establyshe his faith. Where might herein bee manye thinges alleaged after the manner of the Schole men: but wee doe take these things to be sufficient vnto godly disposed persons which we haue noted, forasmuch as they be most certaine, simple, and necessarie and without all curiousnesse. And would God we would so assuredly sticke vnto this truth of God, that wee might not iudge in anye thing contrarie vnto the truthe of his essence, qualitie, working and worde. How happy were we if wee were so affected to be so agreable e all of one minde.

That it is very hard and for fewe to come vnto the knowledge of Gods Truth.

The truth of God is a light first most cleere of it self: secondly making ỹ mindes also of thẽ which do behold it, cleere and light: Wherfore seeing that it is a light, it is through our default, and not anye lacke thereof, that it is not seene. Blindnesse hath dimmed the eyes of mortall men, that they can not se ỹ light of Gods truth. For it fareth with them as it doth with such as be borne blinde, which albeit that they do heare a thousand times of the Sunne e of his lyght, yet for all that they can not vnderstande, what or how great the brightnesse therof is, how great a pleasantnesse and profite there is in his light, what his course is e daply returne vnto vs, no nor they wote not how many things of the worlde they be ignorant off, which they shoulde know if they were able to conceiue the light of the Sunne. Euen the verie like matter is the blindnesse of our mindes. For albeit that the truth of God be of it selfe neuer so cleere, and though we heare neuer so much talke of it, yet for all that we can not attaine vnto it, vnlesse that our heartes be first opened to see the light thereof, that wee maye enioye both the profite and pleasure thereof, and to iudge the better thereby not only of heauenly but of earthly things also. It is hard, yea impossible for ble for any which is borne blinde, to know the light of ỹ Sunne, vnlesse he doe recouer his eye sight by the godnesse of God. And it is no lesse impossible for ỹ carnall mã to know the truth of God, vnlesse he do receiue the heart of vnderstanding by the gift of God. And I suppose that all godly persones be out of doubt: First, that ỹ truth of God is a light of it selfe, and no darkenesse: Secondly, that the heartes of carnall men be starke blinde in matters of religion, so that wee nede not to stande to proue this. Whereupon it followeth of necessitie, ỹ it is harde, yea, impossible for all them, to haue the knowledge of the truth, whose mindes be yet combred with the olde darkenesse.

The truth of Christe he hath retchlessnesse.

And wee doe not speake of that Truth onely, as that there is but one God, and onely true, and as that he is declared to bee almightie, iuste, wise, good, &c. which the Philosophers of the Ethnickes did acknowledge, and the Iewes and Turkes in these dayes doe also acknowledge and confesse: but specially of that truth wherby the faith of vs Christian men, is sequestred from the faith and religiõ of all foren nations, and for which we be accounted for Christiãs. The same conteineth the misterie of the holie Trinitie and the worde incarnate, hidden from the beginning of the worlde, his death, resurrection, and ascention, and the whole dispensation of mans redemption purchased by Christ, which our Sauiour him selfe did expresse, calling himselfe the waye, the truth, and the life. Vnto the knowledge of this truthe, surely no carnall man can come, vnlesse he be ayded by the speciall grace of God. And thereupon came those sayings of our Sauiour, vnlesse that a man be newe borne againe, he can not se the kingdome of God. No man commeth vnto me, vnlesse that the father which sent me, doe drawe him. It is written in the Prophets, And all shalbe taught from God. Euery man which hath heard, and learned of the father, cõmeth vnto me. But these be ỹ elect, and foreordeined vnto life, fewe in number in comparison of the rest.

Ioan. 3.

Ioan. 6.

How they bee fewe which do knowe the truthe of Christ.

Some man will saye. Howe be they fewe, which do vnderstand the truthe of Christian religion, seeing that the confession thereof is Catholike, and vniuersall, common vnto all Christian men, of which apeareth to be so innumerable a multitude of kingdomes and peoples?

I aunswere, It is one thing to rehearse and recite with long e formal talke, a lesson of Christis truth, taught a man from childhode by his parentes: and an other manner of matter with a heart lightened by the speciall grace of God to knowe the truthe of God, and after it is so knowen, truely to keepe it. In deede the first is catholike and generall, and in an infinite numbre, but this is not so, but in the electe and true faithfull onely.

How men may come vnto the knowledge of Gods truth.

Albeit that the electe onely, and such as be before ordeined vnto life doe come to the knowledge of the truthe, and doe attaine vnto it not without the speciall grace of GOD, yet for all that there be some be some certaine meanes without which no man may hope to attaine vnto it.

Desire to know the truth.

First there is requisite a hart desirefull to knowe the truth: for the wisdome of God doth not admytte such as do despise and loth it, specially them which do crake & boast that they be very perfect in ꝑ knowledge of the truth, and that they be not blynde but of good sight. Such were the Scribes and the Pharisies which when the Lorde sayde, I came into this worlde vnto iudgement to the intent that they which do not see, might see, and that they which do see, should be made blinde, they sayd, be we also blinde? Vnto whome he aunswered, if you were blinde, you shoulde haue no sinne. But nowe you say we do see, therfore your sinne doth remaine. Such were the Philosophers, and wyse men of the gentiles which when they boasted that they were wise, were made fooles, and changed the truth of God in to lyes.

Ioan. 9.

Rom. 1.

Such be for the most part nowe a daies, al the Prelates of the churches, religyous and Seraphicall doctors, with the other great pontificall Priestes, which can therefore haue no desire to knowe the truth, bicause they do earnestly presume vpon the knowledge thereof, and can in no wyse abyde to bee thought such as can haue any nede to beskowe an howers studye vnto the knowledge of the truth. They which bee of that minde, shall neuer come by any sounde knowledge of the truth. For they can not be made beleeue, that they be ignorant thereof, and therefore can not bee trayned vnto the desire to knowe it: but they be rather according vnto the saying of our Sauiour, the more blinded, and prouoked vnto a raging furie agaynst the Disciples and ministers of the Truth.

Seraphici doctores

The first to knowe the truth

Secondly, it is nedefull that the desire to knowe the truth be not Idle, but ioyned with a care and study to seke and to learne it. If you seke it, saith Salomon in his Prouerbes, as you would seeke for mony, and digge for it as for treasure, then thou shalt vnderstande the feare of the Lorde, and finde the knowledge of GOD. It is the voice of wisdome: I do loue them which do loue mee. And they whiche dw wake vnto mée earlye shall finde me. Vnto this studye of seeking Gods trueth, not onely those presumpteous Prelates (of whom we spake before) be vnmet, but all they also, which dw dyspayre that they can not come to the knowledge thereof.

Typo lerne frō finding the truth. Lib. 2. contra Acad. cap. 3.

Wherefore it standeth with good reason that Augustine sayde, that there bee hynderaunces from finding the truth, that is to say, desperation and presumption. For so he sayethe. Where remayneth now two faultes and lettes from finding the truth, of which I am not much afraide in thee, but yet for all that I am afraide, leaste thou despise thy selfe, and dispayre that thou canst not finde it, or els rather leaste thou beleeue that thou hast founde it already. They which haue any of both these faults, do neither pray vnto god for ꝑ knowledge of ꝑ truth, nor they will not seeke it by hearing, nor reading, but doe refraine from all study for the finding thereof.

Wherefore

Thirdly, it is requisite that wee become his scholers, and beleue his worde, who is the onely teacher of this truth, and that is he, which sayde vnto them that dyd beleeue in him. If you doe continue in my worde, you be in deede my Disciples, and you shall know the truth: So that we must first of all heare the worde of the truth: secondly beleeue it, and thirdly continue in it. Vnto them that do this, the knowledge of the truth is promised.

And Augustine doth saye, that first we must beleeue and then vnderstande. To that purpose was that spoken in the sixte of Iohn. Lorde vnto whom shall we go? Thou hast the wordes of euerlasting life, & we do beleeue and know, that thou art Christe the Sonne of the lyuing God. This sayd Peter, in his owne and the rest of the Apostles names. Whereby he manifestly declareth, that they had first heard the wordes of lyfe at the teaching of the Lordes mouth. And secondly, that they beleeued that he was Christe the Sonne of the lyuing God. Thyrdly, that they did also certainly knowe the truth, which they began to beleeue. So he sayth: We beleeued, and addeth: And haue knowen. Therefore, to beleeue, is before knowyng.

The Samaritans also, of whom the same Euangelist maketh mention in his fourth chapiter, when they had first beleeued, bycause of the womans wordes, and afterwarde had perceiued the truthe by Christ hymselfe, they sayde: Now we dwe not beleeue bycause of thy saying, for we haue heard our selues, and knowe that this man is the sauiour of the worlde. So that it appeareth that fayth goeth before, and that then in case we do stande stedfastly therein, there followeth a sure and sounde knowledge of the truth. So the Apostles dyd firste beleeue the wordes of Christe, and then afterwardes when there encreased in them the working of the holy Spirite, it appeareth that thereby they were more perfectly lightened, & brought vnto the assured knowledge of the truth. Vnto this none commeth by the trade and waye of mans reason, but by Faith.

That we must abide in ꝑ word of Christ.

But wee muste keepe well in mynde, that this condition was layde vnto it by the Lorde, in the eight chapiter of Iohn: If we abyde in his worde, which we haue begonne to beleeue. You shall finde some which dwe beleeue for the tyme, according vnto the parable of the seede, and do fall awaye in the tyme of temptation, and forsake the worde of the Truth.

This kynde of Fayth, forasmuch as it lacketh necessarie continuance, doth not atteyne vnto the prompted knowledge of the Truth. And what it is to dwell in the worde of the Lorde, and to be verely his Disciple, we haue noted in our Commentaries vpon Iohn.

Men need a pure mynde.

S. Augustine wryteth that the mynde pestered yet with synne, can not receyue the Truth. This is to be vnderstanded, not of small, but of grieuous offences, and such as dwe cutte off the waye vtterly from knowing & loning the Truth, and keepeth the mynde as it were captiue styll in bondage and in prison.

It is

The truth is to bee sought in charitie.

It is written of the Apostle Peter, that among other things hée sayde: What shall a man thinke, that GOD hath digged a trenche, and hidden the truth therein, and caste Mountaines vpon it, so that it maye be founde onely by them, which are able to digge deepe? It is not so, but lyke as he hath compassed the Hilles and Earth with the circuite of Heauen, so he hath also couered the Truth with the vaile of his charitie, so that he only maye bée able to come vnto it, which doth first knocke at the gate of his loue. Whether that Peter sayd so, or no, surely it is altogether necessarie to the knowledge of the truth, that it be loued, and through louing be sought for, and that in the seking for it, the gate of Gods loue be knocked at. To him that knocketh, there is promised the opening, where as the Lorde sayeth: He which asketh, receiueth, & he which seketh, findeth: and to him which knocketh, it is opened. And yet notwithstanding though that all this be done, yet for all that, no thanke vnto vs, but all is to be attributed vnto the heauenly grace and working. For it is not of the willer, or of the runner, but of him which hath mercy, Christ.

What is the Efficacie of the Truth.

WE doe not discusse what the truth generally is able to do, and doth, which is so great a matter, that it passeth all mens reason, as a certaine man sayde: but what the truth of God dothe when it is knowen, vnto the heartes of men, not that we are able to declare all the efficacie and strengthe thereof, but bicause that we thinke it méete some deale as we may, to loke into it. The truth is a light, as we said before. Wherefore by the efficacie of light we may somewhat sée what is the efficacie of Gods truth. And first it is the worke of open & manifest light, that it suffereth not darkenesse, but auoydeth it immediatly at the first shewe. For it can not away with darkenesse, neither is it so weake to giue place thereunto, but it ouercómeth darkenesse, though it be neuer so grosse and thicke. Likewise the truth of God, when it is reuealed, it doth firste and principally driue away darkenesse, that is to say, the ignorance and blyndnesse of mens myndes, and maketh them of blynde and ignorant, séeing and vnderstanding.

In the efficacy of light ye may fele ye truth.

Light preacheth away darkenes.

1 Like as the rising of the Sunne doth by his brightnesse take away the vniuersall darkenesse of the night, so the truth once reuealed, doth take away the generall ignorance as nere as it can, which possesseth the heartes of men, and suffreth not that any man may vnder the pretence of ignorance be any longer excused.

2 Secondly, the Sunne rysing doth drawe all mens eyes vnto it, which be whole and can abyde the brightnesse thereof, and dothe marueylously reioyce the myndes of menne. Doth not the Truth when it is reuealed, doe the same? It doth styrre vp mennes myndes to knowe it, and it doth marueylously delight them, as we might well perceiue at ye beginning of the gospel, as also we haue séene in our daies in our owne countrie. In deed there haue ben some ranke enimies against the opening of the truth, and haue most frowardly forsaken it: euen so there be many which doe likewise with the Sunne, which can not abyde the brightnesse, bycause they haue naughty eyes, and doe loue the darkenesse better than the light. This kinde of men the Lorde toucheth in Iohn, where hee sayth: This is the iudgement, that the light came into ye worlde, and men do loue darkenesse better thã light.

of the

3 Thirdly, those thinges be opened at the rising of the Sunne, which were darkened and lay hidde in the darkenesse of the night. For as darkenesse doth couer all and hyde the true shape and fashion of all thinges: so ye lyght of the Sunne doth discouer and lay open al thinges that were couered and hidde: Moreouer doth deuide and separate all thinges with a true difference, so that we may be able not doubtfully to gesse of euery thing what it is, but to knowe and discerne them truely, and for a certentie. This benefit of ye lyght is great which we do enioy day by day, and ye very vnthankfully. The truth doth also ye very lyke. It doth open thinges hidden and vnknowen, and restoreth vnto euery thing his naturall countenaunce, that we may be able to knowe what to iudge of them. As for example: Before that the Gospell was preached, it was hydden from the knowledge of men who was the true GOD, what was his true Religion, what his true seruice, what the waye of Saluation, what the will of God, and what was true godlinesse, &c. All these things were hidden, and as it were buried vp in a catholyke or generall ignorance, vntyll that they were opened by the lyght of the Truth. Howe many matters there hath bene disclosed in our dayes by restoring of the lyght of the truth of the Gospell, it is so apparant, that for shame it can not be denied.

The light doth reproue ye faultes of darkenesse.

Fourthly, this is also the worke of lyght, to finde out and reproue the faultes of darkenesse. In darkenesse there be many foule faultes and errours, and when light commeth, the faultes be founde and reproued. Wherefore it is a common matter, that they which doe euill in darkenesse, doe flee from the light, and can not away therewithall. The truth doth the very lyke. For it reproueth and chargeth the world of many grieuous sinnes and errours committed vnder the night of ignorance. Wherfore they can not away with it as many as doe euill: for they be afrayde, least their doings should be disclosed. Whatsoeuer is reproued sayth the Apostle, is opened by the lyght. And this is the chiefe cause, wherfore all they which doe turne all godlynesse into gaine, by their counterfait woordes, and by ying and selling in the Church, be so much against the doctrine of the truth, and doe most cruelly persecute the ministers of the same.

Iohn. 3.

Ephes. 5.

Fiftly, this is also a great efficacie of the lyght, that it doth deliuer vs from the kingdome of darkenesse, and bringeth vs into a lyberte, to know and do all thinges

The light deliuereth from the kingedome of darkenesse.

the

the more directly, in that he doth direct both our eyes, handes, feete, and our whole lyfe, to doe those thinges which ought to be done. This the truth doth in hir kinde a great deale more perfectly: for it delyvereth vs frō that bondage of sin, wherein we serued in the kingedome of darkenesse, out of Christ. This the truth it selfe doth testifie, sayinge: If you continue in my wordes, you be in deede my Disciples, and you shall know the truth, and the truth shall deliuer you. And the same truth also doth direct them wholy, whom it delyvereth from the kingdome of darkenesse, vnto the workes of the lyght, so that they may in all pointes walke and liue godly, honestly, blameles, and with vpright iudgement, lyke children of lyght.

Ioan.8.

Sirtly, those thinges which we do se by light daye with our owne eyes, wee doe beare witnesse off, stedfastly and truely. Neyther can we be perswaded to iudge and say any other wayes, than as we haue perceiued by the certeintie of the lyght. In like manner the knowledge of the truth also doth make the faythfull person so faste & sure in the confession of his faith, that he will not be dryuen from it. So sayth the Sauiour vnto Nicodemus. That which wee do knowe, we speake: and that which we do se, we do testifie. And the Apostle: I knowe, (sayth he) whom I haue beleeued, and I am sure, &c. Vpon this assurednes of ỳ truth, the holy Martyres stode so stedfast in the confession of their faith, that they wolde sooner forgo this lyfe, than deny the same, which they did assuredly knowe and beleeue. This knowledge of the truth doth also comfort ỳ afflicted, what troubles soeuer they be vexed withall. For they do knowe that the afflictions of this present tyme, be not to be compared vnto the glorie to come, which shall be reuealed in vs.

Those thinges which we doe se in the light, we assuredly notifie & testifie. Ioan.

Beside that, from whence commeth that courage and constancie in the Apostles and Ministers of the Gospell of God, to preach those thinges which seeme vnto ỳ wise men of thys world to be most folyshe, but of the strength of truth once knowen? So sayde Peter and Iohn: Wee can not but speake those thinges which wee haue seene and hearde.

Thys and many other lyke effectes, the truth of GOD bringe knowen bringeth to passe, and needeth not any paynting and trymming, or any manner of allystance or helpe to be set forth by. It hath barenesse and plainnesse, and is very strong of hir owne simplicitie, whereof the Apostles may be witnesses, men vnlearned and simple, and after the Apostles tyme, that olde Bysshop more vnlearned than the rest, the history of whom Eusebius doth maketh mention of.

What is the lotte or hap of the Truth of God in this worlde.

WE can in nene, more certainly and euidently finde a perfete president of the truth, than in our Sauiour himselfe, the onely begotten of GOD, who is the way, the Truth, and the lyfe. In heauen no doubte the Truth is more acceptable and glorious, but in thys worlde there is nothing lesse regarded. Therefore when Christe hadde sayd: That which we do knowe, we doe speake, and that whiche we haue seene, we doe testifye, he added, But you like not our testimony. What is it else not to like the testimonye of Christ, than not to receyue the very truth of God, but to refuse it, and to pretēd it to be false? And yet ỳ world wolde not seeme to be so wicked, as to refuse and withstād the truth, specially being sent into the world from God in Heauen. Therefore it pretendeth it to be a lye and a false tale. So they sayd vnto the Lorde: Thou gyuest witnesse vnto thy selfe. Thy witnesse is not true. And there can be no greater shame and rebuke to the truth of God, than to be accused of falsehode. Man, who is vayne and full of lyes, and drinketh in lyes, like water, thinketh that he receyueth a greate villanye and reproche, if one charge him with a lye, and saye vnto him but thys one worde, Thou lyest. And they thinke that this villanye ought to be straightway reuenged and auoyded with strong hand. I beseech you, how much lesse ought it to be borne withall, that anye manne shoulde accuse the very truth of God with a lye, and condemne it for Heresie? But this is the lotte, happe, and case thereof in this world, and it was neuer better, but always alike: Looke vpon the hystories of the Prophetes. So they persecuted the Prophetes, (sayeth Christ,) whych were before you. Vpon what pretence dyd they persecute them? For no other colloure or pretence but that they dyd charge them with lyes. The like chaunced vnto the Apostles afterwardes. In the fourteenth of Iohn. Christ saith: I will desire my father, and he shall giue you an nother comforter, to remayne with you for euermore, the spirite of the truth whiche the worlde can not receyue. So that if anye body shall aske, why the lotte and estate of the truth is suche in thys worlde, that it is refused, as though it were a lye, you haue here the cause at hande, because that the worlde can not receyue the spirite of the truth: and by the world, hee meaneth all the wicked worldlings, who forasmuch as they be worldly, and do applye themselues altogither vnto thys worlde, and doe trauell vnder the Deuill the Prince of this world, they are aright called the world. And why the worlde can not receyue the spirite of the truth, we haue noted in our Commentaries vpon John. But let the reader marke this here, that like as this world continueth to bee alwayes like it selfe, so this loue of the truth continueth also, not to bee receyued of the world, because it can not receyue the spirite of the truthe. For as the nature of thys world continueth, so this happe or lotte of the truth falleth not in the worlde. As long as the Deuill is the Prince of the world, so long the truth is a strāger in the world, and as among strāgers findeth alwayes manye backe friendes. No doubt as this worlde hath in times past and alwayes serued the prince of lyes, so in times past, now and alwayes the truthe is hated, and thereof it procedeth, that the truth is so oppressed, so slaundered, and by so sharp and wicked proclamations condemned, and that the

The truth is charged with the fruell reproche of lyes.

What is the chiefe of the truth in this world and how.

The truth is condemned before it is heard.

professors thereof be so cruelly vsed, and tumbled and turned out of theyr cloutes.

This is the happe or lotte of the truth in this worlde. And besides that it is condemned also before it bee heard, and there be prohibitiõs made, that it can no ways be broughte to light, least if it shuld be heard, it shuld be knowen. For it is of that nature, that the better it is knowen, the lesse worthy it is thoughte to be condemned. Therefore bycause the aduersaries thereof do feare least they shuld not be able by no wise to condemne the truth when it is hearde and knowen. They doe their vttermost endeuor to condemne it before it be knowen. But the truth desireth this only (as Tertullian sayth) that it be not condemned vnknowen and is of nothing so much ashamed, as to be hidden, quite contrarye herein vnto lying and falshode, for that falshod fleeth nothing more than to be brought to light.

That al things are to be suffered for the truth.

Seyng that the lotte and estate of the truthe in this worlde is suche, that in steede of loue whiche it deserueth, it carrieth awaye moste spitefull hatred, for faith, all kinde of slanders, for obedience, condemnatiõ, for wholsome encrease, tiranous oppression: what can else ensue, but that for hir sake all these things must fall vpon their neckes, which had rather with pure and constant faith depend vpon the truthe, than to perish wyth the worlde in falshode? The wicked can not put in vre their conceyued hatred against the truth it selfe: therfore they doe practise it against the scholers and folowers therof, whom they do most spitefully persecute for no other cause but for ẏ truths sake. So that eyther we muste suffer and beare all things for hir sake, for as much as hir lotte in this worlde is no better but to be subiecte vnto hatereds, slaunders, and condemnations, or else we muste forsake hir defence, which if we do, is no harme vnto hir, but it is the most assured destruction of our owne selues. For our saluation doth so depend vpõ the truth, that the case of it and of oure saluation is both one. They which do follow the warres in this worlde, do know that the warres which they determine to seke, be full of extreame trauaple, payne, and perill, and yet for all that they doe enter into it, and doe yelde themselues wholly vnto it to abyde all aduentures, vpon what hope? no doubt in hope to atteyne to a better estate of life, that they maye lyue somewhat the better in this worlde, whiche if they happen to come vnto, yet all that they get, is but an vncertaine hope and for a time, yea for a very small time. And for thys they do put their whole life in danger. In case a counterfeite glasse be much esteemed (as a certaine man said) how muche worth ought a right precious stone to be vnto vs? We we not mad if we stande in doubt to suffer for the truth of God, that whiche others doe suffer, yea moste earnestly sue for, vpon a vaine opinion and hope? Who is not content for his Princes sake to venter all his goodes, and life, as often as the estate of the realme requireth, or as it pleaseth hys Princes?

Shall

Shall we then refuse that in Gods cause, which we can suffer, and beare for a mans cause, as often as it pleaseth him?

Whether that the Truthe may be ouercome.

Is the truthe ouercome.

It appeareth that the Truth is ouercome, when through the violence of wicked men, or the deuice of the vngodly it is so oppressed for a time that falshode seemeth to reigne altogither, and is like to reigne for euer specially in this worlde, where the prince of darkenes raigneth, and the truthe is euerye where banished like a straunger, yea so that oftentimes it seemeth to forsake the land, and to dwell with God only.

What it is to be ouercome.

But in case we loke deeper into ẏ matter, we shall finde that truth can by no meanes be ouercome in deede, which shall be more manifestly knowen, if we consider what it is to bee ouercome in deede. And to be ouercome, is eyther to be driuen from a mans purpose, or to be chaunged, or to take foyle in his matter, or else to bee ouerthrowen and bee in the power of his enimy. A woman is ouercome when shee is enticed by fayre words, and promises, and consenteth vnto an vnlawfull fact. We be ouercome by oure concupiscences, to forsake a holy purpose. We be ouercome by money, to employ oure trauaple in wickednes. He is ouercome in lawe, which catcheth a foile in his matter in iudgemẽt. He is ouercome which is eyther by gyle deceyued, or by strength put to the worse, or whiche is ouerthrowen in battell, & subdued vnto his enemie. And in case anye of those thinges can chaunce the truth, we muste nedes confesse, that it may be ouercome. It can not bee chaunged frõ that, that it is. It may be cloked and darkened, by coloure of falshode, but it can neuer be changed into falshode. If it stand vpon a triall of iudgement against falshode, it may be oppressed, for a season, but it can not be ouercome, bycause it cãnot be conuicted of falsehode, neyther proued to be false. If it be assaulted with tyrannous violence, it suffereth violence in them that do follow hir, but it can by no meanes bee ouercome. Forasmuche as it can not come into the power of the enimies. No tyrant, though he raged neuer so sore could euer, bridle the truth to be in subiection vnto him. They bee all dead, and gone, but the truthe shall moste gloriously triumph, as ouercomer of them all.

The prescription of a long time semeth to be able to do much against the truth, but it is not possible, that it shuld carrie away the victory therof. The ancienty of a thousande yeares in an vntruth, can not get the victory of one moment against ẏ truth. Neither doth the truthe yelde to the authoritie of persons. Albeit ẏ Princes, Prelats, high in respect of this worlde do decree and take orders against it, yet for all that it continueth vnouercome, and incorrupt. We al the Princes of the worlde by their proclamations able to chãge a truth into an vntruth, whereas they can not bryng to passe that the same which is Gold in deede be no longer gold? Neyther can the eloquence of rethoricians ouercome the symplicitie of the truth: but beyng striken wyth the very playnenesse and barenesse of the truth, it is driuen to depart with shame ynough. To be shorte, like as that whiche was once true, remayneth true for euer, forasmuche as by no art, by no strength it can be changed into an vntruth: so the truthe of God, yea much more is the truthe of God euerlasting, immutable, and inuincible, so that it is impossible for it to be ouercome by slightes, hatred, watches, prescriptions of times, slaūders, and persecutions. Therefore Esdras saide aright, The truthe remaineth, and waxeth stronger for euermore, and liueth, and hath the vpper hande, world without end. This consideration bringeth an exceedyng comforte vnto the professors of the truth. For the more assuredly that they be perswaded, that the truthe which they haue embraced, is inuincible, with so much the stouter heart they do beare out through Gods aid, whatsoeuer is charged vpon them for it by the wicked.

3. Esdras. 3.

Of the Goodnesse of God.

In the place before of the Nature of God, where we haue spoken of his qualitie, among other thynges which be reported of him in the Scriptures, we accounted his goodnesse also. Therefore I thinke it not vnmete for oure purpose, neither vnprofitable for godlye persons, if we adde to the rest somewhat also thereof, and note those things whiche may be considered to the edifying and comforte also of their consciences. The depth of Gods goodnesse is large and wide, but why shoulde not they whose whole lyfe and saluation is grounded, and established in this onely, vpon whome it specially appeareth, that GOD is good, reuerently consider, adore, and prayse the superficiall parte thereof?

That God is good.

The whole Scripture reporteth of God, that hee is good, and it speaketh of none other, but of the creator and maker of all, not for that that there is any other true God besides him, whome we do call the creatour of heauen and earthe, but for that the superstitious olde time dyd deuise and serue diuers others. And that Hereticke Martion whych was a Bishops sonne, when he was for the deflowring of a Mayden excommunicated from the holy Communion, to the intent to trouble the Churche, he began to reuiue and vpholde the monstrous doctrine of one Cerdon, wherin hee was not afrayde to bereaue the true and onely God, maker of all thinges that be, of the glorye of hys goodnesse: and leaste he should seeme altogither to denye the goodnesse of God, he made two Goddes, one the creatour, and the other the father of Iesus Christ: the first euill, sower, seuere, and cruell: the latter he sayde was good, and merciful. Which wicked & monstrous imagination, some of the fathers, & specially Tertullian did mightily confute: so that the same wycked deuice of the Martionistes was so conuinced and ouercome by most euidente argumentes, both of Gods truth and goodnesse, that it is not necessarie now to stand much in the refuting thereof. There be an infinite number of the argumentes of Gods goodnesse.

Martion imagined two Gods one good another euill.

was

1 Firste, the workes of the first creation do witnesse thereof, all whyche as they were verye good (albeit the Marcionites do not so take it) so they do proue the goodnesse of the maker, lyke as good fruites do proue a tree to be good. For it can not be, that hee which is euill should do good workes, and that the euill tree shoulde beare good fruites. And in case that any man eyther will not or can not vnderstand the goodnesse of Gods workes, lette him yet at the leaste way graunt, that they could not be done without speciall wisedome. And moreouer lette him thinke whether it may be attributed vnto wisedome or no, that a worke is not good but euill, and therby they muste vnderstande of necessitie, that those things be good whyche be done by speciall wisedome. For like as none can be wise in deede, but he that is good: so no worke is to bee taken to proceede of wisedome, vnlesse it be good also. He muste needes be verye vnthankefull, and a stocke rather than a man, which feeleth not dayly, yea euery moment, and dothe playnely confesse, what commodities and profites he himselfe enioyeth of Gods workes, which can not bee referred vnto any other, but vnto God the creator himselfe.

2 Secondly, who can rehearse the thousand part of those things whych be dayly bestowed by Goddes goodnesse not only vnto the good, but vnto the wicked also: whome he dothe not onely doe good vnto, but whome hee might of right immediatly destroy, and dothe not so, but with all gentlenesse abideth their repentance.

3 Thirdly, if we seeke the Scriptures, doe not they set forth the goodnesse of God? God is good vnto Israell sayeth the Prophete Dauid vnto them which be vpright in heart, and, Prayse the Lorde for he is good, for his mercy endureth for euer. And in an other place, The earthe is filled with the goodnesse of the Lorde. And Jeremy sayth, The Lorde is good vnto them which do truste vpon hym. And in Luke Christ sayeth, None is good but God onely. And the Apostle to the Romaines dothe attribute riches of goodnesse vnto God. He doth sometimes punish the reprobate, but seeyng that he dothe it not withoute iudgement, nor to the harme of anye but of the impenitente, there is no cause why he shoulde therefore lose the glory of his goodnesse. But I nede not to trauayle my selfe much in this article, wherein is neyther difficultie nor doubte, but all things as manifest, and as cleere as the Sunne. As for my selfe I am so perswaded of the goodnesse of God, that I know nothing in the nature of God, which I receyue greater comforte of, and whiche I honor with more admiration, than hys endlesse and infinite goodnesse.

Out of scriptu

Psalme Psalme.

Thren.

Luc. 18 Rom. 2

II. What it is to be good.

Like as to be euil is not the point of an idle qualitie but of a verye effectuall and labourſome qualitie, including in it all mischiefe and continuall purpoſe of euill doing: So to be good commeth not of a vaine qualitie, but allwayes, and without ende, doing thoſe thinges whiche be good, and profitable. The holy Scripture calleth that טוֹב, whiche we doe call good, and that worde ſignifieth ſometimes good, ſometymes profitable, ſometimes comely, and ſometymes pleaſaunte. All theſe goe togither in euerye one thyng in that whiche is good. For good is of ſuche nature, that it is profitable, faire, comely, and alſo pleaſaunt. But we ſpeake not of the outward ſhewe of good things, but of that whiche is conſidered by the eyes of the mind, and that pleaſeth ẏ heart which is deſirous of good. The Philoſopher defineth that to be good, which all men deſireth. And it ſhould not be deſired, vnleſſe it wer liked. The Latiniſtes doe call hym good whiche is gentle, eaſie, friendly, mild, curteous, kind, good to deale withall, ſimple, open, pleaſaunt, and liberall, in whom is found no malice, no vngentleneſſe, hardneſſe, ſowerneſſe, deceyte, and frowardneſſe.

In good concurreth profitable, comely, and pleaſaunt.

VVhat it is for God to be good.

So that when the Scripture doth tell vs that God is good, we muſte take it no otherwiſe, but that he wold perſwade vs, that God is moſt farre from the diſpoſition of malice, cruelneſſe, vngentleneſſe, hardneſſe, &c. But rather that he is milde, eaſie, kinde, tractable, open, and liberall to prouoke vs to putte our truſt in hym, and to call for his grace.

Whether that God only be good.

Luc. 18.

WHeras in ẏ eighteenth of Luke. A certayne greate eſtate ſaide vnto the Lorde, God Maiſter, by doing of what thall I poſſeſſe euerlaſting life. He anſwered him: Why calleſt thou me good? None is good, but God only. So that by thys teſtimony of our Sauiour, the commendation of goodneſſe is ſo taken away from all menne, that it is giuen vnto God only. There coulde nothyng be more euidentlye, expreſſly, and fullye ſpoken, than that he ſayde abſolutely, There is none good, but God only, ſo that all men be ſo euill, that none of them is good.

None good but God only.

An obiection.

But there may be a queſtion howe this ſaying dothe agree with that difference, which Chriſt hymſelfe vſed, when he ſayde: Whiche maketh hys ſunne to ryſe ouer the good, and the euill. If ſome men be good, and ſome euill, howe then is God ſo good, that none is good but he? It is written in the Actes of the Apoſtles of Barnabas: that he was a good man. Howe then is none good but God only? The Apoſtle ſayeth: Euerye creature of God is good, Is not man alſo a creature of Gods? Howe then is he not good? God ſaw all things that he had made, that they were very good: no doubt he hadde made man alſo, Ergo, man is alſo very good. The Prophete ſaith: Do good Lorde vnto ẏ good and vpright in heart. If none be good but God onley, it ſeemeth to be in vayne, which the Prophet dothe here praye for, in that he beſeecheth God, to doe well to the good, whereas there is none good vnto whome God maye do good.

1. Tim. 4.

Genes. 1.

Pſalme.

In this poynte we muſte make a double compariſon of God, one with all his creatures, an nother with mã particularly. If you compare hym with God is alone called good.

A compariſon of God with his creatures.

with thoſe things which he hath created, you ſhall finde that there is in him an originall, perfecte, and moſte excellent goodneſſe. Originall, which is not receyued from any where elſe, but proper vnto himſelfe, hauing it ſelfe in God no beginning, but gyuing vnto others the beginning of goodneſſe. Perfecte, that is to ſay, full in all poyntes and reſpectes, ſo that nothing more can be deſired therin, which belongeth vnto true goodnes. Moſt excellent, which no manner of creatures at all, no not the Angels of heauen, can conceyue in mynde, much leſſe expreſſe and folow. But in creatures you ſhall fynde in deede ſome goodneſſe, but naturally put into them by God, and that vnperfect, and farre vnderneath the goodneſſe of God. And the goodnes of all things commeth from God, as meaſured, & particular, ſo that the commoditie of euerye thing is as it were limited and appoynted vnto ſome certayne vſe. And in this reſpect the Scripture dothe teſtifie, that whatſoeuer was made by God, was very good. Yea, Although that the Scripture had not ſo ſaid, yet notwithſtanding the very experience of ſo manye ages doth almoſt ſay it ſelfe, that thoſe things bee verye good whiche God made. But if we conſider the highneſſe of the eſtate, true, abſolute, proper, and vniuerſall goodneſſe, the commendation thereof doth not agree vnto any creature, but vnto ẏ creator only. Wherfore a man maye well ſaye for thys cauſe, that God only is good, as well as he onely in the Scriptures is called the euerlaſting. For although that all thinges whiche be in Heauen and in earthe, in that they be, ſo accordyng to their proporcion they be exiſtente, yet notwithſtanding they are not worthye to beare the title of exiſtencie in deede, but are forced to leaue the ſame vnto God onely, of whome all things be. Therefore like as we doe not call all things created, exiſtents, for as muche as they be not of themſelues, but of God who is onely the exiſtent, ſo they oughte not to bee called in deede good, for aſmuche as they be not good of themſelues, but of him, by whome they be made. Both commeth to them from God the creator to be, and to be good. Wherefore they ſhal of right leaue the commendation of goodneſſe as alſo of exiſtẽce vnto their creator.

The c pariſo
God v
man.

And as for the other compariſon, where God is ſeuerallye compared with man, I do finde foure reſpectes to be conſidered in man. The firſte is of his Nature, the ſecond of his Corruption, the third of grace, the fourth of Inſtitution. If thou loke vnto the Nature of man, ye can not condemne it of naughtineſſe. For whatſoeuer it is accordyng vnto the degree thereof it is of God the creator thereof, of whome there can come no euill. In reſpect therof he is good in his degree, in whych he was placed in his fyrſte eſtate, as well as ẏ reſt of creatures. And in this reſpecte man is to be referred vnto the firſte and generall compariſon of things.

But if you conſider the generall corruption of mans nature, you ſhal finde that all mankinde is degenerate, and that the whole thought of mans hearte is geuen to naughtyneſſe, euen from theyr youthe, and as the Prophete ſayeth, that all haue ſtrayed, and are one wyth an other made al vnprofitable, and that there is none that doeth good, no not one. Of whiche thing the Apostle reasoneth. And the saying of our Sauiour. There is none good but God only, is chiefly to be referred hereunto, and the prophete sayth, All men be liers, and vanitie of vanities, euery lyuing man is vanitie, and no liuing person shall be iustified in thy sighte. But if you way the grace of God in man, you shall finde a repairement of the corrupte nature, whereby man is repayred to the Image of Gods goodnesse in Christ our sauiour, in respect of the whiche he may be called good, and yet not so, that he may yet glorye of anye perfecte goodnesse, but in respecte, that Christe is his goodnesse. Nowe remayneth the respecte of hys institution, teaching or bringing vp. In this respecte according to the diuersitie of worldlye things, some one is made a good Physition, an nother a good Paynter, an nother a good Goldsmith, some one, and some an nother so excellente in hys arte, that whereas he can not be sayde to bee a good man, yet he may bee a good artificer. So a certaine man found fault that though he could easily find within the Citie where he dwelt good carpenters, good smythes, good painters, and good ymage makers, yet he could not borye easily fynde there a good and an honest man. But we speake not heere of the goodnesse of artificers, howe euerye man is excellente and perfecte in hys arte, but of that goodnesse whereby we maye become good, and bee therefore called absolutely good. Thys goodnesse can not be founde in vs, vnlesse we be regenerate, and yet then it is vnperfecte, as wee sayde before. Thus I suppose it is manifest, howe, and why none is good but God only. What cause is there then, why one manne shoulde despise an other, seeyng that wee bee all togyther condemned of naughtynesse by thys sentence of our sauioure, and bereste of the glorye of goodnesse? Agayne if we be altogither generally naughte, we oughte not to think it any newelty or straūge matter, when one man is hurt of an other that is to say, one naughtyman of an other naughtye man. But it maye rather bee a mcruaple if one man doe take good of an nother. For it is out of the nature of naughtye things, to fall to goodnesse, whereby the man of consideration wil thinke vpon the special prouidence of God, as often as he receyueth a good turne of any man.

It is one thing to be a good artificer and an other to be a good man.

It is no marueil if one man be hurt of another.

That the goodnesse of God is immutable and euerlasting.

VVhereby appeareth that the goodnesse of God can not be ouercome.

VVherefore the good wyll of man is vnstable.

WE do oftentimes perceyue, howe vnconstante and chaungeable anye manner of good disposition of mans heart is. If you aske me ỹ reason, it maye be aunswered, that it is therefore vnstable, bycause it is not naturally grafted in vs, but bredde by occasion, and chaungeable causes: so that when the cause ceaseth, the effect also ceaseth. The lyke can not bee thoughte of the goodnesse of God. For God is good, not vpon occasion or vppon causes giuen by anye other thyng, but naturallye of hymselfe, and therfore lyke how vnchaungeable hee and hys nature is, and so vnchangeable is his goodnesse also. Whereas the Father dothe scourge his sonne, he doth it vpon occasion, and for a tyme: but whereas he is well willyng vnto him, it is a naturall affection, and of a continual good meanyng towardes hym. Lette vs thinke the lyke also of God when he is angry, he dothe it not naturally, but vpon occasion to correct the euill. But when he dothe vs good, it is his naturall doyng, procedyng without ende from his natural goodnesse. And that the goodnesse of God can not be ouercome, it appeareth well by that, that he coulde not be ouercome by the frowarde and obstinate malice of the Iewishe people, but that he woulde performe, and gyue them his onely begotten sonne to be our mediator and sauiour out of them, accordyng vnto his euerlastyng determination, and at suche time as he had promised. So God loued the worlde (sayth the Lord) that he gaue his onely begotten. What man is able to cōceyue in his minde how wonderfull the naughtinesse of this worlde was euen from the beginnyng before the incarnation of ỹ word, for which the purpose of God, whiche he had appoynted of for the saluation of the worlde, might most iustly haue bene changed if hys goodnesse were changeable: if the goodnesse of hym coulde haue bene ouercome, we had bene long since all consumed, neyther had this world stand so many hundred yeares. For whom may we thanke for the long continuance of the yeares therof, but the goodnesse and mercy of God? It is of Gods mercy sayth a certaine man, that we be not consumed. Wherfore as oftentymes as wee do feele the experiments, and proofe of Gods goodnesse, eyther in our selues or in others, let vs be admonished hew immutable, inuincible, and euerlastyng it is, and sing with the Prophete. Prayse the Lorde for he is good, for hys mercy endureth for euer.

That there be two Considerations of Gods goodnesse.

THe godly doe also perceyue to theyr profite, that the goodnesse of God is two wayes to be considered. For firste he is good generally towards all, declaryng his goodnesse bothe vnto good and euill, as we may see in Matthew. Which maketh his Sunne to shine vpon the good and euill. And in the Psalme, where the Prophete sayth: The Lorde is good vnto all and prouideth for al, not only the elect, but the reprobate also, not onely for man but for beasts also: by this all things be conserued, therfore was ỹ sayde in the Psalme, The earth is full of Gods goodnesse, and in an other place: Lorde thou sauest both man and beast, like as thou hast multiplyed thy goodnesse O God. This goodnesse godly folke doe consider not without wōder, for they can finde neyther middle nor ende thereof.

Secondly, God is specially and peculiarly good towardes the elect, faythfull, godly, and iuste persons. This goodnesse of God the Prophete doth auaunce, saying: Surely God is good vnto Israell, to such as haue a cleane harte, by whiche wordes he bothe not denie the generall goodnesse of God in prouidyng for all, of whiche hæ speaketh in the. cxlv. Psalme. But hæ dothe prayse this speciall goodnesse whereby he dothe specially embrace the faithful folke. Suche is the nature of true goodnesse, that it dothe generally will well vnto all, and yet withall beare a speciall fauour vnto some. A good householder dothe louyngly imbrace his whole household, and generally prouyde for them all, wyfe, children, seruauntes and catteil also, and is gladde if they all doe well, and yet for all that there is nothyng to the contrary, but that he may beare a speciall affection of good will towardes hys wyfe and chyldren, or to some of his chyldren, lyke as Iacob did aboue the reste more louingly embrace Ioseph. And Christe hymselfe did in a generall goodnesse loue all hys Disciples, and yet for al that, hee had a certayne speciall loue towardes John.

The vse of this consideration is to declare the generall goodnesse of God, to all mennes admiration, and thereby to be stirred the soner and the more assuredly to committe all our thyngs vnto hys prouidence. Whereof Christe dothe admonishe vs in Matthew: Loke vppon the byrdes of the ayre, and the flowers of the fielde, &c. And that wee embrace this speciall goodnesse with a speciall confidence also, not as strangers, but as of the householde of God, and that wee applie our selues in all poynts vnto hym, and loke for the heauenly good thyngs the more assuredly, and endeuour our selues that wee be not founde vnworthy of so exceeding a grace.

Matth. 6.

Hovv many vvayes vve doe offende againit the goodnesse of God.

It is a grieuous offece to sinne against the goodnesse of God.

I Thinke no man will denie, but that our saluation doth depende vpo the goodnesse of God. Wherfore there cā be no greater mischief than outragiously to offende agaynst the same. It is a sore poynt to sinne against the glory & Maiestie of God, as the obstinate & proude persons do, but yet that sinne is more vntollerable, whē the goodnesse of God is misused & angered. Therfore it shall be nedefull to note by the way, howe many wayes mē may offend against it. Neyther will wee scrupulously search out this sinne, but we will note only the generall sortes thereof, and these be, contempt, the mistrust and abusing of Gods goodnesse.

The contempt of God.

1 First, the corruption of mannes harte is ready to set at light, & dispise them whome we do perceyue to be good, yea & gentle, & slow vnto anger, and reuenge, & in the meane season we doe feare & haue alwayes in our eyes and regard them, whom we do finde cruell, seuere, and ready to reuenge. So good Princes be conteined of theyr subiects, gentle Scholemaysters of their scholers, kinde parents of their children, and fauorable husbands of theyr wiues. So peruerse & frowarde a disposition and nature wee haue, that the same which should make the more loue and obedience, maketh contempte, and this frowardnes is most abhominable of al, when it is vsed towardes God himselfe. For the more gentle and fauorable the goodnesse of GOD is towardes vs, in that he doth not immediatly diatly punish the offenders, but doth patiently abyde vs vntill we doe amende, and doth fauorably receyue vs when we doe amende, and forgiueth our sinnes, so muche the more we ought to be moued vnto amendment, and to estéme and set much by his goodnesse whiche is great. But now we be so farre from beyng moued vnto any amendement, by any regarde of Gods goodnesse, that wee rather take occasiō thereof to despise so good and fauorable a God.

Rom. 2.

This frowardnesse the Apostle dothe attribute vnto the hardnesse of harte that can not repent, & doth earnestly shake vp such cōtemners, saying: Thinkst thou this O mā, which iudgest others which do such things and doest the same thy self, that thou shalt escape the iudgement of God? or doest thou despise the riches of his goodnesse, sufferance and gentlenesse, not knowing ỹ the goodnesse of God doth prouoke thée vnto repentance? but accordyng vnto thy stubbernesse & harte whiche can not repent, thou doest heape vp to thy selfe anger, in the day of anger, &c. So that the Apostle thought this sirste manner of offending agaynst Gods goodnesse, worthy to be rebuked with so sore taunts & threatning, & worthily. For what can be more peruerse and frowarde, than to despise that whiche with all desire we ought to seke for and to embrace? & what can be more grieuouse than to heape vp to our selues the anger of God agaynst the day of displeasure?

Mistrust.

2 Secondly, we do offende agaynst the goodnesse of God, in mistrusting, and herein we bee also very euerywhere. For we do oftentimes credite one an other, and yet doe very hardely credite God, whereas not withstanding all men be liers & also euil, & God onely is both good & true. Euery man is false sayth the Prophet, and none is good but God onely sayth our sauiour, as wee noted before. I beseech you what can be done more frowardly? Malice & falshode findeth credite with vs, but Gods goodnesse and truth can finde none at al, or very hardly & with much adoe. Men beleeue not God, of whom it cā not be sayde, that he is euil and vntrue, & we do beleeue man, of whom is bothe meste truely reported, that he is naught, and vntrue.

And who cā sufficiently way and consider howe great wrong there is in this matter done vnto the goodnesse of God? & how great an offence it is in his sight? If you consider the nature of goodnesse, you shall finde it to be suche, specially in God, that as ready as it is to doe good, so muche it dothe also specially require that men haue a good opinion and confidence in it. So that there can no more spitefull and grieuous thyng come vnto GOD, that when any man doth doubt in any poynt of his goodnesse, wherof he doth so earnestly desire to haue al men fully perswaded. He dothe good vnto all & that a thousande wayes: he dothe promise vnto the which do beleue in him, al maner of good things, & requireth to be called vpō in our necessities: he spareth suche as doe offend him, and calleth them vnto amendment, and promiseth vnto suche as doe amende, forgiuenesse of their sinnes: by al which matters he dothe moste manifestly expresse the nature of true goodnesse, and giueth to vnderstande, that there is nothyng more acceptable vnto him, than if we depende in a sure cõfidence vppon his goodnesse, and on the other side that there is nothyng more grieuous and displeasant vnto hym, than when we refuse to be perswaded to put our truste in him, hauyng so many experiments & proues of his goodnesse. This mistrust is a declaration of a naughty harte, and who so euer haue so, they can by no benefites be brought vnto a god vpright confidence and truste. Wherefore men doe this way also enormiously offende agaynst the goodnesse of God.

and

The abusing of gods goodnesse.

3 The thirde way, and in a plaine contrary sorte, they doe offende agaynst the goodnesse of God, whiche be in deede voyde of mistrust, but doe so preposterously presume vppon it, that though they liue neuer so euill, yet neuertheles they doe truste to be saued by it, and vpon this confidence & boldnesse, do sinne more carelesly, for that that they thynke it not possible, that so great a goodnesse as is reported of God, should condemne any man vnto euerlasting fire, though he sinne neuer so much. They consider nothyng of him, but that he is moste highly good, yea very goodnesse it self: and this is true, but yet withal God is so good, that he is also a iust iudge. True goodnesse dothe not exclude iustice, and iustice is not contrary vnto goodnesse, but vnto naughtinesse, and so we may right well say, God is good, Ergo, he is not euill. It followeth not when we say, God is good, that therefore he will condemne no man. Goodnesse is not without reason in God, such as there is in fruitefull trées, whiche doe yelde their fruites indifferently vnto all, not for their aboundance of goodnesse, but bycause they doe lacke the reason of discretion and difference. The goodnesse in God is not after that sorte. For whereas he doth generally prouide and care for all things, he dothe this not in a lack of reason, but in a certayne exceedyng aboundance of goodnesse, wherevnto for all that, is adioyned a conuenient discretion, wherby he doth dispence and bestow vpõ euery man, asmuch, when, how, and as long as he listeth. He wil not haue his goodnesse despised, hee will not haue it dyrue into doubte, he will not haue it abused in a preposterous and rash confidence. God occupieth bothe his handes alike: with one he bestoweth hys benefites, and in the other he holdeth a rodde to punishe the contemners, mistrustfull, and the abusers of his goodnesse. On the one hande, he is passyng measure good, on the other, he is sterne and terrible. The Apostle dyd set forth both to be considered of vs, the goodnesse and the seuerenesse of God, whē he sayd, See therefore the goodnesse and the seuerenesse of God: his seuerenesse towardes them whiche fell, his goodnesse towardes thée, if thou continue in his goodnesse. Wherefore they bée but halfe sighted in mynde, which do consider in God eyther his seueritie onely with the Marcionites, or else his goodnesse onely with these abusers thereof. But the wise & discrete mynister of Goddes worde, will bée well ware, that he will not set forth the seuerenesse of God, vnto the carefull and ouercaste mindes, whereby they might haue occasion more and more to dispeyre of theyr saluation, neyther will he preache and declare how good God is vnto them whiche be careleste, and such as do perswade themselues, and other when they doe sinne, that all is safe & well through the great goodnesse of God, whereby they may yet sinne the more carelesly and boldely. Like as goodnesse and seuerenesse, be two sundry things in GOD, so mens mindes do differ, of whiche some be desperate and some to bolde. So that the minister muste with cõuenient discretiõ teach some, how seuere God is towardes them, whiche doe not repent, and some hée must perswade as effectually as he can, that God is exceedingly good, kanozable and mercyfull, towardes all them whiche doe amende and desire to be forgyuen. And thus haue wée spoken of ỹ goodnesse of God, so much as may profite them which do desire to apply themselues vnto it.

Of vnlike the generall prouidence of God.

God is of both hãdes.

Rom. 11.

Goodnesse cannot bee without loue.

Matth. 5

The vnlike dome and discretiõ of the faythfull minister of Christe.

Goodnesse in God is not without reason.

Of the Louingnesse of God towards Man.

THe holy Scripture doth not only attribute goodnesse vnto God, but loue also: besides that the nature of goodnesse is such, that lyke as fire can not be without warmth, so the goodnesse can not be without loue. Wherefore the matter it selfe séemeth to require, that after wée haue spoken of the goodnesse of God, we shoulde consequently also speake of his loue. For they be so naturally linked togither, that the one doth immediatly folow the other. Wherefore the Apostle also, when he would cõmende the loue of God declared in Christe Iesu, hée did place his goodnesse before, saying: But whē the goodnesse, and loue of God our sauiour appeared, &c. So he did sette forth the goodnesse and loue of God, to be ioynly considered in the worke of our redemption, and why he did so, we will declare hereafter when the place serueth for it in this treatie.

Whether that Loue do agree vnto God.

FIrst we must consider whereas Loue is attributed vnto God, whether that the same may agrée vnto the Maiestie of God or no. For if wée consider the affection of loue, whereby he whiche loueth, is wholy drawen vnto the seruice of him whō he loueth, so that he dothe séeme to pertayne more vnto him whome hée loueth than to his own self, it should séeme that loue dothe not agrée vnto his Maiestie, who as he is Lorde of all, so for the estate of his Maiestie, he is most frée of all. Besides that, if we do cõsider the goodnesse of God not seuerally, but ioynly with his Maiestie, it séemeth to be rather conuenient that it shoulde be loued and serued, than that it should loue and be bounde vnto him whome it dothe loue. These thinges may be imagined, when we haue respect vnto the most excellent Maiestie of the Godhead, and those affections of loue, bée attributed vnto God when he dothe loue, whiche doe chaunce vnto man when man loueth.

Therefore let vs conſider, what is to be conſidered in this matter, firſt of the Maieſtie of God, ſecõdly, of his goodneſſe ſeuerally, and then ioyntly, and thirdly, how mens affections be attributed vnto God.

No vile thing to be attributed vnto God.

1 Firſte, it is conuenient in any wiſe, that we do attribute vnto gods Maieſtie, no baſe, nor vile thing, no bonde of ſeruice vnto any, but all things moſt principal, high, excellẽt, free and Godly. Now the holy Scripture doth attribute vnto it, loue. For ſo God loueth the worlde (ſayth the onely begotten of God) that he gaue his ſonne, &c. And in ỹ firſt epiſtle of Iohn: Let vs loue God, for almuche as he loued vs firſte, yea God ſayth he, is loue: ſo ỹ loue is no baſe, vile and ſeruile matter, but rather hygh, excellent, free, and not vnmete for the Maieſtie of God. It is altogither more noble & prayſe worthy to loue, than to be loued: like as to doe good alſo, is more godly and noble than to receyue a good turne. And who will ſay, that it is vnfit for God to be loued, whereas he doth requyre it of his people, ſaying: Thou ſhalte loue thy Lorde God with all thy harte, and all thy ſoule, and al thy ſtrength: &c. So that if the ſame whiche is of leſſe commendation be not miſlyked of the Maieſtie of God, how ſhoulde he deſpiſe that, whiche is a more excellent thing, and deſerueth more cõmendation? Should a kyng diſdayne to loue his ſubiectes, becauſe that he is in much higher eſtate than they: whereas this vertue when it is ſoũd in a kyng, doth purchaſe hym more prayſe, than if he be exceedingly beloued of his ſubiects. So that the excellencie of Maieſtie dothe nothyng hinder the nature of God, but that loue may well become it, and well agree withall.

1. Ioh. 4.

The nature of goodneſſe.

2 Secondly, if wee do conſider the goodneſſe of GOD, there is almoſte nothyng that dothe better agree vnto it, than the loue whiche ſeemeth to ſpryng out of the ſame. For lyke as the nature of naughtineſſe is ſuche, that the proper qualitie thereof is to hate all things, and to be maliciouſly diſpoſed towardes all menne, ſo the nature of goodneſſe is contrarywiſe, ſo that it is the propertie therof to loue, and to be kindely diſpoſed towardes all. Wherefore either we muſt firſte bereaue goodneſſe frõ the nature of God, or elſe therewithall attribute loue vnto him. For the one cãnot be ſequeſtred from the other, becauſe of theyr naturall and vnſeparable coniunction.

The coniunction of goodneſſe & maieſtie in God.

But if you conſider the goodneſſe and Maieſtie of God ioyntly, I beſeech you, what can be more agreeable for the good God and Prince of al, than to loue his ſubiects, whereas malice and Maieſtie be ioyned togither, there no doubt is more place for hatred, thã for the loue of ỹ ſubiects, which we ſee betideth in tiraũts. Let vs therefore learne on the other ſide contrary vnto that what we ought to conſider of the ioyning togither of Gods goodneſſe and his Maieſtie.

3 Thirdly, as touchyng mens affections which doe go with the loue of mã, it is not mete that we ſhould refer them vnto the nature of God in that ſorte as they be founde in menne. In the nature of man, loue dothe beleue all things, doth truſt all things, doth wepe with them which doe wepe, and is weake with them

which

whiche be weake, is it conuenient, that the lyke be referred vnto the loue of God? The Scripture dothe attribute many things vnto God by figure and ſimilitude of mans affections, whiche doe not ſo agree vnto the nature of God, as they doe vnto our nature. And yet for all that, it is not without reaſon, that it dothe ſpeake vnto menne in this wiſe of God, to apply it ſelfe vnto our capacitie. The diſcrete and godly perſon muſt wiſely make hys difference betwixt thoſe things whiche doe agree vnto the nature of God, and thoſe whiche can not agree therewithall, & in the ſpeaches of the holy ſcripture, not to wreſte the wordes, but reuerẽtly to embrace thoſe things, which he ſet forth to be vnderſtanded after the meanyng of the ſpirite.

Whiche be the kyndes of Gods Loue.

AS there is not in God a diuers and ſundry goodneſſe, ſo there is not in him a diuers and ſundry loue: but as there is in him one ſimple and ſelf ſame goodneſſe, ſo there is alſo in him one ſimple and ſelfe ſame loue. And yet that ſelf ſame loue of his, is diſtincted and ordered in his kindes. The ſelf ſame God, as touchyng the perſons of the holy Trinitie, is Father, and ſecõdly maker of all things that be, and thirdly ſauiour of mankinde. As father, he loueth his onely begotten ſonne, as creator, he loueth all things whiche he hath made, as Sauiour of mankynde, hee loueth menne: wherefore he is by the Greeke worde called φιλάνθρωπος, and this loue of hys towardes mankynde is diſtincted. For he loueth his Sonne, & generally he loueth all creatures, & al mankind, and he hath a ſingular fauour vnto them, whome he choſe vnto hym before the makyng of the worlde: and he loueth the good. One ſelfe ſame good man of a houſe, as a good huſband, doth ſpecially loue his wyfe, and as a good father he loueth his chyldren aboue others, and as a good houſeholder he loueth all hys houſehold, as a good neyghbour hee dothe vſe him louingly among hys neighbours, and generally as a good man, he loueth al men, and hateth no man: and yet for all that, as there is in him one ſelfe ſame goodneſſe, ſo there is alſo in him one ſelfe ſame vertue of diſtinction or diuiſion all one in generall, and yet ordered and diſtincted & deuided by diuers ſortes and kindes. So that by this loue we do finde fiue ſortes in ỹ loue of God, as the loue of his ſonne, the loue of his creatures, ỹ loue of mã, the loue of the elects, and the loue of the good.

Fiue ſ of loue

The firſt ſort of Gods loue.

THe Scholemen doe trauayle to determine what manner of loue of God is in the holy Trinitie, much more buſie to ſearche things hidden in the holy Trinitie, than furniſhed to open thoſe thynges whiche bee ſet forth in the holy Scriptures. And herein theyr queſtions be, whether the Father and the Sonne doe loue one an other in the holy Spirite: and whether that loue be eſſentiall, or intellectuall or of propertie: and giuen & recompenſed? The Maſter of the ſentences dothe moue a queſtion of the mutuall loue of the Father

The loue of the ſon of God.

Father and the Sonne, which for al that he dothe playnely confeſſe, that he is not able to expounde & declare. Therfore let vs leaue the ſcrupuloſitie of the Scholemen, and fall to the ſimplicitie of the holy ſcriptures.

1 Iohn.5. That the Father loueth the Sonne, the Sonne himſelfe dothe teſtifie, where he ſayth: The Father loueth the Sonne. And: Therfore the Father loueth me. And agayne: Like as the Father loueth me, ſo I doe loue you alſo. Thou haſt loued them, as thou haſt loued me, and that the loue wherby thou loueſt me, be in them, and I alſo in them. And the Father hymſelfe dothe teſtifie, that he loueth his Sonne, ſaying from heauē: This is my beloued ſonne, heare him. And whē Iohn Baptiſt heard this voice from heauen, then Chriſte himſelfe teſtified alſo and ſayde: The Father loueth the ſonne, and hath giuen him all things into hys handes. Thus much we haue in the Scriptures of the Goſpell, whereby wē be ſimply taught, and without al ſcrupuloſitie, that the ſonne is loued of the father. And that the Father is alſo beloued agayne of his ſonne, it is chiefly declared by that, that the ſonne became obedient vnto him, vnto the death of the croſſe. So the ſonne himſelf ſaid: But to the intēt that the worlde may knowe that I loue my father, and that as my father hath giuen me cōmaundement ſo I doe: Ariſe, let vs goe hence. And howe muche good it doth to the confirmatiō of our faith, if wē doe abſolutely and without doubte beleeue, that Chriſte the onely begotten of God is loued of the father, wē haue declared in an other place in our Commentaries vpon

1 Iohn.10. Iohn.15.

Iohn.17.

Iohn.14.

John, where wē haue noted ſuche things as do belong vnto this conſideratiō of the loue of God, touching his ſonne, whiche we make the firſt ſorte and kinde of the loue of God.

The ſecond ſorte of the Loue of God.

The loue of creatures in God. Gen.1.

THis is the loue wherin God as creator loueth al his creatures, in as much he created them all very good at the beginnyng, accordyng vnto that: And God ſawe all thyng that he had made, and they were very good. Bothe theſe ſhoulde be farre from the nature of God, if he ſhould eyther make euill things, and loue them after they were made: eyther make good things, and not loue them when they were made: Neyther is it to bee imagined, that he loued hys workes at that tyme when he firſte made them, and that afterwardes this loue decayed by the proceſſe of ſo many hundred yeares, and fell to be a lothſomeneſſe. God forbid. For the loue of God is as immutable, as his very nature and goodneſſe is immutable. Neither doth it hinder this loue at all, that the creature is ſubiect vnto vanitie and bōdage of corruption. For whatſoeuer it is, it is his worke, for he made it ſubiect vnto vanitie, by his moſte wiſe and vnſearchable purpoſe vnto vs. For the Apoſtle dothe not ſay ſimply, Eache creature is vayne, but each creature is ſubiecte vnto vanitie: And he abideth not willingly, bycauſe of him who made it ſubiecte in hope. Of whiche wordes wē haue noted in our Commentaries vpon the Epiſtle vnto the Romaines. Therefore it

The loue of God not changed into lothſomneſſe.

Rom.8.

it is not without reaſon, that the author of the booke of Sapience ſayth in this wiſe: Thou loueſt all things that be, & hateſt none of thoſe things which thou haſt made.

Of this place there is double profite to be taken, for firſt it ſerueth to this intent, that we alſo in reſpect ỹ we be his creatures, may beléeue that wo be eſtéemed & well regarded of him. Secondly, that we conſider vpon the vſing of the creatures, that we vſe thē not after our fleſhly luſte, or handle any of them after an euill demeanour, for that cā not pleaſe the creator of them, of whom they be loued as his workmanſhip. It is incredible to ſée, howe greate an abuſe of the creatures foloweth of that, that there be very fewe whiche conſider them to be the workemanſhippe of God, and to be beloued of him.

The thirde ſorte of the Loue of God.

THis we ſayde is ỹ loue towards man, wherin he loueth ſpecially aboue other creatures all mankinde in generall, which fauour is worthy of al reuerence and admiration. If it were reported of God that he loueth his Angels, it were no great wōder, bycauſe of the heauenly nature, puritie, excellēcie and eſtate of the Angels. And yet for all that it is in no place of Scriptures ſo ſayde, that he loueth his Angels, as he is declared to loue man. Surely he loueth his Angels which he created, and would haue thē to bée his ſpecial miniſters: but hée loueth men aboue them, and therefore hée would rather be called the louer of men, than the louer of Angels, he made mā euen at the beginning like vnto his owne image, & adorned him to the likeneſſe of God, & ſet him aboue all other creatures, which ſpeciall dignitie, and worthyneſſe doth alſo declare his ſpecial loue vnto man. We call him commonly a horſemaiſter, whiche taketh pleaſure in breeding, & bringyng vp of horſes, & taketh ſuche delite in the race, that neglecting all other paſſimes he gyueth himſelfe wholy thereunto. So God is called the man louer, for bycauſe he hath not giuē ſo great worthineſſe vnto Angels, nor to any other of his creatures, as he hath giuen vnto man. This loue of God towards man the Prophet tōſidered in the viij. Pſalme, where with an admiratiō he crieth out, ſaying: What is man that thou arte mindefull of him, and the ſonne of man that thou doeſt viſite him? and thou haſt diminiſhed him a litle from GOD, thou haſte crowned him with glory and honour. Thou haſte made him ruler ouer all the workes of thy handes, & layde all vnder his féete, all ſhéepe and oxen, and the cattell of the fielde the foules of the ayre, and the fiſh of the ſea, whiche do paſſe the trades of the ſeas. O Lord our Lord, how noble is thy name in the whole earth? In which wordes his conſideration is bente wholly vnto thoſe thyngs whiche we reade in Geneſis, of the creation and glorifying of manne. Wherein is declared the firſt argument of Gods lowe towardes man: whereof we haue ſpoken in our Cōmentaries vpon Geneſis and vpon the Pſalmes.

Pſalm.8

Gen.1.

2 The ſecond argument of Gods loue towardes mankinde is, that

The ſecod argument of Gods loue towards mā.

he forſoke vs not after our fall, whē we were worthy to haue had bene forſaken and loſte, but dothe ſo prouide for vs in all poyntes, that wee haue not only wherewithall to liue, but alſo to liue well and orderly, whiche parte of his loue wee may rightly call the prouidence of God toward vs. That ſame the Prophet doth touche in two wordes, when he ſayth. That thou arte mindefull of him, and that thou doeſt viſite hym, and he meaneth nothyng elſe thereby but the ſpeciall prouidence of God, wherein he declareth himſelfe to be carefull of the eſtate and caſe of meane. And the Apoſtle in the Actes, dothe by the way touche this prouidence, for aſmuch as was conuenient for the Gentiles. And how ſpeciall a care he had of the Iſraelites the holy Scriptures doe teſtifie, and Moſes doth knit it vp in few wordes, ſaying, the portion of God is his people, and Iacob the corde of hys inheritaunce, he founde hym in a deſerte lande, in a place of terroure and waſte of wildernelſe, he brought hym aboute and taught hym, and kepte hym as the ball of his eye. Like an Eagle enticeyng his young ones to flie, and as hée flewe ouer them, hée couered them with his wings, and he lifted him vp and caried him vpon his ſhoulders. But this matter of Gods prouidence towardes mankinde is ſo infinite, that we may better expreſſe the ſame in one worde than in many bookes, if we ſay from our harte that GOD hath care of vs.

Act. 14. & 17.

Deut. 32.

3 The third argument of Gods loue towardes man is moſte excellent, and wonderfull paſſyng the capacitie of all mans wiſedome. This was declared in the diſpenſation, and beſt owyng vpon vs of the word incarnate, wherein God was made man, to the ende that man ſhoulde bée annuncied into the felowſhippe of Gods nature. The worde (ſayth he,) was made fleſhe, and dwelte in vs, and wée ſawe his glory, as the glory of the onely begotten from the Father, full of grace, and truthe. The truthe and excellencie of the loue of God towards man, could haue bene declared by no more euident argument, than by the incarnation of the worde, where God taking vpon him not the nature of Angels, but of mā, was made not an Angel but a man. Could there haue betided any greater dignitie vnto our nature by the loue of God towardes man, than to be perſonally and bodily ioyned vnto the nature of God, in the onely begotten ſonne of God? Man could not haue drawen any nérer vnto the Godhead, vnleſſe he had bene altogither chaūged into it. Which had not bene conuenient for the natures neither of God nor of man.

The third argument of the loue of God towardes man.

4 The fourth argument of the loue of God towardes man, is in the death of the onely begotten, whereunto he was deliuered for the redēption of our kynde. For aſmuche as chyldren ſayth the Apoſtle, hath to doe with fleſhe, and bloud, he was alſo likewyſe made partaker of them, to the intent that by his death, hée might abolithe him, who had the rule of death, that is the Diuell, &c. And whereupon came this? In this ſaith Iohn appeared the loue of God towardes vs, that hée ſent his ſonne into the worlde to be the propitiation for our ſinnes. And the Apoſtle: God (ſayth he) doth ſette forth hys loue towardes vs in that, that when we were yet ſinners, Chriſte died for vs. If God be for vs, who is againſt vs, who ſpared not hys owne ſonne, but gaue hym for vs al, and howe is it poſſible but that hée ſhould gyue vs all things alſo with him, &c. Who ſhal diſſeauer vs from the loue of God? And the only begotten of God himſelf ſayth: ſo God loued the worlde (ſayth he) that he gaue his onely begotten ſonne, that euery one whiche beléeueth in him, ſhoulde not periſh, but haue life euerlaſting. So that by the worlde he meaneth all mankynde.

The fourth argument of Gods loue towardes man.

Hebr. 2.

1. Iohn 4.

Rom. 5.

5 The fifte argument of Gods Loue towards man, is in the diſpenſation or diſtributyng of our redēption, wherein is comprehended the generall callyng, in that by the Goſpell of his kyngdome he calleth all the nations of the whole worlde vnto the heauenly grace, and promiſeth euerlaſtyng lyfe vnto all that doe beléeue in hys ſonne. The Prophete when hée woulde ſet forth the grace and fauour of God ſpecially declared vnto the Iſraelites, hée cried out he hath not done the lyke to any nation, and wée may iuſtely crie out hée hath not done the lyke vnto the Iſraelites onely, but vnto all other nations of the worlde alſo. Thus much briefly of the thyrde parte of Gods loue, which we called the loue of mankinde.

The fifte argument of Gods loue.

The fourth kynde of Gods Loue.

WE doe call this that Loue of God, wherein he doth ſpecially loue them, which be choſen to be his flocke, and to the adoption of chyldren, before the eſtablithment of the worlde, as wée may ſée in the firſte and ſecond chapter to the Epheſians, where he ſayth: For his great loue whereby he loued vs, &c. And to the Romaines: I loued Iacob, and hated Eſau. In this loue we doe alſo comprehende al the reſt of things, which by it dothe befall to the elect in the matter of our ſaluation, as predeſtination, calling, the gifte of faith, and of the ſpyrite, iuſtification, regeneration, and renewyng of our mynde and lyfe. In déede the Apoſtle dothe referre all theſe thyngs vnto the goodneſſe and loue of God, where as hée ſayth vnto Titus: But after that the goodneſſe and loue of God our Sauiour appeared, hée ſaued vs not by the workes of righteouſneſſe whiche wée had done, but through hys mercy, by the bathe of regeneration and renewyng of the holye Spirite, whiche hée powred out vpon vs abundantly by Ieſu Chriſte our Sauiour, to the ende, that beyng iuſtified by his grace, we ſhould be made heyres accordyng vnto the hope of euerlaſtyng life, &c. So that in déede thoſe thyngs whiche hée rehearſeth here, doe not belong vnto the generall loue of God towardes manne, but vnto the ſpeciall loue of the elects, as ſaluation, regeneration, and renewyng by the holy ſpirite: iuſtification, and the inheritaunce of euerlaſtyng life. For thoſe matters doe appertayne to the electes onely, whiche onely be alſo partakers of the ſame.

Eph. 1

Tit. 3

The fifte kinde of Gods Loue.

The loue of God towards the good. 2.Cor.9.

THis we sayde, is the Loue of the god, bycause that they bee good. So he loueth a pleasant giuer. And I doe call god, the iuste, honest, gentle, meeke, milde, and mercifull, &c. all whiche he loueth in that, that they be suche as louing of true goodnesse, beyng himselfe most good. For it is not possible but that he whiche is good, muste loue goodnesse, and exceedingly delite in them that be good, for the goodnesse sake, according vnto our old saying, Like to like.

VVhether hur the cause come of vs vvhy vve be loued of god.

But you will say: Eyea, there is occasion ministred vnto God from vs, wherfore he dothe loue vs, so that it cōmeth more of our deserte, than of his goodnesse & grace, that he loueth vs. How then did he loue vs before we were borne? how when we were yet sinners, and nothyng lesse than good? And he we dothe the Apostle set not our goodnesse, but Gods, before his loue? yea he sayth expressly, Not of the workes which we haue done, but according vnto his mercy hee hath saued vs; if God doe loue the good, bycause that they be good:

How God loueth the good.

I answere, these poinkes be not cōtrary one to an other. The loue of God, whereby wee be saued, hath no cause of oures, but of his goodnesse. Wherefore the Apostle did of purpose sette his goodnesse before, as the cause of hys loue towardes man, to the intēt that nothyng herein might be ascribed vnto our strength. For this principall and originall loue of God, whiche commeth of no other but of his goodnesse, by which we bee made good when wee be euill, dothe not hinder the disposition and nature of goodnesse in God, but that he may also loue the good, which he himselfe maketh good by his spirite. For he which of his infinite goodnesse dothe loue vs without cause, howe shoulde not he loue vs yet the more, taking a cause to loue vs? He which is so good to loue vs before we be yet good, how should he not loue vs the more when we be made good? He whiche loueth vs whē we be yet vngodly, will surely loue vs ỹ more whē we be godly. He whiche loueth his enimies and backe frēds, who will not beleue, but that he will loue his frends & felows in house? Doth not the courteous mā esteeme the siluer before it be fined and tried? & who doubteth but that he will sette more store by it, if it bee once tried & fined? Wherefore there is no reason that eyther bycause of the inchaūgable loue of God, the occasion whereof is not in vs, but in his goodnesse, as wee sayde we should denie the loue of God towardes the good, and thynke it in vayne, to followe goodnesse, and iustice, eyther bycause of the loue of God towardes the good, forsake the grace of Gods loue towardes man, by whiche onely wee be saued, and attribute the causes of our saluation not vnto hym, but vnto our owne righteousnesse.

The loue of God to be considered of vs two vvayes.

Therefore we muste consider the loue of God towardes vs in two respectes. Firste in respecte that he loueth vs of his owne meere goodnesse, vpon no cause receyued of vs, not only as the vvorke of his hands, but also as memie, whiche hee loueth peculiarly aboue all other hys creatures, and not as men onely, but as elect, whome he chose vnto hym not yet borne, before the makyng of the worlde, and whome he redeemed by the death of hys onely begotten sonne, and iustified and saued by his free mercy: in al which thyngs there is none of our owne wherevpon wee may glory, but lyke as wee be altogither the worke of his handes, so al our life also, all our conseruation, redemption, iustification, and saluatiō, dothe depende vpon his franke and free loue.

The fayth of Gods loue dothe chase away all doubte.

1 This firste consideration of the loue of God towardes man, if it be earnest and assured, and taken in the liuely and true sense thereof, dothe wipe cleane out of our hartes all doubte of our saluation, so that wee may boldely say with the Apostle, What then? If God be of our side, who is against vs? who did not also spare his owne sonne, but gaue him for vs all, how will he not also gyue vs all things with him? Who shall make complaynt against the electes of God? It is God whiche dothe iustifie, who is it that can condemne? It is Iesus christ which is dead, yea which is also risen vp againe, which is at the right hande of God, whiche doth also make meanes for vs.

It maketh vs vnseparable from the loue of God.

2 Secondly, it shal make vs vnseparable from so excedyng loue of God, so that wee can not be drawen from it by any aduersitie, & that wee may say with the Apostle: Who shall seperate vs from the loue of God? trouble or daunger, famine, nakednesse, perill, persecution, or the swoorde? as it is written: For thy sake we be mortified all the day, we be esteemed as sheepe to the slaughter, but in all these we haue the vpper hande, bycause of him whiche loued vs. For I am sure and sure, that neyther death, nor lyfe, neyther Angels, principates nor powers, neyther thyngs instant, nor thyngs to come, neither might nor height, nor death, neyther any other creature is able to seperate vs from the loue of God, whiche is in Christe Iesu our Lorde.

It maketh vs to loue God.

3 Thirdly, it shal binde vs also in a cōtter-loue vnto our louyng God, to loue him againe with al our hart, whereunto his cōmaundement doth also call vs, and the aduice of the Apostle, which saith: Let vs loue God, for asmuch as he loued vs firste.

VVhat faith of loue of to the dorh in vs.

The loue of God is to be considered of vs the seconde way, in respect that he loueth the good, iust, faithfull and obedient persons vnto hym, &c. not that he loueth none but such, but that he loueth suche yet so much the more. This consideratiō shal worke thus in vs, that we shal wel employ the grace of Gods loue once receyued, and become the more studious in all kynde of goodnesse, godlinesse & iustice, knowyng that it is specially required of vs, that the more benefits we do receyue of God, not deseruing any, yea rather deseruing euil, & that we receiue thē by his only loue, we may so much the more studie to be thankefull towardes him, and to make vs the meter to receyue hys loue towardes the good.

Of that vvhiche the Scholemen doe say, that man knovveth not whether he be worthy of Loue or of Hate.

FOr asmuch as we be fallen into this matter, we cā wade no further vnleſſe we do firſt conſider that Schole point, where they do vphold, that the Chriſtian manne dothe not know whether that he be worthy of the hatered or loue of God, but that it ſhall appeare at length in the world to come: whiche doctrine they ſuppoſe is grounded vppon the ninth chapiter of the Eccleſiaſtes, where the olde tranſlation is thus: There be iuſte, and there bee wiſe, and their workes be in the hande of God, and yet for all that, manne knoweth not whether that he be worthy of loue or hate, but all things be reſerued vncertayne, vntill the time to come. Vppon this they doe gather, that no man can be aſſured of the grace and loue of God, & of his ſalvation, but by ſome ſpeciall reuelation, whiche happeneth vnto the perfecteſt ſorte, and how farre this doctrine is wide from the truthe: and howe pernicious it is, we will firſte ſée, and then we will way the place of the Eccleſiaſtes.

Eccle.9.

That God requireth of vs a good truſt in him out of the old Teſtament.

1 Firſt, the whole ſcripture doth teſtifie, that God doth chiefly require this of his people, that they haue a clére harte towardes him, and that they boldly truſt for nothing but the beſt at his grace. Thereof commeth that aſſuredneſſe of couenant, wherein he promiſeth that he will be the God of his people and of their ſéede, to teſtifie vnto them moſte aſſuredly, his good wil and ſpeciall loue. And therfore be ſo many promiſes in the holy Scriptures, ſo many ſignes and ſtrange tokés, ſo many benefits and good turnes, whereby hée woulde make them moſte aſſured of his good will. And wherefore was all this done, but bicauſe he loued them. For they whiche do loue, ſtande all vpon this poynt, to make theyr loue many wayes moſte certayne, and out of all doubte vnto them whome they doe loue. And of this loue of God, Moſes dothe admonith the people where he ſayth: God hath not ioyned himſelf vnto you, neyther hath choſen you bycauſe that you doe paſſe all other nations in number, whereas you be the feweſt of all peoples, but bicauſe the Lorde loueth you, and kéepeth his othe, whiche he ſwore vnto your Fathers. And againe: The Lordes people is a péece of him, and Jacob is the lande or corde of his inheritance, &c. Which place we alleaged alſo before, and therevpon came that continuall trauayle and endeuor of the Prophetes, in that they dyd beate ſtill into the heads of the Iſraelites this loue of God, wherevpon they did ſometimes alſo put them in remembrance of the couenant, & ſometimes they made it a bonde of wedlocke betwirt God and them, as we may perceyue in Ezechiel. And Eſay dothe compare the loue of God towardes his people, vnto the loue of a mother whē ſhe doth moſt tenderly embrace the chylde of hir owne bodie. Which loue is commonly the ſtrongeſt of al others, yea and he dothe preferre it before this loue, when he ſayth: Can a woman forgette hyr babe, and not haue pitie vppon the chylde of hyr owne wombe? yea although ſhe doe forget it, yet for all that I will not forget thée. And Dauid compareth it vnto a fatherly loue, ſaying: Like as the father hath pitie vpō his children, ſo God hath pitie vpon them whiche do feare him, for as much as he knoweth our making. And Moſes ſayth:

Deuter.7.

Deut.32.

Ezechiel.

Eſay.49.

Pſalm.103.

ſayth: God himſelf calleth his people Iſraell his onely begotten ſonne. Of whence and to what purpoſe is all this, if the Eccleſiaſtes would haue a man not to be aſſured and certaine of the loue of God? Shall we beleue, that he woulde be contrary vnto ſo many teſtimonies of the loue of God? but theſe be ſufficient prooues out of the old Teſtament.

Next, if we will conſider the qualitie and conditiō of the new Teſtament, we ſhal find that the Chriſtian faith and religion can beare nothing leſſe than this doubtyng of Goddes Loue. For firſte of all, what is the Fayth of Chriſtian folke? Is it not an aſſured grounde of things to bée hoped for, and an euident cōcepuyng of thyngs not apparant, wherby wée doe certainely beléeue, that we be redéemed by the bloud of Chriſte, and that we be made the chyldren and heyres of God by his grace and loue onely, without any of our deſertes? If wée doe beléeue the wordes of Chriſt, we do beléeue alſo, that God ſo loued this world, that he gaue his only begotten ſonne for vs, of which loue we ſpake aſmuch before, as we thought good.

Arguments out of the new teſtament that we be loued of god.

Ephe.

Regeneration.

Rom.8.

2 Secondly, what is a Chriſtian man, but a man regenerate by the ſpirite of Chriſt? For he which hath not the ſpirite of Chriſte, he is not his, ſayth the Apoſtle. Howe can a Chriſtian manne then doubte of the loue of God towardes him, whiche beléeueth that his onely begotten is giuen for him? and whiche hath the ſpirite of grace, by the teſtimony of the whiche he is perſwaded that hée is the ſonne of God, and crieth Abba father. I pray you wherfore ſerueth al this, if we muſt yet doubte of the loue of God? what remayneth now to aſſure vs thereof? Lette it be counted for nothing, that he created vs, & gaue vs lyke, that he peiſeth vs ſofte, and beſtoweth this light vpon vs, that he heapeth vs vp vndeſerueng with ſo many giftes of ſoule & body, and of wealth alſo. I ſay, lette all this be nothyng what matter is that, that he redéemed vs, when wée were loſt? and that by his onely begotten ſonne? what is it, that he doth poure his ſpirite vpon vs? what is that that he dothe adopte vs for hys chilozē, and to be fellow heyres with his onely begotten ſonne? What is it that he hath placed vs in his ſonne at his right hande? Shal we ſay that all this is nothyng alſo?

Cō loue.

3 Thirdly, how can we loue God, if we doe doubt of his loue towards vs? For loue when it is knowen by good triall, it draweth loue againe vnto it. Who can loue him hartily, of whoſe loue againe towards himſelfe he ſtandeth in a doubt? and this is commaunded vs from God, yea and for this very cauſe it is the chief point of true godlineſſe that we loue God with al our harte, al our ſoule, & all our ſtrength. Now to what purpoſe dothe he requyre of vs to loue him, if he loue not vs? what profite, or glory thereof can turne to him, if he be a thouſand wayes loued of vncleane ſinners? What kyng woulde deſire to be loued of men, that be nothing worth? Wherevpon ryſeth it then that the Maieſtie of God will be loued of vs, vnleſſe it be, that hée firſt loueth vs? Firſte, bycauſe there cā be no other cauſe therof, but ý very loue it ſelfe, wherby he loueth vs.

Secondly, for that that we can neuer loue him aright, vnleſſe we be kindled by the feeling of his Loue.

4 Fourthly, what ſhall wée ſay of the Sacraments of our faith and religiõ, what be they elſe yea by the teſtimony of the fathers, but the viſible ſignes of the inuiſible grace? In caſe wée can not bée aſſured of the grace, to what ende did he ordeyne, & giue the vſe of the ſignes? If the Papiſts doe doubte of the grace of God vpõ what faith do they Baptiſe their infants. For how can he beleue that his childe is acceptable vnto God, whiche dothe doubte of his grace towards him? Do we not Baptiſe our children vpon this faith, wherby we doe beléeue that not only we which doe beleeue in Chriſte, but our children alſo be made partakers of the bleſſyng of God whiche is in Chriſt Jeſu? Agayne, with what fayth ſhall we vſe the Sacramente of the body and bloud of the Lord, if we be driuen to doubte of the loue & grace of God? Wherfore is it that Chriſt died for vs? wherefore is it, that he dothe féede vs with his body & bloud vnto euerlaſting life? wherfore is it, that he taketh the bread, & the cup, & offereth it vs, ſaying: Take, and eat, this is my body, which ſhal be giuen for you. Item, Take, & drinke you al of this, this cuppe is the new Teſtamẽt in my bloud, which ſhall be ſhed for you, and for many vnto the forgiueneſſe of ſinnes: except that he determined thereby to make vs faſte & ſure of the grace of God? Wherefore is it, I ſay, that he requireth of vs, that beyng mindefull of him wée ſhould cõmunicate of this bread and cuppe of his, and make report of his death with thankes giuing? Is not this the nature of loue, ỹ he deſireth to be in their remembrance, whome he doth exceedingly loue? How ſhall we giue thanks vnto our redéemer, if we do doubte of his Loue & grace? Therfore whether we do looke vnto the new or olde Teſtament, we ſhal finde nothing elſe in them bothe, but the continuall and moſt euident declaratiõ of the loue of God towards man, wherein his good pleaſure is diuers, and ſundry wayes ſet forth vnto vs, which is alſo to perceyued and taken by true Chriſtian meme, that they be well contented, conſtantly to ſuffer and beare any aduerſitie or trouble layde vpõ them any way for the ſame. Wherefore this doubte of the loue of God, whiche the Schole doctors doe dreame of, can take no place with them.

But they doe ſay, Wée doe not denie, but that the church of Chriſt, whiche is his ſpouſe, his body and fleſhe, and bone of hys bones, is aſſured of the loue of God towardes it, but wée doe ſay, that eache Chriſtian man ſeuerally, is not aſſured thereof, vnleſſe it come by ſpeciall reuelation, as by ſome Aungell, or ſome viſion, &c. I aunſwere. Howe can the Churche bée aſſured of the loue of God, if euery Chriſtian perſon particularly bée driuen to doubt thereof? What is the Churche elſe, but the bodie of the faythfull Chriſtians, wherin euery man is a member, that is a true Chriſtian. If then euery member of this body doe doubte of the loue of God towards it ſelfe, howe ſhall the whole body bée aſſured thereof. How dothe the bodie beléeue, or how is it aſſured, but in the members thereof? Howe ſhall Chriſt loue the Churche his body, if he loue not euerye member thereof? How ſhall we ſay, that a Prince doth loue his Citie, vnleſſe he do loue the Citizens all and ſingular? And how can a Citie be aſſured of the fauor of the Prince, if euery Citizen ſhall bée in doubt thereof? If euery Chriſtian man maye not in aſſured and doubtleſſe faithe applye vnto hymſelfe, the loue of Chriſte, as hée loueth hys Church, howe is it then that Paule ſayeth erpreſſly of himſelfe: I do liue in the faithe of the Sonne of God, whiche loued me, and gaue himſelfe for me? No doubte he was aſſured thereby of ỹ loue of Chriſt towards him. He doth not ſay, Gaue himſelfe for his Church, but which gaue himſelfe for me. He dothe not gather vpon the ſpeciall reuelations and viſions which he had receyued, when he was rapt into the third Heauen, but vpon a common argument, whereby the loue of Chriſte was declared generally to all the faithfull by a generall redemption, made by his deathe vpon the Croſſe, to the intente theſe doubters ſhoulde not ſay, Paule was an Apoſtle, and as an Apoſtle hée might be aſſured by ſome reuelatiõs of the grace and loue of Chriſt, which euery playne Chriſtian man can not be. He ſpeaketh not heére as an Apoſtle, but as a Chriſtian man, and he ſpeaketh not according vnto anye ſpeciall reuelation, but according vnto the Chriſtian faith, as we doe all beléeue, that the onely begotten of God is dead for vs, for ſo he ſayeth: I doe liue in the faithe of the ſonne of God, which loued vs, and gaue himſelfe for me. Wherefore in this ſaying he doth not exceéde that meaſure or proportion of faith which is common vnto all faithfull, ſo that it is but a very trifle which the doctors of doubtes, and not of faith, do teach.

They doe alleage for them the words of the Eccleſiaſtes, which we cyted before. Wherefore we muſte ſée howe it is redde and expounded according vnto the Ebrew terte. For therevnto we muſte haue recourſe, when any place of the old Teſtamẽt doth come into queſtion, as the verye Canons of the Popes do teſtifie, and as it is alleaged in the Decrées out of the words of Auguſtine. And thus it is in the Ebrewe in the end of the eyght Chapter, and in the beginning of the ninth: And I ſaw al the workes of God, that no man is able to ſearch out the reaſon of the workes of God, which be done vnder the ſunne, and that the man trauayleth in ſéeking, and findeth it not, and that albeit the wiſe man do reaſon and argue to knowe it, he can not finde it. And as when I had layd vp all thys in my heart, to ſearch out the whole, (and hére verye diſorderly they ended the eyght Chapter) that the iuſt and wiſe, and their workes be in the hande of God, yea loue alſo and hatred, man knoweth not all things whiche be before them, to euery one as to euery one, one effect, both to the iuſt, and to the wicked, and to the good and to the euil, to the cleane and to the vncleane, vnto hym whyche dothe ſacrifice, and vnto him whych dothe not ſacrifice, &c. Thus it is in the Hebrewe terte, whereby it appeareth, that whereas it is redde in the olde and vulgare Latin translation: And for all that man knoweth not whether that he be worthye of loue or of hate, but that all thynges be reserued vncertayne vntill hereafter, it is contrarye vnto the wordes and meaning of the Ecclesiastes, for it is not in the Hebrewe, Whether that he be worthy of loue or of hate, but absolutely, Loue also, and hatered also, (he meaneth of the iuste and of the wise) be in the hande of God. Neither that in the Ebrew, that is to say, All before them, or in their sight, is not as much to say, as all thinges be kepte vncertayne, vntill the tyme to come. The Greeke text also is nothing so, for this we doe reade in the beginning of the ninth chapter: For I haue putte this all whole into my heart, and my heart hath knowen all this, that the iuste and the wise, and their workes be in the hand of God, yea and their loue and hate also, and man knoweth not all the things before their face, &c. What is there redde heere also to serue the opinion of Scholemen, and the common Latine translation, which the Councell of Trident determined onely to bee kepte: nothing at all, but whosoeuer will looke vpon this whole chapiter, withall shall fynde, that the Ecclesiastes dothe meane to doe or perswade nothyng elſe, but that wee should beleeue, that all thinges be in the hande of God, and that there is no man though he be neuer so wyse, which is able to find a sure and substantiall reason of those things whiche be done vnder the sunne, and doe happen as well to the iuste and wyse, as to the vniuste and vncleane, but that all thinges be in the hande of God, both the iuste and the wise, as well as their doings also, yea theyr loue and hate, that is to saye, suche things as they doe desire in their louing, and eschew in their hating. For that it hathe so pleased God, that whatsoeuer things doe belong vnto this our life, and to the lotte thereof, that they do happen as well vnto the good, as to the euill, and that for thys cause the heartes of men both of the wise also and iuste, should be strengthned in faith, to beleeue that both they and their doynges do please God, and to take well in worthe whatsoeuer things doe chance vnto them. And therefore it is that he addeth: Goe, and eate thy bread with ioye, and drynke thy wine with a merry heart, for thy workes doe please God, as though hee shoulde saye, Thou needest not to thynke, that thou doest not therefore please God, bycause that the same thynges doe chaunce vnto thee, whyche doe chaunce vnto sinners, and wicked persons, whereas thou seest, that thys lyfe is so ordered, that the same, and suche lyke things doe befall vnto all the iuste, as well as the vniuste. Wherefore be of good cheere, beyng assured yet, that thou pleasest God, and that he hathe good regarde of thee, albeit that thou can not searche out, and gyue good reason for those things whyche bee done vnder the sunne, for thys is impossible and labor vtterly loste, whyche I my selfe haue tryed, and am assured that there is no manne whiche can perfourme anye thyng heere, &c.

Ecclę. 9.

Thys is the true and proper sense of thys place, whyche is so farreoff from decaying any peece of the assuredneſſe of the grace and loue of God, that it dothe rather establish it also. For the Ecclesiastes dothe applye himselfe wholly vnto thys, to admonishe men, that the capacitie of manne in theſe matters is vtterlye vayne, to the intent that we shoulde sticke in assured fayth vnto the grace and loue of God, from which peraduenture those thinges might trayne them, that be not circumspect, which doe commonly betyde vnto all men in this life. Then what Diuelish deprauer is he of the holye Scripture, which goeth about to turne it into a contrary sense, and picketh out suche stuffe out of the wordes thereof, as the holye spirite dothe of purpose goe aboute to pull out of the mindes of the faythfull? It is a maruellous matter to see, howe the false translation of this place crept in, for two respectes, for that the truth of the Hebrew is neglected therein, and that those things be set forth, whych our common sense can not like and well away withall. For albeit this were graunted, that a Christian man doth not knowe, whether that of certaintie he be beloued of God or no, how can that stand, that it is said, that hee knoweth not also, whether that he be worthye of hate? What faythfull man is he whiche knoweth not that he is worthy of hate: if he shoulde bee iudged in iuste iudgemente? and that woulde not confesse himselfe to bee vnworthy to be beloued of God? Holy men so knowe this, and graunt it without any dissimulation, so farre is it, that they knowe it not, and they do graunt it for the aduauncemente of the godneſſe, and grace of God, whiche they do feele to be so greate, that it dothe also like and louingly cherishe them, whiche be most worthy of hatered.

This place doth establish the certaintie of the grace and loue of God.

But lette vs consider somewhat more diligentlye thys doctrine of doubte, whyche is in myne opinion most wicked, and doth exceedyngly displease God. John in hys Canonicall Epistle sayeth, that GOD is loue, and who knoweth not, that this is the nature of true loue, that he whiche dothe loue, taketh it moste vnkindly, if he whome he loueth doe doubte whether he be loued or not. For he wisheth nothing more than that he should knowe, that he loueth him. Againe the benefytes of God in his loue towards vs be so many, and so greate, that we can haue no excuse for oure mistruste, if we doe not acknowledge hys loue. For what bee his commaundementes, corrections, promises, couenauntes, the incarnation of his onely begotten, and oure redemption by his bloud else, but the moste assured and euidente testimonies of the loue of God towardes man? wherefore it shall not be amisse, to consider somewhat deeper this doubt which we do feele in oure fleshe of the loue and grace of God, and to see what manner of thing it is, and of whence it proceedeth.

Of the causes of this doubt.

That the doubt of merth is God.

IT maketh much matter vppon what causes and occasions thys doubte of the loue and grace of God towards vs doth rise in our heartes. Therfore let vs consider of whēce ỹ same doubt riseth, whiche we doe at this present reproue. It is most certayne that it cōmeth not of God. In deede it chanceth ofte in the world, ỹ he of whose loue and good will towards vs we do doubt, doth himselfe graue the occaſion thereof, in ſeeyng and doyng ſuche thinges, as haue no token of good will. But it is farre otherwiſe in God, who may moſt truelye ſay vnto vs: What ſhould I doe vnto you, which I haue not done. So that this doubt muſt needes come of vs, and not of God: but the cauſes thereof be diuers and ſundry.

First of all it riſeth oftentimes of that, that for ignorance of Goddes worde, we do followe the iudgemente of mans reaſon, ſo that we do deeme of the will of God towardes vs, according vnto the qualitie of ſuch ſorowfull things, as doe happen vnto vs in this life. Heere the reaſon of man ſaith: If God did loue me, hee woulde haue foreſeene, and not ſuffered me to fall into theſe troubles: at the leaſt, after I was fallen into thē, he would haue holpen me out of hād, and deliuered me out of my troubles, and herevpon doe riſe the temptations of the fleſhe and of Satan alſo, who ſaid vnto Chriſt: Thou thinkeſt that thou arte the ſonne of God, and yet thou arte forſaken of him, and haſte nothing to eate heere in the Wildernesſe: If thou wert the ſonne of God, thou wouldeſt ſay vnto theſe ſtones, Be you breade for me, and they ſhuld immediately be changed into bread. Thou fonde fole, doeſt thou thinke that God can ſo forſake hys welbeloued ſonne beeyng in Wildernesſe, that he ſhould not haue wherof to liue, vnleſſe that he would lyue of ſtones? So the wicked Iewes prated vnto Chriſt as he hong vpon the croſſe: If he be the ſonne of God, let hi n come downe from the croſſe. He truſted vppon God, let hym ſaue hym, if he haue any mind vnto hym. And Chriſt himſelfe perceyuing ſuch a matter, cryed vpon the Croſſe: My God, my God, why haſt thou forſaken me? and Dauid ſayth: I am caſt out from the countenaunce of the Iewes. Suche thoughtes we do feele oftentimes in our fleſh, when we bee in ſorow and aduerſitie, and bee anye whyles troubled withall. Now conſider well with thy ſelfe, that in caſe theſe things doe happen vnto them, whiche do reade and vnderſtande the holye Scriptures, whiche be the witneſſes of the loue of God towardes man, how ſhall they not much more happen vnto them, which be ignorāt of the ſame, whiche muſt needes determine of the will of God towards them by mans iudgement onely, eyther their owne or others? Chriſte dothe withſtande the temptation of Satan, with the teſtimony of the holy Scripture. And the Apoſtle ſayth: Whatſoeuer things be written, bee written vnto oure doctrine, that we may be in hope through the comfort of them. Then howe be they able to withſtand ſuche temptation, whyche be vtterlye ignorāunte of the holye Scriptures? by what ſpirit then bee theſe doubte Doctors ledde, when they denye, that it is meete for the vnlearned faithfull people to reade the holy Scriptures. Do they not heerein ſerue their owne wicked deuice; in that they do deſire that there may raigne ſtill in Chriſtian mens heartes a doubt of the grace of God, to the intent they may thereby kepe in the matter of their moſte filthy gaine, and make their market of the wauering & doubtful chriſtis people?

Of incredulitie.

Secondlye it happeneth that thys doubte of the loue and grace of God doth doth not riſe of the ignorance of the holye Scripture, but of incredulitie and lacke of beliefe. For it is not ſufficiente for vs to knowe, what the Scriptures doe tell vs of the will of God towardes vs, vnleſſe there bee faith withal to beleeue them aſſuredly in all points. He that lacketh this, though he be able to recken vppe all the ſillables and letters of al the holy Scriptures, and ſay them by hearte, yet for all that hee can bee neuer the more aſſured of the loue of God towards him, than if he were vtterlye ignorant in them. And they whiche be combered wyth thys vnbeliefe, leaſt they ſhould ſeeme to make God a lyer, do deuiſe ſome other cauſes of their doubt. Who can aſſure vs, ſaye they, that theſe things were written by Moſes, by ẏ Prophetes, Apoſtles, and Euangeliſts? Againe, Though it were ſure that they were written by them, what was Moyſes? what were ẏ Prophets, and the Apoſtles? Were they not men as well as we? How can we be aſſured that it is the worde of God which they wrote? Beſydes all this, it is long agone ſynce that Moſes, the Prophets, and the Apoſtles wrote. Their writings may be corrupted by the proceſſe of ſo many hundred yeares, ſo that they may be nothing leſſe than the true copies of them which we haue. Others doe ſay: The holy Scripture is hard, and can not be vnderſtanded: and beſides that, it is ſundrye wiſe erpounded by learned men, ſo that there can be no certaynetie gotten of it. Suche talke ſome of them doe now adayes braſt out withal, whiche do thruſt into the Churches this doctrine of doubtes. Oh what honeſt men they be. They will driue vs to beleeue the traditions and writings of the fathers. For ſinuche as they without all doubt wrote by the inſtinct of the holye Spirite, and yet they do make doubtes of the holye Scriptures, as though that we alſo coulde not ſaye, and that more truelyer? What was Origen, what Chryſoſtome, what Hierome, what Ambroſe, what Auguſtine, what Gregory? I will not ſpeake of Thomas, Scotte, Bonauenture, and the reſt. Were not theſe alſo men? Coulde not they be deceyued? What be the Popes of Rome, be they not ſinfull menne? Whereof haue the Coūcels ben gathered: not of men? Agayne. It is long agone ſince theſe fathers liued, and theyr writings might be corrupted, and chaunged by ſo often writing them out, and among ſo many contentions and hereſies. Beſides this they doe write oftentimes thinges diſagreeing, and doe ſundry wiſe erpound the holye Scriptures. But this they doe not thinke vpon, which do goe about to ouerthrow that maſterſhippe and rule of the holye ſpirite, whiche wee haue in the holye Scriptures, to the intente to ſnarle and entangle vs that be ſubiecte vnto the maſterſhip and rule of menne, in makyng a doubte of them, as though we were not aſſured that they be of the holye ſpirite. And they doe not denie that there is any perſpicuitie and playnenelle in them, to the intente we ſhuld forſake them, and bee driuen as doubtfull, beeyng toſſed and tumbled with the wynde of mens traditions, opinions, and conſtitutions. Wherefore we muſt earneſtlye praye vnto God, to preſerue hys Churches in the knowledge of hys truthe, loue, and grace, againste the poysoned tongs of these manner of men.

th

Thirdlye, this doubt riseth also of ouermuch pondering and waying of oure owne weakenesse and vnableneſſe, where we saye sometymes with our selues: Albeit that I doubt not of the truthe of the promises of God, whiche the holy Scriptures do conteyne, and of the Gospell of the grace of Christ, and of the comfortes of the doctrine of the Apostles, but that I do most firmely beleeue, that Christ the Sauiour of the worlde, dyed for our sinnes, and that they which doe beleeue in him, haue life euerlasting, and be verely beloued of hym, yet for all that, when I consider my selfe what I am, how weake yet and not meete, and disposed sufficiently to enioy this grace, whyche is offered vnto him that dothe repente, beleeue, loue, and giue thankes: I cannot chose but doubte of the loue of God towardes me. For I can not otherwise conceyue of my selfe, but that I haue not yet sufficientlye repented me of my sinnes, and that I doe not yet sufficientlye beleeue, loue, &c. Wherefore as much as the truth of Christes promises doth cal me hereunto, that I should not doubt of hys loue towardes me, so much the consideration of mine owne weakenesse and vnfitnesse, doth on the other side make me doubtfull, and vncertayne, so that I can not perswade my selfe, that he dothe loue me. This doubt of Gods loue, the doubte Doctors doe confirme, within the yeare 1547. the thirteenth of January, in the Synode at Trydente concluded in thys wyse: Like as no godly person ought to doubt of the mercy of God, of the merite of Christe, of the vertue and efficacie of the Sacramentes, so euerye man when he loketh vpon hymselfe his owne weakenesse, and vndisposednesse, may feare and dread of hys grace, whereas no man is able to knowe in certaynetie of Faithe, wherein can be no falsehode, that hee hath obteyned the grace and fauor of God, This say they.

Fyrste, thankes be to God, that they do graunte, that no godly person, ought to doubt of the mearye of God, and merite of Christ. Would God they taught this earnestly and diligentely. Secondely, where as they doe teache, that a manne may feare and dread of the grace of God, if he loke vpon his owne weaknes, and vndisposednesse, goodlye folkes doe also trye thys as often as they doe consider themselues, so that there is no controuersie in thys poynte, vnlesse that they doe mystake the worde May, for to be lawfull, and not for to be possible. We do not denie, but that it is possible to be so, but we do not graunt that it is lawfull. Thirdlye, whereas they doe aode, Seeing that no man is able to know in certainetie of faith, that hee hathe obteyned the grace of God, there is most pestilent poyson, and a most shamefull lye, vnlesse that they doe speake it of themselues, so that none, shoulde be as much to saye, as none of vs. &c.

For if we doe consider what manner of menne these be, which are so compelled by the Bishop of Rome, to determine of the faith of Christians, and what their degree is of, what conditions and behauiour of life lyfe they bee of, we easily beleeue, that they can not in certaynetie of faith know that they haue obteyned the fauour of God. But he which is a faithfull & Christian man in deede, albeit in consideration of himselfe, he doubteth not, but that he is vnworthy to be loued of God, and obteyne his grace and fauor, and can not saye that ever he is stedfast, and sufficiently disposed, yet for all that being confirmed by the firme hope of the promises of Christe, and the testimonye of the holy spirite within his hearte, he doubteth not at all, but that he is loued of God, and standeth in hys grace and fauor. For this certaintie is not grounded vpon our owne worthinesse and disposition, but vpon the vnspeakeable goodnesse, loue, grace, and truth of our Sauioure, whyche consideration of oure owne vnworthinesse, and full confession thereof, doth not extinguish and decaye anye thing at all, but rather encrease and aduance the commendation of Gods grace, which is so great, ỹ it doth also embrace the vnworthye, weake, and vndisposed.

But hitherto we haue spoken of the causes whereof this doubt riseth in some men, the doctrine whereof is more pernicious, than anye man is able to expresse. For firste it feedeth the humor of truste in oure owne selues, which riseth vpon the consideration of oure owne righteousnesse. For in saying, that they whiche doe consider that they be not yet well ynough disposed, can not know in certaintie of faith, that they be loued of God, what do they else but auouche that they whiche with the Pharisees do thinke themselues well disposed, muste be confirmed in the truste of their owne righteousnesse.

Secondlye, it doth make a marueilous tormenting of mens consciences, which do so wauer in the waying of their owne vndisposednesse, that they can not set their foote in anye right and assured path towardes their saluation, but be most miserably tired and wearied with diuers and sundrye deuises one vpon an nother, seruing nothing vnto their saluation, and so they be made men meete for the marting of Malles and pardons, and for all iuglings of the priuie hypocrites.

Thirdly it giueth men occasion also to despaire of their owne saluation, and so to liue dissolutely in all kind of mischiefe.

Fourthly it dothe decay all sincerities of faith, and true loue towardes God. I beseech you tell me, if you make a woman to beleeue, that hyr husbandes loue towardes hir is vncertayne and vnsure, how is it possible (if you bring hir into a doubte of it,) for hyr to beare a sincere fayth, and wifely loue towards him.

Fiftly, howe can a Christian man patientlye beare afflictions for Christes sake, if that he be driuen to doubte of the fauoure and loue of God: and at the poynte of death, with what faithe shall wee recommende oure soules vnto oure faithfull Sauioure, of whose grace and fauoure wee doe stande in doubte? Wherefore we muste aboue al things chiefly beware, and take heede of this most noysome and deathful doctrine, craftyly conueyed into thys intente to serue the most foule buying and sellynge of the Papistes in the Churche: and so we must constantlye conceyue in our selues, that the consideratiō of our owne weakenesse, and vndispolednesse in the ieates and true faithfull, doth not decay the truste and certaintie of the loue and grace of God, and that they be not so contrarye one to an other, but that both of them, be of necessitie found in one selfe same godly person, and do well aduance the case of oure saluation. For in respecte of oure weake, and corruptible nature, howe greately shoulde a Christian manne doubt oftentimes of the resurrection of his body to come, if he should consyder the same alone, whereas for all that, when he is ascertained in the faithe of Goddes omnipotencye and truth, he may saye with Job: I doe knowe that my redeemer liueth, and that at the last day I shall rise againe out of the earth, and I shall be clothed vp againe in my skinne, and see God my Sauioure in my flesh, &c. And in thys case also a manne can not but feare hymselfe, and doubt of the loue and fauoure of God, as often as hee dothe consider hys owne vnkyndnesse, but yet withall thorough the fayth of the promises and goodnesse of God, he doubteth nothing at all, but that he standeth in his grace and fauoure. The truste of the grace and loue of God, and the acknowledging of oure owne weakenesse, be alwayes ioyned togither in a good christian man, so that none of them dothe decay the other.

The consideration of our owne weaknesse doth not decaye the certaintie of the loue of God.

Therefore when wee doe assuredly claspe in the truste of Gods grace in consideration of his promises, let vs also become humble repenters of our owne vnworthinesse, and thankfull praysers of Goddes goodnesse. When we be touched with ỹ knowledge and perceyuing of oure owne vntowardnesse, and bee perswaded and prouoked to doubte of the loue of God, let vs hartily lament therof in the sighte of God, and humblye beseeche him, that he will shape and fashion vs by his spirite. And in the meane season let vs esteeme this Popish doubting, as a moste pestilente poyson.

Of the false persyvasion of the loue and grace of god

Which agreeth not to the faithfull of Christe.

Like as the Popishe doubtyng, whereof we haue hitherto spoke, is verye hurtfull, so is also the false perswasion of the loue of God and prepostrous securitie & carelesnes, naught and worthy to be reproued. And therefore it is good to consider also the causes whereof it dothe commonly arise and spring.

Of vvith the false persuasion of the grace of God doth.

1 The first is worldlye wealth, in respect whereof we thinke our selues to be Gods derlings. For the reason of man doth so conclude, that they be loued of God, vnto whome it is gyuen in this life to haue good dayes with the riche glutton, but the holye Scriptures is againste this opinyon in many places.

VVorldly vvealth.

2 The seconde is an opinion conceyued of the goodnesse of GOD by the Preachyng of the Gospell, without anye true Faithe: and this is a vayne and feeble opinion neyther so fonde, nor hyrne, that it canne withstande temptations.

The opinion of the goodnesse of God conceyued of the preaching of the Gospell without fayth.

We

We do not meane of this, whē we do defende and maintaine the assured truste of the faithfull, which as it commeth of true faith, by the holy spirite, as the pledge and earnest peny (as we call it) of the heauenly grace, so is it founde also, lively, effectuall, and adorned with the studie of godlinesse, humblenesse, pacience, and charitie. In case the Doctours of the Counsell of Trident do meane that vayne opinion, when they doe saye, that no mans sinnes bee forgiuen which doeth boast and crake vpon the truste and certaintie of the forgeuenesse of his sinnes, and standeth onelye vpon that. Forasmuch, as the same may be in Scismatikes and Heretikes, yea, whereas this vaine truste, voyde of all godlinesse, is preached also in our dayes, we doe also vtterly condemne it, and we doe call it a dead truste and hope, so farre we be off from preaching it. And we doe not denie, but that it is founde to be in more than is conuenient to be for the setting forth of Christes glorie. But if they doe meane it, of this truste, which we doe saye is in the electes, and faythfull, and for which onely we do trauayle, let them loke wretched folke, howe they shalbe able in the daye of iudgement to shifte off so great a wrong, which they doe to the louingnesse of God towardes man, in the sight of him, who is charitie him selfe.

3 The thirde cause is the opinion of our own righteousnesse, and this is founde among the Pharisies, and iusticiaries, whose wordes these be. Lord I do giue thee thāks, that I am not as other men bee, vniust, &c.

This in deede is farre from the consideration of our owne vnworthinesse, and they do lay before their eyes neither the grace, nor mercy of God, but his loue to the good only, whereas they be not good in deede, but naught and wicked. This cause maketh men proud, arrogant, hypocrites, & despisers of ỹ weaker sort.

And we do recite these thinges, to declare that we doe not speake of any vayne perswasion which is founde to be in the Iewes, Turkes, Pharisies, Heritikes, & Epicures, ỹ childrē of this world, but of the true and vndoubted certaintie of faithfull myndes which is in the electes onelye, and is grounded vpon the true fayth, and testimonie of the holy Spirite, and which doth onely ouercome this worlde, the flesche, and the Deuill. Thus much touching the loue of God towards mā.

Of the Mercie of GOD.

Like as in things created, those thigs which be naturall in euery one of thē al do cleaue together, in a certaine pitifull knot and aliaunce: So we do see also that the nature of God is such, that those things which be naturally in him, be so knit together, that none of them can be taken awaye without the hurte and decay of his nature. So it cōmeth to passe that mercie whereof we do meane to speake, can not be sequestred frō the goodnesse & louingnesse of God, without great wrong doing vnto

Mercie is one of those thigs which be naturally in God his nature. For like as he is of nature good, and louing towards man, so he is also mercifull, pitifull, and forgiuing. Wherefore like as we do confesse him to be good, so we muste needes confesse him also to be merciful.

What Mercie is.

The wordes of mercie is better knowen, and more vsed in this vale of miserie and wretchednesse, than is the true and kindly vse thereof, specially in this our time when the affection of loue & mercy wareth wonderfull rare and cold.

The definition of mercie.

Cicero doth define mercie to be the sorowe of the mynde, and griefe conceyued vpon the miserie of some other ready to ayde the same.

Seneca.

Seneca in his boke De Clementia, sayeth that mercie is the griefe of mynde had vpon the sæinge of the miseries of others, or els the sorowe conceyued for other mens euils which it is thought that they deserue not.

Augustin. de ciuitate dei. lib. 9. cap. 5. De moribus eccle. lib. 1. cap. 27.

And Augustine sayeth: What is mercie, but a certaine compassiō in heart of soule others miserie whereby we be compelled to helpe them if we can? For who knoweth not that mercie is named of that, that it maketh a mans heart miserable and pitifull, sorowing for an other mans euill? So they doe define mercie commonly, to be touched & stroken within in the heart, with the miserie of others. The Hebrewes do cal mercie by this word רחמים. Which word doth properly signifie the belly, and they doe applie it vnto the signification of mercie, because that the vnwarde partes of them, which be touched with ỳ sight of other mens misery, are wont to be moued with some affection of compassion and pitie.

II. That God is Mercifull.

There be an exceadinge greate number of testimonies of gods mercy, not onely of the olde times, but in this present time also of our age wherein is so great abundāce of wickednesse, that a mā may most truely say, It is the mercy of God that we be not consumed. For how were it possible that this present world should stand one day, vnlesse the outragious enormities and misthiefes rayning euery where were spared by the mercie of God? But let vs leaue this consideration of Gods mercy, vnto those men which haue eyes to sée, and heartes to vnderstande, and sée for the vnlearned what testimonies be found in the Scriptures of the mercy of God.

Exod. 34.

First Moses doth testifie that God is mercifull, whereas he saith in Exodus. Lord God the gouernour which art mercifull and forgiuing, patient, and of much pitie &c. and in Deutero. For thy Lord God is a mercifull God, and he wil not forsake thée, neither will hée vterly destroy thée, nor forget his couenaunt, &c.

Exod. 34.

Deut. 4.

Dauid also doth witnesse thereof in the Psalmes. He is mercifull and hath pardoned their sinnes, and hath not destroyed them. And againe: The Lord is a forgiuer and mercifull, long suffering, and verie pitifull, hée will not be alwayes angrye, &c. Item: Like as the father hath pitie vpon his children, so the Lorde hath pitie vpon them

Psalm. 78.

Psalm. 86.

which do feare hym. And the mercifull and pitifull Lorde, hath made a memoriall of his wonderfull things. And againe: The Lorde is mercifull and iuste, and our God sheweth pitie. And in another place. The Lorde is pitifull, and mercifull, patient, and very mercifull, the Lorde is sweete, and pleasaunt vnto all, and his mercies do passe all his workes.

Psalm. 145.

Psalm. 85.

Psalm. 145.

Let the Reader marke howe much Dauid dyd make of the commendation of Gods mercy, which Moyses had open'd before, for he vsed it three tymes in the Psalmes, as you shall hardly finde ỳ other did with such boldenesse, and so often, crye vpon the mercy of God, as he dyd.

Thirdly, the Prophetes also do testifie the same, as in Hieromie, where he sayth: There is no word hadde vnto thée, which sayeth mercy in thousandes. And in Ioel: Turne you vnto the Lorde your God, for he is gentle, and mercifull, patient, and of much mercy, &c. Which wordes Ionas vsed also, saying: For I doe knowe that thou art a pitifull, and a mercyfull God, patient and of much mercy. Thus the wordes of Moyses whereby he besought the mercye of GOD, when he was angry with his people, saying: Lorde GOD, the gouernour, mercyfull, pitifull, patient, and of much mercy, were so rooted in the myndes of the godly, holy men and Prophetes, that they vsed the same for the most parte when they dyd flée to the mercye of God, in which matter there is preserybed also a rule ouer vnto vs, which haue much more nede

Hier. 33.

Ioel. 2.

Ionas. 4.

Exod. 34.

than they had of the grace of gods mercye.

Fourthly, the Apostle doth also testifie of the mercie of God, whereas hé calleth hym the father of mercies, and the God of all comforte, and ryche in mercy, and that he saued vs by his mercy.

2. Cor. 1.

Ephe. 2.

Titus. 3.

Fyftly, doth not Christe also the onely begotten of GOD testifie of the mercye of GOD, whereas hé sayeth in Luke: Be you mercifull, like as your Father also is mercifull.

Luc. 6.

Sixtly, as though that those testimonies of holye men were not sufficyle, God hym selfe doth also expresse that he is mercifull, where as he sayeth, that he doeth mercye vnto thousandes of generations, and also where he sayeth: If thou take a garmente for a gage of thy neyghbour, thou shalt restore it to hym againe, before the goinge downe of the Sunne, for that is the onely garment which he hath to couer his flesshe withall, and he hath no other to slepe in, and he crye vnto me, I shall heare him, by cause I am pytifull. And in Esaie: Then (sayeth he) thou shalt call, and the Lorde shall heare thee, thou shalt crye, and he will saye, loe, I am at hande, bycause I thy Lorde GOD am mercyfull. And in Hieremie. For as much as I am the Lord which doe shew mercy, &c.

Exod. 22.

Esai. 58.

Hierem. 9.

By these, and other like testimonies of the holy scripture, the faithfull man is perfectly well assured of the mercye of God, albeit he is also most certainly perswaded by sure pwoues and trialles, declared not onely in others, but also in hym selfe, that God of his nature is good, louing towards man, mercifull, make, pitiful, and ready to forgeue.

III. How Mercy agreeth vnto God.

WHereas wee do define Mercy to be a compassion of the hart, conceiued vpon the miserye of an other, there maye bee a question asked. How it can be attributed vnto God that hee is mercifull, seeing that such kinde of affections, as sorowe, heauinesse, and griefe of minde, haue no place in him.

The Stoike do iudge that mercy is no vertue but a faulte.

The Stoickes, of which secte Seneca also is, do not attribute the affection of mercy vnto any man ye is wise, much lesse vnto God. For they bee of the opinion, that mercy is not a vertue, but a faulte of the minde.

For like as (say they) that religion doth serue to ye honour of God, and superstition to deface him, so al good folke wil vse clemency, gentilnesse and mildenesse, and eschewe mercy and pitye. For it is a fault of a weake heart, quayling at the sightes of other mens euils, so that it is most vsed of euerys naughtye packe. For they be olde wiues and women for the most parte, which be moued with the teares of ye wicked men, and would breake vp their prysons, if it were lawefull for them.

Mercy wayeth not the cause, but the case. But clemencye drawoth neere vnto reason. Mercy is a griefe of minde, or sorow conceiued of the euils of others, and the griefe of minde falleth not to the wise. For his minde is cleare, & there can no thing chaunce to ouerwhelme it. There is nothing that becommeth a man so much, as a stout minde, and the stout mynde cannot contynue all one, if feare and sorowe do stricke it and do ouercome it, and close it vp. Item, The wise man hath foresight and counsell ready. But sorow doth trouble the minde, and therefore it is vnmete to take order in thinges, and to deuise such things as be profitable, and also to eschue things daungerous. Therfore the wise man is not mercyfull and pitifull, bicause hee doth all other things which they do that bee mercifull without anye miserie or griefe of mynde. Of this opinion Agesilaus was also the king of the Lacedemonians, when he sayde: It is a very harde matter to bee both pitifull and wyse. After this sorte the Stoikes doe reason of theyr wyse man, whom they doe spoyle of all affections, of true and good humanitie. And they thynke hym not worthy beyng a man, to haue the sense of mans miserie, and to abase his stoute mynde to any sorowe or griefe. Nowe in case that mercie bee of that sorte, that it maketh the mynde heauy, troubled, ouercast, yea, and miserable for sorowe and griefe, or at the least way very neere vnto miserie, and that therefore, after the opinion of the Stoikes, it can take no place in any wyse man, the question is, howe it can frame vnto God.

The stroke of Agesilaus king of Lacedemonians.

I doe aunswere as touching the definition of Mercie, where they do saye, that it is a griefe and heauinesse of the heart conceyued of an other mans miserie, whereupon this question doth ryse. In my opinion that definition is not so strong,

The Stoike vniuersall.

The definition of mercie.

strong, but that if the worde it selfe be considered somewhat deeper, there may be made an other definition thereof. For I can so define mercie, that it shall not include heauinesse, and griefe conceiued of an others myserie, so that it should be as much to saye, as griefe of hearte or heauinesse of hearte: but to signifie that we haue regarde in our hearte of the verye myserye of the myserable and wretched, not so, that our heartes be made myserable and wretched, but that according vnto the sentence of the Prophete, we maye vnderstande and consyder vpon the needy, poore, myserable and afflicted, and be stirred vp to succour theyr mysery. If you saye, that the Phisition which applyeth himselfe to cure the sicke, hath a heauye heart, who is so foolyshe to gather therevpon, that his heauye hearte is conceyued of the heauynesse or disease of the sycke, and not rather that it is a care and studye of mynde, earnestlye employed to cure the sycke? so that the grieued or heauy hearted Phisition is hee, which beareth good heart vnto hys patientes, though he be not so troubled in mynde that hee shall lose the clearenesse and vnderstanding thereof to make him vnable to iudge what is profitable, and what not, to heale the sycke. If you wyll call one that gyueth hys mynde to byeng vp pupils, a pupilhearted man, shall we streight waye defyne, that to bee pupilhearted is an heauinesse and disturbaunce of the mynde, conceiued of the mysery of pupils, and not rather to be a care of the heart, to prouyde for the necessitie of the pupils?

So we may truely defyne mercie not to signifie the heauynesse or trouble of the heart, conceiued of an others mans myserie but the regarde of oure hearte towardes the mysery of the myserable, albeit that these affections, or passions which doe trouble the clerenesse, and calmenesse of the hearte, be not ioyned withall. So that the mercifull man may well be manlyke and wyse, and so employe all the poyntes of mercy vnto the miserable, although that hee be voyde of all myserye, and wretchednesse of heart hym selfe. What is the lette then, but that the Scripture maye so call GOD mercifull, so that it doe not therewith attribute vnto hym a myserable heart, and that we shall not be compelled of necessitie to denye that there is mercy in GOD, least wee should seeme to attribute vnto hym a myserable heart.

Thus wee maye truely, and vprightly consyder in the definition of mercye. But as touchyng the nature and operatiō thereof which it practiseth in the hearte of man, where it styreth vp sometymes sorowe and compassion, that is not to be applyed vnto God. Lyke as all affections and operations of loue which hath place in the heart of man, doe not streight way frame vnto GOD, and yet for all that, loue is so attributed vnto hym, that he is reported to be very loue it selfe, whereof wee noted somewhat before, which may serue to this place.

There be attributed also vnto God anger, iealousie, and hatred, not so as they doe bringe trouble of mynde vnto men, but so as hee hath iustice and power to reuenge. No wordes doe properly and peculiarly agree with Gods nature, and Maiestie. But whatsoeuer is sayde thereof is rather applyable, than proper and peculiar. Wherfore the religious and deuout persone, must not wrest and wrastle with the wordes which the holye scripture doth attribute vnto God, nor wyng them vnto their owne proprietie whiche they haue in worldly matters and affections.

No wordes do properly agree to the nature of God.

In fewe wordes when we doe reade in the Scriptures, that God is mercifull, wee must thynke not vpon the heauynesse and trouble of the heart, but of the fruytes of of mercye, whereby the miserable be succoured, vnto which the scripture also hath respect, when it doth attribute mercye vnto GOD. And so what tyme anger, ielousie, and hatred is ascribed vnto God, let vs thynke of the reuenge which is conuenient to the iustice of God, and be afrayde of our owne coates which bee sinners. As for that, that the Stoikes doe saye, that mercye is not a vertue, but the fault of a heauy, chyldish, and ouercast mynde, we wyll speake when the place shall serue better, where we shall speake of our mercy, which wee ought to declare towardes the miserable and wretched.

Of whence Mercie is in God.

Vpon what causes the hearetes of

THe mercie and compassion of man towardes the miserable and wretched, ryseth vpon dyuers and sundrie causes. You maye fynde some which of a certaine naturall inclination of fayntе heart, are quyckely touched with the affection of mercye, at the sight of an other mans myserie, and therewith be styred vnto compassion.

Secondly, there be some also which haue pitie vpon the afflicted, bycause they haue bene themselues to:moyled somewhat in troubles and aduersitie. So Dido sayd, that through hir owne trouble, she had learned to aide the like trauaylers. Hee that hath bene once banyshed him selfe out of his countrey, can the soner haue pytie vpon the banyshed man and straunger, and he that hath hym selfe bene tied by the heeles, is the readier to haue compassion of them that be in the lyke case. &c.

Thyrdly, there be some which through the alliaunce of bloude, are moued vnto mercye towardes theyr kynsfolkes that be in trouble, and yet be not inclined alyke to haue compassion vpon all other myserable creatures.

Fourthly, some men be moued vnto mercy, eyther in consyderation of the age, or of the persone or the degree, rather than of the consyderation of the myserie of it selfe. So there be sundrye causes wherupon the heartes of men be moued vnto mercye. Nowe what the causes of Mercye bee in GOD a man may safely ynough searche, so that he consyder the Maiestie of GOD, as it is most excellent, most iust, and most happie. That one man hath compassion vpon an other ỹ is afflicted, it is no straunge matter, for there is one selfe same nature in both, one qualitie of nature, the lyke frayletie, baseneſſe, and generall wretchednesse of their whole lyfe, and deprauation, or crokednesse of mynde. But what hath man in common with God? Nothyng at all. Hee is most excellent, wee most base: hee most righteous, and we synfull: hee happye in all respectes, and wee vnhappie, and wretched in manye respectes. So that there is no cause of mercie in GOD, which can come of any communicating of nature, condition, life, and estate with vs, where as we doe in all poyntes beyonde all measure varye from hym. And yet for all that hee is so mercifull, that hee delyghteth also in mercy, more than in sacrifice.

matter,

Wherefore it remayneth, that the greater the mercie is in God, than it is in the hearts of men, and the lesse that the causes of mennes compassion doe take place in hym, the more manifest it is, that hee hath no other cause of his mercye, but his incomparable goodnesse of nature, vnto which wee did also referre his louingnesse towardes man in the place before.

Wherefore the Apostle: when he would set forth the mercie of God, whereby wee be saued, he dyd place his goodnesse before the same, saying: But what tyme the goodnesse and louingnesse towardes man of GOD oure Sauiour appeared, not through the workes of ryghteousnesse whiche hee hadde done, but according vnto his mercye hee saued vs, by which wordes hee doth sufficiently declare that whereas God is louing towardes man, and mercyfull, it commeth not of that that he hath anye cause to loue, and haue mercie vpon vs as yelded of vs, but of his onelye goodnesse of diuine nature.

So the Prophete also praying for the forgiuenesse and mercie of God, doth teuch his goodnesse first, saying: For thou Lorde art good and ready to forgiue, and of much mercye. For the Lorde is good: and hys mercy endureth for euer. Psalm. 86. 100.

Therefore, as often as we doe feele the mercy of God, either in our selues, either in others, let vs acknowledge his goodnesse, and confesse that thereby there is declared how good God is, not how iust and good we be.

Secondly, let vs with all admiration commende the wonderfull efficacie of Gods goodnesse, vnto whome onelye we ought to giue the thankes, that the same most excellent maiestie, righteousnesse, felicitie and power, dothe abase it selfe to the compassion and pitie of this corruptible duste. If Princes would fauer of the disposition of this goodnesse, the more mightier they seeme, the more mercifull they should be.

What is the operation of Gods mercie.

By the nature of his mercie it is easie to iudge of the mercies of God.

INasmuch as mercie ascribed vnto God, is like as loue is also by a figure & similitude of the affections of men, it followeth ỹ we must measure the working thereof, according to the nature of the mercie of men, and iudge of the disposition of Gods mercie after the same. In deede the mercye of man can no wyse be comparable to the aboundaunce of the mercye of GOD, nor reache to the thousandth parte thereof, and yet for all that by the consyderation of it wee maye easelye understande, what wee maye truste vnto of his mercy, and with what confydence wee oughte to haue recourse vnto the same.

So this is the chiefe cause, for which the holye Scripture speaketh of GOD after the manner of men. It is knowen vnto vs what is the disposition of a good louyng and pytifull man, &c. and we doe knowe what can be hoped vpon and desyred of hym which is of that sorte, and howe louingly we ought to embrace, and make of him. So that the holye Spirite dothe applye these wordes of goodnesse, loue, and mercye vnto God, reportyng hym to bee good, louyng, and mercifull, to the intent wee shoulde searche styll more deper in hym those thynges, which wee knowe doe belong vnto the nature of his goodnesse, loue, and mercy. If we see an erreadyng kynde and louyng man, mylde, fauourable, and mercyfull towardes all men, harde to none, gentle towardes all, easye to forgyue, lyberall and aydyng the poore, comfortyng the sorowefull, feeding the hungrye, and clothyng the naked, yea, and friendly also to his enemies: Haue wee not cause thereupon to beleeue as often as the Scripture dothe reporte and declare vnto vs that God is mercyfull, that this mercy is farre much greater in hym? What mercye dothe worke in God, let the efficacie and strengthe thereof teach vs which it sheweth in the heart of man.

And I meane not of that, that it doth oftentymes make a mans heart heauy, and bearing as it were the compassion of other mennes myseries, whereof there commeth no profitte to the myserable and afflicted poore men, but I doe meane of the fruites thereof, when the miserable are succoured in their afflictions, which with effect we expressed before in the definition of Mercy, in that wee finde, it is all one, as to regarde in our heart the myserie of others, and as our abylitie wyll serue vs to succour the same.

If we aske for the workes of Gods mercie, they passe all number, lyke as there is no number neither of our myseries, calamities, afflictions, needes, & necessities. &c. Wherefore there is no searchyng of them, least we shoulde goe about to restrayne that into the compasse of thynges finite and which hath ende, which in deede is infinite and endlesse.

But of what maner this worke king of it is, it may be well asked, and easely vnderstanded. The very worde of Mercie it selfe, doth sufficiently declare it, if it be well defined. It representeth the mysery of an other vnto our heart, and maketh vs yelding and enclined to succour the miserable. This is the strength and operation thereof. And what can there bee in our whole strength, wealth, substance, and affayres, which must not serue vnto mercy, when it hath once grasped our heart, and set vs on to succour the miserable.

When

When Christ sayd: Wheresoeuer thy treasure is, there is also thy heart, what ment he els, but there is all thy thought, thy care, & carke, yea, all thy life, and when God commaunded his people, saying: Thou shalt loue thy Lorde God with all thy heart, and with all thy soule, and with all thy strength: and these wordes which I doe charge thee withall this daye, shall be in thy heart, and thou shalt tell them vnto thy children, and thou shalt muse of them sitting in thy house, and walkyng in thy iourney, beyng in thy bedde, and rysing. &c. Doth he not sufficiently declare, howe much skyll it is, whether we regarded his commaundement in our hearte or not, and that in case wee dyd regarde them in our hearte, they shoulde possesse and restrayne all our strength, thoughtes, meditations, and studies, vnto the keeping of them.

For the seate of all the meditations and studies of our whole life, is in the heart. Wherefore, seeing that this is the vertue of Mercy, that it dothe represent the miserie of the myserable, vnto the hearte of hym which hath mercy and pitie, who seeth not, what, and howe effectuall the operation of it is? In deede it is not perfecte in man, bycause of the lacke of his strength, and power: and therefore it falleth out for the most parte, that it standeth and sticketh onely in affections, and when it can not effectually succour the myserable, it maketh the heart of the mercyfull man beawie and sorowefull, and maketh hym to weepe. But in God there is perfect mercy, and it declareth a perfect effecte, bycause it fyndeth no stoppe nor staye in hym. And thus much of the operation of Gods mercie.

Vpon whom God hath Mercy.

IF wee loke the Scriptures, God hath mercye on whome he wyll, & hardeneth whom he will. He hath mercie vpon his seruauntes. He hath mercy vpon them which doe feare him, like as the father hath mercie vpon his children. He hath mercie vpon his poore. He hathe mercy vpon them which do tourne and amende: So he had mercie vpon the Niniuites. He hath mercie vpon them which doe trust vnto hym, so the Prophete sayeth: And hee wyll enclose them with mercie, which do trust to the Lord: He hath mercy vpon them which do call vpon hym. So Dauid singeth: Thou art of great mercy vnto all them that doe call vpon thee. He hath mercie vpon them which do synne, errying of ignoraunce. So the Apostle sayeth: I obtayned mercye, bycause I dyd it of ignoraunce.

Howe then? Hath he not mercy vpon all? Surely such specialties, where as it is saide, that hee hath mercy vpon whom he will, and namely vpon his seruantes, them that doe feare him, do amend, do trust, and call vpon him, and which doe amisse of ignoraunce, seemeth to shut out and exclude that vniuersal mercy, whereby he doth generally shew mercy vnto all, and to restraine that goodnesse & mercy of Gods nature, so much commended in the holye Scriptures, vnto some fewe.

Testimonies of the scriptures vpō whom God hath mercy. Rom. 9. Deut. 32. Psalm. 103. Esai. 49. Ionas 3. Psalm. 51. Psalm. 86. 1. Timot. 1.

Whether that God hath not mercie vpō all.

What shall we saye then vnto that, which we sayde before, that the cause of merrie is the incomparable goodnesse of the nature of GOD, whereby he is of nature mercyfull? May we call him mercyfull aright, which doth not generally shewe mercy vnto all, according vnto the goodnesse of his nature, but hath mercy vpon some certaynly, vpon some speciall causes and respectes? I thynke not. For lyke as he is not worthy to haue the name of goodnesse, which is not of nature good towardes all, but vpon occasions towarde some onely, so truely he is very vnworthely called mercifull, which hath not mercy vpon all, but vpon them onely which he doth louingly entreate, for some speciall causes in them rather than in him. He which hath mercie vpon the iust man, bycause he is iust, and sheweth not mercy to the vniust, bycause he is not iust, hath for the cause of his mercie shewyng, not his naturall goodnesse, but the loue of the good men, whereunto he is moued by the vertue of others. Wherefore it seemeth to be very vnmete, to attribute this vnto God, that he sheweth mercy not commonly vnto all, but vnto certaine some onely, vnto whome he beareth a singuler fauour, either for their innocencie, righteousnesse, or vertue. Whereas he is in deede altogether and alwayes of nature mercifull, and of much mercy, and not onely louing towardes the good, but louing also towardes mankinde.

Rom. 11. God enclosed all vnder sinne, to haue mercy vpon all.

Besides this the Apostle sayeth: God hath enclosed all vnder sinne, to the intent to haue mercy vpon all. Howe vpon all? If he hath mercy vpon certayne some onely? But God forbyd, that we shoulde deny that God is mercifull and louing vnto man, of the goodnesse of his nature, and say, that the Apostle wrote this vntruely of him. For as much as he is of nature mercifull, and louing of mankinde, it followeth, that he doth in this respect shewe mercie also vnto all, not only to the iust, but also to the vniust: to the vniust (I say) not in respect that they be vniust, but in respecte that they be miserable and wretched. For god forbid, that we should saye this also, that God doth alike, and without differēce in al respects haue mercy vpon all throughout.

We must seeke then for some difference of Gods mercy, not to deuise any that is not already, but to finde that which is in deede. And I thynke it is not farre out of the truth to saye, that the mercy of God is in sundrie respectes generall, speciall, temporary, and euerlasting. So that it maye be sayde aryght, that he hath mercy vpon al, and not vpon all, and that in sundrie wyse.

The generall mercy of God is that, whereby he bothe generally succour the necessities not of men onely, but of beastes also: not of the iuste alone, but of the vniust also, and touchyng this, Christ sayde: Be mercifull like as your Father also is mercifull. And he meaneth of that mercie, whereby he bringeth forth his Sunne, vpon the good and the euill, & raineth vpon the thankefull, and the vnthankefull.

The speciall mercie is that, whe he hath mercie vpon the iust, the innocent, them that do crye vnto him, and beseech his aide, and when he forgeueth the sinnes of them that do amend.

The temporary mercye is that, when he spareth the offenders for a time, that they may amend, and so he is saide not to shewe mercye when he doth not spare, but whip them.

The euerlasting mercy is that, which concerneth the euerlastinge saluation, not only in chosing, but also in regenerating, iustifying and glorifying: of which the Apostle maketh mention to the Ephesians, saying: GOD which is riche in mercy, for his exceding loue that hee loued vs, when we were dead vnto sinne, hath made vs aliue in Christ Iesu, to declare in the world to come, the plentifull riches of his grace. &c. And this euerlasting and principall mercy, doth exclude sometime the temporarye mercye, in correcting the faithful offenders, and scourging them for a time, that they bee not condemned with this worlde.

Therefore seing that wee doe finde in God not onely a speyall, but a generall mercy also, not only temporary, but also euerlastinge, surely there remayneth no cause, why it should bee called into question, whether that he be mercifull of nature, or no, as he is set forth to be in the Scriptures. Neyther is there any creature for the degree thereof, that is destitute of his mercy.

But wee must exceedingly beware leaste in confoundinge thys difference of GODS mercye eyther wee doe make that which is speciall and euerlasting, to be common and generall, and to belonge vnto all, and so fall into the errour of the heriticks called Nerry men. Which by the argument of GODS mercy, did holde that no man coulde for euer be condemned, for that, that the mercy of GOD is so great, that it cannot suffer the euerlastinge destruction of any man, either that wee make the temporarye mercy euerlasting as they do, which vnder pretence of the mercy of GOD, do sinne carelesly, supposing that hee will doe the same for euermore, which hee doth for a time, to prouoke them to repentaunce which he himself denyeth to do in Ezechiell, where he saieth: I will do this in my furye, myne eye shall not spare, neyther will I haue mercy. Ezechiel. 8

That the time of Mercye is one. And the time of Iudgement an other.

This prefixe lyse is for mercie, and that lyse to come for iudgement.

Lyke as (witnesse the Apostle) GOD loueth not confusion, so his workes also bee farre from all confusion: and euen so, wee must also thincke of the bestoweing of his mercy. Hee bestoweth his mercy, and hee giueth also iudgemēt: mercy at one time, and iudgement at a nother, whyles wee be in this lyfe hee bestoweth mercy in calling all men to amendment, teaching them that do erre, forgeuynge synnes vnto them which doe tourne and repent, Iustifying them that doe beleeue, hearing them that do cry vnto him, forsaking no man that is afflicted, stirring vp the slouthfull, aydinge them that trauaile, & at one word, by innumerable wayes declaring his mercy vnto all men. In this lyke the gappe and waye is open vnto the throne of grace, so that we may finde mercy: but in the world to come then hee will applye his iudgement. In deede hee doeth iudge also in this life, but not in perfect and full forme of iudgement, but after a kinde of chastisement and moderation, vsed not vnto destruction and full reuenge, but vnto saluation and amendment: accordinge vnto that saying of the Apostle: Whē we be iudged of ỳ Lord, we be corrected, least we should be condemned with this world. Such iudgement is the worke of mercie. But that extreme, and not returnable iudgement is reserued vnto the time to come, in which there shalbe no place for mercy, but a shall and full rewardynge accordynge vnto the same which euery man hath done in this life.

That the first place is geuen to mercie & the later vnto iudgemēt.

And this is also the worke of Gods mercy, that he hath appointed all this life for mercy, and that to come for iudgement. He might haue giue the first place vnto iudgement, and the latter vnto mercie. But so no man should haue bene saued: for vnlesse the mercye dyd preuent iudgement, there were no way for any man vnto saluation. Wherefore the Prophet said: Enter not Lord into iudgement with thy seruaunt, for no liuing man shalbe iustified in thy sighte. Iudgement might take place in all, yea in the infantes of one daye olde (for wee bee all borne of nature the chyldren of anger) vnlesse that God of his incomparable goodnesse did set mercy before, by ỳ meane of which, as many as be elect & predestinated vnto lyfe, be quit from the sentence of iust iudgement. What seemed to agree more iustly vnto mākinde beig corrupt & depraued, & therfore deseruing cōdemnation, than iust iudgement? But the same is put of, and suspended, not so that it shall not come (for that were not agreable to the iustice of God) but to the intent, that it should not haue the first place in the case of mankinde, which for all that did agree with our deseruing, yet notwithstāding mercie was set before it. And so it commeth to passe, that we may say aright, that iudgement is stayed by mercy, that it destroy not the by his iudgement, whom mercy by hir meanes doth deliuer from death and destruction. So that by the intercession of mercye, wee bee taken as it were out of the executioners hand, and saued, and therefore the Apostle sayth aright, by his mercy he saued vs.

And let vs marke here with all how greatly this mediation of the mercye of God shall helpe to the aduaunce ment of the iustice of the iudgement to come: hee shall not onely condemne the reprobate and wycked, but hee shall make his iustice also the more noble, the greater that the mercie was set forthe, and offered vnto all men for the whole tyme and course of thys our lyfe. So the wicked shall haue no thyng to excuse them by, at the iudgemente to come, but in theyr owne consciences they shall appeare most worthy of their iudge-

iudgement or condemnation: neyther they which shall be saued, shal fynde any thing that they may glory off, but shall acknowledge, that the whole cause of their saluation ought to be ascribed not vnto their owne righteousnesse, but vnto the onely mercy of God.

Of the power & Gouernance of God.

We do not this without all reason, ỳ we do ioyne this place immediatelye vnto ỳ before, where we spake of ỳ mercy of god. For it maketh much matter, & it is to great purpose, what power & authoritie he hath both ouer vs, & all other things, whose mercy, goodnesse, and loue towardes man, the scripture doth so greatly commende and aduaunce. In deede it is some comfort, when one man hath pitie and mercy vpon an other, an inferior person of an inferior, lyke of lyke: but there can come little or no profit of such mercy, vnlesse that he doe also shew himselfe merciful, which hath all power ouer vs, and hath the rule of vs in all respects. The mercy or pitie of the common people, doth not deliuer the giltye from death, when he is sent from place of iudgement to dye, but the mercy of the Prince which hath iurisdiction ouer him of lyfe and death, may deliuer him. The mercie or pitie of the felow seruaunts could not haue discharged that seruant, which ought his maister the King. x. thousand talents, but ỳ mercie of ỳ king vnder whose rule, iurisdiction, & power he was, did discharge him. So, neither the mercy of man, no nor of Angels neither, can do vs any good, vnlesse that god haue mercy vpon vs, vnder whose dominion and power we be all the sort of vs. Wherefore we suppose that it shall not be out of the way, if after the consideration of ỳ mercie of God, we doe note somewhat of his Dominion and power.

Of the Dominion of God.

Like as a man must be a King before that he hath the power to gouern his people, and an householder, before that he obteine iurisdiction ouer them of the household: so to be the Lorde, standeth orderly before the hauing authoritie ouer the lyfe and goods of others. So I thinke we ought in God first to cōsider the dominion of God, and afterwards his power & authoritie.

The Lord is before ỳ lordship, & dominion before the authority.

And that god hath not some particular, but the whole vniuersall dominion of all, and so is the Lord of all, and that not for one or two ages, but for all generations, we neede not to proue, seeing that it is confessed of all men. His kingdome doth rule ouer all, and his dominion doth spred it selfe ouer all nations, as the Prophet sayd, and although that he had not sayde so, the very experience it selfe of all ages doth proue it to be so.

The Greekes doe call by the word κύριον him that hath a propertie in any thing, that is to say, the right of his owne proper possession. And why ỳ Hebrew word אדרי is as much to say, as Lorde or maister is with vs, I doe finde no other cause, but bicause that אדר

with

with them is as much to say, as the counsell or pylor of ỳ house, whervpō it seemeth thei called hym ỳ lord, which was in the same stede vnto them that he vnder him, as the counsell is to the house, that is the same, whereupon the whole house standeth. If we cōsider this whole frame of heauen & earth, as it were a house, shall we not aright cal him the Lord and maister thereof, which is both the best and highest in it, & the onely counsell of the same, and possesseth it as of his own right?

But in this worlde men be di-uers wayes made Lordes & Maisters. Some be borne Lordes, as the eldest sonnes of kings and Princes. Some be chosen vnto the degree by their subiectes, as we se in some of the kingdomes and cities of the Empire, some be made by superior powers, as such which be called thereunto by kinges and Emperours, some doe by meanes of money and good happe become Lordes and Maisters. Some by swoorde.
There be some also which by in-dustrie, labour, and trauaile doe atteine to the title of Lordship, which kinde of dominion doth seme vnto some most iust. For what can bee more reasonable, thē the workman should be the Lorde of his worke-manship? But yet for al this, there is none of all these become Lord of him selfe and not by an other. He which is borne Lord, like as he hath not his very life, so he hath not the dignitie of both, neither of himself but iust of God, & next of his antecessors. They which be chosen by their subiects, or appointed by any superior power, are manifestly created by others. And they be not Lords of themselues neither, which do either purchase it for money, or inuade it by swoorde: forasmuch as they be made Lordes also by outwarde meanes. They seme in deede to be Lords of themselues, which be Lords through their own industrie, labour and trauaile, but if a man cōsider of whēce they receiued that gift of in-dustrie, labour & trauaile, their helps and accessarie meanes which they vsed therein, he must nedes grant, that they lacke ỳ most part of their Lordship comming of themselues.
The potmaker hath power ouer his clay, to make at his libertie one vessell to honour, & another to rebuke.
And yet for all that, he himself ma-keth not the very stuffe of the clay, nor many instrumentes which he occupieth in his arte he prouideth not himself, neither hath he the art to worke of himselfe, but all this he receiueth from els where, and so it fall th out, that he can not haue the full glorie of his own Lordship and Maistership in his own worke.

Let vs now loke to the dominion of God, and se how much that passeth al other in glorie of perpetie. First we can not say of God, that he was borne Lord, for as he is not borne, so he can not be borne Lorde. But you will say, what pre-heminence is this, that he can not be called to be ỳ borne Lord, whereas that is common vnto many of his seruants, that be Princes, to be called Lordes, as so borne? I aunswere, Yet for all that he is Lord in the consciences of all men, and so is not the seruant. It is one thing not to be able to be called a Lord borne, bicause thou art not borne although thou be a Lord: and an other ỳ thou art not art not a Lord, although thou be borne. God can not be called a born Lord, bicause he is not borne. A seruant can not be called so, bicause he is not a Lord. So that he hath not his naturall dominion or Lordship from another, and yet for all that he is the more properly Lord, for that he taketh hys dompnion from no other. Christ the only be-gotte of god is ỳ Lord borne, bicause he is both borne and the only begotten of God, and heire to his Father. So that he as the sonne of God hath the dominion from the Father, wherevpon he was not only called Lord by his Apostles after his incarnation, but he was called so before also by ỳ Prophet, when he said: The Lord said vnto

my Lord, sit at my right hande.

Secōdly, God is not chosen by vs, nor ordeined Lord by any superior, nor he hath not purchased his Lord ship with mony, nor taken it by violence from any aduersary, but he is Lord of all from euermore, & of himself. Besides that, he hath free right & proper dominion ouer all ỳ workes of his handes, but not such as ỳ potmaker hath ouer his clay, & euery workmā vpon his workmāship, but a ful & perfect dominion.
Forasmuch as he receiued not the matter of his works of any other,
but he created ỳ same for himselfe, of nothing, nor he vsed not the arte or ayd of any other vnto his work, but he made all these things w̄ his owne fingers, & his owne strength.
Wherefore he is ỳ only & true Lord of all those things that be in heauen & earth, and hath full, perfect, & vndoubted dominion ouer all. How-farre & wyde the true dominiō geneth, he did acknowledge: which albeit he was called Emperor, yet for all that perceiued that the Empire whith he administred, was farre from the height of true dominion, and therefore refused to be called the Lord, bicause that the same tytle doth belong onely vnto God.

I am not against the estates & dominions, of which we haue dy-uers and sundry in this world. But I chalenge the true, proper, full, perfect, & generall dominion vnto God onely, who is the onely, true, proper, full, perfect, and general Lord of all.
There is but one true and chiefe dominion, all the rest be but substitute, & depending in all things vp-on the highest and chiefest, and that not without a speciall purpose and ordinance of God. The seruāt, subi-ect, and citizen, hath no occasion to saye: There is but one Lorde in Heauen, no man vpon earth ought to be taken for a lord. Ergo, I nede not to acknowledge any Lord but God onely. This is nothing else, but to despise the dominions & gouernemēts appointed by God, and to resist ỳ ordinance of God: which thinge Peter in his latter Epistle doth charge the false Apostles withall.

But amongst other things, I can not but vehemently rebuke the pride of mans heart in thē, which whereas they ought not onely, in respect of our common faith, but also of theyr offices to serue one lord, whose seruants thei be, & for whose sake they be honored vpon ỳ earth, yet do so behaue themselues, that it appeareth openly, howe they doe practise not a ministery, but a dominion. Wherevpon some do also content-

contentiously crake, that a minister is aboue all. And what this proposition hath wrought in the popery, we haue wonderfully felt, & what it would do hereafter, it may be gathered by the examples which be passed before.

Of them which fai that a minister is a bone all.

But some man will saye: How is God onely the Lorde of all, seinge that he doeth not gouerne all alone, for Satan is called also by Christ himself prince of this worlde, and he hath some of his owne, in which as captiues, and prisoners, he worketh & raigneth at his own will. Againe, the kings of the Gentiles also do rule theyr subiects as they list, & doe vse that tyrannous saying: Thus I will, and thus I charge: My will for reason I doe enlarge. If they be Lordes which do gouerne, then Satan also and tyrants be Lordes, for they do gouerne, and that not in an vndersort of gouernãce, but as quite cõtrary.

Two respectes of dominiõ.

I aunswere. There be two respectes of true dominion and gouernance: the one is of right, and the other of might. By right I meane the property of possession in respect whereof the Ebrewes do cal בעל Lorde, which worde signifieth the possessiõ of a thing as a mans own. By that of might I vnderstand the dominion which is purchased by the Lordes towards theyr subiects: and thereof be two kindes, one iust, and the other vniust. Iust, is that which is ioyned also with right, & vniust is that, which is presumed vpon without right. The first doth surely belong vnto God onely, for all is his: and vnder his dominion which is iust and proper, do serue al ordinary powers, in their degree.

But the latter dominion or gouernance of might, belõgeth vnto Satan, which hath no power of right, no not ouer a fly, much lesse vpon men. Him ỳ tyrants do serue, which do vse wrongfull violence against their subiects. But this kinde of dominiõ which is vniust, & which we dyd atribute vnto Satã, is for two causes contrary vnto ỳ true dominiõ, & therfore it can make no lorde of Satã. For first it lacketh ỳ right of gouernãce, secondly it lacketh also the fulnesse of gouernãce & dominon, wherby he which is a Lorde in deede, doth of his own what he wil. Neither can he gouern ani, but such as will be gouerned by him. But God as the true Lorde & perfect gouernour, doth charge what he will, not onely vpon thẽ which be willing, but whether they wil or no also, & compelleth euery man to serue his wil. The Deuil can gouerne none but the blynde and ignorant. But God doth gouerne, both them that be of vnderstanding, and the ignorant also. Againe the Deuil can gouerne none but the wicked. In deede he tẽpteth ỳ god so much as is permitted him, but in ỳ meane seasõ he can beare no rule ouer thẽ. But God ruleth all, as well the reprobate as good. Yea, & more than ỳ the Deuil can not gouerne the willing, ignorãt & reprobate, otherwise, nor farther thã according to ỳ iudgement of God the true Lorde, vnto whom whether he will or not, not as a Lord, but as a seruant & slaue, he is compelled to obey & serue, like as all the wicked tyrants be also in this worlde. Thus God doth byde his aduersaryes, as true and perfect Lorde of all, and compelleth pelleth them whatsoeuer they be, and are able to doe, to serue to hys will. Yea the Deuil serueth God, in his lying, tempting, blinding, and afflicting, &c. so farre he is from comming to any title of dominiõ. Wherfore it is not conuenient, that wee shoulde make two Lordes, whereas there is but one Lorde only, and gouernor of all, true, perfecte, and vniuersall, of whome procedeth all gouernance, whersoeuer it be right or wrong.

Serue vncle, but not as.

Of the Povver of God.

HAue I spoken hitherto of the dominion of God, whiche wee thought to make for the first parte of this matter. Nowe we wyll briefly speake of his power and authoritie. For if we consider that aright which is touched before, we shall some perceiue of what maner the authoritie of such a lord as God is, ought to be.

Sam gouern none wyll

Authoritie ioyned with dominion.

1 First, it is knowen to all men, that vnto a lawfull dominion, or gouernance there dothe of necessitie belong, yea, there is tyed vnto it a power, or authoritie such as ỳ Grekes do call it ἐξουσίαν. Euerye Lorde or maister as he hath right in his owne goodes to possesse it, so he hath authoritie also to vse it, at the libertie of his owne will, so that he is not bound to yeld an accoũt to any mã of those things whiche he doth by righte and authoritie in ỳ whiche is his owne.

Seuer not but vsurp

There is no authoritate but vpon subiectes.

2 Secondly, it appeareth also that the authoritie of lawfull dominion, can not haue place in them, which be either free and at their owne libertie, or subiecte to the iurisdiction of an other person. I meane, that no person hathe free authoritie & power, but ouer them whiche be subiect vnto hys owne iurisdiction & dominion. If any Angell or man be free & vnder no iurisdiction but of himselfe, or if Satan hathe any iurisdiction of lawfull dominion vpon any, it may follow, that God hath not authoritie ouer all, but in case there can be no suche founde that is free, no not Satan himself, or subiecte vnto the power of anye other but of God, it muste follow, that the free and lawfull power and authoritie ouer all, dothe belong vnto God only, as the Lord of all.

Lawfull power for two pontes.

3 Thirdly, if we consider the qualitie of lawfull and proper power, it standeth in two poyntes, the firste is to enioy and vse a mans owne right, the other to yelde therein when hee will. The vse of a mans owne right hath three partes. The first is when a man vseth his owne things to hys owne proper commoditie, necessitie, or glory. Like as the good man of the house vseth his house, and his household folkes. The second is to doe of them what he list, to change, to take away, to diminish, to encrease, to sell and turne away, to giue to whome he list, &c. The third is to commaund, and forbid what seemeth him good, as to his subiectes, all this belongeth to the vse of the proper and free authoritie. Vnto this is added also, that euery Lorde or maister may vse his authoritie, eyther by himselfe, or by others: and in that he dothe giue the vse of his authoritie vnto others, hee doth derogate or decay nothing at al of his owne authoritie: For he dothe this also by the right of his owne power and authoritie. And the vsing of anye proper authoritie, is not a de-saying, but rather a confirmation thereof. The other ponte of the p̄aoper power or authoritie, is to yeld and release of his owne right, either some pẽce, or all, to whome, when, and as much and as long as he list, so as iustice is compelled to yelde and giue place vnto mercy, and grace. So that King in the Gospell, had authoritie to yelde of his right, which hee might haue vsed towards his seruãt, which ought him tenne M. Talents.

These things be manifest, and doe properly belong vnto the right and authoritie of lawful dominion. Now if ye list to compare these thinges to the power and authoritie of God, whiche he hathe vpon all, you maye somewhat perceyue, and knowe the qualitie thereof eyther to vse it, eyther to yelde therein: he vseth hys things whiche he hathe made to the commoditie, and necessitie of thys moste large house whiche he builded, ỳ Heauen, ỳ Sunne, Mone, Starres, fyre, ayre, rayne, cloudes, frost, snow, waters, &c. he vseth all the spirites, men, beastes, &c. to the execution of his will, in most frée and iust authoritie and power, either to practise his anger and reuẽge towards the wicked, eyther to employ the grace of his good will and mercy, whiche both he did in the redde Sea for that first he deuided it by the authoritie of hys right, as the true Lord thereof, to deliuer and bring through his people. Secondlye, that he drawe it togither againe to ouerwhelme Pharao with all his army, wherewith he pursued the Israelites. Thus of his owne right and authoritie he vsed the selfesame sea, to the execution both of his grace, and of his anger also.

The tyrant of Babylon had kindled the ouen of fyre to burne the seruantes of the true God, he suppposed that he had the fire at his commaundement, & that it should in al pointes serue his will, but the Lorde of all creatures vsed the fire by his power to the contrarye, so that it saued the iust men which it receyued into it, to cherish & not to consume them by the deuouring flame thereof, and chastned and destroyed the ministers of the king of Babylons crueltie, which stode abyode. Thus the creature serued the Lord: First vnto the glory of his name. Secondly to the preseruation of his seruants. Thirdly to the reuenge of the wicked. What way soeuer he do vse his creatures, either to our good, either to our euill, let vs acknowledge his power & authority, which he hath vpon vs, and vpon all thyngs that he hath made, and let vs say: It is the Lorde, let him doe that which seemeth good in his eyes.

2 Secondlye, he dothe of his owne whatsoeuer it pleaseth him, by hys authoritie & power, he altereth oure strength, estate, condition, minde, body, health, and all, he maketh rich and poore, he aduanceth whome he will, & abaseth whome he wil, he killeth and quickneth, conueyeth to Hell, and cõueyeth backe againe, taketh vtterlye away what he listeth, so that it neuer be sene againe. He decayeth thynges exceedingly growen, and maketh to encrease agayne those thinges that were muche decayed: he bestoweth and giueth of his goodes to whome, as muche, and as long as he lysteth: and when it listeth him, he taketh away that which he gaue, accordyng vnto Job. The Lord gaue it, and the

Lord

Lord hath taken it away: The name of the lord be blessed. In dede he doth employ his good things vnto oure vses, but yet withall he doth not giue vp his power and authoritie, whych he hathe both vppon them, and vs also.

3 Thirdlye, if we doe consider the authoritie of charging and commanding, we shal find that the same doth fully, and without gaynesaying belong vnto God, who hath the ryghte and dominion vpon all, vnto whome all be bounde, yea, and are compelled also, when he listeth, to obey. He vnto whose dominion and Lordshyp I doe not belong, and vnto whome I am not bound to obey, hathe no power ouer me to commaund me. The Idole of Rome doth chalenge that he hathe power and authoritie to commaund, and chargeth all others with the necessitie of obedience. So by hys wicked sacrilege he plucketh vnto hym, that whych apperteyneth vnto God only. Loke sayeth hée, where that the vpper hande is, there is the authoritie to commaunde. There is no vpper hand knowen to be in the Church of Christe, which hath authoritie to commaunde, but the authoritie of Christ onely. But in case it be granted by the Lorde to anye to be greater, it is graunted him not so that he shoulde haue the authoritie to commaunde, but to minister. He that is the greater amongste you, (sayeth Christe,) let him be the Minister of all. It is one thing to be a Lord, and an other to be aboue the rest in faith, knowledge, and ministerie. The power to commaunde requireth a right of lawfull dominion, and runneth to the subiectes, not vnto straungers or equals. He maye commaunde whyche in hys commaunding dothe vse no vnlawfull and straunge, but his lawfull and owne proper power. He may commaunde whych may by his owne right punishe the disobedient as obstinate, and rebellious. Hée may commaunde (I say) whiche can not only in wordes commaund, what he will haue done, but can giue will and strength also to obey the same, so that we may say to him with Augustine: Giue me Lord that which thou doest commaunde, and commaunde what thou wilt.

4 Fourthly, we sayde that euerye Lorde or Maister hath this authoritie to vse his power, eyther by himselfe, eyther by others. But how man can alwayes doe anye of them both without blame, hauing it graunted hym from the Lord, it is disputable: but it is a most cléere case, that it is alwayes done arighte by God the Lorde of all, whether he doe exercise hys authoritie, eyther by himselfe, either by any creature.

And yet we must vse this consideration hére, that we be resolued out of all doubt, that there is neuer anye fulnesse of authoritie giuen to anye creature, but that they whose ministery God appoynteth to vse, hathe a limitted and restrayned authoritie. Like as he giueth them the Spirite not in fulnesse, but in measure, so he giueth them also power not in fulnesse, but in measure. Vnto Christe onely was giuen fulnesse both of spirite and power, not as to a minister of all creature, but as to the only begotten of God, heyre and Lorde of all. Wherefore it is a shamefull lye, & a thing to seeke his owne lucre, by ỳ the Bishoppe of Rome doth chalenge to himselfe a fulnesse of Power, whych appertayneth to none but to ỹ Lord, in that that it was sayde vnto the Apostles, Receyue the Holye spirite, whose sinnes soeuer you do forgiue, they shall be forgiuen: and whose sinnes you do with hold, they shall be with holden in Heauen. Item, Whatsoeuer you do binde vppon the earth, shall be bound in Heauen: and whatsoeuer you do lose vpō ỹ earth, shall be loosed in Heauen. In deede there was graunted vnto them authoritie to binde and lose, but not vniuersall, not full, not frē, not at will, but particular, ministeriall, and limitted. If they shoulde haue bounde him vpon earthe, whome God hathe loosed from his sinnes in Heauen, or if they had loosed him whome GOD had bounde, and they charged hym with sinne whom god did not charge; surely the employing of their power and authoritie graunted them, had bin both false and voide: whereby it appeareth, that they receyued a Ministerie, and not a fulnesse of power. And in case there were not anye full power graunted vnto the Apostles, vnto whome by so euidēt prowfe was giuen the Holye Spirite, what shall we iudge of them, vnto whome it cā not be proued that one crumme of the Spirit of Christ is giuen: I saye nothing touching the Apostolike vocation. But he is assuredly and truely the Lorde of all, and hathe full power of all by his owne right, whiche is able not onely hymselfe to vse hys own power effectually, but to charge it also vppon hys Ministers to be executed with strength, by whome hee will, and as muche, and as effectually as hee wyll, and to ioyne thervnto also the worcking of hys holye Spirite: so that it may appeare by good prowfe, that they receyued not the presumption of the temeritie and rashnesse of menne, but the power of their Ministerie graunted them frō Heauen.

God may vse or not vse his authoritie.

5 Fiftly, it is not lawfull for any ministerie to yelde or remitte anye thing of that power which he hath receyued to vse. Wherfore he is called the baily of wickednesse, whiche forgaue to euerye of his maisters detters, some parcell of the same which euery man oughte, as he listed. It is lawfull and at the Lords libertie, either to vse or not vse his authoritie ouer his subiectes, and to relente or yeld of his right a peece or all, or nothing. Euery mā doth with his owne what he will, but he can not do so of an nother mans. Now all thynges are subiecte vnto the iurisdiction of God the Lorde of all: Wherefore seeing that he onely hathe full and frē power of his owne ryghte, he onely is able also to yelde and forgyue whome he will. Of hys owne righte he forgyueth them on whome hee hath mercy, whome if he woulde, hee coulde of his right destroy: neyther can he be called to the question why he doth it. He doth not forgiue them whome he dothe harden, whiche the Apostle calleth the vessels of anger, appoynted to destruction. Neyther maye wee demaunde here, by what authoritie he doth this, he is ỹ Lord, all things bee his, bothe in heauen, and in earth. He hath frē and absolute powar vpon hys owne thynges. He oweth nothyng to no man. He doth aright of his owne what he wil,

No man can say vnto hym, without an exceedyng wickednesse: Why didst thou make me thus? Why didst thou not order better of me? By this argumente the Apostle doth stoutely vanquishe them, which iudging not aryghte of the power of God, doe of theyr presumptuousnesse impugne the libertie of his mercie, and hardning.

Hytherto we haue briefly, as in the figure and similitude of the power of man, touching the right and dominion of Lords and maisters, described the dominion and power of God, not so, that the fulnesse of Gods power maye be perfectly considered therein, but that we mighte in some parte perceyue, what we oughte to iudge thereof.

To be shorte, whatsoeuer the deuice of mans reason dothe pretende, either the power of God must be restrained and limitted, so that it shuld not be frē and absolute, (whyche I take to be a verye wicked thyng to thinke:) or else we must frelye and playnely confesse, that there is no vnlawfulnesse, no blame, nothyng inconuenient to the power of God, in that which the Scripture sayth of him, that he hath chosen some before the making of the worlde, no doubte such as he woulde, that he loued Iacob and hated Esau, whē they were yet both in their mothers wombe, and had done no good nor euill, that he hath mercie vpon whome he will, and hardneth whome he will, and that he dothe suffer the vessels of anger, appoynted vnto destruction, and that he prouided the vessels of mercy to glory: that he hathe enclosed all vnder vnbeliefe, to haue mercy vpon all, that he giueth vp the reprobate vnto vncleanenesse, vnto shamefull desires, and vnto a reprobate sense, that he hathe wrought all things for himselfe, the wicked also vnto an euill day, that the heartes of Kings be in his handes, and that he bendeth them whiche way he will, that hee doth worke all in all, and many such other like in the holye Scriptures, wherewithall some of our brethren seme to be offended, and they doe therefore deuise merie expositions in their iudgements, to defende the iustice of God, least he might seme vnequall, and taken to be the author of euill. For my part, I am of the opinion, that there is none of all these places, but is sufficiently defended by this only argument of his frē, absolute and full power. Now in the nert place, we must speake of the Iustice of God.

Of the Iustice of God.

For asmuche as the consideration of the Iustice of God, doth muche depende vpon these things whyche we haue spoken before of the goodnesse, truthe, louingnesse, mercie, dominion, and power, it semeth not out of tyme to saye somewhat thereof. I meane not to speake generally of Iustice, neyther of that iustice whiche shoulde bee in menne, but to declare some parte of those things whiche do seme to concerne the Iustice of God. It is exceding large and greate, and not possible to be comprehended by the full by anye man, no not by the Angels. Therefore it shall be ynough for vs to know as much as the narrownes of the capacitie of oure mind is able to take, and as the consideration of our saluation doth require.

That God is Iust.

IT is not knowen of all, neyther in all things whych God dothe, neyther alwayes, that God is Iust. Yet for all that, this is grafted in all mens cõsciences, that God is so iust, that in respecte of hys iustice, he is to be feared of all them whiche do anye thing vniustly. But the holy Scriptures doe muche more manifestly testifie, that God is iust. In that they do set forthe his Iustice vnto vs, not only by commendation of wordes, but by the examples also thereof, whiche be so many, that they can hardly bee numbred. As touching the reportes of Gods Iustice, there be manye of them in the Psalmes and Prophetes euery where. The Lord is iust (saith the Prophete,) and loueth Iustice. Item, The Lorde is mercifull and iust. Item, Thou art iust, O Lorde. And thy iudgemente is aright: Item, The Lorde is iust in all hys wayes: Item, Thy ryghte hande is full of iustice. Item, I will recorde thy iustice only. Item, Iustice walketh before thee. Item, His iustice remayneth for euer, and thy iustice for euermore. And therefore he dothe so oftentimes call vppon the iustice of God, saying: In thy iustice delyuer me. And Hierome sayeth. In deede Lorde thou arte iust, if I doe argue Scriptures of the iustice of God.

Hierome.

wyth thee. And Daniel sayeth: Thou art iust in all (sayeth he) whiche thou hast done. And Zophonie sayeth: The Lord is iust in the myddes. And in Samuel: The gouernor of men, the iust Lord.

Daniel.

Zephon.

2. Samuel.

There be manye suche Testimonies of the iustice of God, in the holy Scriptures, whiche the Godlye man ought greatly to regarde, and yet after that sorte, that he proceede diligently by them to the ryghte vnderstanding, to knowe aright, how God is iust, and to what ende he ought to vse the faith of his iustice. Besides this, the very reason of all the whole dothe as it were, crye out, that God must nedes be so iust in al the things he dothe, that in case iustice coulde haue any place in him, all shoulde bee ouerthrowen, and nothing shoulde constantly continue in his order and degree, as shal better appeare by that that followeth.

VVithout the iustice of God the vvorlde could not stande.

What it is to be Iust.

MEn doe sundrye wise define Iustice, but commonly they do say, it is that vertue, which gyueth euery man his owne. Aristides sayde, it is not to coueit any other mans goodes. In the definition of Iustice some man bringeth one thing, and some an other, whiche rather belongeth to some part thereof, than whereby the whole is defyned. In my iudgemente we must first see, what it is to be iust, that thereby we maye come to the knowledge of iustice. For of Iust is deriued Iustice.

The definition of Iustice.

And to saye briefly to be iust, is to be cleere, sounde, and vpright, according vnto the degree, condition, office,

VVhat is to be Iust.

fice, and person, whiche euery manne beareth, and to aunswere the same in all poynts without blame, eache degree, condition, estate, and person, hath his order and iustice.

A iust king is he whiche doth administer his kingdome aright, according vnto the iustice of his realme: and the iustice of a realme is to defend the subiects, and to ouerthrowe the proude. A iust iudge is he whych dothe deuide betwirte the giltye and vngiltie in iust iudgement without accepting of persons. A iust Lorde or owner is he, whiche vseth his goodes according vnto the righte that hee hathe in them, without anye mans wrong. A iust husband is he, whych dothe performe the iustice of wedlocke towardes his wife. So that hee omitteth no poynt of that whych belongeth to the dutie of a good husband. So in the law, he whiche dothe adopt anye to be hys sonne, is asked, whether that he will him whome he adopteth to be his iust sonne, that is to saye, whether that hee will take hym to be to him in steede of a true sonne, and declare all things towardes him which a father declareth vnto hys naturall sonne. Menander dothe call the lande iust, bycause that in yeelding fruite, it dothe the duetie of a good ground. A man of his owne nature is a ciuile thing, and hee that is founde to be suche, is well called a iust man, bycause that he is in all respectes answerable to the nature and condition of a man. Suche be the good and gentle persons, wherefore it is welneere all one, to be a good, and a iust man.

By this consideration it is an easie matter to vnderstande, what it is that we say: God is iust, the Lorde is iust, the Iudge is iust. But specially we must conceyue what it is to bee God, what to be the Lorde, what to be the Iudge, and thereby we maye nowe come to the knowledge of the iust God, Lorde, and Iudge: Vnlesse that we doe knowe what Wyne is, & what the nature of it is, we can not iudge what it is for wine to be iuste and vpryghte wyne. For wee muste consider all the vertues of wyne, and then the wyne is called iust and vpryghte wyne, whyche hath no lacke in any of his vertues. What Theologynes perceyued, when he sayde, that Iustice dothe conteyne all vertues? And forasmuche, as it is not knowen of very many what God is, it falleth out, that fewe men do know what the iustice of God is, and what it is that God is iust. We sayde before in the beginning of this booke, that God is as muche to say, as the creator, and conseruer of all, by whome al thynges be gouerned and conserued, which be in Heauen and in Earth, knowyng all, almightye, euery where presente, and ordering all things at his becke. Therefore for as much as he neuer fayleth in any of those things which doe belong vnto the order of a true God, but doth performe all the parts of a true God in all things, alwayes and euerye where, by infinite meanes, he is aryghte called the iuste God. And thys he dothe reporte of hymselfe saying in Esay: I made, I doe sustayne, I doe beare and keepe all things. And the Apostle calleth him the sauioure of all, specially of the faithfull. So the Iustice of God is that, whereby all those good things be performed whiche do belong vnto

Esay. 46.

1. Tim. 4.

VVhat is the iustice of God.

a true God, and whiche can be done by none beſides him, as whereby hee dothe create, make thoſe thinges whiche be not, & doth feede, encreaſe, gouerne, and preſerue all the thinges that be. Wherefore it is not without reaſon, that he is of ſome called The chiefeſt good, for how is not hee the chiefeſt good, of whome all things commeth, and be preſerued.

It was no fooliſhe opinion of him which ſaide, that the iuſtice of mans minde is wiſedome, the iuſtice of the body, good health, of euery houſe, good rule, and of euery Citie, peace. For then is the minde of man iuſt, when it is diſcouered by the prerogatiue of wiſedome from beaſtes which lacke reaſon, the body is iuſt, when it perfourmeth the office of mans bodye in all his members, the houſe is iuſt, when the inhabitantes of it do agree ons with an other, the Cities iuſte, when the Citizens are knitte togyther in ciuile ſocietie by the bande of peare, like the members in a mans body. This I ſuppoſe, we oughte to make the eſtimation of iuſtice, according vnto the condition, degree, eſtate, perſon, and office of eache part.

Howe manifold the iuſtice of God is.

The iuſtice of God is euer all one. Like as his goodneſſe is all one. And yet for all that like as wee doe in ſome reſpect call him God, in ſome other the Lord, and in an other the Iudge, ſo I ſuppoſe we may conſider his iuſtice not abſolutely, but firſte in reſpect as he is the iuſt God, Secondly the iuſt Lord, and Thirdly the iuſt iudge. The father is alſo called the iuſt father, by Chriſte hys only begotten, whereas he ſayeth in John: O my iuſt Father, the worlde knoweth thee not. Iohn.17.

What the iuſtice of God is, wee haue declared in the article before, it is the iuſtice of the true God the creator and conſeruer of all things, and in this reſpecte it agreeth with the goodneſſe of God, which the ſcripture in many places doth call צדק, which word they do commonly call iuſtice, as where the Prophet ſayeth: Deliuer me from the bloudes my God, the God of my ſalnation, and my tong ſhall prayſe thy iuſtice, by whyche wordes no doubte he hath not meane of the iudiciarie iuſtice whereby ſinners be punished, but of the goodneſſe and vprightneſſe of God, whereby the ſinnes be forgyuen vnto them that doe amende, thys hee dothe call the iuſtice of God. And agayne: Lay vp iniquitie vpon theyr iniquitie, and let them not come vnto thy iuſtice, that is to ſaye, vnto thy goodneſſe and mercye. And in an other place, God is gentle (ſaith he) and iuſt, and oure God sheweth mercy: He putteth iuſtice in, with the commendation of gentleneſſe and mercy, meaning not of that iudiciarye iuſtice, but of that whiche is proper vnto God, whereby ſinnes be forgiuen. And in an other place: They ſhal ſpeake of the remembraunce of thy great goodneſſe, and ſing thy iuſtice, the Lord is gentle & mercifull, ſlowe in anger, and great in mercy. Theſe things doe not agree vnto the reuenging and iudiciarie iuſtice, but to the goodnes which forgiueth the ſinnes of men. Wherefore the .70. interpreters do wel enough in ſundry places tranſlate

Pſalme.9.

Pſalme.6.

Pſalme.

Pſalme.

Pro.1. The iuſtice of God in Chriſte.

Iuſte Lorde.

the Ebrew worde צדק, whiche ſignifieth goodneſſe, callyng it righteouſneſſe. And we may finde many ſuche places in the ſcriptures, where they haue tranſlated goodneſſe for iuſtice, and this kinde of the iuſtice of God I do referre properly vnto the goodneſſe of Gods nature: whereby all things be conſerued, and whereby he willeth not the death of a ſinner, but that he be conuerted and liue, and forgiueth the ſinnes of them that doe amende. And of this iuſtice are thoſe things to be vnderſtanded, whiche the Apoſtle wryteth of the iuſtice of God, offered vnto men in Chriſte. But nowe the iuſtice of God is reuealed without the lawe, whereas it is proued by the teſtimony of the law and Prophetes, that the iuſtice of God is by ỹ fayth of Jeſus Chriſt to al mẽ, & vpõ al mẽ which do beleu, &c. Wherby there is recõmẽded vnto vs the iuſtice of God, as good, louyng, and mercyfull. Wherby he determined to iuſtifie & ſaue all whiche doe beleeue in him by Chriſte, freely without any merites of workes.

Secondly, God is iuſte alſo, as Lorde and maiſter. This kynde of his iuſtice belongeth to the iuſte dominion, and full power, propertie, and poſſeſſion, wherby he gouerneth al whiche be in heauen and earth as Lord of all, and accordyng to his free will hath mercy vpon whom he will, and hardeneth whome he will, doing of his owne whatſoeuer it pleaſeth him. So that he can not be blamed of iniuſtice for any thyng whatſoeuer he doth, whether he kill or quicke, whether he deſtroy or ſaue, whether that he loue or hate, &c. Of this iuſtice of God the Apoſtle ſpeaketh in the ninth to the Romaines, when he ſayth: Is there any iniuſtice with God? God forbidde: loke vpon the reſt that foloweth. And we haue alſo ſufficiently ſpoken of this in the place before, where we ſpake of the dominion and power of God. This Power of proper right and dominiõ is ſo perfect in God, that it excludeth all iuſtice from his will, precepts and doynges. For it is not poſſible, that whatſoeuer he willeth, commaũdeth and doeth, he ſhould vniuſtly will it, commaunde it, and doe it. For all theſe things doe extende, not to that whiche belongeth to any other, but to himſelfe, not to any thyng that is free, or of any others right, but vnto his owne things created of himſelfe, and poſſeſſed by full right, without the wrong of any. Wherſoeuer is no wrong, there is no vniuſtice. And ſurely in thoſe thyngs which be poſſeſſed in full right of God, there can be no wrong. For whatſoeuer hee doth of them, he doth it of his owne. If he deſtroy, hee deſtroyeth that whiche is his owne, and that by moſt iuſte power and authoritie. If he loueth and ſaueth, he loueth & ſaueth that whiche is his owne, ſo that hee declareth therein the ſpeciall goodneſſe and mercy of his godly nature.

Thirdly, he is iuſte, not onely as God and Lorde, but he is iuſt as the Iudge alſo. The Prophete ſayth in the Pſalme, God the iuſt iudge. And agayne, The Heauen ſhall declare his iuſtice, for aſmuche as God is iudge. And the Apoſtle ſayth, The Lorde ſhall requite me in that day, the iuſte iudge. A iudge is iuſte one way, in reſpect that he is a man, and a iudge is iuſte another way, in rea true God, and whiche can be done by none beſides him, as whereby hee dothe create, make thoſe thinges whiche be not, & doth feede, encreaſe, gouerne, and preſerue all the thinges that be. Wherefore it is not without reaſon, that he is of ſome called The chiefeſt good, for how is not hee the chiefeſt good, of whome all things commeth and be preſerued.

Rom.9.

Gen.18.

It was no folliſhe opinion of him which ſaide, that the iuſtice of mans minde is wiſedome, the iuſtice of the body good health, of euery houſe, foreſight, and of euery Citie, peace. For then is the minde of man iuſt, when it is diſcouered by the prerogatiue of wiſedome from beaſtes which lacke reaſon, the body is iuſt, when it performeth the office of mans boodye in all his members, the houſe is iuſt, when the inhabitantes of it do agree one with an other, the Citie is iuſte, when the Citizens are knitte togyther in ciuile ſocietie by the bande of peace, like the members in a mans body. This I ſuppoſe, we ought to make the eſtimation of iuſtice, according vnto the condition, degree, eſtate, perſon, and office of eache part.

Howe manifold the iuſtice of God is.

The iuſtice of God is euer all one. Like as his goodneſſe is all one. And yet for all that like as wee doe in ſome reſpect call him God, in ſome other the Lord, and in an other the Iudge, ſo I ſuppoſe we may conſider his iuſtice not abſolutely, but firſte in reſpect as he is the iuſt God, Secondly the iuſt Lord, and Thirdly the iuſt iudge. The father is alſo called the iuſt father, by Chriſte hys only begotten, whereas he ſayeth in John: O my iuſt Father, the worlde knoweth thee not. Iohn.17.

What the iuſtice of God is, wee haue declared in the article before, it is the iuſtice of the true God the creator and conſeruer of all things, and in this reſpecte it agreeth with the goodneſſe of God, which the ſcripture in many places doth call צדק, which word they do commonly call iuſtice, as where the Prophet ſayeth: Deliuer me from the bloods my God, the God of my ſaluation, and my tong ſhall prayſe thy iuſtice, by whyche wordes no doubte he doth not meane of the iudiciarie iuſtice whereby ſinners be puniſhed, but of the goodneſſe and vprightneſſe of God, whereby the ſinnes be forgyuen vnto them that doe amende, thys hee dothe call the iuſtice of God. And agayne: Lay vp iniquitie vpon theyr iniquitie, and let them not come vnto thy iuſtice, that is to ſaye, vnto thy goodneſſe and mercye. And in an other place, God is gentle (ſaith he) and iuſt, and oure God ſheweth mercy: He putteth iuſtice in, with the commendation of gentleneſſe and mercy, meaning not of that iudiciarye iuſtice, but of that whiche is proper vnto God, whereby ſinnes be forgiuē. And in an other place: They ſhal ſpeake of the remembraunce of thy great goodneſſe, and ſing thy iuſtice, the Lord is gentle & mercifull, ſlowe in anger, and great in mercy. Theſe things doe not agree vnto the reuenging and iudiciarie iuſtice, but to the goodnes which forgiueth the ſinnes of mē. Wherefore ỹ. lxx. interpreters do wel ynough in ſundry places trāſlate the the Ebrew worde חסד, whiche ſignifieth goodneſſe, callyng it righteouſneſſe. And we may finde many ſuche places in the ſcriptures, where they haue tranſlated goodneſſe for iuſtice, and this kinde of the iuſtice of God I do referre properly vnto the goodneſſe of Gods nature: whereby all things be conſerued, and whereby he willeth not the death of a ſinner, but that he be cōuerted and liue, and forgiueth the ſinnes of them that doe amende. And of this iuſtice are thoſe things to be vnderſtanded, whiche the Apoſtle wryteth of the iuſtice of God, offered vnto men in Chriſte. But nowe the iuſtice of God is reuealed without the lawe, whereas it is proued by the teſtimony of the law and Prophetes, that the iuſtice of God is by ỹ fayth of Jeſus Chriſt to al mē, & vpō al mē which do beleu, &c. Wherby there is recōmēded vnto vs the iuſtice of God, as good, louyng, and mercyfull. Wherby he determined to iuſtifie & ſaue all whiche doe beléue in him by Chriſte, freely without any merites of workes. Gen.22. Rom.3. The iuſtice of God in Chriſte.

Gen.18. Pſalme.5. Pſalme.69. Pſalme.142. Pſalme.144.

Secondly, God is iuſte alſo, as Lorde and mayſter. This kynde of his iuſtice belongeth to the iuſte dominion, and full power, propertie, and poſſeſſion, wherby he gouerneth al whiche be in heauen and earth as Lord of all, and according to his free will hath mercy vpon whom he wil, and hardeneth whome he will, doing of his owne whatſoeuer it pleaſeth him. So that he can not be blamed of iniuſtice for any thyng whatſoeuer he doth, whether he kill or quicke, whether he deſtroy or ſaue, whether that he loue or hate, &c. Of this iuſtice of God the Apoſtle ſpeaketh in the ninth to the Romaines, when he ſayth: Is there any iniuſtice with God? God forbidde: looke vpon the reſt that foloweth. And we haue alſo ſufficiently ſpoken of this in the place before, where we ſpake of the dominion and power of God. This Power of proper right and dominiō is ſo perfect in God, that it excludeth all iuſtice from his wil, precepts and doynges. For it is not poſſible, that whatſoeuer he willeth, commāndeth and doeth, he ſhould vniuſtly will it, commaunde it, and doe it. For all theſe things doe extende, not to that whiche belongeth to any other, but to himſelfe, not to any thyng that is free, or of any others right, but vnto his owne things created of himſelfe, and poſſeſſed by full right, without the wrong of any. Whereſoeuer is no wrong, there is no vniuſtice. And ſurely in thoſe thyngs which be poſſeſſed in full right of God, there can be no wrong. For whatſoeuer hee doth of them, he doth it of his owne. If he deſtroy, hee deſtroyeth that whiche is his owne, and that by moſt iuſte power and authoritie. If he loueth and ſaueth, he loueth & ſaueth that whiche is his owne, ſo that hee declareth therein the ſpeciall goodneſſe and mercy of his godly nature. Iuſte Lorde.

Thirdly, he is iuſte, not onely as God and Lorde, but he is iuſt as the Iudge alſo. The Prophete ſayth in the Pſalme, God the iuſt iudge. And agayne, The Heauen ſhall declare his iuſtice, for aſmuche as God is iudge. And the Apoſtle ſayth, The Lorde ſhall requite me in that day, the iuſte iudge. A iudge is iuſte one way, in reſpect that he is a man, and a iudge is iuſte another way, in respect that he is a iudge. The iustice of a iudge semeth to consist specially in those thynges whiche wee shall rehearse hereafter. First, if he loue iustice, and doe hate wickednesse. Secondly, if he be not deafe at the crynges of them that be oppressed, as the wicked iudges be, whiche despise them that bee oppressed and troden vnder foote. Thirdly, though the oppressed doe not crie vnto him, yet not withstandyng he must heare the clamour of theyr case and receyue it into his seate of iudgement. Fourthly, if he haue no regarde neyther of persons nor of rewardes in iudgement, but doe iudge indifferently, as well to the poore, as to the rich. Fiftly, if he doe pronounce sentence, accordyng vnto the truth of the cause, that the iudgement may be right, & iuste. Sixtly, if he doe iudge not only by pronouncyng the sentence, but in case he be set in the place and authoritie of a Magistrate, he doe in deede execute the iudgement, so that the giltlesse may be deliuered, and he which hath not done euil, suffer worthy punishment. Seuenthly, if in the very execution of iudgement he forget not clemency, and fauour, that there appeare in him no token of crueltie. In these poynts (I meane) the iustice of a iudge dothe consiste, as iudge, accordyng vnto the whiche he is called aright, A iust iudge.

If we apply these things vnto the heauenly & generall iudge, there shal lacke none in him of them. The Lord is iust sayth Dauid, and loueth iustice, and againe: Thou doest hate all them, whiche doe worke wickednesse. And in Exodus it is written: Thou shalt not hurt the widow, and the fatherlesse, if you do hurte them, they shal crie vnto me, & I shal heare their crie, &c. Yea although that hee whiche is oppressed doe not crie, yet for all that he doth no lesse heare his cause, and vndertake it to be done, than though he did vehemently crie vnto him. The history of Abell and Cain is knowen, ỳ he regardeth neither rewardes, nor persons, but iudgeth indifferently as wel to the poore as to the rich. We may perceyue in Deuteronomie, where we doe reade this: God is great, mightie, & terrible, which accepteth neither person, nor reward, but doth iudge to the fatherlesse, & widowe. And that he iudgeth aright, the prophet doth testifie, saying: Thou arte iust, O Lord, and thy iudgemẽt is iust, and right. And as for the executiõ of his iudgemẽts there is no doubte: For he iudgeth not in wordes onely, but in workes and doyng. Yea, it is sayde, that hee iudgeth then when he dothe in deede defende the innocent, and punishe the wicked. And that he forgetteth not his clemency in his iudgements, the exãples of his iudgemẽts do declare. Deut. 10.

And in case he doth not immediatly iudge, or dothe not straightwayes worthily punish e sinners, or not punish thẽ so sore, as the enormitie of their sins do seeme to require, he doth not therein vniustly. For he is not a iudge only, but God also, pitifull and mercyful of nature, and besides that Lorde also of all, hauing full power, and authoritie as well to spare as to iudge. The intent and purpose of a iust iudge must be not to destroy thẽ strayght way, whome he taketh in hand to iudge: but as nere as he cã, so to iudge, that he saue ỳ, that may be saued. And therevnto truely our iust iudge doth apply himself, who is therfore slow vnto anger and iudgement, because he would saue such as wil amende. And yet for all that, he will at length condemne the impenitent whiche will not repent, by iuste iudgement, when the day of iudgement shal come. Thus we do finde thee mãners of true iustice in God, the first which is of God the creator and conseruer of al, which is nothing else but the goodnesse of Gods nature: the second, which is of the Lord and mayster, gouernyng by iuste authoritie after his owne will, in all things whiche he hath created and made: the third, which is of the iudge that iudgeth this worlde. The manners of iustice in god

What difference there is betvvixte the iustice of God and of Man.

LIke as there is no comparison of man vnto God, so there can be no comparison, neyther of the iustice of man, and the iustice of God. The iustice of man, if you cõsider the corruption of his nature, is none at all. Therfore it was saide, there is none iust, no not one. Wherfore when we make mention of the iustice of mã, & aske what differẽce there is betwixt it, and the iustice of God, we doe not meane of ỳ same, whiche we haue of nature, but of the same whiche wee ought to haue, & whervnto we be called in the scriptures. Neyther do we cõpare the same neither with the iustice of God in such sort that we can thereby vnderstãd how small, vnperfect, & vnconstant ours is in respecte thereof, but to see how it is in a certaine peculiar cõdition & manner distinct & deuided from the same. And I thinke it good briefly to expounde it, because of them, which when they do dispute of the iustice of god, haue much ado to depart frõ the conditiõ of mans iustice, as though that the knowledge of ỳ iustice of God, were to be taken as out of a paterne of mans iustice, as we see them doe for the most parte in their disputations of Gods predestination. The iustice of man is none. Rom. 3.

The manner of iustice whiche is required of vs, & whervnto we be instructed by the precepts of God is, that depending vpõ the will of God, we be good, & loue him, & our neyghbour, & serue him in pure fayth, and liue harmeleslie towardes al men, do nothyng to any mã which we would not haue done to our selfes, hate no man vnworthily, no nor though hee be worthy, condemne no man vnlesse he be manifestly naught, and worthy for good causes to be cõdemned, that we make no man obstinate in his naughtinesse, nor charge any man with those things which be impossible: these & suche other we must diligently eschew. Ye that is furnished after this manner, seemeth not to be farre from that iustice, whiche the commaundementes of God, and the information of heauenly doctrine dothe require of vs. But he whiche is so wide of it, that hee dependeth not vpon the will of God, but doth hate his neyghbours vndeseruyng, doth ỳ vnto others whiche he would not haue done vnto himself, doth condemne them whiche bee not openly naught, but rather them that haue done no euill, dothe make other some whome hee listeth obstinate in euyll, or layeth thynges impossible and unportable upon the shoulders of the weake, this man truely no mã will call iuste, but euery man pronounce hym to be vniuste.

Nowe if thou wilt compare the iustice of God vnto those conditions of our iustice, I iudge no otherwise therof, but according vnto these conditions, thou canst not in all respects pronounce of God, that he is iuste.

For firste he dependeth not vpon the wil of any superiour, vnto whose commaundements he should be subiect, and to whome he should directe his deuises and doings, but he standeth wholy vpon hys owne will, and dothe all thinges of his frée power. Secondly he dothe hate and condẽne man before he doth any euill, yea before he be borne as appeareth in Esau. And yet for all that, he willeth not that any manne shall hate hym. Thirdly he doth harden whome hée will, he concludeth all vnder beliefe, he maketh the wicked vnto the euill day, he giueth men vp into vncleannesse, into filthy lustes, and vnto a reprobate sense. If thou consider the iustice which is requyred of vs, thou canst not chose but condemne these matters, and say, that they be moste farre from the moste iuste God, and that it is necessary therefore, that they be expoũded otherwise than the letter leadeth. Truly if these things be done of man they be worthily reproued, but whereas they be done of God, as the Scripture doth testifie, in whome there can be founde no vniustice as we noted before, it must nedes be, that wée must separate the iustice of God from that of man, and graunt that whatsoeuer he doth is iuste, though it be forbidden vnto vs, and yet is vniuste, if we doe the same.

How is it iust (say you) to hate any manne, that is not yet borne, nor faultie in any poynt? How is it iuste to harden a mans harte, that he shall not vnderstande, and amende? How is it iuste, to deliuer a man vp vnto vncleannesse, filthy lustes and reprobate sense? I aunswere. These things be vniuste if they be done by man, for they can not be done by mã without wrong doyng to his neyghbour, and without breakyng of the lawe, which saith, that a man ought not to do that to an other, whiche he woulde not haue done to himselfe. But is it reason (I pray you) to bind the Maiestie of God vnto the same lawes that man is subiecte vnto? The lawe is sette vnto man, whiche if he doe transgresse, he is deemed aright to be vniuste. What God is that, whiche shall prescribe any law vnto our Lorde God, to be bound to the obseruaunce therof? What man is he among all the rest, whom God can do any wrong vnto? Then if we doe confesse, that God is subiect vnto no lawes, no not vnto those which be set vnto vs, and that it is not possible, that he doe any wrong vnto any man whatsoeuer he doe, or doe not. And yet notwithstandyng that these things be attributed vnto hym in the Scriptures, how doe we not perceyue, that we ought not to iudge of his iustice, according vnto the lawes set vnto men, nor according vnto the iustice whiche is required aright of men, but according vnto his frée and ful power, wherby being Lord of al, he may frankly and freely doe of all, whatsoeuer it pleaseth him to doe?

Therfore

Therfore a Christian man must haue this discretion, when he shall iudge of the iustice eyther of God, eyther of Man, that he consider not simply nor alone, what that is of it selfe, whiche he seeth done: but that he haue a respecte withall vnto the person, condition, estate, office, and authoritie of him that doth it, knowyng that al things be not in like case lawfull or vnlawfull vnto all: but that things may lawfully be done by some, whiche if others should doe the same, coulde not be done without offence. And seyng that wée ought to iudge with suche discretion of the iustice of mens doyngs, wée ought to haue a muche greater discretion and difference, betwixte the doings of God and men.

Of the Prouidence of God.

If these things bée considered which we haue hitherto spoke of the nature of god, I suppose that it doth sufficiently appeare, to be such in all respectes, that it will and is able to foresée and dispose all things, for all that euer is wholly throughout all the partes thereof: yea, and doth foresée and dispose, and that of necessitie. For seing that he is sufficient for all and almighty, there can be nothyng so tranesome, so harde, so hidden, so manifolde, and doubtfull, so large & wide, and so long to come after many hundred yeares and ages, whiche he is not able to dispose and order by his diuine pryonidence, whiche is full and absolute. As touchyng things to come, he doth not only foreknow al, so that all things be noted and open vnto his eyes, but he is also very mighty to dispose and order them, so that the fulfillyng of them and foreknowledge, be moste exactly answerable one vnto the other. As touchyng things past and present, it appeareth easily, that they can not bée hidden from him, from whome the things to come can not be hidden. Euery mã knoweth that the knowleage of things present and passe, is more easie than the foreknowledge of thyngs to come. Where the harder taketh place, there no man doubteth, but that the same whiche is easier, may sone take place. The knowledge of thinges passe and present, may be gotten by the industrie of man, though not of all, yet of a great part, but ỳ foreknowledge of things to come, muste nedes be lefte to the power of God onely, and to suche as he vouchsafeth to reueale the same. Therefore seyng that we be enforced to yelde that to the nature of God which is impossible for the nature of man, we be compelled muche the more to yelde vnto it the same whiche may also be in the nature of man. And in consideration hereof wée doe perceyue that God is able to dispose all thyngs by his prouidẽce, as wel things to come, as past, and present when we doe some hys foreknowledge vnto his almightynesse. And that God wil prouide and foresée for all his creatures, as well earthly as heauenly, it appeareth by that whiche we haue sayde before in the place of his goodnesse. Seing that he is good of nature, and therefore taketh not the causes of his good doyng of any other but of hymselfe, and seyng that hee is of himselfe moste gyuen to forgeue and prouide for all, there is no reason at all why wee shoulde doubte of his will. And therof we haue noted also before in a place by it selfe alone. Nowe if wee doe sette all these thinges togither whereby there dothe appeare an vnreuiable certentie of the power and will of God, there is nothyng lefte more, whereby we should be moued to doubte of hys doyngs. For the Scripture dothe testifie thus of him: that whatsoeuer thyngs he will, hee dothe. The weakenesse, and vnhabilitie of man is great, and yet for al that, if thou wilt graunt vnto man, that not onely he is able, but willeth also to do good to his neighbors, you shall not haue lightly any occasion to doubte, whether that he will assuredly, & for a certentie do that which he is able and willyng to doe. Howe much lesse must we doubte of God, that he ordereth all things by hys prouidence, seyng that wee can not doubt of his abilitie and will, vnlesse we doubte whether that he be almighty, and the chiefest Good?

the

And whereas wee sayde, that he dothe it of necessitie, it is not to bee meant of the necessitie, whereby he hath any neede of the conseruation & disposition of those things which he hath made, but of ỹ necessitie whereby they doe require and neede the same. For they be of ỹ nature, that they be not able to continue of their owne vertue, care, and prouidence, albeit they were not subiect vnto vanitie, whereunto notwithstanding they be subiect, witnesse the Apostle. Rom. 8.

Wherefore they haue neede to be gouerned and conserued by the prouidence, care, and order of their creator. For there is no one creature, no not of them in heauen whiche can gyue, or doe that vnto others which it can not gyue or doe to it selfe. So the whole care and order of all creatures is put ouer of necessitie vnto God onely, whether wee consider the might, goodnesse and will of hym, eyther the necessitie and condition of the Creatures. And this reason howe simple soeuer it seeme vnto some, in respecte of those busie deuises, whiche they doe alleage, appeareth to me to be both ready and certayne, wherby the mind of the faithful may bee confirmed in the faith of Gods prouidence, if he doe diligently consider the same.

Sundry Iudgements of the Prouidence of God.

Albeit that the prowes of Gods prouidence be most manifest, so that the Ethnykes also did knowe them, yet for all that, there be founde sundry opinions therof, and no marueil, seyng that there is nothyng elfe so one, and certayne, whiche is not by ignorance and blindenesse sundry wise tossed & torne: The summe of the Truth is insoste clere, but the eyes of mans minde be blinded.

Some be so wicked, that they doe vtterly denie the Prouidēce of God. They doe not acknowledge that he dothe knowe the doyngs of menne. They do say in their hart: God neyther seeth, neyther vnderstandeth, of that Some doe deny the prouidence of God.

that minde the sinfull men be, the wicked workers, which do abase & weaken the Lordes people, and turmoyle hys inheritaunce, saying in theyr harte: The Lorde seeth not, nor the God of Iacob vnderstandeth not. The wicked oppressors of ỹ faithful doe imagine, that God dwelleth in heauen, so that he is far off from vs which do inhabite this earth, & that so it cōmeth to passe, that he neyther seeth, nor vnderstādeth theyr doings. They imagine of him as absent, and they suppose that he neyther seeth nor knoweth of any thing, but of ỹ whiche is done before his face: So they make him like a king that is a man, whiche though he be neuer so mighty, yet for all that he seeth, and knoweth not all that is done in hys Realme. Theyr madnesse the Prophete dothe reproue, saying: Vnderstande you ignorant among the people, and you fooles be one wyser. Shall not he heare whiche made the eare, shall he not see whiche framed the eye? This kind of ignorant folk, Esaias also doth touche, saying: Wo be vnto you, whiche be so deepe in heart, that you hyde your counsayle from the Lord, whose workes be in darknesse, and saye, Who seeth vs? and who knoweth vs? This thought of youres is wicked, euen as if the clay shuld imagin against the workman, and the worke say to the worker: Thou madest me not, and the creature vnto hys creator: Thou vnderstandest not. And we doe reade of them also in Ezechiel, in this wyse. Thou seest well inough thou Sonne of Man, what things the elders of the house of Israel do in darknesse, euery man secretely in his bedde, for they say, The Lorde seeth vs not. The Lorde hath forsaken the lande. They whiche be so minded to imagine, that GOD cannot see those things which be done vpō the earth, and that though he doe see, yet for al that hee seeth but the outwarde and manifest things, but hee neyther seeth nor vnderstādeth the secrete and hidden things, when will they beleeue, that he doth knowe, care, and dispose al things?

Some say that God hath no care of mens maters.

Secondly, there be some, whiche though they doe easily beleeue, that God dothe see and vnderstande all thyngs, yet for all that they doe imagine, that he is but an idle loker on of our doyngs, and that hee hath no care of mennes matters, lyke as if a kyng shoulde beholde a stage playe from a highe skaffolde, not to direct and order it, but to take the pleasure of the sighte, and somewhat to recreate his minde therein as werped with earnester matters. Lyke as it is but a fonde matter for the Maiestie of a kyng, not onely to be gasing vppon stage playes and fonde sightes, but also to care, to direct, and order them, whereas he hath a great number of other more earnest matters to take care of, meeter for the Maiestie of a King: so these men doe suppose it to be a trifling and an vnfit matter for God, not onely to see & know the things of men, but also to care for and order them by his prouidence. They doe say: The Heauen of heauens vnto the Lord, but the land he gaue to the Sonnes of men, that is asmuch to say in their iudgement, God careth not what the Sonnes of men doe. He gaue them the earth, and lefte them in the hande of theyr owne

owne counsell, for euery man to doe what he will, and is able to doe, and so he hath yet kepte heauen for himselfe, where he raigneth as Lorde of Heauen and earth, and disposeth the matters of Heauen. So there hath bene in these our dayes some flatterers of Princes, whiche hath sayde, The Heauen of Heauens vnto the Lorde, but the lande he hath gyuen vnto the Emperour. And as one said long since: The halfe of all, thou hast (O Emperour) with God. But hée which thrusteth downe the mighty, and anaunceth the base and lowe, & taketh away the spirite of Princes, and hath the hartes of Kings lyke riuers of water in his hande, and directeth them whiche way he will, he doth oftentymes declare, that he careth for and disposeth not onely heauenly things, but earthly also.

If God rule the worlde of whence commeth so many euils?

Thirdly, there be some which do beléeue as these men doe, that mens cases be not cared for and ordered by God: but they be moued thereunto by an other reason than the other be. They say: In case that God dothe care for the doynges of men, of whéce is there founde dayly so many euils in the deuices, imaginations, and doings of men: all which he might preuent, and stay by the care and disposition of his prouidence, if he had any care of men at all. Who can beléeue that he is a good husband in a house, whiche will not kéepe off and staye that, whiche wil do the house harme, if he be able? Is not this an argumót good inough to proue that God careth not, gouerneth not, and ordereth not the deuises and doings of men, but that he hath lefte frée will in all poynts vnto man, to doe what he lusteth, and is able to doe eyther good or euill, and to loke for the recompence and rewarde of his doynges hereafter? And by this argument some be moued to deme this parte of Goddes prouidence for the order of mens matters, & some other whiche be weaker, are moued to doubt, whether that the things concernyng the lyfe, studie and doings of men, be verily in the care of God or no. In déede they be moued by many things to beléeue it, but yet withall there be many things on ỹ other side, in waying of the which, they be stayed from giuyng assured assent vnto this part of Gods prouidence. And so they stande in doubte, as at a crosse way, wauerying whiche parte they may take, fully & assuredly to trust vnto.

Fourthly, there be some whiche doe not doubte of any parte of Gods prouidence, but they do assuredly beléeue and acknowledge, that there is nothyng done neyther in heauen nor in earth, whiche is done without the dispositiõ of his prouidence, and that there is nothyng at all, that is not preserued and susteyned by his care. But some of them doe finde faulte, that nowe and then naughty packes doe fare so well in this worlde, and some doe so muche not misliyke therewith, that they doe therein allo commende the meanyng and iustice of the Prouidence of God. Yea it cõmeth so to passe, that they whiche did finde some faulte with the prouidéce of God, as offéded for the time with the prosperitie of the wicked, when they loke nearer to the purpose of God, they doe beginne to like and to commende the same wherwith they were offéded before. Of this matter we we may sée in Hieremie, where wée do reade in this wise: In déede thou art iuste O Lorde, if I reason with thée, yet for all that I will talke that vnto thée, which is iuste. Why doth the way of the wicked prosper? It is well with all them which doe amisse and liue wickedly, thou hast planted them, and they haue taken rote, they doe prosper and beare frute. Thou arte nye to their mouthe, and farre from their raynes. Sée here he doth not denie, but that the wicked bée planted by God: but he is offended in that, that they haue so great prosperitie of wealth. We doe reade the like also in the Psalme, where he talketh largely of this matter.

Psalm. 11.

Of the whiche ackeowledge prouidéce of God

So that the opinions of men bée thus variable in this case of Gods prouidence, whereas some do basely and vily iudge of God, and hold that he dothe not sée and vnderstande the matters of men: some contrarywise ouerthwartly anaunceing the Maiestie of God, doe thinke it a mockery to attribute vnto God, that he dothe sée, care, & dispose from heauen these base and earthly things. Others moued by the consideration of hys iustice, doe suppose, that he dothe not dispose the deuises, purposes and doynges of men, but that he dothe leaue them vnto their owne arbitrement & will. Others whiche do stande in no doubt of the prouidence of God, are sometimes offended with the prosperities of the wicked, and when they turne againe to the righte vnderstãdyng thereof, they doe acknowledge and commende the wisedome and iustice of God in the very same wherin they were offéded before. Yet for all that men be at a good poynt, that the prouidéce of God in déede whereby all things be disposed, dothe not swarue and varie, so as the opinions that men haue of it be variable and vnconstant, but that it doth allwaies gouerne, and dispose all things after a constant and continuall order.

What Prouidence is.

They which be skilfull in Scriptures doe knowe that those wordes whereby any thyng is attribute vnto God, be taken out of the vsage of men, and so applyed vnto the nature of God, to the extent that those thyngs whiche can bée by no tongue or language properly expressed, may bée yet at the least way, by the figures of mannes speache in some sorte shadowed. So there is attribute vnto God, foreknowledge, Care, Prouidence and Disposition: like as if we should talke of a moste wise and prudent King, which were ignorant of nothing that is to come, is passe, and present, and which doth take the care, and charge of al things that be within his realme, and dothe dispose them all by his moste exact Prouidence.

The Greékes do cal foreknowlege προγνωσις, whiche is the assured knowledge of things to come before they be done. Hereby God dyd foreknow and predestinate some before the making of the worlde, as we doe reade to the Romaines. Where the Apostle sayth, Whom he foreknew, them he also predestined. As for knowledge, it pertayneth generally vnto all things, as well passe as to come. But when the Scripture doth attribute knowledge vnto God it

Hoyw pr uidence attribute vnto G

Prescie ce for knowy

Rom. 8.

Knowledge

Sect. 1. meaneth

meaneth nothing else, but ỹ nothing is so hidden, nothyng so olde and ancient, nothyng so small, nothyng so doubtfull that can escape his knowledge. He whiche beleueth this hath skill enough, howe knowledge of all things is attribute vnto Gods Maiestie, albeit he can not skill of theyr Sophisticall questiõs, where they do argue how knowledge is in God.

Care. The scripture doth attribute care also vnto God, as we do reade in the Epistle of Peter: Caſtyng all your carefulnesse vpon hym, for asmuche as he hath care of you. And he meaneth nothyng else, but that God doth not neglect the necessitie of hys, and that he would haue no mã to searche ouerscrupulously, howe that solicitude or carefulnesse, whiche goeth with care, dothe agree vnto God. Some doe define care to bee a burnyng & biting of the harte, as though it were a hart sore, and as the Poete sayth, seyng this care doth nippe thy harte: But Care is not attribute vnto God after this sorte, in whome no such thyng can be. 1. Pet. 5.

Prouidence. Prouidence is sometimes asmuch to say as knowledge, and foreknowledge of things to come. Sometimes it signifieth an ableneſſe to foresee for others of things necessary. So it is sayde, that God in heauen dothe foresee and care for all. Care may be applyed vnto the present, and prouidence or foreseing vnto the necessitie to come, so that he may be called prouident, whiche dothe foresee for hys for the tyme to come, and dothe it in season, least when necessitie dothe draw on, he lacke those things which be requisite for hys necessarie vse. Such was the worke of Gods Prouidence, that before he made man, he prouided al things necessary for hym.

Disposition. Disposition doth herein differ frõ care and prouidence, that to dispose dothe not properly signifie, to care, and prouide thyngs necessary, but to order and employ euery thyng by a conuenient discretiõ and difference, accordyng vnto the qualitie of all parties, wherein is commended the incomprehensible wisedome of God, in that hys care and prouidence reachyng from ende to ende, dothe dispose all things in wayght, number and measure. By this disposition all things doe remayne in theyr order, as well heauenly as earthly, as well highe, as lowe and meane, the skie, the sunne, the mone, the starres, the earth, hilles, playnes, soũtaynes, fluddes, sea, beastes both reasonable and voyde of reason, with all things belongyng vnto the conseruation of the same.

What the prouidence of God is. When we do cõsider these things as they were the partes of Goddes Prouidence, we doe easily perceyue, what is to bee iudged of the whole, that is, that the same is foreknowing, prouide, caryng, and disposing of al those things which be, haue bene, and are to come. Whereby al things are moste wisely disposed, according vnto the will of God the creator, gouernour and sauiour, & those things also made whiche yet be not, & those thyngs whiche bee already made directed and preserued: those thyngs whiche are to be abased, bee abased, and such as are to be aduaunced, bee aduaunced, those things which are to be chaſtened, be chaſtened, and those things whiche are to bee taken away, taken away, and those thyngs which whiche are to bee chaunged, bee chaunged, &c.

Some do define the prouidence of God after this wise, Prouidence is the euerlastyng and vnchaungeable kyngdome, and administration of all things. They do meane by the worde of kingdome, dominion and power, and by the worde of administration, the temperature of the dominion, which they added, bicause of the finding and giuyng of all things vnto vs, with sæmeth in shew to be a condition of myniſterie as wel as of dominion. And thus much of the definition of Prouidence.

Whiche be the kindes of Prouidence.

The kindes of Gods prouidence. The Prouidence of Gods Maiestie is al one and selfe same, but if in case we do way his workes, we do find some certayne kindes therof, of whiche we could make many, but of them all, we will presently touche but three whiche be moſt principall, the first is of the creation, the second of the conſernation, the thirde of gouernance or rule.

1. The Prouidence of Creation.

There did cõcurre, and mẽte together in the worke of the creation the godnesse, mighte, wisedome and prouidence of God. For whereas hee created this whole frame of heauen and earth, to the good and profite of mankynde, it sheweth an argument of Gods godnesse, and whereas hee created all thyngs by the vertue of hys, worde, according vnto the saying of the Prophete, he sayde, and it was done, wee may acknowledge hys Omnipotencie. And whereas he disposed all things in so wonderful, commodious and profitable order, it doth sette forth vnto vs his incomprehensible wisedome. But whereas he did so make al things euen at the first beginning, that they should serue not onely for the present, but for the tyme to come also, and to continue euery one in theyr kinde & first order, and to be able to serue vnto our vses vntill the very ende of the worlde, all this is to be attributed vnto his prouidence. So the Prouidence of God gaue vs the light which we doe vse vntil the end, without the which all thyngs shoulde lye ouerwhelmed with darkeneſſe, and be deuided betwirte the darkeneſſe and the lighte, and appoynted day and night by enterchaunge of one of them after the other, he so tempered the chaunge of worksyng and reſtyng, that neyther the weakeneſſe of mã should be burdened more than his strength coulde away withall by continuall and vnceasing light, nor that if the darkeneſſe should still continue, the neceſſitie of worksyng should be excluded, but hee made that large walke, which wee doe call the firmament, in which the twoo great lightes, the sunne and the Mone shoulde by theyr enterchange and course giue lighte to all this worlde, and that the one also by his warmth should cherish al things, and the other by hys colde shoulde cole the earth, besides the reste of the vses of both the lightes.

The vvorkes of Gods prouidence.

By the same Prouidence God did euen at the beginning parte the waters frõ waters. And he so enclosed them below into one place, that they should nothyng anoy the land, which he woulde gyue vs to dwell in, and put into the earth a stregth of frute-fulnesse, whereby bothe menne and cattell shoulde bée fedde, and he gaue a séede to the fruytes of trées, whereby each kynde shoulde bée preserued in his sorte, to the vse of all ages. He replenished the waters with plentie of all kyndes of fishes, the earth with byrdes, beastes, cattell, and crepyng wormes, vnto whiche all hée gaue power to multiply, wherby the sortes of all kindes doe endure vntil this day. Lykewise he made man also apte to procreation, hauyng in him the séede of his owne sorte, loynyng vnto hym a woman whiche should be also apt to concepue, to de-liuer, and nurrishe the childe: vnto whome he gaue strength to encrease & multiply naturally with his blessing. And by his prouidence he creā-ted neyther man alone, nor woman without the man, but the male and female togither, in which both kinds ioyned by wedlocke into one flesh, shoulde be preserued & encreased the integritie and fulnesse of mankinde:

which coniunction ought to be estéemed, and obserued moste religiously and sincerely amongst men. Wherfore they doe plainely folowe the abuse of the olde Serpent and enimy of mankynde, as many as do forsake this ordinaūce of Gods prouidence, and doe eyther slaunder the coniunction of manne and woman in wed-locke of vncleannesse, or do forbidde, or breake, or any other vnlawfull way defile the same. I doe ouerpasse those abhominations of the Sodo-mites, so punished from heauen to the terrible example of reuenge, that all mankinde might vntill the worlds ende be afrayde to thinke thereof, vnlesse that the mindes of many mē were nowe adayes so blinded by the illusion of the Diuell, and gyuen vp into a reprobate vnderstāding. Thus much briefly of the prouidence of the first creation.

II. Of Conseruation.

The conseruation of the things created by God.

WE sayde that the seconde sorte of Gods Prouidence is in con-seruation. And we do meane of that conseruation, whereby all thyngs whiche he created be so conserued, that they may not only in theselues, but in theyr order and degrée also so endure, that they may serue to the vse wherevnto they were first created, not for one or two generations, but for all ages, and be correspondēt to the reason and purpose of the creation. Without this Prouidence so greate a worke coulde not haue endured, but that it had fallen euen at the firste, with the wayght of it selfe.
Is it not a moste manifest worke of Gods Prouidence, that the Sunne beyng all firy and moste burnyng, is neyther burnte it selfe, nor by hys heate burneth not those things that bée vppon the Earth? What is it that the Fountaynes doe spryng vp euery where, that the Riuers doe in continuall course runne into the sea, and that they returne agayne from the Sea into their conduicts, and do so by the continuance of their course serue to our vse? that the earth is rayned on from the skie, and moystened by the dewe from aboue, and tempered by the wynter Snowe, be

The conseruing prouidence of God to mankinde and vnto creatures.

be able to beare the heate the better of the sommer folowing, that the plē-tie of the sommer when all kynde of fode is layde vp, doth goe before the barennesse of the winter: that to all kinde of corne & cattell, the nature & kinde therof remayneth stil vnchaūgeded: that the fire doth yet vntill this day kéepe still the strength to burne, to warme and to walt: the water to cole, moyste and cleanse, the ayre to breath of, that the fruyte is concey-ued in the mothers wōbe, accordyng to the nature of euery kind of thing, nurrished, encreased, deliuered into the world, and preserued, and a number such other like: what do they elle repoze vnto vs, but that the creatures of God doe not lacke his pro-uidence, whereby all things be kept togither in theyr order?

Wée may consider this sorte of Gods prouidence, which conserueth and sauoth all thyngs, two wayes.
Firste immediately, and secondly by mediation or meanes. The immediate sorte is that, when it is done without any meanes. The mediate is that, when the worke and care of conseruation is wrought by some meanes. I do meane of such means, as may come vnto our knowledge, not of suche as bée vnknowen and inuisible. The meanes of Gods pro-uidence be manifest, by which mankynde is continued and encreased through the coniunction of man and woman, the children brought vp by the care and trauaple of their parents, the earthe bothe yelde fruyte beyng tilled and dressed by the labor of menne, our bodyes be fedde by the visible and earthly fode, the sicke bée cured by the diligence and arte of Phisitions, by the authoritie of Magistrates the publicke peace is preserued, the vnlearned are taught by the instruction of the learned, &c. By whiche all, as meanes appoynted by him, the worke of Gods Prouidence is performed. Wherefore it behooueth the wyse and Godly person by what wayes and meanes so euer hée be fedde, cured and preserued, to acknowledge the prouidence of God his creator towardes hym, and with a thankefull mynde prayse and commende the same.

Of small beasts.

The greate Doctors of our religion séeme to bée in sundry myndes concernyng small ware, I meane small beasts and wormes. Hierome supposeth that the Prouidence of God extendeth not to eache of them, but vnto the multitude onely. For so he noted vppon Habacuck in these wordes: Therefore like as the Pro-uidence of God runneth through all menne particularly, so wée may vnderstande that the disposition, order and course of thyngs in other liuing creatures is generall. As for example, howe the multitude of fishe doth bréede in the Sea, and lyue in the waters, howe the creppyng wormes and fourefoted beasts doe bréede vp-on and in the earth, and with what meates they bée fedde. But it were a fonde matter to turne the prouidence of God vnto this, to know eue-ry minute while, how many gnattes are bredde, and howe many deade, what a multitude of fleas and flyes there be vpon the earth, what store of fishe there swimmeth in the Sea, and whiche of the smaller sorte shall be swalowed vp of the greater. Let vs not so foolishly flatter God, in drawing his power euē to ỹ lowest trifels, that we do our selues wrong, in saying that there is lyke Prouidence in things reasonable and vnreasonable. Therefore that blynde booke is to be condemned for foolishnesse, wherin it is written, that there is a certayne Angell called Tyrus, which hath the rule ouer al creping beasts, and that there be also after the like manner peculiar Angels appointed vnto all trees and beasts, to haue the keping of them. Thus saith Hierome. Whiche things diligently examined, are founde to decay much of the perfectō and fulnesse of Gods Prouidence, whiche dothe not consiste herein, that he dothe generally know, what the multitude of beasts is, howe they breede, and howe they ryse, and with what meates they bee feede, but that he hath not onely a knowledge, but a care also of each of them, in so muche that there falleth not a Sparowe to the grounde without the knowlege of God, witnesse Christe hymselfe in Matthew. And how dothe this opinion of Hierome agree with the argument of Christe, where he dothe instruct vs of the prouidence of God by one sparow, and not by a multitude, to account therevpon, that we should not feare, least God would forsake vs, seyng that we be better than a great sorte of sparowes? Hierome saith, that God careth not for euery particulare beaste, but for a multitude: but Christe speaketh not of many, but of one sparowe. And in case that God dothe not know, how many gnattes are bredde, and dead euery minute while, how doth he know all things concernyng his workes? If it skilleth not in what number they doe breede and dye, so that as well theyr breeding and dying is out of the knowledge of God, whome shall we make to bee theyr creator, of whence they doe receyue lyfe and thyngs necessary vnto the sustentation of that life? If all beastes do receyue life of God, surely they doe receyue it of him, not as of one that is ignorant therof, but of him ỹ knoweth it wel inough. I am content that the water and lande bee ignorant, what kind of creatures be bredde in them euery minute whyles, but it may not be, that God is ignorant thereof, who is the only creator and prefrmer as well of them as of Angels, and is as well knowyng all, as Almightie in hys workes: and the payne is al a like vnto him to know the breeding and decay of each of his creatures, as to care for a multitude of them.

The place of Hierome examined.

Matth. 10.

Augustine speaketh muche more to the purpose, saying: Let your charitie consider who disposed the members of the flea and flie, to haue their order and proportion, to haue theyr life, to haue theyr moouing? Marke me euen of ỹ little pretty short beasts which you like, and consider the order and proportion of his members, the agilitie & quicknesse of hys life, whereby it is moued, how it wil flie from death, as well as it can, how it loueth lyfe, desireth that whiche it liketh, escheweth trouble, exerciseth sundry senses, stirreth in that sorte of mouyng whiche belongeth vnto it, who gaue the gnatte the styng whereby it sucketh bloudde? Howe thinke a pype or conduyte it is therowe whiche he doth drawe it? Who ordered this geare? who made thys geare? Doest thou wonder in the smallest thyngs? Prayse the great one. Therefore holde this doctrine fast my brethrene, lette no man remoue you from true beliefe & sounde doctrine. He whiche made the Angell in Heauen, he made the little pretty worme in earth: the Angell of heauen to dwell in Heauen, and the worme of the earth, to dwell vpō the earth. Did he make the Aungell to haue him to creepe in the myre, & the worme to be in heauen? He gaue to euery place his inhabitors, to the incorrupte places things incorruptible, & corruptible things to the places which be corruptible. Marke all the whole, & commende al the whole. Thus sayth Augustine. Who is of the opinion, that the Prouidence of God is to be considered, yea in the least of all, and in euery liuyng creature, no lesse than in the Angels of heauē: and he iudged that his whole worke coulde not be fully perceyued without this consideration.

Aug. in Psalm 148.

But some man will obiect me the saying of the Apostle, where after that he had alleaged the wordes of the lawe for his purpose, Thou shalt not muzzell the mouthe of the Oxe, which treadeth out the corne, he addeth: Hath God any care of Oxen? of this poynt we noted in our Commentaries vpō the first epistle to the Corinthians. The Apostle doth not exclude the Oxen from the Prouidence of God, but he dothe declare that the same lawe, was not made because of Oxen, but for labouryng men, to the ende that they should liue vpō theyr labour. The care of Gods Prouidence is one thyng, and the care of the lawe makyng, is an other thyng. Oxen doe not belong to the seconde, but they do belong vnto the firste. The lawe was not wrytten for Oxen, but for vs (sayth he) by whiche wordes, he dothe sufficiently signifie, that hee dothe speake of the care of God, not whereby he doth care for all his creatures, but whereby hee made that lawe for hys people. Wherefore this place of the Apostle can not maynteyne the opinion of Hierome.

III. The Prouidence of Gouernaunce and rule.

The thirde sorte of Gods Prouidence is that, whereby the whole worlde and al the things whiche bee therein, are gouerned, ruled and ordered. The disposition and order of Gods Prouidence is ouer all things, and God is among vs, in whom we doe lyue and bee moued. And there is a certayne degree of this Prouidence, albeit that the worthy therof be exceeding large and vnsearchable, whereby we may consider of it. And for this presente wee doe comprehende it in three parts, so that the gouernaunce and disposition of heauenly things shall bee the firste, the seconde of earthly, and the third of spirituall. The heauenly is that, whereby God dothe rightly gouerne his Aungels, whiche he hath to be his mynisters of his will. And this parte of Gods prouidence, albeit it is farre from our knowledge and senses, as inuisible, yet for all that, it hath ben reuealed sometimes in certayne and visible examples by the appearings of Angels, of which wee do reade muche in the Scriptures of the olde, and somewhat of the newe Testament. Secondly, whereby hee dothe so order this firmament of the Heauen, with the Sunne, Moone, Starres, Windes, Dewe, Rayne, Frost, Snow, Ice, &c. after such a singular and wonderfull disposition, that it is manifest vnto all men, that those things come not to passe by chaunce, and that it is not possible, that there should be so greate an order in mouing & wandering things, but that all these things doe so proceede in the charge of a perpetuall law, that they be yet for all that, subiect vnto the will of God, by ỹ which the course of them is in some vnwonted manner, eyther changed, or stayed, or restrayned, for our good and profite, or for our euill. This parte Christe doth touche, when he sayth: Which bringeth forth his sunne and his rayne vpon the good and the euil. And the Prophet, when he sayth: Fyre, hayle, snow, yce, and the spirite of the tempests, which do his worde: and that, that the sunne stayde at the request of Iosue, in his place so long, till the Israelites were reuenged vpon their enimies. And that it returned tenne lynes by the same degrees whiche it had gone downe, to the intent that king Ezechias being deadly sicke, might be assured of the accomplishment of Gods promyses. Hereunto also the Eclipses of the sunne are to bee referred, not onely those whiche be certaine and natural, but they also whiche be straunge and wonderfull: and besides that, the portentuous tokens and signes, which bee seene in the Sunne, Moone, and Firmament.

A diuision into three partes of the gouerning Prouidence of God.

Iosue 10.

Esay 38.

The earthly disposition of Gods Prouidence, dothe comprehende all those thynges, whiche be done within the firmament of Heauen, in the sea, or in the Lande, & in all those things whiche be within any of them both. Of these some haue no lyfe, and some haue lyfe, as well reasonable as voyde of reason: those which doe lacke lyfe, be water, fyre, ayre, earth, hearbes, plantes, and suche other lyke, of whiche it can not bee sayde, that they bee ruled of themselues, or that there is no care had of them, or that they be gouerned by any other, than by theyr creator.

By hym bee gouerned the waues of the Sea, and bee eyther tossed or dryuen into tempeste or caulmed. From hym commeth the fruytefulnesse or barrennesse of the Lande, whereof appeareth a moste Godly example in the hystorie of Ioseph. From him commeth the wholesome ayre, and the plagup infection also of the same.

Things hauing lyfe, be the birdes of the ayre, the fish of the sea, and the beastes of the lande, bothe small and great, of whiche the number is infinite, and man also made to the likenesse of God. As touchyng byrdes, beasts, and fish, it may be easily perceyued, that they bee gouerned by Gods Prouidence: for as muche as being destitute of the ayde of reason, they can not rule themselues, and that the great parte of them be out of the custodie of Man.

But it seemeth that there may bee some doubte made of Man, bycause that hee hath the iudgement of reason, vnderstandyng, and knowledge gyuen hym, so that hee may knowe what what to do, and what to eschew, and therefore needeth not the continuall gouernaunce of Gods Prouidence, specially if he haue free wyll, and dyd receyue at the very beginning of his nature the power and dominion of earthly things. Wherefore we wyll leaue to talke of the gouernaunce of things vnreasonable, and consider of man, whether that he be also ruled by the Prouidence of God, and subiect vnto his gouernance and order.

Man.

V Whether that man is gouerned by the prouidence of God.

Man is a creature of God, in part heauenly, and in part earthly, and in that respecte he is subiecte vnto the same Prouidence, whereunto all creatures as well heauenly & earthly be generally subiect. He is made of a soule which is reasonable, and of the flesh which is taken from the dust of the earth, and is subiect vnto manye infirmities. Touchyng the reasonable soule, he hath heart and minde, he hath the power to vnderstande, to iudge, and to remember thinges by heart: he willeth, desireth, loueth, hateth, hopeth, and feareth, &c. By the flesh, he eateth, drinketh, sleepeth, worketh, walketh, falleth sicke, dyeth, and is consumed. These be woinere all the poyntes whereof man wholly consisteth. And in case that the gouernaunce of Gods Prouidence doe beare no place in them, surely it beareth no rule in the man at all, but in case that all these things particularly be gouerned by the Prouidence of God, I thinke it a clere case, that the whole man altogither is gouerned by the Prouidence of God.

De soule of Man.

Firste, as concerning the soule, whereby we do liue, is not the same altogither in the power of God, not only to gyue it when he will, but also to keepe and take it away when hee will? The Prophete sayeth in the Psalme: Whiche keepeth the soules of his saintes. As for that whyche Christe sayde: I haue power to laye downe my soule, and take it agayne, can not be so truly sayde by vs, as it was by him: bycause there is not gyuen vnto vs the power of our owne soules, which he had as the Lorde of all. Neyther can the saintes gouerne and keepe their owne soules, howe much lesse can others do it? Neither can Princes so keepe their soules, that they shall be safe inough against ỹ conspiracy of their enimies, though that they be neuer so surely watched and warded round about. But I suppose, that there is no man will stand to striue about this part of the soule by whych we do liue, but that it is vnder the order of Gods Prouidence: but there is more sticking for the rest, for we said more, that the soule consisteth also in the minde and the heart. And for as much as the minde seemeth to haue the preeminence in man, bycause of the habilitie of vnderstanding, iudging, reasoning, and remembraunce, whiche it taketh naturally of the maker, it is supposed to be able by hir owne foresight and wisedome, to gouerne man wholly, and that therefore it is not of necessitie subiecte vnto the Prouidence of God. But although that we may in manye poyntes, concernyng the case of man, vse somewhat the benefite of minde, vnlesse that it be corrupte and decayed by disordered affections: yet for all that, it is not so strong, that it can serue for our well ordering, without the gouernance of God. For albeit that we be neuer so strong in reasoning, yet is that styll tuft and sure, whiche the Scripture sayeth in the Prouerbes, that the tongue and proceeding of man is gouerned by God, albeit that in oure hearte we doe wisely dispose manye thinges after oure owne iudgemente. How then can there be ascribed vnto our minde a gouernaunce to bee ruled by, when we can not haue the gouernaunce of as muche of oure wordes, mouings or going? Haue not the Aungels also vnderstanding and iudgement? and yet for all that, wee must needes iudge him vnwise, that woulde take them out of the Prouidence of God.

Psalme. 97.

The minde of Man.

Prouerb 16.

Of the dignitie and free will of man.

You will saye. But there was graunted a speciall prerogatiue and dignitie vnto man, in that he was made after the similitude of God, and endowed with free will, & made the Lord & maister of Gods workes, whiche he could not haue bin, vnlesse that he coulde firste rule himselfe before that he shoulde rule others.

I answere, There is as great a difference betwixt the first creation and dignitie of man, and the corruption that followed, as is betwixt heauen and earth. Man as Augustyne sayth, abusing his free will, lost both himselfe and hys free will. Wherefore we can not chalenge vs the dignitie lost in Adam. Wise menne doe knowe by experience, that man is neuer sonder or more out of ỹ way, than when he is lefte vnto hymselfe, and semeth to intende all thynges most wisely, after hys owne iudgemente and wyll. Wherefore all godlye persons doe committe all heyr purposes, councels, and doings vnto the heauenly prouidence. And therefore be in all mens mouthes these termes: And God before, God willing, By the help of God, and If God will, and such other like, whych tearmes commeth not only of the instinct and motion of Godlinesse, but of the experience also of all ages. All worldly matters, and all the purposes of all men, are comprised in these two endes: that they be done eyther for man, or by man. Those thynges whiche be done, or maye be done, for man, or to man, are beyond all consideration. Things be done vnto hym some immediately from God, and some mediately eyther by good or euill spirites, eyther by creatures hauing no life, as well heauenlye as earthly, eyther by liuing creatures, as beastes and men. I beseeche you howe is the minde of man able in all these thinges, eyther to applye hym selfe vnto good, eyther to withstande them, or to eschewe euill, vnlesse that he be ruled and gouerned by ỹ Prouidence of God? and graunt he were strong ynough for the thinges present, how shoulde he be able to resist thinges to come, of whiche he can not imagine, no not as it were in a dreame? Suche thinges as be done by man, albeit that they be done by neuer so well aduised counsell, yet for all that they haue no certaynetie of successe, so that for the most parte they do fall out farre otherwise than they were meante, whyche muste needes be of necessitie, when man purposeth one thing, and God disposeth an other. To be shorte, man purposeth, and God disposeth, and the imaginations of man he vayne as the Scripture testifyeth. Wherefore wee muste not thynke, that in this Thinges done for man.

The hart of man.

Thinges done by man.

Note. The heart can loose the spirit of man, it can not fine it.

this parte nother whyche concerneth the mynde and principall parte, whereof some men doe exceedingly glory, but that man is subiect, yea in the respecte also whiche he vseth reason, vnto the gouernaunce of Gods prouidence, and that he is subiecte not by violente but necessary subiection, no lesse than all other ioyning creatures, which be voyde of the benefyte of reason.

Lette vs goe nowe to the hearte of man, in whyche is the seate of affections, wyll, appetite, loue, hate, hope, feare, sorrowe, and ioye, &c. Who can sufficientlye expresse, how great folishnesse, corruption, and depravation there is in it? The hearte of man sayeth ỹ Prophete, is naught and vnsearchable, and who shall knowe it? It is able to lose the lyfe of man: but it is not able to rule it, and yet for all that it followeth not reason, albeit it tell him anye thyng aryghte. It wylleth, coueteth, and loueth, when it ought not to will, couet, and loue. It abhorreth, and hateth those things, which ought to bee embraced. It hopeth, whereas is no hope. It mistrusteth, where it should haue most truste, it is heauie, where it ought to reioyce, it feareth, where is no feare. Therefore seing that it is so depraued and ouerthwarte of it selfe, and followeth not good aduises, what remayneth else, but that of necessitie it muste be ruled by the Prouidence of God, leaste if it be left vnto it selfe, it cast away both the lyfe, and that whyche is looked for of man. He who hathe the hearte of Kynges whyche be not franke and free in his hande, surely he hathe the heartes also of other men, to rule

1. Sam. 10.

The flesshe and bodye of man.

Iob. 13.

they whole lyfe, intentes, purposes, and doings. I knowe O Lord, sayeth Hieremie, that the way of manne is not his owne, neyther that it is in the man to walke, and direcle hys steppes and goings.

As for the flesshe and body of man, there is no doubt but that this bodye framed togither of flesshe, bones, vaynes, and arteries, mayntened with blonde, & inspired with breath, dothe not rule no more than brute beast dothe, but is ruled and is full and whole subiecte vnto Gods Prouidence, in so muche that God keepeth the certayne and perfecte number of his paises, and of the heares also of his head: wherefore wee doe conclude, that man wholly bothe in soule, minde, heart, and body, with all his aduises, purposes, doings, and behestes, &c. be subiecte vnto the Prouidence of God, and in all thinges is gouerned by the same.

Hitherto we haue spoken of the heauenlye and earthly disposition of Gods Prouidence. Now remayneth the third, whyche is spirituall: And I doe meane of that, whereby the heartes of the elect be regenerated by the spirite of Christ, lightened, purged, sanctifyed, iustifyed, and ruled so, that they liue now not of them selfe, but that Christe dothe liue within them. This parte of Gods Prouidence is speciall, and appoynted to the children of God. And it is of that sort also, that it is not only done immediately by the operation of the holy spirite of Christ, but mediately also in many folkes, by the working withall of the ministers, whose help he vouchsaueth to vse therein, as we haue declared before.

That

That vve must not abuse the doctrine of Gods Prouidence.

Two kindes of men abusing the Prouidence of God.

There be two kindes of men, by whome the doctrine of Goddes prouidence is abused. The first is of them, whiche after that they be once perswaded, that all oure things, concerning either our life, intentes, and doings, be in the hand of Gods Prouidence, whereby all is ruled and disposed, streight way of a crooked carelesnesse, they set cocke in the howpe, as we be wonte to saye, and despise all things which they ought to care for, and do lay them to the prouidence of God, and saye: Why should I carke and care in vaine? God will prouide and dispose me thinges to my nede and necessitie. And to this purpose they do vse that saying of Abraham, when he saide vnto his sonne Isaac: God shall prouide him a burnte offering my sonne, of whiche place it followeth not for all that, that we should neglecte those things that doe belong vnto our care. Albeit that Isaac dyd heare his father say so, yet notwithstanding he carried wodde with him to make the sacrifice of burnt offering, and sayde not: If God will prouide him wodde also, or else he wyll wast the burnte offering with fyre from Heauen, so that there shall be no nede of wodde. He made none of these answeres vnto his father, but did that which he was bidden do, and committed the rest vnto God. Wherefore that saying of the Prophet: Caste thy care vpon the Lorde, and he shall sustein thee, must not be so taken of the idle man, that he doe neyther till nor sow his land, but so that after he hath ploughed and sowen, he must committe the encrease of hys trauaple with a good hope vnto the care and Prouidence of God. So likewise that saying: Vnlesse the Lorde do build the house, they do laboure in vayne whiche doe buyld it, must not serue to this effect, that we must neglect our building, and leaue that to be done by the prouidence of God, whiche maye and oughte to bee done by vs. To be short, those things which can not be done by vs, we shal do well to committe them to the prouidence of God, at suche time as we haue done as muche by the faythe of his prouidence, as we be able well and lawfully to do. To do otherwise, is nothing else but to tempte God: he dothe fede vs all, but so that we eate and drinke. For albeit that man liueth not by breade onely, but by euery worde whiche procedeth out of the mouth of God, yet for all that, he doth so fede vs commonly, that we must seke by our trauaile the meate which he doth giue, and eate it so gotten. So we must ioyne our trauaple vnto the prouidence of God, and yet for all that we muste attribute nothing vnto our trauaple, but all vnto Gods prouidence.

Vnlesse God doe build the house.

There is an other sorte of them, whiche doe wickedlye abuse the doctrine of Gods prouidence, saying: If all our purposes, intents and doings be disposed by the prouidēce of God, then not only the good things, but the euill also whiche we do, must nedes be done by the same: wherefore it commeth not of vs that we do sinne, but of the disposition of Gods prouidence. Now the Prouidence of God is is euerlasting and immutable, and therefore not only those things whiche seme to betide vnto vs by happe, but those thinges also which we doe as well euill as good, do runne on by a perpetuall & immutable set course of law, and our deskinies do so dryue vs, that we be compelled of necessitie, will we, nill we, to suffer and to do those things whiche we doe suffer of others, and those things which we oure selues doe vnto others. And so seeyng they doe laye all the blame of their sinnes not vnto themselues, but vnto God.

Ergo it commeth of Gods prouidence that we sinne.

What shall we say to thys geare? these be wordes not of godly, but of wicked folke, they whiche be godlye doe saye with the Apostle: The euill whiche I doe hate, I do, and the good which I would wish to do, I do not. And howe commeth this to passe? There dwelleth (sayeth he) sinne in me. I knowe (sayeth he) that there dwelleth not in me, that is to saye, in my flesh, any goodnesse. So he dothe laye the blame of his sinne, not vnto God, but vnto the sinne dwellyng within his flesh. And he loueth not euill, but he hateth it: he dothe not excuse it, but rather accuse it. Neyther he doth lay it vnto the prouidence of God, but he flyeth vnto his mercye, saying, A wretched man I am, who shall deliuer me from the bodye of this deathe? The grace of God thorough Jesus Christ our Lord. Thus I saye, godlye folke be afflicted, both acknowledging the corruption and malice of their flesh, and do confesse the same wyth sorrowe, chargyng it wyth the blame of theyr sinnes, and that James meante where he sayeth: Lette no man saye when hee is tempted, that he is tempted of God, for God dothe not tempt vnto euill, neyther he tempteth any manne, but each man is tempted as drawen and entised by hys owne concupiscence or lust, and then, when concupiscence hathe conceyued, it bringeth forthe sinne, &c.

The godly do deface nothing of Gods prouidence.

And yet for all this, the Godly do by this opinion derogate nothing at all of the diuine and vnsearcheable Prouidence of God, but they doe knowe that he dothe order and gouerne all oure intentes, purposes, and doynges, according vnto the will eyther of his grace, or of anger, so that there is nothing as much as thoughte by vs, muche lesse done, but that it is subiecte vnto his Prouidence. In hym we be, we liue, and be moued, sayeth the Apostle. Ergo it is as much impossible, that it shoulde be vnknowen vnto him, and voyde of hys prouidence, that we be, we liue, and be moued, as the childe that is in the mothers bellie shoulde not bee knowen of, to the mother in whome it is, it liueth, and is moued. Yea the childe is not so knowen to the mother, and so subiecte vnto hir prouidence, as we be, and all oure lyfe, and all our motions as well of heart as of bodye be in the knowledge and Prouidence of God. So that he doth not onely knowe and foreknowe, but he doth rule also all our thynges, and that after hys free wyll and libertie.

Philip.1.

In case that there be in vs anye goodnesse not onely of worke, but of wyll, it is of God himselfe, who hee worketh in vs both to will and to performe. For we be not able inough to thynke anye goodnesse, as of oure selues, selues, but all our abilitie is of God.

a.Cor.3. On the other side in case that we will, and doe any thing that is euil, albeit we will this by the malice of oure owne heart, and through the instinct of Satan, yet for all that wise men may not denie, that the same neyther is not so done, withoute the prouidence of God, who vseth our wickednesse also, according vnto his moste iust and free will, vnto some certayne ende, whiche he purposed from euermore, doyng in his owne, and of his owne what hee wyll, lyke as wee declared before in the place of Goddes iustice. So wee shall saye aryghte that no man doth sinne, but by his owne malice, and againe, that no man dothe sinne without the Prouidence of God.

Our naughtinesse doth not delyuer vs from the dominion of God.

And shuld we be so fond to thinke, that the malice of mans hearte doth decay any thing of the right and authoritie of God, so that after we become once euill, we should be no longer subiect vnto his dominion? The malice of the Deuill though he were neuer so naught, did not make hym free from the authoritie and dominion of God, but that he should be subiect to serue at hys wyll. God dothe vse his malice as often and what time, howe and whereunto hee wyll. And yet for all that neuer to anye euill ende, whereunto Satan hymselfe dothe most diligently seeke, and endeauor: but alwayes to suche an ende, as is conueniente for God the sauior, and iudge also of all.

The historie of Iob.

Loke vpon the Hystorie of Iob, and see whether that Satan also doth not appeare among the seruauntes, that is to say the Ministers of God, and whether that God dyd not delyuer into hys handes, all the wealthe of Iob. Firste the Sabees draue away all his Oxen and thee Asses and stroke his children with the swoorde: secondly there fell fire downe from heauen, and consumed all his Shéepe and seruants: thirdlye, the Chaldees fet away his Camels. Fourthly, a vehemente wynde strooke, and ouerthrew the house, wherein his children were banketting, & they were slaine, squashed with the fall of the house: fiftly, he did also miserably torment the bodye of Iob himselfe, and made it moste lothsome, and pitifull. I beséeche you was there anye iustice in that, that the Sabees and Chaldees draue away the Oxen, Asses and Camels of Iob, being an innocent person, and whiche neuer did them anye harme? and that they slewe his seruauntes with the swoorde? Let there be no accompte made of the Oxen, Asses, and Camels, shall we say, that the bloud of man might be lawfully shedde at al aduentures and without cause, did not GOD himselfe saye streighte after the fludde, whosoeuer doth shed the bloud of man his bloud shall be shedde. I pray you then to whome shall we referre this vniuste dealing? Surely vnto Satan principally, who is a lyer and a manslayer from the beginning, and secondarily vnto the wrongfull dealing of the Sabees and Chaldees. Thus I doe meane of the vniustice of thys facte doyng, but yet for all that who seeth not, that the very facte it selfe proceded wholly of the will and Prouidence of God? without whiche neyther Satan, nor the Sabees, nor Chaldees had bin able, to haue done any of their matters againste Iob?

How the malice of sinners, the prouidence of God doe concurre.

For God himselfe, whereas he sayd. Lo all things whiche he hathe be in thy hands. Gaue the power, and authoritie vnto Satan, whereby thys was done: and we can not referre all those things to the malice of the wicked natiõs of the Sabees and Chaldees, for as much as there came fyre also downe from heauen, and consumed Iobs Shéepe and seruauntes, and that a tempeste of wynde ouerthrewe hys house, and slewe hys children. Shall wée therein attribute anye malice, vnto the fyre, and wynde? dothe not the Prophet saye of them, that the fyre, hayle, snowe, yce, and tempestuous wynde, do fulfill hys worde? Whome shall wée appointe to be Lorde of all these thynges besydes God the creator of the same? Is he then the author of anye euill? hée is not the author of euill, as euill, and yet for all that those thynges whyche betyded vnto Iob chaunced by hys wyll. They were not euill in the respecte of the Prouidence, Wyll, and power of GOD, and yet notwithstandyng they were euill in respecte of Satan, and the wicked Sabees and Chaldees. So they sinned with Satan of theyr owne malice, and notwythstandyng they dyd that whyche they dyd, by the speciall Prouidence of God.

Take an other example. Dauid when he waxed olde, sinned in the numbryng of the Israelites, for whyche sinne the people was stricken with Pestilence, and there dyed thereof thrée score and tenne thousand men, if you aske what moued Dauid to number his people, it is readye to finde in the booke of the Chronicles.

2.Sam.vlt. Satan stoode vp against Israell, and moued Dauid to number Israel: and that in Samuell: The displeasure of the Lord fell against Israel, and moued Dauid touching them, to that he said vnto Ioab, Goe and number me Israell, and Iuda. You see nowe that Satan did procure and entice Dauid, and yet you doe perceyue withall, that not Satan but God was the firste mouer in this matter. He was displeased with the Israelites, and wouldе plague them, and therefore moued Dauid by his oversighte to minister him an occasion to be angry, and to doe that whiche hée had determined. So Dauid did sinne enticed by Satan, and yet for all that, the facte it selfe came firste from the Prouidence of God, who vsed the seruice of Satan, to this ende, to entice Dauid to number the people. Wherefore the Scripture sticketh not to attribute vnto God, that hée being angrye with Israell, moued therevnto Dauid. And doe wée not see in thys case also, that in the culpable facte, there is not only the malice of Satan, and the sinne of the man that offended, but that there cõcurreth withall the Prouidence also of God?

Ioseph. If you ponder the Hystorie of the sonnes of Iacob, whiche wickedlye handled, and solde their brother Ioseph into Egypte, what shall you fynde else, but a manifest and a notable example of the Prouidence of God? God did not onely foreknowe what they shoulde doe, neyther dyd not only direct the same whiche they did to a good ende, but he did also appoint the whole of it before, & did direct their mindes to do so, though they vnderstode it not, yea he did diligently ordre it so, that they shoulde do no otherwise. And that Joseph knewe, and declared also, when he sayd vnto them in Egypt, you sente me not hyther, but God.

An obiection.

But you will saye, then God dyd moue the heartes of Josephes brethren to cause them to sell him, and to committe so great an offence, not only against hym, but against his father also. If we say so, do we not attribute the euill which they did committe vnto God, as the author therof, and so discharge them of the offence?

Neither God is the author of euill nor he without fault with the sinners.

I aunswere, we doe none of them both, we doe neither make God author of the euill, neither we doe not clere them of the blame. The euil of this facte was not of god, but it was breedde in their heartes, I meane the hate of their brother, whiche is of Satan, and not of God, wherby they were stirred to compasse the thyng whyche was quite contrarye to the purpose and counsell of God, in that they determined to kill their brother to proue what the dreames shoulde doe him good, whiche he had opened vnto them, they conceyued the causes of theyr hatred first of that, that they perceyued Joseph was dearely beloued of his father. Secondly, because he accused them to their father of a most filthy crime. And thirdlye, for the telling of the dreames whych he had seene. Shall we say nowe that this hatered and purpose to kyl their innocent brother came of God? God forbidde. For the malice of this fact was herein contrary vnto the purpose of God, the drifte whereof God neuertheles fulfilled by Ruben, and afterwardes by Judas, so that the purpose of hys Prouidence proceeded without staye to the determined ende and effecte. And whereas Judas dyd aduise them to sell Joseph vnto the Ismaelites, he did it not vpon anye hatred that he bare vnto him, but for an affection of mercye, and of the feare of God, and to bee sure, that the childe shoulde not bee murthered.

And this counsell of his was not euill (vnlesse ỹ it be euill vpō the affection of pitie, and feare of God to hynder the deuices of the hatred of his brethren, and the sheading of innocente bloude.) Neyther was it against the prouidence and purpose of God, but it did rather make the way thervnto, and therfore it was not of Satan, but of God, no more thā that was, that the reste of ỹ brethren, leauing theyr purpose of their murder, followed the aduice of Judas to sell him. So we doe in this example also see, howe the malice of man, yea rather of the Deuil doth so concurre with the Prouidence of God in one selfesame facte, so that God is neyther author of euill, nor yet that any thing is done without his prouidēce. Wherefore it were verye wicked, if anye man should so wreste and wring the doctrine of the Prouidence of God, to lay the blame of the mslice, eyther of man, eyther of the Deuill vnto God, or else to spoyle God of all the prouidence of his frée gouernaunce and power ouer all. Of thys matter in my opinion no man ought to iudge without greate discretion. Lette vs giue that which is of God, vnto God, and that whiche is of the malice of man or of the Deuill, lette vs of man or of the Deuill, let vs giue it vnto the Deuill or else to the naughtye and corrupte man.

Whether the workes of Joseph did please God.

It was Goddes wyll and order, that Joseph shoulde bee solde into Egypte, and thys hee woulde not for any purpose of euill, but for the profyte of hys people. But whereas hys brethren dyd is wrongfully hate hym, it proceeded not of hys but of the Diuels wil, whyche for all that, he did so temper by his godlye prouidence, that the same came to passe whyche not the Deuill, but he determined vppon. You wyll say againe: The Prouidence of God is immutable, and therefore it is of necessitie, that whatsoeuer hee hathe foresene, and disposed, be performed. Now if they were appoynted by the Prouidence of God, that Joseph shoulde bee solde by hys brethren, it followeth that they dyd the same of necessitie. And in case they were driuen of necessitie to sell hym, did they not that wythout blame, which they dyd of necessitie? and whereas they coulde doe no otherwyse, than they were appoynted of GOD, I aunswere. Loke that you make a difference betwirt the counsell of God, and the counsell of the Deuill. That whyche is determined of by God, is subiecte vnto necessitie, but neyther the Deuill, neyther the naughtye man doe willingly obey this necessitie, but doe followe theyr owne malice. And whereas God vseth the same vnto hys purpose, and stirreth them to doe the same whiche of a wicked intente they take vppon them to doe: or else whereas hee dothe so temper and moderate the naughtie wyll of them, that theyr very facte commeth to an other maner ende than they loked for, is there anye godlye person, whiche accounteth that thys is to bee mysliked in the Maiestie and power of God, and will not thynke it to be most iust of all?

The counsell and purpose of the Deuill was, that Joseph should bee meste spitefully hated and murthered of hys brethren, the counsell of God was, that hee shoulde bee solde into Egypte, to be the procursor of Israell, whyche shoulde come thyther when the tyme serued. Therefore, whereas they solde him, they did it of necessitie, but not therfore, because that it was so appointed by God, but they woulde followe their mischeuous affection. Wherefore they did that whiche they did, neyther without blame, neyther without greate faulte. So that it remayneth, that the whole facte bee referred vnto the prouidence of God: but that the circumstances whyche be worthy of blame, be referred vnto the malice eyther of man, eyther of the Deuill, eyther vnto both. And this sentēce or saying (as I suppose) hath no inconuenience, but doth readily assoyle those obiections, whyche are layde by wicked persons against the prouidence of God. If anye man loke for more superstitious talke herein, let him seeke ỹ trifling tapes of the Sophisters, where hee shall fynde himselfe more abod, than hee shall be able honestly to shifte himselfe of agayne.

Howe the Prouidence of God doth agree with Happe and Chaunce.

The prouidence of God dothe exclude chaunce & fortune.

THe prouidēce of God is of that nature, that through the immutable certaintie thereof, whereby al things be ruled, it excludeth al chāce and happe of fortune. I cal it chance and happe of fortune, whatsoeuer appeareth and betideth vnlooked for, vnforeséene at all aduentures, and without any sure cause or reason, so that it appeareth to be done by no foresight at all, neyther of God, neyther of mā, such as without number, doth befall among men in the world. Therefore loke how much any man doth yelde vnto chance and fortune, so muche he doth pull away from the prouidence of God. Vnto good Christian mē it is a cléere case, that there chanceth nothing throughout all this whole world at hazard, or al aduentures without the prouidence of God, which disposeth all. Wherefore my iudgemente is, that chaunce and fortune be vayne wordes, and to no purpose.

Of chance and fortune out of the scriptures.

But some man will obiecte out of the holye Scriptures two Ebreiwe wordes, whiche are wont to bée vsed for chaunce & fortune, and are founde there in sundrye places, as in Samuell, where we do reade, howe that he whiche had slayne Saule, saide vnto Dauid: I came by chaunce into the mount of Gelboe. And in the booke of the Kings: And a felow drewe vp his bowe, and let flée an arrowe at all aduentures, and by chaunce stroke the King of Israell betwixte the lyghtes and the stomacke. And the Ecclesiastes: The runner the race lyeth not in the swift man, neyther the battell in the strong, the wise haue not always bread, nor the man of vnderstanding wealth, neyther the mē of knowledge haue grace, for all these thinges doe happen in time and by chance. Ergo, chaunce and fortune bée not vayne wordes and to no purpose, for if they were so, the Scripture would not vse thē. Ergo, it followeth, that all things be not ruled by the certayne prouidence of God, but that a number of things do fortune & come by chance: as that the same man came by chāce to the mount of Gelboe, at the verye instante, when Saule would haue slaine himselfe, and that King Achas was stricken with an arrowe at all aduentures.

2. Samuel.

1. Reg. 22.

I aunswere, he which slew Saule was an Amalechite and an Ethnike, so that it was no wonder that hée saith, He came by chance to ỹ mount of Gelboe: but who vnderstandeth not, that the death of that king was tolde of before, and that therefore it came not by chaunce and fortune.

As touching the two other places, where we can not denie but that the Scripture doth vse these wordes, we doe aunswere in fewe words. The Scripture dothe speake in words accustomed, and taken out of the vsage of men, and it is a common matter among men to call the same chaunce and happe, of which we can make no assured reason, nor know frō whence it is betided. And yet for all that it followeth not hereupon, that wé should denye that the world is ruled by the prouidence of God. For these words, chance, happe, and fortune, do not reache further than oure knowledge, in respecte whereof they bée so taken. Those things which do séeme vnto vs to chaunce without any certayne cause, and therefore doe séeme to come of fortune, are nothing lesse before God than chaunce and fortune.

Deinde.

Wherefore as often as wée doe reade or heare anye suche matter in the Scriptures, let vs stande vppon these tearmes of mans knowledge, and thinke that the verye same matter is to vs ward called Chance and fortune, but to Godward, which gouerneth and disposeth all thinges, it is certayne and disposed by the immutable prouidence of God: as for example. It is simplye, and playnelye tolde, howe that Achab kyng of Israell, as we alleaged before, was stricken by chaunce, betwixte the lightes and the stomacke, by an Archer that loosed at all aduentures, so that to the appearance and iudgement of man it was chaunce, and yet notwithstanding it appeareth for a certaynetie, that the same facte was disposed and appoynted vpon, by the certayne prouidence of God, and told before by the Prophete. Wherevpon the Scripture dothe giue a watche worde in the same place, that it was done according vnto the worde of the Lord. Ergo, the Lord had so determined, that Achab shoulde be stricken with an arrowe, and dye in the fielde, and this was his destinie, as ỹ word Destinie is deriued of destynyng or appointing, for the worde of the Lord is an immutable destinie, whereby all thynges bé ruled. Wherefore Augustine sayeth aryghte in a place, that it was the destinie of the Starre at the byrthe of Chryste, and not the Destinie of Chryste in the Starre.

And as touching the place of the Ecclesiastes, who seeth not but that it ought to bee redde wyth this discretion: To the worlde, renning, battell, lucklode, wealth, and fauoure of men, séeme not to depende vppon the strength of menne, but to befall as it were of chaunce. Whereas in déede all these things do depend vppon the prouidence of God. For in case that the foresteppes and goings of man be directed by God, what doubte wée of the race, or running. And in case that God be the Lorde of Hostes, surely hee is the Lord of battell also. If when God openeth his hande all thinges are fylled with godnesse, is not oure bread then also ministred vnto vs by hys prouidence. And in case that the Lord doth empouerishe and enrich accordyng vnto the scripture, for a certaynetie wealthe and ryches, bée not happes of fortune, but to the outward shew, and appearaunce: And in case that the heartes of men be in the hande of God, then all the fauoure whyche maye betyde one man from an other, is in the Prouidence of GOD. Wherefore it were requisite wée hadde a discrete iudgemente in such kynde of speaches, that the respectes thereof bée not confounded, but that there be wise difference made betwixte those thinges whyche ought to be referred vnto the Prouidence of GOD, and those whyche ought to bée referred no farther, than to the capacitie of mens vnderstaunce, and bée so muche the more vntrue, the more they bée against the immutable trueth and certaynetie of Gods Prouidence. And thymuche of the Prouidence of God, as wee haue thoughte good for this presente.

Of the Presence of God.

That God doeth dwell vnderstand of Gods being in Heauen.

THe Scripture dothe reporte of God that he is in Heauen, and that hee dwelleth there, and hath fixed and prouided hys seate there. He that dwelleth in Heauen sayeth the Prophete, shall mocke them, and the Lorde loked downe from Heauen and the Lorde hathe made ready his seate in Heauen, and God himselfe sayeth, Heauen is my seate, and Christ taught vs to praye so, Oure father whiche arte in Heauen. And when the rude people doe heare this, they doe ymagine, that God is as farre off, & absente frō vs, as Heauen is from the Earthe, and as Heauenlye thinges be from the Earthly, and that therefore he dothe worke mightyly and effectuallye in the Earthe. But yet that he dothe execute all these things by his spirites both good and euill, whiche hee sendeth being absent him selfe. For they do ymagine of God, as of some moste mighty King, whiche dothe gouerne all things by his princely power, throughout all hys Realme, by the meanes of ministers and seruauntes, and that hee sytteth the whyles in hys Princely tower, and exacte, commaundyng what hee will haue done. Thys is a childishe ymagination, and vnfyt for GOD. Wherefore I haue thoughte it good to note somewhat briefely of the presence of God, whereby all thynges doe consiste, and bee ruled. For wee haue not a GOD whyche is absente, but euerye where presente.

That God is presente euery where.

Psalm.138. That God is presente euerye where.

THe Prophet whose delight was to be euer meditating or musyng some thyng of God, when hee was accused vnto Saule by his enimies, that hee hadde conspyred againste hym and hys Kyngdome, referryng the cause of hys innocency vnto the knowledge of God, sayeth fyrste, that all hys thynges, hys sytting, standyng, thynkyng, pathes, and wayes, hys lying downe, and speache was knowen vnto GOD, whereunto hee addeth thys. Whether shall I goe from thy spirite: and whether shall I flye from thy face? If I goe vppe into Heauen, thou arte there, if I laye me downe in Hell, lo thou arte presente: If I take me the wynges of the morning, and dwell at the vttermoste parte of the Sea, thy hande shall leade mee also there, and thy ryght hande shall holde mee vppe: By these wordes hee dothe expresslye attribute vnto God, that hee is presente euery where, and that hee doth not so dwell in Heauen, but that withall hee is vpon the earthe, in Hell, and at the vttermost partes of the Sea. When hee sayeth, whether shal I goe from thy spirit, & whether shall I flye from thy face? Doeth he Ieremie. I good & nea- rand vnto.

VVyth what vehemence the vvorde of filling is vsed.

he not sufficiently signifye, that there is no place anye where whereunto a man maye flee, not simplye from God, but from the face of God: by whyche specialty hee dothe expresse the presence of God, to fyllyng all things, that no man can auoyde it. God hathe not a face, like a man, but for as much as men doe vse to make it an argument of presence, when the partie is before a mans face, and appearing there, wee doe attribute a face vnto God, to signifie hys presence. And he dothe alleage Heauen, Hell, and the extreame partes of the Sea, to comprehende by the hyghest, lowest, and middle partes, all thys whole, and to lay it all vnder the presence of God.

In Hieremie we do reade in thys wise, I am the God that is at hande sayeth the Lord, and not a God farre off, there is no man hid in corners, but that I doe se hym, sayeth the Lorde. Do not I fyll Heauen, and earth sayeth the Lorde? We doe see here also that the foolishnesse of the is reproued, whiche doe suppose that God is farre off from vs, and that therefore we maye flye hys knowledge and sighte: for that purpose the Prophete speaking of God doth say, that he is not a God farre off, but nere hande, that is to say presente, and that hee seeth all thing, yea that whiche is done in secrete, and least anye man shoulde surmise that hee seeth all thynges from Heauen, and not presently, he addeth, Doe not I fyll both Heauen, and Earthe? as though he did saye, howe can I bee the God farre off, and not knowe the secretes of mens intentes, seeyng that I am so presente euerye where that I doe not onely pearce, but also fulfyll not onely Heauen, but also this whole Earthe. And who seeth not by what figure of vehemente speache the Prophete dothe vse the worde of fyllyng? Wee doe not fyll the places where we bee presente: Wherefore fyllyng can not bee sayd of oure presence: but those places whiche we doe fyll be not without oure presence. Now we muste otherwise iudge of God. Hee is so presente that hee fylleth all where he is presente. And he fylleth Heauen and Earthe. Ergo hee is presente as well in Earthe, as in Heauen. Secondlye where thynges bee full, there is nothing lefte voyde or emptie, therefore GOD is so presente euerye where, that there is no place, neyther in Heauen nor in Earth whych is destitute of the presence of God. And the necessitie of all these things whiche hee hathe made dothe so requyre it to be. For none of them is able to abyde and remayne but in their maker, so that of whome, and by whome all thynges be, in hym also all things bee, do liue, and are moued.

The necessitie of the presence of God.

Hovv God is presente euery where.

Augustine. To be present, after the as to be before the senses.

IF we doe credite Augustine, those things be present vnto vs, whiche be before our senses inward or outwarde, because that to be presente is as much to witte, as to bee before the senses, as we doe say, that to be before the eye, is to be presente in the eye. Nowe seeyng that God is in deede euerye where, and doth fyll all things, but yet that hys presence is not conceyued in all mens senses, and that there be a number of hys creatures whiche haue no senses, howe can he be sayde to be presente euery where, if to be presente bée as muche to saye, as to bée before the senses? What man coulde abyde to synne, if hée had God thys wise presente, that is to saye, before hys senses, eyther inwarde or outwarde? Wherefore wée muste consider howe we ought to iudge of the presence of God.

Presence manifolde.

I fynde that there bée many manners of Presence amongst men. One is bodily, and a nother spirituall, and a nother virtuall, a nother contemplatiue, and by imagination: the corporall or bodyly presence is that, when we be presente in bodye anye where, and this is all one wyth that, which we doe call Locall presente: albeit that some men doe make a difference betwirte bodily and Locall.

Bodily presence.

Yet for all that Augustine dothe speake of the bodily presence in thys wise: Take away the space of places from bodyes, and they shall bée no where, and forasmuche as they shall be no where, they shall not be at all: Take the verye bodyes from theyr qualities of the bodyes, and there shall be no place for them to bée in, and therefore of necessitie they muste not be. Therefore this presence can not be referred vnto God, partly because he hath no body, and partly, because he can not be shutte vp into a place, and because that the Locall presence can not stande with that presence, wherewith Heauen and Earth, and all things be fylled. Of God it is said arighte, that he is present, and yet not there.

Augustinus ad Dardanum.

Tertullian in hys booke agaynste Praxeas, doth attribute a body vnto God, when he sayeth: Who denyeth but that God is a bodye, although that God be a Spirite? For a Spirite is a body after his kinde in hys shape. But he vseth the word of Bodye for a substaunce or person, and dothe sette it agaynste Phantasie, to serue to the argumente whyche he hath in hande. We doe call that a bodye, whyche dothe consist of matter and forme, or shape, and is visible, able to be felte, and Locall, that is hauing some place. The bodily and Locall presence of suche a bodye can not be attributed vnto God, because that he is not made of nature and fourme to be séene and felte, whereas hée is a Spirite and without bodye.

How Tertullian dothe say, that God hath a bodye.

The vertuall presence.

The spirituall presence.

The spirituall presence of God is that, whereby we be presente in some place in Spirite, albeit that we be absente in body.

1. Cor. 5.

Of thys the Apostle speaketh, when he sayeth: I beeyng absente in déede in bodye, but yet presente in Spirite, haue iudged alreadye as presente, &c. And againe: For albeit that I be absente in bodye, yet for all that, I am presente wyth you in Spirite, reioycing, and séeing your order. And Elizeus sayde to Gehezi hys boy: Was not my heart presente, when the mã returned agayne out of his Charlotte to mæte wyth thée?

Colloss. 2.

2. Reg. 5.

Thys kynde of presence dothe not frame to God nother, whiche hathe not a peece or halfe, but a full and whole presence euerye where, and doth wholly fyll all. The man which is anye where spirituall, is not there whole, whole, but in halfe, whiche we maye not iudge of God.

Diuers. name and Scripturie sence.

The vertuall Presence is ý same, whereby a kyng dothe practise hys power and strength in all places of hys Realme, by hys ministers, princes, Dukes, Iudges, and Seruantes, though that he be absent both in bodye and spirite. For so he is royally present, though not corporally: And this kind of presence is more conuenient for the Maiestie of a king, than though hée were presente in euerye place.

Suche a Presence it séemeth that Tertullian dothe attribute vnto God, whereas he sayeth: Wée doe know that God is also in Hell, and that he remayneth euerye where, but in strength and power: but the fulnesse of Goddes Presence whereby wée sayde, that all thinges be filled, is not expressed sufficiently by this kind of presence neither.

We doe call the Contemplatyue and Imaginarie presence the same, when wée doe sette before vs, as presente, those thinges whyche we doe consyder and sée within oure mynde in diligente contemplation and ymagination.

By this wée doe representé vnto oure minde thynges both paste, and to come. What thyng séemeth not to be presente, and as it were euen nowe, if we call it vnto oure remembraunce. Thys kynde of presence is much vsed of louers, and hée vsed it also whyche sayde: I haue sette the Lorde before my sighte alwayes.

But it is one thing to be in a place presentlye, and a nother to be as it were presente by ymagination and contemplation. Wherefore it is not thys kynde of Presence nother, that we do séeke for.

We doe séeke for suche a presence, whiche muste bothe agrée vnto the nature of GOD, and also suffyse for altogither. And the same we doe comprehende in the essence and power. Hys essentiall presence is euerye where, for as muche as the essece of God is cõteined in no place, and yet it canne not bée sayde, that it is no where. So that it is of necessitie euerye where: lyke as if a man shoulde saye of the soule, that it is conteyned in no certayne place of the bodye, and yet for all that dothe fyll the whole bodye: Vnto the Essentiall presence is ioyned also the Potentiall or Virtuall presence. For the presence of hym whiche is the Maker, preserver, and gouernour of all, can not be pdle, but it worketh all in all, and withoute the power and worckyng of him, all things shoulde lye starke dead, and to no effecte, euen lyke as though oure body were destitute of the operation of the Soule.

V What manner of presence God we do make.

I knowe well that the similitude whyche I doe alleage of the soule, is not in all poyntes aunswerable to the case whereof wée doe talke, and yet for all that, I thynke it good to vse it, to declare that I doe not allowe when men doe holde opinion, that GOD is euerye where by power and operation only: as though that hée dyd sytte out aparte from hys workes, essentially eyther in Heauen, eyther in hymselfe onely.

The Maister of the Sentences doth worthily finde fault with them, whiche saye, that God is therefore euerye where, bycause that by hym, all nature, and all thynges that be naturally in any place, hath theyr essence, and for bycause he declareth his vertue & power in euery place. For though that this saying be true, yet for all that, it is not sufficiente in this case, and it driueth the essence of God which doth presently fill all. I wote not into what straighte as though that the same abydyng in some certayne place, did speed abrode the vertue of the operation thereof into all things: whiche thing we dayly se is done by the sunne, whiche beeing in the skye, doth by his warmth, and light, worke vpon the earth: but to thinke the lyke of God, it is verye vnseeming to the nature of God and his infinite Maiestie. It is true whiche the Apostle sayth of God, that he worketh all in all. But that is true also, whiche he sayeth in the Actes, that we beleeue, and moue in him. All things not only be of him, and by him, but in him also. Whiche thyng coulde not be, vnlesse that he dyd fyll all with hys presence. He worketh all in all, not absent, but most present: hys essence ought not to be separated from the workings of his power to be one where, and to worke an other where. As though that hee were not as well infinite in his essence, as in hys power. Shall wee thynke that Heauen and Earthe is so large in compasse, that GOD is not able to be euerye where in them, and to fyll all essentially? Hathe not hee measured the waters wyth hys hande, and waued the Heauens also wyth the same? hath not hee wyth thee fingers fastened vp the masse of the Earthe, and peysed by waight the Mountaynes and Hylles? Bee not all nations in hys syghte lyke a droppe of water hanging at a buckette, and lyke a graine waighte in a balaunce, and the Ilandes lyke a small dust, yea as nothyng and voyde? God is greater, than hys whole worke is. The Heauen of Heauens doe not receyue his Essence and Maiestie, muche lesse the narrowe compasse of thys Worlde. Wherefore it oughte not to bee meruayled at, that it is sayde, that hee fylleth all by his essentiall and virtuall presence togyther.

The Maister of the Sentences

God greater than his whole worke.

We must doe away the thoughts of oure narrowe and slender capacitie, whereby wee doe Imagine when wee doe heare that GOD is not onely virtually, but essencially also present in all, that part of hym in Heauen, parte in Earthe, parte in the Sea, and parte in Hell, yea that there is some peece of hym in euerye thyng, lyke as wee may ymagyne of the Ayre, whyche is spredde abrode euery where, whiche so fylleth all thynges that bee in the worlde, that it is not wholly in all, but in some parte of it. The essence of GOD is not diuided in two partes, but it is full and whole euerye where, and fylleth all things: neyther must wee ymagine, that for as muche as all thynges be in God, and be moued of GOD, that therefore hee is moued also iff those thynges whyche hee dothe moue, so that hee shoulde bee moued from place to place, whereas hee is neyther corporall nor Local, and therefore not moueable wyth things whyche doe moue. These poynctes be not to be searched by vs. Wherefore we must beware, that we yelde not to our owne curiositie and scrupulositie, to search therein: least wee eyther denie those things whiche be true, and agreable vnto the nature of God, or else deuise one man one thyng, and an nother, vntrue, vnseemyng, and vnworthy for the Maiestie of God.

God is not euery where by piecemeale.

Every god ought to be in a place, where one is not.

Iere. 23.

Emanuell.

Psal. 33.

God is moued, but not by things moued by him.

Lib. 4.

Hovv it is sayd, that God is specially any where, and to be in some men, to be present, to dwell in them, and to be ioyned vnto them.

IN case ỹ God be euerywhere, and present in all, both generally and specially, and that essentially & virtually, not diuided but whole. What is the matter will some man say, that the Scripture sayeth: Our God is in Heauen, he hath appoynted his seate in heauen, and he dwelleth in Heauen? What great matter is it, that he is in Heauen, seyng that he is euerywhere, and that it may be as well sayde, our God is in the bottome of the Seas, in the depest of the Earth, as our God is in Heauē? Item: What great matter is that, that Moses sayde vnto Israell: Thy Lorde God is in the middest of thee, and that the name Emanuell was giuen vnto Christ, bycause that God is with vs, and that Dauid doth say: If I doe walke in the middest of the shadow of death, I will not feare any euill, bycause thou arte with me: And that whiche John sayth in hys canonicall Epistle: God is charitie, and whosoeuer dwelleth in charitie, dwelleth in God, and God in him. And hee is greater whiche is in you, than he which is in the worlde. And many suche other lyke that be redde in the Scriptures, as that is of the Prophete: Our God shall come and shall saue vs. And call vppon him whiles he is neare: and in Numeri: Go not vp, for God is not with you.

Numer. 14

I answere. Like as the soule is of a certaintie present in the whole body, and in all the parts thereof essencially and virtually, and that not diuided in two partes, but all whole, and yet besides that, it doth generally quicken all, and worke in all. Yet notwithstanding, it worketh after another sorte, & more specially things to be set by, in the head and the hart, than it dothe in the other partes of the body, euen after the very same sorte it fareth also touchyng the presence of God. He is present generally euerywhere, and in all, and so preserueth and directeth all things: but specially and touchyng his speciall Maiestie and glory in Heauen. And by grace he is, dwelleth, and abideth in his people, in the Elects and faithfull, such as doth loue and obey hym, whom he doth specially loue, defend, and kepe: after whiche sorte he is sayde not to be in them, with whom he is angrie, and whome he doth abhorre as reprobate, and caste off. This presence of God, whereby he is in his electes, the Schoolemen doe call the presence of grace, of whiche the sayntes do muche glory, and that not without good cause. For what can be a more sauegarde vnto a mā, subiect vnto so many daungers, than to haue his God presente by a certayne speciall grace and fauour?

A similitude of the soule.

God is generally euery where specially by matche in heauen by grace in the elect and faithfull.

Acts. 17.

Psal. 22.

Was this dothe betyde to the elect

God is present with his Electe two wayes.

two wayes. First by secret meanes, and hydden from the eyes of the worlde, and that vnder the crosse and troubles wherewith they be so afflicted and trauayled by the apoyntment of God, so that outwardly nothyng dothe lesse appeare than any argument or token of the presence of God, yea that they seme not onely vnto the wicked and to theyr aduersaries, but to themselues also forsaken, and cast off from God: wherupō that was sayde: My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? and God hath forsaken hym, folowe and take hym? and, I am cast out from the presence of thy sight: and: Why turnest thou thy face away frō me?

And yet all this while notwithstanding, God doth abide & dwel in them by his grace, whereby they be cōfirmed in theyr hartes, & be encoraged in inwarde and spiritual comfortes, so that they decay not ouerwhelmed with the waight of the troubles. By this kind of Gods presence, the Prophetes, Apostles, and Martyrs were preserued, whose constancie the worlde wondered at, and yet for all that, did not acknowledge in them the speciall presence of God.

Another wy the presence of Gods grace is declared in hys Electes, in that they be defended, stayed, saued, and delyuered so manyfestly by his right hande and mightie arme, that the wicked be enforced to acknowledge the presence and power of God in them. When they doe see all thyngs fall out happely vnto them, beyond all hope. This way of Gods presence hath bene oftentymes declared, as in the three Ebrewe chyldren, in the deliuery of Israel out of Babylon and Egypt, in Joseph, Abraham, Moses, Samson, Gedeon, Dauid, Josias, Ezechias, &c. Thys kinde of Gods presence dothe serue not onely for the strengthenyng of the fayth of them whiche be trauayled and weake, but for the aduaunce-ment also of Gods glory, when it is blaspheme by the wicked.

Therfore whē the scripture saith: Our God he shall come and saue vs. You must vnderstande it, not of the commyng of him, whiche is absent, but of the declaration of his speciall grace. And whereas the Prophete sayth: Call vppon him whyles he is neare. As though he sayd: he shal not alwayes be so neare as he is nowe, you must vnderstand it of ý presence of grace, wherby he doth yelde himselfe appeased, & fauourable vnto the afflicted, if they do amend & call vpon hym. And whereas it is attributed vnto God, that he is and dwelleth in heauen, we may not imagine that he is shutte vp in heauen, but that it is sayd, that he is & dwelleth in heauen, bicause that place is as it were, the chief seate, castel or tower, frō whēce all the inferiour and lower thyngs bē gouerned, after the similitude of a king, whiche placeth his tower or castell in the most choyse and sightly place, from which he may the better vse his gouernmēt vnto all the inhabitants of his Realme. &c.

How whiche places are to be vnderstanded God shall come.

That whiche pertayneth vnto Gods nature is not able attributed vnto creatures.

God dwelleth in heauen.

The presence of God to bee beleeued euery where in our eyes.

What is the vse of this place.

WE coulde adde here vnto an other question, moued by some men, whether that to be present euerywhere, be so peculiar vnto God, that that it be not possible to any other creature. Some folke doe argue of the spirites of heauen, and go aboute to proue that they may be in many places at once, others do affirme the like of the glorified body of Christe: after his resurrectiō. But forasmuch as these questions be very scrupulous and to small profite, I leaue thē vnto idle heades. In my opinion it is very necessary vnto true godlynesse, that wē be out of all doubte in those poynts whiche I haue noted of the presence of God. For they serue to this purpose, to make vs to attribute vnto God onely and to no creature, that which belōgeth vnto gods nature only. He which beleueth that God onely is euerywhere presente, both essentially and potentially, how can he, beyng in necessitie, call vpon any creature, whiche he doth not beleeue to be so present, that it cā either heare his vowes, or succour his necessities: Unlesse they which do pray vnto dead Saintes, did beleeue that they be present to ayde & succour thē whiche do pray vnto them, and serue them, why woulde they pray vnto them? They doe therein cōmunicate that vnto creatures, whiche belongeth vnto God only: & do also honor the Idols of theyr owne hartes.

Secondly, this place dothe admonish vs to lyue godly and deuoutly in all places, and to haue a reuerēce in all things and at all tymes of the presence of Gods Maiestie, knowing that we can not auoyde his sight, seing that he is euerywhere present. So Susanna would not assent to the fleshly pleasure of the two old men, bycause that she knew that she was euer in the sight of God.

And thirdly, the afflicted folke may gather an incredible comforte herof, when they do beleue that they haue God alwayes presente, in fire, in water, in prysō, in the very poynt of death, so that they may say with Dauid, if I walke in the mids of the shadowe of death, I will not be afrayde of any euill, bycause thou art with me. And herevnto serueth that saying: If thou passe by fire and water, I will be with thee. &c. And thus far we haue spoken of the presence of God.

That wee haue God euery where present in afflictions

Of the Anger of God.

NOw that we haue hitherto noted diuers things touchyng the goodnesse, louingnesse, mercy, prouidēce, and presence of God, whiche may serue to the comforte of weake consciences, if they be conceyued with faith, wee haue thought good to adde somewhat also of the Wrath, and Anger of God, wherby careless and slacke hartes may bee awaked, and feare God, at the least when he is angry: whome they doe not sufficiently regarde and serue, when he is louyng and well pleased.

That God is angry.

THere hath bene Philosophers whiche haue holden and defended by argumente, that there is neyther anger in GOD nor fauour, and therefore that hee dothe not good to them, that doe serue hym, nor euyll to them whyche

The Epicures helde that there is neither anger nor fauor of God do make light of hym, but that he is there in happy and incorrupte, bycause he careth for nothing, and is quiet inough himselfe, and disquieteth no man else. The same whiche we doe saye accordyng vnto the Scriptures of vayne Goddes, I meane that they be able to doe neyther good nor euyll, that opinion they had of the true GOD, whome they knew not. And this swithe and wicked opinion bredde in the Schole of the Epycures, moste agreable vnto theyr sectes.

The Stoykes do holde that euerie sinne is not a like, but not anger.

But the Stoykes, for asmuche as they doe consider nothing else in anger, but that it is a faulte, as to be stirred and troubled without reason, to be furious, and runne to reuenge lyke beasts, they suppose that such maner of commotion and trouble of mynde, is not conuenient for a wise manne, as they make hym, and much lesse for God: and therfore albeit that they doe attribute fauour vnto him, whereby he may doe good vnto such as doe serue him, yet for al that, they doe not attribute any anger vnto him, for asmuch as ỳ same dothe stirre vp so greate motions in the minde, that it alttereth the estate thereof, it troubleth the quiet and calme countenaunce, it maketh the teth to grynche, the lippes to shake, the tongue to falter, the face to waxe redde as fire, and sometymes pale, the eyes to bourne out in fire, whiche soule disquietyng is moste vnmete for God. This is the iudgement, & therefore when they doe way and consider what anger worketh in men, when it once catcheth him, they say that god is neuer angry, bycause they will haue it to worke no suche thing in God.

They argue further in this sort: A man which is farre inferiour vnto God, if he haue any gouernaunce, and be angry, he dothe much harme vnto others, he sheddeth bloud, he destroyeth people, he ouerthroweth cities, hee maketh flourishyng regions to lie waste, and he would disquiet Heauen it self, if he could. And what other opinion say they shall we haue of God, if he be angry, but that hee would ouerthrowe all this whole worlde with all the inhabitaunces therein, wherfore it is necessary that he be moste cleere of so sore an euill. This they doe argue of that, whiche an angry man dothe in his rage to others. But they fell into this errour through this, that they considered nothyng else in anger, but that whiche is faulte: and feared, least it doth worke the same in God, whiche it doth in man, that is giuen vnto all naughtinesse in whome they ought not to haue imagined to bee any place for vyce and naughtinesse.

The Stoykes that God would ouerthrowe all, if he were angry.

He hath vnderstanding which hath no anger.

They be in a much better minde, whiche do consider in anger not only those things whiche haue an erresse, and are worthily reproued as faultie, and deemed vnfitte for God, but do consider these things also whiche be ioyned with vertue, and are necessary for the life of man, against al wickednesse. In consideration whereof it was well sayde by a certayne man: he hath no vnderstandyng, whiche hath no anger: But let vs sette the Philosophers one to an other, and suffer the Stoykes to confute the Epicures, and the Peripatetikes to confute the Stoikes. It behoueth vs to credite the holy Scriptures, whiche do euery where testifie of the anger of God, & beware that wee feele not him angry, whome we might haue our fauourable, & well pleased God.

The God is not angry with his people.

We do reade in the Hystories of Moses, that God was oftentymes angry with his disobedient and rebellious people. We do read that he was angry with the Sodomites, & with Pharao and hys armie, with Salomon, with Israel for the sinnes of Joacham the sonne of Jehu, against Ozam. Wee say nothyng of those things whiche be redde in the wrytings of the Apostles & Euangelists, cõcerning the anger of God, for that I would haue no man to deuise, that there is one God of the old Testament, & an other of the New, as some Heretikes did. The wrytings of both the Testaments do testifie of the true and onely God, of whome is all our life and saluation, that he is angry with the euill, and doth louingly embrace the good.

Hovv anger is attributed vnto God.

Albeit that the affection of anger be suche through our faulte, that it is vncomely and vnfitte for man, muche more for God, notwithstandyng that the holy Scriptures doe testifie, that God is sometymes angrie, yet for all that it seemeth a wonder, howe anger is attributed vnto hym. We dare not agayne say the Scriptures, whiche be assured to be inspyred from God, and withall wee can not denie, but that the same affection ought not to be attributed vnto God, whiche is worthily reproued in man as vicious and faulty, as the affection of anger is, whereof we do reade that it worketh not iustice. Wherefore, very necessitie compelleth vs, that for the comely vsing of Gods Maiestie, and the vpright keepyng of the truthe of the holy Scriptures, wee must searche howe it is to be vnderstanded, that God is sayd to be angry.

God is not angry as man.

Like as God dothe not so repent as men, nor hath mercy in that sorte as menne haue mercy, neyther is zelous as men be, and yet for all that there is attribute vnto him in the Scriptures, mercy, repentaunce, and zeale, so he is not angrie as man is, and yet notwithstanding there is attribute anger vnto him. He is angry as God, he is zelous as God, he is mercyfull as God, and he repenteth so as it is meete for God, his repentance is not with sorowe, nor after any errour, his mercy hath no anger, it maketh not his harte miserable, his zeale is without spirite. So his anger is voyde of trouble of the minde. He is sayde to repente, when he chaungeth vpon some occasions vnknowē vnto vs, some parte of that whiche he hath done: to haue mercy, when of his goodnesse he aydeth the afflicted: to be zelous, when he punisheth his people for theyr whoredome, cõmitted with straunge Gods. So wee do vnderstande him to be angry when hee punisheth sinners. He is not angry after our maner and fashyon when he dothe this, but he seemeth to be angry vnto vs whiche doe suffer for our sinnes. Hee dothe thys with iudgemente, whiche we doe of the rage and trouble of mynde.

God is angry without trouble of minde.

In this wise the fathers thought it good to eschewe that wee doe attribute vnto GOD any commotion of mynde when wee doe not attribute anger vnto hym. But Lactance in the boke whiche hee wryteth of the anger of God, dothe not onely attribute this vnto God that hee semeth to be angry, when hee dothe chasten and punishe sinners: but he dothe expressly geue vnto him a certayne commotion also whiche wee doe call Anger. And I will not grudge to recite hys wordes. Those thynges, sayth hee, whiche be naught muste of necessitie displease hym which is good and iuste: and he which is displeased with euill, is moued when he seeth it done. Wee doe rise to reuenge, not bycause we be hurte and anoyed, but that discipline may be kepte, menaces maners corrected, libertie restrayned. This is a iuste anger, whiche as it is necessary in manne for the redresse of naughtynesse, so it is also in GOD from whom the example came vnto man. For lyke as it behoueth vs to chasten them whiche bee subiect vnto our iurisdiction, so it behoueth God to chasten the sinnes of all. And that he may doe that he must needes be angry. For it is naturall for the good, to bee moued and hurred at the sinne of an other. Wherefore they shoulde haue defined it thus: That anger is the motion of the mynde, meanyng to chasten sinne. For the definition of Cicero: Anger is a desire to reuenge, is not muche differente from that wee sayde afore.

Lactance dothe attribute a cõmotion vnto God. Libro. de Ira dei. Cap. 17.

What anger is with Cicero.

But the same Anger whych we may call eyther furie or rage, ought not to bee in manne, bycause it is altogether faultie. But that Anger whiche belongeth to the correction of vyce, neyther ought to bee taken from manne, nor can be taken from GOD, bycause it is bothe profitable and necessarie for men. This sayeth Lactance. By whiche wordes hee dothe not take from GOD the commotion and hurre of anger, but that onely whiche is toyned with faulte, and is vnseemely also for man.

No man knoweth what the cõmotiõ of anger is in God but the spirite of God.

And who is able to conceyue what manner this commotion and hurre of Goddes anger is? Of what maner it is in men, wee doe knowe whiche be menne: but what it is in God, who knoweth, but the very spirite of God? The Prouerbe sayeth, that the Ant hath hyr anger, and who canne expresse the anger of it: much lesse of God. Hee whiche hath already a very quiet mynde, is sone hurted and moued to be angry, thorowe the disorder of thynges whiche he heareth or seeth. Nowe whether that any suche matter be to bee attributed vnto the nature of GOD or no, whereby hee is already like a man, or otherwise than man is, from beyng quiet, to bee moued and hurred, or whether hee doe continue no lesse quyet in hymselfe, when he seemeth to be angry in chastenyng and punishing, than when he is fauourable and forgiuefull, in that he dothe good, is louyng, pardonyng, and sparyng: lette hym iudge whiche can iudge it. Fyre seemeth to rage and be angry when it burneth those things whiche it taketh, but in that it dothe seemely cherishe and comforte those that be handsomely layed vnto it, by his warmth it seemeth to be pleasaunt. Whereas for all that, it

The generall anger.

Wee are of nature the children of ire.

it can receyue of it selfe no commotion nor variaunce. But that is a dumme Element voyde of reason, wherefore of that can be no comparison made vnto God, whose anger nor fauour can not be voyde of reason. Howsoeuer the matter goeth, the godly person muste assure himself in this, that God is not moued nor chaunged, after that sorte as man is moued and chaunged. As for the rest, it is not conuenient that we searche ouer-curiously, for as much as it passeth our capacitie.

That the Anger of God is of three sortes.

WE might make many kyndes of the Anger of God, but we will be contented for this present to diuide it in to three, the generall, temporary, and euerlastyng anger.

The generall anger is the same, wherevnto the whole posteritie of Adam is subiecte through the originall sinne. Of thys the Apostle maketh mention, saying: And we were by nature the chyldren of Anger, lyke as the reste also. Here no man is excepted. As many as were partakers of the corrupte and sinfull nature, be subiecte vnto this anger of GOD, from which we be not deliuered, but by our onely mediatour Iesus Christe. Of this commeth all kynde of wretchednesse, whiche dothe equally folow the condition of man, and sticketh both to our minde & our flesh. And of that there shoulde come the generall condemnation also of all men, vnlesse that God which was so moued vnto wrath in Adam had reconcyled the worlde vnto him in Christe: of whiche reconcilement see to the Corinthians. And of this the Apostle maketh mention also to the Romaynes, saying: And God recõmendeth his loue vnto vs, in that that whyles wee were yet sinners, Christe died for vs. Therefore much the more being now iustified by hys bloud, we shal be saued through him from the anger.

2. Corinth. 5.

Rom. 5.

The temporary anger of God is that, whereby he is angry not onely with the sinnes of the wicked, but of the godly also, and dothe punishe the same in this lyfe. Vnto this, those examples are specially to bee referred, whiche are redde in the Scriptures of the anger of God, of whiche wee alleaged some before. But yet for all that, he is angry with the godly, elect, and faythfull in one sorte, & with the vngodly, reprobate, and vnbeleeuyng, after another sorte. He is angry with the firste, as a Father with hys deare chyldren, with the other, as a Lorde and Prince wyth hys enemies, and rebelles. Hee is angry as a father to chastice his sons that do offend, visiting their wickednesse in the rodde, and theyr sinnes in stryppes: that they may be reformed and saued. Thys kynde of Anger is for the fatherly loue and discipline. Hee is angry as a Lorde & a Prince with rebelles and enimies, whiche doe blaspheme hys name, and oppresse his people. And hee is angry with them to take reuenge and punishment of them, to defend the glory of hys name by a mightie Arme, and to delyuer his people: So as hee was angry with the Egyptians, Assyrians, Babylonians, Grekes, and Romaynes.

Temporarie.

The

The euerlastyng anger is that wherby the reprobate, & vnbeleuers be condemned for euermore. The same the Apostle calleth the anger to come: Saying, for they do declare of you, what an entery wee had vnto you, and how you be turned vnto God, from images to serue the liuely, and true God, and to loke for his sonne from heauen Iesus, whome hee raysed from the dead, who deliuered vs from the anger to come, he calleth it to come, bycause of the declaration thereof, whiche is to come, vnto whiche the day of the last iudgement is appoynted. Whiche day he calleth the day of anger: for this cause, whereas he sayth to the Romaynes, but accordyng vnto thy hardenelle, and harte, whiche cannot repente, thou doest lay vp anger vnto thy selfe in the day of anger, when the iuste iudgement of God shall be opened, whiche shall giue vnto euery man accordyng vnto his workes. But this anger whiche dothe for euermore comber the reprobate, and vnbeleuyng, shall not onely beginne at the latter day of iudgemente to come but is charged stil from the beginnyng vpon the reprobate, accordyng to that saying of John. He that is vnbeleuing towardes the sonne, shal not see life, but the anger of god dwelleth vpon him, & for this cause the Apostle calleth them the vessels of Anger, appoynted vnto destruction.

The euerlasting and to come.

1. Thess. 1.

Rom. 2.

Iohn. 3.

Rom. 9.

That God is slowe vnto Anger.

They whiche bee inclyned vnto Anger, they be sone moued vnto anger, and be angry with them that they ought not to bee angry withall. For suche occasion as they ought not, and more thã they ought, as Aristotle sayth. This inclination vnto anger is not without greate faulte. Wherefore the Scripture dothe so attribute anger vnto God, that withall it dothe beate in to our heads, that he is so disposed of nature, that he is not easily moued vnto anger, and therefore doth call him in many places slacke and slow vnto anger, or if yee will, farre from anger. This reporte of his lenitie and slacknelle in anger, is attributed vnto him. Firste in Exodus, Agayne in Numeri: Thirdly in Nehemi: Fourthly in the. 86. Psalme: Fiftly in the. 103. Psalme. Sixtly in the. 145. Psalme. Seuenthly in Hieremie. Eightly in Joel. Ninthly in Jonas. Tenthly in Nahum.

The inclination to anger is very suore.

Scriptures of that that God is slowe vnto Anger.

Exod. 34. Num. 14. Nehem. 9. Psalm. 86. 103. 145. Hieremi. Ioel. 2. Ionas. 4. Nahum. 1.

1 The beginnyng thereof proceeded from the Lorde hymselfe, which spake those wordes vnto Moses of himselfe whiche be redde there vnto this ende, to encourage hys harte beyng carefull and fearefull ouer the people, bycause of theyr sinne about the Calfe, least they should be euery mothers sonne of the destroyed, by God which was angry with them.

And in the like feare Moses repeated that before the Lorde, Numeri 14. to the intent that he woulde appease his anger, wherevnto he was moued by the rebellion of the murmuryng people. And after that it began to be vsed of godly folke to sette forth the clemency and gentlenesse of the Maiestie of God.

The word אפים which is red there dothe dothe signifie not euery kynde of anger, but a vehement and hote anger, such as is wont to be in them, which as sone as they be prouoked they growe straught waye into an heate, and raging out to the reuenge. For the worde אף signifieth the nosthzels and the countenance, and so is vsed for that anger which stureth an hasty puffing of the nosthzels, and enflameth the whole countenance: which kynde of anger doth surely trouble the mynde, and doth cast off the gouernance of reason, coueting the reuenge either by right, or by wrong. They be wont to be angrie in such sort which be of the weaker courage, as it is in women for the most part. Therfore seing that the rage and sturre of suche heates, doth not agree vnto a wise man, much lesse they doe agree vnto ỹ Maiestie of God. For asmuch as he is of nature kynde and mercifull, it is right which the Lord doth testifie of himselfe, that he is farre from hasty and raging anger.

3 This kinde of speach of God, Nehemias vsed in his prayer, to enforce the harde harteonelle, incredulitie, and rebellion of the Israelites, and withall to aduaunce the mylonelle of God declared in that, that he forsoke not his people beeing so stubborne, vnbeleeuing, and rebellious, nor dyd not take from them his most fauourable patience, but dyd beare with them, beeing worthy at once to be destroyed for euer.

4 Dauid vsed the. 86. Psalme in this wyse: O God the proude doe ryse vp agayne, and the bande of the boisterous and strong doe seeke my soule, neyther doe they set thee before theyr eyes. But thou God the gouernour, mercifull, and mylde, slowe vnto anger, and of much gentlenesse and truth. It seemed much marueile to Dauid, howe so wicked, and continuall crueltie of Saule, and of other wicked persons, which had caste off the feare of God, and lay in watch for innocent bloud, could be so long time borne and suffered of God, whereas they might by iuste iudgement haue bene punyshed and ridde out of the way, and waying well this matter, hee doth lay the cause of so long patience, vnto the gentlelle of Gods nature, which is such, that it is mercifull, and slowe towardes anger, yea, against them which bee most wicked. What shall we nowe a dayes thinke els, as often as wee do feele that crueltie of Antichrist & Saule, when the bloud of the godly is shed with so great outrage, and fiercenelle, that it is a wonder how the iuste iudge can so long suffer it. But the verye same which Dauid layde before hym of the saying of God, that is to saye: that the Lord is slowe vnto anger, & enclined vnto the sufferaunce of the euill.

5 In the. 103. Psalme he vsed this saying in the verye sense and respect, as Nehemias dyd, wherevpõ he added also, he hath not done vnto vs accordyng vnto our sinnes, nor he hath not repayde vs accordyng vnto our wickednelle.

Psalm. 103.

6 In the. 145. Psalme he doth alleage it, to aduaunce and commende the goodnelle, fauour, and mylonelle of GOD which his workes doe generally declare towardes all men, wherefore he added also: The Lorde is good vnto

Psalm. 145.

all, and his mercies be aboue all his wo:kes.

7 Hieremie vsed it in a special passion of minde in this wyse: The chiefe of the people were exceading angry with him, & sought how they might ridde him out of the way, bicause he threatned them, ỳ it should not be long, but ỳ Hierusalē should be ouerthrowen, & the people caried captius vnto Babilō, which seemed to the Israelites both vntrue & most slaunderously spoken against the citie, the Temple, and people of God, and talking of this matter he saith: Thou knowest O Lord (you must vnderstand that I lie not, but tell them most truely) remēber me, and visite me, and reuenge me of them which do persecute me: not as thou art slowe vnto anger: receiue me. Knowe that I doe susteine for thy sake. When he had sayde, remēber me, and visite me, & be reuēged vpō them which do persecute me, he remēbred that God is slowe vnto anger, and reuenge, & therefore he added immediatly saying: Not to the prolonging, and slowenesse of thy anger, that is to saye: deferre not this reuenge, wherby thou mayst deliuer me from them which do persecute me, but succoure me quickely, and take me vp, and knowe that I do beare rebuke for thy worde. This passion of minde is singuler, & not to be followed of euery mā, but to be left vnto the spirit of the Prophet.

8 Ioel in his second Chapter, vsed this commendation of Gods mercy and fauour, to stirre the people of God (ouer whose heads there hong a sore reuenge at hand) to reformation; and to an earnest remembrance of his, ỳ they might escape the wrath of God. For after that he had prophecied of the daye of reuenge at hand, he added: But yet also sayeth the Lord: Turne to me with al your heart, with fasting, weping, & mourning, and cut your heartes and not your garmentes, and turne vnto the Lord your God, for he is kinde, mercifull, and slow vnto anger, and of much goodnesse, and that is sory for your euill. Thus he did well place this oracle of God, to admonisshe all men, that though the daye of reuenge were at hande, yet for al that God is of that nature, that he is very slow vnto reuenge, and enclined vnto mercy, towardes them that do amende, and that therefore there is some hope, that he may alter his determination of reuenge & waste, if they do retourne vnto him with all their heart. This example the ministers of the worde ought to folowe, not onely when they doe speake generally of Gods reuenge, but in case they doe sometymes threaten any certayne and sure reuenge hanging ouer their heads.

9 Ionas also vsed this oracle with a marueilous affection to his purpose, when hee was sent by God to preache repentaunce vnto the Niniuites, thinking that it would so fall out, that the Lord would repente him of the euill which he had threatened them, and so should come to passe, that they should take no harme, & he be accounted for a false Prophet. Which imaginatiō came of that, that he knew the Lord was pitifull, slowe vnto anger, and mercifull, and therefore he begin to shrinke & refuse his charge of message, and sought to runne awaye. At length when he was brought backe backe againe by the hand of ỳ lord, and did preache to the Niniuites, saying: Yet fourty dayes, and Niniue shalbe ouerthrowen. When he sawe that the Lord did spare them vpon their repentance, he was offended, saying, I beseeke thee Lord: commeth not this vnto my saying, when I was yet in my countrey? Therfore I would haue preuented the matter, to flee vnto Tharsis, for I knew that thou art a pitifull, and mercifull God, slowe vnto anger, & of much mercie, and which doest repent thee of euill. Thus he abused this saying contrarie vnto that purpose that Ioel vsed it for: wherfore he was also blamed of God.

10 Nahum did allege it to this intent, to shewe the Israelites the cause, why God spared the Assirians so long, of whose ouerthrowe he had prophecied. Euen bicause that he is slowe vnto anger, for thus goeth his wordes in his first chapter, euen at the beginning. The Lorde is ielous, the Lord is a reuenger, a reuenger is the Lord, and mightie in rage, the Lorde is a reuenger against his enemies, and mindfull to paye his enemies home. The Lorde is slowe vnto anger, and mighty in power, and he which semeth innocent, shal not be innocent. The Prophet doth declare here, that there folloeth not of this that euil is not punished, bicause that the reuenge of God commeth out slowly, and that the Lord is slowly angry, but that they should loke for the more grieuous reuenge, the longer that the lenitie of Gods goodnesse palleth on in vayne before he do auenge, and they ware neuer the better. These places I thought good to set forth, to the intent the reader should see, howe the holy Fathers vsed this oracle of God, wherein is set before vs, the lenitie and mercy of God, & is reported, ỳ he is slow vnto anger.

How greuous the anger of God is.

As great as is the grace so greuous is the anger

Loke howe incomprehensible ỳ largenesse of Gods grace is, which he daily & euermore sheweth by infinite meanes vnto them that he loueth, so incomprehensible & intollerable also is ỳ heauinesse of his anger: & like as the first is not to be searched but to be desired of al men, so this latter is not to be searched out but to be shifted & feared, & fled frō, & eschewed of al. No mā knoweth ỳ strength of gods anger, no not they vpō whom it falleth, but so far forth as they do feale it. Who knoweth the strength of thy anger, saith ỳ Prophet? Loke how great ỳ might is in God so great also is his grace whē he is fauorable, & so great is his anger, if he be angry. As grace hath his power for an aide to do good vnto the faithful: so anger turneth the same vnto the punishment of ỳ reprobate. Like as grace doth make al creatures turne to ỳ profit of ỳ elects: so anger also doth arme thē to ỳ reuenge. The anger of a king, sayth Salomon: is the roaring of a Lio: and yet for al that the king is but a man, able to do nothing against mā but as it is permitted him frō god: If ỳ anger of him be esteemed so terrible, how much more is ỳ anger of God to be feared? whom all creatures be compelled to serue. There be horrible examples therof which might be alleaged here & considered, but ỳ they be commonly knowē vnto all men, which doe reade the

Psalm. 90.

Proverb. 19.

Hovv horrible the strengeh of fyre is vvherevnto the anger of God is compared.

holy Scriptures.

We doe oftentimes trye by experience how horrible the strength of fyre is, which cõsumeth al. Whē Tyrants are disposed to vse a cruel and very horrible punishement towards them which they determine to put vnto some straunge kinde of death, they do cast them into fire: as we do reade in the story of the three children of the Ebrewes, and as we se in our daies in so many terrible examples, for the pleasure of Antichrist. They do cõsider the strength of fire, but they cõsider not ẏ strēgth of Goos anger, and yet it is cõpared vnto fire in the scriptures. Whē Moses would put the childrē of Israel in feare and terror of Gods displeasure & anger, bicause he would not haue them subiect vnto the seruice of Idols, he said thus. Beware that at any time thou forget not the couenant of ẏ Lord thy God, which he hath made with thee, and make to thy self a grauen Image of those things which the Lord hath forbidden thee: for the Lord thy God is a consuming fire, a ielous God.

Deut. 4.

And God himself doth compare the auengement of his anger vnto fire, saying: Fire shall kindle in my anger, and shall burne to the depth of Hell, & shall waste the lande with the spring thereof, and shall burne the foundations of the hylles. Whē he would make the stubborne people afrayd, he came down in a great fire to the mount of Syna. He declared the strength of his anger by fire, against the Sodomites, against the people of Israel: against the seditious folke, which did take part & held of the side of Chore, Dathan, & Abiron, & the rebellious multitude.

Deut. 32.

Gen. 19. Num. 11.

Num. 16.

Againe, when the fire did consume fourtene thousād of the people. And that fire is called, ẏ anger, which proceded frō the Lord, which was called down vpon ẏ two captaines of Fifties, & their hundred souldiers, which Ahazia sent to apprehend Elias. I passe ouer the exāples which be not in the holy scriptures. So at the end of the world, when he shal at once powre out his whole anger vpon al the world, he shal cast down fire frō heauen to burne altogether. So the Lord himself doth call that euerlasting anger, wherin the reprobate shalbe tormēted after this life, Euerlasting fire. Would God it might please them once to thinke of the heauinesse of this anger of God, which do so outrage by fire against the elect of God.

But let the reprobate go, which shal once, wil thei nil they, fele how sore the anger of God is, and let vs se, how horrible a matter it is vnto godly folke, when they do finde and fele the anger of God. And that cõmeth vnto them two wayes.

1 First, by that they do vnderstād, that they haue offended their God, & displeased his fatherly goodnesse, wherefore they be out of measure, sorrowful & heauy. For ẏ more they loue him, the greater is their grief, when they do finde ẏ he is angry.

2 Secondly, for that, that albeit they be godly, yet for all that, they doe fele exceading sore anguishe conceiued of the feare of death, or of any other punishement: wherof we may se in the Psalmes, specially in the first, and thereof I wil nowe saye no more, bicause I haue largely spoken of it in our Commentaries vpon the Psalmes.

1. Reg. 1.

Iterary.

That the perfect of God ger is rible.

Psa. 106.

Isa. 11.

By what

By what sinnes God is most styrred to Anger.

GOD doth hate al wickednesse, and is offended with all kinde of sinne, but some things be so wicked and enormious, that his patience is sore stirred by them: of which there bee many examples in the Scriptures.

1 The first is the sinne of Idolatry, whereby he is prouoked vnto hate & most greuous displeasure, euen as the Husbād is by the aduultery of his wife, wherof the Lord himself maketh mencion in the first table of his decalogus, saying: Thou shalt not make thy self any grauen Image nor any likenes of ẏ which is in heauen aboue, or in ẏ earth beneth, nor of these things which bee in ẏ waters vnder the earth. Thou shalt not worship nor serue them. I am thy Lorde thy God, strong, ielous, and visiting the wickednes of fathers vnto the children, to the third & fourth generation of them that do hate me, &c. which words & the enormitye also of this sinne, we expounded in the Decalogus. Thus ẏ Israelites did prouoke ẏ Lord in Oreb, setting vp an Image of a calfe, & whoring with Baall Peor, and afterwardes seruing the gods of the Gentils and their images, in the very land of promisse. Moises said vnto them: Thou didst prouoke him in Oreb, & hee would haue destroied thē. And Dauid said: They fell to Baall Peor, and did eat the Sacrifices of the dead, and stirred him in their deuises. And ther was ẏ ruine multiplied in thē. And God himselfe saieth: They prouoked me in ẏ which is not god. And we may perceiue euery wher in ẏ Prophets, how ẏ same people did prouoke ẏ Lord vnto anger by their seruing of Images, & offended him by their deuises, to their great hinderance. And what need we say any thing, how ẏ churches of Christ haue vsed themselues in this, & do stil, seing ẏ the sinne it selfe, & the most greuous punishment therof, be witnesse good inough of ẏ displesure & anger of ẏ Lord against the same.

Temptaciō

Exod. 17.

Psalm. 78. 95.

Murmuring. Num. 11. 14 Psalm 105 1. Cor. 10.

2 Secondly, the patience of God is prouoked & stirred by mistrustful temptation, wherof ther hath passed many examples in ẏ Israelites. We do se in Exodus, how by tempting their Lord God they prouoked him vnto anger, wherof we do read also in the Psalmes.

3 Thirdly, ẏ Lord is prouoked by murmuring wickedly against his prouidēce. The waight & punishmēt of this sinne is expressed in Numery, & is touched in ẏ Psalmes, how they did murmure at the red Sea. The Apostle doth giue warning ẏ these three sinns, of Idolatry, temptation & murmuring are specially to be eschewed. See our cōmētaries vpon that Epistle.

stubborne rebellion. Num. 14. Deut 9.

4 Fourthly, ther is stubborne rebellion, which prouoketh ẏ anger of god. An example hereof you may se in Nume. And Moses doth charge Israel wt this sin of rebelliō, saying: & when he sent thē frō Hades Bernea, saying: go you vp & possesse ẏ lād which he hath giuen you. Yee cōtemned ẏ cōmaūdemēt of your lord and beleued not him, nor would not heare his voice, but you haue ben euer rebellious since ẏ first day that euer I saw you. Of this rebelliō se what we haue noted in our Commētary vpon the 156. Psalme.

The Papists do charge vs with this rebellion, as though that we were rebellious; bicause that we do refuse the yoke of Antichrist, which we must nedes do, vnlesse that we would bear the yoke of Christ & of Beliall both together. In ỳ meane season they do not consider how stubbornly they haue bene rebellious these gret sort of hundred years, against God and his Church, & that for theyr rebellion they do daily fal to decay, more and more.

The shedding of innocēts bloud

5 Fifthly, the effusion also of innocent bloud is such a sinne, as doth prouoke God vnto anger & reuēgement. The history of Abel is knowen, whose bloud cried vp to heauē for reuēge: and Christ doth threate the reuēge of innocent bloud to the citie of Hierusalem.

Mat. 23.

The oppression of vvidovvs. Exod. 22.

6 Sirtly, the oppression also of Widowes & Fatherlesse, doth prouoke God as we may read in Exodus, where we read thus: Thou shalt not hurt ỳ widow & the fatherlesse. If you do hurt them, they shal cry vnto me, and I will heare their cry, & I shalbe offēded, & I wil strike you with the sword, and your owne wiues shall be widowes, and your Children Fatherlesse.

Impenitēce

By these sortes of sinnes ỳ patience of God is specially stirred and prouoked, cheifly if there be ioyned withal an obstinate hart which knoweth not to repent. For the lacke of repentance doth exaggerate & encrese any sinne & heapeth vp the heuinesse of Gods anger, as ỳ Apostle doth testifie to ỳ Romains saying: But according vnto ỳ stifnesse and heart ỳ knoweth not to repent, thou dost gather thy self anger, &c.

And how they can by no meanes escape scotfrē, which do prouoke ỳ anger of God against them, we nēd not stand long to declare, specially if they do throughly anger him. No mā can wel escape which stirreth a Prince against him, much lesse he that angreth Gods Maiestie.

They rovve vnkinge

And the through stirring of Gods is, when it is not done of ignorāce, but of contempt. For in case that a man which is not in deep wicked in hart, do commit those thigs through ignorance, which of themselues be such that they may prouoke the anger of God, yet he hath somewhat left in his heart, whereby the anger of God may be somewhat mitigated, albeit that ỳ outward fact hath some shew of prouocation to: but when ỳ heart is also wicked & despising of God, making all one reckening whether ỳ God be moued or well pleased, and the fact such that it may prouoke gods patience, I am not able to say, whether ỳ this kide of stirring of God, full & whole can euer scape scotfrē or no.

Kicking God.

But that is the greatest point, and worst of all, whē they which be the vtter enemies of the true God, do manifestly & wittingly kicke against ỳ Maiestie of God, and say: Wher is your God? let him helpe you if he be able, after which manner false gods may wout offēce, ye and ought also to bee prouoked, for they be not true gods, neither can they doe good nor euill.

What bee the Tokens of Gods Anger.

Like as they which do liue godly, do most diligētly obserue ỳ tokens & arguments of Gods grace not onely for their owne cause, but also for ỳ cōmon case: so they do also marke the signes & tokens of Gods anger, to ỳ intent that they may cal themselues, and al others to amēdement of life, & beware, least they be either ouerwhelmed with ỳ sodaine plague of God, or least they do run on carelesse vp the wicked wout any perseuerance of gods anger, & perish in the reuenge vp the same. Wherefore we haue thought good to note somewhat also thereof, as it cōmeth to remembrance for this present.

The tokens of gods anger be of two sortes, for some be more manifest, & some more secrete. The manifest tokēs be they, which be declared by manifest plagues, chastenigs, and reuengings: as famine, pestilence, speciall diseases, the waste and spoyling by warres, and such other like, of which you may see a rehearsall in Leuit. & in Deut. Surely it is the manifest testimonie of gods anger, when the men do sow in vaine, either bicause that the enemies doe waste the corne, or that the elemēt is so hard, that it sendeth down no rayne, and the land so tough, that it yeldeth not againe that which was sowen, so that the whole trauayle of the husband man is spent in vaine, bicause that the lande is made barren by the iudgement of God, & that the trees doe beare no fruite at all. Item, whē the sword of the enemy doth destroy all, killing some, & some making bonde & slaues. Item, when by the corruption of the ayre, there raineth a plague of pestilēce, & murdereth & rotteth both man & beast. The perseuerance & vnderstanding of all these, do easely admonishe vs of the anger of God. And yet for al that we be so froward and crooked, that though all these things do fall vpō our heads at once, we may wel be the more miserable, but we be neuer a whit the better: so that of necessitie ỳ anger of god must plague vs the sorer, wherof there be passed in ỳ Israelits most horrible exāples.

The secret tokens.

We do not call them the secreter tokens of Gods anger, which be altogether hidden and secret, and do come to the knowledge of no man, but such as though that they be set forth to our eyes & eares, yet not withstanding they be knowen to fewe, to be tokens of anger.

Signes and vvonders.

Of this sort be those strāge signes and wonders from heauen in the Sunne & Mone, & Starres, which the prouidence of God is wont to sende before his notable plagues. They be scene indifferently of al, but some do not understand what signification they do beare, some care not for the understanding of them, some do also turne them another waye, & iudge that they do concerne others, rather then them. As that is which Iosephus writeth of them of Hierusalem. Finally, the wretched people gaue credit vnto false & slaunderous reportes of God, but they dyd neither harken in their heart, nor beleue ỳ certain signes & tokēs which did forshew their destructiō to come, but they did dissemble the declarations of God, as mē astonied hauing neither eyes nor soules, yea, when there did hāg ouer their citie a star like a sword, & a comete or blasing starre cōtinuing a yere: yea, whē before their falling away, & mouing of the first warres, the people assembling at the feast of swete breades, which was the 8. day of ỳ moneth of April, there shyned so great a light

Iosephus de bello Iudaico. lib. 7. cap. 12.

at nine a clocke at night about the Altar and the Temple, that a man would haue thought it most clere day, & cõtinued so for half an houre. It was taken of the simpler sort to be a good signe, but of them which could skill of holy things, the matter which it signified, was determined straight way before it fel. And a litle after. If a mã list to waye these matters, he shal assuredly finde, that God doth prouide for men, & declare vnto thẽ before by al wais & meanes, what is good & profitable for them, and that they be vndone, & perishe through their own volũtary naughtines and madnesse. Item, But they did miscõstrue some of these tokens to their own liking, and some they dyd set at light, vntill ỳ their wickednesse was published & conuinced by the destruction of their countrey, & the losse of themselues. This saith Iosephus. I beseke you is there not ỳ like blindnesse in al thẽ in our daies? wherof some do contemne ỳ signes, some do miscõstrue them, & few do acknowledge them to be ỳ tokens of very great euils to come, and tokes of the most sore indignation, & displeasure of God. For this cause we do call them the secreter, albeit that they be stil in the eies of all men. Secõdly, I do reckon amõg these tokens also, ỳ for the sinnes of the people we do so often se an hipocrite, & a reprobate person beare rule, as Iob sayeth. Such a one as Saul was, & that childish & effeminate persons rise to be princes. Where is is one ỳ doth acknowledge it to be a token of ỳ wrath of God, whẽ wise mẽ, strõg, aged, honest & graue men be taken away? It is a like token also of ỳ anger of God, when ỳ iust & godly, & such as do feare god, be taken out of this life, so that the plague of God may afterwardes run more at large into the multitude of the wicked, so we do reade in Esay: The iust man perisheth, & there is no mã that setteth it at his heart, & the godly be gathered vp, whiles no man vnderstandeth that the iust is taken away & chosen out from the companie of the euill. Our coũtrey vnderstood not of late yeres, neither yet vnderstandeth, what ỳ taking away of so many notable mẽ did betoken & signifie, which departed out of this life vnto the Lorde, some in peace & quietnesse, some violently killed & murdered, & yet wer do se the course sorte & naughtipackes swarme euery where stil. And of the number of these tokens is the multitude of false Prophets, which be appointed to blinde the hearts of the wicked & rebellious persons, & the höger of Gods word, which the Lord doth threaten vnto disobedient people, saying: I wil sende hũger into ỳ lãd, not ỳ höger of bred, but ỳ hũger of hearing Gods word. 3 Thirdly, we must referre it to the signes also, ỳ God doth deliuer vp ỳ reprobate after al kindes of chastenings & skourges, into a reprobate vnderstanding, & to filthy lustes, to defile their bodies one wt an other, and ỳ leauing ỳ naturall vse of women, they burne in lust one with an other, one man cõmitting filthinesse with a man, & receiuing the reward of this errour; such as belõgeth thervnto, & so they do that which is not cõuenient, but vnnatural to do: Ful of all iniustice, whoredome, craft, couetousnesse, malice, ful of enuie, murder, strife, deceit, euill mẽered,

The reigne of Hypocrites. Iob 34. Esay 3.

The good and wicked chy perish take ar

Esay 57.

Esay. 6.

Psalme 81.

whisperers, backbiters, haters of god, taunters, proude, glorious, deuisers of euill, disobedient vnto their parentes, without vnderstanding, not keping of couenantes, voyde of the affection of loue & charitie, vntrustie, vnmerciful, which knowing the iustice of God, that is, that they which do such things, be worthy of death, not only ỳ do these things, but doe also consent vnto thẽ which do thẽ. These manners, yea, these marrings and corrupting of mãners & behauiours, be open & cõmen now a days, specially among them which do occupie the chiefest places & roumes, & yet for all ỳ they shal finde very few which do vnderstand, ỳ this sort of men is by ỳ most iust iudgement of Gods anger giuen vp vnto ỳ reprobate vnderstandings. But they which do vnderstand it, doe forsake their cõpany, lest ỳ they sal together with them into the pit of perdition. 4 Fourthly, it is one of the tokens also of gods displeasure ỳ such wicked persons, giuen ouer vnto a reprobate vnderstãding, & vnto al mãner of shamefull lustes, & vnto most mischeuous life, to liue in this world in all welth, & hauing no care. For then is the anger of God great vpõ them in deede, when he seemeth not to be angry with them at al. There be very few ỳ do cõsider this. But the wiser sort do easyly vnderstand, that the anger of God is great, whẽ God seemeth not angry with them that doe sinne. For he doth correct him whom he loueth, & chastneth euery sonne which he receiueth. It is a token of desperation, when the phisition doth forsake & giue ouer his patient. God can not be more angry wt vs, thẽ to suffer vs to run which ways we list, & when we be vnder no bridell, we may proceede without any restraint in our sinnes, as farre as our appetite & wil, doth leade vs. For this is the prosperitie which marreth the foolish & vnwise. This last anger of his, God doth threaten to ỳ people of Iewes saying: I will make my heate to cease in thee, & my zeale shal go frõ thee. I wil be quiet, & be offended no more. The like is read in ỳ Psalme also: And my people hearkened not to my voice, & Israel would none of me, & I haue let them go in the stubbornesse of their hearts, they walke in their own deuises. What cã be nearer vnto destructiõ, than to be forsaken of God, & to be caried in a mãs own deuises? And yet in the meane seasõ, forasmuch as they be not scourged with men, but do reigne in their sinnes, they be proud & arrogãt, they talke loftily, thei do set vp their countenãce towards heauẽ, & their tõgue runneth at large vpon the earth, & (which is the maddest point of all) doe glorie in their own prosperitie, wherin they do encrease euery day more & more, & do ware worse, & in no wise do acknowledge, ỳ the same is the token of the extreme displeasure & anger of God. So the sea of Rome doth crake & boast, ỳ she remaineth in hir estate like a quene, and ỳ it hath had the vpper hande so many hundreth yeres against al mẽs attempts, & hereby gathereth, that she hath the fauour of God. Thus much I thinke sufficiely said for this present, which, & what mãner the tokens of Gods anger be. There may be other more also noted, but I would with with all my heart, ỳ we would diligently marke Zacharie. 16.

Psalme. 81.

these, and employ the marking of them well.

Whether the anger of God may be appeased, and how it may be appeased.

That God is pleated. Rom. 1. Psalm. 69.

THere is no lesse testimony of ỹ holy Scriptures ỹ God is appeased & made forgetfull, then that he is angry with sinners. He is merciful also whiles he is angry. Thou art angry (saith ỹ Prophet Dauid) and hast mercy vpon vs. And in an other place: He wil not be angry for euer, nor he will not threaten for euermore. But ther can no other reason be giuen, why he is not angry for euermore, but because that according vnto his godnesse, as he is slow vnto anger, so he is inclined also to pardon, & to forgiue. They that be of a naughty, hard & fierce nature, can not relent ỹ anger which they haue once conceiued, & so they be past all pleasing: for in them anger is changed into hatred, which they doe not leaue whiles they haue any breath in their body. Such a nature is deuilishe, & proceading out of the very fountaine of malice, & most farre frō the nature of God, which as it is good & slow vnto anger, so it is also gentle & mercifull, & changeth anger not into hatred, but into grace. Ther of cōmeth that so often in ỹ Scriptures: And the Lorde was pleased. They which do iudge of God lyke as they do of a man that is a king, & do measure his disposition by their owne, be harely persuaded, that his anger may be appeased: and therefore do fall either into the contēpt therof, or els into desperatiō. Wherfore we must firmely beleue, that he is some pleased, as that he is angry with our sinnes. Now how he may be reconciled & pleased, we must not determine of our selfe, but learne ỹ of his word. As touching the first & generall anger, wherein we be tied all naturally frō Adam, whereof we spake before, the same was & is appeased & pleased by the bloud of Jesu Christ our onely mediatour, & reconcilour. For God was in Christ saith the Apostle, reconciling ỹ world vnto him, not charging them with their sinnes. Of this attonemēt we be made partakers by amēding our life, & beleuing in Christ. Wherfore the Apostle added also, we beseke you for Christes sake, be reconciled vnto god. For this cause he calleth ỹ ministerie of ỹ preaching of ỹ Gospel, ỹ ministerie of reconcilemēt, saying: And all is of God, who hath reconciled vs vnto him by Christ, and hath giuen vs the ministerie of reconcilement.

It is deuelish to change anger into hate.

How the anger of God is pacified.

As cōcerning the anger of God, which we called before Tēporary, the same is appeased not by the benefite of time, as we doo se falleth out oftentimes in ỹ cases of men, in which the space of one houre maye helpe much to the mitigating of an angry mans minde, although there be nothing els vsed to appease him: but there be some certaine meanes, wherby ỹ displeasure of God is appeased. The first is in God himself though he be neuer so angry: The second in ỹ sinner: The third in the which do make intercession for the sinner. In God there is a naturall godnesse, which can not restrain it self, no not when he is angry. This same godnesse doth naturally mitigate his anger. And this is ỹ principall cause of appeasing, without the which ỹ rest could do nothing. In ỹ sinner

sinner there is requisite, an amendment of life, an humblenesse of contrite heart, and lowly prayer, which must be grounded vpon the hope of gods mercy. Without amendemēt, humblenesse, & lowly prayer the anger of God is not appeased. Hereof there be many exāples in the scriptures. The Iewes were so blinded in this pointe, that they thought ỹ the anger of God could be pleased with Sacrifices and giftes, without amendement of lyfe. They dyd rent their garments, & counterfait an humblenesse of minde, in sackecloth, and ashes, from which notwithstanding they were farre off. And them doe they followe fote by fote, which woulde seme to bee very religious in the Popery. And as for Gospell men (as we be called) what shall I say? Wee be not a halfepeny the better to chese. For where is one amongst a hundred, which goeth about earnestly to appease the anger of God? Micheas doth blame the Iewes saying: Can God be pleased in a thousand of Rams, or in many thousand of fat kyddes? Shal I giue my first begotten for my sinne? The fruit of my belly for the sinne of my soule? I will tell thee O man what is good, & what God doth require of thee: Surely to doe iudgement, to loue mercy, and diligently to walke with thy God. And Ioel doth manifestly enough teach the Iewes how they may please God, when he is angry with thē. In our time there be many stirred vp by ỹ Lord, which do teach and exhorte all men howe they shoulde mitigate the anger of God, but they doe tell the tale vnto deafe eares. The same stubbornesse of minde, which marred the Iewes, will marre vs also.

Wee sayde that the thirde waye to pleas God, is that whereby the iust & godly folke do through their mediation mitigate the displeasure of God, when he is angry with his people. Examples here of be in Moises & in Aaron, and in Samuel. We may recken also amōg these the examples of Moises, Phinees & Josue, which turned away the anger of the Lord from the people, in ỹ they punished the reprobate. The anger of ỹ Lord ceased from the people, after that Moises had hāged the captaines ỹō gibets against ỹ Sunne, & Phinees moued of zeale, thrust through both the harlot of Madian, & the Israelite also which was the adulterer. And we do reade also in Josue, that the anger of the Lorde was turned from the people, as some as he was stoned vnto death, which did prouoke it.

How the anger of God is appeased by the mediation of iust folke.

Num. 25.

Iosue. 7.

The two latter reasons be effectual before God, because of his godnesse, so that no man may attribute the appeasing of his anger either vnto our vertues or satisfactiō, which riseth of ỹ punishmēt of our sinnes. The euerlasting anger of God can haue no appeasing thereof. So that thereof we nede not to speake. And thus much we haue spoken of the anger of God.

Of the Iudgements OF GOD.

The holy scriptures do testifie that God is Iudge.

DAyly experience doth declare, and the holye Scriptures doe testifie, that God is not onely most good, most high of might, of most free wil,

and

and power as we haue noted before, but that he is the iudge also of all mens doings, and therefore Salomon in Ecclesiastes towardes the end doth aduise all me to feare God, and kepe his commandements, because that he bringeth vnto iudgement all things that be done, either good, or euill. And Dauid saieth: I will say to the foolish (sayth he) doe not foolishly, and to the wicked, lift not vp your horne, or strength, auance not your strength against the high one, talke not with a crooked necke, or proude countenance, for there is no man which can auaunce hym selfe against hun, neither out of the East, West, North, nor South, for as much as God is the iudge. It is he which abaseth, it is he which aduaunceth, for in the Lordes hand there is a cup full of troubled wine, he mingled it, and giueth thereof, men doe sucke vp the very dregges thereof, and all the wycked of the earth shall drinke of it. And the Apostle calleth God the iudge of all. And that as a iust iudge, he doeth iudge iustly, we haue declared in the place before of ỳ iustice of God: Wherefore we nede to saye no more thereof his iudiciarie iustice.

Psalm.75.

Hebr.12.

What iudgement is.

The Ebrewes do call מִשְׁפָּט, ỳ which we do cal iudgemẽt, of the verbe שָׁפַט which doth cõmonli signifie to iudge. Sometimes it is taken for a decree for ỳ plaine right, for custome, and for reuenge. The Greke word κρίσις of ỳ verbe κρίνω which signifieth sometimes to discerne, sometimes to condemne, and oftentimes to iudge. In the Latin tongue Iudico is as much to say, as Ius dico, that is, I tel or declare the right or lawe, and Iudex, that is the Iudge, as one which telleth ỳ right or lawe, & iudgemẽt is the very telling or declaring of ỳ right, or law. Yet for al that, it is vsed sometimes for reasoning & vnderstanding, whe we do determine with our selues, what we may iudge of thigs heard and seene. So the Apostle saith: Let two or three Prophets speake, & the rest iudge therof. It signifieth sometimes also condẽnation. So Christ saith: Iudge not, and he which heareth my word, & beleueth him which sent me, hath life euerlasting, & shall not come into iudgement. Where iudgement is taken for condẽnatiõ. Sometimes it is takẽ for the paine and punishment of the reprobate. So they which be sore punished, be said to sustaine sore iudgemẽt. The lawyers do take iudgement for the triall of the case to be discussed by order of law in the presence of the iudge, where the complainant & the defendãt are brought both together, and the Iudge heareth, vnderstandeth and pronounceth of the case.

Cor.

Mat.

Now how iudgemẽt may be attributed vnto God, it may easily be vnderstãded, if there be required in a Iudge the vnderstanding of the things which are to be iudged off, the meanig & intent of equitie & iustice, the authoritie & right to iudge, the power and might to deliuer the innocentes, & to punish the naughty, surely thẽ iudgement doth chiefly belong vnto him in whom none of these things can be founde lacking. And that is the one and only God, which is called of Esay, The God of iudgemẽt, and is reported in

Scrip-

Scriptures to be most wyse, most iust, most mightie, and Lorde of all. Therefore whether iudgement be taken for ỳ vnderstãding of things, or for the discretion, the saying and sentence of the lawe, for condemnation or punishing of the reprobate, it doth to none more properly belong, than to God.

That the iudgements of God be of two sortes.

We do not search into the iudgements of God, which ỳ Apostle doth witnesse, be vnsearchable. And yet there is some waye to come, though not to the full and perfecte yet at the least way to some consideration of ỳ sortes & kindes of thẽ. Besides that, there be some of them secret, and some manifest, & euen as we said before of the tokẽs of gods anger, so the iudgemẽts may be deuided also alike, that some be particular, and some vniuersal. We doe call all thẽ particular, which be not vniuersall, and we do cal them vniuersall, which do wrappe in and cõclude all mankinde.

The particular iudgements be of two sortes, the one wherein many be ioyned together, the other which concerneth eche man particularly. Many ioined together, as whẽ many be punished in one iudgemẽt, whole nations, coũtries, & cities: as those iudgemẽts were of the Sodomites, Egyptians, and Israelites in the wildernesse, of ỳ Cananites, Amorites, Moabites, Idumites: yea, and of the Israelites also in the verye lande of promis of the Babilonãs, Assirians, Grækes, Persians, Romanes, and other nations, which the iudge of the whole world deuiste, because of their sinnes, and according vnto his iust iudgement doth scourge thẽ, either wt warres, pestilence, or famine, or some other kinde of plague.

And the like be those iudgemẽts, when there be chastened and punished not whole peoples, but some picked out of the multitude, more or lesse. There be of these also many examples in Scriptures, as when xxiij. thousand men were slayne, because of the calfe: and where the Espials of the land which made all the people, besides Caleb and Iosue, to murmure, are stricken and slaine in the sight of the Lord. And where Chore, Dathan, and Abyron, with their families were swalowed vp by the opening of the ground: and the two hũdred, which offered incense, were consumed by the fire, which came from the Lord, and xiiij. thousand of the people, as we do reade, perished also. Where the captaines of ỳ people were hanged by ỳ Lordes commaundement, vpon gibettes against the Sunne. But there be many examples of such iudgements of God found in the Scriptures, which all, it were superfluous to rehearse here, and out of our purpose.

Exod.32.
Num.14.
Num.16.

Num.21.25.
Ryng ca-dals.

There be many examples also of those iudgementes of God, when some one man alone & apart is punished, because he sinned alone. The first I finde is Cain, who for murdering his brother, was subiect vnto the iust iudgement of God. Secondly, Oza also, whom the Lorde stroke, because he rashely layd hand vpon the Arke of the Lord, when it was like to fall. Thirdly, Gehezi was striken with the leprosie, for receiuing of money of Naaman the

Gen.4.

2 Samuel 6

2 Reg.5.

Sirian.

Sirnan. Fourthly, the captaine also, which spake against Elizeus. And you may ioyne vnto the, That man which gathered wood vpō the Sabboth day, & the Prophet which was slaine by the Lyon. In these & such like histories be same ỳ exāples of ỳ particular & priuate iudgement of God. The vniuersall iudgements of god are found to be of 3. sorts. The first is, when for the originall sinne of our first fathers, wherin we be al concerned & borne, Death came into al ỳ world, & possesseth al mankind, yea, thē also, which had not yet sinned to ỳ likenesse of Adams transgression. This iudgement, forasmuch as belongeth vnto ỳ guilt, blame, and euerlasting damnatiō therof, is take away by Christ, so ỳ it doth no longer binde ỳ elect & faithfull: but as touching ỳ death of this body & the troubles tied vnto it, it endureth vntill the end of ỳ worlde, what time death, ỳ last enemy, shal be same & taken away. The second vniuersal iudgement is ỳ, when because of the vniuersall corruption of the flesche, whatsoeuer lyued in all the whole worlde, beast or man, (except Noe, & such as were wt him in ỳ Arke) were all destroyed from ỳ face of ỳ earth. The third is that final iudgement, which we do looke for to come at ỳ ende of the worlde, what time we shal generally all be presented before ỳ iudgement seate of Christ our iudge, & the goates shalbe separated from the sheepe, ỳ reprobate from ỳ elect, & the wicked from the godly. In deede the iudgementes of God might be diuided in two more sorts, if a man were disposed to serue the narrowly out, but we be contented with this easy & ready diuisiō, wherby we be al admonished, ỳ we must not be so mad to thinke, ỳ we may sinne ỳ more safely with many, or with few, with all men or alone, as though it should seeme too great a matter for God to iudge vpon the sinnes of al mākinde: or ỳ he would sooner pardō our sinne, if we do sinne with many, or ỳ for the multitude & cōpany of them ỳ do sinne, the matter may be hidde & escape his knowledge: or ỳ it is a small & vnseemely matter for him to punish ỳ sinnes of a few, or of one priuate persone. But let ỳ godly & such as do feare God, be voyde of these thoughtes. In deede there is to be founde such Magistrates & Iudges in ỳ world, which do thinke it meete, to winke at the sinnes which be done by all generally, or by many, & so do iudge of ỳ sinnes of some fewe only: or els on ỳ other side, do thinke it not meete for them to iudge of fewe & priuate folke, forasmuch as these faultes which be cōmitted by few, do bring lesse daunger in, but do then fall to the sharpenesse of iudgement, if ỳ rest of the multitude do begin to grow to great. But there is none of these respects in God. As for the obiection of that that the Lord sayd of Niniuites vnto Ionas: shoulde not I spare Niniue a great citie, in which be more than 120. thousande men, which know not their right hande from their lefte, and much cattel also? God sayd that he did spare the multitude of sinners, not because they were many, but because there were many innocents, children, and cattell, in respect of whome, GOD would spare the rest. To be short, God is iudge, & that of the whole world, iudgeing of all, many, fewe, and some alone, when their sinnes ware ripe once vnto iudgement. His iudgement is fire consuming that which it catcheth, all, many, fewe or some one alone. As we se done when some houses alone, few, many, or sometimes altogether be on fire, as now and then whole cityes be burned. Wherefore like as we be so wary of fire, that no man will say with himself, My house standeth here alone, and therfore it is safe from fire, or here be but few houses, so that there is no daunger of fire: or here be many houses, and therefore we may care the lesse for any harme of fire, forasmuch as we do knowe, that the nature of fire is such, that if it take & kindle once, it spareth neither many nor few, neither them ỳ do stand alone: so we must beware, ỳ we fall not into the daunger of ỳ iudgement of God, the iudge of all, knowing ỳ the violence of him is much sower, than of any fire, & ỳ no multitude, be it neuer so great doth let him nor that we haue any defence of fewnesse, or of being alone.

Num. 15.

1. Reg. 13.

The vniuersall iudgement of God is of three sorts.

Gen. 6. 7.

The lessons taught by this.

That the causes of Gods iudgemēts ought not to be searched.

MAny of the iudgementes of God be of that sorte, that it were very profitable to know the causes of them. And ỳ holy Scripture doth not hide them, so ỳ men nede not ouer curiously to searche them, as the iudgement of Sodome & Gomor, & other like, the examples wherof were giuen vs to this ende, ỳ we should vnderstand, ỳ we haue all of vs liuinges in heauen, to be feared & obeied: wherof Peter ỳ Apostle doth make mencō wher he saith ỳ such iudgements are set forth for exāples vnto them, which would do wickedly. But wall ther be many of the iudgemēts of god, & causes of which be not so opē, ỳ thei be knowē to al mē. Of thē we ought not to search ouer curiously, lest we should seem to make those thigs to be wōn our cōpaine, which ỳ prouidēce of God would haue vnsearchable, & passing our reach. Thy iudgements (saith Dauid) be an exceding great pit or depth. And we (as our curiousnes ledeth vs) wil rather go groping for ỳ depth of Gods secrets, thā vō his feare to knowe those things, which be before our face set forth for vs to knowe. This crokednesse of mans hearte is great, whereby we do neglect those things that doe belong vnto vs, and desire to know that which is forbidden, which we ought not to search, but to reuerēce, & thinke of them so religiously, that though they seme vnto our reason to be vniust & vnreasonable, yet we should not doubt, but ỳ they be most iust, & say rather with Dauid: The Lord is iust in all his waies. And vō Daniel: Thou art iust (shall that which thou hast done vnto vs: & all thy workes be true, & all thy wayes right, &c. We must se & cōsider the workes of God, but so for all that, that in case there be any causes of thē alleaged, we marke thē wel for our edifying: & in case there be none alleaged, we seeke not further for thē.

1 That ỳ iudgements of God, be wonderful, let vs consider some fewe vnto innumerable sort of them. And first of all, which ỳ Apostle maketh mencō of, for the Romains, saying: God hath concluded all vnder Daniell. 1.

Examples of the wonderfull iudgements of God.

Rom.11.

That god hath concluded all vnder sin.

vnbeleefe, to haue mercy vpō al. How deepe and vnsearchable this iudgement is, the exclamation which followeth doth witnesse: O the depth of the riches of the wisdome and knowledge of god, how vnsearchable be the iudgements thereof, and the wayes not able to be founde out: For who euer knew the minde of the Lord, &c. So farre wide herein the Godly man is from searching how it were conuenient for God to conclude al men vnder vnbeleefe, that he will rather abnaunce his wisdome, & saye with the Apostle: Glory be vnto him for euer.

That he chose some & refused some.

2 Secondly. Who is able to ymagine, vpon what reasons the iudgemēts of ỹ election, & refusing be grounded, wherby God chose some vnto him to be vessells of grace, and some he refused, which the Apostle doth cal the vessels of wrath, appointed vnto destruction?

That god loued Iacob and hated Esau:

3 Thirdly, that is a very wonderfull iudgement also, that God loued Iacob, & hated Esau, whiles they were yet bothe in their mothers belly, & that the first neuer had done any good, nor the other any euill: whereof the Apostle maketh mention to the Romaines. For it shold not seme much strāge to God, to loue him whiche had done neither good nor euill, but to hate such a one, it seemeth to the vnderstanding of our reason not to be meete for any man, much lesse for God, which is of all most iust and good.

Rom.9.

That god doth harden whom he will. Rom.9.

4 Fourthly, it is the lyke point that the Apostle writeth of, that God doth harden whom he will, & hath mercy vpon whom hee wyll: and that it standeth not in him which willeth and runneth, but in GOD which hath mercy. If his had said, he hath mercy vpon them vpon whome he ought to haue mercy, and he hardeneth him whome he ought to harden: and it standeth not in him which willeth and runneth onely, &c. He had spoken not farre wide from the iudgement of our reason, but now when he saith: He hath mercy vpon whom he wil, and hardeneth whome he will, and that absolutely, the matter stādeth not in him which willeth and runneth, but in GOD which hath mercy. This iudgement of GOD is to deepe for the capacitye of our reason.

5 Fifthly, it falleth out oftētimes, that their purpose dothe frame but euil fauouredly, which do earnestly intende some good worke: and on the otherside that they doe prosper, which doe withstand it. We may see an example of such a iudgement in the booke of Judges. When the Israelites meaning to reuenge a most mischeuous fact, committed by some of ỹ Beniamits, whē they had twice sought counsell of the Lord, and were twice sore beaten of the Beniamites, and lost foure thousande of their men, whereas the Beniamites had but. xxv. thousand in all, which would warre against the whole people of God for certeine most wicked and mischeuous persons. This iudgement of God was very sore vpon Israell, and yet for all that we doe not read of any sinne that was punished by that losse and slaughter of men. If a man consider the histoire of the sonnes & daughters of Job, which were sodainely slayn by the violent fall of their brothers house, and of his seruants and heardmē, of whiche some were slaine by the Sabees, and some by the Chaldees, and some consumed by fyre from Heauen: was not this a wonderfull iudgement of God, seyng that we doe not reade of any of their sinnes that he punished so sodaynly and so sore?

fall

6 Sixtly, that is also a speciall poynt, that the infante whiche hath yet done no euill, is taken out of this lyfe by vntimely deathe for the Fathers sinne: of which iudgement we may read an history in the boke of Samuel, where the Prophete Nathan sayde vnto David: For asmuch as thou hast caused the enimies to blaspheme the name of the Lord, for this worde, the sonne which is borne to thee, shall dye the death. The child had not sinned, but David his Father. And yet notwithstanding it is sayd vnto the father: Thou shalt not die, but the childe whiche is borne to thee, shal die the death. Why? bicause thou hast made the enimies blaspheme the name of the Lorde. Lo the sinne is charged vpon the father, and the punishment layde vpon the litle childe. If a man should aske the opinion of our reason, in this iudgement of God, it should seme to haue litle equitie: and yet for all that it can not be vniust, for asmuche as he whiche so iudged of the childe, is not a sinfull man, but God the most iuste iudge of all.

Iosue.7.

2.Samu. vl

7 Seuenthly, many do argue of that poynt also, that for the sinne of one manne many be slayne, as that iudgement is, whiche God threateneth vnto king Abimeleth, saying: Nowe therefore restore the man his wife, and he shall pray for thee, for he is a Prophete, and thou shalte liue: but if thou wilte not restore hyr, knowe thou that thou shall dye the death, and all thine. The fault was the kyngs, and yet all his household should haue bene subiect vnto the same punishment, (notwithstanding they had not offended in the matter) if he had not restored Sarah vnto Abraham. So for the obstinate stubbornesse and rebellion of Pharao alone, all Egypt was punished with ten plagues. So with Acham which sinned alone, his wyfe, sonnes, and daughters, Shepe, Oxen, and Asses, were stoned to death, & all his goodes burned. So for the sinne of David alone, whiche he committed in numbryng his people, threescore and ten thousand men perished.

That the aftercommers bee punished for the sinnes of their forefathers.

8 Eyghtly, it seemeth the lyke case also, that the aftercommers bee punished for the sinnes of their forefathers. The saying of Christe is knowen. That all the iust bloud fall vpon you, whiche hath bene shedde vpon the earth, since the bloud of iust Abell, vntil the bloudde of Zacharye the sonne of Barachie, whome you slewe betwixte the Temple, and the Altare. Verily I say vnto you, all these things shal befall vpon this generatiō. So the whole house of Hieroboā was decayed after his death, bycause of his sinne, wherin he made the Israelites to sinne straight after the beginnyng of his raigne.

Matth.23.

1.Reg.15.

9 Ninthly, a question may be made of that also, by what reason, when many had committed al one sin, not all, but some of them only be punished? We doe reade of Aaron and Marie his sister, that bothe of them

That many haue done the lyke sin and yet some of the and not all be punished.

did murmure against Moses, because of his wyfe that was an Ethyopian, and that therefore they were bothe blamed of the Lorde, and yet for all that Marie onely was punished, and caste into a leprosie, and Aaron leste cleane, whereas consideryng the person of Aaron, it may appeare, that his sinne ought to haue bene sorer punished, than hys sisters. There be many of the iudgements of GOD lyke vnto this, the reasons of which ought not to be sought for by vs, but to be lefte vnto hys infinite wisedome, iustice, and prouidence. A man can not lightly more grieuously and irreligiously offende the Maiestie of God, than when we do examine hys iudgementes to the opinion of our reason.

What is the vse of Gods iudgement in this world.

Why god doth iudge in this worlde.

FOr asmuch as at the ende of the worlde we shall be all iudged, and stand before the iudgement seate of Christe, so that euery man may receyue, according vnto that whiche he hath done in hys body, either good or euil. A man may reasonably aske, why God dothe iudge in this present worlde, and not rather reserue all the doynges of all creatures vntill that finall iudgement be come, so that he nede not to iudge twyce of one facte. And to aunswere this question, so that menne may take profite thereof, we muste consider what is the vse of Goddes iudgementes in this worlde. Hierome sayth, There is no ful payment of desertes in this worlde, but in that worlde to come. Wherefore the day of iudgement is promysed also at the ende. For nowe there is no iudgemente. For it is without cause called the laste day of iudgement, if God doe nowe iudge. This sayth he. Wee can not deme, but that God doth iudge also in this present worlde, and that all kynde of menne, wicked, and godly: notwithstanding in that sorte, that nothyng be derogate frō the final iudgement, but rather a way made to declare his iustice. Wherefore in my opinion it is good to see in this mater, how God dothe iudge and not iudge in thys present worlde: whiche can not bee better perceyued, than if wee do consider the vse of Gods iudgements, whereby hee dothe iudge of our doings in this present life.

How many folde the iustice of Gods iudgement is in this worlde.

And the vse of them is to be seene in foure respects, for he doth diuerslye iudge the wicked in one sorte, and the Godly after an other sorte. First he dothe so iudge the wicked, that he declareth himselfe to be the punisher and reuenger of euill, and that therin bee gyuē an example vnto others, whereof the Apostle Peter doth admonishe vs, where he sayth, that the iudgementes of the wicked be sette forth, for the eraples of them which should doe euill. 2.Pet.2.

Secondly, he dothe in some parte recompence as well the wicked as the Godly, in this life. He doth recōpence I say, in some behalfe. For he doth reserue the ful, perfect, and final recompence, vntill the iudgement to come, at the which he wil finally determine of the whole, aswell of the destructiō of the wicked, as of the saluation of the Godly. In this manner he doth giue vnto them both in this life, to the euil, euil things, and to the good, good things, that the euill may perceyue that they haue stirred the Lorde against them, and receyue some taste of theyr destruction to come: and the good also vnderstande the grace of Gods beneuolence towardes them, & be confirmed in true Godlinesse. 1.Cor.11.

Thirdely, he dothe iudge the reprobate in this life to this ende also, in exercising his reuenge towardes them, that the elects may be for the tyme deliuered from theyr malice & violence. So hee taketh away tyraunts, the deuourers of the people, and persecuters of all godly folke, not sufferyng the faithfull, to be tēpted more than they be able to beare and sustayne. The eramples of such iudgements may be taken not onely out of the Scriptures, but of the histories of our owne Cities also. For these our times doe manifestly inough set forth before our eyes the iudgements of cruell tyrants, so that a blinde man may see howe they bee taken away, to the intent that for a time there may be peace and quiet, in the Churches of Christe.

Fourthly, he doth iudge not onely the reprobate, but the Godly also, scorging and chastenyng them, yea and sometimes also taking them out of this lyfe by vnseasonable death, not to destroy them, but to prouide that they bee not condemned with this worlde. So the Apostle sayth, When wee be iudged by the Lorde, wee be chastened, least that we bee condemned with this worlde. And he is so enclyned vnto this kynde of iudgement, that beyng appoynted to iudge the reprobate, he dothe iudge them firste whom he doth meane to saue: & therefore the Apostle Peter in his firste Epistle, sayth, That the iudgement of God doth begin at his owne household. Therefore he doth oftētimes take the godly out of this life, to the intent that eyther they shoulde not see the euils to come, as we doe reade of Abyah the sonne of Hieroboam, & of Iosias, either least thyough the malice of this worlde & the company of wicked folke, theyr hartes shoulde be altered from theyr Godly intent and purpose. Whereof loke in the booke of Wisedome. These foure vses of Goddes iudgemēts, haue place only in this present worlde, & not in the worlde to come, for then there shall be no cause why to declare by certayne and assured eramples, that there is a reuenger of euill in heauen, to the example of thē which should do wickedly: or by way of recompēce, to giue any taste of his anger to the wicked, & of his grace vnto the godly, and to encourage the Godly for a season by the deathe of tyrants: or to prouide, least the godly be damned with this worlde, or to see & feele the euils to come with the reprobate, but there shall be a briefe determination of al things for the final & perpetual saluation of the godly, & destructiō of the vngodly. Thus I suppose it dothe appeare howe it may be simply, and readily cōsidered, what is the vse of Gods iudgements in this worlde, and what difference there is betwixt them, and the latter iudgement which we do loke for. 1.Pet.4. 1.Regum. 2.Regum. Sapien.4

Of the extreme and last Iudgement.

LIke as vpon that, that the latter iudgemēt to come, is set forth in

That there is a latter Iudgement to come.

Scriptures vnto vs to be loked for, some doe gather, that God dothe not iudge any mã in this present world, but doth deferre the iudgement vntill the ende of the worlde. So, In Augustines dayes some did gather, that it is vayne to loke for iudgemẽt to come, for that that they whiche be vnbeleuyng and reprobate, be already iudged, and that they whiche doe beleeue in Christ come not into iudgement, for that Christ himself saith: Ioan. 3. God sente not his Sonne into the worlde to iudge the worlde, but that the world should be saued by him, he which doth beleue in him is not iudged, but he which beleueth not is already iudged, bicause ỳ he dothe not beleue in ỳ name of the only begottẽ sonne of God: And, Verily, verily, I say vnto you, He whiche heareth my worde, and beleueth him which sent me, hath lyfe euerlasting and cõmeth not into iudgement, but shall passe from death into life. They argued vpon this, and sayde: If that they which do beleue, shall not come into iudgement, & they whiche do not beleue, be already iudged. Where, And who be they, whiche the Lorde shall iudge. Secondly the Apostle Peter also did foretel, that there shold come mockers, which denying the seconde cõming of Christe should say, where is the promise of his commyng? For since that the Fathers fyrste slepte, all things doe contique in the same estate they were from the beginning of creatures. Wherfore the myndes of the faythfull muste bee armed, leaste they bee seduced by suche imaginations, and doubte of the iudgement to come, bycause that they doe see the commyng of the Lorde deferred so many ages, and yeares. And whereas the Lorde sayth, that they which do beleeue shal not come into iudgement, it muste be vnderstanded of condemnation, for the whiche the worde of iudgement is vsed, as wee made mention before: so that not to come into iudgement is nothyng else to say, but not to come into condemnation. And whereas he sayth that they whiche doe not beleue in the sonne of God, be already iudged: it is not spoken of the promulgatiõ of sentence, whiche is to come at the latter iudgement, but of the secrete, and euerlasting iudgement of God, where it was determined before the beginning of this worlde, that they which do beleue in him, should be saued, and they whiche do not beleeue, be condemned. Wherefore they be much ouerseene, and wicked, whiche doe gather vpon the wordes of the Lorde, that the same shall not be, whiche hee did in many places expressly say, shoulde come to passe: As for the mockers, & scorners of whiche the Apostle Peter spake, he doth answere them himselfe.

But when the day of the latter iudgement shall come. It is not for vs to knowe, for that is reserued to the foreknowledge and power of God only. So Christe sayth. As for the day and power no man knoweth it: no not the Aungels of heauen, but the Father onely. And hereupon he gathereth, that wee ought to liue the more wakefully, and warely, the lesse that wee doe knowe what houre the Lord will come. Of which matter I haue spoken in my commentaries vpon Mathewe. This is a cleare case that the last iudgement shall

Ioan. 5.

Mathe. 24.

VVhē the day of the last iudgement shall be, wee muste not seeke.

De saying of Elias.

Mathe. 24.

shall be at the comming of the Lord, who shall come at the ende of the worlde: but when the ende of this world shall come, that can not bee an assured case. The Hebrewes doe crake vpon a certayne number of thousandes of yeeres, in whiche thys worlde should be determined: & they doe attribute these wordes vnto the Prophet Elias: There shall be fyre thousand yeares of this world. Two thousande shall be voyde, (so they doe call the time whiche went before the law) Two thousand for the law, And two thousande for Christe. In deede this saying doth serue well to cõfute the obstinacie of the Iewes, wheras they do yet stubbernly deny ỳ Christ is come, but to proue the determinate space and ende of this world, it can be of no authoritie at all. Lactãce doth also determine this world at the syxte thousand. Augustine doth cõfute them, which do determine the thousands of this worlde, accordyng to the number of the dayes of the weeke, affirmyng that the eyght day is a figure of the resurrection & ende of the world. As for me, I am well contented to bee ignorant of that whiche God woulde not haue me to know, wherfore I do not alow their coniectures & gessings, which had rather argue in this matter and search the secretes of God, than accordyng vnto the admonition of the Lorde, watche and walke in the studie and seekyng of true godlinesse.

Iustinus Martyr. Augustine.

Lactantius.

If we would knowe the manner, howe the very action and doyng of this iudgement shall bee, I suppose there can bee nothyng taught more certayne, than the same whiche the Lorde himselfe declareth, saying: And straight after ỳ trouble of those dayes, the Sunne shall be darkened, & the Mone shall not giue hir light, and the starres shall fall from heauen, & the power of the heauens shal be moued, & then there shall appeare the signe of the sonne of man in heauen, and all the trybes of the lande shall waile, & they shall see the sonne of man comming in the cloudes of heauen with much Power and Maiestie, and he shall sende his Aungels with a trompe and a greate noyse, & they shall gather togither his electes from the foure windes of heauen, from the toppe of heauen vnto the vttermoste boundes therof, and a litell after: Then there shall be two in the fielde, one shall be taken vp, and the other left behind, there shall two women be grindyng in the mill, one shall be taken vp, and the other leste, two in a bedde, and one taken away an other left behind: Againe, What time the sonne of Man shall come in his Maiestie, and al his Angels with him, then he shall sitte vpon the seate of hys Maiestie, and all nations shal be gathered before hym, and he will disseuer thẽ one frõ an other, as the Shepearde dothe disseuer the Shẽpe from the Goates, and he shall sette the shẽpe at the right hande, and the Goates at the leste. Than shall the kyng say vnto them whiche shall be at his right hande: Come you blessed of my father, and possesse the kyngdome made ready for you frõ the beginnig of the world. For I was hũgry, & you gaue me to eate, I was a thirste, and you gaue me to drinke, I was a straunger, and you toke mee in, I was naked, & you couered me. I was weake, and you visited mee.

Mathe. 25.

I was in prysō, and you came vnto me. Then the iuste shal answer him, saying: Lorde, when did we see thee hungry and fede thee, or thirstie, and gaue thee drinke, whē did we see thee a straunger, & did take thee in? or naked, and couered thee? or when did did we se the sicke, and in prysō, & came to visite thee? And the King shal answere them, saying. Verily I say vnto you, for asmuche as you haue done it vnto one of those my least brethern, you haue done it vnto me. Then the king shal say vnto thē also, which be at his left hande: Depart frō me you cursed, into euerlasting fire, whiche is prepared for the Diuell, and his Angels, for I was hungry, and you gaue me nothing to eate, &c. Then shal they also answere him, saying: Lorde, when did we see thee hungry, or thirstie, or a straunger, or naked, or sicke, or in prysō, & did not minister vnto thee? Then he shall answere them and say: Verily I say vnto you, for asmuche as you haue not done it vnto one of these little ones, you haue not done it vnto me. And they shall goe into euerlasting punishment, & the iuste into euerlastyng lyfe. And in John he saith: Marueil not, for the houre is come, when al they which be in their graues shall heare the voyce of the sonne of God, and they whiche haue done good, shall come forth vnto the resurrection of life, and they whiche haue done euill, vnto the resurrection of iudgement. And the Apostle saith: Thus much do I say my bretherne, that flesshe and bloud, can not possesse the kyngdome of God, neither shall corruption possesse incorruption. Beholde, I tell you a mysterie. In dede we shall not all sleepe, and yet for all that, we shall be all chaunged in a moment, at the twinckling of an eye, by the laste trompe, for it shall sounde, and the dead shall ryse agayne incorruptible, and we shall be chaunged, &c. And agayne: For this we do say vnto you in the word of the Lorde, that we whiche shall lyue, and be lefte at the commyng of the Lorde, shall not come yer them whiche sleepe: for the Lorde himself shal come downe from Heauen with a shoute, and with the voyce of the Archangell, and with the trompe of GOD, and the dead in Christe shall ryse firste, after that, we also whiche shall bee alyue, whiche shall be lefte behynde, shall be taken vp also with them in the cloudes to meete the Lorde in the ayre, and so we shall alwayes be with the Lorde. And agayne: When the Lorde Jesus shall be reuealed from Heauen with the Aungels of hys power, with burnyng flame, which shal reuenge them whiche haue not knowen God, and whiche doe not obey the Gospell of our Lorde Jesus Christe, whiche shall haue for their punishment euerlastyng destruction from the face of the Lorde, and from the glory of hys strength, when he commeth to be glorified in hys Saincte, &c. And the Apostle Peter sayth: The day of the Lorde shall come lyke a thiefe in the nighte, when the skies shall passe lyke waues, and the elements shall be dissolued for heate, and the earth and the workes whiche be in it, shall be burnte vp. Therefore, seyng that all these matters shall be dissolued, what manner of menne dothe it behoue you to bee, lokyng for

1. Thessal. 4.

Who shal be present before the iudgement of God.

2. Thessal. 1.

2. Pet. 3.

for and makyng haste to the commyng of the daye of GOD in holy conuersations and Godly liues, by whome the Heauen shall be burned and dissolued, and the Elements for heate shall melte away? but we doe loke for newe Heauens and newe earth, accordyng vnto hys promisse, in whiche Iustice dothe inhabite. These matters the holy Spyrite thought profitable to be knowen, and therefore didde putte them into the holy Scriptures, to the intent we should haue some vnderstanding what the manner of the laste iudgemente shoulde bee: and if the reste had bene also as profitable to be knowen, he woulde surely haue set it forth also.

If you aske, who shal be present before the iudge Christe, it may bee some aunswered accordyng vnto the Apostle, All: and by the wordes of Christe before alleaged, All nations: and according vnto the confession of our fayth, Bothe the quicke and the deade, whiche all, the Lorde shall iudge. And we doe meane by the deade, those whiche before the Lordes commyng haue slepte from the begynnyng of the world, which al shall be raysed vp agayne to iudgement by the vertue of his power: and by the quicke we meane suche as shall be yet alyue, accordyng vnto the saying of the Apostle, wherupon this article was put into our Crede or belefe. Augustine sayth that this particle maye bee taken two wayes, either in that sense which we declared euen now out of the words of the Apostle, eyther that we may vnderstande by the quicke, the iuste, and by the dead, the vniuste. But the later sense is farre from the simplicitie of the Crede, for the vnderstandyng of the Christian people: but the first is more simple and better agreeyng with the minde of the Apostle. Lactance doth suppose that they only shall be iudged, which were in the religion of God.

Lactan. lib. 7. cap. 20.

Of the tokens goyng before the latter Iudgement.

GOD, who is the moderator of al things, dothe so moderate this matter also, that albeit hee will not haue the daye and houre of the laste iudgemente to bee knowen to any manne, yet for all that, hee woulde not haue hys faythfull to be altogither ignorant of that tyme that goeth before it, leaste they shoulde be sodaynely and vnreadily ouertaken with his commyng. Therfore he did set forth certayne signes to be obserued, by which we should be forewarned thereof, and be confirmed in diligence of watchyng and waking, and be incouraged agaynst all assaultes and persecutions of aduersaries, specially of Antichriste.

God vouchsafe vs to knowe the tyme which goeth before the day of iudgement.

And for asmuche as may suffise this treaty, there be sette forth two kindes of tokens & signes. For some do passe long before, and some nie at hand. They whiche doe goe long before, do timely and briefly forshewe, that the Lorde is ready to come to iudge. Those which do goe but as it were at hād or before his face, do cry ỹ he is at hand, like as the marching on to warre of some prince, is denoūced and proclaymed timely inough, whiles he is yet in his prouisiōs and preparation. And when his army is at hande, the poſtes and meſſengers do runne and prouoke, and ſturre vp all to mæte with him.

The tokēs goyng before the last iudgement of two sortes.

Some of the ſignes goyng long before, be rehearſed by the Lorde hymſelfe, and ſome by the Apoſtle. The Lorde ſayth in Matthew: Like as it was in the dayes of Noe, ſo ſhall be alſo commyng of the Sonne of man: for lyke as in the dayes before the floudde they were eatyng and drinking, maryng, and beſtowyng in mariage, vntill that day when Noe wente into the Arke, and they knew it not vntill ỹ the floudde came, and wiped away al: ſo the comming of the ſonne of manne ſhall be alſo. And in Luke it is added: Lyke as it fared in the dayes of Loth, they dyd eate and drynke, they bought and ſolde, they dyd plante and buylde, what day that Loth went out of Sodome, it rayned fyre and brymſtone from Heauen, and deſtroyed all, and accordyng vnto this, it ſhall betyde at that day when the Sonne of man ſhall be reuealed. Therefore what other thyng elſe is that ſecuritie and careleſneſſe, whiche long agoe is growne ſo greate, that without care and expectation of the iudgement to come, wee doe lyue after that rate; as though that the Lorde would neuer returne vnto vs, and that wee doe ſo ſecurely eate, drynke, marie and beſtowe in marryage, plante, and buylde, but a ſigne paſſyng long before, and foreſhewyng vnto vſe mẽ the commyng of the Lorde? And therewithall agreeth that peece of the parable in Mathew: And whiles the bridegrome taried, they ſlumbred all and ſlepte. Doe wee not ſee, that well nere all menne are ſo heauy aſleepe in theyr hartes, oppreſſed with ſurfette, dronkenneſſe, carke and care of this lyfe, that they cãnot bee awaked by any clamors of the preachyng of the Goſpell, nor ſeeme that euer they will awake, vntil that they bee called out of this vniuerſall and inuincible dead ſleepe, by the trompe of the Aungell, at the very commyng of the Lorde? This the Apoſtle ſawe ſhoulde come, and therfore hee gaue vs warnyng before, ſaying: Therefore lette vs not ſleepe lyke vnto others, but lette vs awake and bee ſober.

Signes going long before. Matth.24. Luke.17. Matth.25. 1.Theſſ.v. 1.Theſſ.4.

Vnto theſe firſte kynde of ſignes, thoſe thyngs doe belong, whiche the Apoſtle wryteth in his firſte Epiſtle to Timothee, where hee ſayth: The ſpyrite dothe alluredly ſpeake that in the later tymes, ſome ſhall fall from the fayth, harkenyng vnto diſceytefull ſpyrites and doctrines of Deuiles, by the counterfaityng of falſe talkers, hauyng their conſcience marked as it were with a brãdyng yron, forbiddyng to marry, and commaundyng to forbeare the meates, whiche God hath created to bee receyued wyth thankes gyuing, of the faythfull, and them whiche knowe the truthe, that what ſo euer GOD hath created is good, and nothyng to bee refuſed, if it bee taken with thanks giuing. When he ſaith, that this fallyng from the ſound doctrine and fayth, ſhall betyde in the latter times, no doubt he doth meane of the times goyng before the Lords commyng, in whiche this fallyng from the fayth is long ſince paſſe, as the thyng it ſelfe dothe declare. And therefore it is reckened a right among

among thoſe ſignes, whiche doe forewarne vs to wake, and diligently to looke for the day of the Lord. Therefore, albeit we do in this matter not without cauſe reprehende and blame the maſterſhip of errour, whiche the Papiſtes do practiſe in the Churche, yet notwithſtanding we muſt thinke withall, that it is ſignifyed vnto vs by this departure and falling from the faith, that the latter times bee in hand, and that it oughte ſo to be conſidered, that we do acknowledge, not onely the decepte of Satan, but the ſigne alſo of the latter times.

2.Theſſa.

And in the ſeconde Epiſtle to Timothe, we do reade thus: Know that at the latter dayes there ſhall bee daungerous ſeaſons, for men ſhall be louing themſelues, couetous, preſumptuous, proude, banners, diſobedient to their parents, vnthankefull, vngodlye, without pitie, keeping no couenants, ſlaunderous, outragious, fierce, deſpiſing the good, traytors, raſh dealers, arrogante, louing pleaſures more thã God, hauing a ſhewe of godlineſſe, and yet denying the ſtrength thereof. In this ſaying the Apoſtle dothe ſo truly paint out and ſet forthe, as it were with an inſtrumente, the wonderfull corrupt manners of theſe preſente times: and becauſe hee dyd tell before, that there ſhoulde be ſuche menne in the latter dayes, we do eaſily vnderſtand by the conſideration of the behauioure and manners now vſed, that we be fallen into thoſe daungerous ſeaſons of the laſt dayes. And therefore be warned by the caſe it ſelfe, to wake and become like vnto thẽ whiche do wakefully looke for their Lord and maſter, euery man in his watch.

In the latter Epiſtle to the Theſſalonians, hee ſpeaketh of the comming of the Lord in this wiſe: The Lorde ſhall not come, vnleſſe there come firſte a decay, and that the ſinfull man be reuealed, the childe of perdition, whiche ſhall be the aduerſarie, and be aduanced aboue all that is called God or Godly. So that hee ſhall ſitte in the temple of God, ſhewing himſelfe as God, &c. No man doubteth but that he dothe ſpeake of Antichriſte, & that he reporteth that he ſhall be reuealed before the comming of Chriſte. So that the reuealing or opening of Antichriſte is the token of thoſe times, whiche doe goe before the comming of the Lord. And heere we maye ſee what Bernarde ſayeth vpon the Pſalme, Qui habitat Serm.6. at the ende. Nowe ſayeth hee, there is peace with Paganes, peace with Heretikes, but wee haue not peace with falſe children. Thou haſt multiplyed people, Lorde Ieſu, but thou haſt not multiplyed gladneſſe: for there be many called, and fewe choſen. All Chriſtian men, and welnere all do ſeeke things of theyr owne, and not of Ieſus Chriſte. Yea the very offices of the dignities of the Church, are chaunged into a filthye gayne, and traffike of darkeneſſe, and there is not ſoughte in them the ſaluation of mennes ſoules, but the waſte of riches: for this they bee ſhorne, for this they do haunt Churches, ſay Maſſes, ſing Pſalmes, they doe ſtryue ſhamefully nowe a dayes for Biſhoprickes, for Abbotſhippes, for Archdeaconries, and other dignities, ſo that the rentes of the Churches be waſted in the vſe of ſuperfluitie and vanitie. There remaineth that the mā of sinne, the child of perdition be reuealed, the Deuil not onlye of the daye, but of the none daye, which is not only transfygured into the Aungell of light, but is aduanced also ouer all that is called God, or that is worshipped. This saith Bernard. Whereby it appeareth well ynough, vnto whome he thought that the wordes of the Apostle shoulde bee referred, so that no man can charge vs that we be the firste that haue referred the same vnto the head of the most corrupte Clergy, I meane the Symon of Rome. He gathered by the Simony, bying and selling, couetousnesse & excesse of the Churchmen in his time, that the reuelation of Antichrist was at hande. For the head of them began to be opened by the qualitie of the members. Where we muste marke by the waye, that Bernard did not only acknowledge, that Antichriste shoulde some be reuealed, but also that he was in the Church, else he could not haue beene reuealed, if that hys comming hadde bin yet behinde, as it is surmised in the Popery.

Bernard Antichriſt In Pſalm. Qui habit. Serm.6.

Hitherto we haue touched somewhat of certayne signes, whiche doe declare long before the time of the laste iudgemente, and we meane not to goe thorough to all. And therefore nowe let vs see some of them, whych doe passe before the verye sighte of Gods comming nye at hand. Fyrste we may call them to remembrance, which the Lord himselfe said should come. Straight way after the affliction of those dayes, the Sunne shall be darkened, and the Mone shall not geue hir lighte, and the Starres shall fall from Heauen, and the powers of the Heauens shall bee moued, and then shall appeare the signe of the sonne of man in Heauen, &c. These things out of doubt shal passe nearest before the comming of the Lord, and of them we haue spoken in our Commentaries vpon Matthew, wherevnto we do adde nothing (bee it spoken without the preiudice of others.) For the signes be suche, that they do not come vnto oure certayne knowledge, but by the experience to come. What the same proofe or experience commeth, then we shal knowe howe the Sunne is darkened, that the Mone shyneth not, that the Starres doe fall from the Skye, that the powers of the Heauens be moued, and what signe of the Sonne of Man doth appeare in Heauen. In the meane whyles wee may gesse at them, but wee can determine nothyng of any certaynetie. Notwythstandyng, if anye man lyke, lette hym loke vpon Lactance.

Signes going before the comming of the Lorde at hande.

Matth. 24.

Lactantius Firmianus. li. 7. cap. 16.

Rom. 11.

And there remayneth behynde that saying of the Apostle: Brethrē, I will not haue you to be ignorannt of thys mysterie, that you bee not hygh mynded in your selues, for that the blindenesse is happened vpon part of the Israelites, vntyll that the fulnesse of the Gentiles come in, and so Israell shall be saued. This conuersion of the Jewes I do differ from those tokens whiche began to bee done a great whyles a gone, and doe passe before the comming of the Lorde: and I doe apply it vnto those signes, whiche shall goe nearest before it. But how that conuersion shal bee fulfilled, and what shall bee the poynte of the fulfilling of the Gentiles, lette hym deryne whyche is able. We can rather wishe it, than for a certayntie define it. Augustyne sayth, that there shall be sometimes a manifest vocation or calling of the Jewes in the saluation of the Gospell, but howe and what time it shall be, he doth not expresse.

Of the conuersion of the Iewes.

Rom. 11.

Apoll. li. 20. de Ciuit. Dei. cap. 30.

What maner of state the worlde shall be of after the iudgement.

Some men thinke it a question to bee asked, of what manner the state of this worlde, and of the vngodly also, and the godlye shall bee after the iudgement? Lactance sayeth, that Christe shall bee among men, and rule them in most iuste gouernance, a thousand yeres after the iudgemēt: and hee addeth: then they which shal be alyue in their bodies, shal not dye, but shal encrease to an infinite multitude in the space of those thousande yeres. And their offspring shal be holy and acceptable vnto GOD: and they whiche shal bee raised from the deade, shall gouerne them that doe lyue, as theyr Iudges. But the Gentiles shall not bee vtterly decayed, but some shall bee lefte vnto the victorye of God, that they maye bee triumphed vppon by the iuste, and subdued vnto perpetuall bondage. Aboute that tyme, the Pryncе also of Deuills, whiche is the imaginer of al euils, shal bee bounde in chaynes, and shall bee in warde the thousande yeares of the heauenlye Kyngdom, when Iustice shal raigne in the worlde, bycause hee shall doe no mischefe agaynste the people of God. After whose commyng the Iuste shall bee gathered togyther oute of all the Earthe, and after the iudgement is done, there shall bee sette a holye Citie in the middes of the Earthe, wherein God hymselfe, the maker shal dwel wyth the iuste, bearing the rule & gouernance. Then that darkenesse shal bee taken away out of the worlde, wherewith the skye is ouerlayde and blinded, and the Mone shall receyue the clearenesse of the Sunne, and it shall not decraye anye more, and the Sunne shall bee made seuen times clearer than it now is. The earth shall open hir plenteye, and yeld most abundance of corne of it selfe, the rockes of the hilles shall sweate honny, wine shal runne down by streames, and riuers shall flowe with milke. The world it selfe shall be merry, and all ỳ nature of things shall reioyce, as ridde and deliuered from the dominion of euyll and wickednesse of mischiefe, and errours, beastes shall not be fedde in thys time with bloud, nor birdes wyth pray, but all things shal be quiet and peaceable. Lions and Calues shall stand togither at one racke: ỳ Wolfe shall not rayn vpon the sheepe: The Dogge shall not hunt. The Hawkes and Egles shall do no hurte to anye body. The infante shall playe wyth Serpentes: finally then those things shall be done whiche the Poets sayde were done in the golden dayes, when Saturne raigned, and a little after: Men shall liue a most quiet and plētifull life, and they shall reigne togyther wyth God, and the Kynges of the Gentiles shalll come wyth giftes and presents, to do worshippe and honor vnto ỳ great God, whose name shall bee reuerenced and celebrated amongst all nations which shal be vnder the Heauen, and Kynges whiche shall gouerne in the lande. Hereunto he addeth that, When the thousand yeares of the Golde worlde bee paste, the Deuill shall bee loose again,

agayne, and the Gentiles shall beseige the holy Citie, but that GOD shall ouerthrowe the wicked euen to the vttermost, and deliuer them vnto euerlasting punishmente, and shall turne the electe after the resurrection vnto the glorye of Aungels. Thys Lactance dothe talke of verye largely, but hée was not the fyrste that broughte in thys opinion of the thousande yeares, but hée followed it after Papias, Irenetus, Apollinarius, Tertullian and Victorius of Portiers, whyche notwithstanding, the reste of the fathers did reiecte.

Augustine sayth, that there shall be two Cities after the Resurrection.

Iugustine in hys Enchiridion vnto Laurence sayeth, that there shall bée two Cities after the resurrection and last Iudgemente, one of Chrystes, an other of the Deuils, one of the good, an other of the euil. Which thing how muche to the purpose, and in what sense, hée speaketh it, lette others iudge. There be some that doe make a question of the will, repentance, and paynes of the wicked after the iudgement. Whether that the punishmente whyche they shall suffer, shall neuer be slacked, and whether that there shall be anye testorement agayne of thys worlde. But in my iudgement, it maye be comforte ynough to a Christian man, if hée do assuredlye beléeue that to bée true whyche the Apostle dothe saye, that wée shall bée carried vp in ỳ cloudes to méete Christ in the ayre, and that so wée shall alwayes bée wyth the Lord: as for ỳ rest, let the good Christian man leaue it vnto the Prouidence of God.

Of the knowledge of God.

HItherto wée haue briefly, but yet as I hope not vnprofitably, in seuerall places touched those things, whiche we ought to beléeue, and most stedfastly to holde.

Of the { Nature, Sufficiencie, Omnipotécie, Will, Truth, Godnesse, Louingnesse, Mercy, Power, right and dominion, Iustice, Prouidence, Presence, Anger and Iudgements } Of God.

Now we muste orderlye procéede vnto those thinges, whiche are requisite to be in vs, as true faithfull, concerning godlinesse or godly lyfe, of whiche things we doe giue the fyrste place vnto the knowledge of God, and that not withoute reason, for as much as without the same, the reste can take no place in vs. For howe shall we be able to serue, call vppon, loue, and honor God in perfect faith, whome we knowe not? The ignorance of God, is the blindnesse of the minde, wheresoeuer the same rouleth, it is not possible, but that the whole life should be subiecte vnto all kindes kindes of errours. And yet there is almost no man, but thinketh that hée dothe knowe God, whereas in déede there be very fewe whiche do truely know hym, and a righte. The Prophet sayde: God is knowen in Iurie, and yet for all that God cryeth by Esay the Prophet, and sayeth: The Ore knew his owner, and the Asse the racke of his maister, but Israell knewe me not, and my people vnderstandeth not. And in Hieremie hée sayeth, My people be foolishe, they know me not: and in Osee: The spirit of fornication is amongst them, and they haue not knowē God. And Christ himselfe in John doth charge the Iewes, that they knew not God.

And in déede he sayeth in an other place: And the worlde knew not thée. But that is almuche lesse wonder, that the worlde being all sette vppon naughtinesse and blinde in all points and respectes, dothe not knowe God, than that the people of God, whyche was trayned vp by their fathers in the truthe, and nourished in the lawe and couenauntes of God, is accused of not knowing GOD, not once or twice, but so often by the Prophetes and Christe himselfe. Can we think that it is not possible, that the same whiche betided vnto the Israelites, maye befall vnto the moste parte of Christians also? And surely there is no smaller number of fleshly folke among vs, than was amongst the Israelites: of whome it may be truely saide, that they do not know God. Wherefore I thinke it expedient to note somewhat as shall séeme necessary, touching the true knowledge of God.

What things be requisite to the true knowledge of God.

THe true knowledge of God is such, that we muste passe many degrées before wé come vnto it: whereof Christ made mention himselfe saying: This is euerlasting life, to knowe thée the onely true God, and hym whome thou haste sente, Iesus Christe.

The first degree to knowe that there is a God.

1 First it is required of vs that we beyng voide of that impietie of them which do saye in their hartes, There is no God, muste know and confesse, that there is a God. The true knowlege of God indéede standeth not vpon this degrée, and yet without it mē can not clime to the higher things, & frō which they muste néedes be moste far off, which do deny ỳ there is any God. But of this pointe wée noted somewhat straight at the beginning, where wée begā to speake of God, in ỳ article, Whether ỳ there be a God.

VVho is the true God.

2 Secondly, we muste knowe also who is the true God, leaste that thoroughe the errour of Ethnickes, wée happen vppon anye that is not God: and how to come to this degrée, wée haue tolde in ỳ place before alleaged.

VVhat it is to be true God.

3 Thirdly, it is requisite, that wée doe knowe also what it is to be the true God: no man will yéelde himselfe vnto a Philistion, thoughe hée knowe the face of the Philistion, vnlesse that he do knowe withall, what it is to be a Philistion, so that he may vse him to his purpose and profyte as a Philistion. And in like case, though that a man doe knowe that there is a God, and knowe also that he is the creatour of heauen & earth, yet

yet for all that, vnlesse he doe knowe that he is the true God, he can not in all poinctes cleaue vnto hym as hee ought to do, with full hope and truste, as to the true God. But of this matter we haue noted also before in the place of God.

One God in essence, and three in person.

4 Fourthly, we muste knowe also, that he is the onely true God alone, one in essence, and three in person: of this vnitie of Gods essence and trinitie of persons, the misterie whereof was reuealed in Christe, we haue spoken sufficiently before, so that we nede not to repeate it agayne heere.

VVhat God is of nature.

5 Fiftly, it is requisite also that we do know what God is of nature: and we haue expounded this parte of the knowledge of God, in the beginning, and in the article Of the nature of God.

That God is the father of our Lord Iesus Christ.

6 Sixtely, it belongeth also to the true knowledge of God, to knowe that he is the father of oure Lord Iesus Christ, and that he sent him into the worlde, bycause of the salnation of man, to be a mediator, redeemer and sauioure, to saue all them whiche doe beleeue in him, and that he hathe adopted suche to bee hys sonnes and heyres of his kingdome. By thys knowledge of God we be sequestred from all other nations whiche bee straungers vnto Christ.

That he is also our God and father.

7 Seuenthly, though that the true knowledge of God doe rise by the foresaid degrees, yet notwithstanding it is requisite, that we doe not onely know generally that there is a God, and that he is the creator of ỹ worlde, preseruer of all, one and alone in essence, and three in person, good of nature, louing, iuste, &c. Father of oure Lorde Iesus Christe and of all faithfull, but wee muste knowe also, that he is God, and Father particularlye vnto each of vs, louing, merciful, and the moste assured sauioure: for vnlesse that we do acknowledge this in GOD, all the reste is but in vayne.

VVe must not only know god but serue and loue him also.

8 Eightly, this knowledge shall be profitable and effectuall, if wee do serue, obey, and loue him, whome we do acknowledge to be the only & true God, obeying him in all thinges, depending vpon him only in clere hope and truste, and regarding him aboue all things in Heauen and Earth. If a man lacke this, the saying of the Apostle is to be applyed vnto hym: They do confesse that they do know God, and denie him in their doynges.

Liuing, Tit. 1.

He that saith that he knoweth God, and kepeth not hys commaundemets, is a lyar, and there is no truth in him. In these degrees doth consiste the true knowledge of God, which if we loke for in them that doe most of all crake and boaste of the knowledge of God in these our dayes, I suppose you shall finde nothing lesse in them, than the same whiche they doe counterfaite in wordes and outward ceremonies.

Hovv men may come to the Knowledge of God.

Vnto any manner of knowledge there bee requisite these two things. One is, that the same thyng which is sought to be knowen, maye be knowen in deede: the other is, that he whiche woulde know, be so furnished, that he be able by capacitie of vnderstandyng to know that, whych he seketh to knowe. Vnlesse that these two poinctes doe concurre, there can be no knowledge of matters. For those matters whiche be so hydden and farre from oure iensles, that ther lieth no way vnto them, neither by thinking, saying, hearing, feeling, tasting, nor reasoning, they in deede can not be knowen. Much lesse those thinges can be knowen, whiche bee not at all, nor euer were in the nature of things, neyther shall be at any season. Agayne, vnlesse there bee capacitie of vnderstanding in hym whiche woulde knowe, whereby hee may be able to knowe what, and of what sort the same is which he doth see, heare, handle, smell, and taste, hee shall vnderstand and know nothing more than the beastes whyche doe lacke reason, no not in those thynges whiche be within the compasse of all oure senses, and be of themselues most manifest. What is of more vnderstanding next after God, than an Aungell? and yet for all that the Angels can not knowe the thoughtes of mans hearte, muche lesse the secretes of God, vnlesse that they be opened vnto them. For the Lord is the searcher of oure heartes, the depth of whiche is otherwise vnsearcheable. Againe: what is more clearer than the Sunne? and yet for all that, those things whiche haue not reason, are not able to knowe what the Sunne is, and what the course and vse of it is.

Two poinctes of ye capacitie of the knowledge of God.

If we do apply these things vnto the case of the knowledge of GOD, whereof we speake, I beseech you, is there anye thyng in Heauen or in Earth, that more truly is, and that is more bright and more present euery where, and fylling all things, than is God? Howe falleth it out then, that there is nothing lesse knowen, than he, whereas there lieth nothing more open to be knowen than hee? Be we not all, liue we not all, and moue we not all in him? doth not he giue man vnderstanding? And yet for all that, there be founde a number, which do lesse knowe God, than do the beastes, voyde of reason. But let vs leaue their blindnesse, and see howe the knowledge of God is bestowed vnto men.

There is generally giuen to a power of reasoning, whyche by God may be knowen of hys wvorkes.

Firste, there is giuen by God generally vnto all men, an ablenesse to reason, to vnderstande and to iudge, whereby they may gather, discerne and knowe thorough those thynges which they doe see and enioy in thys engine and creation of things, that there is a God, that is to saye, a certayne goodye Maieste, whose wysedome is so greate, whose might is so great, & whose godnesse is so greate, as was able at the beginning to make all these things which be sene, and after that they were made, to preserue, directe, and gouerne them: and of whome commeth all our life and necessarye nourishemente. So the Apostle sayeth: The wrathe of GOD is manifest from heauen against all wickednesse and vnrighteousnesse of men, which do cloke the truth in vnrighte, bycause that the same whyche maye bee knowne of God, is manyfeste in them, for God had made it open vnto thē. For these parts of him which be inuisible, are wel perceiued by the creation of the worlde, forasmuche as they be vnderstanded by his workes, and his euerlasting myght and Godheade also,

Rom. 1.

so that

so that they be without excuse: for asmuche as seing they knewe God, they dyd not glorifie hym as God, nor were thankefull, &c. thus sayeth he. Ergo God dothe not hide himselfe from menne, but doth open himselfe vnto them, for as muche as he maye be generally knowen of all, by the power of reason that is giuen them. God (sayeth he) did open vnto them, What? that (sayth he) which may be knowen of God. He meaneth, by the naturall vnderstanding giuen naturally vnto all, as though he did saye: As much as is possible to be knowen of God, by the naturall iudgement of all men, so much he hath opened vnto them. What is that? that truly, whiche can not be seene with eyes, but is to be conceyued through the vnderstanding of the minde. Man can not see god and his wisedome, might, and godhead, for all thinges belonging vnto his true godhead, be inuisible: then howe did he open these things vnto them? by the creation of the worlde (he saith) when they be vnderstanded and throughly perceyued by hys workes. So that by the consideration of the workes of God it is opened vnto men generally, that God which made the same, is wyse, mighty, &c.

God dothe not hyde himselfe from men.

That is the lyke matter also, whiche the Apostle saith of God in the Actes. Doubtlesse he left not him selfe without testimonie, doing good from Heauen, giuing raines and fruiteful seasons, filling their hearts with meate and mirth. And againe: God which made the worlde, and all things that be in it, he being the Lord of Heauen and of Earthe, dwelleth not in Temples builded by handes, nor is not serued by the handes of men, as nedyng any thing, whereas he giueth life, inspiratiō, breathing, and all thinges vnto all menne, and made all mankinde of one, to dwell vpon the whole face of the earth, limiting the certayne seasons and boundes of their dwellings, to seke God, so as they may chance to fele and fynde him, though hee be not farre off from eache of vs: for by him we liue, moue, and be, &c. So that the firste degree of the knowledge of God generally set forthe vnto all men, standeth in the consideration of the workes of God, whiche be deuided into three respects, by these three places of the Apostle, so that some be the workes of creation, done at the verye beginning of the worlde, some doe belong to the sowle of oure bodyes, and some doe concerne oure selues and our life.

Actes 14. & 17.

The Apostle did alleage these matters against the Gentiles whiche were Idolaters, and liued in this worlde without God, to shewe them, how that without all cause they despised the true God, they followed and serued false Gods, and how that this blindnesse of theyrs had no excuse at all: for bycause that the Godhead of the true God was declared by most manifest argumentes from the verye beginning of the worlde, whereby it myghte bee knowen that there is a God, and he none else but the same, whiche is the maker of all things, sauioure and gouernour, hauing wysedome, might, godnesse and iustice without all comparison, whiche is specially to bee serued, honored, loued and obeyed of all.

The blindnesse of Idolaters hath no excuse.

And for this cause all Idolaters be be wont al excuse, bicause ỳ wheras they might knowe the true God by so cleare a light of Gods workes, they had rather honour dumbe and deafe images of flockes and stones, or syluer, in kinde of hym, and fall downe before the workes of mens handes, than to fall downe before hym, which made both man and all the reste, by whome also they were made them selues, and in whome they lyue and be moued.

Men come to the knowledge of god specially by his worde.

The seconde meane to come to the knowledge of God, is by his worde, wherein he doth disclose his will vnto all men. First particularly vnto some onely, and next generally vnto all the nations of the whole worlde: particularly, vnto the Patriarches, and afterwardes to their aftercommers the Israelites, partly by appearing of Angels, partly by Moses, the Prophets, and by Christe hym selfe, whome the Apostle calleth the minister of circumcision, bycause that for his owne persone he was not sent, but onely vnto the lest shepe of the house of Israell. Vnto this kynde of saying doeth appertayne that which the Prophete singeth in the Psalme. Which sheweth out his word vnto Jacob, his iustices and iudgemēts vnto Israel. He hath not done the like vnto all nations, and he hath not opened his iudgementes vnto them. This manner of knowledge by the worde is of more choyce, then the same is by witnesse of his workes, bycause ỳ as by his works his Godhead, wisedome, and might is knowen, so by his worde his wil is also vnderstāded towardes men, and knowen, which knowledge saueth of some familiarnesse and loue. The might and Maiestie of a Prince may easely be knowen vnto all the inhabitantes of his Realme, but his will none doth knowe, but such vnto whom his worde is communicate. Wherefore the Prophete hath good reason to commende and auaunce this speciall fauour of gods worde graunted vnto Israel.

Psal. 147.

Generally.

But generally the will of God towardes mankinde is opened vnto all people and nations, by the worde of the preaching of the Gospell, the dispensation whereof was committed vnto the Apostles by the Lorde himselfe, saying: Go and teache all nations, and go into all the worlde, and preache the Gospell vnto all creatures, &c. This is the generall worde, the worde of saluation and life set forth vnto all, whereby the mysteries which haue bene always hidden of God, of the holy trinitie, of the incarnation of the worde, of ỳ redemption and reconciliation of mākinde, of the adoption into the children of God, which is by Christ, of the iustifying and glorifying of the faythfull, of the Spirit, of the reigne of Christ, and such other like, be expounded. Now let the godly person ponder with him selfe, howe much he ought to esteme the communion of this worde, if the Prophet could make so much of the worde of the lawe whereby no man is saued, as to saye, that he did not the like vnto any nation. May not he more iustly saye, Blessed be God, which doth denounce the worde of his grace vnto all nations, and the Gospell of his kingdome vnto all people? He hath not done so to Israell alone, but vnto al nations, & he hath shewed his onely begotte sonne vnto all? The mysteries of the grace of Christ are knowen neither by ỳ woꝛkes of God, neither by any particular woꝛde sent vnto Israel, but by the woꝛd of the Gospel set foꝛth vnto the whole woꝛld. And ỳ God of his speciall purpose gaue ỳ woꝛd of the lawe, wherein is conteined ỳ mysterie of death & anger, not vnto all nations, but vnto Israel only, a stiffe people and stubboꝛne: and the woꝛd of the Gospel wherein is conteined the woꝛd of saluation & life, not vnto the nation of the Iewes only, but generally vnto all the nations of the whole woꝛld, we haue declared in our Commentaries vpon the place befoꝛe rehearsed in the 147. Psalme.

The knowledge of God by the reuelation of the holy spirit.

The third way to attayne vnto the true knowledge of God, is of most choyse, and betideth the electes only. The same is by the special reuelation of the holy Spirit, wherby the heartes of the electes be lightened through the light of the truthe, so that they may knowe God ỳ Father, and Christ his sonne whom he sent foꝛ a Sauiour into this woꝛld. And by this reuelation the Father doth open & disclose his sonne, & the sonne his father. We do not seuer ster the same from the foolishnesse of the preaching of ỳ Gospel, by which it pleased God to saue the beleuers, and of which the Apostle repoꝛteth that it is the ministerie not of the killing letter, but of the quickening spirit. The hearing of the woꝛd is in deede of it selfe vayne & to no pꝛofite, vnlesse that there be ioyned vnto it the woꝛking of ỳ spirit which openeth and lighteth the heartes: but in the electes where the sounde of the woꝛd and the instincte of the Spirite doe meete, there is the vertue of God in the woꝛde to saluation of them which doe beleue, according vnto the example of the woman which solde purple. In lyke manner we must iudge also of the reading of the holy Scriptures, which is also then effectuall, when the same which is read in the letter, is written into the hearts by the Spirit of grace.

Mat.16.
Mat.11.
1.Cor.1.
2.Cor.3.

What the knowledge of God worketh in Man.

The knowledge of things is of that nature, that it woꝛketh ỳ contrary of ỳ which ignoꝛance doth.

What knowledge is.

Ignoꝛance maketh a man to wander and to erre in iudgement, wyll, and woꝛke. It iudgeth that which is true, to be false, and that which is false to be true, and that which is good and profitable, naught and noysome: and on the other syde, that which is naught and noysome, to be good and profytable.

By ignorance what doe erre both in iudgement, will and woꝛke.

Secondly, foꝛ as much as wee be so appoynted and ordeyned, that we will and desyre these things which be true, good and profitable, and contrarywyse, that wee wyll not but doe eschewe all such thyngs which wee iudge to be false, naught and noysome, it followeth, that when our iudgement erreth, than our wil erreth also: and al the appetite and desire which followeth the wil: and and so it falleth out, that in steede of true, good and profitable things, wee doe desyre those thyngs which be quite contrary.

What ignorance is and what on the contrary is knowledge of God.

Thyrdly, foꝛ as much as all our strengthe and powers, as farre as it is possible, doe serue our wyl, and bryng to effecte the same which it desyreth, howe can it be els, but that such thyngs as wee doe wyll, such wee woꝛke also? So ignoꝛaunce of things maketh mã to erre in all thynges, and so it doeth cause hym vnto many daungers, and at length cause hym vtterly away, vnlesse God saue hym. Knowledge doeth the contrarye, it frameth a right iudgement so that a mã neede not to mislike those thyngs which be good, true and profitable, foꝛ false, naught and noysome, oꝛ those that that be false, naught & noysome, foꝛ good and profitable, but to that a man maye directly, and truely iudge of all thynges.

Secondly, it doth frame the will also by the vpryghtnesse of iudgement to that point, that we wil not those things which be naught, nor mislyke those which be good. Thirdly, it doth consequently this good also, that we may eschewe the euill, and doe ỳ good. This doth the right knowledge of thynges woꝛke.

Now let vs apply these things, which we haue spoken of the knowledge of thynges in generall, vnto the speciall knowledge of God. What it woꝛketh in man, let vs gesse by the contrarie which groweth vpon the ignoꝛaunce of hym. If thou bee ignoꝛaunt that there is a GOD, thou art driuen by this ignoꝛaunce to saye in thy heaꝛte, There is no God, and so neuer to thynke of the seeking, feaꝛyng, oꝛ seruyng of God: yea, to esteeme all those thyngs which bee repoꝛted of God by wyse men, oꝛ all mẽ, to bee but fables and tales. This impietie, doeth the first degree of the ignoꝛaunce of GOD bꝛede. Ergo, in the contrarye, if thou doe know that there is a God, the same knowledge shall bꝛeede in thy heart an imagination to seeke, feare, serue and obey hym.

Secondly, albeit thou knowest that there is a God, and knowest not who he is, and whether there be one oꝛ manye, what shal this ignoꝛaunce make thee doe els, but to serue false Goddes in steede of the true, many in steede of one? So the Apostle sayeth: But than in deede beyng ignoꝛaunt of God, you serued them which be not of nature Goddes, by which woꝛdes it appeareth that this commeth by the ignoꝛaunce of God, that many and false Goddes be serued in steede of one and the true God. So that in the contrary, by the knowledge of God it falleth out, that neyther many, nor false, but one, and that the true God is serued.

Gal.4.

Thirdly, though a man do know the onely and true God, maker, Sauiour, and gouernour of all, and yet knowe not of what nature, disposition, and wyll hee is off towardes mankynde, and what hee doth loke foꝛ of them that do serue him, doth not this ignoꝛaunce make the man which doth seeke, feare, & serue him, to doe it vnoꝛderly and vnfitly, and so to fall into disordered vsage towardes him, into a blynde feare? to feare when it behoueth not, and when it behoueth, than not to feare, yea, and to fall into all kindes of false seruices alle, of which we haue spoken before, and so still see ouer many, and manifest examples in the Poperie? This ignoꝛaunce maketh men superstitious, and to repute thẽ selues iust of their to all? The mysteries of the grace of Christ are knowen neither by ỳ worckes of God, neither by any particular worde sent vnto Israel, but by the word of the Gospel set forth vnto the whole world. And ỳ God of his speciall purpose gaue ỳ word of the lawe, wherein is conteined ỳ mysterie of death & anger, not vnto all nations, but vnto Israel only, a stiffe people and stubborne: and the word of the Gospel wherein is conteined the word of saluation & life, not vnto the nation of the Iewes only, but generally vnto all the nations of the whole world, we haue declared in our Commentaries vpon the place before rehearsed in the 147. Psalme.

The knowledge of God by the reuelation of the holy spirit.

The third way to attayne vnto the true knowledge of God, is of most choyse, and betideth the electes only. The same is by the special reuelation of the holy Spirit, whereby the heartes of the electes be lightened through the light of the truthe, so that they may knowe God ỳ Father, and Christ his sonne whom he sent for a Sauiour into this worlde. And by this reuelation the Father doth open & disclose his sonne, & the sonne his father. We do not seuester the same from the foolishnesse of the preaching of ỳ Gospel, by which it pleased God to saue the beleuers, and of which the Apostle reporteth that it is the ministerie not of the killing letter, but of the quickening spirit. The hearing of the word is in deede of it selfe vayne & to no profite, vnlesse that there be ioyned vnto it the working of ỳ spirit which openeth and lighteth the heartes: but in the electes where the sounde of the word and the instinct of the

Matth.16.

Matth.11.

1.Cor.1.

2.Cor.3.

Spirite doe meete, there is the vertue of God in the worde to saluation of them which doe beleue, according vnto the example of the woman which solde purple. In lyke manner we must iudge also of the reading of the holy Scriptures, which is also then effectuall, when the same which is read in the letter, is written into the hearts by the Spirit of grace.

What the knowledge of God worketh in Man.

The knowledge of things is of that nature, that it worketh ỳ contrary of ỳ which ignorãce doth.

Ignorance maketh a man to wãder and to erre in iudgement, wyll, and worke. It iudgeth that which is true, to be false, and that which is false to be true, and that which is good and profitable, naught and noysome: and on the other syde, that which is naught and noysome, to be good and profytable.

Secondly, for as much as we be so appointed and ordeyned, that we will and desyre those things which be true, good and profitable, and contrarywyse, that we wyll not but doe eschewe all such thyngs which we iudge to be false, naught and noysome, it followeth, that when our iudgement erreth, than our wil erreth also: and al the appetite and desire which followeth the wil: and and so it falleth out, that in stede of true, good and profitable things, we doe desyre those thyngs which be quite contrary.

Thyrdly. for as much as all our strengthe and powers, as farre as it is possible, doe serue our wyl, and bryng to effecte the same which it desyreth, howe can it be els, but that such thyngs as we doe wyll, such we worke also? So ignorãce of things maketh mã to erre in all thynges, and so it doeth cause hym into many daungers, and at length cause hym vtterly away, vnlesse God saue hym. Knowledge doeth the contrarye, it frameth a right iudgement so that a mã neede not to mislike those thyngs which be good, true and profitable, for false, naught and noysome, or those that that be false, naught & noysome, for good and profitable, but to that a man maye directly, and truely iudge of all thynges.

Secondly, it doth frame the will also by the vprightnesse of iudgement to that point, that we wil not those things which be naught, nor mislyke those which be good. Thirdly, it doth consequently thys good also, that we may eschewe the euill, and doe ỳ good. This doth the right knowledge of thynges worke.

Now let vs apply these things, which we haue spoken of the knowledge of thyngs in generall, vnto the speciall knowledge of God. What it worketh in man, let vs gesse by the contrarie which groweth vpon the ignorãce of hym. If thou bee ignorãt that there is a GOD, thou art driuen by this ignorãce to saye in thy hearte, There is no God, and so neuer to thynke of the seekyng, fearyng, or seruyng of God: yea, to esteeme all those thyngs which bee reported of God by wyse men, or all mẽ, to bee but fables and tales. This impietie, doeth the first degree of the ignorãce of GOD bryede. Ergo, in the contrarye, if thou doe know that there is a God, the same knowledge shall breede in thy heart an imagination to seeke, feare, serue and obey hym.

Secondly, albeit thou knowest that there is a God, and knowest not who he is, and whether there be one or manye, what shal this ignorãce make thee doe els, but to serue false Goddes in steede of the true, many in steede of one? So the Apostle sayeth: But than in deede beyng ignorãnt of God, you serued them which be not of nature Goddes, by which wordes it appeareth that this commeth by the ignorãce of God, that many and false Goddes be serued in steede of one and the true God. So that in the contrary, by the knowledge of God it falleth out, that neyther many, nor false, but one, and that the true God is serued. Gal.4.

Thirdly, though a man do know the onely and true God, maker, Sauiour, and gouernour of all, and yet knowe not of what nature, disposition, and wyll hee is off towardes mankynde, and what hee doth loke for of them that do serue him, doth not this ignorãnce make the man which doth seeke, feare, & serue him, to doe it vnsurely and vnstedily, and so to fall into disordered vsage towardes him, into a blynde feare? to feare when it behoueth not, and when it behoueth, than not to feare, yea, and to fall into all kindes of false seruices alle, of which we haue spoken before, and so still se ouer many, and manifest examples in the Poperie? This ignorãnce maketh men superstitious, and to repute thẽ selues iust of their

Rom.10.

Ephesi.4.

An obiectiō

How it cōmeth to pas that many which do knowe God do not serue God.

workes as the Apostle reporteth of the Iewes, saying: They which be ignorant of the iustice of God, and seke to establish their own righteousnesse, be not subiect vnto the iustice of God. Finally, it maketh them voyde from the lyfe of God, as we may se to the Ephesians, & maketh them persecutours also of the truthe of God and of the true faithfull: which betided also in Paule, as he doth testifie of himself, that he was a persecutour, violent and blasphemous, through ignorance. It followeth therefore, that the contrarie hereof is done by the knowledge of God, whereby it is not onely knowen that there is a God, and who he is, but also of what disposition and will he is towards men, and what he would haue of them. He which hath this knowledge will seke hym, feare hym, & serue him, and obeye him, not disorderly, but as it becommeth. This knowledge of God many had, as Nycodemus, the Centurion, and the Eunuche of the Quene Candace, &c.

But you will saye, You maye finde many a mā which you can not saye, but that they dee knowe God, yea, in so much that they be not ignorant of his will, and yet for all that they do neyther feare nor serue him. Howe then doeth the knowledge of God bring a man to this point, y he doth truely seke, serue, feare and obeye God?

I answere: There be two respectes in the knowledge of God, touching this case. There is one of the nature, and an other of the effect thereof. If you waye the nature of the knowledge of God, in that respect it is such, that it maketh men fearefull, studious, and serueceable of God, in that that it doth minister & giue occasions to make them suche. But if you haue a respecte to the effecte, according vnto that it worketh not the same in al, which we speake of, and that not by the fault of the thing, but of them which be the vsers of it. The Prophets singeth of the Lordes lawe, that it doth turne mens soules. It doth so, bycause it doth yelde occasions of turning. Yet it doth it not in all, bycause it is hyndered by the hardenesse of heart of them which should receiue it. The Sunne of his nature is such, that it giueth lighte to the eyes, but it giueth not lighte to the eyes of the blynde, through theirs and not his faulte, and yet we may well attribute vnto him the power to giue light. The Apostle doth touche them, which whereas they knewe God, yet they dyd not glorifie him as God, and whereas they knewe the iustice of God, that the wrongdoers, malicious and vniust, be worthy to die, yet they dyd not onely committe all manner of naughtinesse, but did consent also to them that did the same. In this kinde of mē the knowledge of God doth nothing els, but make them without excuse, and aggrauate their naughtinesse, and to witnesse y they be reprobate, and giuen ouer to a reprobate & wicked vnderstanding.

Fourthly, there remayneth the ignorance of Christ, which cōmeth not of lacke of hearing, but of vnbeliefe. This ignorance, vnlesse a man be lightened by the spirite of Christ, it maketh a man subiect vnto iudgement, albeit he doe other-

Iohn.17.

Psalm.19

Rom.1.

V What ignorance and what knowledge of Christ hurteth vnto saluation.

true God and his will, and to the vtter shewe liue religiously: on the contrary parte, the knowledge of Christ which commeth of faith, such as Peter confessed, saying: And we do beleue and knowe, that thou art Christ the sonne of the liuing God, doth acquite men from iudgement, and giueth euerlasting lyfe. This is euerlasting lyfe, that men maye know thee the onely true God, and him whom thou haste sent, Iesus Christ. Of which wordes se our Commentaries vpon John. And thus much touching the efficacie of the knowledge of God.

That the knowledge of God is imperfect in this lyfe.

Like as in all other things ther is no perfection of man, so it is also in y knowledge of god & godly matters, which is not perfect in any man, as long as we do liue in this worlde. Hereof may be giuen a good reason & witnesse also out of y writinges of the Apostles. But what ned we any reasons & testimonies of scriptures, in a matter so manifest & out of all doubt? And yet for all y, we will do more herein than nedeth, & set forth some reasōs for this matter, and after that the testimonie also of the Apostle.

The first reason is vpon y consideration of this present lyfe, the condition wherof is such, that it is not able to receiue perfection, in so much y you can shew me nothing therin perfect, neither touching the worlde & mens matters, nor yet godly nor heauenly.

The second may be thus considered: This present life, as cōcerning

Hebre 11.

1. Cor. 13. The testimoni of the Apostle that the knowlege of God is vnperfect in this life.

But let vs se the testimony of the Apostle, which we doe reade in the first Epistle to the Corinthians in thys wyse. We doe know in part and prophecy in part, notwythstandyng when that commeth which is perfect, than that which is in part, shall be vanquished. When I was a child, I talked like a child, I iudged lyke a chylde, & thought like a childe: but when I came to be a man, I wyped away the chyldish toies, for we do see now onely through a glasse in a dark speaking, but then we shall se face to face: now we do know in part, but than I shall know, lyke as I am knowen. Thus saith ỳ Apostle: by which wordes he doth cut of the hautenesse & arrogancy of them, whych were so puffed vp vpon some slender knowlege of God, that they had no regarde of charitie at all. So he sayth of knowledge, that it shall be wyped away, meaning of that knowledge which is gotten by hearing and reuelation in this lyfe, which shall surely cease in the worlde to come, as appointed for this present lyfe onely. Moreouer, to expresse the imperfection therof, he sayth. We doe know in part. It is not full and perfect, which is onely in part. In that which is in part, there be yet lacking those thinges which are requisite to the making vp of the fulnesse of the whole. And he addeth: But when that cõmeth once which is perfect, then the same which is in part, shall be vainquished. Ergo the time of perfectiõ is not yet come, but is looked for to come. What time (saith he) I was a child, I talked, I iudged I thought as a child. but whẽ I was made a man, I put away al childish touches. Ye doth declare his meaning by a most familiar and mete similitude: he compareth our present lyfe vnto childhode, as concerning the knowledge of godly matters: and the life to come, vnto mans age. The knowledge of childhood hath many imperfectiõs, which be reformed by mans yeares. So it fareth also with our knowledge in this present life, which is childish & imperfect, and reformed by the perfection to come. And yet he speaketh more plainely. For now (saith he) we doe se through a glasse in a figure, but then we shall se face to face. Those thinges which be by a glasse & a figure, are seene but dimly, and knowen imperfectly. So it fareth by the knowledge of God in this life, for it is reserued clere and perfect til the world to come, where we shall se God face to face, & vpon sight perfectly know him, and enioy most full felicitie & happines. So ỳ by the consideratiõ hereof it appeareth sufficiently, that no man hath the perfect knowledge of god in this life, but as it were childish and in part, dimme and vnperfect. And thus much for the knowledge of God.

Of Hope.

After the knowledge of god which is by faith, ther followeth Hope, loue, patience, inuocatiõ & feare of god, obedience, & such other like, which doe belong vnto true godlinesse, wherfore like as in the matters before we we haue noted those things, which a godly person ought to consider in God, and to conceiue by the knowledge of him: so I haue thought it good in these matters hereafter to speake of those things, which do follow in the knowledge of God in vs, & without the which true godlinesse can take no place. For the knowledge of those thinges that be false, naught & noisome, for things which wer haue recited before of God, can doe vs any good, vnlesse that we doe depende vpon him in sincere faith, hope, charitie, patience, inuocation, reuerence, and obedience. Forasmuch, as of true faith we haue said our minde before in a place alone, as we haue thought sufficiently, nowe we will speake what we thinke good to be noted touching Hope.

What Hope is.

We do not seke here for the sence or vnderstanding of the word, which is right well knowen: for who knoweth not what it is to hope, & whether ỳ hope be of things past, present, or to come? So that to speake thereof were as much as to seke a knot in a rush. I know that ỳ latyn men somtimes vse ỳ word of hoping, of a thing present, yea & past also, as if a man should saye I hope thou doest know, howe this matter doth wery me. I hope that I haue sufficiently answered in all pointes the whole of that, which I am accused off. But in such manner of speaches to hope, is take for to beleue, to suppose and thynke, which is not properly in deede to hope. But let vs leaue this geare vnto Grammarians. When we do in this place seke what hope is. We do seke of the hope of christian mẽ, what & of what maner it is. Neyther doe we meane to speake of any other, vnles it be by occasiõ, and that briefly.

VVhat is hope generally.

They doe define hope to be an expectation of things to come, This definitiõ is generall, taking place as well in the children of this world, as also in Christian men: & the same is generall, of which the Apostle speaketh to the Romanes: Hope which is seene, is no hope. For why should any man hope for that which he seth? But if we do hope vpon that which we see not, we doe abyde it through patyence: and yet for all that he doth apply it vnto the specyall hope of Christian men, in that he doth saye before, and not onely they, but we our selues also, hauing the first fruites of the spyrite, do wayle wythin our selues, looking and hoping for the adoptyon of the children of God, the redemption of our body. For by hope we be saued. Whereby we do perceiue, that it doth appertayne to ỳ hope of Christian men, to looke for the delyuery of our bodyes, which is to come by the resurrection and glorifying of the children of God. This expectation and looking for, is a percell therof, and in case you will comprise it whole in a definition, you can not doe it more fully, and certainely, than to saye, that ỳ hope of Christian men is the assured and vnmoueable expectatyon of those thyngs which be promysed vs in Christ, wherof nothing doth appeare in thys lyfe, but all shal be gyuen hereafter in ỳ world to come. At the returne of our Sauyour, to deliuer vs, and to take

Rom. 8.

The hope of Christian men.

ys out of the middes of the euill: ẏ rising againe of our bodies, and glorifying, life, saluation, and felicitie euerlasting, ẏ felowship of Angels, yea, of Christ himselfe, the perfect sight and knowledge of God: besides that which neither eye hath seene, nor eare hath heard, nor the heart of man can conceiue, which is prouided for the electes.

There be many things in this life also to serue the hope of Christian men: as, that God wil not forsake them which doe hope in him, wherefore he is called in ẏ Psalme,
The sauiour of thē which do hope ypō him, for there remaineth a promisse thereof in the saying of God:
Call vpon me in the day of trouble and I will deliuer thee. And that he will not suffer vs to be tempted aboue that our strength is able to sustaine, and other such like. But in case a man do consider the qualitie of Christian religion, as it hath the felicitie to come for an ende and respect thereof, so the hope of Christiā men is properly the same, whereby the goodnesse of the life to come, promised in Christ, is hoped vpon: so that without this hope we shoulde be more miserable than any, forasmuch as our religion doth least of all others, set by the commodities of this lyfe, but doth direct it self wholy to the life to come.

Psalm. 17.

From whence the Hope of Christian men commeth.

Hope of deserues

MEn doe by iudgemēt of reason, attribute hope vnto merites: & the worlde goeth so with men, that he which deserueth nothing, hopeth but for litle, & he which hath deserued euill, looketh for nothing, but he which hath deserued well, looketh of ryght to be as well rewarded. So is our prouerbe, As I deserue, so I desyre. And it is the common course of the worlde, where a man shall seldome finde a good tourne done without deserte, and so there is no hope but vpon deseruing. But this doth euilfauouredly agree with Christian religion, notwithstanding that the maister of the sentences applying himselfe vnto this maner of opinion, sayeth: That to truste for any thing without desert, it may be called not hope, but presumption. Those kynde of men trauayled in the matter belonging vnto our saluation, more vpon the dyft of mans reason than of the holy Scriptures, not regarding ẏ they did so muche decay frō the glorie of Gods grace, as they did attribute vnto our merites. But of merites we haue spoken in a place alone before.

But let vs leaue the worldly hope, & consider the Christian hope, of whence the same is breddc in the heart of a Christian man. Of our merites it can not come: for the good things to come, which we doe hope vpon, be of more waight than that they may be chalenged for our desertes. The Apostle sayth, that euerlasting life is the gift of God: Ergo, it commeth not of merites. If it come not by merites, thē certainly there can be no hope neither in merites. Wherof doth it come then: The Christian hope is breddc of Faith, and the knowledge of God. For bycause we do know that God is true, and doe credite his promises, it falleth out that ẏ same which

The minde of the sentences. Li. 3. Dist.

Christian hope commeth of faith and knowledge

we

we credite and beleeue in faith, that we doe looke for also with a faste and firme hope. There is an example hereof set forth vnto vs in Abraham, where the Apostle sayeth, that he beleeued in hope against hope, bycause he knewe that God is so mighty, that he is able to performe whatsoeuer he promiseth. He ioyneth together faith, knowledge, and hope. Faith commeth not of hope, like as knowledge also doth not come of hope: but hope is bred of the faith of the promises & knowledge of the might of God. Abrahā dyd beleue the promises of god, and knew ẏ god was able to performe whatsoeuer he had promised. And therfore he hoped that it wold come to passe, doubting at it nothing at all, though the course of nature wer against it. But of this matter we haue sayde some thing in the place of Faith. Doeth not the Prophet whereas he sayth, They shall hope vpon thee, O Lord, which haue knowen thy name, for that thou doest not forsake thē, which do seeke thee. Manifestly ynough declare, ẏ hope commeth of the knowledge of God: In case he had sayde: They shall hope vpon thee, which haue deserued well of thee, bicause thou doest not forsake them, which haue well deserued of thee, the Scholemen might haue had some ground of their opinion, in that that they doe say, that hope without desert, is not hope, but presumption.

But against that which we do say, that hope commeth of the faith and knowledge of God, it semeth thei may obiect ẏ which is read to ẏ Romains in this wise. And not only this, but we doe glorie also in our troubles, knowing that trouble bredeth patience, & patience proofe, and proofe bringeth hope, & hope confoundeth not. By which wordes the Apostle seemeth to deriue the beginning of hope not from Faith & the knowledge of god, but from ẏ proofe which ẏ patience & suffring of troubles doth breede, as though that the beginning of hope came therof, and that there were no hope in ẏ heart of the beleuer, before that he came vnto this proofe. But forasmuch as it is not possible, that the heart of him which is afflicted and troubled for Christ, should be faithfull without hope, whyles that he is in the very temptation and sufferance of his troubles the beginning of hope can not come of proofe. Wherefore that which the Apostle sayeth. And proofe breedeth hope, is to be vnderstāded not of the beginning, but rather of the encrease of hope. And the worde κατεργαζεται, which the Apostle vseth, is not taken in the same sense, to be as much to say as breedeth, and so to signifie the beginning of the hope, but it is as much to say, as it maketh vp and perfecteth. For the Apostle doth meane, that it is so farre wyde, that troubles layde vpon men for Christes sake, should decay the hope of the glorie of Gods Children, that they do inforce it the more, and make it the more firme, and fast thereby. So that if you doe seeke the beginning of hope, looke vnto faith & the knowledge of God: but if you seeke for the encrease and confirmation thereof, than doth this serue which the Apostle speaketh of in this place.

Whereof Hope is nourished and confirmed.

FOrasmuch as hope is of things inuisible & to come, not of visible and present, it falleth out, that oftētimes the heartes of thē which liue in hope, be sore assaulted, & their hope so trauailed, that they nede aide and strength, whereby it may be cherished & encouraged, least it do vtterly decay, yea, the very tarying in the differring of those things which we do hope vpon, is so troublesome and lothsome, that though there be ioyned no temptation at al vnto it, it is alone sufficient to driue any hope (though it be neuer so great) vnto desperation, vnlesse it be vpholde by God. This Salomon ment when he said, the hope which is deferred and prolonged, doth afflict the soule. And who can worthely way, how great a drift of temptations of the aduersarie doth assaile the naked hope, depending vpō God only? Doth not ỳ whole course of worldly matters, forasmuch as they do wayte & gape for things present, & not things to come, & do daily represent to ỳ eyes of them which do liue in hope, sundry new deuises & sightes, and doth mocke & repute for foolishnesse, the hope of them which do folow ỳ good things not present, but to come? The saying of the children of this world is: Giue me to day, & take you to morowe. If you cōsider more these things which do betide to the godly in this world, they be of that sorte, that they seme to be very strange, for the condition of them which be the heires of true saluation & felicitie: so that of this also there may rise much temptation to the tottering and trauailed hope. Take with all the vniuersall contradiction of ỳ wicked wherby the Christian hope is impugned, and made subiect vnto great persecutions, & condemned of vngodlinesse. The Apostle maketh mention of this, saying: For herein we do trauaile and suffer rebukes, that we do hope in the liuing God, which is the Sauiour of all men, & specially of the faithfull. In dede it is a heauy burden to beare the contrary saying of the wicked: but that is more heauy & sore, that the Deuill stirreth yet sharper persecution from the church of the malignants, and the conspiracy of carnall Christians against the faith & hope of ỳ true Christian man, as though that he had plainely denied Christ in the abhorring of the calfes of Dan and Bethel, with all their Idolatours, & in seruing & worshipping the true God, not according to the decrees of Ieroboam of Rome, but according vnto the word of his onely maister & sauiour Christ. Here they crie out vpon him, heretick, schismatick, runnagate, wicked enemy & traytour ta the church, & not onely his body is condēned to the fire, but his soule also is cursed and banned to the deuil and the pitte of hel. And this so great sharpenesse of the counterfait Christians is coated with the name and colour of religion of ỳ church, & of the zeale of god. And who perceiueth not, how great aides & staies of gods grace we nede to haue to kepe the hope of the true Christian man whole and sounde, and not to fette a payate by the iudgement and cōdemnation of the catholike Christians (as they terme themselues) against hym, not to swarue anye thing therefore from the truthe.

1. Thes.

VVhich vvayes the Christian hope is assaulted.

Who doth not see what great helps and ratifyings of Gods grace we haue nede off, specially if we doe cōsider the weakenesse of our flesh, ready to mistrust, and dispayre, and the vnderstāding of our owne sinns and vnworthinesse, according vnto the which, we do esteme our selues as worms and the refuse and castawayes of ỳ people, the very shame and filth of all men. To stand stedye in assured hope to all this wee nede to haue not the strength of men, but the vertue & might of god.

Let vs see therefore wherby the hope of a christian man is nourished and strengthened. First it is a cleere case, that both Hope and Fayth be the speciall giftes of God. So that the nourishment thereof doth come specially from God, in as much as he which gaue vs the hope, doth nourish also and confirme the same in our hartes. God doth not forsake his gyftes, as we doe reade of the Distryge in Iob, whiche departeth and leaueth his egges in the dust of the grounde: and careth not for them, whether that they be saued or do perishe. But hee doth nurythe, encrease, and preserue also that which he hath once giuen, and this he doth by the operatyon of the holy Spirite, whereby hee doth cherishe, fede, defende, and strengthen both our faith and hope in the hartes of the electes. For he knoweth that this is the shote anker of our saluatiō, and ỳ the diuell doth endeauour himselfe to breake the Cable holde thereof, and therefore he doth fasten & make it tough by hys grace and vertue, so that hee doth preserue the same by his ayde and strength, which coulde not bee wrought by al our power & might.

Secondly, the partie which is in hope when he feleth the strength of temptation, he fleeth immediatly by prayer vnto his Lorde God earnestly requesting to bee preserued, that he be not ouercome by temptations. So the lorde warned hys Disciples in the garden, when the power of darkenesse was at hand, saying: Pray that you enter not into temptation. In dede the Spirite is ready, but the flesh is weake. And in lords prayer we be taught by his owne informatiō to say: And leade vs not into temptation, but deliuer vs from euil. There be many formes of such prayers in ỳ psalmes of Dauid, in which is seen how ỳ Prophet sought cōfort & strength to his hope, by praying and singing.

Thirdly, the Fayth of gods promises & the knowledge of the truth, and might of God, do minister much helpe and strength to the trauailing hope. Whereof there is an example set forth by Abraham: of which we made mention before. The hope of thinges to come is nourished by the Pythe of the same Fayth which bred it, and the strength of the Fayth is made ỳ strength of ỳ hope. Augustine in his booke of meditations writteth of the confirmation of his hope, in this sorte. Wher be thee things which do strēgthen and confirme my hart, that no lacke of defertes, no consideration of my owne basenesse, no regarde of the heauenly blessednesse can thrust me downe from the high expectation of my hope. Why soule is fast rooted therein. And wilt thou knowe what the matter is? I do wayte & consider thee points in which my Faith.

Rom. 4.

Augustine lib. Meditationum, cap. 14.

whole hope doth consist. That is to wit, the loue of adoption, the truth of promise, and the power to performe. Now let my folish imagination murmure as much as it lyst, and say. What art thou? or, how great a glory is this? or, by what deserts dorst thou hope to obtaine this thing? and I wil boldely answere: I know whom I haue beleued, and I am assured that God hath adopted me in exceeding great loue, and that he is true in his promise, and able in performance, for he is able to doe what he will. This saith Augustine.

Patience of afflictions.

Rom. 5

Fourthly, the very sufferaunce also of afflictions wherewith the Christian man is trauailed and tried, doth make hope lusty & stronge, as appeareth by the place of the Apostle to the Romaines, which we expounded before. And on the contrary, impatience doth decay that hope that is, and maketh it vnprofitable.

The example of the godly persons.

Fiftly, the examples also of godly persons, which haue holden on their hope fast and sure in all kinde of temptations and troubles, euen till the very ende, and haue receiued the crowne of life, may profit much to the cherishing and establishing of our hope. Such as the Apostle reckeneth vp of the Fathers in his Epistle to ỹ Ebrewes. And addeth straight at the beginning of the twelfth Chapter: Therefore seing that we haue so great a number of witnesses, let vs shake off all burden of sinne, which sticketh fast vnto vs, & by sufferaunce let vs runne the race appointed vs. And to this purpose the consideration of our heade and sauiour Iesus Christe shall much helpe vs, the example of whom the Apostle doth also set forth in the place before aleadged saying: Loking to the captayne of our fayth, and perfourmer thereof Iesus, who hauing ioye before him: suffred the death of the Crosse, not passing for the rebuke and shame thereof, and sitteth at the right hande of the throne of God. And ponder with your selues that he suffered sinners to worke this spite, and vilanous wordes against him, to the intent that you should not be wery and faint harted. There be yet many thinges, which according vnto ỹ diuersitie of ỹ parties that be in hope, and of ỹ circumstances, may sundry wise succour and stay the wrestling & wauering hope: but these thinges which we haue rehearsed be such, ỹ they may generally serue for all.

What the vertue of Hope is.

Heb. 11.

THere is a hope of the wicked, which Salomon saith shall decay. There is the Hipocrits hope when the craftie conueiour hopeth to deceiue a man by a lye, to worke what he will: and that this can not stand neither, wee doe read in Iob. There is a hope of men also, which either reason, or the appetite of the flesh do breade, which is wont to be most vaine. The same Pindarus and Plato doe call, waking mens dreames. We meane none of these, when we doe speake of the vertue of hope, but of ỹ true hope of Christiã men, which as it is grounded vpõ a most fast foundation, so it can not faile. The efficacie & effect of this, is paineful and wonderfull

First of all, ỹ same which Quintilian speaketh generally of hope, that hope maketh the will, is most truely accomplished in this hope of ours. For how should not my hope make a wil and purpose, seing that a vayne hope doth make a man to wyll and purpose that, which els he neuer would doe specially, if he knewe the issue therof before. The hope of recouery of health, maketh the Phisition to haue a will to cure, and the patient to haue a will to take his medicine. Hope of gayne, breedeth a will in some to occupie marchandise, and in some it breedeth a will to goe a warrefare: and shal the hope of true saluation and of euerlasting lyfe, be voyde in a Christian man, and not breede the will to doe those thinges which doe helpe, and be necessaryly required to attaine to so great good things?

Secondly, Hope doth not onely frame the will, but doth allure the mynde also of hym which is in hope, to trauaile and attempte the matter that he may compasse his purpose by, for very reason doth tell vs, that by idle and sluggishe hope, there is no good done. Therefore Socrates sayd in a place: Neyther the wife without the husband, nor good hope without labours, doth breede any thing that is profitable. So the hope of the fruite causeth the husbandman to till, plowe, sow, and harrowe his lande: and hope of victorie, allureth ỹ souldier to fight manfully. And this is done in things of vncertaintie, where the issue is oftentimes not correspondent to the toyling and careful hope, but rather falleth out quite contrarie. What moued Alfonsus Vives the Spaniarde in the yeare of our Lord, 1548. to approche to Constance by sicknes, which was at that time a free cite of the Empyre, but that he hoped to winne it by assault, and vpon that hope he attempted as much as could be wrought by slight and strength: But what became of him? his hope was not onely vayne, but daungerous also to the destroure. For was the first man himselfe at the first enterprise that was slaine with a gonne. These chaunces happen among men daily. Then why should not the hope of a Christian man enterprise to do and trauaile in these things which becometh a faithfull man for the profession of his religiõ, & maketh him to attaine his purpose?

Hope flatteth the workeman in his worke.

Thirdly, it is the worke of hope also, to kepe and stay the workeman in his worke: and desperation doth the contrarie, which as sone as it doth but slightly assaile the mynde of the man, it putteth into hym a fancie to forsake his worke. But as long as the fast hope doth continue, it suffereth not the workman to forsake the worke which he hath begonne. So the fastnesse of hope maketh vp the worke. For like as the hope to gaine riches & welth, kepeth the marchant man in traffike of marchandise, so the hope of ỹ felicitie to come, kepeth the Christiã man in the study of godlinesse.

Gala. 5.

Hope maketh loue effectuall and confirmeth patience and maketh the minde free from corruption.

Fourthly, like as faith is effectuall by loue, so it is made effectual also by hope, wtout which it should be vtterly voyde & dead. For what shall it loke for of those thinges which he beleueth shall come, if it lacke hope of them to come?

Fiftly, it doth no lesse establishe patience in his holde, & maketh hir inuincible, when we be strengthened by hope, to beare all aduersitye constantly for the truth of God, thē it is also strengthened by patience & proofe. So hope and patience do by an entercourse of aide, one helpe the other, & the one doth strengthen and vnderset the other, in contention of godlinesse & continuall troubles.

Rom. 5.

Thirdly, it maketh ỳ mynde of him which is in hope, quiet in the middest of his troubles, which no counsell of mans wisedome is able to worke, but doth els rather disquiet ỳ tranuiled conscience thā appease it.

Fourthly, vpon the certentie of Gods promises, it maketh vs safe from confusion. So the Apostle witnesseth, hope maketh not men ashamed. The hope of the world is so fond & vaine ỳ it doth daily shame hir dearlings.

Eightly, is that at length bred a ioye and reioicemēt, what time we shal attcine in deed vnto those thigs which we do hope and quietly loke for, so the Prophet said: They went out weeping, and cast their seed, but they shal returne home againe with reioising, bringing home their trusses and armefulls. For that saying shall surely be fulfilled: They shall al reioice which do hope vpon him. They shall ioy for euermore, &c. Thus much we haue thought good to touch briefly of ỳ efficacy & vse of hope, the vertue & strength whereof no man is able worthelye to expresse.

1 Whome the efficacy of Hope is vnto.

But some man will say, This efficacie which thou dost attribute vnto ỳ hope of Christiā mē, is neuer found at al in most part of thē. I answer, The Christian hope is ỳ hope of the elect and true Christian mē, & the elect & true Christians be ouer few in nūber, to make vp this huge multitude which thei cal Catholike. Moreouer as ỳ is the true Christiā faith, so that is the true Christian hope also, which commeth not of mans ordinaunce & Catholike or vniuersal custome, or of ỳ cuilwart professiō of religion, neither is vain & dead, but which is effectual & liuely, comming of the speciall gift of God. The most part of Christian men do professe, ỳ they do beleue as they haue bene taught from their youth, & as thei do hear ỳ they must hope for life euerlasting, so they do conceiue & faishiō themselues a hope which is rather an opinion of hope, thā hope in deed. But wāll they do not compasse by ỳ hope any will, much lesse worke of true Godlinesse. But we meane not of this but of the true hope of true Christian mē, which doth in euery behalfe worke those thinges which we haue rehearsed, in some more, and in some lesse, according vnto the measure of the giuing of Christ.

What true Hope is able to doe with God in this lyfe.

The hope of Godly persons is so much cōmended by certeine places of the holy Scripture, in that that they do wholy depēd vpō him, ỳ they be for ỳ same reported to be blessed, as in the Psalmes. Blessed is the man which hopeth vpon thē. And in the Prouerbes. He is blessed which hoped vpon the Lord. And in the xl. Psalme. Blessed is the man, whose hope is in the name of the Lord.

Ther-

Therefore it shall not be out of the way, to seeke the cause of this blessednesse, for hope is not such a matter of it selfe, that it maketh hym blessed which is in hope, but rather maketh hym miserable, in that that it doth torment the mynde, whiles it is alwayes in expectation, as Salomon sayth. After the iudgement of reason, it is a happier matter to possesse the present, and enioy things already gotten, then to hope & looke for things to come, specially such things which be in the inritditiō of an other mē, so that an other may either giue, or withholde that at his owne will, which thou hopest vpon. Therefore it behoueth, ỳ some reason be sought of some other ground, why ỳ scripture doth cal him blessed, which hopeth vpon the Lord, forasmuch as this blessednesse is not to be attributed neither to the hope, neither vnto him which hopeth, so that of necessitie it must come of God.

Iud. 16.

Hereof the Scriptures doe testifie as often as they do say of God, ỳ he is well pleased with them which do hope vpō his mercy, as the Prophete sayeth. And, that he is good vnto them which do trust vpō him. And what fauour, grace, and benefites can they lacke, which do well please him, and feele of his goodnesse? Is not that true blessednesse, whē a man pleaseth God, & findeth him in al things fauourable & louing? How can he but haue mercy vpon them, which do hope vpon him, which doe please him, whome he willeth well vnto, yea, whom he doth specially regarde & esteem? Doth not the Prophet sing: The scourge of the sinner is great, but mercy shall compasse him which trusteth in ỳ Lord? And againe, Lo, the eyes of the Lord be vpon them which do feare him, and vpon them which do hope vpon his mercy. He doth not say simply, He hath mercy vpon thē which do hope vpon him, but that mercy doth compasse him in, which doth hope vpon him, and his eyes be fastened vpō them, which do trust in his mercy. The Prophet could not haue had more manifestly expressed the care & good will of God towards thē which do hope vpon him. Herevpon it followeth of necessitie, that they which do stand in hope, can not be forsaken of God. So Iudith when she returned frō the murder of Holofernus, said: Praise our lord God, who forsaketh not them which do hope vpō him. And how can they be confounded, which can not be forsaken of God? So that the Apostle sayth aright: Hope doth not confounde, or put men to shame. And the Prophet sayth: Our fathers hoped vpon thee, and they were not confounded. For loke what they which stande in hope, be not able in their necessitie to bring to passe of themselues, that ỳ Lord their God, in whom they doe put their hope, bringeth to good effect and end. Hope vpō God, sayth ỳ Prophet, & he shal do it, he doth deliuer & preserue them. They hoped saith the Prophet, & thou diddest deliuer them. Item, Forasmuch as he hopeth in me, I will deliuer him, & he is called ỳ Sauiour of them ỳ do hope. And Salomon saith: He which hopeth vpon the Lord, shalbe saued. Now lay all these places together, and see whether it be without cause that the scripture doth call thē blessed, which do hope vpon the Lorde:

Psalm 21.

Psalm. 37.

Psalm. 22.

Psalm 17.

Pro. 28.

vnlesse

vnlesse ỳ they be not blessed which do well please the Lord, and feele his goodnesse, whom the mercy of God doth compasse and close in, and vpon whom his eies be bent, which can be neither forsaken of God nor confounded, but are deliuered and saued by him.

Whereupon then commeth the blessednesse of them which do hope vpon God, but of the meere goodnes, faith and truth of God, whereby he is so affected, that he cannot forsake them which doe hope vpon him, though that they can pretend no desertes, so that they haue a cleane hart towards him: that they hope hartyly vpon that which they hope for, for no other respect, but in ỳ respect of his goodnesse and truth.

Of Desperation.

I suppose it shal not be amisse, if I doe in few words note and those things of desperation which may admonish and warne vs to beware of it: & what it is to Despaire, it is as wel known, as what it is to Hope. Wherefore we need not stand vpon ỳ defining of ỳ, which is wel knowen of it self, but let vs rather consider these three points: First, how many kinds of Desperation ther be. Secondly, what be the causes therof. Thirdly, how noisome and hurtfull it is.

How many sortes of Desperation there bee?

FOrasmuch as it maketh some matter wherupon men do Despaire, therefore this euil of Desperation hath diuers sortes, and according vnto the number of ỳ kinds thereof, it is diuers and plenteous, like as the nature of all naughtinesse is wont to be. And there is one manner of Desperation, when wee doe despaire of God, an other when we do Despaire of our selues an other when we do dispaire of our neighbours, and when wee doe despaire of the possibility of things which ought to be trusted vpon or to be done, and so there be founde foure sortes of Desperation. The first we do make ỳ same, when men do despaire of God: for this doth exceede the others in heauinesse thereof, and openeth also a gappe vnto the rest, so that it is a most easy matter for him which despaireth in GOD, to Despaire also of his neighbour, of himself, and of the doing and trusting which he ought to haue in his owne thinges. Men doe despaire of God when they doe despaire either of his might or wil, or of both together. Their Desperation is most grosse, which do despaire of his might, who is knowen to be almightie. There is an example thereof in the second booke of the Kinges, where wee doe read thus. And Heliseus saide: Heare the worde of the Lord, Thus saith the Lord: At this tyme to morow, a bushell of fine flower shal be sold for a sickle, and two bushels of barly for a sickle, at the gate of Samaria. This saying of the Prophet seemed a thing impossible: for Samaria was besieged by the Syrians and driuen vnto that necessitie and lacke of thinges, that the famine grewe to be so great, that an Asses head was sold for fortie siluerings, and the fourth parte of a measure of Pigeons dong, for fiue siluerlings, yea that two women toke counsell for the killing and eating of their owne children, and when they hadde eaten the one of them, they striued before the King about the other. So that one of the chiefe Captaynes about the King, considering the present estate of things, thoughte that whyche the Prophete had tolde them so impossible, that though GOD, meaning to fulfill it, should open the windowes of Heauen to rayne, yet for all that it were not possible, that a bushell of fyne flower shoulde bee solde but for a sickle, and two bushels of barely but at a sickle, at the gates of Samaria, and therfore said vnto the Prophete: If God shoulde make sluses from Heauen, were this possible to be done, whiche thou talkest of? If that greate man had not despayred of the myghte of God, hee would rather haue sayde, There is nothing impossible vnto God. If hee will haue it so, it shall bee as thou sayest.

All they doe despayre of the wyll of God, which doe despaire eyther of hys goodnesse and mercye, eyther of his iustice, or of his truth. And on the other syde, they can not despaire of the will of God, whiche doe not despaire nor of hys goodnesse and mercye, neyther of iustice or of his truth. But thus muche briefly of the first manner of desperation.

2 The second we sayd is that, whē we doe despaire of oure neighbours. It is a common saying: He that is once naughte, is euer presumed and taken to be naught. Where this saying taketh place, there may most easily despaire of the amendment and recouery of their neighbours. Notwithstanding charitie is of a farre other nature, whiche beleeueth all things, and hopeth vpon all thinges, wherefore it is not without reason that Augustine in sundry places doth holde, that we ought not to despaire of the turning of anye man, as long as he is aliue, because that to morrow he is not yet knowen.

3 The third manner of desperation is that, when we doe despayre of our selues, for that we doe measure these things whiche are to be done, not by the grace of God, but by oure weakenes, and according vnto that we do despaire of our selues.

4 The fourth is, when we doe so much enforce the waight of thynges which are to be done, that we doe despaire of the possibilitie thereof: for we be of ỳ nature, that we doe iudge the same to be impossible to be done, which we can not our selues do with ease, specially if we be slouthfull, and out of exercise. And this is ỳ nature of these foure sortes of Desperation.

Whiche be the causes of Desperation.

NOw, there be many and sundry causes of Desperation, al which it were hard for any man to reherse, specially the singulare causes which do particularly chance to some particular men. Wherefore I will note some of the moste generall, whyche would God we could all eschue. For like as the true and setled hope is not in all men, but in the elect and faithfull onely, so is desparation very dangerous to our flesh, whereunto most parte of men be so enclined that they do most easily slippe into it. And yet for all that, there be verye fewe that can quite theselues out of it againe, yea and very harely. And we wyll speake of none but of the causes of the first desperation, when we do despaire of God in the case of oure saluation. And these be suche, that some of them do concerne the finall and irrecouerable Desperation, some the temporarie and curable desperation, wherein is requisite the discretion of a wise teacher, that he account it not immediately for a finall and irrecouerable desperation, if he do perceiue that a man doe despaire of the grace of God and of his owne saluation, or otherwise tempted with desperation least he himselfe also maye vnaduisedly fall into desperation of his brothers health.

Desperation of God finall and temporary.

The finall causes of desperatiō.

First, touching that Desperation whiche we doe call Finall and incurable, there bee some of the causes thereof secret, and some manifest. To searche farre into the secret causes we meane not, nor it is not our parts so to do.

The manifest causes be vnbeliefe and hardnesse of heart, and that not lighte, but stubborne and stiffe to the ende. I doe sequester these causes from them which be of the temporarie desperation, and I doe call them Manifest, not bycause that they be so manifest immediately vnto vs, that we can know which vnbeliefe, impenitence and hardnesse of hart is final and incurable, but bycause it is certayne, that finall vnbeliefe, lacke of repentance, and hardnesse of hearte, be not able to receyue true hope, and that it is not possible, but that they must be of full and perfecte Desperation. In deede they be some tokens therof, but in my iudgement it were better alwayes to hope for the better, than rashly to despayre of anye mans healthe that is yet aliue. Vnlesse that there be ioyned withall not a single and enforced denying of the truth once knowen and professed, but suche a one as is also ioyned with blasphemie. When this taketh place in man, then it is hard to hope vppon any turning. And touching the temporarie and curable desperation, these be the causes thereof.

VVe must not hope the best in all.

The first, is the ignorance of God and of his worde. The same is found sometimes also in the electes, vntyll ẏ time of their calling: in the meane season if there come any occasion to thinke vpon their saluation, there is a manner of desperation felt in their heart, whiche after that the lyghte of the worde and knowledge of God is once come, is chaunged into hope.

The causes of the temporary desperatiō. The ignorance of God.

The second, is the conscience and remorse of a mans sinnes, whiche is in the heartes of them whiche be not yet sufficiently instructed of ẏ grace of God in Christe Iesu, as it dothe hardlye admitte the hope of saluation, (like as the sicke stomacke can but euill brooke meate,) so it doth also allure desperation. Thus I suppose Chrysostome meaneth when he sayth, that euill workes do breede desperation, but it is in them which do not knowe anye other hope, but that which is of ẏ deserts of good workes, of which we haue spoken before. For by the same iudgemente of reason, like as they seeme to be worthye to hope, whiche do those things that bee good, so they be taught not to despaire without cause, whiche are reproued with

The sluggishnesse hyndring the study of Godlynesse.

The consciences of sinners.

with the conscience and remorse of their naughty workes.

The thirde, is the olde cankered custome to sinne, whiche is in some men so rough and stiffe an euill, that it will soner breede desperation, than receyue reformation. For when such a sinner vnderstandeth, that the preaching of amendment and grace doth promise saluation to none but to the repentant, tourned, and beleeuing, although he be not euill affected towardes the truthe, yet notwithstanding, forasmuch as he dothe despaire that he is able to leaue the custome of sinning, he dothe also despaire of his saluation, vntill that he be changed by the power of the heauenlye grace, and so amend his life from the bottom of his heart.

The fourth, is the sluggishnesse misliking the studie of true Godlynesse, and refusing the chastening of the body of sinne. Whē the slouthfull sinner vnderstādeth that he must not onely forbeare the euill, but doe good also, and crucifie the flesshe of sinne with the concupiscences thereof. For he dothe thorough the slouthfulnesse of his heart rather despaire, than hee would apply himselfe vnto that doctrine. And this kind of sluggishnesse is fedde by the desperation whych it breedeth, as it were the mother of the daughter, vntyll the tyme of the true turnyng come, and that the vertue of the grace of God do take awaye thys sluggishnesse and desperation both.

The fift, is that shame, whiche in the Papistry they doe feele that haue committed anye notable sinne when they doe heare that no sinne can bee forgiuen which is not confessed into the eares of a Priest, refusing the confessiō of their offences for shame, and so do despaire of the forgiuenesse of it, and also of their saluation. For they do not knowe that the forgyuenesse of sinnes doth depend, not vpon that confession which is made to the Priest, but vpon that which is made vnto God, whereof we haue spoken before in the place of penance.

The doctrine of satisfaction.

The fift, commeth of the doctrine of satisfaction, which the sinner doth despaire that he is able to fulfil for euery of his sinnes, which desperation the Canons and rules of penance haue exceedingly encreased. It is an incredible matter what gnawing and torment of consciences the doctrine of Satisfaction hath driuen into the Churches.

The enormitie of sinne.

The seuenth, is the enormitie of some speciall and sore offence, that the sinner doth saye with Caine, My sinne is too greate for me to deserue mercye, when the enormitie of the sinne is deemed to be greater than is the very mercy and grace of GOD, what can ensue else but the desperation of mans saluation.

Too deepe a consideration of our owne vnworthinesse.

The eight, is too deepe a consideration of our owne vnworthinesse, and vnlesse that the knowledge of the goodnesse and louingnesse of God do stay it, it muste needes fall out into the desperations of oure saluation. Wherefore they be daungerous doctors, which in respect of oure owne vnworthinesse, do vtterly extinguish the hope and confidence of Goddes grace, in the heartes of the weake.

The abiuring of knowyle

The ninth, is the constrayned abiuration and denying of the Truth, once knowen by tyrannicall violence, wherby the weaknesse of the flesshe whether a man will or no, is endaungered, and throwen into desperation of Gods grace, and of hys owne saluation, whereof we maye finde many examples in this realme vpon the chopping and chaunging of matters in Religion.

These be the moste generall causes of desperation, which I thoughte good to rehearse, to admonishe vs all, that we neglecte not the knowledge of God and of his grace, in the matter of our saluation, specially in these latter times, but that we seeke it with earnest desire, and reuerently applye our selues vnto it, forasmuch as wee be by so manye wayes enticed and prouoked to despayre of God, and of our owne saluation: and for bycause it is not possible that we should without it, cõpasse the true hope, without which there is no meane to hale into the porte and hauen of oure saluation.

Howe noysome and pernitious desperation is.

All desperation is not euill.

All kinde of desperation is not euill: For a man may finde some case wherein it were better to despaire, than to hope. When the hope is vayne and naught, then desperation is good and profitable. It was a naughtie hope, that the Scribes and Pharisies trusted that it would bee well with their Kingdome, if Christ were ridde out of the way. They did better in despayring afterwardes, when they saw the vertue of the spirite take rote euerye where vnder the name of Christ. It was a vayne hope that the Disciples trusted that Christ should reigne in flesshe, and redeeme the Israelites from the bondage of the Romaines. They did better in despayring of it afterwarde, what tyme they sawe the Lorde taken away by the death of the crosse, and buried, when they sayde, we hoped that he should redeeme the Israelites. Wherefore when we do say that desperation is noysome & daungerous, we doe speake of that sorte wherein we doe despayre what tyme we ought moste to hope, and trusse, and not absolutely of al desperation. For God, according vnto his wonderfull counsell, dothe so dispose oure thinges, that he suffereth his to feele nowe and then some desperation, as it were a certayne qualme, to the intente that afterwardes when the lighte of his grace is restored vnto them, they maye knowe better than they did before, that there is no stay in all their strengthe, neyther that they can not stande nor hold a fyrme and fast hope: vnlesse they be bolstred vp, and preserued by the heauenlye grace of God.

Desperation in the elect.

And like as hope, so desperation also, is otherwise in the electes, and otherwise in ꝑ reprobates. Though that it doe in the electes make mens mindes troubled and vnquiet, and to say with Dauid, I am cast out from the countenaunce of thine eyes, supposing themselues to feele the sorrowes of Hell, yet for all that, it is not a finall and full desperation, but it is at length shutte vp to a merry hope thorough the lighte of Goddes grace. But in the reprobate it breedeth moste sore & hainous mischiefe.

Firste, if there were any faythe, it shifteth it quite away, & maketh men to denie that which they did a firme before, before, and to dispraise that whyche they commended. Secondly, it breedeth all impatience in troubles, and that ioyned with blasphemie, wherewithall the Maiestie of God is most wickedly rent and torne. Thirdly, it maketh men euill without remorse, and to giue themselues wittingly and wyllingly vnto all kinde of vngodlinesse, vncleanesse, and vniustice, whereof the Apostle maketh mention, saying: Which, being in despaire, gaue themselues to vncleanesse, to do all filthinesse, to couetousnesse, &c. And we do reade the like in Jeremie. Thus saith the Lord: Lo I do frame and set vp euill against you. And doe thinke thoughtes against you: let euery man returne from his naughty way, and see you doe direct or make right your wayes and studyes, who haue saide, We haue despayred, wee will goe after oure owne thoughtes, and we will eache of vs doe the wickednesse of oure naughtye heartes. Thus thinketh the wicked person, despairing of his owne saluation, and condempned to destruction in hys owne iudgemente. Why shoulde I trouble and trauell my selfe in vaine? and not doe those things whiche doe like my mind, seeyng that I do know I am determined to destruction? I haue heard of an Abbot whych was in despayre of hymselfe, and determined to followe hys lustes, and to take his pleasure in the worlde as neere as he coulde conuey his matters cleanly. And vppon an Easter euen falling to a pastie of Venyson, whyche shoulde haue bin blest vpon the morrowe after the Popishe manner, before it were eaten of, did not conuey so cleanely, but that hee was taken with the manner by his kytchinner: and when he asked him why he did so, seeyng that if he had tarried till the morrowe, hee myghte haue lawfully eaten of it as muche as hee had would, & why he woulde damne hys soule for a little morsell of venison. He aunswered him: I praye thee let me followe mine appetite, and as for my soule, I thinke not vppon it, for I knowe I shall haue nothing to do in the kingdome of God. For if I shoulde come there by some case of impossibilitie, I shoulde be to greate a wonder to all the rest. It shoulde be a deintyer matter for me to come there, than Venison to me at thys time. Such fansies desperation dothe breede in the reprobate, and hereunto the blindnesse of minde dothe helpe muche, and the Popishe doctrine, by the speciall deuice of the Deuil doth also greate seruice. The wretched creature knewe not (he was so blynded with the catholike ignorance,) that the Kyngdome of God is not meate nor drinke, and that it is the doctrine not of Christe but of Antichrist and of Deuils, that meates be forbidden, whych God created to bee receyued with thankesgyuing.

Fourthly, it dothe driue miserable men to the madnesse, to murther theselues with the traytoure Judas, enticed by him whiche is the enimie of mans life, and a murtherer from the beginning. Augustine saith, that this kinde of desperate persons oughte muche to be feared, bycause there is nothing lefte in them, concerning eyther the presente life, or the life to come, which they doe stande in feare of, and whereby they mighte be restrained from putting in a prose their owne will.

Fiftly, it doth exclude men from true felicitie, and maketh them subiect vnto euerlasting condemnation. This is the last of all euils. In this point I suppose we ought not rashly to iudge. As for the case of Fraunces Spiera, of whome I made mention before, I leaue it so, that I will giue no iudgement of him. The history is written howe he was vsed at Padua, and how he vsed himselfe afterwards, and what his ende was I knowe not, for I neuer heard of it as I remember. His desperatiō was sore, but I can not say that it was full and perfecte. Whereas he did so earnestly pray the Lords prayer once or twice with them that were present, and stode by: and againe in that hee did wish with all his hearte, that hee might haue some small hope of the grace of God: Thirdly in that that he did aduise them whiche stode by, that they would expresse the knowledge of Gods grace by the studie of Godlye life: Fourthly, that he dyd in no worde speake euill of the truth of the doctrine of Christ which hee was compelled to abiure by ministers of Antichriste, through the infirmitie of his flesh: these thinges I say, doe stay me, that I can not repute him to bee a reprobate, and vtterlye condemned person: forasmuch as these tokens do declare, that there was some Godlye motions, though much oppressed, remayning in his hearte. I knowe not his ende. Their case is muche more daungerous, whiche haue knowen and cōfessed the truth of Gods Gospell, and sound doctrine, and whyche compelled by no violence, wherein they might pretende the weakenesse of the flesh, but eyther for desyre of vayne glory & gayne, eyther of spite and hatered, or I can not tell why, haue not onely forsaken and denyed that which they haue before knowen and confessed to be true, but doe also in words, writing and doings, as denouncing open enmitie and warre against the truthe, do rage and raple against it with blasphemous talke: such folke I beseech in the Lorde, to consider with feare the example of the man I spake of, and of manye others, whose names I leaue, and let them loke betimes, what they must account to be afrayde of, vnlesse they do amēd the sooner, and seeke ỹ grace of the Sauioure.

Of the desperation of Frances Spiera.

Of Loue.

NOwe that wee haue somewhat saide of the Hope of a Christian Man, for asmuche as Faithe, Hope, & Loue, bee so linked togither, that they can not well be asunder: the verye order would that we should say somewhat also of Loue, which the Ebrewes do call אהבה, the Grekes ἀγάπην, whiche the Latine interpreter dothe translate Charitie, wheras he might haue simplye called it Loue, and so not haue expressed one Greeke word by an other, but by a Latine worde. For the Latine worde Charitas, in Englishe Charitie, commeth of the Greeke worde χάρις, and signifyeth a particulare fauor, & loue, not generally vnto all, but particularly vnto be such, as be nerer vnto vs, as oure parents, children, kinsfolke, &c. And wee knowe that the nature of loue is great, and not able to be so expressed, that it is impossible to comprise therin all thynges whiche doe appertayne to the nature, disposition, behauiour, and efficacie thereof. Wherefore oure purpose is not to goe aboute to make a full and absolute declaration thereof, but we will onely consider the same and those thinges for this present, whiche be required of vs in holy Scriptures. For as for the loue whiche God beareth towardes vs, we haue spoken of it in the place of the Loue of God towardes man.

Loue. Charitie.

What Loue is.

IT semeth to bee no question what loue is, seeyng that it appeareth to be moste manifestly knowen. And yet notwithstanding in my opinion, it can not be set forth by a sufficient and full definition, but is rather felt by them, which do trulye loue, than vnderstanded by them that doe not loue in deede. Neyther the Philosopher which hadde so good skill in defining thinges, did expresse what it is to loue, when he said, that loue is to will to any man that whiche he supposeth to be good, and for his power to be doing of the same: for this is rather a teaching what loue worketh, than what it is. If a man saye that fire is of that nature, that it consumeth those things which it catcheth, he telleth vs not yet, what fyre is, but what the working and operation of fyre is.

A certayne man sayeth, that loue is the vertue whereby the louer is knitte vnto him, whome hee loueth: And hereby also is not expressed, what loue is, but what it worketh, as though a man should say, Hatered is the vice whereby he which hateth is disseuered from him whome he hateth, in which wordes is tolde not what hatered is, but what it worketh.

Augustine dothe come somewhat nerer vnto it when he sayeth, that loue is the motion of the hearte, delyting it selfe in some thing: And yet there is not sufficientlye expressed what loue is, vnlesse we will say, that loue and that lyking whiche followeth the loue, is all one. But there followeth after loue sorrowe also sometimes, as for example, when friendes be kepte or parted asunder: as ioy dothe, when they embrace and meete. Therefore as a man can not well cal loue the motion of the heart sorrowing in any thing, so I see not why it should be called the motion of the heart delyting it selfe in any.

Loue can not be defyned.

To be short, Loue is such a thing, which can not exactly and perfectlye be defyned, and yet it is felt of al persons both wyse and vnwyse. And the Apostle disputeth muche of loue, and yet for all that he dothe not defyne what it is, but is occupyed wholly in expressing the working of it. And Iohn in his Canonicall Epistle, though he doe earnestly commende loue, yet for all that, he doth not define neither what loue is, but meanyng to giue it the hyghest commendation that he coulde, he sayde: God is loue: By whiche wordes he doth signifie, that there is nothyng goeth nearer vnto the nature of God than loue, but what it is he doth not define

1. Cor. 13.

1. Iohn. 4.

So that we muſt not ſo muche ſéke what,as of what qualitie loue is.

Hovv Loue is giuen vs in charge.

Loue naturally in all things.

IT appeareth that by the Prouidence of God,there is loue in all thinges that be created, not onely in men, but vnreaſonable beaſtes alſo, yea and in creatures whiche haue no ſenſe. There is no Aungell but that loueth, there liueth no man that is voide of loue, there is no creature at all whiche hath not ſome ſtrength of loue in it,whereby it doth gladly embrace things méete and agréeable for it.The fire loueth matter and ſtuffe, and ſpecially ſuch as hath any ſmack of Brimſtone, drie and tempered with ſome fatneſſe,that it moſte deſireth, and leaueth not vntill it hathe turned it and made it like it ſelfe. Trées and plantes in the drie ſeaſon do deſire and loue raine,and the Sun when the wether is colde. And thys loue doth wonderfully preſerue thoſe thinges in that degrée as God hathe created them, through the ſtrength of ioyning and working of one with an other.Things ſhoulde not be preſerued, vnleſſe the like loued the like. And vnleſſe that the ſame loue of God through the operation thereof wer preſent and helping to al things which he created,nothing at al could remaine, ſo that no doubt the vertue of loue is in all creatures. And by this reaſon it is not loue abſolutely, whiche is commaunded vs, for why ſhould that be commaunded whyche is naturallye in all thing withoute commaundemente? But there is commaunded a right and an orderly direction of loue,to loue thoſe things which are truly to be beloued. Loue is good of it ſelfe, it is neceſſarie,it is of God, and a goodlye thing, but thorough the corruption of oure nature it is alſo ſo corrupte,that we do loue thinges not to be beloued, or not as it behoueth and is conuenient. He is good which loueth, ſaith Auguſtine, loue is good, and that is good whiche is loued. For both he whiche loueth is the creature of God,and that whiche is loued, is the creature alſo of God, and loue it ſelfe is of God, but that corruption whereby wée doe loue,not as we ought to doe, is euill, and is not of God. Wherefore when loue is commaunded, it is not loue abſolutely that is commaunded, as though it were not alreadye in vs, but there is commaunded the ryghte direction and ordering of it. The like may be ſaid of faith alſo:when it is required that we muſte beleeue, it is not required ſimply that wée muſt beleue, for that we doe before (for what man is he whiche beleueth nothing?) but that we muſt beléeue aright.

It is not commaunded, that wée ſhuld be loued of others, but that we ſhould loue, notwithſtanding we be ſo affected of nature, that we had rather be loued, than loue, yet it is a more higher & godlier point to loue, than to be loued. Like as to honoure rather than to be honored. For as honor is not in him, which is honored, but in him which doth yeld the honor. So loue alſo is not in him whiche is loued,but in him which loueth.wherefore the ſame whiche is more higher & godlier,& giuen vs by the grace of god, it is of right & reaſon required of vs.

It is not commaunded vs to be loued.

VVhat loue is commaunded.

Whome vvee be commaunded to loue.

IF there were right and orderly loue in vs of nature,we ſhoulde néede no commaundements, for wée ſhould doe it by our owne accordes. We doe not reade that mothers bée commaunded to loue their children, for they do it by the courſe of nature, whiche they doe folowe as receyued from God. But the children be commaunded to honour their parentes, for herein the nature is decayed in them by corruption, and therefore it is neceſſarie that the lacke therof be amended by precepts. And the order of loue dothe requyre,that firſte wée doe loue them whiche ought to be loued. Secondly that we loue, as it becommeth godly perſons,and ſuche as be created like the Image of God. And touchyng the firſte,there be preſcribed vnto vs three ſundry loues. The firſt is to loue our Lorde God, the ſecond to loue our neighbour,the thirde to loue our brethren. In déede it is all one ſelf ſame loue in the godly,but yet becauſe of the three applications thereof, to God, our Neighbour, and to our Brethren, I haue forted it into three loues.

Deut.

That vvhiche is commaunded vnto Iſrael, doth concerne vs alſo.

Of the Loue of God.

THere is a commaundement of the loue of God, where we doe read in this wiſe:Heare Iſrael,The Lorde thy God is one God. Thou ſhalt loue thy Lord God with al thy hart, and with al thy ſoule,and with al thy ſtrength.This is the greateſt, and the firſt commaundement in the law,and it bindeth the people whoſe God the Lorde is,as Iſraell was at that tyme. And therefore he ſayde: Heare Iſrael: and not abſolutely, the Lorde is thy God. Thou ſhalte loue thy Lorde God: but Thy God is one God,Thou ſhalt loue the lord thy God. Wherefore whereas hée ſaith,Heare Iſrael, it is annuche to ſay, as heare my people, ſo that no man can ſay,that this precepte was namely giuen to Iſraell, and therefore doth not binde vs, which be not Iſraelites, but of the Gentiles: It bounde the Iſraelites, becauſe they were the people of God. And in caſe that we be not the people of God, it can not be ſayde of God, that he is our God. If he be not our God, then ſurely we be not bounde by this precepte,to loue him, when we be charged to loue our Lorde God. If we do lyue in this worlde without a God, then we cán not performe that which is here commaunded: But in caſe we doe boaſte of any God to be our God, the thing it ſelfe doth driue vs to loue him. Nowe ſeyng that our God is the ſame which was the God of the Iſraelites, that muſte néeces belong vnto vs alſo,whiche he charged his people withall,ſaying:Thou ſhalt loue the Lorde thy God.

Therefore,ſeing that we boûde by this precepte of our Lorde God, vnto whoſe iuriſdiction and power wée be ſubiecte, wée muſte aboue all things diligétly obſerue that,whiche is commaunded therin, We be commáded not ſimply to loue,but to loue our Lord God,as it is in déede moſt méete & reaſonable. Moreouer, that wée loue him not in a péece or halfe loue,but whole and ful. They which doe ſerue many Gods,doe loue none of them withal their hart, but partly & in half: like as a woman that were coupled not to one, but to many husbãds, so that it were not possible for hir to loue any of thẽ all, with all hir whole harte. And therefore he dothe reiect this loue of halues, requiring it to be full and whole, & faith not simply: Thou shalt loue thy Lord God, but he addeth, With al thy hart, and with al thy soule, & all thy strength, & therfore he did set before, The Lord thy God, is one God. And thereby he meaneth that all our whole harte, soule and strẽgth is dewe vnto him, bycause that there is no other besides him, and therefore he willeth not, neither cã he heare that his people shall serue any other Gods besides hym, and so worship hun, not in a whole harte, but by péece meale, and in halues.

Therefore the fulfillyng of this precept and of the loue which is due vnto God, dothe depende vpon that wholenesse of fayth, that we muste serue one true God not ioyntly with others, but heauenly & alone. Wherfore it is not possible, that the worshippers, and callers on of Saintes should fulfil it, though that in wordes they do denie that they worshyp many Gods, in the worshipping of their dead Saintes.

Math. 22. Christ him selfe doth alleage this precept where he maketh answer to the Doctour of the law, which tempted him, & asked what is the greatest commaundement in the law, saying: Thou shalt loue the Lord thy God, with all thy harte, and in all thy soule, and in all thy mynde. This is the firste and greatest commaundement. In that place we noted firste, what is to be obserued of that, that God doth giue vs precepts and commaundements: Secondly that hee doth charge vs with loue: Thirdly howe wee ought to loue him, & what is the meanyng of these wordes: also what is the nature of true & perfecte loue: Fourthly howe it is atchieued: and lastly howe wee may perceyue that God dothe loue vs.

From this loue of God we muste not sequester the Loue of his onely begotten sonne Christe our Sauiour. It is a great mater that the cõmaundement of God runneth to Israell, that they shoulde principally loue their Lorde God, and that with all theyr harte, with all their soule, and all theyr minde. But yet lyke as the perfect knowledge, so the perfect loue also of God was reserued vnto the grace of the newe Testament, wherein God is knowen and loued as the Father, in Christe his sonne. The greater light, ỹ greater grace, and the greater & fuller knowledge, muste nedes requyre and produce a greater and fuller loue of GOD, of the father I meane and the sonne. The loue of Christe. Ioan. 5. Phil. 2. Augustine writeth, that euery man is to be vnderstanded in the name of a neighbour. For that which we do read in John: He which loueth him whiche begat him, loueth also him which is borne of him, is aswell or more to be applied vnto this case than to the law.

Neyther is it agaynst this loue, that it is sayde in the lawe: The Lorde thy God is one God. Thou shalte loue thy Lorde God with all thy harte, &c. For Christian menne doe knowe, that in that, that they do equally loue the father & the sonne, they do not loue two Gods, nor haue a deuided harte in this loue, but that they doe serue and honour one selfe same God alone, by full and perfect loue, in them, two persons of the father and the sonne.

II. Of the Loue of our Neyghbour.

We sayde, that the second sorte of Loue, which is prescribed vnto vs by Gods commaundement, is to loue our neyghbour, the precepte of this is in Leuiticus, where wee doe reade in this sorte: Thou shalt loue thy friende, or neighbour as thy selfe: I am thy Lorde. The Lord calleth this the seconde precepte, lyke the firste, and addeth: In these two commaundements, there dothe depende the whole lawe and Prophetes, and who is our neyghbour, we haue sufficiently declared in our Commentaries vppon Matthewe, in the fifte Chapter. Truly he is our neighbor, whiche is in any occasion ioyned vnto vs, or with whom we haue to do. And herein there is not respect to be had, to the aliaunce or coniunction of flesshe and bloud, but vnto any maner of all kindes of coniunctiõ, wherby is occasion yelded to loue, and to doe good, as that case was when the man which was wounded by theues, was made neyghbour vnto the Samaritan which passed by, as we may perceyue in Luke. Here is no regarde neither of person, estate, nor welth. There is no such base or vile degrée to let, but that the power of al may be neyghbour vnto the richest, the simplest to the beste learned, and the folishe vnto the wisest.

Augustine in his firste booke, De doctrina Christiana, and in hys booke, De vera Religione, dothe proue by many argumentes, that euery manne is to bee vnderstanded in the name of a neighbour: and he hath respect therin vnto the felowshyp and company of our common nature. But yet they whiche doe lyue in places farre off from vs, albeit they be men also, they can not for all that conueniently be called our neyghbours. Wherefore it is a playner way to take them to be our neyghbours, whiche by any occasion are ioyned vnto vs, so that theyr necessitie maye bee presented vnto our senses, and become able to receyue of oure benefites, and well doynges.

And it is grounded vppon greate reason, that the commaundemente runneth namely, that we should loue our neyghboure: For there is requyred to be in vs an vprightnesse of sincere and good minde, which muste vtter it selfe vnto all men, and vpon euery occasion declare the goodnesse thereof, and that the more euidently, the nearer that menne come vnto it, as vnto the fyre. For lyke as the naughtinesse of an euil nature is the more perceyued, the more that wee haue to do withal, so the goodnesse of a kinde & gentle creature is the better knowen, the nearer a manne doe drawe vnto it. Therfore we be commaunded not simply to loue euery man, but to loue our neyghbour, and so to declare by assured experiment and proofe, how good we be towards al, which be any manner of wise ioyned vnto vs.

And for asmuch as it falleth out oftentimes, that there ryseth stryfe and debate betwirte them that bee outwardly ioyned togither, leste vs not thinke, that therfore also they be no longer our neyghbours which be our enimies, and that therefore also they ought not to be loued according vnto the tradition of the Pharisies, whiche gathered in this wyse vpon the precepte of God: It is written, Thou shalt loue thy fclow & friende: Ergo, in the contrary say they, we shoulde hate our enimy and backe-friende. But Christe doth so expounde this precepte, that we ought not onely to take our friendes, but our enimies also to be our neyghbours. Thereof we doe reade in Mathew: Mathe. 5. You haue hearde that it was sayde: Thou shalt loue thy neighbour, and hate thy enimy: But I say vnto you, loue your enimies, say well of them whiche doe curse and banne you. Do well vnto them whiche do hate you, pray for them whiche doe hurte and persecute you, that you may be the children of your father, who causeth his sonne to ryse vpon the good and the euyll, &c. Loke vpon the place, and see what we haue noted vpon it. For we entende not to rehearse one thing often. And that is expounded also in the same place that he sayeth, As thy selfe. Of that that the Lorde sayth: The seconde is lyke vnto this, and, In these two dothe stande the whole lawe and Prophetes: see our Commentaries vpon Mathew. The Scholemen doe deuise a double affection of loue in this question of louyng our enimies, one in doyng no hurte: an other to doe good. And so they argue, whether that we be not bounde by the firste affection onely, and not the latter also, to loue our enimies. But the saying it selfe of Christ is so manifest, that it needeth no such arguing, but it is more darkned than opened thereby. But I say vnto you (marke the authoritie of Christ) loue your enimies. And who is he that knoweth not what it is to loue? The commaundement goeth, that we muste as wel loue our enimy as our neyghbour. And to declare that he meaneth of true loue, he addeth of the efficacie and frute therof, saying: Wilshe well, do well, & pray for them. Agayne, to the entent it should appeare that he meant of the whiche were moste hatefully & spitefully affected towardes vs, he sayth not onely: wilshe well, and doe well vnto them, &c. But wilshe well vnto them which do curse you, and banne you. Do good vnto them whiche doe hate you, pray for them whiche doe hate and persecute you. We cursings and bannings, long hatered, hurting and persecuting the tokens of them whiche doe but slightly hate, and not rather of them, whiche be so spitefully affected towardes vs, that they do seeke our whole and vtter vndoyng, and do leaue nothing vndone, that cõserue to our vtter destruction: That we be commaunded not only to loue them which do extremely and spitefully hate vs, but to do the as muche good also as we be able, as well towardes God as men. And this is the doctrine of Christe, what soeuer the Scholemen doe argue thereof.

Not onely our friends but our enimies also be our neyghbors.

The scholemen doe make 2 double affection to lone.

The doctrine of the Apostle is like also where we do reade in this wise. Reuenge not your selues my welbeloued, but giue you place vnto anger, for it is written: Leaue the reuenge to me, and I will pay it home, sayth the Lorde. Therefore if thy enimy be hungry, fede him: if he be thirsty, giue him drinke: for if you do thus, Rom. 12.

thus, thou shalt heape togither fyry coales vpon his head. It seemeth a harde matter to some Christian folke, when they be charged to loue their enimies aswell as their neighbour, whereas the very same was cõmaunded to the people of the law, and was performed of all the godly whiche lyued vnder the same: wherof we may finde many notable examples in the Scriptures. Consider the histories of Dauid, and what the Prophete Elizeus did to the army of the king of Siria, what he commaũded the king of Israell himselfe also to do. And of them of the primitiue Churche, you may see in the Ecclesiasticall histories. Iud. 6.

But some manne will obiecte the wordes of Dauid, where he sayth. Do I not hate them, O Lord, which do hate the, and doe I not chafe agaynst them whiche doe rise agaynst the: I do hate them in a ful kinde of hatered, they be made enimies vnto me. Hereby he supposeth may be gathered, that the godly manne may wel hate his enimies, if they be wicked. As in case that a christian man lyuyng among the Turkes, the professed enimies of the name of Christ, or else amongst the wicked and false christians, whiche doe hate the truth of God, and finde them to be his enimies, that it is not vnlawful for him to hate the againe. Moreouer, whereas the nature of loue is this, that he whiche loueth the good, dothe in the contrary hate the euill: as the loue of iustice dothe bringe the hate of iniustice, it is supposed, that in this respecte also the iuste person may hate his enimies as naughty men. The wordes of Dauid obiected. Psal. 139.

I answere. The wordes of Dauid doe not make any thyng for the hate of our enimies. It is one thyng to hate the wicked, as the enimies of God and as naughty men, and an other thyng to hate them as our enimies. O Lorde (saithe he) I hated them whiche hated the. And, I doe chafe agaynst them whiche doe ryse agaynst the. They were no doubte his enimies also, as he sayth: And they were made enimies vnto me, & yet for all that he did not hate them therefore, bycause they were his enimies and did persecute him, but bycause they did hate GOD, and rose agaynst hym. This hate was breddе in hym of the exceeding loue of God, and not of the loue of hymselfe. He that loueth hymselfe earnestly, he dothe surely hate his enimies, but he whiche loueth God and not himself, he may loue hys enimies, but not the enimies of God. Therefore the greatest poynt is, wherevpon the occasion of the hate dothe rise: for therevpon may iudgemẽt be giuen of hate and enimitie. We may easily pretende the malice and wickednesse of our enimies, whome we doe hate, but we doe not very easily loue the good and godly, in respect they be good and godly, whiche we shoulde not chose but loue, if we coulde hate the naughty and wicked, not bycause they be enimies vnto vs, but bicause they be naughty and wicked. But it is God whiche searcheth the harte and the raynes, the very seates of loue and hatered, whom no man can decepue whatsoeuer he doe pretende in wordes. But how the loue of our neyghbour can not stande without the loue of our enimies, we haue noted vpon Mathew. Mat. 5.

It is one thing to hate Gods enimies and our enimies.

The matter is wherevpon the causes of hate com

Of

Of the Loue of our Brethren.

WE sayde that the third kynde of the Loue whiche is commaunded vs, is the loue of our brethren, when we whiche be called Christian men, doe loue one an other, and glory of one GOD our father, whose sonnes we be in Christe, and by him ioyned altogither to one brotherly affinitie, with his loue hée dothe charge vs whiche is the beginner, cause & ground therof, Christ the only begotten of God our cómon Lord & Sauiour saying in Iohn: My children, I am yet a little while with you: you shall seeke me, & as I sayde to the Iewes, whether I go, you can not come: so I do say now also vnto you, I doe giue you a new cómaundement, that you loue one an other, that lyke as I haue loued you, so ethe of you loue among your selues. Agayne: This is my commaundement, that you loue one an other, as I haue loued you. No manne hath greater loue than this, to gyue hys soule for his friends: & yet the thirde time, hée dothe rehearse it agayne. This I charge you, that you loue one an other. This precept we haue sufficiétly expounded in our Commentaries vppon Iohn, and noted also what wée haue thought good to be considered therein, and therefore we will procéede.

The commaundement of Christe for brotherly loue. Iohn.13.

Iohn.15.

VVhether that the generall loue be taken avvay.

But first there riseth a question, whether that by this newe precept of christian Charitie, the generall loue be taken away, when wée be commaunded by the lawe of God to loue our neyghbours, lyke as the old Testament, in which the cómaundement of the louing of our neighbour, is taken away by the succession of the newe.

We do answere in few wordes. A Specialler Loue dothe not take away that, whiche is more generall, lyke as the naturall loue is not auoyded by that whiche is commaunded by the lawe, and the speciall loue of friendes, kinsefolkes, parentes, wiues, children, brethren, and sisters, doth not cutte off that knotte, whereby one Citizen and man is ioyned to an other by lawe of nature. Therefore like as there is no let in worldly matters, but that we whiche doe loue our houlholde folcke specially, may yet loue our felowe Cytizens also: So in the kingdome of Christ, there is nothyng to the contrarye, but that we may generally loue all menne, yea and our enimies, though that wée beare a nearer loue vnto our Christian brethren, as beyng christian mē our selues. Like as the christianitie dothe make vs in our life amōg men to be neither parents nor brethrē, neither wiues, nor kinsfolke, neyther citezens nor men: so it dothe not take away that loue neyther, whereby wée doe loue them, vnto whome we be any maner of wise or meanes ioyned vnto. So the Apostle, though he do chiefly aduise men to vse Christian liberalitie to them of the family of fayth, yet for all that, he is so farre wide from taking away that generall good doyng vnto all menne, that hée dothe expressly require it, saying: Whyles wée haue time, let vs doe good to all, and then he addeth: But chiefly to thē which are of the family of Fayth. To bée shorte, for asmuch as we be men let

The speciall loue doth not take away the more generall.

VVhy Christ gaue this precept.

Christ as saying, that the commaundement to be one an other.

Galath.6.

vs loue all menne as felowes with vs in nature, and as the people of God: let vs loue our Lorde God as friendes and kinsefolkes, lette vs loue such as be a kinne vnto vs, and our neyghbours: and as Christian men, such as be also Christians.

Secondly, lette vs sée why God gaue vs this precepte of brotherly loue. No doubte it giueth a greate light to the kéepyng of Christes precepts, when we doe consider the reasons of them: and there be of thys precept sundry causes.

The first is of him, which cómaunded this loue, I meane Christe himselfe, and of the nature of thē whome he gaue the commaundement vnto. He loued them to whom he gaue the commaundement, that they shoulde loue one an other: Like as (sayth he) I loued you. And in the beginning of the Chapter: Whereas he loued thē, sayth the Euangelist, he loued them vntill the ende. Therefore God the Lorde whiche loued, gaue the commaundement to his beloued Disciples. Therefore what coulde he haue commaunded them more conueniēt than this loue is, whiche he bare to them all, and to euery one of them, and that for two causes. First, that they shoulde doe the same whiche he had done. He loued them, & therefore he would that they shoulde also loue the same whome he loued. Secondly that they shoulde euery one of them be as wel beloued, and liked of their brethren, as they were of him. Both these poyntes were requisite to the likenesse of theyr conditions, bicause of the speciall league and confederacie, that was betwixt them.

The seconde cause is, that this kind of precepte was more conuenient for him, who came into this worlde for this purpose to reconcile vs vnto God. For loue hath a certayne communio with the nature of God, whiche Iohn considered in his Canonicall Epistle, where he sayd: God is loue, & he whiche dwelleth in loue, dwelleth in God, and God in hym. Christe himselfe came vnto vs, sente by the loue of his father. So God loued the world (sayth he) that he sente his onely begotten sonne. He came to make vs at one with God, which poynt standeth chiefly in the vertue & strength of loue, which may aright be called the spirite of God. Indeede we can not without faith please and adopyne our selues vnto God. And yet notwithstandyng, if our fayth that wée haue bée voyde of this loue, let no man flatter himselfe, that hée may be thereby adopyned vnto God. The chiefe strength of the ioynyng togither consisteth in both the parts whiche are to be ioyned, that is to say, in God and in vs, rather than in any thing that is in God onely, or in vs alone. The Omnipotencie is full and whole in God, and hath no place in vs. So that wée be not thereby ioyned vnto God alone, albeit it is not all excluded out from thys matter. Faythe through the grace of GOD hath place in vs: but in God it hath no place, vnto whome all things bée open, manifeste, and presente. So that wée bée not ioyned vnto God by this neyther, notwithstandyng that vnlesse that wée do beléeue in him, we be not ioyned vnto him. But loue is such a matter, that it is in God, and by him it is powred into vs, and maketh vs to be fashioned lyke vnto him in dispasition of goodnesse and loue. Thys poynt Christe dothe touche in Mathewe, where he disputeth of the precept of loue. The perfect loue and coniunction or confederacie in loue, is (to speake in a similitude) when there is none in a house, but that loueth all his felowes, and is likewise beloued of all. As when the goodman of the house loueth his wyfe, children, and familie, and there all and euery one of them do loue one an other. So there is perfecte loue and charitie in the house of God, when we doe all loue one an other, and be loued all of God and Christe hys sonne, and wee all agayne loue them bothe. Therefore these two causes do properly and peculiarly concerne the person of Christe, and the dispensation receyued of the father, so that there could haue bene nothyng more conueniently commaunded for the Disciples to bee reconcyled by vnto the Father, than that they shoulde moste entierly loue one an other.

Loue maketh atonement

Iohn.3.

Mat.5.

Mutuall loue is meete for them that be made one.

The thirde cause is, for that mutuall loue is moste meete for such as be vnited and made one: and all Christes flocke be made as one in the fayth, truthe, and grace of God. Wherefore it is meete that they beare mutuall loue one to an other, as beyng all of one minde in Christe, in whom they be vnited and knit together. They whiche folowe sundry deuises, doe disagree and can not loue & like one an other. For as to be lyke one to another coupleth loue, so to be vnlike one to an other breedeth hate: Wherefore loue is not in them which doe disagree, but in them whiche be vnited togither as one. Therefore seyng that Christian men be as one, and brethren in God the father, in our one Lorde Christe his sonne, in one fayth, in one hope of calling, in one baptisme, and in one spirit, what could be more properly and conueniently commaũded the, than intierly & stedfastly one of the to loue another.

The effecte of loue.

4 Fourthly, the very efficacy & worckyng of loue is such, that it may be well commaunded vs by Christe. For firste it dothe kéepe them in concord, which be once vnited togither. For it dothe take away those hinderaunces, which do diuide vnitie, and lose brotherly concorde: as impatience, Pharysaical churlishnesse, hypocritical & counterfaite seuerenesse, enuy, rashnesse & fauouredncsse, hautinesse, dishonest dealyng, desire of priuate gayne, inclination to anger, sinistrall suspitions, delyte in euill, mistrust & desperation. For by these vices brotherly vnitie is broken, & therefore the Apostle maketh mention of them to the Corinthians, where he doth describe the nature of loue, and to the Ephesians hée dothe ioyne togither loue, vnitie, and the bonde of peace: and to the Collossias he doth call loue the bande of perfection. Yea and loue whiche is in the hartes of the faythfull from the spirite of Christe, taketh away the publyke hatreds of nations and countreys, suche as were amongst the Iewes, Samaritans, and Gentiles. Many do argue nowe a dayes, of the concorde and vnitie of the Churche, and they doe séeke it in conformable kéepyng of the outwarde ceremonies. But howe muche better were it for vs to come home all vnto this Christian loue? For the true cõcord of Christian men doth not consist in rytes and ceremonies, but in the vnitie of Fayth, and true Loue. Though we shuld go all disfigured in one kinde of Cowles, & professe all one rule of outwarde conuersation, yet it were not possible that we should therby be brought to one true concorde and agreement in the Lorde, as experience it selfe doth teache vs. For you shall not lightly finde more bitter and spyteful hatereds, thã in monasteries, amõgst them, in whom all outward things semeth to be alyke and one.

1. Corinth.

Ephes.4.

Colloss.3.

And howe necessary the obseruation of vnitie which commeth by loue, is for the encrease of the truth and the kyngdome of Christ, there is no wyse man but vnderstandeth it. Constantine doth finde fault with the falling out and discorde of the Bishops of his time, bycause y the increase of Christendome was much hindered thereby: and it is a cõmon saying: By concordes small thinges do growe and increase, but by discorde the greatest do decaye. Moreouer, the efficacy of loue is declared in that, that it doth yeld and minister thinges necessarye to the persecuted and poore: for it is liberall in giuyng and bestowing. And for this cause also it is very nédefull for Christian men, specyally in times of troubles and persecutions, least the weake shoulde be driuen to slyppe from their holy profession, eyther for disperation, or for lacke of reliefe. Whereseoeuer this loue is grounded in the harte, the Christian man can not say: I am poore, I haue nothyng to gyue: he will nédes loue hys brother, and will eyther comforte his heauinesse in wordes, or els if he can do nothing els, he will weepe with him yet for company. Loue will leaue no man: though he be neuer so poore, neuer so ryche, as vnmete and vnprofitable for the kyngdome of Christe. Neither will he which loueth in deed, say, The cõmaundement runneth that I must loue. I will loue therefore, and yet I nede not to gyue any thing. Loue seketh no such shifte, nor neyther will I say: I will giue if I knowe how much I shoulde gyue, and to whome. All these thinges be tempered and ordered by loue. When vsuryes began firste by lyttell and lyttell to infect the Christian Church, there was much disputing thereof amongest the learned: but such disputacyons had not needed at all, onelesse that the loue of Christyan menne hadde waxed colde, accordyng to the Prophecye of Christ. Neyther should there bee so greate alteration and stryfe nowe a dayes vppon Fayth and Workes if wee hadde true loue. For by it our Fayth should be effectuall, & bring forth all manner of good workes. Wherefore such manner of disputations doe declare well ynoughe that there is but lyttell Fayth and Loue lefte in ỹ churches of Christ, yea amongst them which doe most glorye of the knowledge of the truth.

Loue hath no ende.

5 Fyftely, this is an other poynte, that loue hath no ende, but shall continue in the lyfe to come also: when neyther Fayth, nor hope shall remayne. The felicitye of the lyfe to come, can not stande without perfecte and mutuall loue of G O D, and of Christ hys sonne, and vs. But it maye stande without fayth, hope, patience in aduersities, &c. So that for thys respecte also the faythfull of Chryst which be electe vnto euerlasting lyfe and felicitie, be aright charged to loue one an other in thys lyfe, that lyke as ỳ euerlasting lyfe which is obtayned thorowe Fayth by the gyfte of GOD, begynneth whiles that we doe yet lyue in thys worlde, so these things maye also beginne here which shal be ioyned withall for euer in the worlde to come, as is the Loue of God, of Chryst, and our brethren, peace and ioye in the holy Spyrite and glorifiyng of GOD. And therefore it is that the Apostle doth commende Loue for this respecte: bycause it neuer decayeth. There maye be other reasons also alleaged, why the Lorde charged his Dysciples, and the faythfull with thys commaundement of mutuall Loue. But if we waye these fiue well, which wee haue alleaged, I suppose it shall appeare sufficiently ynough, that he gaue thys precept and charge to exceding good purpose, vnto all such as do beleeue in hym.

1. Cor. 13

Howe farre foorth we ought to loue our Brethren.

As I haue loued you.

NOwe we must consider nexte, howe farre forth this precepte of brotherly loue doth extende, and howe farre forth we bee bounde to loue our brethren, and thys appeareth in the very precept of the Lorde, where he sayth: As I haue loued you. Item no mã hath a greater loue, than to gyue hys lyfe for hys fryendes, so that the perfection or perfoarmunce of this precepte, stretcheth vnto the very example of Christ. Than the question is, howe and howe farre forth Christ loued his fryendes. And albeit that hys loue towardes vs be so large, that the greatnesse and excellencye thereof doth passe the capacitie of our mindes, yet for all that wee may consider some of the circumstances thereof and so knowe how wee oughte to loue one an other, accordynge vnto the example of him.

Christ loued vs first.

Fyrst of all he loued vs, before we loued hym. This is much to the commendation of true and sincere loue. In deede it is ryght and reason to loue hym, which loueth, but yet that proceadeth not of so great a goodnesse, as it doth to loue hym, which doth not yet loue, neyther will perdauenture neuer loue hym againe. As it is a more bountyfull vertue when a man doth good vnto them, of whome he neuer receiued any good turne, neither perdauenture neuer shall. Wherefore lyke as Christ loued vs first, and toke the occasions of his loue not of vs but of his father, as he sayth in Ihon: Lyke as my father hath loued me, so I do loue you also.

Iohn. 15.

In lyke manner it doth belonge vnto vs, ỳ one of vs do preuent an other in loue, and loke vnto no other causes of our loue, but thys onely, that we were fyrste loued of Christ. He deserueth greate prayse, whosoeuer beginneth in good, whether it be in louing, well doinge, pardoning of sinnes, or seking our reconsilyation, &c.

Secondly,

Her doeth shew the loue, great, vnspeakable and fre.

Secondly, where as he is of all most great, most holy, most iust, and most mighty, yet for al that he doth not despise, but loue the lowest which be in no point to be compared vnto him, the vile, wicked and sinfull: yea, and yet his enymies, as we may see to the Romaines. So that there is no worthynesse of any person so great, no iustice, excellency, nor Maiestie, neither on the contrary part, there is any vilenes, balenesse, imperfection, vnworthinesse, or rudenesse so great, that can excuse any man for not louing againe in this mutual loue, which he hath commaunded vs to vse. Wher shall neuer be so much difference found betwixt vs which be christiã men, as passeth not assuredly betwixt our louer Christ & vs which be loued of hym. Would to God they would specially marke thys point, which be of a greater estate or degree, than the rest, & learne in the person and worthinesse of our louer Christ, how they ought to shutte out no Christian person, no not the basest from theyr loue.

Her loueth vs not for any thyng in vs but our owne profite.

Thirdly he loued vs not for his owne, but for our commoditie and profit. The wolfe also loueth the sheepe, and the false sheepheard doth so to: but both of them, so dyuoure the sheepe. The true sheepheard doth loue his sheepe not for his owne, but for theyr profite, he loued vs not carnally, or for any carnall commoditie, as parents were wont to loue their children, but spiritually, and to a spirituall and perpetuall commoditie, that is to say to euerlasting lyfe, that wee may be reconciled with GOD the Father, and made happy for euermore. So that we ought in thys respect also to loue one an other, to leade, instruct, and edifie one an other as much as lyeth in vs, vnto true felicitie. And yet withal the bodily and necessary ayde, helpe and relefe, must not be excluded, wherof is mencion made in Mathewe, which Christ himselfe vsed at that time vnto his Dysciples, and doth now a dayes also. For all is his, and of hym, which we doe vse for the necessity of the sustenaunce of our body.

Math. 25.

He loueth vs feruently and continually.

Fourthly, he loueth vs after a stedfast kinde of loue, which is not sone forsaken, not withstanding that we be vnperfect, and doe offend hym dayly. Whereas he loueth his, saith the Euangelist, which were in this worlde, he loued them vntill the ende. So that we be commaunded thereby to loue our brethren stedfastly and constantly to the ende.

Iohn. 15

Fiftly, he loueth vs not lightly as they say, and as luke warme, but feruently and excellently, in so much that he left his lyfe for vs vpon the crosse, so he sayth in Iohn: Greater loue no man hath, than to giue his life for his friendes, wherfore he doth requyre of vs also, to folow this perfect loue of hys, in louing our brethren. And therefore sayth Iohn in his Canonicall Epistle, For as he hath giuen his life for vs, we must also aduenture our lyues for our brethren. And here let vs waye wyth our selues, howe farre wee bee wyde from thys poynte or perfection of loue, when wee wyll not bestowe our Moneye, and

1. Iohn. 3.

Other thinges of small value, to relieue the necessities of our brethren. Thus we haue briefly touched the circumstances of the loue of Christ, though not all, yet such as if wee would expresse them in our brotherly loue, we should not bee farre shorte of this marke of loue, set vp vnto vs, frō which we bee yet both shorte and wyde: notwithstanding we woulde so much seeme to bee Christians, and the very disciples of Christ.

But some man may say. Howe is it possible that we shoulde come vnto this pricke and excellency of the loue of Christ, by louing of our brethren, whereby he loued vs vntyll death? What Christian man is hee, that is able to reache to the perfection of Christ, by loueing? This is my cōmaundement (sayth hee,) that you loue one an other as I haue loued you. What saythfull creature is he, that is able to performe this?

I aunswere, that this saying, As I haue loued you, must not so be vnderstande, that wee may beleeue our selues to be able to beare the like loue in all points, towards our brother, as the incomprehensible excellency of ỹ loue of Christ is, but we must knowe, that there is a certayne meane, wherein our loue is conformed vnto the loue of christ. It is one thing to be conformable vnto the loue of Christ, and an other to declare and expresse the lyke excellency vnto his loue. Neither doth thys worde As, signifie, a full equipalencye, or euennesse, so that we must countervayle and be lyke in all poynctes. Our Sauiour sayth in Matthewe: Be you therefore perfecte as your Father is also perfect: And in Luke: Be you mercyfull, as your Father is also merciful. Who is so very a sole, to think that the very same perfection and mercy, is required of vs: and that we be able to declare and shewe a lyke of that diuine and incomprehensible perfection & mercy which hath neither measure nor ende.

This were such a matter, as to requyre that ỹ Christiā man should be God, or els at the leaste waye worke the lyke that God doth. Lyke as none can be so iuste, so perfect, so mighty, so mercyfull, so good as god is, vnlesse he be hymselfe also God: so none can so perfectly loue, as Christ, oneles he be Christ. But yet for all that, as in the foresaid places of Mathew & Luke, there is a certaine meane of perfection & mercy set forth in God for vs to folow, which is, that lyke as he doth good to the worthy and vnworthy, to the good and the euill, to the thankfull and vnthankeful, so we must loue not our frendes onely, but our enemyes also, to make our loue and mercy whole and perfecte. After thys manner in this case also there be some things in the loue of Christe, which be set forth vnto vs to be folowed, according vnto hys example, as that is, which we haue recited a litteil before.

But you wyl say: I am not able to reache vnto it by anye imytation or folowing. I aunswere: It is well done to acknowledge the imperfection, thou must indeuour notwithstanding and call for the grace of the holy spyrite, and beware also the corruption of our flesshe, & craue forgiuenesse, which is not denied vnto them that doe repent, and be sory.

But withall thou must not surmyse, that we be no otherwise loued of Christ, than we do our selues loue our neighboure. He doth not say: I will loue you so, as you loue one an other: but hee doth commaunde vs to loue one an other, as we be loued of him. The loue of Christe towardes vs, is an example and mirrour set before vs to this entent, that we should trauaile with all our study and endeauoure to folowe it: and the same is of it selfe perfect and passing in tyme, degree, and excellency. Wherfore it is not possible that the same should be framed vnto the measure of that loue, wherin we loue one an other, but is layde before vs to folowe. So scholemaister doth folowe ỹ imperfection of his scholer in preferring vnto him those thinges that he must learne, but he doth set forth the rules, which he doth prescribe, as full and exacte as it is possible for him. So it is meete that the loue of Christ, our Scholemaister and Sauiour, be in it selfe perfecte and ful, for as much as it is laide before our eyes in steede of an example, not that it can be lessened or diminished according vnto our imperfection, which though that we trauaile and endeauoure neuer so muche, yet it muste nedes continew in vs during out this lyfe, that is to say, for the tyme of imperfection, vntyll that come to passe in vs which is perfecte.

For lyke as wee doe in parte know whiles we be yet in the flesh, so we doe in parte also loue, not onely our neighboures and brethren, but GOD himselfe also. But in the worlde to come, then we shall both knowe and loue GOD and one of vs an other fully and perfectly.

In this saying we do not maintayne the carnall and reprobate, but relyeue the weake and feble conseyences, which Christ himselfe also so loued, that he would dye for them. Euery man must trauayle with all his strength and myght, to the marke of that loue which is layde before him, and yet for all that no man can goe so farre, as to glory that he doth so perfectly loue hys brethren, as wee be loued of Christe, but this wrestlyng and endeauoure of the Godly shall bee contynuall, both for the trauayle to the purposed pricke and marke, and also for the continuall faulte finding of our owne imperfection. Thus wee haue spoken of the three sortes of loue, that is to say, of the loue of GOD, of our neighbours, and of our brethren, as much as is sufficient for this present.

Of the Order of Loue.

Some in seking for an order in Loue, do determinat by ỹ auctoryte of Augustine, that first we must loue GOD, secondely our selues, thirdely our neighbours and brethren, and fourthely our owne bodyes, and our neighbours. But there is nothing in Scripture touching any such order. In deede Christ doth saye, that the fyrste commaundement doth stande in the loue of GOD: but he doth

Howe this precepte can be performed.

The vvord As. Matth. 5.

Luke. 6

The loue of Christ is not conformed vnto our loue.

A double error out of Augustin touchinge the order of loue.

not giue the seconde place to the loue of our selues, but vnto the loue of our neighbour, whereas he saith in Mathew: The secõd is like ẏ first. Thou shalt loue thy neighbour as thy selfe. So that there is a double erroꝛ cõmitted here by thẽ, which do vncircumspectly, and vnaduisedly folow Augustine. One in that they doe recken the loue of our selues amongest the kindes of loue commaunded vs: whereas ther is no commaundement touching the same, foꝛ it is naturally giuen to vs all, to loue our selues, so that there is no nede to gyue any commaũdement concerning this mãner of loue. And whereas the same is coꝛrupted by the sin that dwelleth within vs in our flesh, that coꝛruption is not reformed by commaũding vs to loue our selues, but by ẏ loue of God, of our neighbours and our bꝛethꝛen, which is therefoꝛe pꝛescribed vnto vs by expꝛesse pꝛeceptes, to reforme the naturall affections of loue in vs, and to direct them after a good oꝛder. Wherfoꝛe it is not to be feared that he which doth loue God, his neighboure and bꝛethꝛen aright, can neglect & cast away himselfe, albeit that he doe wholy deny and refuse himselfe, and be addicted full and whole to the glory of God, and the saluation of his neighboure. The other erroꝛ standeth in that, that they doe place the loue of our selues nexte vnto the loue of GOD, whereas Chꝛiste doth assigne the seconde place expꝛessly to the loue of our neighboure.

No additiõ of vertue added vvhi vve should loue God,

Befoꝛe I make an ende of this place, I must admenish the reader hereof also, that in the diuision of the thꝛee soꝛtes of loue, of which we haue spoken, there is no condition added of any vertue, foꝛ which we shoulde loue GOD, our neighbour, oꝛ our bꝛother, but the commaundement goeth simply, that we must loue God, with all our heart, our neighboure as our selues, and our bꝛethꝛen, like as Chꝛist loued vs. And in each of them, there is added a rule of louing, to this ende, that as much as lyeth in vs, our loue should be sincere and pure. Wherin we be admonished, that we ought not so much to searche of what qualitye our Neighbours and bꝛethꝛen be, as to loue them all sincearely and vpꝛightly.

And yet withall the speciall and particular loue of the iust, godly and good, is not excluded, but requꝛyed in the strength of the first loue of GOD: foꝛ lyke as GOD loueth the good, godly, and iust, so accoꝛdinge vnto the disposycyon of true loue, they doe loue the good also, which doe truely and verely loue GOD. GOD loueth iustyce, and hateth wickednesse, hee loueth goodnesse, and hateth malice: he loueth humblenesse and hateth pꝛyde. They haue also the lyke and the verye same affection.

They doe loue iustice, goodnesse, and humblenesse, also, whereseoeuer they doe finde it. But yet withall they bee not ouer fine sifters and searchers of their bꝛethꝛen, when necessity requireth that they should shewe the fruytes of theyꝛ loue towards them, but as hauing ẏ Spiryte of loue once, they doe verely loue all folke, so they do also pꝛactise their intent of well doinges towardes all men.

Of the Feare of GOD.

Supple we shall not do amisse after the place of loue, to adde of the feare of God, if we do consider that kinde of loue, wherein we be commaunded to loue our Lorde God. Foꝛ this is the nature of true & sincere loue, wherin the inferiour is bounde to loue his superiour, ẏ he must loue him not slyghtly, but with reuerence, feare, and due subiection, after which manner the wiues also ought to loue and reuerence theyꝛ husbandes, and the children theiꝛ parentes. The husbandes do also loue their wyues, and ẏ parentes theyꝛ children, but it is not conuenient that they shoulde stande in awe of them, neither is it mete that the superiour should feare the inferiour, but it is mete that hee shoulde earnestly loue him. God doth loue vs, and we doe also loue him agayne. But who is so madde to require in him both the loue and feare of man togither as it is conuenient that both the feare and loue of God shoulde be ioyned in vs? The Apostle doth require, that the husbandes do loue their wiues, and he chargeth on the other side, that the young Women loue their husbandes, but we do not reade of any cõmaundement giuen to men, that they should be reuerently subiect vnto their wiues, as the wiues be commaunded to be subiect vnto their husbandes. So ẏ feare ought to be ioyned vnto loue in ẏ subiects towardes their superiours, but not so contrarywise in the superiours towardes the subiectes: and therof be many good reasons. Therefoꝛe whereas we do adde this place of the Feare of God to that befoꝛe of Loue, it muste bee applied vnto that maner of loue, where bywe be cõmaunded to loue God, leaſt it fall out by any meanes, that seeing we be bould to loue & feare him both togither, we should not loue him aright, if we be voide of his feare.

I. What Feare is.

ALL be it our purpose is not to speake absolutely of Feare, as there might be many things said therof generally, but to note those things onely which do concerne the feare of god, yet foꝛ all that I doe suppose that it may seruе somwhat to the purpose, if we do briefly note what, how necessary, wherof, and howe manyfolde feare is.

It is defined to bee an awe of some euil, dꝛawing neere at hand, Thus they do make feare to bee a kynde of awe: wherof be many other kindes also, as slouth, shame, terrour, tremblyng, fallyng out of a mans wit, trouble of minde, and dꝛeadfulnesse. Slouth is the awe oꝛ dꝛeade of laboure to come. Shame is the dꝛeade of some euil passe: Terrour is an abashinge dꝛeade, of which commeth paleneſſe of coloure, trembling, gnashing of teeth like as blushinge doth of shame: Trẽbling is ẏ awe which astonieth ꝑ minde: the falling out of the minde, is that which foloweth the astonying of ꝑ minde: ꝑ trouble off the minde, is that which putteth of our thoughts and deuises, dreadfulnesse is the awe, & dread which doth long abyde and continewe.

All these sortes bee vnder awe and dread, & one of thē is feare, which is when we doe dreade the euills which draweth on: and all be it they come not on, yet when wee suppose that they doe come vppon vs, wee be afrayde. And the affection of this is quyte contrarye vnto appetite, which is when wee do desire and greedyly loke for such thinges as be, or els are supposed to be good, profitable and pleasaunt, of whence it cōmeth to passe, that our myndes wrestling togither in hope and feare, are tossed in great turmoyle and trouble.

And in my opinion, some do very inconsiderately finde faulte with the affection of feare, as vnprofitable, dishonest, yea and hurtefull also, and not meete for a wise man to deale withall, whereas it is naturally giuen vnto all men, and is not onely profitable for the estate of man, but is also expedyent and necessary to vse in Religion and Godly lyfe. Take awaye the feare of euill, and what waye shall there be to chastice youth by lawes and threatnynges of punishementes, and to restraine the wickednesse of the reprobate: Was it sayde for naught, that the euyll doe feare to offende, for dread of the payne, and that the Apostle sayth: In case they doe amisse. Feare, for the swoorde is not caried in vayne. To what ende be the cramples of them written, read and tolde, which haue bene in daūger for doing euyll, or vnwysely, if there shall be no vse of feare in vs, whereby we maye be restrayned and made weary, least we suffer the same also? The Scripture doth oftentimes charge vs to feare GOD, whych it would not do, oneles that feare were both profitable and necessary for a godly person. Therefore seeing that the affection of feare is giuen vs of God, as well as is the affection of ioye, loue, hope, hate, &c. And that neither ꝑ societie of mans lyfe, neither the godlynesse of true Religion can lacke it. Who seeth not howe great regarde wee ought to haue of it? and that wee ought not to spoile & bereaue our nature of the gyfte which it hath receyued of GOD, and so to make it altogither weake, and without strength? For it is not possible, that wee shoulde retayne hope and loue, if wee bee destitute of feare: For loue is a matter full of carefull feare, and feare is also coupled with hope, I meane of thys present lyfe, otherwise in the lyfe to come wee shall so loue that it shall not be any thing at all myxed with feare.

Feare giuē to all naturally, profitable and necessarie.

Sundry sorts of feare.

AND there bee sundry sortes of feare, according to the varietie of the things which be feared, and yet it may be deuided into foure most generall sortes, so that one may be touching sickenesse and diseases, and an other touchinge powertye and lacke, an other touchinge shame and rebuke, and the other of all those things and offences which may through violence be done to our bodyes.

Foure kyndes of feare.

For like as ther be diuers loues and likynges, for as much as some doe loue wealth, some the health of the body, some glory, some pleasures, and that we doe commonly all of vs loue this life, so there is bredde a variety also of feare in vs. But that feare doth most abash vs, which commeth of the dread of ꝑ might of others, for that commeth with great toyle and trouble, for it carieth withall fire and swoord, prison and fetters, & sundry torments, the gallowes and the axe, and all other deuises of cruelty. Wherefore it is no wonder, if the feare thereof be great, which in varietie is great, & in prouisiō terrible. Tyrauntes doe vnderstande by the knowledge and proofe of mannes weakenesse, how terrible these matters be to the flesh, and therefore they doe vse them to compell & inforce the mindes of their subiectes, and to obtaine thereby what so euer they list to haue of them. But this feare which riseth of the honest and due loue towardes our superiours, is to be discerned from those kindes of feare. For in this feare is nothing feared elle, but the offending of them, whom wee wyth to haue in all thinges well affected towardes vs, and so we do chiefly feare GOD, and nexte the children their parentes, and so the wiues with a reuerence also, doe feare their husbandes.

Precepts of feare of God.

Why the feare of God is commaunded in the Scriptures.

IT is commaūded in Deutero. in this wise Thou shalt feare the Lord thy God, and serue him onely. And in Iosue, Feare God and serue him in ꝑ sincke. Feare the Lord all ye his holy ones: and Christ saith in Mathew, Feare him who is able to cast both body and soule into the pit of hell, and the Apostle Peter saith. Feare God and honor the king.

Deut. 6. 10. Iosue. 24. Psalm. 34. Matth. 10. 1. Per. 2.

And there may be moued a question. For as much as the feare of them which may destroy vs, is naturally grafted in the hartes of all, to what purpose serueth it to giue commaundement of the loue of god, seeing that he is most mighty, and so by the course of nature may be feared aboue all others?

VVe should not neede the commaundements of Loue, vnles we were corrupted of nature.

I answere. In deede so it is, And we should not haue had nadeed any precept in this matter, in case the affections which we haue of nature grafted in vs, had remained to vs stil vncorrupted. But after ꝑ they became once corrupte, it commeth so to passe, that lyke as we do of a perverse, and disordered loue, loue the worse and hate the better, according vnto the saying of Basile: Men doe vnaduisedly hate the better, and loue the worser, so we doe also in disordered feare, dread those thigs which ought not to be dread, and set light by those matters, which we ought to feare in deede, and which is the fondest part of al, we doe feare men and not feare GOD. So that it is most necessary to haue thys corruption of feare which is in vs to be rectified and reformed. First by precepts, and secondly by the operation of the Spirite. And this is the cause, why there is commaundement gyuen vs to feare GOD, for of our own nature we be not inclined vnto it, which is not throughe the faulte of the thyng it selfe, but throughe our owne faulte. Upon like reason there is commaundement gyuen for the feare of our parents.

Leuit. 19. Of the feareing of the parentes.

See that euery man (sayeth he) feare hys Father and hys Mother. In case that Chyldren dyd as naturally feare theyr parentes, as theyr parentes doe naturally loue them, this precept were not so necessarie: as it is vnnedefull to cõmaunde the parentes to loue theyr chyldren, bycause by course of nature they doe it without commaundement, yea, and sometymes loue them more, than were conuenient or commodious for them selues. Vnto iust men (sayth the Apostle) there is no law set, but to ỹ vniust. If we were in this respecte so iust, that we woulde feare God, there should no lawe be giuen to charge vs to feare God. And to what purpose were it to charge and to say to him which loueth already, Loue: & to him which feareth, Feare. Therfore in that that we be commaunded to feare God, there is manifestly enough declared our corruption, which maketh vs to haue smal estimation and regarde of him, whome we ought to reuerence and feare principally and aboue all things.

How many kindes there be of the Feare of God.

They be called happie which doe feare God.

IN deede the Scripture doth cõmende and reporte them to be happie, which doe feare God. They that doe feare the Lorde, sayth the Prophete, shalbe glorified. And the Lorde is their greunde, which doe feare hym. And, There is no lacke to them which doe feare hym. Itẽ, He will do the will of them which doe feare him. Item, Blessed be all they, which do feare the Lorde, and many such other places which be read in the Scriptures. But yet there is a matter in this, with what kinde of loue we do feare God. For the loue of God is not all one in all folke, but sundrye and dyuers one from an other: of which poynt I thinke good to note a litle.

Three feares of God.

Commonly men doe make two feares of God, one seruile, and the other friendly, or of the childe: and we wyll note these sortes of feare. The one of them which say in their heartes, There is no God. The second of them which do feare God, bycause of reuenge and punishmẽt, when they do heare that he is a iust iudge, and punisher of the wicked. The third is of thẽ, which do feare him as a father, & so stande in awe to offende him.

The feare of them which do say there is no God.

As concerning the first kinde of feare, it may be sayde that it is not possible that any man should feare God, which doth not beleue in God, and doth saye in his heart, There is no God. Truely like as he doth not feare the Deuill, which taketh all those things to be but fables & tales, which be read of the Deuil in the Scriptures, forasmuch as he doth not beleue that there is anye Deuill at all,) and howe should he be afearde of him, whome he beleeueth not to be? so it semeth not possible ỹ he should feare God, which in beleeuing that there is no God, supposeth all those things which be spoken of God, to be but deuises and imaginations. But in case we doe consider

consider the strengthe of the conscience, which is somewhat touched now and than in such folke, throughe the brightnesse of the truth of God, we can no wise denie, but that oftentimes it chaunceth thẽ to be carefull, and afrayed, least peraduenture there be some God, though they thinke that there be none: and least that those thinges be to true, which be reported of his iustice and iudgements: and that so it will fall out, that at long running, they shal fele his reuẽge to their vtter destructiõ. Who doubteth but that there riseth such thoughtes sometymes in the heartes of them, which would perswade themselues, that there is no God? And what is it els to haue these, but to be touched with some feling of the feare of God? The like betideth vnto them also, which bycause they haue no hope to obtaine the felicitie to come, they doe stande wholy vpon this point, to perswade themselues that there is no other life to be looked for, after this present life past, and that there shall be no iudgement, but that al things be determined by the death of our bodie. So that there remaineth nothing of vs more. Do we thinke that they haue alwayes carelesse consciences, so that they do neuer fele the feare of hel fire in their heartes, though ỹ they would denie that there shalbe any such matter? Surely like as it passeth our abilitie to beleue a right, and after our beliefe with stedfaste hope for those things, which be beleued and hoped vpon, vnlesse we haue giuen vnto vs the grace and Spirite of Fayth from Heauen. So there is none so full and absolute vnbeliefe, at our owne commaundement, that we can alwayes firmely and for euer iudge these things to be false, which we wyll not beleue. For the wicked will they, nill they, be by the speciall purpose of God touched sometimes with the sence or perseuerance of the truthe, so that though they doe take neuer so much care and paynes to get to the Deuill, and to confirme theyr minde in vnbeliefe, and doe vtterly exclude all feare of the iudgement to come, yet for all that they haue oftentimes stirring, & remorse in thẽ selues, & exceading anguith & care.

The feare of punishment is seruile.

The second kynde of the feare of God we sayde is of them, which being ouercome by the testimony of their conscience, do beleue & knowe that there is a God, and doe not so much loue hym as God, as they do feare hym as a iust iudge, which doeth worthely punish sinners: like as the seruaunt doeth acknowledge his master, but he doth not so much loue, as feare hym, bycause of the knowledge of his owne offences, and dreadyng, least hee wyll be a harde and heauie master vnto him. This is the seruile, and lawfull feare, whereof the Apostle spake: For you haue not receyued the spirite of bondage agayne in feare. The Spirite of bondage is the spirite of them, that be bounde as seruauntes and bondmen, which doe so feare their maisters, that they do serue thẽ not for loue, but for feare of punishment. Such is the spirite of them which doe lyue vnder the lawe, and doe folowe iustice according to the letter and preceptes of the Lawe, and thereby they hope to escape the seueritie & sharpnesse of God, as the iust iudge, which they would not doe, vnlesse that they were afrayde of reuenge.

Rom. 8.

would

The thirde kinde of the feare of God is that, when the elenes and swch as be godly in deede, doe honour and serue God as a father, depende vpon his wil with reuerence, and haue a speciall feare, least by any meanes they shoulde offende hym because of the loue which they doe beare vnto hym. These men do differ from the other sort before, like as a chaste and faithful wife which loueth hir husbande, doeth differ from an harlot. They doe both of the feare their husbandes, but after a sundrye sorte. The one least shee shoulde offende and turne his mynde from hir, which thing shoulde bee most griefe vnto hir, because of the loue which shee doeth beare vnto hym in the waye of wedlocke. The other, least she shoulde be punished for hir falthede, which she is more afearde of, than to offende hym, because she beareth him no good heart. The first is, sorye for the absence of hir husbande, and hath a great desire and expectation of his returne: but vnto the other, hir husbandes presence is very cumbersome, she is glad when he is gone, and sorye when he returneth again: and she neuer loketh for him but be alwayes afrayde, least that hee come home sooner then shee would haue hym to doe, and before he be welcome. There is the like difference betwixt them, which doe seruily feare God, and not but for feare of punishment, and such as do feare and reuerence hym, as theyr father by the affection and spirite of Children and sonnes. The feare of them in the Scriptures is called, a holy feare, and to it we must applye all those things, which as we sayde before, are reported in the Scriptures of the felicitie of them which doe feare God.

This feare of god, charitie, though it be neuer so great, doeth not exclude, but rather bryde & encrease. Wherefore the saying of John, is not to be vnderstanded of this feare: Feare is not in charitie, but perfecte charitie shaketh Feare out a dores, bycause ỳ feare is ioyned with punishment, and he which feareth is not perfecte in charitie. For the Apostle speaketh there, of the feare of the latter daye when the Lorde shall come to iudge, which appeareth by that which goeth before, where he sayeth: Herein we haue perfecte charitie, that we haue sure hope vpon the daye to iudgement, for lyke as he is, so we be also in this world. And after he had so said, he addeth: Feare is not in charitie, but perfect charitie thrusteth feare out a dores, as though he shoulde saye: bycause they which doe truly loue the Lorde, be so affected, that they doe not stande in feare of the comming of that daye of iudgement, when the Lord shall returne vnto vs, but they doe rather wishe and loke for it with a good hope & truste. Therefore he doeth so attribute truste vnto loue, that he doth exclude and shut out feare, which can not stande with it. Who can saye, that the same people do truely loue their Prince, which be afrayde of his comming vnto them? Doeth not the faythful people rather wish and desire, that their Prince maye quickly come vnto them, specially when his retourne and comming shall serue to the ful possession of his kingdome, and the expulsion of all his enemies and traitours: In this sense it is most true that John saith, that feare is not in perfect loue.

How feare is not in charitie, and yet perfecte charitie casteth feare out of dores.

The Apostle doth also continually enforce, that one Christian man must loue an other, and that not only in word, but in worke also. But yet at that tyme it was daungerous, for the Christian men were in the very like case in this worlde, as Christe was him selfe: that is to saye, hated of all folke, which the Lorde hymselfe tolde them of before, saying: This I charge you, that you loue one an other. If the world doth hate you, vnderstande you that it hated me firste. If you were of the world, the world would loue his owne. But forasmuch as you be not of the worlde, but that I haue chosen you out of the world, therefore the worlde doeth hate you, Item: If they haue persecuted me, they shall also persecute you: if they haue kept my sayings, they shall kepe yours also. But they shal doe all this to you for my sake, &c. So it fell out, that many Christian men, more fearing the worlde than louyng Christe, toke the longer aduisement in louing, embracing, receyuing, and cherishing the bretherne, fearing least bycause of them, they shoulde bee in daunger of the hatred and persecutions of the worlde. This kynde of feare is not in loue, for the more that the Christian man doth loue Christe and the brethren, the lesse hee doeth feare the worlde, and them which be able to kyll the bodye. Wherefore it is true in this sense also, which John sayeth, that feare is not in charitie, but that perfecte charitie casteth feare alway. But it shoulde not bee true, if we should vnderstande it of the feare of the children of God, which true loue breedeth. For the same doth always remayne in the heartes of the godly, according vnto the saying of the Psalmiste: The feare of the Lorde is chaste, for pure, remaining for euer more, and doth so much please the Maiestie of God, that he doeth accomplishe the will of them which doe so feare him, and doth open his secretes vnto them. Psalm. 9.

Of whence the Feare of God commeth.

That the feare of God commeth of the gift and spirit of God.

The feare of God is one of the affections of the heart, like as loue, hope, and ioye be: and it maketh much to the purpose of what qualitie ỳ heart be to make a man to feare God, whom he seeth not, euen likeas it is to cause him to loue him, wheras he doth harde & scarsly loue his neighbours, whom he seeth euery day before his eyes. We do finde in deede by experience, that the feare of the Lord is not in al men, and therfore that it cõmeth not of the flesh. Wherefore we may wel determine that it commeth of the gifte and Spirit of God: & that the holy scriptures do testifie. For so we do reade in Hieremie: I will giue them one heart, and one waye, that they may feare me all their dayes, and that it may be well with them, and with their children after them. And I wil strike an euerlasting couenant with them, and I will not cease to doe them good, and I will put the feare of me into their hearts, so that they Jeremi. 32 shall not go frō me, & I wil reioyce in them, when I doe them good. Loe, the hearte to feare the Lorde, is gyuen from the Lorde. And in Iosue we reade in this wyse: And there shall go forth a rodde out of the stocke of Iesse, and there shall growe vp a spring out of his rote, and the spirite of the Lorde shall reste vpon hym, the Spirite of wisedome and vnderstanding, the Spirite of counsell and strengthe, the Spirite of knowledge and feare of the Lorde. Iosue.11.

By these two testimonies of the holy Scripture we do gather, that firste the heart to feare the Lorde, is giuen from the Lord, so that it commeth not of the strength of ẏ flesh, but is a speciall gift of God.

Secondly, that they which doe enioye this gift of God, doe feare the Lord, not waueringly and for a small seasō, but for al the dayes of their lyfe.

Thirdly, that they be parteners of the euerlasting couenant of God.

Fourthly, that they be happy, not them selues onely, but their childrē also. That it may be wel with them, (saith he) & their children after thē. Item: I wil not ceasse to doe them good. Item: And I will reioyce ouer them, when I do them good.

Fiftly, that the spirite of ẏ Lord, which resteth vpon the rodde and offspring of Iesse, that is to say, vpō Christ the sonne of Dauid, is both the spirite of wisedome, vnderstanding, counsell, strength and knowledge, and of the feare of the Lorde also: not so much bycause it doeth worke these thynges in the persone of Christe, as bycause it doth poure forth these giftes into the hearts of the faithfull Christians, but of this matter you may see more in our cōmentaries vpon Esay. The same spirite of God which is the spirit of fayth, hope and loue, is the spirite of the feare of God also in the elect, and and faithfull. And we doe meane of that chaste and holy loue, whereof we spake in the article before. Esai.11.

Now the seruile feare is striken into men by some other meanes, & that carnal, as by sight & hearing, or by tokens and examples, or by some earnest consideration of the might and seueritie, or hardenesse of God. Of vvhat the seruile feare properly standeth.

By sight and hearing of lightening & thonder, wherby the heartes of the wicked also be put in feare. Such a thing chaunced to the Israelites, what time they heard the thonder and the cracke of the trompet, vpon the mount of Sinai, & saw the lightening and thicke cloude, & the mountaine terribly burning & smoking, and thereby were stricken with great feare. For God meante by these meanes to stryke a feare of hymselfe in this harde hearted people, and therefore he sayde vnto Moses: Gather me the people together, that they may heare my wordes and learne to feare me, as long as they shal liue vpō the earth, and also teach it their children, and it followeth also: And you came to the foote of the hyll, which was all a fire vp to the skye, and there was darkenesse, cloudes, & dimnesse vpon it. And the Lorde spake vnto you out of the middes of the fire. Exod.19. Deut.4.

His wyll was also to vse the tokens of hys mightes towardes that people, to the intent they should feare hym. So Iosue did set vp the twelue stones, taken out of the bottome of Iordaine, to the ende that they shoulde be tokens of Gods mighte, whereby he had conueyed his people, a drye foote, through the chanell of the riuer of Iordaine, and that by the sight of the same, all the people of that lande, and the Israelites also them selues might learne and acknowledge the strong hande of God, and feare hym. See the place it selfe. Iosue.4.

The exāples also of Gods might, when the godly be deliuered out of many and great daungers, and the wicked with their offspring be destroyed, be set forth in ẏ holy scriptures, vnto this vse, that as many as do sée thē, may learne to feare God, and regarde his might & power. So the Prophet sayth: Many shall sée, & be afraide, and trust vpon the Lord, and what shall they sée? he declared that before, when he sayd: I did long, and looke for the Lord, and he gaue eare vnto me, and he heard my prayers, and lead me out of ẏ lake of miserie, and out of the myre of filthe, and he grounded my féete vpon the rocke, and directed my steps. And: What doest thou glorie in malice, which art mightie in wickednesse? &c. Therefore God shall destroy thée vtterly, he shall plucke thée vp, and shall make thée to departe from thy dwelling, & thy rote from the land of the liuing: the iust shall sée, and be a fearde, &c.

And the earnest considerati ō also of the might and sharpenesse of God, doth much helpe to pointe in the affection of the feare of God. As in case a man doe consider, how great the might of God is, whereby he can, not onely slaye our bodies, but destroy our soule and body both into the pitte of Hell: hée can not chose but feare him.

Yea, and the diligent reading & meditation of Gods worde doeth much serue to this effect also, wherupon there is a commaundement also touching the Prince of the people of God in this wyse. And after that he is setled in the seate of his kingdome, he shall wryte out a copie of this lawe, in a booke, taking the paterne therof from the priests of the tribe of Leui, and he shall kéepe it with him, and reade it all the dayes of his life, and learne to feare the lord his God, &c. And thus much briefly touching this point, wherof the feare of God commeth. Mat.10. Deut.17.

How the feare of God is addressed from God.

WE sayd that the feare whereof we entreate, is the gift of god. God doth not onely giue his giftes vnto men, but hée doeth bestowe them also after a certaine order, according vnto his special prouidence, whereby he doth most wisely employ all things vnto our saluation. So he doth also bestow the feare of him, after a cōuenient order & rule, whereas he doth attribute vnto it, ẏ firste degrée of our conuersion and turning vnto hym, and maketh them which were before, vnbeléeuing and despisers of God, to beginne to feare and reuerence hym, whom they despised before, which feare ẏ affection of loue afterwards doth folow and ensue, so that they may by litle and litle loue his goodnesse the better, being well once vnderstanded, and beginne to depende therevpon in good assured hope, and That the first degree of our turning is in the feare of God.

That the feare of God is likened to a shomakers ende.

than yeld vnto him a sacrifice of laude & praise. In this māner ỹ doore of mans hart is opened by ỹ feare of god, to be turned vnto true Godlines: So ỹ Augustine doth wel cõpare it to ỹ thoe brissel of a shomakers thrid, which beeing once entred: draweth the thride after it, wherby that is sowen together, which was lose before.

And this orderly bestowing of ỹ feare of God was so declared in the Israelites, that it toke the first begynning there. For they receiued in ỹ mount of Sinai, not ỹ spirit of loue, but of feare, next for the olde and mutuoop testament, wherin they should be taught & enformed lyke children, vnder ỹ lesson & discipline of ỹ law, vntil ỹ they should come to ỹ time of liberty, and obtayne the spirite of loue, which belongeth vnto the children: of which the Apostle writeth in this wise: For you haue not receiued the spirit of bondage agayne in feare, but you haue receiued the spirit of adoption of the children of God, in whom we do cry Abba Father. By which woords he doth sufficiently declare, that it was so appointed by ỹ counsell of God, that the people of the olde Testament, beeing appointed and set vnder the lawe, should bee led on by the spirit of feare, but the people of the new testament should be trayned on, by the spyrite of children, which is of true loue & liberty. And therfore was that written to the beléeuing people of the new Testament. For you be not come to the touched hyll, and to the burning fire and rage, to the darknesse and tempest, to the sound of ỹ trúpet, & the noise of ỹ woords which ỹ hearers besought that ỹ speach or cõmunication should not be spoken vnto them. For they could not abide that which was cõmanded. If any beast touch ỹ hill, it shall be stoned or thrust through wt a dart. And ỹ sight was so dreadful, which appeared that Moses, sayd: I was abashed & trembled: but you came vnto ỹ mount Sion, and to ỹ cithe of the liuing God, to the heauenly Jerusalem &c. By which woordes there is a difference made betwixt the olde and the new Testament, vnder the figures of Sinai and Sion, and it is expressed with how great feare the first was ordeyned, and how contrary a comming we haue to the communicating of the latter.

Hebre. 13.

Notwythstanding ỹ begynnings of the new testament also had their feare, for we do reade ỹ they were in some feare at Hierusalem, what tyme the glory of Christs name begã dayly to grow brighter & brighter in the eyes of all men, by many signes and wonders: for so we doe reade in the Acts: And euery soule was in feare. And there were many wonders and tokens shewed by Apostles, so ỹ ther fel great feare vpon all men, & they which had the gyft to beleeue the gospell of God, hearing ỹ preachings of Peter, wer abashed at the begynning of theyr conuersion, wyth the feare wbych they cõceued therpõ, saying. What shal we do my brethren? And vpon the punishment also of Ananias & Saphira, ther arose a great feare in al ỹ congregatiõ, & others also. But ther followed this feare, ỹ spirite of loue, & of ỹ chyldrẽ of god, so streng that they stoche not to gyue ouer fit the counsell of God that feare should go before loue.

themselues, and to betake thẽ to the crosse, & folow the Lord, and to suffer al maner of things for his sake.

And the matter is not without cause so directed by the counsell of God, that feare shoulde goe before loue, and not loue before feare (I meane nowe not of that feare which they call the feare of children, which is breedde of loue, but of that whiche they doe call seruile) to make the beginnyng of the cõuersion, or turning. For that kynde of feare whiche is striken into the hartes of men, from the fælling and perseueraunce of the might, iustice, and seueritie of God, is as it were a certen warder of due obseruaunce and reuerence: wherby it is forseene, that ỹ loue which followeth dothe not traine in negligẽce & disordered carelesnesse after it: for it is a very ready matter & easie for the minde, whiche hath neuer before bene stryken with any perseuerance of the Maiesty of God: when at the firste turnyng it is perswaded of his goodnesse, and so beginneth to loue hym whome it neuer feared, that it may some set light by him, whome it ought to loue and honor. Wee doe see that the mariages bee not all of the beste and happiest, where in the beginning, the wife is voyde of feare and reuerence towardes hyr good man: but when the wife hath some feare of hyr husbande at the firste hande, and doth by good proofe vnderstande what his power and authoritie shal be: of such beginnings may be hoped for some constant loue, and quetie in mariage.

Furthermore, as for the bringyng vp of chyldren, the spirite of feare, whereby they may be restrayned to the precepts of the Scholemaster, & kept as it were by feare of the rodde in discipline and learnyng, is more profitable than the spirite of libertie. So fareth also the feare of God in the yong beginnyng and rude christian men, whiche muste no otherwise be instructed thẽ the a, b, c, children bee, and it is as profitable for them to be kepte vnder the feare of God, vntill suche tyme as they doe receyue the spirite of larger fayth, hope & charitie, by what tyme they shall be no longer meete for the elementary & seruile discipline. Surely it were an euilfauored order in bringyng vp a yong man, if we shoulde graunt the spirite of libertie vnto childehoode, and the spirite of feare & bondage vnto the mans age.

What the efficacie of the feare of God is.

For asmuche as it is a cleare case, that feare is the gifte of God, which is giuen from him only, and employed accordyng onto hys speciall deuise and order, it may easily be thought to be profitable & effectuall, to the study and endeuour of godly life. For albeit that it make no man perfect, yet for al that, it worketh those things, without which no mã clymeth vp to ỹ perfecter things: wherefore we haue thought good to note yet somewhat by the way, of the effect thereof.

In case we doe consider what the feare of the scholemaster worketh in the scholer, we may coniecture vpon that similitude, what the feare of God worketh in the man, that is not all togither reprobate, and forsaken, Firste the feare of the scholemaister doth so restrayne the scholler, that he contemne not his mayster, & that he be not to careles and negligent, nor so rashe as to presume to know that whiche he hath not yet learned. Secondly, it maketh him attent to heare, and diligently to learne. Thirdly, it maketh him to be wary and careful, that he transgresse no peece of the charge which is giuen him, and so be worthy to haue the rodde. Fourthly, it maketh him to be liked of his master. Fiftly, it maketh him in continuaunce to loue learnyng, and hys scholemaister also, and to become a cunnyng and a learned man.

Feare excludeth the contempte of God.

In like manner the feare of God doth firste exclude the cõtẽpt of God, and the frowarde securitie and careslesnesse of our flesshe, & it leaueth no place vnto false persuasion, wherby to presume of our owne rightuousnesse. No man doth commonly contemne him, whome he is afearde of, & whom he knoweth to be most able to be reuenged. No man can be careless of him, whome he feareth, and knoweth to be euerywhere present, and who can not be deceyued in any poynt. No man trusteth to his owne rightuousnesse, which is privy of his owne sinnes, & feareth him, whome he knoweth to be the most iust iudge of all men. These matters can haue no place in that man, whiche beginneth truely to loue God.

It maketh a man meete to learne the wyl of God.

Secondly, the feare of God dothe make a manne attente also to heare Gods worde, and to learne what he shoulde doe to apply himselfe to his will, wherin standeth the beginning of wisedome, accordyng vnto that saying: The beginning of wisedom, is the feare of the Lord. Whē Paule was ouerthrowen from heauen, and stryken with the feare of the Lorde, hee sayde: Lorde, what wilte thou haue me to doe? And the people being abashed and astonied at ỹ preachyng of Peter, asked immediatly what they should doe.

It bringeth desire to flie that whiche is euill.

Thirdely, there commeth of the feare of GOD an endeuour to flie those things whiche be euill, and displeasant vnto God. So we doe reade in the Prouerbs: The wise mã doth feare, and eschew the euill. And, The feare of the Lorde dothe hate the euill. And, By the feare of the Lord, euery man dothe flie from euill. So the Midwiues of the Ebrewes, whiche were charged by Pharao to kyll all the men chyldren at the labour of the Ebrewe women, & to reserue the womenkynde, refused to folowe it, bycause they did feare the Lorde, For so we do reade in Exodus. The Midwyues did feare God, & did not accordyng to the commaundement of the king of Egypte, but they dyd preserue and saue the menchyldren. So Susanna also, bycause she feared God, would not consent to the wantonnesse of the wicked olde iudges: and herof it commeth, that we do see all kynde of mischiefe slowe to effect in them, whiche haue not the feare of GOD in them. This Abraham wiste well, when he should trauayle in Geraris, and therfore imagening in hys harte, peraduenture there is no feare of God in this place, & they will kyll mee, bycause of my wife: he called his wife by the name of Sister. And the Apostle when hee had sayd: There is no man iuste, none of vnderstãdyng, none that seketh God.

All haue gone out of the way, they are all become vnprofitable, there is none that hath done good, no not one. Theyr throte is an open sepulcher, they haue spoken deceptefully with theyr tongues, the poyson of Addors is vnder theyr lippes, whose mouthe is full of curse and bytter wordes, theyr feete be swifte to shedde bloud, there is sorowe and wretchednesse in theyr waies, and they knewe not the waye of peace: and to declare the cause of all these euils hee added: There is no feare of God before theyr eyes.

Fourthly, the feare of God dothe bringe the studie of godly lyfe, and of the seruice of God. So the feare and seruice of God be ioyned togither in Deuteronomie, where wee do reade in this wyse. Thou shalte feare thy Lorde God, and serue him. And in Iosue. Feare GOD (sayth hee) and serue hym. And therefore it is that in the Scripiures the worde יראה whiche doth properly signifie feare, is oftentymes taken for the seruice of God, which commeth of the feare of hym, as in the Psalmes. I will adore in thy Temple, in thy feare, that is to say: In thy seruice. Wherby is meant, that the same is not the true seruice of God, whē men of vnthrifty lyfe, and whiche feareth God nothyng at all, doe boast and crake, that they do serue him.

Fiftly, he that dothe truely feare God, is diligent in his endeuour of rightuousnesse towardes his neighbour. So the Centurion, of whome we do read in the Actes, when he feared God, he vsed to bestow much almesse to the nedie people.

Sixtly, the feare of God maketh the Gospel of Gods grace to be most acceptable, & welcome vnto vs. For what can be better welcome to the conscience which is stryken with the feare of God and percepueraunce of our sinnes, than the gospel of the forgiuenesse of sinnes, and of the euerlasting saluatiõ purchased by Christ: Wherfore we do see, that they which without ỹ feare of God do presume vppon their owne iustice, be heauy mayskers to the doctrine of grace, & do hande and fote waskle and striue agaynst it, as the Iusticiaries and Pharisies dyd amongst the Iewes in the tyme of Christe, and the Apostles and Paule, findyng this to bee true in deede, whē he went about to preache Christe in the Synagoge of the Iewes, purposing to sette forth the worde of grace vnto the moste stubborne, and stiffe people. In the beginnyng of his talke he sayde: You men of Israell which do feare God, heare mee: and in the procese of hys talke, he repeted againe, saying: My brethren and children of the stocke of Abraham, you whiche amongst the rest do feare God, vnto you ỹ worde of thys saluation is sente: meanyng that the doctrine of grace taketh no place in them, whose myndes bee not humbled by the feare of God, and the knowledge of their sinnes, and so become grædy & desirous of the grace of God.

Seuenthly, the feare of God doth prepare mens myndes to loue God, after that wee bee once come to the faith of his grace in Christ: but therof we haue spoken before.

Eyghtly, the sincere & pure feare of God hath a marueylous prerogatiue and auauntage in the sight of God, but we spake hereof before in the beginnyng of the thyrde article. We may here adde also out of Salomon, that he dothe attribute prolonging of our dayes to the feare of God, whereas hee saythe: The feare of the Lorde shall prolong the dayes, and the yeares of the wicked shall be shortened. And he dothe attribute also hope & truste of strength in our offspryng also, saying: In the feare of the Lord there shall be some truste of strength, and theyr chyldren shall haue hope also. And hee dothe attribute vnto it also the fountayne of life, where he addeth immediatly: The feare of the Lorde, is the fountayne of lyfe, to auoyde the destruction of death. Thus muche I haue thought mete to passe ouer, touchyng the profite and efficacie of the feare of the Lord: beestowyng no busie trauayle, nor many wordes aboute it. And would God we might feele it in vs in deede in this latter worlde, wherein we see very small frupte of the feare of the Lorde.

Of the abuse of Feare.

In the seconde article wee made mention of the frowarde and disordered feare, when we doe feare the thyngs whiche ought not to be feared more than those whiche ought to be feared, yea and feare that whiche ought to bee feared, after an vndue and wrong sorte and meanes. I thynke it conuenient to speake some what of thys abuse of feare, before wee leaue this place. And wee will not speake generally of all kyndes of disordered feare, but of those onely whiche doe concerne the religion of GOD. And firste, it is a disordered feare, when the conscience or knowledge of manne is more feared, than the conscience or knowlege of God, whiche dothe oftentimes betyde, when suche as are gyuen to sinne be not afrayde, least God see or knowe the matter, vnto whose eyes all thyngs doe lye open, but they be so afrayde of the knowledge of menne, that if they can possibly, they will hyde theyr doyngs from them, and so sinne the more at liberty, else they will stay themselues frō the doyng of that, whiche otherwise they woulde haue done. He did well that warned vs, that the little babe shoulde cause vs to forbeare oure sinne, and that no filthy sighte or fact shoulde passe into the porche of the house, where chyldren bee: hys meanyng was, that wee shoulde beware, that the tender and yong yeares bee not infected, and corrupted by the euill examples of theyr Elders: But wee doe speake of that warenesse, when men disposed to sinne lacke to spare not others, but themselues, and doe feare, and flie the knowledge of men more carefully than of GOD, whiche is nothyng else, but to feare men more than God.

To feare the knowledge of men, more than the knowledge of God.

Secondly, the feare of them is suche also, which doe feare the might of manne more than the mighte of God, as they doe whiche doe feare tyrannts, whiche can kill the bodies of menne, but doe not feare GOD who is able to destroy bothe the body and the soule in Hell fire: or at the least they doe not feare hym so muche, as they doe feare men. This disorder of feare Christ doth reforme in Matthew.

To feare the might of men, more than the might of God.

Matth.

3 Thirdly,

To esteme the precepts of men more than the precepts of God.

3 Thirdly, when the authoritie of man is more esteemed than the authoritie of God, so that it muste be a high offence to omitte those things vndone, which mē do decree, & charge in the church: but not alike to omitte the preceptes of God. Is not suche a manner of feare, out of order, when we doe feare God lesse than men: & yet we do see it dayly done in the popery so euidently, that they can not excuse theselues of it, where it is reputed for a moste high & irremissible wickednesse, if any man dare transgresse the Popes decrees, and yet the same in the meane season they doe make it light matter to transgresse ỹ precepts of God. In our dayes there hath bene Priests put to the fyre, for entring into mariage, whiche is by Gods law no where forbidden, yea & such also as hath eaten flesh vpon the dayes prohibited by the tyrannie of the Pope, and in no place forbidden by God: and yet in the meane season they do scape scotfree which do sinne not onely agaynst the Seconde, but also against the First table of Gods commaundements, in doyng Idolatry, forswearing, &c.

To keepe the preceptes of God, not bicause God dothe commaund them, but men. Esay. 29. Matth. 15.

4 Fourthly, do not they also disorderly feare God, whiche do obserue his precepts, not bycause that they be commaunded by him, but bycause they be afearde of men, by whome they be compelled to obserue them: This kinde of feare the Lorde himselfe founde faulte withall in Esay. And Christe himselfe doth plainely touche it in Matthew.

To doe those thinges in the feare of God, whiche be agaynst his will.

5 Fiftly, the feare of them is also disordered, which haue Zeale of god without knowlege, & do those things in the feare of God, whiche be quyte agaynst his will. They that doe so feare God, do folow false Prophets, when they say. Thus sayth the lorde, when they bee not sente from the Lorde, and they do serue Antichrist, whiche dothe counterfayte himselfe to be the vicare of Christe and head of the Churche. Wherefore vnlesse that there be knowledge of Goddes will ioyned with the feare & Zeale of God, there is nothyng more able, nor likelyer to seduce the ignorant, than such feare.

To Fe dead more God.

6 Sirtly, what shal we say of the feare of them, which doe feare some Saintes more than God himselfe, bicause that they doe suppose, that they will sone be angry, & that when they bee once angred, they will be sore reuenged vppon them, vnlesse they be the better pleased, as Anthonie, Sebastian, Roch, and the reste. And for this cause some doe seeke to winne theyr fauour by sacrifices, and yearly seruice vpon their dayes, and some by dayly prayers, like as we do reade of some of the Indians, whiche doe of a like feare honor the Deuill, and goe about to please hym by dayly sacrifices, least hee shoulde destroy them: and they can scarsely loke vppon the Images of these Saintes, though they bee neuer so dumbe, deafe, and dead, and able to doe neyther good nor euill, without trembyng and quakyng, specially if by the arte of the caruer, their lokes bee any thyng grimme, cruell, and threatenyng. In whiche case I can call to minde that I was my selfe, when I was a boy. Thus muche briefly of the misusing of the feare of God: whiche it may please the Lorde to chaunge into a sincere and true feare, specially in this latter tyme, when it seemeth that almoste all feare of God is vtterly decayed and gone.

Of Obedience.

That ornament and accomplishment of the Feare of God, is the ready & lawful obedience. Wherfore Ihaue thought good to speake nowe in order thereof, and to note somewhat that may bee profitable and concernyng the same. Obedience is commended not onely in the Scriptures, but also in the common iudgement of all men, as the most beautiful of all vertues: and disobedience is taken to bee most detestable, bycause it is hurtefull and repugnant, not onely vnto religion, but vnto al estates of the worlde also. And herein wee will first consider of them, whiche woulde seeme to haue so professed obedience aboue all other Christian men, that theyr whole lyfe shoulde appeare to be nothyng else but obedience it selfe. Whereas in deede there is no errour, nor superstition, whiche they goe not aboute to colour and excuse vnder this pretence. And secondly, wee will speake of them whiche doe so vse Christian libertie, that they may well be thought to haue vtterly shaken of all feare of God.

That it is needefull to vse discretion in the matter of Obedience.

That wee muste make a difference betwixt true and false obedience.

Without all doubte, the vertue of Obedience is great and inestimable, whiche we clearely confesse and affirme. Wherfore we wil haue those things whiche we entende to speake in this poynt so far from disagreyng with true and lawfull obedience, that it shall be rather confirmed and strengthned thereby, than decayed in any poynt: and there be twoo things necessary for this our purpose. The one is, that true obedience be thoroughly knowen. The second, that we be not ignorant of the other also, which bicause it is counterfayte and false, dothe vnder a likely shewe seduce the vnlearned and vnskilfull, specially suche as be ouer much giuen to Obedience. Lyke as it is not inough for him which desireth to get Golde, to know how good and profitable Golde is, and that in colour it is not whyte but yelowe, but it is requisite also of necessitie for him to know, that there bee other mettals also, eyther by nature or by arte, which being no Golde in deede, yet for all that they be not muche vnlyke Golde in colour: whereby the vnskilfull may some bee deceyued. In this wyse it is profitable in deede for a man to knowe that the vertue of obedience is notable, and yet wee muste knowe withall, that there is an other obedience moste resembling the true, as touchyng the outwarde shewe, and yet is in deede counterfayte. For vnlesse that a man doe knowe this, he is at a poynt, and lieth open to be deceyued, so that vnder the pretence of obedience he may offende agaynst the true obedience in deede. Wee haue heard menne called in our dayes conformable and obedient persons, whiche haue obeyed not the worde of God, but Antichrist and his Champions, whereas in the sight of God they were rebellious, rather than obedient. And they bee moste in daunger of this euill of disobedience, whiche haue a deuotion of religion, and desire to obeye, and yet can not put a difference betwixt the true and counterfayte obedience, but doe reste vpon this point onely, that the same can not be euil, whiche is done of a minde to obey their elders: and for this cause I wil say somewhat herein, as

1. What Obedience is.
2. How many sortes of Obedience there be.
3. Howe necessarie, and what the efficacie of it is, & how great a good it is.

What Obedience is.

The definition of obedience.

We may make a definitiō of Obedience by the very worde it selfe, which is called in greke ὑπακοή. And it is nothyng else, but a faithful submission of the mynde, whereby the worde and will of the commaūder is obeyed, when bothe the harte and eares be attent vnto his wordes and will, and those things whiche be commaunded, accordyng to theyr ability, bee accomplished without gayne-saying. For true obedience muste haue not onely an obedient hande, but a folowyng will also. Wherefore they can not bee counted for obedient, in whome the desire of true Obedience taketh not place, suche as they bee, whiche doe obey in face onely, without the ready will of mynde, or else in wordes & eare onely, without doyng it, when they may I say, when they may, for when the thyng can not bee done, the wil to obey is reputed for the doing: and so we say commonly, that God accepteth our good will, in stede of the face.

Hovv many kindes of Obedience there be.

There bee twoo manner of obediences, the one is true, the other false. The same is true, whiche may be reported and auouched to be vpright, sincere and sounde. And that we may well knowe whiche that is, we muste see, whome, wherein, & how a man muste obey.

For firste of all it is not lawfull for hym whiche is a seruaunt, and hath not the free at bytrement of his owne will, to addict and appointe hymselfe to the Obedience of whom hee liste, vnlesse hee will shifte himselfe out of his gouernaunce, who is his onely liege Lorde. For it is not possible, that menne shoulde serue twoo maisters well, as our Sauiour sayde. For as the Apostle sayth: Looke to whome that thou hast yelded thy selfe to bee a seruaunt to obey, his seruaunt thou arte whome thou doest obey.

So that if you couet to knowe, whether that your obedience be true or no, consider firste whome you doe obey. If thou doest beare thy true obedience vnto him, vnto whose iurisdiction and dominion thou doest of right belong, thou hast in that respect a true obedience, because thou doest not obey him, which is a straūger vnto thée, but thou doest obey thy owne liege Lorde: but in case thou doest obey others and not hym, thou arte not truly obedient, but rather disobedient. And whome can we determine vppon to be he, vnto whome onely all obedience is due, but our onely God and true Lorde, the maker & preseruer of all things? For whose be we, but his, whiche both made vs when we were not, and gaue vs life, and graunted vs al things necessarie for the sustentatiō of the same, in whose lande wé doe dwell, as it were in a house, vnto whome all creatures are compelled to be subiect, whether they wil or no, and doe also most worthily obey? So that we must addresse all our obedience if it be true, vnto God onely, in whose possession onely we be, from whose obedience no creature may withdrawe it selfe. And he is so affected, that he can not abide vs to haue any other Lords beside him to obey, & therefore it is that he calleth himselfe Jelous.

That all obedience is due vnto God.

Exod. 20.

Secondly, it is requisite vnto true obedience, to sée whether that we do obey the will of Gods commaundement or no, and there is no presumption can serue herein, but we muste obey the only wil of God. For without that there can bée no true obedience, what soeuer we doe counterfayte & dissemble. And for this cause the cōterfayte seruice of the Iewes was refused, which they did ordeyne after their owne imagination, according vnto the manner of the Gentiles, vtterly vnlawfull for them to doe by the expresse precepte of God. Where wée doe reade in thys wyse: When the Lorde thy God shal haue destroyed ỹ Gētiles before thy face, which thou shalt go to possesse, & doe possesse them, & dwell in their lande, beware that thou doe not folow thé, after they be destroyed vppon thy entrie, and looke for their ceremonies, saying: Lyke as these Gentiles or people dyd serue their Gods, so I will serue God also. I say thou shalt not doe the like vnto thy Lord God. For they dyd all the abhominations whiche the Lorde dothe abhorre, offering their sonnes and daughters to their Gods, and burnyng them with fyre. Doe that onely vnto the Lorde, whiche I doe commaunde thée to doe. Sée thou neyther adde nor diminishe any thyng thereof. Notwithstanding they brake thys precepte, through the disobedience of their doyng, and beganne to serue their Lorde GOD not according vnto the will of GOD, but according vnto their owne imaginations. And therefore there bée so many complayntes in the Prophetes and Psalmes agaynst the inuentions of the Israelites, whereby they angered God, as wée may sée in the hundreth and sixte Psalme, and in many other places of the holy Scripture. So that it is a disordered obedience, when wé doe leaue the preceptes of God, and take in hande these thyngs, whiche hée neyther commaunded, nor be agreable with his will.

Deut. 20.

Psalm. 106.

That we must obey God, not only in the facte, but with a willyng hart, and at al thinges & euer.

Thirdly, it is appoynt of true obedience also, not onely in facte to doe that simply whiche hée commaunded, but to doe it also with a sincere, faithfull and willing hearte, to obey the verye meaning of God, and that with greate liking. So ỹ you would not but that the same preceptes had bin giuē of God, and that you would not transgresse them, though that there were no daunger to be feared of the transgression of them: like as the faithfull and obedient wife doth obey hir good man, and the good and naturall sonne his father.

The true obedience is the ryght seruice of God.

It is also required vnto true obedience, that we obey not only some certayne preceptes of God, but wé must obey them all, and employ oure selues vnto true obedience, not for a season onely, but for all the space of our whole life.

After this manner the Godly persons muste examine the true Obedience, whether that it be iust, sincere, willing and full, for if it be so, it is able to abide the touch of the truthe: and in case there be anye thing lacking through our imperfection, what so euer it is, it is pardoned and borne withall by the grace of Christ.

This true obedience is the ryght seruice of God. For what is it else to serue God, but hartily to obey hym in all things? And this manner of obedience is farre better than all sacrifices and burnte offerings, according vnto that which Samuell said: Will the Lord haue burnt offerings and sacrifices, and not rather haue his worde obeyed? For obedience is better than sacrifices, and to gyue care better than to offer the fatte of rammes. For it is as the sinne of witchcrafte, to withstande, and like the mischiefe of Idolatrie, to refuse to obey.

The head and perfect patterne of this obedience is Christ, whose saying that is: Thou wouldest haue no offering, but thou didst frame myne eares to heare thée. It is written of me in the beginning of the booke, that I should do thy will. And, My meate is, to do his will which hath sent me. And, I came downe from Heauen, not to doe myne owne will, but hys will who sent me. And to the Philippians, He was made obedient (sayth Paule) vnto deathe.

And we must also be reformed by this paterne of Obedience, in case we will be accounted the true seruers of God, for our sauioure sayeth in Mathew: He which doth the wyll of my Father that is in Heauen, he is my brother. And, Not euery bodye whiche saith vnto me, Lorde, Lorde, shall enter into the kingdome of Heauen, but he whiche doth the will of my father that is in Heauen.

But some man will obiecte, Ergo thou doest leaue all obedience vnto the will of God only, so that there is none to be giuen to the worlde: and by this reason no man shall be bound to obey hys betters, yea this waye no man shall be greater than an other, but all equal and a like, as subiect together vnder the onely obedience of God alone.

I aunswere, I suppose that there is no man will denie, but that al men ought to be subiect vnto God onely, and to obey his will, and that it is not lawfull for anye man to shifte himselfe vnto an other. This is a cleere case, and without all contradiction, and gaynesaying. And if God himselfe hathe made vs subiect vnto some others, which be better than we in the earth, eyther in wisedome, an thoritie, or might, it is well done, and we muste obey them, but no otherwise than as he hath appoynted, nor for any other cause, but bycause that he hath sette them aboue vs: and in this doing we doe not swarue from the obedience of him whiche we can not performe, vnlesse that we doe obey them, whome he hath appoynted vs to obey. Therefore it is so farre wyde, that by the yeelding of oure obedience vnto God only, the degrées of the superiours, and subiection of the inferiours shoulde be taken away, that the necessarye obedience in worldlye matters can by nothing bée more confyrmed, than by the same.

A similitude of a good man of the house.

Let vs imagine that this worlde is as it were some house, wherein the good manne of the house is God, which hath the chiefest authoritie ouer the children, seruauntes, maydens, cattell, and all things. And lyke as in the house whiche is well ordered, all thinges be directed vnto the only will of the good mā of the house, (for vnlesse it shoulde be so, the good order and estate of the house coulde not continue,) so that there is one conformable will in all, and through them all, whiche is deriued from the good man of the house into all the family, as from the head, to the members of the same one bodye, and yet after a certayne degrée, some be preferred aboue others, whome the rest of the people inferior eyther in age or in condition, is subiect vnto, and doe obey them, bycause of the wyll and order of the good manne of the house, whereby hée doth giue authoritie vnto them whome hée setteth aboue the rest in his house, which be then well obeyed, if by that obediēce, there bée nothing derogate or diminished from the superior will, and power of the good manne of ỹ house. In lyke manner it standeth with the case of thys obedience, whereof wee do nowe talke. The chiefe King and householder in this world is GOD, whose onely will is in all, and of all specially to bée regarded. And in case hée hathe made vs subiecte vnto none, wée bée not bounde to obeye anye lyuing man: but in case there bée anye to whome wée muste bée subiecte that can not bée anye other wayes but by hys wyll, so that wée muste of necessitie obey them, vnlesse we wyll shew our selues to be out of all order.

To whom God hath made vs subiect.

Therefore, wée muste consider vnto whome the will of God hathe made vs subiect, leaste if we doe without respecte & rashly obey whom we lust, we be subiecte not vnto God, but vnto our owne rash head. And hereof we cā not be by any other meanes better and more certaynely instructed, than by the holye scriptures, in which the holy spirite doth diligently instruct vs, of the directe yeldyng of true obedience, leaste we shoulde eyther so obey God, that we shoulde in the meane whiles withstande them whome he hathe set ouer vs, or elles so obey them, that we resist the wyll of God, but we muste so walke on in the plaine high way, and so yelde our selues obedient in all things, that the marke and pricke of oure whole obedience, be fastened in the onely will of God.

VVe ought aboue all things to be subiect to Christe

And in this case we muste first and principally be subiecte vnto Christe Jesus, the common maister & Lorde of all, of all, the firste begotten in the house of God, vnto wome, as to his naturall and only begotten sonne, the Father hath giuen al power in Heauen and in earth, and subdued all things vnto him. Accordyng vnto that saying of Mathew: All things be deliuered vnto me from my father. And, All power is giuen vnto me in heauen and in earth. He is appoynted to be our only Lord, whom we muste obey: so God commaunded from heauen, and saide. This is my beloued sonne, in whome I am well pleased, heare him. We be subiecte vnto the iurisdiction and power of him, not only in respect that he is the word of the Father, by whome all thinges be made and preserued, but in respect also, that he hathe redeemed vs by hys bloud, accordyng vnto the saying of the Apostle: Neuer a one of vs dothe liue vnto himselfe, and no man dieth vnto himselfe. Therefore whether that we do die or liue, we be ỹ Lords. For Christ is dead and risen againe, to this intent, to be the Lord both of the liuing and of dead. And, You bée not your owne men (saith he) you bée bought at a great Price. And, Christ is dead for all, so that they which do liue, do not now liue vnto thēselues, but vnto him, who dyed for them. And therefore it is the commaundement also of the father, that we shuld beleue in the name of his only begotten sonne. And the Apostle dothe attribute obedience vnto the faithe in Christ, whereas he saith: By whome we haue receiued grace, and the office of Apostelship, that men may obey faith amongst all nations in his name, &c. And, Vnto him who is able to strengthen you, accordyng vnto my Gospell, and the commendation of Jesus Christ, through the reuelation of the mysterie, &c. vnto the obedience of the faith, whiche is opened vnto all nations, &c. The reason hereof is, bycause obedience is due vnto Christe by the will of his father, so that al must honor the sonne, as they doe honor the father. And what is it elsse that we be baptised in Christ, but that we be consigned not only to beléeue, but also to obey him: Therefore séeyng that the father hath made vs subiect vnto his sonne, he dothe assuredly obey the Father, whiche doth obey the sonne: and on ỹ other side, who so euer doth not obey the sonne, is vtterly disobedient vnto the Father, and worthie of damnation.

VVe m obey th minist of Chri

Hereupon it folowyth, that séeing the Father hath deliuered vp all the power of his Kingdome into the hands of his sonne, that we be bound to obey those ministers of his, which he hath set in rule ouer his churches: if so be that they doe vprightly serue his will. And some he appointed to be Apostles, some Prophetes, some Pastors, and Doctors, some Euangelistes, to trauell in the preaching of the Gospell, as we maye sée to the Ephesians. And that is verifyed in them, to whom it is said in Mathew: He which heareth you, heareth mée: and he which despiseth you, despiseth me. And that to the Ebrewes. Obey your ouerséers, and follow them, for asmuch as they do watch and wake for your soules, as to giue accounte for them. So the obedience whiche oughte to bée gyuen to the ministers of Chryste, is conteyned in the fyrste, where wée bée bounde

Eph. 4. Math. 10

Hebr. 13.

to obey the wil of God in all things, for like as he whiche dothe honor the minister of Christe, dothe honor Christe himselfe, and consequentlye his father also: so he which doth obey the minister, doth obey Christe, and in Christ his Father also.

That obedience is due vnto Magistrates, Kinges, Princes, and Iudges

Secondly, God hathe instituted the power of the sworde vpon the earthe, Kings, Princes, Magistrates, Iudges of the land, to be ministers of iustice to the punishmente of the euill, and to commendation of the good, vnto whome he hath not only made subiect the Gentiles and al Infidels, but all that doe beleeue in him also, vnto them that is spoken. And nowe you Kings vnderstande you, bee you learned whiche doe iudge the lande: serue the Lorde in feare, and reioyce towardes him in trembling, kysse the sonne, &c. Therefore the Apostle dothe teache Christian men to obey the superiour powers, which do carrie the sworde as the ministers of GOD, though that they be not yet Christian but vnfaithfull. The lyke matter is that also: Warne them that they be subiecte vnto Princes & Potestates, and that they obey the Magistrates. And that in Peter. Therefore see you be subiect vnto al creatures of men, because of ỳ Lord, eyther vnto the king as passing all others, eyther vnto the gouernours, as sent by him, to the reuenge of the euil doe harme, and to the commendation of them that do well.

Psalme.2.

Rom.13.

Titus.3.

1.Petri.2.

Thirdly, he did make the woman subiecte vnto hir good man, as to hir head. Wherefore the Apostles doe diligentlye aduise the wiues to bee subiect and obediente vnto their husbands. So we do read to the Ephesians: You wiues, see you be subiecte vnto your owne husbands, as to the Lorde, forasmuche as the man is the head of his wife, like as Christ is also head of the Churche, and the selfesame dothe giue saluation vnto the body. So that like as the Churche is subiect vnto Christ, so let the wyues be subiecte in all poyntes vnto their husbands. Agayne: You wiues bee subiecte vnto your husbandes as it is conuenient to be, in the Lord. And in an other place. And in likewyse you wiues, saith he, be you subiecte vnto your husbandes, &c. like as Sara obeyed Abraham calling hym hyr Lorde, &c. Therefore the obedience whiche is due vnto God, dothe in so much not exclude the same obedience that wiues oughte to beare to theyr husbands, that it doth rather require and commaund the same. For it is not possible that the wife should wel obey God, vnlesse she be subiect vnto hir husband, and obey him accoyding vnto the ordinance of God.

The vvoman must be subiecte vnto hir husbande. Gen.3. 1.Pet.3.

Coloss.3. Titus.2. 1.Petri.3.

Ephes.6.

Ibid.

Seruantes must be subiect vnto their maisters. Ephes.6.

Fourthly, he made children to bee subiect vnto their parentes, and that by a certayne and expresse lawe. Honor (sayeth he) thy Father and thy Mother, that thou mayst be long lyued vpon the lande which the Lorde thy God shall giue thee. And he dyd set a verie sore punishment vnto the transgressours of this lawe in Deuteronomie, where we do reade: If a man get a stubborn and an obstinate sonne, whiche will not heare the cõmaundement of his father and mother, and when he is restrayned, doth refuse to obey, he shall take him, and bring hym before the Elders of the Citie, vnto the gate of iudgemente, and say: This our son is stubborne and Children are bound to be subiect and obediente to their parentes. Exod.20.

Deut.21.

Coloss.3. Titus.2.

and obstinate, he refuseth to harken vnto our admonitions, and applyeth himselfe to banketting, wantonnesse, and feasting, the people of the Citie shall ouerwhelme him with stones, and he shal dye, so that you may ridde the euill from among you, and that all Israell hearing thereof, maye bee afrayde. And the Apostle doth diligentlye inculcate or beate into the faithfull heads this parte of iust obedience, saying: You children, obeye your parentes in the Lorde, for that is righte, honoure thy father, and thy mother, which is the first precept of promise, that it maye bee well with thee, and that thou may be long liued vpon the land. And: You children, obey your parents in all poyntes, for that doth well please the Lorde.

Fiftly, he dothe appointe the men and women seruauntes also, to bee subiect vnto the commaundement of their maisters. And therefore the Apostle dothe aduertise them to the Ephesians, to performe this obedience in the Lord, Your seruantes (sayth he) obey them whiche be your maisters in the flesshe, with feare, and abashment, with a singlenesse of your heart, as you ought to obey Christ, not seruing them to the eye, as seeking to please men, but as the seruauntes of Christe, doing these thinges whiche God would haue you to do euen frõ your heart, serving the Lord and not men, and that with a good will, knowing this, that euery man shall haue his reward from God, for the good that he doth, whether that he be bond or free. The selfe is rewde also to the Colossians and to Titus. Counsell the seruants to obey their maisters, and to please them in all points, not to be answerers, nor pickers, but shewing all good truste and faithfulnes, that they may be an ornament to the doctrine of our sauiour in all things. Agayne. You seruauntes (sayeth hee) be subiecte with all feare vnto youre maisters; not only vnto them that bee good and gentle, but vnto them that be naught also.

1.Pet.2.

Therefore we be so subiecte vnto these degrees of superiors, set ouer vs by the ordinance of God, Forasmuch as in obeying them, we doe obey the Lord God, and when we be disobedient, we do not so much disobey men, as God himselfe: so farre wide it is, that the same chiefest obedience whiche ought to be borne vnto God, doth exclude these degrees of due reuerence amongst men, depending vpon the obedience of God only: and that there is no other excuse for the disobedience of subiectes, but this only, if those things whiche our superiours would enforce vs to do, be contrarye vnto the will of God: at which tyme that saying of the Apostle must take place. It behoueth vs rather to obey God, than men.

Act.5.

Of false Obedience.

VVhic false ob ence.

Thus much we haue noted of true obedience; now we haue to consider of the false, and counterfait obedience. And we take that to bee false, which hath either not the same, or contrarye markes vnto that true obedience of which we noted before. Wherefore to make the triall, we must compare it with the true obedience to be tried thereby, as by the touchstone.

1 The first marke of true obedience

The obedience of Fryers and Monkes.

dience is, if we do obey God: Ergo, it is a false obedience, when we doe not obey God but creatures, contrarye to the ozder appointed by him. Lette the Monkes and Fryers loke vppon this marke, and see whome they do obey, whereas some of them doe bind themselues to obey Benedict, some Dominike, some Frauncis, and I wote nere what Abbotes & Priors, &c. which God did neuer set ouer his faithfull. He did set Christe ouer vs, and the ministers of his word, kings and Magistrates, Parents, and Maisters, but we do not reade of Abbots, Priors, Prouincials, wardens, &c.

2 The seconde marke of true obedience is, ỹ we must obey in ỹ things agreeable vnto the will of God, Ergo, it is a false obedience, which is borne in things contrary vnto the will and ozdinaunce of God. After that sorte mens constitutions and doctrines bée obeyed, of whiche there hathe greate multitude long since ouerwhelmed not only the Cloisters, but the Churches also of Christe, in so muche that Augustine also in his time did finde fault withall.

3 The third marke of false obedience is, if we doe obey God, and that in his preceptes, but not sincerelye, and according to the meaning of the commaunder, and that is when the outwarde worke and doing is not correspondent vnto the intent of the commaunder. As for an example. The Iewes were commanded to celebrate and solemnise the Passouer, to kéepe the remembrance of the deliuery out of Egipt, and to féede their faith withall, and to giue thankes to the goodnesse of God for it: and they did indéede obserue ỹ outward worke in eating the Lambe, but fewe of thé did satisfye the minde of God. They did the like also in the lawes of their oblations, the firste fruites of their corne, and the other obseruaunces of the lawe. They did solemnise their sabbath in an outwarde idlenesse, as though that idlenesse of it selfe dyd please God, and that he had not commaunded them rather to leaue off their worke, to haue time to féede their faith and charitie. Let them go, and let vs loke vpon our selues. We do baptise, we do solemnise ỹ Lordes supper, we do runne to sermons, whiche things be recommended vnto vs by Christe, to nourish and féede fayth and godly disposition in our heart, but as touching this ende and purpose of the Lorde, very fewe of vs do truly obey it, but as cõcerning the outward worke, many do follow it. The Lord doth commaund vs to lend and giue to euery man that doth aske. The outward worke some do endeauor to do, so as it is, but very fewe do reache to ỹ meaning of the precepte, that is, to ỹ loue of their neighbor. But this maner of obediẽce is not sincere and cleane, but false, such as no good husband would beare within hys owne house: or like, though he did beare withall.

And it is a token of false obediẽce also, when men do not hartily & with a good will obey the precepts of God, but do make curtelle at it: so that we had rather that we were not bounde of necessitie to obey, neyther would doe it vnlesse we did feare the payne of the disobedience, and transgressiõ. God commaunded vs, that we shuld harken to hys sonne Christe Iesus our Lord, that is to say, ỹ we should Deut. 18.

be obedient vnto him. Ioining thereunto threatning that ỹ soule of him which did not obey him, should be rooted out of the people of God. Heercin he dothe require of his people to forsake themselues, and to followe hys statutes & keps. And I beseech you find me one that dothe so with all his hearte, which obeyeth the Commandemẽts of the Lorde, not more for feare, than for any loue? There be few or none, which like the good sonne, and according vnto the example of Christ our head, do hartily obey the commaundementes of God, so that this obedience can not be sincere nor pleasing God, whiche no man woulde like in his owne house. Chrysostome dothe find fault, that in his time all thynges were done in the Church only for an orders sake, for a fashion: and that the Christian folke had no other respecte, but to pay and performe their appointed due, it skilde not how, so ỹ they woulde not be blamed for not doing their dutie, but it was for order sake onely, to séeme to doe as apertepned vnto Christian men, negligently, without intention of mind, for manners sake and for a countenance, least they should be blamed of negligence. And what boteth me to make mention what the godly maye lament of our times, séeing that thys token of false obedience was euen then crept into the Church in Chrysostomes time?

Chrysost. in Epist. ad Heb. 10.

Thirdly, it may be taken also for a token of false obedience, when those things whiche oughte to be done, bée not done to ỹ full, but by peecemeale, as when some one precept is a little obserued, and the rest neglected: as in case a man do not commit adulterye, and yet for all that doe not serue one God aryghte, neyther sanctifie hys name, neither kéepe his sabbath, nor honour their parents, &c. neyther yet kéepe one commaundement to ỹ full. As if a man do so obserue the cõmandemente for louing his neighboure, that he will loue his friends and kinsfolkes onely, and not loue any other, and specially not loue his enimies. This is a patched and péeced obedience, not reaching to the true and appointed marke and pricke of loue. For the commaundemente runneth expressly in Mathewe, that we musse loue not only our friends, but our enimies also, according vnto the example of our father, which bringeth forth his sunne vppon the good and euill both. Saule was charged wyth disobedience, bycause he did not perfectly fulfill the commaundemente of God, in rooting vp the Amalechites, but reserued ỹ king & certain cattell.

Matth. 5.

1. Sam. 15.

Fourthly, it is a poynte of false obedience also, when men do obey not to the ende, but for a season only, and do fall straightwayes againe to disobedience. For like as in case the wicked person doe leaue the wickednesse of his disobediẽce, and do turne himselfe vnto true obedience, he shall lyue the lyfe, and there shall bée no further remembrance of his wickednesse before God: so on the other side in case the iust person forsaking hys obedience, do fall vnto the wickednesse of stubborne disobedience, hée shall not lyue, and there shall bée no remembraunce of hys iustice before God. Whereof we may sée in Ezechiel. For there is requisit vnto obedience a stedfastnes & constancie to obey, so that our obediẽce must be like

Ezechiel. 1

vnto

vnto the same, when the sicke folke do obey the Phisition. Where it bo-teth not to obey for a season, vnlesse they doe continue it vntill they haue perfectly recouered theyr health. We do reade of the obedience of Christe, that he was obedient vnto his father vntill death. And the same wée muste follow and continue in, if we will be saued. For he shall be saued, whyche doth continue on to the ende.

Thus muche touching false obedience, the fountayne, and spring wherof commeth partly of the blindnesse of our minde, and partlye of the corruption of oure hearte, gotten of the fault of our first parents. It is blindnesse that men do obey creatures rather than God, and not according to the rule of God, but of the wyll of man. It is the corruptiō of the heart, that we doe not obey sincerely and heartily, not fully and constantlye. Hereof no doubt commeth the hynderance, that we doe not frame oure selues to the wil of God, and become one selfe same spirite with God.

Howe necessary obedience is, and what is the efficacye thereof, and how great a good it is.

This is a very profitable place, wherein it is considered how it helpeth to the conseruation of the whole, in case that this vnitie which is by obedience, be constantly kepte with an intent and mind vp to God, who is the only gouernour of all. As if a man consider the whole bodye of Heauen and earth, howe the same is ruled euerye where, in all the members thereof both high and lowe, by the onely minde of the creator, and whereunto all thinges be euermore subiect, and do so continue in theyr estate and order by the vertue of the same obedience, without whiche all shoulde of necessitie be ouerthrowen and perishe: the like whereof we doe sée also in oure owne bodies whyche coulde not continue by anye meanes, vnlesse that there were that pliable obedience of all the members in their proportion, whereby all thinges bée directed and do obey, as subiect vnto the commaundemente of the spirite, and to that naturall instinct whyche is in man. And in like case is the condition of common wealthes, estates, orders, and of the whole lyfe of man. Take away the onely vertue of obedience, and you shall sée all thynges fayle, and fall togyther as it were into on confused chaos, and lyke the monstrous turmoyle of Babylon.

But our present purpose is not to prosecute thys manner of consideration, but wée wyll consyder of that only, howthe vertue of obedience is necessarye and profytable vnto the true and euerlasting saluation, and lyfe whyche is in Christe Iesu. The true obedience is that, whyche maketh the wyll of the commaunder, and the obeyoure all one. And thys vnitie is meanes whereby the elect be made one wyth God, is that alone whyche dothe saue. For the saluation of all is in God onely: so that accordyng vnto the Psalmist, they must vtterly perishe as many as bée farre off and straungers from hym: lyke as they bée blynde of necessitie, whyche bée sequestred from lyghte, and as they be tormēted with thyrst, which

By the vertue of obedience all is saued.

Howe obedience is required vnto our saluation.

which do forsake the fountaine of the liuely waters, so they can not lyue, which do wilfully depart frō the lyfe it self. What can they loke for els, which do forsake the pryncipall goodnesse it selfe whereby all thinges be created and conserued, departing from the very fountaine of lyfe and all felicitie, but to perish, and to be vnhappy for euer more.

And the disobedience of our first father brought in this sequestration frō God, whereby it fell out, that we slonke into death as wel temporarie as euerlasting, and therby it appeareth manifestly, how great the euill of disobedience is, for what can betyde more pernitious, than to be alienated and sequestred from him, who is the onely fountayne and spryngе of all goodnesse, without whom nothing can any where stay and contynue? This doth disobedience which was not onely in our first father, but hath also clasped in it, & destroyed all mankind.

This mysshappe could by no other remedy be holpen, but by reconcilement, restorement, and conuersion. Disobedience destroyed vs, as sequestred from God, therefore there needed, and there is also an obedience, whereby the same is repayred, which was lost. For they which shall be saued must in anye wyse returne to the vnitie of Gods will, for as much as ỳ euerlasting, indiuisible & immutuable vnitie of wil can not abyde any contrarietie, for like ỳ as brightnes of ỳ light can not lyke with darkenesse, so ỳ same can not suffer any repugnaunce of disobedience: for as we doe reade in John: There is no darkenesse in GOD, so that it is necessary for any man that wyll walke with hym, to sée that hee walke not in darkenesse, but in lyght, bycause he shall els be a lyer, & vnable to haue any felosship with god. So we may saye in thys case also, that it is not possible that he should haue felowship with God, whosoeuer through disobedience is disseuered in contrary wyll from God.

Therefore, the second Adam, the onely begotten of God, was sente into our flesh, to repayre the same by his obedience, which the first Adam had lost by his disobedience, & to reconcyle vs vnto God, and saue vs. Of this matter the Apostle disputeth, saying: Lyke as wee bee many of vs made sinners through the disobedience of one man, so we be many made iust by ỳ obedience of one. And howe I beseech you? Lyke as (saith he) by the disobedience of one mā. What was that? No doubt ỳ transgression of Adam, howe bee wee manye made sinners thereby, and therefore subiecte vnto death? First bycause the very rote of our kinde was defiled in Adam & vtterly decayed. Secondly bycause this naughtinesse passed on also to his aftercommers: that is to say, to all them which be borne of Adam according vnto the flesh albeit that they haue not trespassed yet actually, according vnto the example of Adam. And howe be many made iust by the obedience of one? What one is Christ the seconde Adam, whome the Father would haue to be like a vine vnto vs, out of whō as it were into braches, true obedience & iustice might bee conueied into vs, in that lyke as ỳ first Adam did by disobedience

Rom. 5. We be saued by the obedience of Christ. Rom. 5

discouer his afterconmners frō god and made them subiect vnto his anger, and poured out the poyson of his sinne into his whole posteritie and offspryng, so he shoulde restore vs vnto the vnitye & grace of God, and recōcyle vs vnto him, & by hys spirite spread out and increase true obedience into our hartes. Wherefore the godnesse of obedyence is in two respectes recommended vnto vs in Christ himselfe our Sauiour. Fyrst in that that the fountain of our redemption standeth in him, forasmuch as to the intent to redeeme mankynde, he was made obedient to his father vnto death. Secondly, in ỳ that we be retained & kept in thys redēption by obedīce wherof the holy Spiryte hath poured a speciall desire and care into our hartes.

Two goodnesses of obedīce recommended to vs by Christ.

And we may herebyon consider also, ỳ like as in heauen all things be kepte in exceding vnitye and peace by the vertue of obedience, so in ỳ earth also such as be studious thereof, be made agreeable and of one minde. For this is the best way of concorde and vnitie, if we doe obey the will of God, and this it is that Christ sayth: If any man wil knowe the wyll of God, hee shall knowe of my doctryne, that it is of God. For what is the cause els, that we be in these daies deuided in so many sundry sects, but this only that euery man doth rather folowe and obey his owne opinion thā the will of God.

It is the vvaye of concord if vve do all obey God.

Ioan. 7.

And to drawe to an ende of thys consideration, let vs briefly obserue first what is the reason that Gods mairsty doth prescribe his precepts vnto men, & so earnestly require the obedience of them, & condemne the disobedience. He is not affected toward vs like a tirant. Neither doth regard this onely, to haue a lordly rule ouer vs, that we should be in al things obedīēt vnto him, as many princes of this worlde do seke, whiche vse their dompnion & cōmaundemēts to no profit of their subiects but to the intent that they may enioye all things at their owne liberty, yea, take their pleasures & to folowe their lustes in al. But he doth rather seke thys, ỳ we may bee all brought to an vnity & made one, & so be happy & safe. For if he would do otherwise, what could let him, but that he might make vs subiect vnto all, that he would do with vs? For who is able to withstande hys wyll? Therefore he doth require obedience of vs for no other cause, but ỳ he would haue vs reconciled vnto him, & to be ioyned in vnitie of wil, and ỳ ther might be betwyxt him & vs the lyke wyl refusing of one selfe same thing, wherin doth consist not onely true loue, but perpetual felicitie also. And for that very cause the euil of disobedience passed before, & made all mankinde miserable & wretched, to the intent that we should proue by experience in deede, that we coulde not be saued & happy, vnlesse that we were reconciled by the obedience of the seconde Adam, & so vnited togither in one wil wt our lord god, to stand alwaies stedfast in the same vnitie.

VVhy god doth require obedience of vs.

Secondly, let vs consider ỳ also, how that obedience which men wil vndertake besides the prescript and order of Gods will, doth auaile nothing at all vnto our saluation, yea how harmefull it is, & with howe great daunger it bringeth vs from the fruit of true obedience, when it maketh vs to beleue ỳ we do well obey God, what tyme we be found we do nothing lesse.

Thirdly, let vs obserue also, with what endeuour we ought to apply our selues vnto gods wyll, for that is the matter that we do saye in the lordes prayer: Thy will be done in earth as it is in heauen: and howe be they able to say this truely, which haue no desire to learne and accomplyshe the will of God: yea which doe of a set purpose flee from the knowledge of the waies of God, whome that saying of Moses doth touch: Bicause thou hast put of & refused knowledge, therfore I wil also refuse thee. This studious desire of ỳ obedience of God, is of so great an exercise or practise, that we nede not at all to beslowe our life vpō ỳ decrees of mē. The holy men do sometimes amisse, and erre, but besides, yea agaynste their will, with griefe, with repentaunce. For they haue a continuall care to obey Gods wyll, but the rest which be blinded, hartehardened, frowarde are caried at all aduentures into all kinde of transgression & disobedience, without any regarde at all of gods will, some contempning all counsell and warning, some flatterying themselues, bycause they haue the welth of the worlde, which both be as perillous poyntes as can be.

Notwithstanding holy men be saued, and reputed for iust, by the vertue of ỳ first & prycypal obedīce which is of Christ: bicause they bē incorporate into hym by fayth. But the wycked despysers of God doe perysshe by the sinne of disobedyence, as well in themselues, as in Adam.

Of Prayer.

WE haue handeled this place in our cōmentaryes vpō Mathew in the fyrte Chapter, largely ynough, in my opinion, for any godly disposed person. And yet for all that, bycause thys being one of the chiefest partes of our Relygion, should not altogether be missyng in these our common places, we haue thought good briefly to touch and runne ouer those thinges which be handeled there, more at large, and also to ad somewhat therevnto.

For what causes we ought to Praye.

FYrst of all ther be certain causes, for which it is Godly, profitable, and necessarye to praie diligently vnto God, and with which we must arme our mindes against the wickednesse of them, which do fondly ymagyne that the prayer which is made vnto God, is vnprofitable, vneffectuall, yea and to no purpose, bycause that all things which be giuen vs of hym be already predestined before, and wouldbe giuen also, though that we aske thē not. Secondly, ỳ it is to no purpose, to goe about to turne God, or to make him to doe that, which he hath not determyned to do.

I The first reason is, that ỳ onely

VVee must prai because that Christ cõmanded begotten of God himselfe hath not onely counsailed vs, to pray continually vnto his Father, but also hath commaunded vs to pray, and prescribed vnto vs a maner of praying, and added also his promyse that we shall obtayne, yea and he hymselfe also prayed oftentimes. Therfore, seing that the study and dilygence of praying vnto God is recommended vnto vs by Christe himselfe, by hys example, counsell, commaundement, teaching, and promise, truely they be possessed wyth the spirite not of Christ, but of Sathan, which doe presume to condempne it as vaine and to no purpose.

Bicause of our necessities.

2 The second cause commeth of our necessitie, whereby we be compelled to pray. Loke whether you lyst to the spirituall or bodely goods, which we can not well lacke, and se whether that very necessitie doth not compel vs, to aske those things of God, who is the giuer of all. He doth owe vs nothing, neither can we gette any thing from hym against his will: he taketh no exchaunge, nor valewe, though we were able to exchaunge and paye. And what remaineth now, but that we must seke by prayer to obtaine those things at his handes, which be necessarie for vs? There be passing number of temptations, troubles, perilles, and daungers, which we can not withstande by our owne strength, and what is else required in this case of our owne necessitie, but to seke our ayde from heauen? So Christ himselfe when his passion began to come on, he turned himselfe to prayer, which thing we may also se in the Saincts as well of the olde as the new testament and specially in Dauid.

To exercise hys Rom. 10

3 The third cause is to exercise our faith. For God can not be called vpon without faith, witnesse the Apostle where he sayth. Howe shall they call vpon him, in whom they haue not beleued? whereby it doth manifestly appeare, that study, and vse of prayer, is an exercise of our Fayth. And in this respect the prouidence of God doth specially require of vs to aske such thinges of him, as we haue nede off. He could liberally giue vs all things vnasked for, as he doth to the reprobate, and to other liuing beastes, but his wyll is to be called vpon of his children, to the intent they shoulde practise the assured trust of their heart towardes him, and be the more out of doubte of his goodnesse, when they doe obtaine that, which they do desire.

To norish the loue God.

4 The fourth cause is the nature of the loue which the Godly disposed do beare vnto God, for the nature of it is such, that he which loueth, taketh much pleasure to talke with him, whom he loueth, and wysheth nothing more, then to communicate vnto him such thynges, as he hath in his heart. Besides that, the loue is enkendled and set a fire more and more by hauing talke with him which is loued. Therfore ỳ godly be so affected in this matter, that they be much enclined to prayer, and calling vpon the name of god, not onely to enioye the comfortes which commeth thereof, but also to increase more and more in the loue of God.

5 And we may make this a fifte cause also, that we be charged by Bicause of the cõmaundemẽt and exercyce of God. Psalm. 50.

5 And we maye make this a fifte cause also, that wee bee charged by the commaundement of God to call vpon our Lord god, which sayth expressly: Call vppon me in the day of trouble, and I wil delyuer thee. And he doth withall declare, that this calling vpon him is a poynte of seruice, & doth serue to the glory of his name, where as he addeth: And thou shalt glorifie mee. We bee therefore as necessarily bound to prayer, and calling vpon the name of God, as we bee vnto the study of his obedience and seruice. And thus much briefly for the causes and reasons, why prayer and calling vpon of ỳ name of God, is not onely profitable, but necessary also vnto godlines, & now let vs consequently se what true Prayer is.

II. What Prayer is.

The Scholemẽ do take ỳ word Prayer three waves, properly, commonly and most cõmonly. Properly, for the lyfting vp of ỳ minde vnto god, either to aske, either to obtaine, either somthing to performe. Commonly, for euery manner of act referred vnto god contemplatiuely. Most cõmonly for euery good work, and therfore they do alleadge that saying of ỳ Gloser: He ceseth not to pray, which ceaseth not to do good. And thus they doe deuersely define Prayer, according vnto ỳ diuers respectes therof, the Ebrewes do call prayer, תבלה from the worde התפלל which dooth signifie to iudge & thereof commeth ỳ worde תפחלל which to turne to his proper sence, signifieth to iudge hym-

Howe the Scholemen make this and prayer

selfe. And bycause ỳ he which doth truly pray vnto god, doth specially and first of al pray, accuse, & esteeme hymselfe vnworthy, & therfore doth submit himselfe to the will of god, beseking his grace & mercy. I suppose therfore the word תלל was vsed for prayer, whereas ỳ worde doth properly signifie iudgemente. There be many wordes vsed in the Psalmes for prayer, expressyng wellnere all manner of affections that be found in the prayers of any afflicted, and vexed mindes. The Holy men when they do poure out the feruentnesse of their hartes before the Lorde, they doe principally with most earnest meditation and wayling, accuse and iudge themselues, they do beseke the mercy of God: they do expresse the sorow of their harte wt crying, lamentation, & howlynge, and doe also in wordes set forth their petitions and prayers.

But generally prayer is defined to be the lyftyng vp of our minde vnto God: Augustine doth define it in this wyse: Prayer is the deuotion of the mynde, that is to say the turning vnto God by Godly and humble affection, but we doe define it thus. That ỳ prayer which maye appeare vnto God, is the affection and bewaylynge of an afflycted hart, whereby the ayde of GOD, is most humbly besought, whether the same bee doone by wordes, or with out words, by wailyng alone, and sighes.

The defin tiõ of prai er. August. de spirt. & a nima. cap.

Who is to be prayed and called vnto.

When Sathan said vnto Christ, I will giue thee al this, if thou wylt all do wne and worshyp me, this aunswere was made him. It is written thou shalt worshyp thy Lorde God and serue him onely. And beside that we be instructed by him to pray, and to say: Our father which arte in heauen, &c. And god himselfe doth commaund vs, saying: Call vpon me in the daye of trouble, and I wyll delyuer the. And all holy men when they were in trouble, cryed vnto the Lorde their God. Therefore it is manifeste that we muste in our troubles call vpon our Lorde God, and heauenly Father.

Math. 4. VVe must vvorship god onely.

This none of our enemyes doe deny. But yet for all that, they do teache withall, that we muste not onely call vpon God, but vpon Angels & saintes also. But in case we wyll loke vnto ẏ matter a ryght, it shall appeare, that there be some thinges so of necessity belonging vnto him, which is to be called vpō, that if there want any of them, he is in vayne called vpon.

For vvhat causes God onely is to be prayed vnto.

As first of all, that hee be able: Secondely, that he knowe: Thirdly, that he will aide thē that do call vpon him, whatsoeuer euill they be vexed withall: Fourthly, that he bee of that sort, that the prayers of the pitifull and wretched may come vnto him. Fiftly, that hee must also better vnderstande, than the miserable themselues do, what their trouble and aduersitie is, and howe, when, and howe farre forth they must be holpen. In case that these thinges can be founde in Angels and Saintes, as well as in our Lorde God, it is well, let them also be called vpon with hym. But who is so madde that seeth not, that these conditions can not be founde in none, but in him, which is almighty, all knowing, all good, hearing all which cryeth vnto hym, in all Corners, & better vnderstanding what thinges we haue nede off, than we our selues be able to expresse? And there is none els to be founde such, but the onely and true God. Wherefore none must be called vpon but he onely, which onely is almightye and perfecte in all thinges, that be requyred hereunto, and therfore he saith: There is no god which saueth, besides me. And: I am he, I am he, and besides me there is no Sauiour. If angels and saintes can saue folke, then is it false that God repeateth here of himselfe: but that can not bee. There is none that saueth but God alone, who is ryche vnto all which do cal vpō him, & therfore there is none to be called vpon besides him, either angell or sayncte. Whersoeuer thou do praye, sayth Augustine, he is within thee which doth heare thee. What Angell is ẏ that can be within in our hartes whersoeuer we become, and heare vs whensoeuer wee praye. This glory doth appertain vnto god only who onely is present euery where, & can hear vs within. Wherfore it is he onely that is to be called vpon.

Esay. 45.

Besids these reasōs ther be others also for which we ought to iudge it vnlawfull, to cal vpon any other than God onely.

Other reasons that none be god or to be called vpon

The first is, bycause that there can be no inuocation, made without Fayth: wherby men must beleeue in him which is called vpon, witnesse ẏ Apostle, wher he saith: How shal they call vpō him, vpon whom they doe not beleeue? And wee do beleeue neither in the Angels, nor in Saintes, but in the holy Trinitie onely, wherevnto we be Baptised by the commaundement of Christ. Therefore we can not call vpon saintes, nor Angels, onelesse that we do first beleeue vpon them: which is no wyse possible to do.

Rom. 10.

2 The seconde is of the nature of the loue which partly God the Father doth beare vnto vs, & which partly we do also beare vnto hym. For almuch as he loueth vs, hys wyll is, that we shall onely flee vnto him, and beseeke his ayde, and can not abide that wee shoulde call vpon others. On the other side, if we do truely loue him, wee can not be plucked awaye to anye other from our assured truste and calling vpon him. For the affection of true loue is such, that they which do loue one an other, do communicate togither of all their necessities. Wherfore this is a cause also, why that the godly men, which do loue GOD, being in necessities, can not call vpon anye other but vpon the lorde God.

3 The thirde cause commeth of the counsell and purpose of God, when it doth chasten and correcte sinners by the rod of his fatherly discipline, to this intent, ẏ acknowledging our sinnes, we shoulde reforme and humble our selues, and beseech hys grace and ayde, which they much mistake, who beinge chastened & afflicted, do not cal vpō their lord god, by whō they be chastened, but vpō some dead saintes.

4 The fourth cause is, for that it is not possible, but that we must serue them, whom we do call vpō in our troubles, and esteeme meete to be called vpon. So we doe see, that the callers vpon Saintes, be with all the seruers & worshippers of them, contrary vnto the manifest worde of the Lorde, saying. Thou shalt worshyp thy Lorde God, and serue him onely. Yea, the very inuocation it selfe is the chiefe peece of Gods seruice, and is therefore meete for god onely. If these reasōs were earnestly wayed, & with the feare of the lorde, it were not possible that the inuocation of Angels and Saintes should take any place in the harte of a Christian man, for that which ought properly and onely to be attributed vnto God alone, can not without great wickednesse be applyed vnto creatures.

5 But the Scholemen do make a diffinction in this wise. A man may two wayes (say they) yelde his prayer vnto an other: either as to be accomplyshed by himselfe, either as to be fulfilled at his request. The first way we ought to praye to God only, bycause that the same good things which are chiefly to bee asked, are giuen by God onely. The seconde way, we maye (say they) pray vnto saintes, which do purchase the hearing of our prayer at Gods hande: and therefore when we doe praye vnto GOD or vnto Christ, we do say: Haue mercy, or forgiue vs; but when we do pray vnto Saintes we do say. Pray for vs. I aunswere. By this diffinction the Israelits might in their necessities haue had called not vpō god only, but Abrahā also, Isaac & Iacob and other sainctes of holy men, but we do not read, ẏ they did any such thing, neither is there any thing in ſcripture to ratifie this diſtinction, And the Chriſtian Church hath acknowledged no Sainct, but Chriſt onely, by whoſe interceſſion wee ſhould obtaine that which we doe deſire, and therefore it doth end hir papers, by this clauſe, Through Chriſt our Lord. If this diſtinction were any thing worth in thys point, it ſhould ſurely be ſomewhat worth alſo in the point of adoration, ſo that we might adore & worſhippe not onely God, but Saincts alſo. Yea Sathan might haue anſwered Chriſte, and ſayd: In deede it is written, that the Lord GOD ought to be worſhipped, but yet for all that, thou art not let thereby, but that thou mayſt alſo worſhyppe me: for thou mayſt vſe worſhyp two waies. Firſt to worſhip God, as God, and ſecondly others, as ſuch which haue receiued power frō god, or els which can otherwiſe do much with him as I can, to be a meane and mediator for thee, but Sathan wiſt not of this diſtinctiō at that time, for it was reſerued to ỳ ſeaſon of Antichriſts ſeduction.

The schole-mē do make two kindes of prayer.

In deede the diſtinction may bee well vſed in ſome things, as in the loue and feare of god. As for example, loue may two waies be bozne. Firſt vnto god, and ſecondly vnto our neighbour, like as feare may alſo: For we doe not feare god onely but the ſuperior & higher power alſo. But the inuocation of God is of an other manner of nature. We be taught in ſcriptures of two manners of loue and feare, where it is expreſſly commaunded, that we ſhould before all things loue & feare our Lord God, and ſecondly our neighbour alſo, king and Magiſtrates, according vnto ỳ manner and condition of the honour alſo, which we be bound chiefly and firſt to giue vnto God, and than to the king, our parents and miniſters of the word, yea and to our brethren alſo. And theſe things be of ỳ nature, that not onely they may be done, without any hurt of Gods Maieſtie, but they be profitably & comely alſo, yea & due to be done. But ỳ caſe of inuocatiō is not ſuch, wherein this diſtinction can haue no place, no more thā it can haue in faith, neither in ſeruice. So that it is not without reaſō that we be in no place of Scripture taught to cal vpō Saincts & Angels, but euery where to call vpon God onely.

The heauenly ſpirites and Saincts (ſay they) doe pray for vs: Ergo, they muſt be called vpon. If a man ſhould ſay vnto them. How proue you, that they doe pray for vs, they doe alleadge Scriptures, and reaſons. It is written ſay they in Zacharie: And the Angell of the Lord aunſwered, and ſayd. Lord of hoaſtes, how long is it before thou wilt haue mercy vpon Hieruſalem and the Cities of Iuda. The foure beaſtes and 24. elders fell downe before the lambe, hauing euery of thē their harpes and veſſels of Golde full of ſauours, which be the prayers of the Saincts. And agayne. There came an other Angell, and ſtode before the Altar, hauing a cenſer of Golde, and there was much incenſe gyuen vnto him, that he ſhoulde gyue vp of the prayers of all the Saincts vpon the golden Altar, which is before the throne. And there went vp the ſmoke of incenſe from the prayers

Zach. 1.

Apoc.

Apoc.

of

of the Saincts, out of the hande of the Angell in the ſight of God. By theſe places they goe about to proue, that the Angels and deade Saincts doe pray for vs.

Vnto that which they do alleadge out of Zacharie, I doe aunſwere: that it is a viſion, ſuch as commonly commeth to Prophetes, and therefore not ſo to bee taken, as though it were a thing done in deede. But in caſe any man wyll take it as done according to the letter, hee muſt conſequently determyne, that all the reſt was verily and fully done alſo.

Secondly, what if we muſt underſtād by ỳ Angell ſpeaking heere in the Prophet, the inſpiration of the holy ſpirite, which ſpake the good wordes in his hart, and ſtirred him vp vnto this lamentation to ſaye: Lord of hoaſtes howe longe is it ere thou wylt haue mercy vppon Jeruſalem, and the cities of Iudah, and ſo theſe ſhould not be the Angels wordes, but the Prophets as praying vnto God by inſtinct of the holy ſpirite? But let it be ſo, let theſe wordes be ſpoken in deede by the Angell, yet for all ỳ they can not be ſpoken to any other ende, but that the ſpirite of the Prophet ſhould learne what to pray, and to be ſtirred vnto that maner of prayer: for if the wordes doe meane nothing els, but the prayer of the Angell vnto God, what needed they to be vttred in the viſiō which was ſhewed to the Prophet, wheras they might haue bene vttered alone in heauen? Wherefore it is a cleare matter ỳ they were therfore layd before the mynde of the Prophet, to the intent he ſhoulde bee encouraged to pray for the reſtitution of Jeruſalem, and the cities of Iudah, after the ſeuenty years of ỳ captiuitie of Babilon accompliſhed: and to prophecie therof: becauſe it was now at hand? So that theſe wordes ſeme to be rather an inſtructing of the Prophet, thā a prayer of ỳ Angell vnto God. Therfore ther can nothing of certainty be gathered of them, that the Angels doe pray for vs in heauen.

As concerning the places alleadged out of the Apocalips, by which they wil proue that dead ſaincts do pray for vs in heauen, we do aunſwere at one word, that thoſe matters which are read there, are to be vnderſtanded of the prayers not of the dead, but of the holy men, which are yet liuing vpon ỳ earth. For to what purpoſe were it to haue the prayers of theſe Saincts which be in heauen to be offred by the hands of the Angell vpon ỳ Alter, which is before ỳ throne. They doe alleadge that alſo out of Baruch cap. 3. Almighty Lord God of Iſrael, heare nowe the prayer of the dead of Iſraell, & of their children. But let them here at the laſt way M. Lyra which expoundeth it thus, that is to ſay, of the holy Patriarches, and Prophets, which prayed vnto thee when they were alyue for the good eſtate of their after cōmers. And of their children which ſinned before thee, ỳ is to ſay, Heare our voice, which though we haue ſinned againſt thee, yet wee doe for all that repent and crye vnto thee. Thus ſaith he. Whereby it doth ſufficiently appeare, how that ſuch wordes as well in this place, as in ỳ Apocalips do nothing at al

Apoca. 8.

Baruch 3.

Apoca. 8.

farther the opinion of our aduersaries, and that it can not be proued thereby, ỳ the dead saincts do pray for vs in heauen, much lesse after what maner they do pray: whether for the whole body of the elect together, or namely and singularly for euery particular person, and ỳ in all necessities as well common as priuate, as well bodily as spirituall.

Albeit that the dead saincts do pray for vs, yet that ought not to be called vpon. Augustl. lib. de cura pro mortuis, ad fin.

But let it be so. Let them praye for vs: doth it folow therof that we must call vpon them, and say vnto them, S. Gabriel & S. Peter, pray for vs? Can they be privy of al our necessities? Augustine affirmeth that he knoweth not whether that the Saincts which be dead doe knowe what they do here which be yet aliue, yea though they be their own children: and supposeth ỳ they do no more know what we do here vpon earth, than we vnderstande what they do in heauen. Who shal then for a certainty know how they bee euery where present with thẽ that be aliue, and heare their prayers & sighes, whereas ỳ matter doth belong onely vnto God? Abrahã being here aliue, saw ỳ day of Christ, which was to come after so many hũdred yers, but after he was once dead, he sawe not the estate of hys posteritie, as it appeareth in Esay, where we doe reade in this wyse. Marke from heauen, and loke from thy dwelling place, & from ỳ seate of thy glory. Where is thy zeale & thy strength, the multitude of thy bowels and mercies? They haue cõtinued themselues ouer me. For thou art our Father. And Abraham knoweth vs not, and Israell is not acquainted with vs. But the scholemen sawe that in this place, which

Esay. 63.

Augustine could not se, and which is not set forth by any testimony of scriptures. The Master of ỳ sentences argueth after this sort. If the Angels doe learne our petitions from god by his word, & which of them shall be fulfilled, & which not, why should we not beleue that ỳ soules of ỳ saincts also which do loke vpõ the face of God, do in his truth vnderstand the prayers of mẽ, and which shall be accomplished, & which not? This saith he whervnto the Duns men & Thomistes do ad somewhat. And we do answere them in few wordes.

The Master of the sentences. Lib. 4. dist. 45.

That Angels do learne our petitions from God by his word, we do know by the history of Cornelius, but yet we do not beleue that we ought to iudge ỳ same of ỳ soules of the saincts, forasmuch as we haue not ỳ word in this matter to leade vs to beleue it. And it is no sure ground to trust vnto any sophisticall argument, set forth wõut gods word, beeing so much the matter to deceiue vs, ỳ more probable that it appeare to the vnskilful. But if you aske me, why that the soules of the saincts that be in heauen do not as well know our petitions by ỳ word of God, as ỳ Angels do: take this for a manifest reason thereof. The condition and case of ỳ soules, and of the Angels is not all one. Angels be seruisable spirits, the messengers of God, whom he doth send and vse because of the elects. Therfore God doth open vnto them not onely our prayers, but all other things also, whereof they nede to haue knowledge to perfourme the ministery or seruice appointed them. So the Angell which was sent vnto Cornelius

That Angels doe learne our prayers vnto the worde of God.

Heb. 1.

lius, came to the knowledge of his prayers (which he was wont to make not vnto the Angell, but vnto God) because that he should be sent vnto him from heauen. There is no such matter written in the Scriptures of the soules of the Saincts: Wherefore this argumentation of the Scholemen is vtterly to no purpose. The Saincts do vnderstande, say they, the prayers of men by the reuelation of God. How is that proued? Because (say they) the Angels do so vnderstand it: why should we not beleue that the like is done to the soules also of ỳ saincts? What prayers I beseeke you doe Angels vnderstande by the reuelation of God? Those wherein they be called vpon by superstitious creatures, cõtrarie vnto the will of God? But there is no testimonie of this matter in the holy Scriptures, neither is there any reason why GOD should reueale such prayers vnto his Angels, which he doth neither like nor alowe, and for the execution of which, he vseth no ministerie of any Angels. Therefore they do vnderstande such of our prayers, as be made vnto our Lord God himselfe, in respect that they shall serue the will of God for the execution of thẽ, and for that cause they be enformed by God of them. And what is this I pray you, to ỳ inuocatiõ of Saincts? They saye, Saint Peter praye for vs. How shall Peter vnderstande of this calling vnto hym? By the reuelation of God, say they. What reason is it that God should tel Peter in heauen, My people, namely this man or that man calleth vpon thee, to make intercession for hym vnto me? where as he doth not alowe such maner of prayers, nor that euer he taught his people by his worde so to pray vnto Saincts, neither yet meaneth not to vse the trauaile of Peter to aide them, as he doth of the Angels. He said expressly: Cal vpon me in the day of thy trouble, & I will deliuer thee: and thou shalt glorifie me. Then how can he allowe thy doing my brother that thou callest not vpon him, but vpon dead saincts? If he doe not alowe it, why art thou so madde to thinke that he doth reueale thy prayers to the saincts, which thou callest vpon for thy profite? and that the saincts in heauen be so ignorant of Gods will, that they can allowe such an inuocation as God doth not alowe, and which was neuer vsed amõgst the godly? If a Prince shoulde say: I will that all my subiects shal in their necessities hartily and with assured hope call for my aide, and I doe promise them my helpe in all pointes, to the intent they shall glorifie me as their Prince: what subiect is he (vnlesse he be to foolishe,) that will runne after the noble mẽ of the court, to intreate thẽ to make meanes for him? or can thinke that in so doing he shoulde please his Prince? I beseeke you howe much more doe they dote, which doe call vpon dead Saincts, vnto whome their crye can not come, vnlesse it be firste presented vnto the sight of God, and by hym (as the Sophisters will haue it) reuealed vnto them? If it be altogether of necessitie ỳ our prayers must come first vnto God, why doe we not direct them streight way vnto him, seeing that he hath commaunded vs so to doe? Is it not much better that our prayers come so into the sight of God, that they may be conformable vnto his will and worde rather thã they should be quite contrarie vnto them both? But this is more than enough, touching the deuise of the Scholemen.

And as for the reasons which they doe bring that doe maintaine the inuocation of saintes, I sende the reader vnto our notes in our Cõmentaries vpon Mathew, where we haue answered vnto their obiections in that they saye.

1 That many be deliuered and cured by the inuocation of Saintes.

2 That Synners be not heard of God, and that therefore it is nedefull to flee vnto the intercession of Saintes.

3 That it is wel perceiued in princes courtes, what the intercession of them can doe, which be nye and fauoured of the Prince.

4 If one do praye for an other in this life without any iniurie of our mediatour Christe, that there is no impediment, but that the Saintes may also pray for vs in heauen. Ite, If the Saintes did of their charitie pray for others whē they liued here vpon the earth, they doe so much ỹ more in heauen, where they be now perfect in charitie. How vaine these reasons be, we noted in that place.

IIII. When we must pray.

The true prayer is tyed to no certaine time.

That which is the true prayer, that is to say, which is made not onely by mouth, but by hearte also, so that the heart do agree with the mouth, can be tied to no certain time, but doth alwayes depende vpõ the qualitie of mens affectiõ. If you aske me when we must sing, & whē we should weepe, the answere is easie to be made, that we may sing whē the heart is ful of ioye, & weepe what time heauinesse doth so greue our heart, that whether we will or not, the teares doe braste out of our eyes. If you aske me whē we must eate, and when we must drinke, and when we must seeke the counsell of the Phisition, there is no man but can immediatly make the answere, Eate whē thou art hungry, & drinke when thou art drie, & take counsell of the Phisition when thou beginnest to finde thy selfe euill at ease. Whole men haue no nede of the Phisition, but the diseased (saith our Sauiour.) And meate is not necessarie for them that be full, & drinke doth no good but for such as be a thyrst. And it is altogether like in the case of prayer, which is then in due season, when it is not voyde of reasonable cause and regarde of mynde, but correspondent & proportionable to the present necessitie and case. And therefore James saith: If any man want wisedome, let hym aske it of God, and in the last chap. Is there any man heauie and sory amongst you, let him praye. Is he of a good chere, let him sing. If you cõsider the partes of prayer which be to aske, to request, and to beseeke, to lament & make moane, to demaũde aide, to make intercessiõ for others, to praise and giue thankes, you shal easely vnderstande when the tyme serueth to pray: our lack shall declare vnto vs, what is to be declared and demaunded. The consetence of our sinne doeth enforce vs vnto prayer, to obtaine forgiuenesse for our sinnes, and to turne awaye the wrath of God. Slaunders and rebukes offred of the reprobate, doe make the afflicted and miserable to brast out into wailing and lamenting. Trouble and affliction doth instruct men when they ought to demaund ayde from God, charitie & pitie do moue vs to make intercession for our brethren that be fallen into aduersitie or otherwise subiect vnto the temptation and anger of God. The perseueraunce of the benefites of God and the zeale of hys glorie, doe stirre vs vnto prayse and thancks giuing. And whereas none of all these matters be felt in mens myndes, there is prayer vaine and out of season, at what time so euer it be made.

wrath

But they doe obiect that saying of ỹ Apostle: Pray without ceasing. And that which Christe taught in Luke, that we must alwaies praye and neuer cease. But thereunto we made answere in our commentaries vpon Mathew. The christian man doth neuer lacke occasion to praye. And yet for all that, forasmuch as it is not possible nor conuenient, that we should leaue all other busines, & do nothing else but continually aplie prayer (as the sect of ỹ Euchites opinion was). Holy men haue alwaies accustomed to appoint certain houres vnto prayers, at which times they might humbly poure out the heate and comber of their harts to ỹ sight of God. So Dauid did rise at midnight to make his humble prayer vnto his Lord God. And Christ himselfe employed the commodious time of the night seasõ vnto prayers. And Daniell being in captiuitie & prison, was wont to pray three tims in the day vnto his Lorde GOD.

Wherefore it is no straunge matter for a Christian man to make hys prayers vnto God, not onely in the Church with the Christian people, but at home in his house, at certaine seasons and houres lyke as the hũgry Romake doth appoint certayne houres for his dinners & suppers, to kaye his greedy appetie withall: and cõmonly it is thought that men do go to it with hunger. And the Apostle, though he were of all others most attentiue to the worke of the Lord, to preach the Gospell, yet for all that he went not about hys businesse without a conuenient ordering of his times, specially when he was in those places where ỹ Iewes had any Synagogs, and such tyme as he left, he bestowed it in ỹ labour and trauayle of his handy worke.

The faithfull man may also pray at his labour.

And notwithstanding this, there is nothing to the contrary, but that the Godly man may praye and sing whiles he is at his labour. Which Augustine noteth, and as we doe reade also of some other of the Fathers which were wont to eate, and pray and sing, whiles they were labouring. The Christian man is Lord and Maker, both of the Sabboth and of all other seasons, so that he may freely vse them at hys lyberty vnto hys owne commoditie and necessitie leueling in al thyngs vnto thys marke, that hee worke & procede religiously, faythfully, and truely wyth his Lorde God, and haue a regard of his owne necessities & of his neighbours also.

V. Where we must pray.

WE doe alwaies occupy some place, whersoeuer we become

in

in this earth. Wherefore it is not possible, but that we must be in some place when we do pray. And nowe the question is, whether that it doe make any matter, what place it bee we pray in. It seemeth that there is some matter in it, by that, that the Lord sayd of the temple of Jerusalem: It is written, that my house is called the house of prayer, & in Mathew: But thou when thou praiest, go into thy closet, and shutting the doze to thee, pray vnto thy Father which is in secret, &c.

On the contrary part it should seeme that it maketh no matter, by that ỳ the Apostle saith: I wil haue men to pray in euery place, lifting vp cleane handes. And Christ sayth: Woma beleeue me ỳ houre is come, when you shall worship the Father neither vpon this hill, neither at Jerusalem, &c. but the houre commeth, and now it is, when true worshippers shall worship God in spirit and truth. For the father also woulde haue such to worship hym. God is a spirite, and they which doe worship hym, must worshipp him in spyrite and truth. Then it maketh some matter, and it maketh also no matter where we praye. I aunswere, There was a matter in it amongest the people vnder the law, which had vpon certaine causes a certayn place appointed them at Jerusalem, to the seruyce of God, as consecrate and halowed vnto hys name. Whych ỳ Lord considered when he sayd of the Temple of Jerusalem. My house shall be called the house of prayer. But now after that the vse of ỳ law once ceased in the new Testament, & that ỳ relygion of God is restrayned to no certayne place, but that accordyng to the prophesy of Malachy, the name of God is great among the Gentiles from the East to the West, and that there is sacrifice and cleane offryng offred vnto hym in euery place, it skylleth not any longer, wher we do pray: but in what place so euer we be, it is lawfull for vs, accordyng vnto the doctrine of the Apostle, to lift vp cleane handes vnto heauen, and to praye vnto our Father in spyrite & truth. And whereas Chryst sayth in Mathew: When thou wylt pray, goe vnto thy closet, and shut the doze vpō thee, and pray vnto the father in secrete, he spake not to thys intent, to restrayne the prayers of his faithfull vnto chambers and closets, but to admonish them, that they should specially eschew the fault of ostentation and boasting, which the Pharisees vsed in their prayer, prayng openly at the corners of the stretes, and in the Synagoges, to be seene of men, and to bee taken for deuoute folke, and vnder that pretence to deuoure & spoile the houses of widowes, &c. And besides that the secrecy of closets or chambers be very handsome for thē which are earnestly giuen to prayer, & would vtter the feruentnesse of their harts in ỳ sight of ỳ lord. Wher fore they be very superstitious, whych can not pray but in Temples or Churches made by hande, or kneelyng before altars and ymages, whych Ethnicall superstytion, our counterfayte Bysshops, haue confirmed by the consecrating of theyr temples and Altars. Why doe they not gyue eare vnto Augustine, who sayth in one place: What doest thou seke an apt & holy place, whē thou wouldest pray vnto Math. How ỳ behoued in the closet.

God: Clense thy owne inwarde partes, and scowring out al naughtie desires from thence, prepare thy selfe a secret corner in the quietnesse of thy heart: when thou prayest in the Church, pray within thy self, and so do alwayes, that thou mayest be the Temple of God: For there God doth heare, wher he doth dwel. Thus sayth he. By which wordes it appeareth sufficiētly enough, that euen in his dayes many of ỳ Christian men were so fallen back to the superstition of temples & churches, not only in seruices but in prayers also, that they thought the prayers were more effectuall in Churches thā in other places, which they toke to be as prophane, and not mete for prayer.

Wherfore like as in worldly thigs it maketh no matter, concerning ỳ sustentation of a mans body, where he eate or drinke, so that it be holsome, profitable and conuenient, so in religion it skilleth not where a man pray, so that he pray godly and deuoutly in spirit and in truth. For as touching God whom we do call vpon, there is no regarde to be had of places, forasmuch as he is present euery where: and as concerning ỳ qualities of the places, they doe not sanctifie or make holy our prayers, but they be rather sanctified by the godlinesse of them that do praye.

VI. For what things and for whome we ought to Praye.

Here we must two wayes consider. First for what things, & secondly for what persons we must praye. For what thing we ought to pray, that is to say, what we ought to aske of our Lord God, it is a matter of no small importance to consider: for euery thing is not to be asked of God, lyke as euery thing is not to be trusted vpon nother. Neither will the childe desire euery thing of his father if he be wise, but he will first haue a regarde of his abilitie & wil, yea, & of his honor & reputation also: & secondly he will haue respect vnto his own person, as what is mete & conuenient for him self, how much more ought he which prayeth vnto God, not rashly & vnaduisedly demaunde what he list?

Therefore let vs seke and determine for a certaintie, what may be vprightly and so sought of God, that we may be in hope to obtayne it. Wherein I will declare mine opinion, and that in fewe wordes. It were cōueniēt, that in euery prayer were either some necessitie, either some conuenience and comlinesse: the necessitie I meane which presseth and prycketh forth the partie which maketh the prayer: the conueniencie I meane of God, of whom the thing is demaunded, and of him which maketh the demaunde.

The necessitie is either spirituall or corporall. The spirituall necessitie is of those things, which do concerne godly mynde, religion or saluation. By this we be compelled to aske of God a good spirite, the gifte of fayth, forgyuenesse of synnes, patience in aduersitie, continuance in true godlynesse, and suche other lyke, without which we can not bee saued. The corporall necessitie is the same, which concerneth the sustentation of our life, as the nourishment, ayde, and relyefe of

Two thynges to be considered in prayer.

Two kyndes of necessities.

our bodies, and therefore we doe saye in the Lordes prayer: Giue vs this day our daily bread, & when we doe desyre the health of the sicke and diseased, and the preseruatiō of him which is in peril and daunger.

The semelinesse or cōuenience of God, to whome we make our prayer, is to giue not whatsoeuer is desired, but to giue those thinges which may vprightly and conuenyently be giuen of the true God. Like as the comelinesse of a father is to giue vnto his children, such things as becōmeth a father to giue: and the semelinesse of a Prince is to deale fauourably with his subiectes in those things which are semely for a good Prince: and the part of a good Scholemaster to set forth these thinges vnto his scholers, which are meete for a good schole-master to do. For like as it falleth out oftentimes that children do vnaduisedly aske some things of their fathers, the subiects of their prince, the scholers of their master, which can be graunted to saue the countenance & comelinesse of the persone which is representeed: so that it betideth a like in this case also, I say not sometimes, but most oftē & commōly that we do aske those things of god, which he can not as God, giue vnto vs, with the countenance and comlinesse of God. Therefore we do require to haue in our lawefull praier a certaine respect of ỳ semelinesse of God: we do exclude al superstitious, wicked, vniust, curious, rashly presumed, & vnprofitable prayers, and much more them that be hurtfull, & we do warne men to demaūde those things of God which be semely for God to giue. It is the very office of God, to relieue and succour our necessities, as well corporall as spirituall. Wherefore it doth much auaunce his qualitie and countenāce, if he do mercifully graunt such our requestes and desires.

The semelinesse of God.

The qualitie or countenance of them that do praie, is that they must first haue a speciall regarde of the glorie and name of God, that is to say, that they must principally wish and pray for those things, which do cōcerne the glorie of God. And there is set forth a manifest example hereof in the Lordes prayer, where we be taught by the Lord himselfe, to saye: Our Father which arte in heauen, halowed be thy name. Thy kingdome come. Thy will be done in earth as it is in heauen. Secondly, that they must so make their requestes, ỳ whatsoeuer they woulde haue, they must committe it vnto the will of God, and that according vnto the exāple of Christ, who making his praier in his extreme agony & trouble, said: Yet notwithstanding, not as I wil, but as thou wilt.

The sem... them... do pra...

Thus I suppose may be cōpendiously & briefly cōprehended, what things may be directly & well desired of God. And yet for all ỳ, there do chaunce sometimes some speciall temptations & afflictions vnto the elect, in which they can not tel what they ought to praye and desire, according to their dutie, as we maye perceiue to the Romaines. In such cases ỳ holy spirit doth succour our weakenesse and ignorance, making vnspeakable lamentatiōs & mournigs for vs, which he only vnderstādeth, who is the searcher of mēs hearts.

...doyline.

The ... cum... wha... aske.

Now for what persons we ought to pray, I suppose we can not be better be better informed, than if we do cōsider vppon whome we ought to bestowe the fauors and dutie of loue, according vnto the doctrine of christ, so that it behoueth vs also to pray for all thē whome we be bound to loue. And we be commaunded to loue not only oure friends and kinsfolkes, but our enimies also. Therfore we must pray not onely for oure friends and neyghbours, and such as be of ỳ lyke religion, but for our enimies also, aduersaries and infidels. And like as we be charged by the bowe of charitie, to loue others as well as oure selues, so we must in our prayers desire the verye same of God for them, as we are accustomed and doe iudge meete to be asked as necessary for our selues. And of these things the principall be spirituall matters, and after them the things belongyng vnto ỳ body. Augustine in one place made mētion, how earnestly he prayed for his friends which had swarued from the truth: whereby it appeareth he was desirous to deliuer them from so great a danger. For what is it else, to swarue from the truth, but to perishe thereby, vnlesse that there bee a gap or path layd open vnto the waye of the truth through ỳ grace of God? This kind of prayer we ought chiefly to make for thē whiche be in high degrees, as Kinges and Princes, according vnto the place of the Apostle to Timothe. For no man is able sufficiently to consider, to howe great a commoditie of the communaltie such kynde of menne be brought vnto the truth of God. Likewise we must also pray principally for the ministers of Gods worde for many respectes and causes, so that it was not for naught that the Apostle requested the Colossians to praye for hym, saying: Be watchful, and apply your prayer with thankesgiuing, praying for me also, that God may open vnto me the doore of vtterance of speache, &c. Whyche place Augustine alleageth in a certayne sermon, requesting the people to pray for him. Pray for vs brethrē (saith he) that we maye well see that which we ought to see, & well speake that, which ought to be spoken. The Apostle doth also desire to be prayed for, to the Romaines, where he saith: And I beseech you brethren, by oure Lorde Iesus Christ, and by the loue of the spirit, that you ayde me in my trauell by your prayers, making for me vnto God, to deliuer me from the vnfaithfull in Iewrie, &c. He dothe the same also to the Thessalonians, saying: But pray you for vs brethrē, that the word of God may procede, and be glorifyed, as it is also amōgst you: ỳ we maye be quite of troublesome and naughty men, for all hathe not faith. And to the Ephesians: Making intercession in al your requests and prayers, at all tymes in spirite, and watching in him by all meanes of earneste prayers and beseechings for all Saintes and for me, that the word may be giuen vnto me, euen at the opening of my mouth, so that I may boldly declare the misterye of the Gospell, &c. By these places wee doe perceyue, how muche the Apostle esteemed the prayers of the faythfull, and we do vnderstand withall, what we ought to request of God, whē wee do pray for the ministers of ỳ worde, that is to saye, to open them the doore of the word, & to giue them a boldnes to preach and to declare the gospell, Coloss.

Rom. 15.

2. Thess. 3

Ephe. 6.

and to deliuer them from the vnfaithfull and naughty sort of people. When such prayers be made by the Church of the faithful, they be exceeding pleasant in the sight of God: for they be of the like nature, as if the children shoulde pray for the safetie of their parents, and the sicke for the health of their Phisition. In whyche case the compassion worketh muche with God, so that it is not without cause, that the Churche prayed for Peter at Hierusalem, and that there was continuall prayer vnto God for Paule, amongst the Gentiles.

And in this case we must not only pray for the ministers of the worde and princes, but for all saintes also, that is to say, for all the faithfull, as the Apostle doth admonishe vs, as is before alleadged, yea for all men, as the Apostle sayeth vnto Timothe: Therefore I beseech you, that aboue all thinges there be made prayers, earnest meanes, intercessions, and thankesgiuing for al men: and herein the persecution and slaunders of the vnfaithfull muste be no impediments or let, but that we muste also pray for them, for so Christ teacheth: Pray for thē which do persecute and slaunder you. And Hieremie writeth vnto ỳ Iewes which were prisoners at Babylon, that they shoulde praye for the peace and good estate of the cittie, wherein they were kept as prisoners and captiues. Like matter as if any mā should write vnto the christian menne whiche be now adayes slaues and captiues vnder ỳ Turke, to pray vnto the Lorde for the peace and quietnes of the Turkes. This is an apparant matter euen by the holy scriptures: but peraduenture some mā may doubt in this point, whether that we ought to pray for sinners or no. Whereunto I will make an answere in few wordes.

Whether we ought to pray for sinners.

1 Firste, it is out of all question, ỳ we ought to praye for such sinners as do amende their life by the admonishment of Gods worde. Surely for them we may boldly pray vnto God, that he will mercifully forgyue them their sinnes vpon their amendemente. For we do well knowe, that forgiuenesse of sinnes is promised vnto such.

2 Secondly, we may do well also to pray for them whiche do sinne not vnto death or deadly, when he sayth: He which knoweth that his brother committeth sinne not vnto death, let him aske, and his life shall be pardoned whiche sinneth not vnto deathe, saith John in his Canonical Epistle.

3 Thirdly, though his sin be so sore that he maye seeme to sin vnto death, yet it shal not be vnlauful to pray for him, for John forbiddeth it not, whē he sayeth: I saye not that thou shalte pray for him: which is another thing to say, than if he had sayd: thou shalt not pray for him: Moyses prayed for the people after they had set vp their Calfe, & sinned most greuously. And so we may pray also for them whom we do perceiue to be outragious sinners, albeit they doe not yet amend, not that they may goe clēre withall, but that they may reforme themselues, and be saued. But some man may lay in my waye, that whiche is red in Hieremie in this wise: Therefore see thou pray not for this people, nor take vpon thee no lamentation, nor praier for thē, nor request me not in their behalfe, for I will not heare thee. And the lyke we do reade in Hieremie

Hierem. 14.

Ezechiell.

Two kyndes of gods visitations, and two studies of the Prophets.

An obiection. See you pray not for this people.

Hierem.

remie also. Notwithstanding the diligent prayer of the Prophete praying cōtinually for the people of God, was not condemned by these wordes, but he was rather admonished therby, that the prayers wer but in vain, forasmuche as the time of the iudgement and wrath of God was at hād, as we maye see in Hieremie, where we reade after this manner. Praye not for this people to anye good purpose, &c. For I will walk them wyth sword, pestilence, and famine. In the meane while the Prophet left not off his diligence in preaching and praying, albeit he heard the Lorde say oftentimes, that he auayled not by hys prayer. There be two manner of visitations, whereby God visiteth the corrupt and croked people. The one is by the word, ỳ other by ỳ scourge. And there be two peculiar studies or endeauors of the Prophetes, one to preache, an other to pray. As long as the firste kinde of visitation continueth, the faithfull Prophete leaueth none of both hys endeauors. As long as hē dothe administer his office of preaching, he doth also continue out hys endeauor in praying. Yea and when the time wyll serue no longer to Preache, but rather to lament and waple, bycause of the scorge of God, yet for all that he can not forbeare hys prayers, nor chuse but make intercession vnto God, yea when he is angry and scorgeth hys people with worthy punishmente. No good man ought to bee blamed, if he doe well to the vnthankefull, though it bee lost vpon them. Lykewyse no man ought to bee blamed, if he praye vnto God for sinners, yea though they be impenitente, and his labor lost. God himselfe doth of his goodnesse shew kindnes to the euill and vnthankefull, and suche as do naughtyly bestowe his benefytes, whereof he can not be ignorant. Then howe can we blame hys doing whiche is moued of charitie to pray for such kinde of folke, although he lose his labour, and that God heareth him not? But we doe not fynde manye in this faulte now adayes, so that it appeareth that we nēde not make much adoe to informe the reader hereof.

So that I suppose it is manifest inough by that whyche we haue spoken, that we ought to exclude no mā from the communion of our prayers, but to pray for al sorts, superiors, inferiors, ministers of the word, faithfull, vnfaithful, friends, foes and sinners. Notwithstanding it is yet a great question, whether that we ought to pray for the dead also. The Papistes, to maintayne their gaine, doe earnestly hold, that prayers do much profite the dead, to deliuer them out of the paines of Purgatory. They do alleage Augustine, of whome we doe reade, that he prayed for his mother when she was dead, and that in sundrye places he maketh mention of such prayers which ỳ Churche vseth vnto God for the soules of them that be departed. And they do ioyne vnto him Damascene, and one Dionise also. And bycause they woulde not seeme to lacke the testimonie of holy Scriptures, they doe principally alleadge the example of Iudas the Machabee. But in Churches that be wel ordered, this custome to pray and sacrifice for the deade, is not allowed.

As touching ỳ exāple of Iudas we 1556.

Of the example of Iudas Machabeus.

do answere in few wordes. First that it is well knowen by the iudgemente of the Fathers and Councels, that the bookes of the Machabees be Apocriphall, that is to saye, cast aside and hidden, and without order ioyned to the rest into the body of the Bible, and without the authority of the Canonicall scriptures. Hierome writeth of them in this wise, in the preface of Salomons Prouerbes: Therefore like as the Churche doth reade the bookes of Judith, Tobias, and the Machabees, but doth not alow them amongst the Canonicall scriptures, so it doth also reade these two bookes (the bookes of Syrach and of Wisedome,) for the edifying of the people, but not for to confirme the authority of the Church doctrine. This sayeth he. And in the Councell of Laodicea, where the Canonicall bookes of the holy scripture be recounted, ỳ bokes of the Machabees be left out, the seconde of Esdras, the booke of Wisedome, and Ecclesiasticus, and the Apocalypse of John. Therefore howe can this example of Judas haue any authoritie in the Church of Chryst, seeing that the same peece of Scripture, can helpe nothing to the confirmation of the authoritie of the doctrine of the Churche? But I will recite the very place worde for worde. The nexte day (sayth Josephus, who was the author of these bookes, as Hierome testifieth) Judas and hys company came to fetch away ỳ corpses of them that were slayne, and to lay them with their parents in theyr fathers graues. And they founde vnder their coates whiche were slaine certaine presentes of Idols (whyche then had taken out of the Temples of Jools which were at a place called Jamnia) which the Iewes were forbidden to doe by their law. So that it was apparant vnto al men, that they hadde the ouerthrowe for that cause. Thus much touching the sin of them which were slain. And he addeth: And they all commended the iuste iudgement of the Lord, who had made manifest, and brought to light theyr secret dealing and doings. Afterwards they turned themselues vnto prayer, and besought God, that they might not be vtterlye destroyed for ỳ sinne which had bin committed. And thus farre forthe they did well and without blame. They were afraide, least for the sinne which was committed, the wrath of God would not be contented with the slaughter of thē whiche were already slaine, but would yet run further vnto them also which were left aliue: And this was ỳ point which they besought to be shifted away. And it foloweth: But the most valiant Judas aduised the people to kepe themselues from sinne, whereas they had sene with their owne eyes what was betided vnto them, which were ouerthrowen bycause of their sin. And herein also Judas dyd well, and it is added: And he made a gathering, and sent asmuch plate for Jewels as amounted vnto xij. M. grotes of siluer, vnto Jerusalē, to be offered as a sacrifice for the sin. This might be applied vnto the former trouble & care, wher the people which was left aliue, prayed vnto God, ỳ they might not be vtterlye destroyed, bycause of the sinnes of them which wer slaine. So that the sacrifice whyche they would haue offered at Hierusalem for the sinne, might haue bin done to the same ende, vnlesse that had bin added whiche followeth: Hauyng a good and religious opinion of the resurrection, for vnlesse he hadde hoped that they should rise agayne whyche were fallen, it should haue semed superfluous and in vayne to prayse for the dead, and bycause he considered that they whiche died in the feare of God, haue a very good grace layde vp for them. This consideration is holy and godly, wherevpō he made an offering or cleansing of the dead, ỳ they might be deliuered frō their sinnes.

Drachmas.

The facte of Iudas Machabeus expounded.

Concilium Laodicenum cap. 59. & vlt.

In this latter part where the fact of Judas is expounded and commēded, there be two pointes mentioned: of which the former deserueth praise, but the latter can not be confirmed and proued by the holye Scriptures. No doubt his faith was prayse worthy, in that he beleeued that the dead shoulde rise againe, and that suche as departed in the feare of God, had an excēding good grace layd vp in store for them in heauen. So that this was a holy and a godly imagination: but like as it is wont oftentimes to fall out, yea and to godly folke also, that vpon a good assured and holye occasion, confirmed by the testimonies of holye scriptures, some thing is vnaduisedlye gathered and presumed of, not agreeing wyth the holye Scriptures: so it befell also vnto this man Judas, in that whereas he beleeued ỳ his brethren which were slaine, shuld rise agayne, albeit they hadde sinned and were ouerthrowen by the iudgemente of God, he supposed it good to make a sacrifice for ỳ dead, to cleanse them from their sinne, whereas there was nothing at al commaunded nor thought of that poynt in any place of the lawe, nor vsed in the tymes before in the Churche of the Iewes. This is the point whiche can not bee allowed in the fact of Judas, neyther ought not to be take for an example, though that his thoughte and meaning were holy and godly, in that he beleeued the resurrection of the dead, wherevpon this fact was grounded. It followeth not, That bycause the deuise is godly, and the faith holye, to beleeue that the dead shall rise again, that therefore it is a godly and holye worke also to pray, and doe sacrifice for the dead, that they may be losed from their sinnes after they be dead. For if all things be holy and godlye, what soeuer is ventured vppon thorough the occasiō of an holy thought: their doing was also holye and good, which were therefore baptised for ỳ dead, bycause they beleeued that they should rise agayne: of which sorte of men the Apostle maketh mention to the Corinthians, saying: Else what meane they whiche be baptised for the dead, in case that the deade do not rise at all, why be they baptised for them? He doth allow their faithe, in that they beleeued the resurrection of the dead, but he doth not so well lyke the baptisme which riseth therof. For in case that he had liked it, he would surely haue taken some order for it in the churches which he established, but there is not one word left thereof any where. Wherefore Ambrose sayth well, that he dothe not allowe their fact, but that he declareth a fast faith thereby in the resurrection. And who seeth not, that touching the facte of Judas also, which the Papistes do alleage, there is a difference to be made betwixt the facte and the 1 Cor. 15. Of the and bap them y che be baptise for the dead.

Touchi the doin of Juda yve wil make a differen betwyx sion of the facte. In like manner as betwixt the baptisme of the dead, and the faithe of the resurrection, whereupon it was grounded, and betwixte the wilfedome of the wicked bayly which the Lord commended, and hys doing which was wicked.

Wherefore to what purpose is this example of Judas so fondly set forth vnto the Church of Christ, and therupon grounded not so much the faith of the resurrection, as the sacrificing for the dead to be followed of vs, and that all other matters be omitted, which might be godly set forth thereby. Judas thought it good to make some sacrifice at Hierusalem for the open and manifest sinne of them that were slayne, the reuenge whereof he feared would fall also vpon his people. But the Papistes do establishe hereupon a common and generall lawe to sacrifice for al and singulare dead, or anye wise departed, not for once, but many and sundry times: and therefore they be not contented with the first Dirges, but they do compell the people of God to make the seauen monethes mindes, and twelue moneths minds: therupon dothe rise an inestimable gayn, so that it is not for naught that for two M. pèces of siluer, they do reade twelue thousand to make their game to appeare higher and greater than theirs was at Hierusalem. But peraduenture we haue treated more largely of the example of the Machabees, than is nedefull in so manifest a matter.

As concerning the Fathers which they do alleage: We doe knowe that they haue sundrye wise spoken of the estate of the dead. Augustine speaketh in this wise: Whereas in Luke Abraham sayth vnto ỳ rich mã, that the iust folke albeit they wolde, can not passe vnto those places where the wicked be tormented, what dothe it meane else, but that they which after this life be so cõmitted to the prison, that they cã not depart frõ thence vntil ỳ they haue paide ỳ vttermost farthing, can receiue no relefe of mercy frõ the iust, although that they would and them, bicause of the vnchaungeablenes of the sentence, and determination of God: Whereby it is plainly declared that men must relieue others in this life, as much as they be able, least afterwards though they be in neuer so good case, they be not able to ayde them, whiche they would, &c. By whiche wordes he doth derogate much of their opinion, whiche doe flée vnto the defence of dead saincts. And in his .vi. sermon of saincts. The holy soules (saith he) whiche be eyther cleane in this worlde by innocẽcie of life, or else be cleansed by satisfaction of repentance, be receiued of our sauiour, & muste be beleued to bée wyth him, according vnto the saying of the Apostle: I desire to be losed, and to be with Christ. So that ỳ soules of our brethren & parẽts be not delited at al with these carnall meates, but they maye be rather offended than delited therewith, in case you beleue ỳ they be here vpon the earth, wheras they be in the blessed seates aboue. Thys he saith in ỳ place: ws do know what is the meaning of Augustine there, but yet withal he saith, that ỳ soules of our brethren and parents be in the blessed seates, and not vpõ the earth, much lesse that they be not vnder the earthe, or shutte vp, in I wote neare what corners of purgatory. And it is the like matter which he speaketh vpon John. Each man (saith he) sleepeth with his owne cause, & shal rise again with his own cause. And vnto Hesychius, Loke (saith he) in what point or estate the last day of euery mans life doth find him, in the very same ỳ last day of the world shall representh him. For suche as eache man dieth in this day, such he shall be iudged to be in ỳ day. These be his sayings: & as they be agreable vnto Scriptures, so they may be also more safely maintayned of the faithfull folke, than those lessons or leasings which do teach vs to make sacrifices and prayers for the dead, which they dreame to be in their counterfaite purgatory, without the authorite of scriptures. Yet for all this in ỳ .ix. boke of his cõfessions, he prayeth vnto God to forgiue ỳ sinnes of his mother, whiche was departed: & both withal commẽd hir godly life, & saith that he doth beléue that God hath already done the same, wherefore he maketh his prayer. And in the boke De cura pro mortuis agenda, hée saith, That men ought not to omitte and let goe the prayers for ỳ soules of the dead. And how doth this agrée with the same whiche is said before? If any mã aske me the cause of thys contrarietie, I suppose it to be thys. These fathers were in the very same case, as we sée our learned menne hée now adayes, enclining sometimes in their writing vnto the receiued opinion and custome of their times, and sometimes doe examine & handle the selfe same matter more diligentlye, according vnto the rule of the holye scriptures, hauing no respecte to the catholike or general opinion and custome, so it betided vnto them also in this case. For when they doe talke of it according vnto the scriptures, they doe so speake of the prayers & sacrifices to be done for the dead, that they do not maintayne the receiued opinion & custome. But whẽ they do leaue the Scripture and applie thẽselues to custome, they do speake those things whiche our aduersaries doe alleage against vs. And what wise body seeth not howe that there is an other matter of suttletie in argument, as Cicero saith, whẽ ỳ truth it selfe is furnished and tried, and an other when the talke is applyed vnto the common opinion: and how that in those things which do cõcern our faith, godly life, & saluation, we ought to beleue more the doctrine which is agréable vnto the holye Scriptures, than the same which is applied vnto opinions without Scripture? Surely loke howe much the differẽce is betwixt a truth and a common opinion, & how much lesse the truth ought to be vpholden than an opinion, so great is the difference betwixt those things which bée reported of the condition of the dead, according vnto scriptures, and those things which be spoken touching the sacrifices and prayers to be vsed for the dead, according vnto the accustomed opiniõ. And so much more ought the firste to be preferred aboue the latter.

It were a hard matter for a man to teache that there were any sacrifices, and prayers vsed in the Apostles times for the faithfull when they were departed. But afterwardes it fell out by the good Zele of the Bishops, ỳ there was a solemne remembrance kept of the which lyed in the Lord, specially of Martyrs and other Augustin. in c. 4. Ecce man dith deepe vnder his owne cause and shall rise vp again vnder his owne cause. Augustin. Epist. 80. ad Hesychium. Augustin cõfess. lib. 9. cap. 12. & 13 Cap. 14.

Of the fathers which haue spoken wyse of the estate of the dead. Augustin. lib. 2 Quæst. Euang. cap. 36

Sacrifi and pr er vse not v the A files t were also sacrifices offered, I meane of thankesgiuing. But they were not done for the deade to auayle vnto their saluation, but for the faithfull that were aliue, that their heartes might be the better confirmed in the faith of Christe. Of these sacrifices, Cyprian maketh mention, how they vsed to offer sacrifices for the Martirs, Laurence, Ignatius, and ỳ rest. Wherefore it appeareth, ỳ they had not the same maner of sacrificing for the dead at that time, as is now vsed in the Poperie. They did sacrifice for the martyrs, but so, that they did not pray for thẽ at all, as Augustine doth also testifie. So that this sacrifice for the dead had no prayer for them ioyned withall, but for the faithful whiche were aliue. At length this maner of sacrificing for the dead wente so farre, that men began to sacrifice not onely for the Martirs, nor onely in praise & thankesgiuing, but also they ordeyned sacrifices expiatorie and cleansing for al dead folke, and made their prayers for ỳ same: which will be no wonder vnto vs, when we way with our selues, how prone and redy we be to degenerate & decay from that which is pure and cleane, alway to the worse. Therfore they be farre wide whiche when they reade in the olde fathers of the memorie and sacrifice for the dead, doe immediately imagine of the custome of our dayes, and doe surmise that our vse of prayeng for the dead, is thereby cõfirmed. There is a great difference betwirte the memorie of the dead, and prayer for the dead. We do not disalow the memorie of the righteous, whiche is conuenient to remayne in blessyng, and continue in the church: wherof there be many testimonies in ỳ scriptures. In the meane season wee can not like the prayer for the dead, suche as it is vsed in the Popery, bycause there dothe not appeare any testimonies thereof out of ỳ holy scriptures. Secõdly, there is also great differẽce betwirte sacrifices & prayers for the dead. In the sacrifices for the deade, there were thankes giuen vnto God for the dead, bycause he had giuẽ thẽ a stedfastnesse to perseuer & cõtinue in the faith of Christ vntill their end, & there was requested that he would vouchsafe to graũt the like vnto thẽ which remained yet in the worlde and in the flesh. In ỳ prayer for the dead, it is requested of God, ỳ he wyll forgiue thẽ their sinnes, as though that they were departed out of this lyfe, without ỳ forgiuenesse of sinnes, and as though that their soules were neither in the seates of the blessed, nor in the place of the damned. Whereas the scripture knoweth not of any degrée, as meane betwirte ỳ refreshing of the blessed, and the pitte of hel fire. Wherefore we do alow the decrée & doctrine of the Church where we doe read in this wise: After the going vp of our Lorde vnto heauen, the soules of all saintes be with Christ, & when they doe depart from the body, they go go vnto Christ, loking for the resurrection of their body, ỳ they maye be changed with him into full and euerlasting blessednesse. Like as the soules of the sinfull being in Hel vnder aiue, do loke for the resurrection of their bodies, to be cõmitted therewith vnto euerlasting payne.

The soules of the dead be either in Heauen or in Hell. Decret. ca. 79

And we muste not vnderstãd these wordes: The soules of all saintes be with christ, as the Papistes do, whiche do acknowledge no other saintes, but such whose names be put into theyr kalender, but rather after the maner of the Apostle, of al faythful and true Christian folke, which the writyng of the Apostles vseth to call Saintes whyles they be yet liuyng vpon the earth. Neyther vnderstand you not by sinners, all suche whiche haue cõmitted any sinne, but according vnto the sense of the Scripture, them whiche haue bene gyuen ouer vnto the endeuour & studie of sinne vntill the very ende, without any amendment, and therefore be worthily appoynted vnto the damned sorte, and to the hell fyre.

But you will say: What shal we then doe for the dead if we shal neyther sacrifice nor pray for them? I answere. Take counsell of the Apostle, and heare what he teacheth thẽ to do. But (sayth he) I will not haue you bretherne to be ignorant, that you mourne not for them whiche be dead, as others which haue no hope. For if we doe beléeue that Iesus is dead and ryssen againe, euen so God shal through Iesus, bring them also with him which haue slept. For this we say vnto you vpon the worde of the Lorde, we shal not preuent them which doe sléepe, for the Lorde himselfe shall come downe from heauẽ, with the warnyng and voyce of the Archangell and the trompe of God, and the dead in Christ shal ryse first, and then we whiche shall be aliue, and whiche shal be lefte, shall be taken together with them into the cloudes to méete the Lorde in the ayre, & so we shall alwayes be with the Lorde. Wherefore comfort one of you an other vpon these wordes. This sayth the Apostle. But I beseech you, if we can obtayne forgiuenesse of sinnes and saluation, by sacrifices, almes déedes, and our prayers, howe chaunced it that the Apostle spake not one word of that matter, when he meant of a set purpose to instruct the faithfull touchyng the dead, saying: But I will not haue you to be ignorant my brethren, touchyng them whiche are fallen a sléepe, or dead, least you be sorowful. Had not the place serued here to say, You haue sacrifices, almes déedes & prayers: do sacrifice, do almes déeds, and pray for the saluation of them: Did he of forgetfulnesse or negligẽce omit to set forth vnto the Churche of God, a mater of so great a waight as we do sée that this is: When his meaning was to discharge ỳ mindes of the faythfull from that heauinesse and sorowe, whiche we doe as men féele in our hartes vpon the death of our friends, and when he opened the way how we should comforte one an other in such cases, what is the matter that he doth set forth the hope of the resurrectiõ and felicitie to come: Doth he not admonish vs, what we ought to trust vnto? and what to assure our selues of, concerning our dead folke? he dothe not tell vs of purgatory, neyther of our penall satisfactions, to pray and sacrifice for the pardon therof, but he speaketh of a resurrection to come, when we shall haue the true felicitie and euerlasting felowshippe togither with Christe. In this hope the Apostle meante to haue vs to repose & quiet our myndes, concerning the saluation of the dead. Therfore when that hope is decayed in our hartes, there can nothing else ensue but a trouble and carefulnesse about the saluation of our dead folke, and so to worke all those practises to our great charges, which the deceitfulnesse of ỳ Priests hath prescribed vnto vs. And thus farre touchyng our opinion of the prayer for the dead.

With vvhome vve ought to Pray.

This consideration dothe belong to the church prayers, which be not made priuately but cõmonly, by all the faithfull gathered togither to the churche, as the body of the same. Here riseth a question, first, whether that all persons ought indifferently to be admitted vnto this Ecclesiastical Communion of prayer or no: secondly, whether it be lawfull for a Christian man to pray commonly with euery congregation.

VVhether that all sorts of menne ought to be receyued to the cõmõ prayer.

As cõcerning the first question, I do perceyue by the ecclesiastical Histories, that al sortes of mẽ were not admitted vnto the communion of prayer. Some of the Elders did not vse to pray with straungers whiche came to them without letters of cõmẽdatiõ or credite. And peraduẽture there were some reasons, why they should so doe at ỳ time. In déde many do pray with the churche, whiche doe not cõmunicate with thẽ in lyke spirite of fayth & godly life, & yet for all that the Church can not sequester them from the prayer, but whether that they may iustly be excluded or no, which do so line, that according to the opinió of the Apostle, they ought not to be admitted to the cõmunion of the table, I leaue it to the iudgements of others. For I sée that many of the old fathers vsed to admitte such vnto the prayer of the churche, as they would not for all that admit vnto the communion of the Lordes table, as we do reade that Iohn the Bishop of Ierusalem did.

1.Cor.15.

VVhether we may generally pray vnto euery churche.

To the other question, whether ỳ it be lawfull for a Christian man to pray a like with euery congregation or Church, the answere is very easie & certayne. For asmuch as prayer is a parcell of Gods seruice, and that we must iudge therof according vnto the qualitie of the fayth and religion whiche is vsed in the churche, it skilleth much what the fayth & what the religiõ is, and what the seruices of the Churche be, with whiche wé should cõmunicate in prayer. I may not pray with the Churche of the Turkes, bicause I haue nothyng to do with their religiõ, faith & seruice. And I doe not make my prayers to God with the sinagog of the Iewes, bicause of ỳ diuersitie of their faith, religion, & seruice. And the selfe same cause may informe me that I ought not to make my cõmon prayer with the Ethnikes. What shal I do with the church of the Papists, which the catholicke & generall rage in idolatrie, and the innumerable superstitions and counterfayte seruices hath altered from the sincerittie and purenesse of Christian fayth and religiõ? How can I cõmunicate with them in prayer, with whome I can not agrée and ioyne in seruice? But wee haue entreated of this matter in an other place. We doe sequester our selues from the communion of theyr prayer, not bycause that they be sinful and we iust, for we be sinful also, and do say, Forgiue vs our dets, aswel as they. But bycause they haue put themselues frõ the felowship of true faith and Christian religion by theyr Idolatrie, superstitions, & false seruices, and couetousnesse of theyr Priests. Wherfore they be much to blame, whiche be informed of the truth of God, & yet doe neuertheless repayre vnto theyr sacrifices, & put of theyr caps with them to their Images and altares, & fall vpon theyr knées, and pray with them, seyng that they can not communicate with thẽ in fayth and religion.

Whether that it be lavvfull to Pray against any Mẽne.

We may pray against a wicked mã.

Let vs first sée how it may be said, that wé do pray agaynst a man. We may doe it two wayes. One, when we do pray vnto God against the purpose and endeuor of the man that dothe wickedly, that his purposes may not procéde, but be frayed & cut off: & in our so praying it is sayd, that we do pray against the mãlike as he is sayde to be agaynst a man, whiche is agaynst his endeuour and meaning. And he is sayde to ayde a man, which dath helpe and direct his deuice. There is no question of thys kinde of prayer. For it standeth not against Charitie, yea it is somtimes the very worke it selfe of Charitie, to hinder the naughty deuices and intents of men. When Dauid prayed vnto the Lorde, saying: I beseech thée Lord, make the counsel of Achitophel to bé folishe: hée dyd pray against his counsell in respecte of hys owne case. But yet he had taken no harme by it, if he had listed. And the Apostles, when they prayed agaynst the purposes & endeuors of Herode, Pylate, the Scribes, Pharisies and Priests, saying: And now Lord looke vpon theyr threatenings, and gyue thy seruauntes power to speake thy worde with all boldnesse, &c. They did not offend the law of charitie, for asmuch as that whiche they desired, mighte haue serued more vnto theyr saluatiõ than destruction. So wée doe nothing that is vnlawful when wée do pray that the purposes and endeuors of wicked persons may bée oppressed & confounded, in that they do go about to ouerthrow vs & the truth of God. For as they doe hurte themselues the more they do procéede in purposing and doyng wickedly, so they haue the more occasion of amendment: the lesse & seldomer successe that their deuices do take.

Act.4.

When mẽ pray against the wicked purpose of wicked men.

2 An other way a man may pray against one, in praying that he be destroyed by the iuste iudgement of God. If a man pray so against Satan, there is no question in the matter. But in case that we doe pray so agaynst any mã, it is a great doubt, whether we do wel or no. It is gods cõmaundement, that we should pray for thẽ whiche do persecute vs. It is than muche lesse lawfull to pray against thẽ. We haue the exãples of Christ & his Partyres, which prayed also for thẽ by whom they were executed & slaine. On the otherside there be also examples of holy mẽ in scriptures, whiche did so pray agaynst their enimies & aduersaries, ỳ they besought those things of God, which might serue to their destructions.

Luke.23.

VVhen vvee may pray against the very persons of the euill doers.

Psal.5.9.

Doth not Dauid say: For asmuch as there there is no truthe in theyr mouthe, theyr harte is vayne, their throte is an open sepulchre, they haue dealte craftily with theyr tongues, iudge them O God, &c. Dothe it not helpe to the destruction of the wicked, if they be iudged of God? Yea if they be condemned of wickednesse, as it is in the Ebrew. For whereas it is in the common translation, Iudge them O God, as the Greeke interpreter dothe turne it also, yet in the Hebrew it is, condemne and destroy them as wicked. Whiche Hierome translated, Condemne them. And agayne he sayth: Deliuer me my God from my enimies, and defend me frō them that doe rise vp against me, &c. And thou Lorde God of hostes, the God of Israell, ryse vp to visite all nations, be not fauorable to any that worketh wickedly, &c. Is it not contrary vnto the law of Charitie, that he prayeth God, not to spare them whiche doe amisse? It is a lyke matter that Hieremie also dothe pray agaynst his enimies, saying: Harken vnto me O Lorde, and heare the sayings of mine aduersaries, is there euill payde home for good, that they haue digged a pitte for my soule? Remember that I haue stande in thy sight, to speake good for them, and to turne thy displeasure frō them, therfore put theyr children to famine, & bring thē to the power of the swōrd: let theyr wiues be without children and be widowes, and let the men be slaine by death. Let the yong men be thruste through with the swōrde in warre, and let theyr crie be hearde out of theyr houses, when thou shalt bring the thiefe vpon them at the sodayne, bycause they haue digged a trappe to take me in, and haue hidde a snare for my fete. But thou Lord knowest all their deuice agaynst me vnto death, spare not theyr wickednesse, and let not theyr sinne be blotted out in thy sight. Thus he dothe pray agaynst thē whiche were ringleaders in the people of God, and it tended vnto theyr destructiō, and not vnto theyr saluation. And dothe not Paule pray agaynst Alexander the copper Smith, when he sayth: Alexander the copper Smith hath shewed me much euill, the Lorde acquite him accordyng vnto his workes, and se thou beware of him? As for that can not be abiden by, that Augustine vpholdeth, that these wordes of the Apostles in this place, were not as detestyng, but as forewarnyng, as if he had not sayde, The Lorde acquite hym, but the Lorde shall acquite him accordyng vnto his doyngs. For in the Greeke it is not ἀποδώσει, which is, shall acquite or pay home, but it is ἀποδῶ͂η, let him acquite or pay him home, if wee shall gyue credite to the Greeke copies which wee haue now adayes. What say you to that that Dauid doth not onely pray agaynst his enimies, calling for vengeaunce vpon them from God, but he dothe beare them a perfect hatred also, saying: If thou God doe kill the wicked, you bloudy men departe frō me, they whiche doe rebell agaynst thee, thy enimies doe in vayne rise agaynst thee. Doe not I Lorde beare hate vnto them, which do hate thee? And am I not kindled against them, whiche doe rise agaynst thee? I haue hated them in a perfecte sorte of hatred, they are become enimies vnto mee. If this was lawfull for Dauid

Psalm. 59.

Hieremi. 18.

2. Tim. 4.

Augustl. De Serm. Dom. in mont. Li.

Psalm. 139.

to

to do, why was it not also lawful for him to pray against them whome he did hate after a perfecte sorte of hatred? For what is more cōtrary vnto charitie, than perfect and ful hatred? what do we say vnto this?

The special Zele of Sainctes is not to be followed of all men.

To be short, such prayers of saincts be the examples of the speciall Zele of God, & therfore not to be followed of all men. As for their repugnancie with charitie, which belongeth vnto the second table, it maketh them not to be worthy of blame, for they are defended by the lawe of the loue of God. For the holy men do not therefore pray against theyr enimies, bycause they be troublesome vnto thē: but bycause they do trie them to be the enimies of God, and that they be enueagled with a Diuelishe furie to resist the Churche & Gods truth. In this point the loue of thy neyghbour hath no place, when it is repugnant to the loue of God, ỹ is to say, when we can not both loue our neighbour & God, but that of necessitie the loue of the one muste be lefte, specially if the neighbour do shew himself worthy to be hated in gods cause. Therfore wee ought not to pray agaynst them which bee our enimies, bicause that they be troublesome vnto vs, but in this respect it were more meet for vs to pray for them: but we may well pray agaynst them whiche wee perceyue doe resist God, rather than vs, as agaynst the enimies of God, in case wee bee endewed with the Zele of Gods glory.

Hovv vve ought to Pray.

WE do all know howe muche it skilleth in what manner that which is of it selfe good, be done, least if it be not done a right, it may doe more harme than good. If a man shal tell a tale before a Kyng, had he not nede specially to beware that he do not onely speake that which is true, but that he muste also behaue him after a due and comely manner in his tale telling? Howe much more haue they nede to regarde whiche shall speake vnto God, that their speache & prayer be so adorned with all circumstances of good meanes and behauiors, that it may be acceptable to the eyes of Gods Maiestie?

The conditions of the prayer.

And some of these conditions or meanes do cōcerne the prayer it self: some the person of him whiche doth pray. The conditions of the prayer be, that it muste be necessary & comely, wherof we spake before in the firt article. Secondly that it be breefe & shorte, without muche talke. This condition Christe himselfe doth prescribe in Matthew, where he sayth: When you praye, vse not many wordes, as the Gentils do. For they suppose that they be the better heard for their muche talke. Therefore be not like vnto them, for your Father knoweth what thinges you haue nede of, before you aske him. This he sayth there. Wherefore the prayers which be full of wordes, trimme tales & studied for, be not liked in the sight of God: for the more the talke is, the lesse there is of the spirite in thē. The Popery is ful of such Ethnical rather than Christian prayers, specially them, which vnder the pretence of long prayer haue gone aboute a great whyles to deuour the houses of widowes. But of this faulte we haue spoken in Mathewe.

Matth. 6.

The

The condicions of him which prayeth.

The conditions of hym whiche prayeth be these.

1 Fyrste, that the partie be voyde of those speciall sinnes whiche God dothe moste abhorre. For it is not possible that hee whiche maketh a prayer vnto God, can be clere from all sinne, neyther doth God himselfe loke for that. But yet for all that it is possible inough, yea and is requisite of necessitie, that he be no violēt nor cruel person. For without doubt the prayers of such folke are denied.

Esay.1. For so we doe reade in Esay: When you shall thrusse out your handes, I will turne mine eyes from you: and when you shall multiply your prayer, I will not heare it. For your handes be full of bloud.

Proverbs. 2 Secondly, Salomon sayth: He that shutteth vp his eare at the crie of the poore, he shall crie himselfe also, and not be hearde.

1. Tim.2. 3 Thirdly, the Apostle sayth: I wil haue mē to pray in euery place, lifting vp cleane handes, without anger & strife. And Christ sayth: Whē you shal stande vp to pray, forgiue if there be any matter. Item: If you doe not forgiue from your hartes, your Father will not forgiue you. Item: Goe firste and reconcile thée to thy brother, and then come, &c.

Mark.11.

1. Pet.5. 4 Fourthly, Peter sayth: God dothe resiste the proude, and giueth grace vnto the lowly. And Dauid sayth: A contrite and an humble harte, God thou wilt not dispise.

Iacob.1. 5 Fiftly, we do reade: Let hym aske in faith and stagger in nothing, for he that staggereth is like to the waue of the Sea, which is tosse & caried about with the winde. Therfore let not that man suppose that he receyueth any thing from the Lord, &c. Wherefore as many as desire to pray vnto God effectually, must beware, that they bee not violent and cruell, vnmercyfull, proude, and mistrustful, but they must beware, that they be voyde from anger and strife, & that they be not harde to forgiue, when they haue any quarrel against theyr neighbours. For God is so offended by these faults, that in respect of thē he dothe abhorre our prayers. There may be other conditions also touched, but these be the moste generall, and therfore to be eschued with the greatrr circumspection.

The behauiours of praying.

There be also requisite certain behauiours, conuenient to the very demeanor of them y do pray. The firste, is that we must pray humbly & lowly: & there is conteyned the confessiō of our sinnes, & humble calling vpon of the grace of God. They which do so pray, do accuse & humble theselues in the sight of God. The exāple of the Publicane is knowen, whiche prayed, & sayd: God be mercifull vnto me, whiche am a sinner. The Pharisées prayer was quite cōtrary, which prayed in this māner: God (I thāke thée) that I am not as other folke be, thieues, wrongful, and aduouterers, yea such as this Publicane is: I doe fast twyce in the Sabbath, I do giue tithe of all that I haue, &c.

Luke.18.

The outward gestures also do appertayne to this poynt, which do declare a lowlinesse and an hūble submission: and they be of sundry sortes. Some do fall vpō their knées, so Daniel did thrée times a day. And Christ prayed vpō his knées in the garden: and Paule fell vpon his knées, when he prayed for the Churches of the Daniel.6. Luke.22. Ephes.3.

Gentiles.

Gen.18. Mich.16. Psalm.55. Exod.3. 1. King.18. Dan.9. Iudith.9. Ezech.10. Dan.10. Luke.18. Iudith.4. Ioel.2. Esther.4. Daniel.10. Luke.22. Ephes.3.

Gentiles. Others doe lifte vp theyr handes withall vnto Heauen, as we reade y Salomon prayed vnto God before the Arke. Others doe cast vp theyr face also vnto heauen, and others doe lie groueling vpon theyr face, as Christe also did. Others doe humble theselues vnto God in beare and sackloth, as Dauid sayth of himselfe, and as we do reade of the kyng of Niniuites. You shall finde of some which prayed vnto God sitting. We doe reade of Elia, that he prayed vnto GOD sittyng vnder the Iuniper tree. And Dauid prayed sittyng before the Lorde. We doe reade of the Publicane, whose prayer God heard, that he prayed standyng, and sayde. God be mercyfull vnto mée sinfull creature. And why should not the sicke and diseased pray vnto God lying in their bedde, as we do reade of Ezechias? To be shorte, after what manner and gesture soeuer we doe pray, as touchyng God: it skilleth little or nothyng, whether we do fall vpon our knées, or lie groueling vpō our face, or in ashes, heare, and sacke clothe, eyther sitting, standing, or lying, so that we do pray earnestly and substantially with humble and contrite harte and minde.

The second manner of praying is, that we be not colde in prayer, but feruent & hote, specially in our great aduersities and troubles: wherof we haue an example in the prayer of Christ which he made in the garden, before he was taken. The auncient fathers were wonte to ioyne fasting therunto, to expresse the feruentnesse of theyr mindes, when they woulde with feruēt vowes and prayers beséeche the mercy of Gods Maiestie:

Iudic 20. Psalm.35. The third manner of praying. Luke.18. The fourth manner of praying. Act.10.

as we may sée in the bookes of Iudges in the children of Israell, after they had bin sore beaten of the Beniamites, they sate downe vppon the ground and fasted, wept and prayed vnto God. There be many suche examples in Scriptures. And Dauid sayth: I abased my soule in fastyng, and my prayer turned to me in my bosome. And the prophets, what time they meante to call the people vnto earnest prayer, they called them vnto fastyng and wayling.

The thirde manner is, that wée muste pray without ceasing. This manner Christ himself doth appoint vs in Luke, where we do read in this sort: And he told them a parable that they ought alwayes to pray, and not to slacke, &c. And what it is to pray without ceasing and not to slacke, it appeareth at the conclusion, where he sayth: Shall not God make the reuenge for his elects, which do crie vnto him day & nighte? Ergo, to pray, is to crie vnto god, & to pray without ceasing and not to slacke, is to crye daye and night, that is to say, at euenyng and mornyng, bothe goyng to our bedde, and rising from our bed. In this saying he doth declare, that GOD doth not lyke theyr prayers, which doe not pray vnto him with a continuall and vnfayned hope and trusse, but doe leaue off after they haue prayed once or twice, vnlesse that they be immediatly hearde.

Fourthly, it doth cōmende and set forth our prayer well, if it bée done with almesse déede, as we may perceiue by y history of Cornelius, vnto whom the Angell sayd: Thy prayers and almesse déedes are come vp to remembraunce in the sight of God.

For

For that godly disposition is acceptable vnto God, whiche hath mercy and wel doyng ioyned with all.

The fifte maner of praying. The fifte maner of praying is peculiar vnto Christian folke, when we doe offer our prayers vnto God the Father, by our Lord Christ and onely mediator, & desire to be hearde for his sake: Thereunto serueth the promise of Christe, whiche we doe reade in Iohn in this wise: Verily, verily I say vnto you, what so euer you shall aske the Father in my name, he shall giue it you. Hitherto you haue asked nothing in my name, aske, and you shall haue it, that your ioy may be full. And: Whatsoeuer you aske the father in my name, that I will accomplishe, so as the father may be glorified in his sonne. And thus much briefly touchyng the conditions and manners aswell of the prayer, as the partie which prayeth, and the very acte also of praying.

Iohn.6.

Iohn.14.

Of what importaunce our Prayers be before God.

By what argument it appeareth that we bee heard of God.

Howsoeuer we do pray vnto god, vnlesse it doe appeare that our prayers be not voyde, but thankefull & effectuall through grace, all desire & endeuour of praying muste nedes bee in vayne. Wherefore we must see whether that we be hearde, yea well hearde of God when wee doe pray, and whether wee doe obtayne our prayer or no, and what be the causes, why we doe not pray to God in vaine. We be three wayes assured that we be heard, yea & wel heard of God. Firste, by that that he commaundeth vs to cal vpō him, saying: Call vpō me in ỳ day of thy trouble. Secondly, by the promise whiche is ioyned vnto it, whiche is, And I will deliuer thee. And thereunto serueth that saying of Esay: Thē thou shalt call, & the Lorde shal heare thée, thou shalt crie, and he shall say, Loe I am here, bicause I thy Lorde God am mercyful. And God himself sayth by the Prophet: And it shal be so, that I will heare them before they crie, and will heare them whiles they be yet speaking, & herewithall agreeth the promise of Christ, whereas he sayth: Whatsoeuer you shall aske ỳ father in my name, he will giue it you. Thirdly, by the exāples which be to this intent set forth in the holy scriptures, to prouoke vs vnto prayer, & the nūber of them is so great, ỳ they can not be all of thē alleaged in this place. James in the last chapter doth set forth Elias only vnto vs, saying: The continuall prayer of the iuste person, auayleth much. Elias was a man subiect vnto like affections as we bee, and he made his prayer, that it might not rayne vpon the earth, & it rayned not for the space of three yeares and sire moneths: & he prayed agayne, and the skie gaue rayne, and the earth yelded hir frute. He doth therfore touch how the prayer of Elias was heard in so waightie a mater, to admonishe vs, howe much the prayers of the faithful can do before God: and least it shoulde seeme to be ascribed vnto the prerogatiue of the person, & not rather to the fauour & grace of God, wherby he is enclined to heare the requests of thē that doe cal vpō him, he doth preuent the matter, & say: Elias was a mā, as though hée shoulde say, he was not Angell, but Psal.50.

Esay.58.

Esay.65.

Iohn.16.

Iames.5.

1. King.17. 18.

but a man: and he addeth: Lyke vnto vs, to the intent wee shoulde haue no higher opinion of him, thā as of a man.

Was not the wonderfull effect of prayer declared also by the most manifest example of Iosua when ỳ sunne staied stil in ỳ middes of the skie for ỳ space of one whole day, at the request of Iosua, that ỳ people of God might therewhiles be reuenged vpon their enemies? At the prayer of Abrahā God healed king Abymelech & his wyfe, & hir handwomē, & they were deliuered. Isaac prayed vnto God for his wyfe, bycause she was barren, and God did well heare his prayer, & made hir to conceiue, and to be deliuered. Iacob prayed what time hee was in feare of his brother Esau, & was so well hearde, that he was comforted by the wrestling with the angell before that his brother met with him. As ofte as Moises prayed vnto god, he was wel heard whē he prayed for Pharao, ỳ frogges were taken away, & the flyes, the hayle & thunder ceassed, the Locustes were ridde away. The Amalechites whiche were the enemies of the Israelites, were ouercome. The Lorde was apeased with Israel, with whō he was angry for their grieuous offēce in setting vp a calfe. His sister Mary was healed of hir Leprosie. The wrath of god whē he ment to destroye the Israelites which murmured & desired to returne into Egipt again was quieted. The people was cured from the fiery serpentes. Israell being brought lowe and vnder by the Madianites, crieth vnto the lord & is deliuered. Manue ỳ father of Samsō praieth vnto god, & obtaineth the appearing of an angel. Samson being very drye, prayed vnto the Lord, & gat water out of the greate toth of an asses Iaw, & when he had dronke therof, was refreshed. Afterwarde by his prayer vnto the Lorde, he receyued his olde strength to be reuenged of hys enemies, albeit he was blynd. Anna the wife of Elcana, by praier obtained a childe from god, though she was barre: I meane ỳ Prophet Samuell. Samuel prayed vnto the Lord for Israell, and is wel harde, and Israell is deliuered out of the hande of the Philistians. At the praier of Samuel the Lorde gaue noyses and raynes from heauen. Cap. 12.

Of the effect of Dauyds prayers we may se euery wher in ỳ Psalm, wher we do oftentimes finde these sayinges: I haue cryed with my voice vnto ỳ Lord, & he hath heard me: & what time I cryed, the Lord of my righteousnes heard me. The Lord will heare me when I shall cry vnto him, & in my trouble I called vpon the Lord & cryed vnto my God, & he heard my voyce from his holy temple, and my crye entered into his eares before his face. See ỳ which foloweth. Item, I cryed vnto thée, & thou hast healed me. And they cryed (sayth he) vnto ỳ Lord whē they were troubled, & he heard them, &c. Salomon praied vnto god and is heard. Elias by prayer vnto god, raised vp again ỳ dead child of ỳ widow of Sarepta. At his praier fier falleth from heauen, and consumeth the burnte offering, the wood, stones, duste, and water. And Eliseus, by prayer reyseth vp ỳ dead childe. He prayeth vnto the lord, Iudicum. 13 Manue.

Iudicum. 15 Samson.

Iudicū. 16.

Anna.

1. Samu. 1.

1. Samu. 7.

1. Samu 13.

Dauid.

Psalm. 18.

Salomon. 1. Reg. 8, 9.

Elias. 1. Reg. 17.

1. Reg. 18.

Eliseus. 2. Reg. 4.

2. Reg. 6.

and his childes eyes be opened to see ayde from heauen. Ezechias by his prayer obtayned at Gods hand both the recouery of his health, and also the prolōging of the day. Iobs fryendes had talked amisse before the Lorde & yet their offence was pardoned at the prayer which Iob made for them.

Ezechias. 2. Reg. 20. Iob, vlte.

The Apostles prayed vnto god, and ỳ place wherin they were assēbled togither, was moued, and they were filled with ỳ holy spirite. Peter making his prayer vnto God, raysed vp Tabitha again frō death and restored hir to life. We reade that the prayers of Cornelius were well hearde of God. The Church prayed for Peter when Herode had cast him into prysō, and was well hearde, and recouered the Apostle safe agayne. At the prayer of Paule and Sila, the prysō was shaken with an earth quake, and all the doores thereof were opened & their bandes losed. Paule prayed for Publius father which was sycke, & restored him vnto health. These exāples be layed vnto vs out of the Scriptures, whereby it is declared howe open and attent the eares of gods maiesty be vnto their prayers, by whome hee is hartely called vpon, either for themselues, either for others. Whereby we doe perceyue what the efficacye of prayer is before God.

The Apostles. Actes. 4.

Peter. Actes. 9.

Actes. 10.

Actes. 12.

Paule and Sila. Actes. 16.

Paule. Actes. vlt.

The causes why payer is effectuall.

A question vpon the exāples of

IF we woulde knowe the causes why prayer is of so greate efficacie with God, as the exāples before mencioned do declare, peraduenture some man will impute it vnto the worthynesse, prerogatiue and iustice of them whose examples we alleaged, and that Iames did not absolutely say, that prayer doth much auayle, but that the continuall prayer of ỳ righteous, doth much auaile, and ỳ Abrahā Isaac, Iacob, Moses, Iosua, Anna the mother of Samuell, Samuell, himselfe, Dauid, Salomon, Elyas, Elizeus, Ezechias, Iob, the Apostles Peter and Paule, &c. were men in deed, lyke vnto vs, passible, and mortall: but that with al they had a speciall prerogatiue of worthynesse and grace before God and that therfore we must not loke vnto the examples of them for that we be farre inferiour to the worthe of all them.

We do answere in fewe words vnto thys Imagination. It is no newe nor strange matter vnto god, to heare fauourablye the prayers of hys fryendes, which hee hath embraced vpon a singuler fauour, and yet for all that it foloweth not therevpon, that he doth heare their prayers onely, and not the prayers also of the inferiour sorte, and the sinful. No doubt the publicane and the theife also vpon the crosse, were sinners, whose prayers notwithstāding that, we knowe were well heard. Therfore we must not so attribute a regarde of rygh̄tuousnes vnto God, that wee shall take awaye from him the regarde of our necessytie and pitye of our wretched trouble, as though that sayinge were not true: bycause of the mysterye of the nadye, and the waylinge of the poore, nowe I will rise vp, sayth the Lord. And ỳ in Exodus: Thou shalt not greue ỳ straūger nor make him heauy, nor afflicthim, for you were also straungers your selues in ỳ land of Egypt. Thou shalt not hurt the widow and fatherlesse: if you hurt them, they shall crye vnto me, and I shal heare their crye, and my fury shall be bent against you, and I shall stricke you with the swoord, & your wiues shall be widowes, and your children fatherlesse. Yea and that also: Lorde thou dost saue men and cattell, as thou doest multiply thy goodnesse O God. Ie, Which giueth cattel their fode, and to the young crowes calling vpon him. Truely these places doe not attrybute vnto God any regard of worthinesse or of speciall prerogatiue and righteousnesse, but rather a respect of necessities and miseries, whereunto we must impute that he doth not loath the poore, miserable and afflicted that do crye vnto him, but that he doth mercifully heare and saue them, though they be sinners. Therefore my brother, albeit thou do abase thy selfe farre vnder the worthinesse of those persons, whych wee haue spoken off, and doe esteme thy selfe not worthy to be reputed amongest men, but to bee reckened amonge beastes, thou mayst not yet so despayre of the infinite goodnesse and mercy of God, whereby he vouchsafeth to heare and saue not onely men, but cattell, and the chickens of the crowes also, when they doe crye vnto him. Therefore the peculiar and true causes why GOD doth well heare them which doe crye vnto him, be his infinite goodnesse, his loue towardes man, his fauour and mercy, accordyng vnto the which he is of his owne nature moste enclyned hereunto, to heare the miserable and afflicted, when they doe crye vnto him.

The true causes why God doth heare them that do praie vnto him.

Whether that God do alwaies heare vs when we crye vnto him.

FOrasmuch as the causes why God doth heare vs when we praye vnto him, be partly concerning his goodnesse, partly concerning our necessitie and saluation: wee may answere accordyng vnto the respectes thereof, that he doth alwayes heare vs, and that he doth not euer heare vs. Alwayes and not euer, semeth to include contrarietie: but yet notwithstanding if you distincte the matter aryght, here shall bee no contrarietie at all, but such as the diuersitie of respects shall exclude and shut out. If you haue a respect vnto the goodnesse of Gods nature, why it is that we bee well hearde when we pray, according vnto that respect wee bee alwayes well hearde when wee doe earnestly praye, that is to say, our prayers be alwayes acceptable vnto GOD, which he doth so well heare, that he hath a much better regarde and consideration of our necessities, than we be able to vnderstande: albeit that he doe not performe the same at all whych wee doe desire, or not after the same manner, or so sone as we do alike it. Paule besought the Lord thre times to haue the Angell of Sathan taken from him, by whome hee was scourged, and yet for al that he obtayned not that which he desired. And Christ himselfe did very earnestly pray to haue ẏ cup passe which hee shoulde drincke, and yet for all that his prayer was not graunted him: and who will saye, that neyther the prayers of the Apostle, nor of Christ the onely begotten of God, were well heard of GOD the father?

God doth heare vs euer & not euer.

But if you consider those matters which we do demaūd now and then, what manner of thinges they be, and howe they doe profite or hynder our necessitie and saluation, it falleth out often times, that accordyng vnto the respects of them we be not heard, that is to say, that we doe not obtaine those thynges which we doe desire. It was nother necessary nor profitable for Paule, that he shoulde be delyuered from the pricke of Sathan, accordyng vnto hys petition, but the grace of God did suffice to him. Neither it could not stande with the purpose of god, and the consideration of our saluation, that Chryst should not drincke ẏ cup which he had to drincke, and therfore his prayer was not performed. As for our selues, ẏ saying of Iames doth serue to vs: Ye doe demaunde and not receiue, bycause you demaund naughtyly, to bestow vppon your concupiscences & lusts. Sometimes those sinnes do hinder vs, of which we sayd somewhat in the.ix. Article before. Somtimes we doe praye so coldly, so without hart and spirite, that we perceyue not our selues, what it is that wee mumble in our mouth. Therefore when we doe so pray that we here not our selues, how can we hope to be hearde of GOD, yea, which is more, wee doe not pray to the intent to be heard, and howe shoulde God well heare vs, when it is all one to vs, whether we be heard, or not heard.

Iacob. 4.

To be short, we must not put the fault in God, if wee be not well heard when soeuer we doe praye, but in our vices and naughtinesse, whereby we hinder his goodnesse, grace, and mercy from performyng those things which we desire. For he is so good and mercifull vnto vs, that he hath a regarde of our health and saluation, and doth gyue vs such thynges as doe serue for our necessities. Wherefore it falleth out oftentimes, that he dothe not graunt vs our petitions, bicause if we had them, they should be more harmefull than profitable.

And this we must impute to his grace, and not to his anger. For it should be be a manifest argument of hys wrath, if he shoulde graunte the noysome thyngs which we desire, as it appeared in the children of Israell, vnto whom hee gaue the plenty of quayles, not in grace, but in anger, when they raged in theyr lusting for flesh, and murmured. So that Augustine sayde aryght, that GOD doth of fauoure denye some thyngs, which he doth graunt when he is angry. It is a fonde loue, and hurtfull cockering, if the Father shoulde so loue hys children, that he should lauishly yelde in all thinges vnto them, and not be able to deny any of their desires. Such cockering loue is, farrefrom GOD. He loueth vs, but wisely. He heareth vs when we doe praye, but he doth it vppon certayne respectes, and that to our profit, and not to our harme, vnles he haue good cause to be angrye with vs. He doth sometymes heare our prayer vpon his speciall grace and fauour, sometymes vpon mercy, yea, and sometymes in anger. Vpon speciall grace & fauour, when he doth well heare his friendes and such as doe feare him: such as Abrahā, Isaac, Iacob, Moses, Dauid, Job, Daniell, and the rest were. Of mercy, when he doth wel heare the afflicted, and succour their necessyties. In anger when he doth graūt those things to ẏ reprobate, which they do desire to their owne hinderaunce, and which he woulde not graunt at all, vnlesse hee were angry with them. But thus much for prayer, is sufficient for this time.

Cour... Nawe... God d... denie... thing... fauor... maie... doth ... in ang...

Of Vowes.

The vse of Vowes hath bene alwaies in moste holy estymation amongest Godly folke, tyll that at lengthe it hath waxen so corrupt, and so growen out of kinde, that many men knowe none other vse thereof, but such as religious vowmakers, pilgrimes, and Idolaters are tied and entangled withall. It is euen in lyke case as prayer and inuocation bee, whereof it was wont to be reputed a parcell or member. Wherfore I thinke it good to saye somewhat therof after prayer.

What a Vowe is.

A Vow may be take two waies. For vowing signifieth, to make a deuout or solēne promisse, & also to wishe and desire. So that a vowe signifyeth sometymes a promise made vnto God, and sometimes a desire. Lyke as ẏ Grecke doe vse these two wordes εὐχεσθαι and εὐχή in these two senses. Wee be wont in vowinge to desire and earnestly request some thing of God, & therefore a vowe is often tymes taken for a desire, and prayer. So when those thinges which we haue desired doe fall out accordyng vnto our minde, we say we haue our wishe or vowe: and they haue their wyll which haue their desires.

But the proper meaning of this worde, is to signifie a promise, and that not euery manner of promise, but the same which is deuoutly and holily made vnto God. If you promise any thing to a man, or to any other creature, it may be wel called a promyse, but not a vowe. The Maister of the Sentences doth define it after this manner. A vow is a certaine testifyng or witnessinge of a willing promise, which muste be made properly vnto God, and of those thinges which do belong vnto God. The Scholemen do define it after this sort: A vowe, say they, is a promyse made vnto GOD of some purpose, vppon our large or aboundaunte liberalytie, to some good ende, & confirmed by delyberation. Hee sayth of a purpose vpon our aboundaunt liberalitie: bycause it can not be wel called a vow, whē it is in a thig which is necessary vnto our saluation, and a promyse made vnto GOD: bycause that a promyse made vnto a man, hath not the nature of a vow. What shall wee then iudge of the Vowes which not onely the religious, Friers, Monks, &c. do make vnto saints, to Dominike, Benet, Fraunces, &c. but withall the rable of them that be in disease and daunger, do vowe some to one Saint, & some to another, to be healed and deliuered. He sayth, to some good ende, to cut of those vowes which be not or can not serue to any good ende. For such vowes can not please God. He saith also, confirmed by deliberation, to make a difference betwixt those thinges which be done deliberately, and those which be done rashly, and vnaduisedly. Some do adde vnto it also an intention to bynde himselfe to fulfill the promise, bicause they do suppose that the deliberation alone is not sufficient to ratifie the promise. They do set certaine degrees in the vowe, whereby it is absolute and obligatory. The first they make deliberatiō, the second in proceding, the third in the perfecting, ỹ fourth in the solemnization, as they doe terme it. Deliberation is when we do first thinke vpon the making of the vowe, and do deuise with our selues, whether it ought to be done or no. They call that the proceding, when after that we haue deuised vpon it, we doe purpose to make the vowe, and therefore they do call it, the purpose. The confirmation, or perfecting, is when we do promise by expresse wordes and myndes, to bynde our selues to the same which we haue purposed. And they do call it the solēnizatiō, when they do professe & bynde themselues for the kaying of the vow, openly and with certein solemne ceremonies to some prelate, as Monks and Fryers, are wont to do. Thus the Scholemen doe speake of vowes, wherein notwithstāding they? fine arguments they do enclyne more to the commendation and prayse of the corrupt, than of the sincere kindes of vowes.

The maister of the Sentences.

The Scholemen.

How many manner of vowes there bee.

The Maister of the Sentences saith, that some vowes be common, and some singular. That is common, which all men do make at they? Baptisme, when they do promise to renounce the deuil, and his pompes. The singular vow is that, when a man dothe of his owne accord promise to keepe virginitie, continencie, or some such like matter. Item, of the singular vowes, some be solemne and some priuate. The priuate is that which is done in secret & in hokermoker. The solemne is that, which is made in the face of the Church.

The Scholemen do ad yet two kindes of vowes more: one which is made without condition, which they call pure & absolute: the other which is made conditionally: with conditions annexed vnto it. This is they? opinion of the kindes of vowes.

But we do sticke vnto the holy Scriptures, and make three kindes of vowes. The first of them, which be made in afflictions, necessities & daungers. So they which be tossed with the tempest of the Sea, which do wander in desert and wylde places, which be kept in irons & shadow of death, which do lye sicke in they? beddes, or be trauayled in like perills, perills, in daunger of lyfe, doe not simply crye vnto the Lord, & beseeke his ayde, but adding also some vow, doe deuoutely promise some thing which they will offer for a thankefulnesse, after they be once deliuered, to testifie and declare openly, ỹ by his benefite thei be saued from so exceding daunger. So in this kinde of vowes there be ioyned together a moste feruent calling vpon for gods ayde, and a vowe also conteyning a promisse of prayse and sacrifice. Of it there is mention made in the Psalme, where we do reade in this wyse: He hath not despysed & set light the prayer of the poore, nor he hathe not turned his face from mē, and when I cryed vnto him, he heard mē. And there is added for the vowe and fulfilling thereof: Of thē (sayth he) is my prayse, that is to say, I will prayse thē in a great congregation, I will performe my vowes in the sight of them which do feare thē, and I will enter (saith he) into thy house, in burnt offrings, I wil performe my vowes vnto thē which my lyps hath appointed, and my mouth spoken in my trouble. I wyll offer fat burnt offerings vnto thē, with the incense of Goates. I wil offer the Oxen and Kiddes. We do finde such kinde of vows in other Psalmes also. And Esay the Prophet prophesied of the Egiptians, that they should crye vnto the Lord from ỹ presence of him which should trouble thē, & that they should make vowes, and performe them. This kinde of vowe is vsed of all peoples and nations. They which do serue counterfayte and false gods, as sone as they be in any peril or daunger, or els be afrayde of any perill, they doe seeke they? ayde by making of vowes and prayers vnto them, and they do promise them some Sacrifice or rewarde, whereof these vowed presentes doe come, which we see set vp in the temples. Euen so it is a generall matter in the Popery to call vpon Saintes, and to make vowes vnto them. In this manner both the Gentils, Papists, and Iewes also haue giuen that vnto they? counterfaite gods, which doth appertayne vnto the true God onely and alone. Wherein the godly are to be commended, that in they? necessities they haue tourned vnto the Lorde, and beseought his ayde, and haue deuoutly and religiously vowed Sacrifices of prayse, and of thankes giuinge vnto him: which thing doeth so muche please the Maiestie of God, that he doth aduise all them that be Godlye, to make and performe suche vowes, saying: Vowe, and performe vnto your LORD GOD, all you which doe offer rewardes about him.

The seconde sort of vowes is when anye thinge is vowed vnto GOD of purpose to gratifye and please him, the partye being in no necessitie or daunger. So we doe reade that Dauid vowed, & swore vnto the Lorde saying: If I enter into the tabernacle of my house, If I go vp vnto the bedde of my couche: If I doe yelde sleepe vnto my eyes, and slombering vnto myne eye lyddes, and rest my head, vntill I finde a place for the Lord, a tabernacle for the God of Iacob, This the moste Godly kinge dyd vowe, after he had obteyned rest & peace by the fauour of god, and sat

The vowes of the Papistes.

Psalm. 76.

VVhen a thinge is vowed of purpose to gratifie.

Psalm. 132.

Psalm. 132.

2. Samuel. 7

at home in his house quietly, and was no more in perill as he was before time. And hereunto I do ioyne those vowes also, whereby some did consecrate, and gaue vp themselues to the Lord for a season: such as the Scripture doth call the Nazarées, of whom we doe reade thus: The man or woman (saith he) which doth make any vowe to be sanctified, and will consecrate themselues vnto the Lord, shall forbeare from wine, and all thinges that may make a man drunck, &c. They which did thus, did it of purpose to gratifie the Lorde. Such was ý vow also of Anna, the Mother of Samuell, when she vowed, that if she could haue a sonne, she would consecrate him vnto the Lord.

Numeri. 6

1. Samuel. 1

vowing of fastig vnder the lawe.

The third kinde of vowes is that, whereby some being vnder ý lawe, and meaning to punish & pul down, and to abate their affections, dyd vowe fasting for certaine daies, and abstaine from certaine things: and to that purpose is ý we do read in Numery: If there be a vow made, and an othe taken to punishe the soule or minde, by fasting or abstinence from other things, it shall be in the mans arbitrement and lybertie whether hee will doe it or not.

Numeri. 30

Some vowes be temporary and some continuall.

1. Samuell. 1

Of these vowes some be temporary and for a time, and some for euermore, that vowe was for euermore, when the Prophet Samuell was consecrate for euermore to the ministery of God, before he was conceiued in hys mothers wombe. Yet for all that such a vowe of consecration mought be for a time, lyke as it appeareth that other matters also were done for a season. Thus much we haue thought good by the waye to note out of the holy Scriptures, touching the kindes of vowes. And in case any man lyke the Scholemens doctryne, he may haue good leaue for all me to folow it.

Of the Circumstaunces of Vowes.

IT forceth much what the circumstaunces of vowes bée, to make them that they be not vnlawfull: so that we must consider the circumstaunces of a vowe. First who he is that voweth. Secondly to whom. Thirdly what. Fourthly to what intent and purpose. Fiftly, how farre forth the vowe stretcheth.

First of all it skilleth much who he be that maketh the vow. The holy Scripture doth require a free authoritie and power in him which shall vow any thyng vnto God, so that he must be his owne man, and not subiect to the iurisdiction of any superior. So he doth giue libertie to the man to vowe, saying: If any of thy men doe make a vowe to the Lorde, or binde himselfe by an othe, he shal not auoid nor frustrate his word, but he shall fulfil all that he hath promised: but it doth not giue power & libertie to ý daughter which dwelleth yet in hir Fathers house, and is of a childes age to make a vow, no nor to the wife neither, vnlesse that the Father do consent to the one, and the husband to the other. But such as be widowes and vndowred, they shal performe whatsoeuer they do vow: it maketh no mencion of the sonne, nor of the seruaunt that is vnder ý iurisdiction

Whether he be not perill for transferring to serue God vnlesse they their superiours licence.

Numer. 30.

of

of the good man of the house, but in my iudgement they go not amisse, which do not giue them neither free liberte to vowe, but do suppose that the cõsent of the father and master is as much requisite in them, as it is in the wife and daughter. For it is not Gods meaning, that the authoritie of the father shoulde vnder the pretence of a vowe be broken by the sonne, or the authoritie of the master by the seruant, where as it is conuenient, that the iurisdiction of them both be kept whole & soũde toward their familie, not only in the wyues and daughters vnmarried, but in the sonnes & seruaunts also.

But some body wyll saye. It is not lawfull then for a mans wyfe, daughter, sonne & seruaunt to serue God, without the cõsent of the husband, father & master: as though that the power of the father, husbande, and master were greater thã Gods, and that the seruice of God were such as should hinder ý power of the superiours, if the inferiours would serue God.

I aunswere, we must not make the matter of vowes so necessary vnto saluatiõ, as though we could not be saued without them, as we can not without the seruice of God. The seruice of God is not tied to vowes, we may serue God without any bynding of vowes, by faythe, loue, prayer, feare and obedience, which doe decaye or diminishe nothing at all of the authoritie which the superiours haue ouer the inferiours. So that God will not haue the consciences of the inferiour sort so to be tied and restrayned by the meanes of vowes, that they may at their libertie make what vowe they lyst, against the consent of their superiours, and so derogate or decaye their iurisdiction. But God doeth better like with the obedience and subiection which he hath charged ý inferiours withall, than with any maner of vowe. The Scholemen doe argue here of bysshops, benefficed clerkes, as they call them, religious folke, Abbots, and religious Prelates, whether that it be lawfull for them to make a vowe or no, to hinder their churches & estates or degrées, as if a Bysshop or a Clerke should make a vowe of pylgrimage vnto S. James, or to Hierusalẽ, &c. or to enter into any religion, whether that they be bounde to performe their vowe or no. They doe not suffer cloysterers to vowe any thing without the consent of their superiors first obtained. For asmuch as they haue giuen ouer their wylling or nilling, & be altogether bound to the will of father Abbot, we doe lyke none of these their questions, which they do make of mõkes, fryers, nonnes, abbots, and prelates, to decide what is lawfull for them to do, & what vnlawfull. For asmuch as it can not be taught by any holye Scriptures, that any of all their degrées, orders, & professions do please God. As for bishops & ministers of the church, we do not like their making of monkish and superstitious vowes, not onely bicause they can not performe thẽ without the hinderaũce of the churches and ministerie cõmitted vnto them, but also bicause they ought not onely to refuse them their selues, but to let that there be no suche vowes made by their inferiors. And yet notwithstãding, why may not a bisshop being in any peril so cal for the aide of God, that he may vow sacrifice of praise vnto him, saying with Dauid: My praise shall be of thee in a great assembly. I will yeld my vowes in the sight of them which doe feare thee. I will sacrifice a sacrifice of praise vnto thee.

To whom we ought to vowe

2 Secondly it is a matter also to whō a vow be made. We declared in the first article before, ẏ this is ẏ condition of a vow, ẏ it must be made to God only, which ẏ schole doctors did also cōfesse. Wherfore, what vowe soeuer is made to any creature, it is vnlawful & worthy of blame: such as ẏ papists vse many. Vow, (saith ẏ Prophet) & performe to ẏ lord your god. Then what do the blinde buzzards, which do make vowes to deade saintes, of whom they can not truely say, that they be very Gods.

The reader must marke here, what difference ther is betwirte a vowe and an othe. It is not lawefull to vow, but vnto God onelye. But we may sweare vnto man, & bind our selues vnto him by an oth. Wherfore we mast not iudge the condition of a vow, after the condition of an othe.

What difference is betwixt a vowe and an othe.

3 Thirdly, it is one of the circūstances of a vow, to consider what maner things they be, which we do vowe vnto God. For it is not conuenient that we should vowe such things vnto him, as doe not please him: as those things be, which be vnlawful & naught, or vnprofitable & foolish, or impossible, or tied vnto manifest daunger. They be vnlawfull vowes, which can not be lawfully performed. The vow of Iephthah was not lawfull, because it was not lawfull to kill a man for a sacrifice, much lesse his daughter. If the wife should vow virginitie, so that she should denye hir duetie vnto hir husband, the vowe is vnlawefull, bicause it is contrary vnto Gods ordinaunce. It is an vnprofitable and fond vowe, when we doe promise to abstaine from certeine meates, vpon some certeine daies: for meat doth not commend vs vnto god, nor auaileth any thing vnto true godlinesse. Such maner of vowes be vnprofitable & foolish & can not please God. It is an impossible vowe, if thou shouldest vowe to liue without the fleash, as long as thou art in the fleash, vnlesse it be wrought and made possible by the spectall gift of God, otherwise impossible. Such is ẏ vow of virginitie. To be a virgin is not euill of it selfe. And in case thou haue vowed it, loke wel how to be able to performe thy vowe, & that not only in thy body, but in the spirite also: specially ẏ thou offend not God by the meane of this vow. Els as ẏ Apostle witnesseth. It is better to marrye than to burne. Besides this, in case a man shall vowe to abstayne from these thinges, which nature it selfe can hardely lacke, and without which the life of man can not well be sustained, but fall into daungerous diseases, if hee doe in deede performe the same which he hath vowed, it is a daungerous and vnpleasaunt vow vnto God.

Vnreasonable. Impossible

Daūgerous

4 Fourthly, it maketh some matter also to what intent and purpose the vowe be made, for therevpon the iudgement of it doth mest depend. If a man make a vowe for his belly or gaine sake, to continue for for a season, or for any seruice, that vowe can not bee well taken, and such be all the vowes of the cloister creepers.

Vpon what purpose man vowe

Lastely, it is of no small importaunce, that the vowe be limmited to some likes or bandes, that it stretch not further than it can doe good, or to make that to continue for euer, which ought to bee but for a season, for they which bee vndertaken for euer, are oftentymes hurtfull. Thus much by the waye, of the circumstaunces of vowes.

That Vowes ought to bee performed.

The very truth it selfe, which we do profesle, doth binde vs to performe whatsoeuer we do vow vnto God, and thereunto the common perseueraunce also of all men doth assent: but besides that there do remaine also most manifest commaundements of the holy Scripture for this matter, plentyfull inough proposed vnto them which doe make vowes. So wee do read in Numeri: If any man doe make a vow vnto the Lord, or bind himselfe by othe, he shall not make his word void, but fulfil all that he hath promised. And when thou makest a vowe vnto the Lorde thy GOD, thou shalt not staye in the performaunce of it, therefore the Lord thy God shall require it of thee. And in case thou do slacke it, it shalbe accoūted an offence vnto thee. If thou list not to promise, thou shalt be without sin: but whatsoeuer doth once passe thy mouth, thou shalt keepe it and performe thy promise vnto ẏ Lord thy God, as thou hast spoken of thine owne will, and with thy mouth. And Dauid saith: Vow (saith he) & performe vnto your Lord God, all you which doe present him with rewards rounde about. And in Eccles. If thou hast vowed any thing vnto God, sticke not to performe it, (for an vnfaithfull and fonde promise doth mislike him) but whatsoeuer thou hast promised performe it. And it is much better not to vow at all, than when thou hast vowed any thing, not to performe it. By these places of Scripture it is manifest inough, why that they which haue made any vowe, bee bound to the performaunce thereof. God doth not chalenge to haue any vowe made vnto him, but in case it be made he chalengeth the performaunce thereof: and whye? Bycause it is an offence or sinne, if the word which is not only thought in the heart, vpon no constraint and cōpulsiō, but of a mans own accord and free will, & is also by expresse speche promised vnto the Lorde, be made voide for no necessitie, but of a lightenesse and inconstancye of minde: which lightenesse is verye worthy to be blamed, if it bee vsed towardes anye man: howe much more then, if it bee vsed towardes God? And againe, bicause this displeasure of breakinge of a vowed promise, sauoreth of a contempt of God, and therefore can not escape vnreuenged, for God shal cal vpō it

Psalm.76.

Eccle.5.

How vowes ought to bee performed.

Like as it importeth or forceth much, what & to whom & vpon

what

It is a matter how a vowe be performed.

A vowe must be wholy performed. Num. 20.

what intent a vowe be made, so it is a matter also, howe a man shall performe ỳ which he hath vowed. For like as men may offend in making vowes, so they may doe also in performing them: so ỳ the maiestie of God may be more displeased thā pleased thereby. He which voweth any thing may offende two wayes. First in not performing: Secōdly, in not performing as it becommeth. A vowe ought to be performed first of all, not as a thing maimed, by patches and peecemeale, but full and whole: and therefore Moses sayeth: He shall doe accōrding vnto all the whole which hath passed his mouth. The flesthe is of that disposition, that when through the inconstancie thereof, it had rather not performe at all the same which it hath vowed, yet it will do somewhat, to seeme to performe ỳ whole. He which doth so performe, doth yelde lesse and more displeasure God, than if he yelded nothing at all. For besides that he doth not persourme that which he hath promised, he doth playe the craftye marchaunt, as though he could beguyle hym, to whome he made his promyse. Secondly he doth also beguyle himself in surmising that he is not guilty for not performing his vowe, and therefore there is lesse amendement in hym, than if he had performed nothing at al. I speake of thē which be not letted by any infirmitie or disease, but that they might fully performe any thing that they had promised, and doe fall from their purpose vpon some inconstancie and lightnesse of mynde, notwithstanding doe seeke by some shift, as wel as they can, to escape the blame of the breach of their vowe vnto God. In such a case stande they which haue vowed the continencie of the cloyster, and do not fully performe it, but in this respecte onely, that they do not marrie: as though that the forbearing of marriage dyd include all continencie therein: and yet in ỳ meane whyles they keepe harlots, and be defiled ful and whole with all kynde of filthinesse. And in thys doyng they wyll seeme to breake no vowe, but do accuse them therewith, which albeit they dyd once vnaduisedly vowe that cloistered continencie, yet for all that haue thought it better to marrie, than through whoredome to fall into the pitte of euerlasting perdition.

The must be performed without slaye.

Secondly a vowe ought to bee performed not with staye & staggerings, but without any staye, as neare as is possible. Hereof ỳ scripture doeth admonyshe vs, saying: When thou makest thy vowe vnto the Lorde thy God, thou shalt not deferre ỳ performing of it. Wherof the Ecclesiastes doeth warne vs also. It is a fault giuen naturally almost vnto all men, that we be ready to promise faire, specially when we doe seeke vpon any bodies ayde in our necessities: but we be slowe enough in performing our promises. And the lingering therein is very euill, and is a manifest token of an vnthankefull and vnconstant mynde. And lyke as he which giueth spedely, giueth twyse, that is to say, is as well liked as he which giueth twyse, so he which giueth lingeringly, is in case as though he gaue nothing at all.

Eccles. 5. 4.

Thirdly, it is necessary in any wise, ỳ we performe with as good

We must performe our vowes with heart and spyrite.

a heart & minde, as we promised. It may be that you doe spedely performe your vow, or promise, and yet notwithstanding without any good heart and courage, onely to be discharged of their bonde of duetie, and to eschue the remorse of conscience. He that doth in this sorte spedyly performe his promis, shall confesse in his owne cōscience, whether he wyl or no, that he taketh no pleasure in performing his promis, but that he had rather he had neuer made any vowe at all: like as it betideth in them which doe restore the money that they haue borowed at their daye appoynted, but with an euill wyll, and would with all their heart, that they were not bounde to paye the debte, or at the least that they had neuer borowed it. Suche maner of performers of vowes can not please GOD, who doth not esteeme the things, which we do giue or performe, but requireth a courageous & willing hearte. When vowes be performed, we ought to adde a sacrifice of prayse. The Prophet sayeth: The vowes be vpon me O God, I wyll yelde prayses vnto thee. I wyll so syng vnto thy name for euermore, that I wyll performe my vowes from daye to daye. And howe shall they performe their vowes with the prayse of GOD, which doe not performe them with hearte and mynde.

Failles

4 Fourthly, the vowes which be made by our prayers, in ỳ streights and daungers of afflictions, must be performed after that we haue once receyued ayde and relefe, not secretly but openly, & in the middes of the churche, and assembly of the faythfull. In deede such vowes may be secretly conceiued and made to the knowledge of God onely, vnto whom onely our prayers & vowes be directed, when our minde is troubled. But the performing of the vowes ought to be made not in secret, but openly in the sight and hearing of the whole assembly of the faythfull, so that they may also be edified in the fayth and prayse of God, and offer a sacrifice of commendation vnto hym with the vowe makers.

There hath some examples passed of this matter amongst the Israelites, as we maye perceyue by Dauid, who performed his vowes at Hierusalem in the house and Churche of God, which he made beyng an outlawe and in wildernesse, not onely in sacrificing & offering those things which he had vowed, but also in reporting abrode and blasing out to commendation, the benefite and ayde which he had receiued of God openly, before the people: So he sayth in the Psalme: Saue me out of the mouthe of the Lion, and make me sure from the hornes of the Vnicornes. These were his prayers, he addeth therto his vowe: I will blase thy name (sayeth he) vnto my brethren. I will prayse thee in the middes of the Church. Howe-you that heare. You that do feare the Lord, (so he would speake vnto the people of the Lord in the middes of the Church, where he would be performe his vowes) Prayse him all the seede of Jacob, glorifie him and be afrayde of him all the seede or offspring of Israell, for he hath not despised nor abhorred the basenesse of the poore, nor hidden his face frō him, and he heard him well when he cryed vnto him. Of thē is my praise in a greate Church and assembly (that is to say, I will offer this praise vnto them in a great Church where vnto all Israell is wont to assemble) I wil performe my vowes before thē which doe feare thē, the lowly shall eate (vnderstand of the vowed sacrifices which he would offer) and they shal be filled: they shall prayse the Lord which doe seke him: let your heart lyue for euer. The like is reade also in another place. I will enter (saith he) into thy house with burnt offerings. I will performe my vowes vnto them, which my lippes hath playnely expressed, and my mouth spoken in my trouble. I will offer fatte burnt offringes vnto thē, with the incense of Rammes, I will sacrifice Oxen with Goates. Come & heare all you which doe feare God, and I will tell you what he hath done vnto my soule. I cryed vnto him with my mouth, and now he is auaunced vnder my tongue, &c. Thus the vowed sacrifices were offred in the assembly of the faythfull, amongest the Israelits, and the benefit of God was commended, and all were stirred to giue vnto him a sacrifice of praise. The very sacrifices were of beastes according vnto the custome of the olde Testament, but there is appointed vnto vs, which be the people of the new Testament, not a beastly sacrifice, but a reasonable, that is to saye, of prayse. We can not make such vowes as the other were, but this we may doe, and yet it is not vsed at al in the Churches. In deede we do pray when we be sicke, and desire to be prayed for in the church by the ministers of the worde, that we may by the grace and helpe of God, be restored vnto our health, but our prayers be not vowed prayers, and therfore when we be recouered we do not make the performaunce of any vow before the Church of God, neither by our selues, nor by any publike minister. It is to be liked that we doe beseeke the ayde of God in the Church by prayers, but that can not be well lyked that we be restored vnto our health without the knowledge of the Church, and doe hide from it the aide which we haue receiued from GOD, and do withdraw it from the sacrifice of praise, which it shoulde yelde vnto GOD with vs. But thus much for vowes, how they ought to be performed.

Psalm. 22.

Psalm.66.

The publike prayers for sicke folke, should not be publike thanckesgiuings.

Of Cloyster Vowes.

The deuises and desires of the solitary and cloister life, grewe to be wonderfull whot in the time of Chrisostom, and was much commended also in these daies by their great personages, and so maintained againste thē which found fault withall, as those things do testifie which Chrisostome wrote against thē, and yet for all that he maketh no mencion of any cloister vowes, so that it may seme therby that the solitary folke of that time, vsed them not as they were vsed afterwardes, not so much for religion sake, as to cōpasse in and kepe together the wealth of the world.

And ther be sādry formes of vowes and professions among thē, for they of S. Benets order do promise & vow an alteration of their life, obedience, and continuaunce in the same.

The Dominicks do promise a kinde of obedience, framed vnto the ordinance of their superiors, which haue the ouersight of their order. Some do make three substancial vowes, as they terme them, obedience, chastitie, and pouerte. The alteration of the life may be naught, and it may be good, if mens euill behauiour be therby turned vnto good, so that they do forsake vnbelief, & procede vnto true faith, from the hatred of their neighbour, to the loue of him, from pride to humilitie, from fiercenesse, to mildnesse of spirite: & to be short, from the olde creature vnto the new, which is by the renewing of the minde, who will not take such an alteratiō to be good? But if this cloysterish alteration of life and maners be cōtrarie vnto those things which doe belong to a Christiā man, as if they go from the true fauth of Christ vnto a counterfait, frō the true religion vnto all maner of superstitions, frō a humblenesse of minde to a Pharisaicall pride, from the cōmon loue and knot of al Christian folke vnto a factious sect, from the libertie of a Christian spirit vnto the slauery of mens traditions, &c. How is it not a cleare case that this kinde of alteration is starke naught.

As for the difference which is to be alowed and which not, we haue declared in a seuerall place before. If we meane of the obedience, which is appointed to the keping of Gods cōmaundement according vnto his will, all godly folke do like it. But if they meane of the other, which we said is naught, wherby we be made the seruauntes of men, and not of God, we doe condemne it without any further delay.

We must haue the like cyuil also of our constaunce and stedfastnesse, for it is commendable amongst all men, to be stedfast in good life, and in the true obedience of God. But in case that any man be stedfast in euill, it may be obstinacie & hardehartednesse, rather thā stedfastnesse.

The scripture which the cloister mē do pretende to bring vnto all Christians.

But it were a question worthy to be aunswered, why these things be wrested vnto cloyster vowes, and to a speciall profession of sanctitie, seyng that they do belong vnto all Christian men? Doeth not such alteration of life from euil to good, and the obedience vnto the will of GOD, according vnto his worde, and the stedfastnesse, when we do continue and be kept in true godlynesse and the fayth of Christe vntyll the very ende, belong vnto all faythfull folke? No doubte all these thynges doe appertayne vnto all Christian men. Why be they then so vowed by the cloyster creepers, as though the profession of them dyd not belong vnto all Christian men, but vnto the cloysterers only? Why doe they not acknowledge al thē to be religious, which do shake of the lyfe of the olde Adam, and doe kepe a stedfast constancy, vnder the obedience of God, vntyll the very ende by hys grace? although they haue neyther shauen crownes nor Cowles.

The solēne vowes of the cloister men.

The seconde question is, what they meane to make solēne vowes herof, as though that men dyd not professe this alteration, obedience, & stedfastnesse at their Baptisme? What do they els herein, but ouerthrow as much as lieth in thē, & set at naught the general profession of al christiā mē made at their baptisme?

And for a manifeſt proofe thereof, they do refuſe ỳ names which they entered to Chriſtes boke at Baptiſme,and take them new, to ſignifie that they ſtand no longer to the profeſſion of Chriſt, but to the ſecte of their Cloiſters. I beſeke you, what can we thinke of that ſouldier which doeth falſely chaunge his name,giuen to his generall,and taketh to him ſelfe a new name, and a new captaine withall?

Of the mõſtruous and ſuperſtitious obſeruãces of vowes.

Theſe(I ſay)might be ſome queſtions,in caſe the vowes of the Benedictines were ment of the true obedience of God, of the right alteration of life, and ſuch ſtedfaſtneſſe as is neceſſarie for all godly folke. But if theſe things be vowed after a monkiſh and ſuperſticious ſenſe and meaning, ſo that the alteration of their life is a refuſall of the publare and open lyfe, where men do liue out of cloyſters, in ſuch ſtates and degrees as be appointed by God for the liuing together of mẽ, as to be ſubiect vnto parentes and maſters,to marry,to get children,to gouerne houſes & families, to beare office,&c. And that their obediẽce is ſuch,that they muſt obey, not God, but their Abbots & Priors, not his commaundements, but the conſtitutions of the cloyſter, and that their ſtedfaſtneſſe is ſuch, that they muſt cõtinue vntil death,not in true obedience, but counterfeite ,it is a cleare caſe,that theſe things be not conformable vnto the will of God, and that therefore they ought not to be vowed, much leſſe performed.

Certaine cõmon and ſuperſticious obſeruations of the cloiſter men.

Beſides this,there be certaine cõmon ſuperſtitious rules in cloiſters, whereunto they thinke them ſelues to be bounde by the vowe of their profeſſion: as the forſaking to haue any thing of their owne,to haue al commun,a certain preſcribed faſhiõ and colour of their cowled garmentes,new inuented and ſtraunge behauours and geſtures, peculiar ceremonies to them ſelues,dayes appointed of eating and faſting, the cloſing vp them ſelues in a place, continuall chaſtitie , and forſwearing of wedlocke . Theſe matters haue ſome ſhewe of religion,godlineſſe , and holineſſe : but if they be tried by the rule of Gods worde & true godlineſſe , and the opinions & circumſtances of them conſidered, they ſhall bee founde to be farre wide from that they ſeme to bee. For either they be commaunded by God, eyther they bee indifferent. If they be commaunded of GOD, they doe belong vnto all Chriſtian folke,and ſo they doe not make any ſingular degree of perfections in the Church. But they be not commaunded ſo to be done : Ergo,they be things indifferent and free for all men . So that it can not be alowed to haue them charged in cloyſters vnder a title or pretence of religion, and ſet forth vnder the colour of obediẽce,whereas there is not founde any teſtimonie of gods will for the ſame.

As concerning the cauſes and opiniõs of ỳ cloyſter life,it importeth much,howe and why thoſe things be done which be indifferent, yea, and good of them ſelues . I will ſay nothing here of that groſſe intent of carnal men,in that they do embrace the cloiſter life either for idleneſſe or for their belies ſake, or that ſome be thruſted thyther in their childhod by their parẽtes, to be prouided for for there, touching the worlde, or ỳ by ỳ chiftyng off of thẽ,ther may premayn ỳ more to the reſte of their children. Let vs rather ſee for others whiche ſeme to haue taken themſelues to this kind of life vpon ſome verye religious purpoſe,& holy intent. Their common opinion is , that they doe ſerue God aboue all other Chriſtian folke in this cloyſterily life, and that they deſerue exceding great rewards bycauſe of the hardneſſe of their order. The hardneſſe of the order (ſaye they)and manye good things whiche thou haſt already , and yet ſhalt doe hereafter before the forgiueneſſe of the ſinnes. Theſe words they do vſe in their abſolution , when one fryer abſolueth another , after theyr ſhryfte.

In conſideration of this opinion, the thynges whyche we rehearſed before, be to be diſproued in two reſpectes. One bycauſe they make a ſeruice of God out of mens conſtitutions,contrary vnto the manifeſt determination of Chriſt,where he ſaid in Matthew : They doe ſerue me in vaine teaching the doctrines and cõmaundements of men. For it cannot be denayed,but that they be no commaundements of God , but decrees preſumed vppon by men without the teſtimony of Gods wil. They ſaye: Whatſoeuer is appointed of a good intente to the glorye of God, doeth pleaſe God , Ergo, thoſe things alſo whiche be done in our order , doe pleaſe God . Heare me my brother, why doſt thou not rather ſay: What ſoeuer is wrought according to the order of Gods wil, is ſurely well liked of God.

The ſeconde reſpect is, bycauſe they doe flatter themſelues to haue ſome deſeruing by mens traditions and their owne workes , contrarye to the doctrine of faith , which thing doth muche derogate and decay the deſeruing of the Lordes death , beſides that they doe turne theſe theyr merites,being nothyng worth , yea demerites, vnto theyr gayne,and do barter , and make Marchandiſe of them in the Churche. Therefore the decrees and ſtatutes of the Cloyſter lyfe be moſte worthyly refuſed , if a man conſider the cauſes and opinions of them: ſpecially waying with what guile and Phariſaycall pride, the profeſſors of them doe chalenge themſelues a ful ſtate and degree of perfection.

Of the ioyning of the vovv.

Furthermore, ſuche indifferente things whereunto no manne is bounde, fall out to be euill done, not onely for the reſpect of their owne opinions and cauſes as we ſayde before,but they be alſo by adding therunto to the vow, chaunged into the nature and ſtrength of a lawe , ſo that they be by that occaſion,nothing leſſe than indifferent.

The cloyſter vowe againſt chriſtiã liberty.

And thys is the cauſe why they be exceedingly repugnant and contrarye to the lybertye of all faythful, which Chriſt himſelfe hath purchaſed vnto vs . For theſe things whyche were at lyberty, before, are nowe, by reaſon of the vowe , no longer at liberty but do bind. Therfore this Cloyſter lyfe is damnable, bycauſe that it reſtrayneth and byndeth the conſciences of the vowe makers in the Elementes of the worlde, by the law of the bowe. And the bowmaker can not say, I doe those things with a good will whiche I haue bowed, and therfore my conscience is not tyed nor entangled. Though hee doe performe his bowes with neuer so good a will, yet for all that hee is not free in this respect, that he can not escape or auoyd this bondage, or let passe such things as he hath bowed, without a conscience of sinne. Besides that the continuance of the bowe is, to endure vntil death, whiche was not knowen at the beginning of the solitarie life, as wee may perceyue in Chrysostomes booke against the blamers of the solytary and cloyster lyfe: which was nothyng else, but a certaine instruction or trayning vp of people for a season, vsed for the information of godly lyfe, so that there was no man letted, but that he might take home againe his chyldren, after they were well instructed, and bestow thē in marriage.

The perpetuitie of the vowe.

Adding of a vowe, for two causes to be reproued.

Therefore this addyng to of the bowe, is for two causes worthie to bee blamed. First, because it is agaynst the Christian lybertie, and bindeth the consciences of the faithfull (whiche in indifferent thyngs ought to bee free) vnto the Elements and matters of this worlde, and that contrary vnto the expresse doctryne of the holy Spyrite. Whereof wee doe reade to the Colossians in thys wise: Therefore if you bee dead with Christe from the Elements of thys worlde, to what entent be you bounde by decrees as liuyng in the worlde? Touche not, taste not, handle not. All whiche thyngs doe perishe in vs, according to the precepts and doctrines of menne, which in worde hath a countenaunce of wysedome, by superstition, and lowlinesse of minde, and hurtyng of the body, not by any honour, to the satisfying of the flesh, &c. And with this cupll there groweth an other, that there is breede a conscience also of hym in those matters, whiche God did neuer requyre of vs, as though that there were not commaundementes ynough of Goddes to offende in trangressyng them, and to haue nede of Goddes mercy to pardon our offences. But it behoued that the Paysters of errours should by thys meanes raygne in the consciences of theyr inferiours, to haue certayne principall sinnes for themselues to punyshe, and so to accomplishe that sayinge of the Apostle, leadyng prye womenne as prysoners and captiues ouerladen with sinnes.

Coloss. 2.

2. Tim. 3.

The other cause why this adding of a bowe is to bee blamed, is because it is agaynst Chrystian charitie, discharging the Christian bowmakers from that commaundement whiche maketh vs the seruauntes of all men, in that it dothe not onely breake that Obedience whiche is ordeyned by GOD towardes magistrates and parentes, &c. but it dothe also keepe them vnder that bondage, that it is not lawfull for them, of theyr free Charitie to relieue the necessities of theyr neyghbours, no nor of theyr parentes according to the Lordes commaundement: yea whiche is yet most wicked, it dothe not only hinder them frō the worke of Christian charitie, but it dothe also make them to haue no cōscience of of any duety or good worke, supposing that suche matters as be required of other Christian folke, doe not belong vnto them, and so dothe after a peruerse and frowarde manner bind them which be losed, and lose them which be bounde, dischargyng them from Christ and theyr neyghbours, and professing them to some peculiar Prynces, and Prouincials.

Of vvilfull Pouertie.

The Cloyster menne doe crake for a countenaunce of theyr pouertie, as though it were the chiefe poynt of religion to haue litle or nothing, whereas for all that they bee plentifully prouided of all thyngs. The Constitutions of the Dominicans doe take away all propertie, that is, to haue any thing of theyr owne, and it suffereth not the fryer to haue any thyng without ỹ knowledge of his superiour, neyther cuppe nor canne, neyther any thing to bee shutte, whiche may bee opened with a keye, nor to take or gyue any present, and hym whiche dothe the contrary, they do condemne for a theefe. Yea they do some commaunde their beddes to be searched, whether there can be any thing founde, as possessed without the knowledge of theyr superiours. In the rule of Benedictines the propertie of possession is called an offence that ought to be vterly rooted out. There may be neyther booke, nor table, nor pen, nor néedle, nor any thyng else, as such folke which muste not haue (sayth he) neyther theyr bodies, nor willes in their owne power and gouernaunce. The rule is, that they must demaunde all their necessaries of the Father of the monasterie, and to haue nothyng but at the gifte and sufferance of the Abbot: but that they muste haue all things common, as it is writtē: And they had all things common. And in case (sayth the Author of the rule,) that any man be founde to take delite in this most wicked vice, let him bee brought vnder correction, &c.

This is theyr rule, wherevppon growe that Prouerbe: The Fryer that hath a halfepenny, is not worth a farthyng.

The Minorites, bicause they wold haue a speciall superstition to passe the reste, doe pretende also that it is not lawfull for them to touche monie, and yet for all that it is written, that some of them haue payde and tolde out many thousande Ducates to the Simon of Rome, for a Cardinals hatte. But let vs see what is to be thought of this vowed pouerty of these Cloyster crepers.

There be two manner of wilfull pouerties, the one is spiritual, the other is bodily. That is spiritual, whē wee be so disposed, that our harte is free frō earthly things, & in case wee haue plenty, we do not truste vnto it nor gape or hūger after it, if we lack any thyng, and muche lesse dispaire. This kinde of pouertie doth appertayne vnto all Christian men, & that of necessitie, & not by aduice or counsell. Therefore our sauiour Christe sayd, Vnlesse that a man do renoūce all that he doth possesse, hée can not bee my Disciple: and that which the Apostle sayth: Let them whiche doe buy, be as though they did not possesse it. It belongeth not to a Christian man to possesse & be owner of

VVilfull vuerty o tvvo so

Luce. 14

1. Cor. 7.

nothing, but to be disposed towardes those things whych he doth possesse, as though he did not possesse them. I say it is the part of a christian man to be so minded, that he maye with Paule both vse plentye, and sustaine powerty and lacke. And it is quite cõtrary to the nature of vowes to vowe this spiritual powerty vnto God, as though that it were not required of vs of necessitie, but of cõsel.

Philip. 4.

The bodyly or outward powertye is nothing else but the lack of things necessarie, whiche muste be made amends for, and recompensed some other waye. This is either sent from God, or taken vpon men willinglye. The powerty sent from God, was ỳ same which the Prophetes did patiently beare, Elias, Elizeus, and the Apostles, and the Church of Ierusalem, for which Paul and Barnabas did gather euery where and sent the reliefe. The Cloysterers doe not like this powerty, but do hate it worse than a dogge, though it be a moste holsome exercyse of fayth and patience. The wilful presumed powerty, is when men do forsake their owne goods and gape for other mens, and will liue vpon other folkes trauayle and sweat. The same the cloysterers do vow, and is vsed in their religion: and this is our opinion therof.

1. Cor. 6. 11. 2

VVhat maner of thing it is to haue nothing proper.

That to haue nothing of a mans owne, but to lyue of the common, according vnto the order of some superior, is of it selfe neither good nor euill: vnlesse ther be added some other thing wherby it is either good or euill. Else this manner of life might be blamed in children, seruantes and soles which do liue vnder the gouernaunce and disposition of others, and do possesse nothing at their own lust, but do receiue their necessaries at ỳ hand of other folke. Wherfore if this were to be blamed of it selfe, it shuld be blamed also in these men. And on the other side, if it were worthy to be prayed, it should likewise deserue cõmendation also in them. But no mã doth like or much regard this in thẽ, and therefore it is not to be muche estéemed neither in the Cloysterers.

But this kinde of life were not much out of the way if it wer an instruction of youth to be framed therby for a season, and not a perpetuall superstition, and an endlesse bondage as sore as may any lightly be. If Monasteries serued for some orderly scholing, in which the tender youth should be fed as long as they folowed learning, as it was in Chrysostomes time, or where Idiots were kepte ỳ could not helpe themselues, surely this practise of liuing of the cõmõ, and of refusall of property should doe much good, to rote out couetousnesse and plant ỳ spiritual powerty wherof we spake, out of their tender and vntaught harts, so that they might be vsed from childhode to haue no greedy desire to any thing, but to be able to lacke all things and not to mislike the frugall and sparefull life. Suche places of exercise no wise body would mislike. But how far the Monasteries of our time be altogither wide from this order and purpose, euery man knoweth.

But as touching the powertye of the cloysters, it may worthyly be myspyked. First bycause ỳ cloysterers do pretende a countenance of powerty, whereas they do enioy the verye

Powerty the cloysterers.

wealth

wealth of all worldly goodes, wherin they doe mocke bothe with God and man. For it is not true powertie for them, particularly to haue nothyng of theyr owne, and yet for all that, euery manne to recepue of common plentifully whatsoeuer is necessarie. Doe wée not know what it is to be poore? If to be poore, is to haue nothing proper, and yet for all that to haue al things nédefull, how be not the children of the riche folke poore, whiche haue nothyng to possesse at their owne appointment, but haue al things ministred vnto them by the care & order of their fathers? Who will iudge them I pray you to be poore? Wherfore we muste néedes cõdemne this monkish powertie: First bicause there is pretended a face and shew of powertie, where true powertie is not in déede. Secondly bycause it is fallen out also by this speciall title of powerty, that the nédinesse of the poore in déede, is nothing regarded, and the lacke whiche they haue, not so diligently prouided for, as it ought to be, forasmuch as the greatest portion of many mens wealth hath bene so bestowed vpon this pretensed powerty of the cloysterers, that not only the cõmon sorte of mẽ, but the children of the nobilitie and of the riche also, be plentifully mayntayned by them, not only to liue, but also to bestow vpon their pleasures. The Apostle did expressly giue warning, that the churche should not bée burdened with thẽ which were able to liue either of themselues, either of the goodes of their parents, to the intent, there shoulde remaine sufficient to maintayne ỳ poore in déede. What would he say thinke you, if he sawe them which do now adayes take vpõ them the title of powertie, & be gayly fed, which were neuer poore, neyther before they entred into the cloyster, nor whiles they be in the cloyster, but haue al wealth by heapes, & to sée withall what nũbers there be of the true poore, aged, widowes, fatherles, and diseased, whiche doe lacke theyr necessary sustinaunce?

And for that whiche they pretend out of the Actes, that al things were common among the firste that were Christened, that was not a communing of things in sectes and parties, but it was a common partakyng of things for al those Christians which were in powerty, & therein was none excluded: but in this cõmon dealing there do none take parte, but suche as be of the same sect and brethren of the place. And the faithfull might at that tyme haue and kéepe frée and safe possession of theyr owne goodes, which is put off and forbidden in the Monasteries as vnlawful. And thus muche briefly of the powerty of the Cloysterers.

Of the apparell of Religious persons.

WE muste consider what is the right and principall vse of garmẽts. Of this matter wée may sée in Genesis. The vse of garments is, to couer our naked bodies for shame sake, and to defend them against the byting of the colde. Therfore we do call them clothes and couerings. So Paule sayde: Hauing to fède vs and to couer vs, let vs be content with all. And there be foure abuses of clothes or garments.

The v of clot

Gen. 3.

1. Tim. 6

Foure abuses of garmentes.

1 The first, is of fineneſſe & dayntineſſe, to pamper the tenderneſſe and dayntineſſe of the bodie. This is very vncomely for Chriſtian men, but yet it beareth great rule in the Palaces of Princes.

2 The Second, commeth of pryde and deſire to be gay. The ſame is touched in the rich man of the Goſpel, which wore purple and ſilke. By this abuſe menne doe ſerue vayne glory, and bragging. Se what Peter ſayth.

1. Pet. 3.

3 The third, commeth of lightnes of vaine heades, in cutting and laſhing their garments now adayes to wonderfully and fouly. And this is vſed not only amongſt ſouldiers, but of courtiers alſo, and of the common ſort of people.

Math. 23.

4 The fourth, commeth of Hypocriſie, deuiſed to the intent to deceiue the vnskilfull in colour of holyneſſe, therof the lord ſaid: They do enlarge their ſkyrtes, &c.

Monkes coules.

Now let the Cloiſter anſwere, to what purpoſe their Coules do ſerue, and how they can defende them from Hypocriſie and ſuperſtition, for that they haue ſequeſtred themſelues frō the common and cuſtomable garments, by a colour and faſhiō alone. For neyther the coulor, neyther the faſhion alone helpeth anything at al towards the couering of nakedneſſe, nor to the defending of the body from colde. There be ſome that do pretend I wote not what tokens of lowlines and innocencye: but that ſhoulde be rather expreſſed in their behauiour, than in the monſtrouſneſſe of theyr garmentes. Benedictes rule doeth gyue thys precepte for garmentes: Let there be no regarde had of the Regula Benedict. c. 55.

coulour or courſeneſſe, but let them take ſuche as they can finde in the countrey where they dwel, and whyche can be bought beſte cheape.

Conſtitu. dominic. ca. 10.

The rule of Auguſtine ſayeth: Let not your garments be notable, neyther ſeeke to pleaſe by your garmēts, but by your manners. And the conſtitutions of the Dominicans, doe ſpeake neyther of the coulour, neyther of the faſhion, but they doe ſpeake of the length and number of their coates and furres. And they do charge them alwayes to weare Scapulers.

Therfore ſeeing the garments doe ſerue for no other vſe, but to couer & kepe vs from colde, and that it becōmeth not Chriſtian folke, to vſe any notable ſingularitie, or vſage alone: but that it is requiſit rather that one ſerue another in charitie: it can not be defended that anye man ſhoulde ſtande faſt to any ſingularitie in apparell for religions ſake, as they doe coulour it. There be ſome ſo ſuperſtitious, that if they walke out but a fewe paſſes of their circuit without their cowle, or in caſe they doe lye without it at night, they be tormented with a wonderful conſcience of ſin, and be afraid, leaſt the Deuill wil cary them away.

Of the cloeſneſſe of Monaſteries and Cloiſtets.

The Monkish enclosure is gainſtian charitie.

The rules neither of Benet, neither of Auguſtine do commaūd this cloſing vp. Auguſtines rule is, when you walke out, walke togither or when you come to your iourneys end, ſtand or tary togither. But chriſtian charitie can not awaye with this this monkiſh encloſure, for it requyreth vs to viſite ỳ ſicke & impriſoned, which ſhal be either requited vs, if it be fulfilled at the laſt day, or elſe it ſhall be puniſhed, if it be neglected. Moreouer, it is alſo againſt chriſtian and eccleſiaſtical charitie, that ſome dwelling in ỳ middeſt of the faithful, ſhould ſequeſter themſelues from the aſſemblies of the Church, and leade their life apart with them that be of their owne ſect, which is taken to be religion. And we do not otherwiſe reade in the rule of Auguſtine: but ỳ the religious folke which are entred into the companie or congregation of the Churche, ſhould behaue themſelues wel and orderly, ſpecially concerning the keping of chaſtitie. But it is the very worke of Antichriſt, ỳ they be forbidden in the conſtitutiōs of the Dominicans vnder paine of excommunication, that they depart not frō the Monaſtery. Who gaue theſe craftie conueyors authoritie to vſe this excommunicating in a matter which is of it ſelfe indifferent?

De vowe virginitatis damnatur.

Of Virginitie.

WE do know, that true Virginity is muche commended of manye men. And we not finde fault withall, nor withdrawe anye man from it, which hath receyued the gift therof. But we warn them which haue profeſſed, and vndertaken it, to haue a regard to themſelues and to loke wel leaſt either by the vnaduiſed vowing therof or thinking that they haue it when they haue it not, they doe deceyue themſelues. For lyke as true Virginitie is in fewe, ſo the vaine profeſſion thereof doth more harme, than good. Wherfore it is a perilous point to admitte ſo greate a number of vnaduiſed yong folke, to the vowe and profeſſion thereof. Specially in theſe orders which doe liue in a peuiſhe idleneſſe, in aboundaunce and fulneſſe of bellyes and paunche: whereof what wickedneſſe doth enſue, we may ſee in Ezechiell: where we do read after this maner: Lo this was the wickedneſſe of Sodoma thy ſiſter: in pryde, fulneſſe of bread, plenty and idleneſſe in hir ſelf and hir daughters, and thei ſtretched not forth their handes to the poore and needy: and they rouſed themſelues, and wrought abhominations before mée, &c. Woulde to GOD thys had neuer beene vſed in ỳ cloyſters.

Exech. 1

And that is not true Virginitie, when the body is reſtrained from ỳ naturall courſe and diſpoſition of wedlocke, but when the pure & maydenlye abſtinence is ſo kept both in body and minde, that by the diſpoſition of God, all our life is conſecrate and halowed to better ſtudies and purpoſes. For as touching the reſtraint or countenaunce therof, is to ſmall purpoſe. For we may find many beaſtes alſo, which doe not goe to fellow, and therfore Auguſtine doth aright cal Virginitie, the vertue not of the body, but of the minde. And the Apoſtle ſayth: That ſhe may be holye both in bodye and in Spirite, neyther will he haue Virginitie to be an idle and ſeuerles matter: but he thinketh it the parte of Virgins, to thinke vpon thoſe things which doe appertain vnto the lord: which is nothing els, but with hart and minde o

V What is true Virginitie.

1. Cor. 7.

folow the Lordes will accordingly, as the necessitie of the Saincts & the conditiō of euery time doth require. The Virginitie whiche is Idle deserueth no commendation. Neyther the Angels bee not therefore praysed in the Scriptures, bycause they bee sole, but bycause they be Angels and the mesengers of God, and the ministers of the elect. And Augustine doth preferre Obedience before virginitie, wherby men do folow and obey the precepts of God. The goodnesse of obedience (saith he) is greater than that of cōtinence. For wedlocke is not any where condemned by the authoritie of our scriptures: but disobedience is in no place pardoned. Item obedience (saith he) may be without Virginitie, for asmuche as Virginitie commeth of counsell, and not of commaundement. Item, Virginitie (saith he) may therfore be without obedience, bicause some woman may vndertake the purpose of Virginitie, and kepe the same, and contemne the commaundements, as wee knowe that many vowed Virgins haue done, tatlers and talkers, curious, dronkerdes, brawlers, couetous, prowde, &c. whiche poynts be al agaynst the commaundements, and do slea them through the offence of disobedience, as they did the mother Eua. Wherefore we must not only more regarde an obedient wyfe, than the obedient Virgine, but also the more obedient in any thyng is, the more worthy of commendation of prayse. This sayth he.

Hebr. 1.

August. de bono coniug. Ca 13.

The goodnesse of obedience is greater than of continence.

And herein we doe not reiect and cast off true Virginitie, in that wee doe blame the same whiche is counterfayte, but we doe admonishe our vowmakers, that they loke well to the matter, and that they deceiue not themselues by the shewe and colour of the Sole lyfe. Secondly, that they flatter not themselues to muche for the kepyng of their Virginitie, as though that their saluation and felicitie did cōsist therin, & that the wedded folke could not attain to ỳ same. For there is no doubt, but ỳ there is a way also open for wedded folke to felicitie & saluation, and that they do farre excede negligēt and vile Virgins, in case they be faythfull, and doe truely and vprightly kepe their wedlocke. Therefore Chrysostome sayth: For the blessings whiche Christe spake of, bee not spoken to Cloyster men onely, for then all the world should perish, and we should haue cause to cōplayne of the cruelty of God. For in case the blessings were spoken vnto Cloysterers only, and that it were not possible for a secular man to fulfil them, Ergo, where as he hath commaunded mariage, he hath marde all menne. For in case a man can not with mariage accōplish those things that doe belong vnto Cloister men, al were lost & marde, and vertue shoulde be driuen into a narrow corner. And how should mariage be honorable whē it doth hinder folke? What shall we say to it then? It is possible, yea and very possible for them that haue wyues, to vse vertue, if wee will our selues. How? In case ỳ hauing wyues wee vse the matter as though wee had none. If wee reioyce not in those things whiche we possesse. If we vse ỳ world so, as if we vsed it not. But if that any be hindered by mariage, lette them vnderstande that it is not marriage that is their lette, but the will, whiche naughtely vseth marriage. For it is not wine that maketh a man dronke, but the naughty will, and the excesse when they take more than ynough. Use marriage moderately, and thou shalt be riche in the kingdome, and enioy all good things. This saith he. Therefore let not the Virgin bragge, and boast of hir Virginitie, wherein the way of blessednesse doth not consist, forasmuche as wedded folke haue also the same, but lette hym, or hir endeauor rather to walke the way of Gods Commaundements, by due obedience.

Why the Apostle did counsell menne to Virginitie, and howe Christ saith that some menne doe geld themselues for the Kingdome of Heauen. Mat. 19.

And whereas the Apostle dothe counsell men to Virginitie, it is not bycause of any speciall prerogatyue, or worthinesse thereof, that Christian menne shoulde desire, and seeke it. But he spake it bycause of the necessitie of those seasons, when ỳ Church of Christe was euerye where vexed with great persecution. And whereas Christ saith, that there be some whiche do geld themselues for the Kyngdome of Heauen, it is not so to be taken, that the same gelding doth anye thing helpe them vnto saluation (for then it shoulde behoue them all that desire to be saued, to be gelded, and wedding shoulde be out of all hope of saluation,) but that it is done bycause of the Gospell, in whiche turne the man that is free from wedlock, may serue more readyly, and at more lybertie. So we do see that both Christ and Paule made this the marke and end of Virginitie, that the kingdome of Heauen might more frankely goe forewarde in the worlde, by the ministerie of the Gospell.

Furthermore, it can not be allowed nother, that Virginitie shoulde be vowed to be kept, not for a season, but for the whole life time. For it is a matter impossible for the flesthe, vnlesse that it be made possible, by the speciall gifte of God: no yong folke, no nor aged can be assured of thys gift. And therefore the Apostle dothe admitte no widowes to the relefe of ỳ Church, vnder threescore yeares of age. Moreouer, whereas Virginitie is sometimes counseled but neuer commanded, by the vow it is brought to passe, that it hathe no longer the nature of a counsell, but of a commaundemente, whiche ouerthwarte dealing can not be excused, but dothe bynde and snarle oure free consciences. Which euill the Apostle meante to eschew, saying expressly: The Virgine, if she marrie, sinneth not. Thys saying of hys is made voyde by the lawe of vowes. It is to be misliked also, that they doe cloake and painte the keping of the vowed Virginitie with the title of obedience, againste the very nature of obedience. For it is not due vnto God by commaundemente, who commaunded it not, nor vnto men, which can giue no precept thereof. And that whiche is not commaunded, can not be performed as by obedience or breaking.

1 Cor. 7

Of the loosing of a Vovve.

FOrasmuche as the terror and feare of Vowes dothe breede much trouble in weake consciences, I haue thought good to speake somewhat thereof also, whether that euerye Vowe be altogither insoluble, such as ought not to be broken off, if anye of them may be broken, when they may be made voyde.

Whether that all Vovves do binde.

They whiche do defend Cloister Vowes, doe packe vp manye thinges out of Scriptures, to proue that Vowes oughte to bée obserued and kept: as that out of the Psalme. I will pay my vowes in the presence of them whiche do feare thée. And, I will performe my vowes vnto thée, whiche my lips haue cõcepued. And, Vow and performe vnto your Lord God. When thou makest a vow vnto the Lord thy God, thou shalte not tarry for the performing thereof: for the Lorde thy God doth loke for it, &c. If thou hadst vowed anye thing vnto God, stay not in ỳ performing thereof, &c. These places they doe alleadge to ratifie ỳ binding of vowes. But they shoulde haue proued that those vowes ought to be kept, which we be againste, bycause they doe entangle and snarle poore folkes consciences. Our opinion is, that al vowes be not alwayes such as ought to bée kept, but that it is requisite now and then to breake them, that is to saye, when they be vnlawfull and vnprofitable whereof is muche spoken in the Decrées. Were it not muche more tollerable to reiecte the vowes which be foolishly promised, thã by ỳ kéeping of vnprofitable promises, to heape vp an horrible measure of offences?

In the same place of the decrées (he saith) In naughty promises breke off, and in a foule vow, alter thy purpose. Doe not that which thou haste rashlye vowed. The promise is wicked, whiche is accomplished by a mischeuous déede. This we do reade in the Canons. Whereby it dothe well appeare, that nother foolish, nor improfitable, much lesse naughty and foule vowes doe bind their consciences which hath vowed them, but that they oughte immediatelye to be broken, so that it is out of all doubte, that vowes be not alwayes to bée obserued. Therefore they deale very wrongfully, whiche do so charge the foresaide places of the Scripture vpon weake consciences, to auouche that those thinges whiche they haue once vowed, ought absolutely to bée obserued, whereas they ought rather to haue proued that the same cloister vowes doe please God, and that they ought alwayes to be kept. The scripture speaketh not of them, but of the vowes of the olde Testamente, in whiche the afflicted & troubled folke did bowe Sacrifices vnto GOD in their prayers, as we declared before, which were both lawfull and in euerye behalfe to be performed.

They do obiect the place of the Apostle for the vowe of Virginitie, cõcerning widdowes. The Apostle sayeth (say they) Cast off the yong widdowes, for when they begin to ware wanton agaynste Christe, they will marrie, hauing their condemnation, bycause they haue forsaken their fyrste promise. What shall wée thynke now of Fryers and Nonnes, whych are suffered to marry in some places, although they haue vowed Virginitie? May it not bée better sayde of them than of the widdowes whiche doe marrie agayne, that they haue broken their fyrste faithe, or promise, and therfore that they haue their their condemnation? We doe aunswere. The Apostle speaketh not of vowyng Virgins, but of the Widdowes whyche the Churche sustayned at that tyme, as we maye perceyue in the Actes, where it is written, that the Gréckes dyd murmure againste the Iewes, bycause ỳ theyr widdowes were despised in the ministerie, that is to saye, in the dayly relefe. Ye warneth that no yong widdowes should be taken into the communion of that relefe, vnder thréescore yeares of age. I beséeche you, what and howe dothe this serue for cloyster vowes and against vs? Yea, how is it that they perceine not how thys place serueth for our purpose? For kyrke in ỳ that he doth appoynt them to be of thréescore yeares of age, it maketh nothing for them, whiche doe admitte girles vnto the Cloyster vowes.

Secondly, he warneth them to eschewe the yonger sorte vpon the example of them whiche followed Satan. Thirdly, he doth not only refuse the yonger sorte, but doth also charge them to marry, least the Deuill get in with them. If these matters hadde bin well obserued in the Church, the Deuill had not had so greate a scope to marre and cast awaye the yong gyrles and wenches of the Christians. Thys euill the Apostle dyd foresée, and therefore doth expresslye commaunde, saying: I wyll haue the yonger sorte to marrie, to get Chyldren, to be wiues in their houses, to giue no occasion vnto the aduersarie the Deuill.

And some sely yong Nonnes wyll obiecte this also. She whiche is once despouse or betrothed, can not marrie anye other. But the Nonne is betrothed a Virgin vnto Christ, Ergo, it is not lawfull for the Nonne to marrie.

1 I aunswer, If to bowe bée as much as to marrie, with ỳ Nonnes, then they do marrie with Dominik, Benet, or Francis, rather than with Christ: and in case they do marrie anye one of them, and Christe to, then they haue two husbands at once.

2 Secondlye, if theyr bowe bée a knotte of wedlock with Christ, what was that thé, which they did at their baptisme? Dothe not Paule saye: I haue betrothed you vnto one husbãd, to yeld a chast Virgin vnto Christe? Who knoweth not ỳ he spake thys not of the bowe & profession of Pókery, but of Christendome? He speaketh vnto Christiãs, betrothed vnto Christ, and not vnto Nonnes. Therfore whereas Nonnes bée professed vnto Christ, as Christian folke, how be they professed or betrothed vnto Benet, as Nonnes? And how do they alone crake of Christ their husband?

3 Thirdly, if the spirituall wedlock with Christe doth hinder Friers and Nonnes from wedlocke, why doth it not hinder al Christian men as well? Or else how is it that the betrothyng of Christians whiche the Apostle toucheth doth not let the matter, but that the cloyster profession must let it? But I wil goe no farther. These bowe-men be yong and smal in vnderstanding, but woulde to GOD they were yong and suttle in malice. Let thé yet heare what Augustine wrote of this matter. Therefore they that do say, ỳ the marriages of such be no marriages, but rather adultries, seme to me that they doe not Psalme.22.

Psalme.66.
Psalme.75.
Deut.23.
Eccle.5.
Sometimes requisite that vowes be broken.
Dist.22.quest.4.ex Concilio Toletano Can. Si Publicis.
Mat.5.
1.Tim.5.
obiece.
2.Cor.11
August. de virginit. cap.30.

and diligently consider what they do say. For the likeneſſe of the truthe doth deceyue them: for whereas they be reported to chuse the marriage of Christ, whiche of some christian holinesse doe not marrie, some do argue therevpon, saying. In case that shée be an adulteresse which doth marrie an nother, as long as hir husband lyueth, as the Lord himselfe defined in the Gospell: then if she whiche hathe chosen the marriage of Christe, doe marrie any man whiles Christ lyue, whome deathe shall not ouercome agayne, she is an adulteresse. They which do say this, haue fine deuises, but they little consider howe greate absurditie, or vnséemelines of things dothe follow vppon this arguing, &c. Sée the place it selfe. Lette the true godly and deuoute person way now, whether that vowe be able to hynder and hurte the saluation of the vowe maker for which Christ dyed.

Secondlye, whether that it bée agaynste God, and hurtfull vnto oure saluation, to liue in whoredome and vnlawfull lustes. Thirdly, whether it be not better to liue in matrimony, than in whoredome, yea whether that he which can not kéepe himselfe chaste, be not bounde to obeye the Apostle, whose commaundemente is, that he which can not kéepe himselfe chaste, should marry. In this case the vowe of continence doth not lette, bicause the vowmaker receyued it not from God: and to be short: In case he had made no vowe, were he not boūd to marry: yes no doubte. Howe shall he do then after the vowe, if it be not lawfull for a man to marrie, then the vowe serueth to hurt and hinder the saluation of him which made ꝑ vow, forasmuch as he entered into a band not of saluation, but of destruction: This bande of vow commeth not of God, but of the Diuell. Therefore they which do esteéme the marriage of them whiche sometymes made vowes, to be adultery, and do breake them, be the ministers not of Christ, but of Satan, and do worke against their owne Canons, where we doe find written in this wise: Some doe hold that they which do marrie after a vowe, be adulterers, but I say, that they do gréeuously offende, which do part them asunder. And they bée the wordes of Augustine. Thus muche touching vowes. Dist. 27.

Of Afflictions.

OR as muche as whiles we doe liue in this fleshe, we bée subiect vnto all kind of afflictions, by the speciall purpose of God, both thorough the weakeneſſe of oure nature, and also thorough the malice of this present world, yea and bycause of the profession of oure Religion, and the open enimie of Satā, I haue thoughte good to note somewhat also of this matter to the commoditie of godlye disposed persons. For it skilleth much howe we do vnderstand, vndertake, beare and ouercome the aduersities which can not be auoyded. For there is nothing so sorowfull and troublesome, whyche the wel disposed christian man is not able to ouercome by the grace of his Sauior. And we wil so treate of this matter, that we will, according to oure

Two sortes of afflictions.

Worldly afflictions.

Worldly afflictions worth the mans prayse.

oure custome and manner, deuide it into certayne Chapiters, as 1 Howe many manners of Afflictions there be.

2 From whence they come.

3 Of what purpose of God they be sent.

4 Howe sundrye wayes they bée sente.

5 What is the profite of them.

6 Howe they muste be taken, suffered and ouercome.

7 Howe wée muste deale wyth the afflicted.

8 How God vseth himselfe with the afflicted.

There be a passing number of the sortes of afflictions whereof we can not rehearse the least parte, wherefore we purpose not to wade farre into this wide and wilde sea, but doe content our selues with this diuision, to make two kinds of Afflictions, one of worldly matters, ꝑ other of those thinges whiche betide for religions sake. And the Apostle semeth to haue deuided thē so, where he sayth: There hathe no temptation taken you, but worldly, by which words he doth separate worldly afflictions, from those whiche thorough the instigation of Satan be layde vpon Christian mē, in consideration they be Christians, by this most wicked world.

We do call them worldly afflictions, whiche doe betide vnto men, as men in this world, without the cause of religion. And they chaunce thrée manner of wayes vnto vs: Firste, as béeing weake of nature. Secondlye, as abiecte and vile in condition and degrée. Thirdly, as beeyng naughte, and mischeuous of lyfe. There doe fall vnto vs manye aduersities and troubles as weake of nature, euen from our first birth: thorough out all the trade of our life long, our birthe, oure cradell, infancy and childhode, mans state and age, do swarme with manye afflictiōs and troubles. Who can account the griefes of the fleshe, which colde, heate and hunger, thirst and diseases, seuerally dangerous to euery age, do inforce? I speake not of them whiche came by some speciall mishappe or chaunce. In déede oure whole nature is generally corrupte, weake and féeble, and the corruption thereof doth customably brēde certayne peculiar griefes to euery age. These be common as wel to the good as to the euill, to the hygh as to the lowe. For they do fall not according to the diuersitie of mens conditions as to the myghtye and weake, to the learned and vnlearned, to hyghe and lowe, to ryche and poore, but as to menne, according vnto the lackes of oure common nature, whych the necessitie of deathe dothe at the lacke vtterlye determine and bryng to an ende.

Secondlye, afflictions do chaunce vnto men, as base in condition and degrée, as contempt, oppression, pyllage, powertie, with all manner of wrongs, whereby the meaner sort be without respect troden downe by the stronger, and be deuoured in thys world, euen as the smaller fishes bée in the sea by the greater and mightier. Whereof Habacuck dothe complayne, saying: How long Lord shall I crye, and thou wilt not heare me? I shall call vnto thée whyles I suffer, and thou wilt not saue me. Why doest thou shewe me wickednesse and trouble, to sée spoyling and violence before my face, and ther is left strife, and iudgemente is taken awaye: Therefore the Lawe hath no force, and iudgement hathe no execution, bycause the wicked dothe restrayne the iust: therof it is that there commeth out peruerse and crooked iudgement. This manner of afflictions wherewith the poore & the widdowes, the fatherlesse, straungers and innocente bee oppressed in this worlde, do reigne without any loking to, in all nations, so that it is not sayde in vayne: Where the hedge is lowest, it is easiest troden downe. And, The poore lyeth oppressed in euerye corner.

Habacuck.

before

Thirdlye, afflictions do fall to the euill and mischeuous folke oftentimes through their owne deserte, whiche they doe purchase vnto themselues, either by their owne naughty endeauors and doings, as we may se in aduulterers, whoremongers, drunkerds and gluttons, either which are compelled to suffer as layde vppon thē by others, either in abiding some priuate punishment, or when they be executed by the iust iudgement of the Magistrates. Thus much of the first kinde of afflictions, which we doe cal worldly.

Affliction for religions sake.

We sayde that there is an other kinde of those afflictions, whyche bee layde vppon men for godlynesse and religion, vnto whiche we doe ioyne those also, whiche iust men doe suffer for righteousnesse. And in my iudgemente it is not possible to make one hedcrolle of them all. We may superficially rehearse some as most generall, of which some be commonlye layde vppon all, certayne to some certayne, more or lesse to the godlye and iust persons, vnto all generally there dothe betide displeasure, hatered, casting off, abhorring, blasphemie, slander and reprofe, seking to hurte and destroy. For firste as many as bee godly disposed in Christ in deede, and do sticke with sincere faith vnto his worde, they do exceedingly displease the wicked children of this worlde, bycause they can not like their deuises and studyes. And this is the beginning of those afflictions, wherewith ỹ godly be vexed in this world, and it is the more griefe vnto them the more that they desire and seke to please all men in goodnesse.

Secondlye, there followeth thys displeasure a moste detestable and deadly hatered euen at hande, whyche Satan is wonte wonderfully to kyndle and sette a fyre in mennes mindes.

Thirdly, of this hatered are bred all the euils wherewith the godly be afflicted. There riseth immediately a parting of friendes, whereby all friendshippe, aliance and familiarity is broken: so that the children be diseuered from their parentes, the parentes from their children, brother from brother, the wife from the husbande, friend from friend, and neighbour from neighboure. The disposition and nature of man is alwayes suche, that it dothe louingly embrace such as do followe the like trade that it doth, and hateth them that doe seke the truth, and dothe abhorre them whome it doth hate, and doth earnestlye couet to eschue their companye, as some as mens myndes be supered in the case of Religion: lyke as their iudgementes and will be contrarie, so the very societie and felowshippe also of their life, breaketh off. In so muche that they whiche were nearest frendes, fall to be sequestred one from an nother. There followeth this sequestration and abhorring, when the wicked doe detest, curse and banne the Godlye, as moste wicked. Thus they are wonte to be abhorred, whiche be condemned of Heresie, and bycause they wouldе haue John Husse to be taken for suche a one, when he was ledde to death, they put on a garment vpon him wherein they had caused to be painted the Image of the Deuill both before and behinde.

Vnto this abhorrente be ioyned slaunders, tauntes, and rebukes, wherewith the godly be most vilfauoredly reuiled by the wicked, and others also be procured to hate and abhorre them. For they thinke it not ynough to haue them hated priuatelye of some, vnlesse that they be generally abhorred of all people. After this commeth their endelesse endeauor to worke mischiefe and destruction, whereas the wicked do practise the losse of the honoure, wealthe, and life of the godly. These be the common afflictions, whereunto all godly be subiect for religions sake.

Those whiche do particularly betide vnto some, can not all be specially noted. Some of them by persecution, outlawe, nedinesse, hunger, thirst, stripes, emprisonment, yrons, condemnation, swoord, fetters, fyre, &c. The Apostle doth make mention of hunger, nakednesse, perill, persecution, and the swoorde, &c. of necessities, straightes, plagues, prisons, seditiōs, trauayles, watchings and fastings, and he doeth recount his owne afflictions, that is to saye, his trauailes, stripes, prisons and deathes. I receyued (saithe he) of the Iewes fiue times forty stripes lacking one. I was thrée times beaten with roddes, I was once stoned, I was in thrée shipwrackes, I lay a day and a nighte in the déepe Sea, I haue bin oftentimes in daunger by the way side in perill of water, in perill of thieues, perill of kinred, perill of Gentiles, perill within the towne, perill in wildernesse, perill vppon the Sea, perils amongst false brethren, in payne, in griefe, in watchinges, in hunger, in thirst, in fastings oft, in cold and nakednesse, besides those matters which do betide outwardly, &c. It is not to be doubted of, but that the other Apostles also had a crosse of sundry afflictions to sustayne. For like as the wicked be sore, cruell, and extreame against the electes of God, so they be also wittie to deuise diuers and sundry sortes of afflictions.

2. Cor. 11.

What shall I say of those thynges which do vexe ỹ heartes of the faithfull, although there be no enforcemente of trouble vnto their bodyes? Is not the lawe of sinne a very death in their membres, whereby it falleth out that they worke not that good whyche they like and would do, and do the euill whych they do hate, and therefore maye crye out with greate sorrow, and say as the Apostle dothe: A wretched manne that I am, who shall deliuer me from this body subiecte vnto deathe? No manne knoweth howe sore that Godly meane bée vexed herewith, vnlesse they haue proued it. There do chaunce thynges otherwyse also, whereby they bée sore grieued. As the contempt of the name of God, which they perceyue to preuayle euerye where, whereof we spake somewhat in the place before: Of the name of God. For like as they do say with al their heart, Halowed be thy name: so they can not chose, but be very sory as often as they do see it despised, and dishonored. Another is, ỹ Catholike and generall seduction and abuse of the Church, which raigneth through out all the Poperie, and worketh the destruction of so many soules, and so spitefull variaunce and strife, besides the vpper hand, quiet, and prosperitie of the wicked. And who is diseased among the faithfull, but that the Godly is also diseased with him: Who is offended, and he not kindled withall: Who sustayneth any losse or incommoditie, but that he feleth a griefe withall in his heart: Truly the troubles of the iust in this life be not onlye many, but innumerable. So that the Apostle sayde not in vayne: In case that wee haue hope in Christe in thys lyfe onely, wee bee moste miserable of all menne. But thus much of the kinds of afflictions.

Rom. 7.

Of vvhence Afflictions do come.

ALbeit that there doe Afflictions betide vs, of which we search not from whence they came, bycause it is manifest ynough, yet notwithstanding it belongeth to the Godlye man diligently to knowe, first generally, and then specially as neare as hee can, of whence ỹ euils doe come whiche doe indifferently chaunce eyther vnto all men or to some certaine only, eyther good or euill. For this consideration dothe help muche to make vs the readier to bear all aduersities.

Afflictions bee sente from God. Gen. 9. Exo. 5.

First of all, euerye man must bee fully perswaded, that nothing at all befalleth vnto mankind, either generally or particularlye, whether it bee good or euil, without the disposition and order of God, foreseeyng that there falleth not as much as a little sparow to the grounde without the prouidence of God, how can any aduersitie befall vnto man without the disposition of God? This is confirmed by the testimonye of God hymselfe, saying in Esay: Besides mee there is no God, I am the Lord, and there is no other that fashioneth the light, & maketh darkenesse, making peace, and appointing euill. Esay. 45.

Causes of afflictions.

Secondly, we must consider of the causes of the euils which do oppresse vs, of them some came from our first parents, and some of our selues whiche be afflicted, some outwardlye from others, some immediately from God. From oure first parentes doe come all those euils whiche doe commonly betide all mankinde in all lyuing men, of which we made mention before. For we maye impute all these things vnto their transgressiõ, for which we be al become wretched, miserable, subiect vnto diseases, hunger, thirst, werinesse, colde, heate, all kinds of griefes and sorowes, and al lost to Death and corruption, as many of vs as doe descende from them, and be borne in this flesthe of Sinne. The occasions of these euils, wherewith we be afflicted bycause of our sins, do procede of our selues. Therefore the Prophet saith: I will visite theyr wickednesse with a rodde, and theyr sines with stripes. And ỹ Lord sayd to him to him that had the paulsie: Be of good cheere my sonne, thy sinnes be forgiuẽ thee. And, Lo, thou art now made whole, see thou sinne no more least some worse matter betyde thee: whereby wee doe perceyue that we be scourged of God for our sinnes, and by them do prouoke the wrath of God vpon vs. And besides that ther be some sins ỹ of nature, that they do afflict both our bodies & soules, albeit ỹ they be not punished by any peculiar punishement of god doth not dronkennes trouble & marre mens bodies, and couetousnes and enuie, the mindes and soules? One, saith, ỹ euery disordered affectiõ, is a punishemẽt to himself.

But the causes of some afflictions be without vs, in them which doe hate and trouble vs without desert. Such be the causes of those euyls wherwith the godly, iust, and innocẽt be oppressed by ỹ wicked in this world, & those be vngodlinesse, malyce, anger, hatered, enemitie, enuie, pride, loue of our selfe, and delyght in strife and variance.

It chanceth sometimes, that the cause of affliction commeth immediately frõ God. And we haue an example therof, in ỹ blind man. Aboute whom when the disceples demaunded who had sinned, either he, or his parentes ỹ he was borne blynde, the Lorde aunswered and said: Neither this man nor hys parentes hath offended, but he was borne blinde, to the intent that the workes of God should be reuealed in him. It is a sore affliction for a man to lack his eiesight frõ his mothers belly, & yet for all that there was no other cause thereof in thys blinde body, but bycause it pleased God to reuele his glory in him. I say ther was no such cause of blindnesse in him, not for that his byrth was not subiect vnto sin, & worthy of greater punishemẽt than blindnesse is: but that God would not for that, plague him with blindnes whom he would rather haue to be an instrument to bee glorified by through his sonne.

As for ỹ final causes of afflictiõs, we will not speak of them here, but we shal haue better occasiõ to touch them in some article folowing.

III. Of what purpose of God afflictions be sent.

LIke as God taketh no delyte in the destruction of the soules of mẽ, so he doth not delite neither in their afflictions, for he is not cruell & hatefull of nature, as some heretikes imagined the god of the old Testament to be inclined to do euil as well to ỹ good as to the euil, but he is good, milde, & louing towards mã so that he deliteth in doing good, according to the saying of Hieremie. I will reioyce in them, when I shall do thẽ good. Therfore wheras he doth send them afflictions, it procedeth not of that that he is enclined to trouble and punish, wheras ỹ is contrary to his nature. But whẽ he doth afflict & scourge vs he doth a straunge worke, to come vnto that which is proper vnto hym, as we may perceiue by Esay, wher we do read in this maner. To do his own worke, his worke is straunge to bryng to passe his working, his working is straunge. It is the proper worke of God not to afflycte, but to deliuer, & saue the afflicted. But it is wrought by the malice of our nature, that he is compelled like a most faithfull father, to chasten & instruct vs by the rodde of discipline, to ꝯ intent to come to his own ꝓper worke & to saue thē which should otherwise perish. To this intent he did oftētimes afflict and scourge the people of Israel, because of their stif necke, and vntollerable rebellion, to bowe, and tourne them vnto him.

Ieremie. Esay 28. God vvorketh a straunge vvorke to attayne to his owne vvorke.

Ose. 1. So we do reade in Osee: Therfore, Lo, I will hedge vp his waye with thornes, and will pane it vp, and he shall not finde his pathe, and he shal folowe his louers, and shall not ouertake them, and shall seke them, and not finde them, and shall say, I wyll go and returne to my first husband, for it was better with me at that time, than it is nowe. So hee doth punishe sinners, what tyme they do folow their owne trade, to ꝯ intent they may tourne vnto him, & amende their life.

1. Cor. 11. There is a like place, where the Apostle saith: When we be iudged, we be chastened by the Lord, to the intent we should not be dāned with the worlde. The Greke worde παιδεύεσθαι, signifieth to correct, chasten, and reforme folke as children are wont to be, to declare that God doth nothing els when he doth afflict vs, but as ꝯ father doth when he doth take vp & scourge his childe that doth offend. This intent of god is expressed more at large to the Ebrewes in this wise. For you haue not yet withstanded striuing against sinne vnto bloudshed, and you haue forgotten the comfort which speaketh vnto you as vnto children, saying: My sonne, despise not the discipline of the Lord, neither be thou wery ed when thou art reprooued of

Heb. 12. him, for the Lord loueth him whom he chasteneth, & he scourgeth euery childe, which he receiueth, &c.

So that herein is the greatest consideration of all kindes of afflictions wherewith we be afflicted in this lyfe, to be had, least we cast away our selues, when we sinne at lybertie without any chastening.

V Vnyuſt be afflicted, exemple. But for as much as not onely they do sinne, but the iust men also which be much afflicted in this worlde, because of iustice & godly lyfe, it were a question well asked, what is the meaning of God in that poynt. And to answere briefly vnto this question: There be two principall causes, why God doth yelde the iust men to be punished of the vngodly & vniust. The one is for their exercise, the other is for a speciall example. For exercise, ꝯ they may thereby be trained in faith, hope, prayer, and praise of his name. Such a matter Paul expressed, saying: We wil not haue you ignorant brethren of our trouble which betyded vs in Asia, for we were greeued aboue measure, more than we were able to beare, in so much, that we were wery of our lyfe, and we had in our selfe an answere, or contentation of death, so that we should not trust in our selues but in God, which doth rayse vp ꝯ dead, who hath deliuered & take vs out of so great perills, vpon whome we trust, that he shall yet still deliuer vs through your ayde in prayer for vs, so that from many persons and partakers of that gift which is in vs there may be giuen thankes for vs, by many. Thus the godly be exercised in ꝯ faith of gods prouidēce to the intent ꝯ knowing their owne weakenesse, they may learne to put Exercise of afflictions.

2. Cor. 1.

all

all their trust in their Lorde God. Thus they be practised to hope vpō him, whose ayde they haue felt in their afflictions: Thus they be trayned vp to call vpon him, vpon whom they do depend in stedfast trust and hope, & to sacrifice vnto him a sacrifice of praise, by whome they know that they be deliuered from al their afflictions.

The other cause which we said, is for some speciall exāple, consisteth in two parts, for either it serueth to ꝯ Church of the faithfull, either to the glory of the name of God. The elect & godly persons be made exāples of faith, & patience, when they do with constant faith and sufferance, beare the strugglinges of their afflictions in this world, & so do shine as bright as starres on ꝯ church of ꝯ faithful.

So Christ dyd set forth his Prophets for ꝯ Apostles to folow. They do serue to the glory of God, when his might and goodnesse is declared in thē. Such be ꝯ things which Iob suffred. For these cōsiderations, god layeth his afflictions vpon the iust & Godly, which this world is not worthy to enioy. Ther might be others also alleaged, but these be the chiefe.

Where may be a question asked also, why God doth not onely afflict the sinners, in whome there is yet some place of repentance, & the iust persons, but the wicked & vngodly also, in whome the forsayd reasons can not serue, for they be not reformed with stripes and plagues, but shall abide their punishment at the last iudgement? We haue made answere vnto this question before in ꝯ place of ꝯ Iudgements of God. The vngodly be scourged also in this life to the intent there should be founde Sinners be scourged by seuery of afflictions.

nothing left for them to colour any excuse by: and besides that it is for the profit of the godly, ꝯ ther should appere certaine arguments of gods iudgemēts, to declare how god doth not alow, but iudge and condemne all them that do wickedly.

How many manner wayes afflictions be sent.

He which doth dispose and order all things in number, wayght and measure, according vnto his incōprehēsible wisedom, doth appoint this matter (whereof we speake) most wysely, not alike, but sundry wise in dēde by vnequal and diuers reasons, meanes and measures, but yet attempered with most high prouidence. It is the parte of a wyse Phisition to vary in giuing his medicins, according vnto the varietie of the diseases: yea sometimes he must not cure them that haue one selfesame disease by one manner of meanes and medicines, but he must chaunge the meanes of his curing, according to the varietie of the persons, which be diseased. It is ꝯ part also of a discrete Scholemaister, to haue a consideration of his scholers capacities and wittes, in vsing his correction, and to apply himselfe vnto the diuersitie of his scholers dyspositions, which causeth, that some one must be oftner chastened than an other. We see by the very lyke reasō, that ꝯ varietie of those afflictions & chastenings is great, wherewith mē be scorged & chastened by ꝯ order of God in this worlde. For they by not alwaies chastened after one kynde and manner of affliction, which bee chastened for one selfe same sinne, some be fauored and spared as the weaker, & some bee punished more seuerely and strayghtly. There is a generall louingnesse and care of our saluation in God, but his meanes and wayes to saue vs doe vary, lyke as the heauenly gifts of god also be diuers and sundry wayes distributed and bestowed.

Iustice tryed by sundry afflictions.

Fynally, neither be the iust rayned, and tried in one measure of afflictions, but after a sundry sorte. Samuell one way, and Dauid an other way, Isaac one way, and Iacob an other waye, the Prophetes in sundry sorts. And the Apostle Paule other wayes, than the rest of the Apostles. He passed them all in heape of afflictions, like as he did in trauailes. Yea, we do see that iuste men sometimes do lyue in quiet, in a very calme condition of life, wher as some others be vexed with sundry troubles and aduersities. You shal finde some which fal into troubles euen from their cradle, & some very latterly. And onely he knoweth the reasons of all this, which doth only dispose & order al things according vnto his wisdome, which we may not bee ouer curious to search. We do leaue the matter to the tryers of mettalles, to knowe how they do try gold one way, and siluer an other way, leade an other way, copper an other way, and yron an other way, howe much more is it conuenient that we should commit this power and care ouer vs vnto God most wise and louing of mankinde, to determine most freely of the exercise and reformation of our lyfe, and be out of all doubt, that he doth it for our good, and for no euil at all towardes vs.

V. What is the profit of afflictions.

IF we do diligently consider vnto what purpose of God afflictions be laid vpon vs, whereof we haue spoken before, we may easely vnderstand, to what profit of ours it is done. Yet for all that we do meane to entreate therof seuerally.

Rom. 5.

1 First the Apostle whē he would recommend it vnto vs, sayth: Not that onely, but we do glory & reioyce also in our afflictions, knowing ỹ affliction breedeth patience, that patience breedeth proofe, and proofe or tryal bringeth forth hope. Thus farre forth patience, proofe, and hope do come of affliction, for as it is ỹ cause of them without which they coulde not be. For like as hope is but weake wout trial & proofe, and that a tryall can not be had without patience, so there can be no patience, where there is no affliction. Therefore all that profit which commeth of patience, proofe and hope, is attrybute a ryght vnto affliction. The patience and sufferance of afflictions, maketh our faith to be well tryed, whereupon commeth the hope, which doth not confound: and who is able to way well howe great a helpe it is vnto true saluation, when a man hath a tried fayth towardes God, and an assured hope against al tẽptatiõs as armed against ỹ very gattes of Hel.

2 Secondly, the terrour & feare of afflyctions (which Hieromie doth translate and expounde veration, in Esay) giuing vnderstanding to the hearers, wherby wee doe vnder the terrour of the crosse, & after our deliuerance also, much better vnderstande those those things which we did dyd before negligently heare, and not conceiue out of the word of god.

3 Thirdly, affliction doth also abate mens harts, lyke as welth doth set them vp in pryde and hawtines. And lyke as there be two sortes of hawtinesse by prosperitie, so there is also a double humblenes ỹ commeth by affliction. They which haue the world at will, are both hawtie and high in minde, & reputed high also in the world. Contrariwise they which be vexed with aduersitie, be abased both in their hart or stomack, & in ỹ world also: & how profitable it is to be voide of all hawtinesse, & to be abased before the Lorde, no man can sufficiẽtli cõsider. Whiles we do liue in quiet, we do not know our selues, how weake wee be in minde, faithe, & body also: but when we be in troubles & afflictiõs, than we do fele our weakenesse in deede, & so be abased not onely in the sight of the world, but in our own consciences also: & whē we be once brought low, we be better inclined vnto ỹ kepig of gods cõmaũdemẽts, than we were before. The sayig of Dauid is wel knowē: Before I was abased, I did offend. Itē, Thou didst abase mę, to learne thy commaundements.

Affliction breedeth patience.

4 Fourthly, affliction doth also breede amendement of lyfe, & draw vs vnto God. Whereof we haue a lesson giuen vs by the prodigal and wastful sonne, who was so conuerted vnto a better minde & amendement by afflictions, that he sayd: I wil go to my father, &c. of which mynde he was not before, when he ran at lauish, and folowed his own lusts and delytes.

Affliction giueth vnderstanding.

5 Fiftly, affliction doth restraine the mynde from naughty desires, & plucketh it from worldly matters, & maketh it wary and wakefull in all respects. In this consideration also Dauid was better at ease when he was in exile, than he was in peace, prosperitie and idlenesse: when he was troubled in exile & banishmẽt, he could not abyde to hurt his most spitefull enemye Saul, whereas he might haue done it most easely. But how great wrongs he dyd vnto his most faithfull and truste seruaunt, when he lyued at rest, the histories do testifie.

Naughty concupiscences.

Afflictions breedeth a feruencie of praier.

6 Sirtly, lyke as when we be in quiet, we do pray either nothing at all, or very coldly vnto God. So in aduersitie, and trouble our spirit & courage is styrred vp and enkendled to prayer, wherof we do finde examples euery wher in the Psalmes of Dauid: so that affliction is as it were the sauce of prayer, as hunger is vnto meate. Truely they pray er is vnsauery, which be voyde from afflictions, and do not praye truely, but de rather cõterfayte a prayer, or pray for custome.

By afflictions we be assured of the care of God. 2. Cor. 1.

7 Seuenthly, we be not onely allowed and well tryed by affliction, but the very care of God is thereby commended vnto vs, wherby he doth marueilously comfort ỹ afflicted. Of this ỹ Apostle maketh mention saying: Blessed is God the Father of our Lorde Iesus Christ, the father of mercies, & god of all comfort, which doth cõfort vs in all our trouble. Item, Like as the passiõs of Christe do abounde in vs, so by Christ also our comfort doth abound. And Dauid sayth: According vnto the multitude of my sorowes in my harte, thy comforts do reioyce my soule. So that the comforts of god haue place in the troubled and the afflicted, not in them which doe liue quietly at theyr ease and without all care.

Of afflictiõs commeth sacrifice of praise.

8 Eightly, there is commoditie also in afflictions, that the mindes of the afflicted be styred vp to the Sacryfice of prayse, to commende and auaunce God, as often as they are touched with ẏ feeling of his cõfortes, as we doe perceaue in the Apostle recyted before.

By affliction we bee taught to comfort others

9 Ninthly, the Church of God taketh this commoditie also of afflictions, that the more that any of the faythfull be afflicted and tryed in trouble than others, the more redy he is to comfort others that be afflicted.

So God doth comfort the weaker, by them that be better tryed and stronger. Here of the Apostle made mention also in the place before alleaged: for when he had said: Who doth comfort vs in all troubles, he dyd adde in this, That we may comfort them, which be in any trouble, by the comfort wherewith God doth comfort vs.

Glory of afflictions

10 Tenthly, it falleth out also oftentymes by the speciall dispositiõ of God, that the more afflicted that a man be in this worlde, the more famous he is made also to the worlde. This chaunced to the Israelites in Egipt, which the more they were vexed by Pharao, the more they encreased, and at length grew to be very famous, euen there in Egypt. The like betided to Ioseph in the same countrey before theyr tyme, who being found by his brethren, and cast also into prison, was at length lyfted vp from the doungell of the prison, almost vnto the very gouernaunce of the Realme. Had not Iob more fame and glory after his afflictions, than euer he hadde before? There be many lyke examples: but thus much briefly of the profit of the afflictions which do happen in this lyfe. And as for that which we do loke for in the world to come, no creature is able worthyly to expresse it.

How afflictions ought to be suffered, borne and ouercome.

Albeit that the profit of all afflictions be great, yet notwithstanding it is a great matter, vpon what manner of man they fall, and how they be borne. First if they fal vpon a reprobate and wicked person, they do not onely doe him no good, but doe yet more decay him, euen as the fier is wont to do which clenseth the siluer, and consumeth the drosse.

Againe, if they fall vpon a man that is not altogether wicked, but either iust, either subiect vnto some faultes, yet they shall there do like good, vnlesse they be well borne. Wherefore it were expedyent to speake somewhat of this matter also, after that which is passed before. Therefore we will see how afflictions ought to be taken or receiued, and secondly how to be borne and abydden, & thyrdly how to be ouercome.

First of all we ought not wylfully to seeke for afflictions, for of such it can not be sayde, that they be sent from God. Like as no wise man doth willigly seeke vnto him ẏ sickenesse sickenesse of his bodye, no more ought wee wilfully to prouoke afflictions vpon vs. But in case they be laide in our neckes against our will, our chiefe care must bee to consider of the wil of God towards vs, to what purposes he intendeth to trouble vs with aduersitie. Whether that it bee to exercise our faith and patience, either to chasten vs for some of our offences, either to staye that we fall not into occasions of sinne. For this cõsideration shal help vs much to bear the afflictions as it becometh vs. After that the godlye man will tourne him vnto prayer, wherein hee will recommend himself vnto ẏ grace of god, and in case that he perceiue himself worthy to be punished as a sinner, he wil say from the bottome of his heart: Lord be merciful vnto me sinner as I am, and deale not with me according to my sinnes, but according vnto thy great mercy. But if he see that hee be assaulted by the wicked, not for his sinnes, but for his profession of the true religion, or els of some other iust matter, he will pray and say, Lord leade mee not into temptacion, but deliuer me from euill, and staye me that I fall not from the profession of the truth for any affliction.

Some man wil aske me. Whether that affliction ought so to be borne, that a man maye not lawefully flee the comming thereof, and to shifte it off in the sighte of God, that is to say, to auoyd it both with minde and bodye. We aunsweare, that it is not vnlawefull to make meanes before God to shift off the affliction that is to come, the crosse and death. Wee haue a manifeste example thereof in the doing of Christ, who what time hee was in the gardein, and that the houre of night drew on, he did three times intreate to shifte off the cupp of his passion, which he shoulde drincke, saying: Father, if it be possible, lette this cuppe go from mee, that I drincke it not now. What godly person wil say, ẏ the same is not lawfull for a Christian man which we knowe that Christ did himself and wherewith no man is able to finde faulte? There be examples also of other saintes, which besought God to be quitted of the perils that honge ouer their heades. It is knowen what Iacob did whē he was afeard of the comming of his brother Esau. Thou God of my father Abraham (said he) and thou God of my father Isaac, &c. deliuer me out of the hands of my brother Esau. For I am much afraid of him, leaste hee come peradaunture and strike the mother with the children. Gen. 32.

And what nede we any examples, hauing the manifeste precept of God? therefore whereas he saith in the Psalm: Cal vpon me in the daye of trouble, and I will deliuer thee. Psalm. 50.

But albeit that the fathers were of diuers opinions, concerning this question, whether it be lawefull to flee afflictions and persecutions, yet for al that it is a clere case, that it is neuer a whit vnlawfull at all: for els it had not bene wel said of CHRIST. If they persecute you from one citye flee vnto an other. And hee warneth them which shoulde bee in Iurye at the tyme of theyr persecution, Matth. 10 Matth. 24.

to come, that they should flee vnto the mountaynes. And Joseph was wylled by the Angell, to take the chylde and his mother, and to flee with them into Egypt. Jacob fled vnto Laban his vncle, to eschew the anger of his brother Esau. Moses fled from the presence of Pharao vnto the lande of Madian. Moses and Aaron when there began a sedition, and the murre grewe great amongst the people, fledde vnto the Lordes Tabernacle. Dauid being by the counsel and ayde of his wife, let downe at a wyndow, fled from the presence of Saule. And from the face of Absolom. And the Apostle Paule being let down from a wall, by his brethren, fledde from the presence of the Lieutenaunt of Damasko.

Matth.2.

Gen.27.

Exod.2.

Num.16.

1.Samuel.6. 19 21.27.

2 Samuel.15

Acles.19. 2 Cor.11.

It is lawfull to auoide afflictions.

And it is not againste the order of holy persons, not onely to eschue the afflictions to come, but also to auoyde them by anye other meanes possible, so that they be not vnlawefull. So Jacob went about to put of the displeasure of his brother Esau by rewards and presents. So when Dauid vnderstode that there was some daūger hanging ouer his head in king Achas Court, he chaunged his countenaunce before the king, and dyd counterfaite the raging of a madde man, wherevpon the king sayde: You sawe that the man is mad. Whi brought you him vnto me, do we lacke any mad folke, &c. Let him depart hence, that he enter not into my house, and by this meanes he escaped the perill which he was afeard off. And Paule when he was bound to haue bene scourged with whippes, to shift himselfe from that affliction, sayde: Is it lawefull for you to scourge one ý is a Romaine, and not condemned? And by that pretence of a Romaine, he escaped the present daunger. And when he stode before the councel of the priestes, he cryed out ý he was a Pharisee, and was iudged vpon the hope of the resurrection of the deade, bicause that he knew that the councel was moste of Pharisees and Saducees, and that there was amongst them a deadly stryfe aboute the resurrection of the deade, which the Saducees dyd deny, and the Pharisees vpholde, and by this meanes he troubled the whole Councell, so that there coulde be nothing agreed vpon against him.

Gen.32.

1.Samuel.21

Acts.16

Acts.23

He wrought the lyke practise also, when he disclosed the coniuration of the Iewes against him, to the Trybune, by his sisters sonne. And when he appealed vnto Cesar, bicause the Iewes should not deliuer him to the president Festus. By such examples it doeth appeare well ynough, that it is not vnlawfull to auoyde and shift off afflictions and perills, if it may be done by lawfull meanes: so that we offende not, if we doe not immediately yelde vs vnto them. But when there can be nothing wrought by any reason or meanes, but that we must nedes vndertake the affliction, than we may conceiue and vnderstand that the Lorde hath so appointed it, that we must nedes yelde vs vnto the crosse and affliction, and that being vnderstand, we may giue vs altogether to the wyll of God.

Secondly, whē we haue of necessitie and not vnwillingly yelded vnto the troubles which God sendith, it is no small matter, how we go away with them and beare them. For it must not be sufficient for the godly man, simply to sustein aduersitie, forasmuch as hee can not otherwise chose, but he must beare them, not onely as it becommeth a wise man, but also as it behoueth a godly and perfect Christian man. For these matters be laid vpon vs by God, not only to the intent that we shoulde bee afflicted and troubled, as though that God had rather haue vs miserable thā blessed, but also that we should be exercised, tried and chastened: as we declared before. Wherefore we must so beare our afflictions, that wee maye haue these profites and commodities of them, which we rehersed in ý article before. For to that purpose they be sent vs. Therfore let vs se what is requisit therunto.

away

1 Firste the afflicted haue nēd of faith, to beleeue that they be chastened, exercised, reformed, tried & saued from destruction by the hand of God their heauenly father. Unlesse that they haue this faith, they can not haue the rest of the things which be also requisite. Wherfore wee doe saye, that this is a pointe most necessarie, to acknowledge the hand and intent of GOD, which doth scourge vs.

2 Secōdly, ther is required hope, wherby we doubt not but that the mercy of God shall once deliuer vs from the crosse, which he hath laied vpon vs. This hope is bred of faith in that we do beleeue that God is faithfull, so that he will not suffer vs to be tempted further, then we be able to beare. But that he will once make an ende of our afflictiōs, when hee shall see his time, and cleare our way. Whereof the Apostle speketh. It is a word of hope that Job did say: Although that he kill me, yet I will hope vpon him: after darkenesse I hope for light. And that this hope is not vaine, it appeareth by that which God saith himselfe. Forasmuch as he hoped vpon me, I will deliuer him.

1.Cor.10

Job.13.

Psalm.91.

3 Thirdly, after this faith and hope, ther commeth that vnknowen & exceeding commendable vertue, patience, but thereof we wil speake in a place alone.

4 Fourthly, we nēd to haue not only patiēce, but the reioycemēt also of the spirit. In deed it shoulde seeme that affliction can not well sauour of ioy, but of sorowe, if we consider the nature of the flesh, but if a man haue the spirit of faith, he shal glory rather and reioyce in his afflictiōs than lament thē. Therfore the Lords aduise was whē he saide. Yon be blessed when men do curse you & persecute you, & speake all euill against you, lying vpon you for my sake: be glad & reioyce, for your reward shall be great in Heauen. And when the Apostles knew this, thei reioyced as they departed from the presence of ý counsell, bycause they were accounted worthy to be rebuked for Christs sake. So Paul doth testifie, ý he doth reioyce not onely in the hope of the glory of the childrē of God, but also in troubles. And James saithe: My brethren, esteeme it to be al ioy when you do fal into sundry temptations, knowing ý the triall of your faith worketh patience. Therfore we must so beare our afflictions, ý we must abide them not only patiently, but with ioy also through faith & hope.

Matth.5

Actes.5.

Rom.5. Iacob.1.

here

Whether that crowe lamentacion in wayling vnto God be excluded.

Here some man will say: Then all sorowe, lamenting and wailing, yea the calling for the helpe of god, is shut off in this matter. For how can they haue any place in ỹ mind, which reioice and glorie in afflictions? I answere. There is in the godly person both the flesh and the spirite: concerning the flesh, hee doth feele sorow, heauinesse & trouble, in afflictions, and doth sigh, and seeketh to be deliuered, humbly beseeching the aide of God. There be manifolde examples of Saintes, touching this matter in the scriptures, specially in the Psalmes of Dauid, yea in our very Sauiour Christ himselfe. But concerning the spirite which commeth from God, he doth not onely patientlye suffer al things but he doth reioice also in hys afflictions, and glory of them, knowing the good that they do which the flesshe can not vnderstand: hereof let Christ himselfe be example vnto vs. Ye did lewingly before in the spirite, to eate the Passouer with his disciples, before hee should suffer, but when he came to the entry of his passiõ, he was troubled in his flesshe, and began to be heauy, and so desired to be ridde of the cuppe of his passion: then what wounder is it, if the same do betide vnto a man, though he be full godly disposed, yet without comparison farre vnder Christe. To bee shorte, the flesshe is weake, but the spirite is ready, yea and that in the one selfesame man. Wherefore ther is no contrarietie in this point. One selfesame Christian person bearing thy afflictions, is heauy, sorowfull, lamenteth and is troubled, and seeketh the Lords help, but yet in spirit he doth reioice and glorye and is ready to beare all aduersitye for the truth and glorye of GOD his name.

Afflictions how to be ouercome.

Now this remaineth also for vs to speake off, how that we must not onely suffer affliction for a season, but also vtterly ouercome it. And you shall vnderstand, that affliction is ouercome two wayes. First if a man so behaue himselfe in it, that it may cease & leaue off. Secondly, albeit he do not cease, yet if it preuaile not so, that the partie be ouercome and take harme thereby. A sickenesse is ouercome, when it is driuen to giue place to the health that is recouered, we meane not of such a maner of victorye heere. You shall find some which do so ouercome the afflictions layde vpon them for the truth of GOD, that they be rather ouercome thẽselues than the afflictions. But the Christian man doth so ouercome them, that hee abydeth fast and sure in the truth and faith of GOD. He doth so striue, that he maye truly say with ỹ Apostle: I haue wrestled a good wrestelinge, I haue accomplished my course, there is laid vp for me a crowne of righteousnesse which the iuste Judge shall yeeld vnto mee vpon that day. So ỹ the christian man doth ouercome all afflictions, when he doth stand fast and sure to his tackeling, in suffering them patiently, and slyeth not an inche from the truth and faith of God. So Job ouercame all his troubles, which Sathan layde vpon him by the sufferaunce of God, when he was conformed by patience, and spake nothing against god, ye he did also blesse his name.

Rom. 8.

But we haue an exceeding faire example of this matter in the Apostle, where he saith: Who shall thẽ dissauer vs from the loue Christ, trouble, veration, hunger, nakednesse, peril, persecutiõ or the swoord: as it is wrytten: For thy sake we be slaine al the day long, we be esteemed as shæpe vnto the shambles: but in all these things we haue the vpper hand, by him which hath loued vs.

And how had he the vpper hand in all these matters? Veare what he addeth. For I am fully perswaded saith he, that neither death neither life, neither Aungels neither principates, nor potẽtats, neither things instãt nor to come, nether ani height nor depth, nether any other creature is able to sequester vs from the loue of GOD, which is in Christ Iesu. Ergo, to beare afflictions in that sorte, that a man can not by them be separate from the loue and truth of GOD, is to ouercome them. So the Christian man doth ouercome all thinges, the worlde, and Sathan himselfe, albeit hee bee a thousand manner of wayes afflicted and slaine.

How men must deale with the afflicted folke.

THe course & trade of this present life is so appointed, & not without the special purpose of god, that al men generally be not afflicted, and miserable alike, but that ther be many mẽtely well at ease both in body and mind, and also for the wealth of this worlde. Secondlye, that all suche as bee afflicted, haue not all one kind of affliction, whereby not onely they which are well at ease, but they also which be oppressed with some kind of miserie, may yet haue some regard and cõsideratiõ of ỹ afflicted. Wherfore the godly persons care, must be not onely to sustaine, beare and ouercome conuenientlye his owne aduersities, but they must also be wholy bent, as nere as they can, to behaue them aright towardes the miseries and aduersities of others. And here of the faithfull must be often and vigilentlye admonished, not onely to abide all aduersities stoutly and stronglye for the truth of God, and to suffer the hand of GOD patiently when he chalenceth, but also to declare towardes others that be miserable and afflicted, how vpright and true Christian folke they bee. You shall finde some Preachers which will earnestlye aduise men vnto persecution, but yet notwithstandyng, they wyll not tell them one woorde howe to vse the afflicted and outlawes, whereas the same ought wyth no lesse diligence to be beaten into mens headdes, than how to stand fast in ỹ truth of GOD, and to beare patiently all aduersities.

We must not onely suffer the roode our selues but lay it vpon other.

And it can not bee more certeinlye and compendiously expressed, how wee ought to deale with the miserable and afflicted, than according vnto the sentence of Christe, where he saith: Whatsoeuer you will that men do to you, the same doe you also vnto them. Lette euerye man consider how he would bee dealt withall, in case hee were himselfe an outelawe, poore, naked, hungrye, sycke and Impryſoned, &c.

Misery not to be added vnto miser.

1 Firſt, he would in no wiſe bee yet more afflicted. Who is hee that is hungry and thirſty, & would bee contented to be fed with gall, and alaye his thirſt with vineger? and yet this betideth vnto them, which being alreadye in affliction, bee yet more afflicted by the reprobate. And how vnkinde a matter that is, and worthy of Gods ſpeciall reuenge, we may ſee in ỳ Pſalm wher we do reade in this wiſe: The ſpitefull taũts haue broken my hart, & I am afflicted: and I loked whether ther were any man that would be heauy with me, & ther was none, and who would cõforte me, & I foũd him not. And they gaue me gal for my meat, and quenched my thirſt with vineger, poure out thy wrath vpon thẽ, and let the furye, or rage of thy anger ouertake them: Let their dwelling become deſert, and let ther be none to dwel within their tabernacles. For the ſame whom thou haſt perſecuted, they haue stricken, and do make report or auaunt of the ſorowe and griefe of thy woundes. Therefore we muſt be wonderfull warie, that we hurt not the afflicted, and increſe their grief and heauineſſe: and we muſt waye with our ſelues, not only how vnkindly and cruell a matter it is, but alſo how euill we would take it, if the like ſhould bee vſed vnto vs, & how horrible a reuenge the Prophet doth call vpon them which vſeth the ſame.

Pſalm.69.

Afflicted not to be deſpiſed.

2 Secondly, no afflicted perſon, can be contented to be contemned, vncauſe he is wretched and miſerable. Therfore it is not conuenient, ỳ we our ſelues ſhould deſpiſe ỳ afflicted, forasmuch as wee would not bee ſo vſed our ſelues: and in caſe wee bee, wee be miſcontented withall. The ſaying of the Pſalm is knowen: As many as ſawe me, mocked mée, they whiſpered with their lippes, they ſhoke their heads. Which thing was vſed alſo vnto Chriſt hanginge vpon the Croſſe. Such contempte commeth of the euill conſtering of afflictions, in that we ſurmiſe them to be a ſpeciall argument of naughtie life, of the afflicted and miſerable folke, whom we ſee ſo ſcourged by God. And therefore we do oftentimes as much abhorre the miſerable creatures, as if they were openly accurſed, and abhominable by Gods owne mouth. And yet no man is ſo miſerable that he would be ſo take, therefore let no man iudge the like of the afflicted.

Pſalm.22.

Reioyce not of the miſeries of others.

3 Thirdly, it is no light offence neither, that we do ſe ſome reioice in the miſery of the afflicted, whereas if they were ſo vſed themſelues, they would much diſdaine at it. Wher is obiected the ſaying of Ezechiell, to the Ammonetes and to Tyre: Forasmuch (ſaith he) as you haue ſaid, wel, wel, vpon my holy place that is defiled, & vpon the land of Iſrael that is deſolate, and vpon ỳ houſe of Iuda that is ledde into captiuitie. Therfore I wil deliuer thée vnto the children of the Eaſt partes for an inheritaunce, &c. And thou ſonne of man, forasmuch as Tyrus hath reported of Hieruſalem, it is wel done that the gates of the people bee broken, &c. Therfore this ſaith the Lord God, Loe I am vpon thée O Tyre. And I will make many nations to go vp againſt thée, as the troubleſome ſtormy ſtormy ſea doth riſe, and they ſhall ſhake the walles of Tyre, &c. Therfore the wiſe man ſayth well: Hée whych reioyceth in the decaye of an other ſhall not eſcape vnpunyſhed.

Ezech.26.

Fourthly, what is the wretched and afflicted perſons deſire: Fyrſt we bée naturally enclined to deſire aide whẽ we be afflicted, to be deliuered & ſaued, like as ỳ drye & thirſty lande is deſirous of the rayne and deaw of Heauen. Therfore the afflicted muſt be relæued, as farre as euery mans habilitie wil ſtretch, to ſuccoure their neceſſities. The naked muſt be clothed, the hungry fed, the banyſhed receiued in our houſes, priſoners deliuered, the ſicke healed, &c. The ſaying of Chriſt is knowen. I was hungry, and you fed me, &c.

The afflicted be comforted.

Moreouer, where there can be no reliefe had, yet the next deſire of the afflicted folk is, that thoſe things which they doe ſuffer, may at the leaſt way mowe ſome compaſſion in the harts of them that doe ſee them. So Dauid ſayde: I loked for ſome body to be heauy wyth mæ, and I found hym not. Thys the Apoſtle doth requyre of vs, when he ſayth: Wæpe you with thẽ that do wæpe, and hée doth commende it in the faythfull Iewes, ſaying: And you had compaſſyon vpon them whych were bounde. And Iob ſayth, that he dyd ſo. I wept (ſayth he) for hym, whych was afflicted, and my ſoule had cõpaſſion with the poore. Thus much both the poore and rich be able to doe, yea the poore better than the rych, the afflycted ſomer than he which is not afflycted, but chiefly the Godly & faythful perſon, whether that he bée rych or poore. No doubt Iob was rych, when hys ſoule had compaſſion of the poore, but wythall he was Godly diſpoſed.

A queſtiõ. VVhen we ſeeeour the afflicted, we muſt not inquire vpon their life.

After thys compaſſion there foloweth comfort, which is wrought by wordes, yea and there foloweth alſo prayer vnto God for the afflicted. Now where can you finde me one which performeth thys? All compaſſion and pitie is waxed cold, becauſe charitie is become colde, wherefore brotherly comfort is exceeding rare and ſilcome, and prayer vnto GOD as rare and ſtyld alſo. When mens hartes bee hardened, what ſhould the mouth or the hand doe? And whereas there is no compaſſion what can enſue els, but that there ſhould be no comfort alſo, neither in worke nor word.

Some men will ſaye, what and if the afflycted perſon be a ſinner, or of a naughty beliefe, or ſome other ouerthwart felow, which is afflicted through hys owne fault and deſeruyng? I aunſwere. Who ſo euer is wretched and afflicted, is to be pytied for that he is afflicted. The Samarytan which is ſpoken of in the Goſpell, dyd relæue and helpe hym which was fallen into the handes of thæues, hauyng no reſpect of hys contrary religyon. In conſideration ỳ he was a man himſelfe, he had pytie of the myſerable caſe and peryll of the man. It is a good deede, and to be vſed towardes all men to ſuccour the afflicted perſon in that that he is afflycted, but in caſe that any man be troubled for the truth as a faythful creature, and our brother, hym we ought to ſuccoure aboue al others: Let vs work, ſauth faith the Apostle, that which is good towards all men, and specially towards thē of ỹ houseshold of faith. If a man be chastened for his sins, there must be mercy declared vnto him also. God is not mistontented with it, if wē haue compassion and pitye vpon them which he doth scourge. But hē doth rather require it, as we may perceiue in Esay, wher he chargeth the Moabits lovingly to intreat the Israelites, whom he had scourged. Hide them (saith he) when they doe flee, and disclose not ỹ wanderers: let them which runne awaye, dwell with thee. Therefore seing that it is a worke of true godnesse to haue pitye and mercie, vpon the afflicted, we ought not to enquire after their religion, lyfe, and occasion of the affliction, what time wē ought to succour them, but for compassion sake, to bestowe our aide and relefe vpon them, as men afflicted.

Galath.6.

Esaye.16.

How God vseth himselfe vvith the afflicted.

If god should absolutely afflict, meaning nothing els but to make vs miserable and afflicted, it were to no purpose, to aske how God vseth himselfe with ỹ afflicted. For the very miserie and affliction it self, should sufficiently declare it. But forasmuch as the meaning & purpose of God is not to make vs miserable, although ỹ he do afflicte vs, we may wel make it a question, how he doth vse himself with them whom he doth exercise or chastē wt afflictions in this life. The flesshe or fleshly man when he is afflicted, surmiseth that god hath cast him of, & forsaken him as angry with him: and that affection Christ him selfe felt vpon ỹ crosse, & cried: My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? And Dauid feling ỹ very same in his flesshe, did so often double ỹ saying: Why dost thou turne thy face from me? &, I am cast off from the presence of thy sight. And the world also hath no other opinion of God, but that he maketh no accoūt of the miserable & afflicted. Therefore it is verye necessarye for the godly person, to knowe how God doth vse him selfe with the afflicted, to the intent hee maye vnderstand, what to assure himselfe of him in his afflictions: secondly, that he may haue an exacte pattern of true godnesse to folow.

To tell you at one word: God doth deale with the afflicted, according vnto his owne nature, euen as hē is father of mercyes, and God of all comforte, pitifull, full of mercy and forgiuenesse. Shewe me such a maner of man, of whom these things may be wel reported, and ye shall easyly vnderstand, how he is affected vnto the miserable & afflicted: who is ignorant what the speciall fauoure, pitye, and mercie of God doth worke? What doth his mercy omit, or not willingly worke, which may by any meanes serue to ỹ salvation of them whom he sheweth mercy vnto.

Therfore he is present and doth visite his afflicted, euen as the phisition doth the sicke and diseased: he doth not forsake them whom he doth chasten, cleanse, exercise and try out. For how should he forsake his worke which he fashioneth, faueth and intendeth to make glorious? Therfore is that said in the Psalm: I am with him in his trouble. I will deliuer him and glorifie him: & in Esay. When thou shalt passe by waters, I wil be with thee. Vpon this belefe Dauid doth sing. If I walke in the middest of the shadows of Death, I wil not fear ỹ euils, bycause thou art with mee.

Secondely, he is present not in vaine, but as the workeman with his workemanshippe. The Goldesmith is present in trying and clensing his siluer in ỹ fier, & he is not ther as an idle persō, but he doth alwaies tēper ỹ fier, least if it be to hasty & rathe a fire, it maye sooner destroy, than clense the siluer: and he doth all other things requisite according vnto his arte, to trye and cleanse the siluer. And shall wee thinke that God is absent from his worke, whereas he is absent in no place, but filleth al thigs, or els ỹ he is idelly present, not doig these thigs which he knoweth be necessarye for his workemanshippe. God forbid. He is present also with his siluer, and then specially, when it is in the fire a clensing, he doth temper the fire of our afflictions, that it grow not to be so great, that it can not be suffered, he doth giue vs the gift of patience, that wee may bee able to beare it. He doth heare our lamentations and prayers, he doth make our waye, and bringe vs out, when it seemeth timely vnto him, and at the last he doth furbashe vs and glorifie vs.

And wheras he doth not immediately deliuer the afflicted, but sufferth some one to be longer and sower afflicted than an other, and withall doeth so conceale his presence, that he semeth to haue cast them awaye, and that he will not heare their prayers, it commeth of his fatherly disposition, and good minde intended to our salvation. The Goldesmith doth not immediately take his siluer out of the fire, as sone as it beginneth to melt, but suffereth it so long to remain in the fire, vntill that it be clensed and ready to be taken out. When the father chasteneth his sonne, he doth not let him go at his first crying, but he doth beate him as much as he beleueth shal do him good. Therfore we must leaue al this vnto the prouidence of God, and be out of doubt, that he doth al things to our profite, whether that he doth chasten vs fauourablye and lightly or ells hardly & long. And thus much for afflictions as we haue thought needfull for the present.

Of Persecutions.

Albeit that those thigs which wee haue spoke generally of afflictiōs in the place before, maye be vnderstaded of persecution also, as a kinde of affliction, yet for all that we wil speake seuerally of persecutions, bycause that this maner of affliction hath alwayes from the beginning vntyll this daye, stoutly afflicted the church of Christ, in that the vngodly and carnal men do still persecute the faithfull and godly.

What it is to Persecute.

IT is wel enough knowē what it is to persecute. They which doe folowe vpon any man for to be reuenged, so that they make no end in pursuing of him, nor leaue from that which they haue begone withall, be rightly called persecutours, although that at length they be cōpelled to leaue off, contrary to their determination and purpose, as it betydeth vnto all persecutours which are at the least constrayned whether they will or no, to breake off the race and course of their persecution.

Some doe take the worde of Persecuting or Pursuing, to be a full following or pursuyng in all poyntes, as when a hounde followeth the deere a dyne fote vp hyll and downe, through thicke and thynne, &c. Both senses be applyed vnto this word of Persecuting. The first is touched in Samuel. Saul sought or pursued for Dauid euery daye, but the Lord dyd not deliuer hym into his handes, what is it els to seeke a man euery day to slay him, but to persecute hym continually? Of the seconde we doe reade in the same Chapter, where he sayth: But in case he do hyde him in the earth, I wyll searche for hym amongst, or out of all the thousandes of Iuda. He meaneth that he will search for Dauid diligently in euery corner, and that he wil omitte nothing touching the persecution of hym. And Dauid vsed this worde properly in the Psalme, saying: I wyl persecute myne enemies, and ouertake them, I wyll not returne me, till they shrinke. I wil breake them so that they shal not be able to stād, they shall fall vnder my feete. Whē he sayeth, I will persecute myne enemies, and ouertake them, he doth expresse the purpose of them, which do persecute: which is bent to this ende, to ouertake and catch them, whom they doe persecute.

1. Samuel. 23

Psalm. 18.

And where as he doth adde: I will not returne vntil they shrinke, it declareth the earnest diligence & desire in the persecution nor folowing, and that point: I will breake them, or crushe them together, that they shall not be able to stande, they shall fall vnder my feete, expressyng the reuenge which the persecutour entendeth to take vpon him whom he doth persecute. And these be the partes of full and perfect persecution, continually without ceasing to persecute, to catche, and to reuenge.

How many sortes of persecutions there be.

THere be two maner of persecutions, one is priuate, and the other is publike. That is publike, which is by a commō decree or order set forth, either throughout all the world, either in some one kingdome or cōmon wealth, against the which be taken for the enemies either of the realme, common wealth, or church. The same king Dauid felt, whom Saul the king of the people of God, did most cruely persecute, yea, and the Prophets, Christ, the Apostles, and the true Churche hath felt the same.

It is a priuate persecution, when a priuate persone doth of a priuate hatred persecute some one man, or many whom he beareth displeasure vnto, and that without anye publike authoritie and power: for when that is ioyned withall, it is rather a publike, than a priuate persecution, as that was, when Saule receyued letters from the hyghest Priest, and persecuted the Churche, notwithstandyng that hee was a priuate person. It was a priuate persecution, when Alexander the copper Smyth dyd persecute the Apostle Paule.

1. Tim. vi.

Secondly, there is one persecution outwarde, and an other inwardlye, and within the walles or compasse of the house. We doe call the same outwarde, whyche is done by them that bee Straungers from the profession of the Christian faithe, notwithstanding they be of the same nation, people, and Realme. So Christian menne were in tymes past persecuted by their owne countreymen and nation. Thereof the Apostle speaketh, saying: For youre brethren are become followers of the Churches of God, which is in Iewry, in Christe Iesu, for asmuch as you haue also suffered the lyke by youre Countreymenne, as we haue done of the Iewes: whyche lyke as they haue slayne the Lord Iesu, and theyr owne Prophetes, so they haue persecuted vs also, and doe not seeke to please God at all. The Thessalonians which were Christened, were of the Gentiles, but Paule and the reste of the Apostles were of the Iewes: and lyke as they suffeyned persecution by theyr owne nation, so dyd the others also. But it was for Christes sake, whome both the Gentiles and the Iewes also dyd reiecte, and therefore they were Straungers and out of hys Churche, and for that purpose wee doe call that kynde of persecution outwarde. The same ceassed, when the Kingdomes of the earthe were brought to the profession of Christendome. And would to God it were vtterlye ceassed, and not chaunged into a worse.

Persecutiō outwarde, and other inwarde.

The inteskine or inwarde Persecution is that, whyche is practised by the chiefe Presidentes and Pastoures for Religion sake, agaynste the followers of one selfe same Churche. I call it inwarde, bycause it dothe disquiete and cutte a sunder the inwarde partes of the bodye of the Churche, albeit that none of both the partes maye well bee accounted amongst the true members of the Churche. That persecution whiche is of one householde, is when the father doth persecute his sonne, daughter, wyfe, man or woman, seruaunte, &c. whyche kinde of persecution wee see muche vsed now adayes for matters of religion.

Thirdly, of inwarde persecutions, some bee iuste, and some be wrongfull, accordyng vnto the diuersitie of the cases, whyche maketh the persecution eyther blameleste, eyther worthye to bee blamed. And the fathers thoughte that thys difference of the ryghte and wrongfull case, taketh place not onely in the common wealthe, but in the estate of the Churche also, that lyke as it is a wrongfull persecution, when the innocente Citizen is driuen out of hys Countrey, spoyled of all his goodes, or soughte by persecution vnto death by the Magistrate and Citizens, and that iuste when these matters bee wrought agaynste a traytoure and rebell, or in some other respecte an outragious and mischeuous person. So that persecution also should bee iuste in the Churche, when the Christian Magistrates doe persecute the Christian person, whiche is thoughte to bee enemie, scismatike, heretike, and forsaker of the Churche, and the same vniuste, when they doe persecute the true faythfull and harmelesse creature. So Augustine sayeth: If that bee the true Churche (sayeth hee) whyche suffereth persecution, not that whiche dothe it (so saythe the Donatistes) let them aske of the Apostle, what Churche Sara signified, when shee dyd persecute hyr handmayden. For hee sayeth, that the free woman oure mother the heauenlye Hierusalem, that is to saye: the true Churche of God, was figured in that woman, whyche afflicted hyr handmayde, and a little after: Agayne I demaunde, in case that the good and holye doe persecute none, but onelye suffer, whose saying suppose they that the same is in the Psalme, where wee reade: I will persecute my enimies, and ouertake them, and I will not turne tyll they shrynke? Therefore if wee will speake and acknowledge the truthe, that is a wrongfull persecution whyche the vngodlye maketh vppon the Churche of Chryste, and that persecution is iuste, which the Churche of Chryste vseth againste the vngodly. Thus sayeth Augustine.

Persecutiō inwardly some right and some wrongfull

August. epistola. 50. ad Bonifacium comitem.

Augustine.

Whether that the authoritie to persecute, bee meete or conuenient for the Church.

I knowe that some of oure brethren be of this opinion, that it is not conuenient for the Church of Christe, to persecute any manne, but that it is their parte to suffer persecution, rather than to vse the same agaynste others. And I will saye my opinion herein, without the preiudice of anye man. There be two respectes in thys kynde of persecutions, wherof we do presently speake, the one is touching hym which doth persecute, and the other concernyng hym whyche dothe sustayne the persecution. If the question bee asked, whether that bee whome the Church dothe persecute, doe ryghtelye or wrongfully suffer hys persecution, an aunswere maye bee shaped thereunto immediatelye, accordyng vnto the causes of the persecution. If it bee subiecte vnto persecution for wrong doyng, it is iuste. If it be for iuste and vpright dealing, it is wrongfull.

Heere is no doubte at all, vnlesse that peraduenture the persecutio do passe measure: But in case the question be, whether that the Churche persecuting anye man, doe the thyng whyche is conuenient to the Church of Christe. In thys paynte I suppose, we muste haue respecte not so muche to the person, whome it dothe persecute, as vnto the order and iustice of the true Churche, that is to say, what becommeth the Church to do, according vnto the spirite of Christ, rather than what the person whyche hath offended, dothe deserue. So that in case it be not vncomely for the Churche to persecute the wicked, no more than it was vnseemely for Dauid the king to persecute the enimies of gods people, bycause of his princely office, then the iudgemente of Augustine and of the other father is fast and sure. But herein maye rise matter of great controuersie, if there bee a definition made betwixt the magistrate and the Churche, whereas the swoord is gyuen vnto the Magistrate, vnto whome persecution dothe belong, and not to the Churche. In my iudgemente that persecution whereby worthy reuenge is sought, perteyneth to the Magistrate in deede, and is not conueniente for the Church of Chryste. I saye, whereby worthye reuenge is sought, for that poynte is expressly attribute vnto the office of the Magistrate. So that if the same doe not agree with the Church, howe maye that order agree wyth the Church, whiche the Bysshops doe vse now adayes, lyke lusty Lords in the Churche, theyr raging, ouerthrowyng what they lyst, and roting out, not to the ende that menne shoulde no more doe amisse, and lose the way of true saluation, but to the end that they shoulde lyue no longer, nor possibly kynde anye waye of returne vnto the true saluation.

The Churche, sayeth Augustyne in the place before alleaged, dothe persecute by louyng to reforme and to call menne backe from erroure, and to make them to prosper in the truthe. And it is lyke the persecution of a louyng mother, and not of a spitefull stepdame. Such I would haue the Churche persecution, when the rulers of the Churche shall in the name of the Churche persecute not the innocente, but the hurtefull persons more politikelye, than Churchlyke.

But whereas the false Shepeheardes, vnder pretence of hereslye and schysme, doe persecute (not the Goates whyche they doe cherishe, but the true Shæpe of Chryste, whyche doe followe the voyce of their onely Shepehearde, and doe abhorre the voyce of Straungers) with banishmente and outlawe, prison, wrongfull iudgementes, snares, swoorde, faggot, and fyer, what shall we call it elsc, but the tyrannie of Antichryste? Whereas Augustine said that is a wrongfull persecution, whiche the vngodly maketh agaynst the Churche of Christe, he myghte well haue added therevnto, and that is tenne tymes more wrongfull, whych the malignante Churche worketh againste the goodly. But in his tyme the Romishe tyrannie hadde not yet so openly sette vppe hir shameleese heade to practise all kinde of persecutions, and publike oppressions of them, that woulde dissente from them.

But some man will saye: Doest thou thus leaue the Churche no authoritie to persecute the reprobate, Heretikes, schismatikes, renagates, and disturbers of the quiet of the Church, in that thou doest blame not onelye theyr tyrannicall persecution, whyche is in deede worthye of blame, but doest also plucke from them that policye, whereby they maye prouide for the quietenesse of the Churche by dispatching and thrustyng oute the euill.

Wherevpon there can nothing else ensue, but that the Church of Christ muste lye open to be troubled with the ouerthwarte careleſſe and raſhe dealing, of all varlettes and naughtypackes.

I aunſwere, the Churche of God, hathe the ſworde, not of Iron or ſteele, but of Goddes worde, whereby hée maye cutte off and perſecute not the bodyes, but the hurtfull errours, hereſyes, and ſchiſmes, vntyll they ſhrynke and decay. If thée lyke to vſe that, as she ought to doe, shée maye haue ynough to occuppe hyr ſelfe therein, to doe good and profyte, and shée maye be able ynough to prouide for hyr owne quietneſſe, and of the conſciences of the faythfull. She hathe alſo the ſpirite of Chriſte, the ſpirite of true loue, by the hauyng of the whyche, shée is patiente, shée is kynde, shée hopeth, she ſuffereth and ſuffeyneth all thinges, and she is greédye not of bloude, but of ſaluatiõ, and ready not to deſtroy, but to ſaue.

The churche hath the ſworde of Gods worde.

But you will ſaye, What and if she chaunce vppon ſuche as be obſtinate, frowarde, and incurable heretikes, or otherwyſe naughty lyuers? I aunſwere: aſke the queſtion of Charity, what shée vſeth to do towardes ſuche. Dothe Charitie lacke hyr inwarde bowels of compaſſion, ſyghes, lamentation, and prayer, to ſolicite, call vpon his mercye, and to beſéeche hys ayde? Beſydes that, euen as the mother dothe to hyr chylde whyche is frantike, the like lette the Churche doe towardes them, whome shée perceyueth to bée incurable. The mother dothe not diſpatche and kyll hir chylde whome shée can not recouer: but she dothe moſte diligentlye prouide, that hée ſhall not ſley hymſelfe, or anye other of hyr children, ſo muche no doubte she dothe abhorre the ſlaughter of hir owne. Lette the Churche do the lyke, or at the leaſte waye ſéeke and endeauoure to doe it though she bée not able to performe it. And in my ſo ſpeakyng of the Churche, I do not tell the Magiſtrate what he hathe to doe, who beyng a Chriſtian man, wyll alwayes ſo refrayne ſuch as bée diſturbers of the Churche, and wicked lyuers, that they ſhall bée lyttle able to doe greate hurte. But the Churche muſte not onely not whette or ſharpe hys ſworde, but ought rather by hir interceſſion and trauaile, to make it duller than the worthye rigor thereof dothe requyre. Suche moderation it appeareth, the Biſhoppes ſoughte in tymes paſte, vntyll that the Cleargye beganne at length to bée corrupte through theyr ſecular power, and beganne themſelues to bée the perſecutours of the true faithfull, whiche were wonte before that tyme to mytygate and relente the worthye perſecution of the reprobate through their meanes and interceſſion.

What ſhe Churche muſte do to the obſtinate heretikes.

In the Decrées of Pope Alexander the fyrſte, the perſecutions of the holye Fathers were kepte oute of the Churche dores, and there is mention made in the Epiſtle of Nycholas the fyrſte, vnto Michaell the Emperoure, what the ende and howe curſſed the infamye of thoſe Emperoures was wonte to bée, whyche perſecuted the Churche, ſpecially of Rome. O Chriſte Sauioure, we may thanke our ſinnes for thys, that the Churche hathe now adayes fewe fathers, but many luſty Lords, prelates, maiſters and Biſhops, whiche can be ſubiect vnto no perſecution, but do perſecute, not only the lay and common ſorte, but Emperoures alſo, and that vnder the tytle of the Churche of Rome: howe can anye manne of anye inferior degrée bée ſafe from their violence, and moſte ſpitefull perſecution, from which the moſt myghty Emperoures could not be cleare, as the hiſtories do teſtifye? Vnleſſe it may ſo fall out by the ſpeciall iudgement of God, whyche hath ſo wrought in our age, that the huge power and authoritie of the Antechriſt of Rome hathe not bin able by hys continuall perſecution to oppreſſe one little poore Fryer, I meane Martine Luther, and yet were wont in tymes paſt to diſturbe and plucke downe moſte high Emperoures by theyr curſſes and excõmunications, but ſuche bée the reuolutions and turnes, not onelye of worldlye, but of Eccleſiaſticall matters alſo.

It poore Frier Luther.

What kyndes of perſecution is the ſorer.

MAnye kynde of perſecution ſemeth to bée ſore to an honeſt and quiete perſon, and therefore this parte of affliction is worthily eſteemed not the ſmalleſt. You ſhall fynde ſome afflictions, in which the afflicted may ſometyme take theyr reſt and recreation, but it chaunceth ſo verye ſeldome in perſecutions, that a manne maye but a little breath himſelfe. For lyke as the fury and rage of the perſecution ceaſſeth not, ſo the care, and trouble to flée the ſame is endleſſe, vnleſſe that a man wyll fall into the perſecutours handes, notwithſtanding the trouble is aggrauated and encreaſed by the circumſtaunces of perſecution.

Perſecuti vvithin doores.

Whatſoeuer the perſecution bée, which is abſolutely priuate, and yet within dores, it bréedeth an exceédyng and ſpeciall griefe to any heart that is not ſtonye, bycauſe of the breache of the ſpeciall loue and allyaunce whyche oughte to bée there. True godlyneſſe dothe not make menne vnkynde, to whome it is all one, whether that they ſticke ſtyll to theyr parentes, kynſfolkes, familiar friendes, or elſe whether they loſe theyr friendſhippes, and bée hated of them, vnto whome by lawe of nature they oughte to bée moſte nearеſt.

There is fulfylled in the Chriſtian manne the ſaying of Chriſte: I came to diſſeauer the ſonne againſte hys father, and the daughter againſt hyr mother, and the daughter in lawe againſte hyr mother in lawe, and a mans owne houſholde folke ſhall bée hys enimies. In déede the man dothe beare thys ſequeſtration paciently, but yet not withoute ſome ſéelyng of griefe, whyche the breach of ſo ſtraighte an aliaunce, riſen for the Kyngdome of Gods ſake, dothe bring, wherein all menne ought to agrée, though that they were at ſome variance before.

Matth.10.

Publike perſecutiõ.

But that perſecution whyche is ſo purſued vppon anye man in the publike behoofe of the whole realme, people, and common wealthe, as though he were an open enimie of the countrey, and worthy to be ridde out of the way by the publike curſſe of all menne, is muche ſoyer than the perſecution within doores. In caſe this fall vpon the manne that is not onely innocente, but alſo louing towardes his naturall countrey and people, and honeſt beſides, it maketh hys affliction the more, the more louingly and reuerently he is affected vnto his whole Countrey, than to his houſe and family: and the greater that the rebuke is whiche ryſeth of a publike perſecution, than whiche ryſeth of any priuate perſecution, and the greater the diſquiet of conſcience is whyche commeth of the one more than of the other, beſydes the banyſhmente whyche hée is compelled to abyde out of hys Countrey amongſte ſtraungers, of whyche thyng Dauid alſo lamenteth hym in manye places.

Churche perſecutiõ.

But yet when all theſe kyndes of perſecutors be compared with that of the Church, they bée muche more tolerable, than it is. For this is of all others moſt grieuous, whereby not onely the bodye is in many daungers and perils, but the hope of true ſaluation and euerlaſting life alſo is cutte off, for as much as lyeth in the perſecutions. For the Churche dothe perſecute them whome it doth perſecute, in reſpecte that they bée heretikes, ſciſmatikes, falſe Chriſtians, wicked folke, and abhominable, and curſed enimies of the Churche: and howe ſore a matter it is for a Chriſtian man to beare this rebuke in the Church of God, no man is ware but he which hath tryed it in déede. It is right matter to bée ſo taken by the reſt of all the whole worlde, whoſe Iudgemente of vs, we maye with a ſafe conſcience contemne. But howe can it bée but a moſt grieuous matter for a Chriſtian man, to ſuſteyne ſo horrible an opinion and perſecution of the Churche of Chriſte? It is no wonder, when the Hauke dothe praye vpon a doue, but if a doue ſhuld praye vppon one of the flyghte of the ſame douehouſes that hée is of, it were a ſtraunge matter to ſée, becauſe thoſe kindes of foules haue no galle or bitternelle as menne ſay, ſo that it mighte bée thoughte, that the ſame doue ſhoulde haue miſchieuous matter in it, that the reſt of the Pigeons coulde not abyde it. It is alike in thys caſe alſo. There is in none more ſymplicitie, (Bée you ſimple, ſaith Chriſte, as doues,) in none greater loue, in none greater compaſſion and alyance, and leſſe bitternelle and wrong, than is amongſt true Chriſtian menne, ſo that folke maye iudge, that there muſte bée ſome moſte grieuous cauſes, when the Chriſtians doe caſte out of theyr companye and houſe of GOD, and perſecute anye Chriſtyan manne.

In déede the innocente Chriſtian man hathe a greate comforte of the teſtimonie of hys conſcience, whereby he is aſcertayned before GOD, that he ſuffererthe ſuche perſecution as he deſerueth not, but yet withall how can he but take it moſte heauyly, that the Churche eſteemeth hym for a curſed and abiured perſon, for an heretike, a Schiſmatike, an open enemie of Gods people, and an outcaſt from Chriſte hymſelfe? For albeit that he knewe that thys iudgemente of the Churche towardes hym commeth not of the truth of the matter, but of the malice of the prelates, and erroꝛ of the ſeduced people, yet hée muſte marueilouſly lament this, that the falſe Shepeheards do kéepe the Churche, as it were, in priſon and bondage, and doe practiſe a tyrannie vppon the Lordes flocke, accordyng vnto the prophecie of the Apoſtle, whereof he warned them before in the Actes, that after hys departure there ſhoulde ryſe vppe in the Churche rauening Wolues, not ſparyng the flocke: of whome Chriſt alſo admoniſhed vs before.

Actes 20.

Matth. 7.

It is alſo a greate griefe, that ſuche rauening Wolues doe boaſte themſelues of the ſaying of Chriſte, He that heareth you, heareth me. And that they doe ſcornefully aſke: Is it you Sir alone that dothe not erre: maye the whole Churche erre: Lette poure curates goe, Is it nothyng trowe you to diſſente from the Churche? And that ſaying of Chriſt: If a man heare not the Churche, let hym be as an Ethnike, and publican vnto thée? And manye other ſuche lyke thynges, whereby as by certayne ſleyghtes and engines, the mynde of the Chriſtian manne is aſſaulted, that he hadde néede to be armed with a verye ſtrong conſtancie, to abyde all theſe aſſayes and aſſaults with a ſtedfaſte and vnmoueable minde. Wherefore, I ſuppoſe that it appeareth manifeſtlye, waying all theſe, that it is moſte true whyche I ſaye, that the churche perſecution is moſt grieuous to hym that is a true Chriſtian man in déede.

What kinde of men be ſubiect vnto the perſecutions of the Church.

OUr queſtion is not, who they be which be worthy to be perſecuted of the Churche. For albeit that we thynke it conuenient, that the Churche ſhoulde vſe the ſcourge of perſecution agaynſte ſome, yet notwithſtandyng to ſpeake reſolutely, they bée not the true Chriſtian men whiche doe deſerue it, but the reprobate. But if the queſtion runne, who they be vpon whome this perſecution is wonte to fall, if we cõſider both our owne times, and of the worldes paſt, we can not aunſwere that they be the reprobate. For they do altogyther rule and raigne in the Churche, ſo farre they be off from being ſubiecte vnto perſecutions. Yea it is they which haue the order of the perſecution in theyr owne hands, and be not onely the authors or cauſes, but the moderators alſo thereof. Therefore lette vs heare the opinion of the Apoſtle in this matter, whiche dothe in fewe wordes aunſwere this queſtion, ſaying: But lyke as he which at that tyme borne accordyng vnto the fleſhe, did perſecute him whyche was accordyng vnto the ſpirite, euen ſo it is alſo now. Ergo the carnal, and fleſhly folke whiche be Lordes in the Churche, doe perſecute the elect and true Chriſtian perſons. Secõdly, this is no newe matter, but very olde, not only for the times paſt before, but in the new Teſtament alſo. As it was then (ſaith he) ſo it fareth nowe alſo, the carnal doth perſecute the ſpirituall. He which was borne accordyng

Galath. 4.

The ſ
tual be ieſt to ſecutio

vnto the flesh, he meaneth of Ismaell, the carnall sonne of Abraham, whome he gate of Agar his handemayden without the promise, hée persecuted hym (sayeth he) whyche was accordyng vnto the spirite, hée meaneth Isaac, and hée was borne also of the flesh of Abraham, but accordyng vnto the promise and spirite of election, of Sara the frée woman.

In these two persons he did sette forth the figures of them to be considered, whiche be in the Churche of God, some counterfayte, and some true faithfull: and of howe sundrye, yea contrarye disposition they bée one to an other, so that the one sorte dothe procure persecution, and the other suffer and abide it. Ye dothe attribute the violence and wickednesse of persecution vnto carnall men, and the sufferaunce vnto the spirituall. Loke mée nowe, and compare bothe the partes togither, the one that doth suffer and sufferyne persecution, and the other whiche dothe lay it on, and tell me whyche be carnall and which spirituall. Is not hée carnall and fleshlye, in whome the workes of the flesh doe raigne, and he spirituall whych dothe vtter the fruites of the spirite: Of which both sée to the Galathians. The trée is knowen (sayth Chrysse) by hir fruites, wilte thou knowe who be the persecutors of the spirituall? They whyche bée borne accordyng to the flesh, and be voyde of the spirite of election and promise, they bée persecutors of the faithfull in the Churche. Wilte thou knowe who bée subiecte vnto the persecutions of the carnall and fleshly folke? They whiche be borne of God, accordyng vnto the spirite of election and promise, they do suffer the persecutions layde vppon them by the carnall. Wilte thou knowe whyche bée carnall in the Church? and whyche spirituall? Knowe and diskinde the trées by theyr fruites. The workes of the flesh be manifest. They be not harde to be knowen, which be they. The Apostle sayth, they be adulterie, whoredome, vncleannesse, wantonnesse, seruice of Images, witchcraft, enmitie, debate, emulation, anger, strife, seditiõs, heresies, enuies, murthers, dronkennesse, and banketings, and suche other lyke. And loke in whome these thyngs be vsed not for once or twyce, but where they haue the vpper hand and rule, them take to be carnall. On the other side, the fruites of the spirite be not hydden, but are manifest also, as loue, ioye, peace, softnesse, gentlenesse, goodnesse, faithe, mékenesse, temperaunce, &c. For whereas these fruites growe, you maye bée assured, that they be spirituall.

Compare these fruites of the spirite, wyth the fruites of the flesh, and so vnderstande by them bothe, whyche of bothe theyr dispositions bée the more enclined to persecute theyr bréethren, and whyche of them is leaste giuen to persecution, bée not adulterers, whoremongers, the vncleane and wanton, the worshippers of Images, Sorcerers, enemies, wranglers, spitefull, angrye, contentious, seditious, heretikes, enuious, fyghters, dronkerds, and gluttons, more enclyned to make persecution, than to suffer it? Bée not suche as doe loue theyr bréethren, peacemakers, soft, gentle, good, faythfull, méeke, temperate, &c. more enclined inclined to suffer, than to séeke or make persecution? Which parte is the more disposed to hurt than to be hurted, and which of them is it, that dothe sooner take, than doe harme? The very diuersitie of mens disposition doth sufficiently declare, not only whiche of them be persecuters of theyr bréethren in the Churche, and whiche be subiect vnto the persecutions, but also how ỹ one parte can not suffer any persecutiõs, nor the other pursue them. Wherefore Augustine might much better haue had sette forth the figures of them that doe persecute, and abyde persecution, as the Apostle did in Ismaell and Isaac: than in Sara and Agar. But he applied himself vnto the matter which he had in hande.

VVho be carnal, and vvho spirituall.

Galath 5.

Let this serue the elect, whereby to knowe whiche they be, by whome they be most grieuously persecuted because of the truth of Gods worde. They be the chyldren of the handmayden, and not of the frée woman, borne of the flesh, and not of promise, though they boaste themselues neuer so muche of the auncientie of theyr religion, and lie most shamefully with open mouthe of the Apostolike and Catholike Churche. It is no newe matter that the children of the flesh doe chalenge to them the titles of the Apostles and of the Churche, and doe vnder the pretence of them, practise theyr tyrannye vpon the chyldren of promise. But the end of theyr Tragedie wil be theyr most miserable destruction.

Of Patience.

THe vertue of Patience is so commendable and profitable, yea and also necessarie, that I can not chose, but enlarge and adorne these our Places also with the same. And woulde to God I could as easily place it in my harte, and whole lyfe, as I can giue it a corner in thys booke. Tertullian had good reason in the beginnyng of his booke which he wrote of Patiẽce, to thynke that it is conuenient for them that doe prayse Patience, to procéede therevnto, not onely in wordes, but by the authoritie also of their owne conuersation. To talke of vertue it is the leaste matter, but to vse vertue, that is the worke of as strong a man as Sampson. But what shall I doe? Shall I speake no more of the vertue of Patience, than I am able my selfe to performe? If that wryters shall be restrayned to this lawe, then no doubte the Preachers & teachers oughte specially to be so. And assuredly it were a gay & a godly matter, if our harte and pen, our mouth and lyfe did agrée all in one, so that we should write & speak, conceyue in our harte and performe in worke all one thyng. But thys lawe woulde exceedingly restrayne the profite and cõmoditie of bookes and sermons, if it were not lawfull for vs to sette forth in our bookes or preachyngs, any thing else than that whiche wée doe worke in our lyfe, euery man accordyng vnto the measure and gifte of God, no more say, thã the measure of our workes doth expresse.

Tertullia

Therfore we wil cõmend Patiẽce as it is of it selfe cõmendable, & commended by the testimonies of the holy scriptures, not as it is performed by vs, doyng therein as sicke folke do, which though they lacke ỹ helth of their body, yet for all that they doe often & greatly praise and cõmend it: whiche similitude Tertullian vsed also, to incourage himselfe to pursue the purpose whiche he had taken in hand. And we wil note somewhat of patience, which may profit not only others, but my self also. For when I do write of those things whiche doe concerne our saluation, I do aswell instruct my selfe, as others.

What Patience is.

That which the Latine interpreters of the holy scriptures haue translated Patience, is in the Ebrew as much to say, as far from anger: as we may perceiue in the Prouerbs and in Ecclesiastes. And in Iob it is called Expectation, or abidyng. In Greeke it is called ὑπομονή whiche signifieth sufferaunce and patience. Cicero in his booke De inuentione, maketh a difference betwirt perseuerance & patience: & defineth perseuerance to be a stedfast and continuall abidyng in a matter well considered and wayed, and patience to be a willyng & long sufferaunce of harde and painefull things, for honestyes sake, and profite. So that perseuerance is the generall vertue, whereby wee doe constantly abyde and proceede in all that, which wee haue begon vpon some good reason: and that patience is a kynde of perseuerance, when we doe willingly and constantly suffer things that be harde, painefull, sorowfull, & to our losse. I doe not mislike this definition of Cicero. For euery sufferyng of al aduersitie ought not straightway to be called patience: For there is no meane in the worlde, but that suffereth many thyngs, which he would not doe, if he could any wise withstand it: and yet wee doe not call them al patient, like as wee doe not call them impatient neyther, whiche do suffer no aduersitie, but doe sustayne it with an euill will, and discontented minde. Therefore like as vnto patiẽce there is requisite a willing sufferaunce, so it is impatiencie when we do vnwillingly, striuing & with anger suffer that whiche we do suffer. And he did vpõ good consideration put in the definition of patience not onely the willyng, but the long sufferance also of euils. For the vertue of patience cõsisteth not onely in this, if the sufferance be willyng, but there is requisite also a cõstancie in suffering. You shal find many that be willing to suffer for a while, but they be sone gon, and become impatient, vnto them cã not be attribute true patiẽce, which is of that sorte, that it must be bothe willyng and continuall. Lyke as the fayth of them which doe beleeue for a time, and do shrinke away at tyme of temptation, is no true fayth: nor their loue true, which do loue to day and hate to morow: So it is no true patience neyther, if thou be pacient for a season, and with in a whyle after, do change thy patience into impatiency.

Prouerb.14. v. 29. Eccle.7. Iob.4. Pertinacia. Patience.

Vpon patience is requisite a willing & long sufferance of aduersities.

patiencie. The truth of vertues can not stande without constancie.

Whiche be the partes of Pacience.

Now if a man make a collection of the Ebrew, Greeke, & Latine wordes, he shal finde al the partes of patience wherein it is wholly comprysed. For the Ebrewes do cal him whom wee doe call patient, meaning that the first parte of patience is to be voyde and farre from anger, and not easie to bee moued. For it is not possible, that he shoulde vndertake & keepe patience, whosoeuer is of hys disposition, prone & gyuen to anger. Secondly whereas they do vse this worde, תקוה whiche is asmuch to say, as expectatiõ: for patience, it signifieth, that without the expectation or lokyng for of better to come, patience cã haue no place in our harts. The nature of the impatient, is to hasten and run on, and of the patient to abyde & to loke for a better tyme. It was a point of expectation, and of great patience, that Dauid, whereas he might haue slayne his enimie Saul, he would in no case do it, saying: The Lord liueth: for vnlesse that the Lorde strike him, or that his day come to dye, or that he perishe goyng to battell, the Lorde haue mercy vpon me, that I laye not my hande vpon the Lordes anoynted. If hee had made haste through impatiency, to deliuer himselfe from so greate daungers, he woulde haue layed hys handes vpon him immediatly. This expectation is praised vnto vs in many places of the holy Scripture, wherby they which were in trouble did loke for the hand of the Lord the deliuerer & sauiour, as the Prophete sayeth: Loke for the Lord, and deale manfully. Loke for the Lorde, and kéepe his way. And, I loked for him which saued me. And in Esay. They shal not be confounded which do line in expectation. And in Abacuk. If he make any tarrying, looke for him.

The first parte of patience not to be turbulent.

The second expectation.

Psalm.27. Psalm.37. Psalm.55. Esay.49. Abacuk.

3 Thirdly, whereas the Greekes do cal patience, ὑπομονὴ ỹ is to say, abidyng, it doth wel declare that this is also one peece of patience, that wee must cõstantly abide in the troubles, and in the rightuousnesse, for whiche we be afflicted. For vnlesse that wee do so, all the sufferaunce of the euils is in vaine. For we do not ouercome by suffering, but by abyding by that whiche is right, and in not sufferyng our selues to be wrong from it, to the contrary, by any troubles.

4 Fourthly, where the Latine men called this vertue Patiẽce, it is for this reason. For that without the vertue and constancie to suffer and sustayne al aduersitie, it is not possible, that any man can be able to bee voyde from the disposition vnto anger, and to loke for the hande of the Lorde, and to abyde in that which is right. For by the tendernesse of impatience it falleth out, that we be ouerthrowen, though wee bee but sleightly assaulted, & driuen from the purpose of rightuousnesse and truth. So that the partes of patience be, the calmenesse whiche is not stirred to anger, the lokyng for Gods ayde, the abidyng in that whiche is right, true, and good, and the vertue to suffer and sustayne all aduersities, by these parts patience is made vp perfect, and there can not one of them be misse without the hinderaunce of the whole.

The four the vertu of Suffering.

Hovve many sortes of Patiences there be.

Pacience of God & the pacience of mã, diuers.

FIrste there is the Patience of God, and the patience of men: for so we thinke it méete to deuide it at the firste, bycause that God is patient after one sorte, and manne after an other sorte. If you liste to enforce the worde Patience, whiche is deriued from passion, there can be none such in God, vpon whom there falleth no kinde of passion. For he is not passionatiue, and yet notwithstãdyng the Scripture doth attribute patience vnto him, whereas it dothe call hym fauourable, patient, & mercyfull, in the Psalmes and to the Romaynes, where the Apostle sayth: Doe you despise the richnesse of hys goodnesse, and patience? And Peter sayth, When they loked for (sayth he) the patience of God in the dayes of Noe. &c. But who is able, (as Augustine sayth,) to expresse by wordes, what, and how great the patience of God is? Who we say, hath no passion, and yet is not impatient, but of all moste patient. Therefore his patience is vnspeakeable, not vtterly none at all, as his zeale, his anger, and such other like. And yet if wee cõsider these matters, like our own, they be not in him. For we doe not feele any of these thyngs without discontentation or vnquietnesse. But God forbid, that we shoulde surmise it to be any trouble or vnquietnesse, when we say, that the impassible nature of God is patiente. For like as he is zelous without any rancor, angry without any vnquietnesse, mercyfull without any sorrowe, repentyng without any remorse of euill doyng, so he is patient also, without any passion. This sayth Augustine. Yet notwithstandyng, it is our parte to consider, in what respect patience is attribute vnto God. In case we do consider the partes of patiẽce, whiche we recited in the article before, it is an easie matter to sée, in what respect the Scripture doth cal God patient. The first is to be farre from anger, this poynt is specially attribute vnto GOD. For he is in déede voyde of anger. The second is expectation, or lokyng for, and that is no straunge matter to God, I loked for them (saith he) to bryng forth grapes, and they brought forth brãbles. The third, is in greke ὑπομονή, whiche is the abidyng out of all, and that is more in God, than in manne. The fourth part is diuided from the Latine and called Patience, of passion, and this is not attribute vnto God in this respecte as parte of the vertue, whiche we do commonly call patience. But God is called patient by the Latinistes, not for any passiõ: but for ỹ thrée first parts of patiẽce.

Rom. 2.

1. Pet. 3.

Augustine.

In what respect patience is attribute vnto God. Esay.

So Tertullian toke it when hée sayde, that God himselfe is the example of patience, in that that he dothe cause the flower of this light equally vpon the iuste and vniuste, and sufferreth the seasons of the times, the seruices of the element, and the vse of al creatures to be applied as well to the vnworthy, as to the worthy: sufferyng moste vnthankefull people, when they doe worshyp and serue the mockery of theyr owne harte, and the workes of theyr owne handes, and persecutyng his name and familie, sufferyng the wantonnesse, couetousnesse, wickednesse, and naughtinesse, which dayly encreaseth, so that it might séeme that his own patiẽce doth hinder him. And in this saying what he calleth patiẽce, it appeareth by that whiche he addeth for a reason, saying: For there be many whiche do for this cause not beleue in the Lorde, for that they knowe not that it is so long ere he be angry with the worlde. So that he calleth it patiẽce, not to be angry so long time with so wicked a worlde, whiche is nothyng else, but to be farre from anger. And whereas we sayde at the ende of the article before, ỹ patience is so made vp by the foure partes, which we rehearsed, that there can be none of them missed without the hinderance of the rest, it is to be referred not to the patience of God, but to the patience of men. For the fourth parte of it, is not of strength, but of weaknesse, so that it can not take place in God, but in man, as subiect vnto all kindes of passions. And yet notwithstandyng it followeth not hereupon, that the patience of mã is perfecter, than the patience of God: for it is no derogation nor diminishment of vertue, but an aduauncement thereof, when it can admit no infirmitie or weaknesse.

Hovv Tertullian ... leth God ... pacient.

But though that the patience of man doe in one poynt passe the patience of God, touchyng numbre, yet for all that it is much inferiour: first in that, that it may receyue troubles and passions. Secondly, in that, that it can not reache vnto the perfection of Gods patience in the other thrée partes nother, yet notwithstandyng it is not done without the speciall purpose of God, that our weakenesse is so employed to the practise of most goodly vertues (suche as patience is) that euen the very same which hath in vs a weakenesse and corruption of nature, and therefore not agreable vnto God, doth serue to our commoditie and profite.

Hovv many sortes there be of the Patience of man.

NOw that we haue deuided the patience of God, from the patience of man, we must sée, how many sortes there be of the patience of men. And we call that of men, not the same onely whiche commeth of man alone, but whiche is performed eyther by the grace, and vertue of God, or by man. And the same appeareth to be of two sortes, one false and the other true, the false or counterfayte is that, whiche is vppon no iuste cause, nor is directed to any iuste ende, suche as the Pacience is of naughty and carnall men, which doe sustayne moste sore trauayles and paynes, for earthly, and sometimes vayne things, which they fancie and desire. As some one to scratch togyther a littell wealth: an other for vayne glory: an other to satisfie his luste: an other to be reuenged of him whiche he hateth. What stormes, shoures, sunne burnyngs, perils and turmoyles of the Seas, what tempestes, trauayles, and daungers of warres, what stryppes, and woundes are not men contented to sustayne, for such matters, beyng for the most parte also hurtfull, the abyding and bearyng of all whiche things bothe

The patience of m is some tru and some counterfait

Pacience of God & the pacience of mã, diuers.

In what respect patience is attribute vnto God. Esay.

Hovv Tertullian ... leth God ... pacient.

Catiline an example of counterfayte patience.

stand vpō the strength of the desires.

Augustine doth alleage Catiline for an example, who seking the destruction of his countrie, did sustayne by an incredible patience, hunger, thirste, colde, watchyng, &c. to compasse hys intent and purpose: he declareth also what paynes thieues do take, to practise theyr robberies, and howe that some of them doe try one an other by moste sharpe tortures, makyng suche proofe of theyr Patience, to the entent they may robbe with the more safetie, least if any of them should not be wel able to abide torture, he might bewray his felows when he is put to the racke or other torture. And therfore serued the scurgyng of the Lacedemonians, when their boyes were whipped for a whole day in the Temple of Diana, which they did endure out somtimes pleasantly vntill death, striuing euery one for the victorie, whiche he caried away that could longest & strongliest abyde the stripes. Thus they tried the patience of their bodies.

Lacedemonians scorging.

Such scurgyngs some doe shew and bragge of in the Poperie, whereof I haue spoken before. Suche was the Patiēce also of ỹ prophets of Baal, whiche vsed of custome to cut and mangle themselues with knyues and launces, at the very seruice of Baal, vntill that they ranne all ouer of bloud. Thus and such Patience wee do call counterfayte, for that nother it is iuste, nor commendable to any profitable and necessarie ende.

Patience of the prophets Baal.

True Patience is that, which cōmeth vpon a iuste cause, and to an honest, profitable and necessarie end. For so it appeareth whiche is true patience, that ought not to be measured by the passion, but by the occasion of the passion: and there be two sortes of suche patience, one of the minde, and the other of the body: like as there be two sortes of afflictions, one which troubleth the mind only, the other which vexeth bothe body & minde, wherof we haue spokē before in the place of afflictions. The sorowes & heauinesses which chaūceth to the minde, doe proue the patience therof, how willingly, how lōg, how lowly & humbly it doth suffer them, that is to say, how voyde it is from all hautinesse, liking of himself, from loue of strife and glory, from inclination vnto anger and reuenge, & other disordered affectiōs of the flesh. For if he be subiect vnto them, he can not abide sorow and aduersitie. The afflictions, plagues, tormēts, labors, paines, diseases, fastings, watchings, yrons, imprysonments, death, &c. whiche bee layde vpon the body, doe trie the patience of the body and minde both. Whiche the delicate and tender body is very vnmeete to abide or suffer. Wee doe not loke to haue such stoutnesse of body, as is in some great lubberly souldiers, to true patience, as though that it could not be in a weake, and a womans body, but wee doe say, that delicate, and tender bodyes vsed to pleasures, bee very vnfit therevnto. But in case that the minde be constant, and cōfirmed vnto patience, there is nothing to lette, but that it may patiently beare strōg paynes and griefes in a weake body, albeit that the weakenesse of the body doe not cōtenuayle the passions whiche be charged vppon the same. The examples bee knowen of Christian women & Virgins, which constantly abode most grieuous torments in theyr bodies, for the fayth of Christ. We reade of a virgin called Potamiana, whiche suffered the shedding of hote fierie pitche poured vpon all the members of hyr body, softely by little and little, from the toppe of the head vnto the very soale of the foote: and so did moste patiently abyde a most slow & painefull death. Wee doe reade of other virgins whiche were to the open shame set forth naked, shorne, and cut in peeceмeale, & cast vnto hoggs. The Virgins which the Arrians cōmitted to the fire, bicause they would not imbrace theyr fayth, yelded not a whitte to the sharpe & cruell paine. By suche examples it doth well appeare, how that the minde which is confirmed with patience, bothe constantly endure out, not onely those things whiche be spirituall, but those griefes also whiche doe betide to the body, though it be neuer so weake. Tertullian sayth in this wise: Let vs offer vp the patience of our spirite, let vs offer the patience of our flesh also, whiche do beleue in the resurrection of our flesche and spirite. And it is not for naught that he toucheth two sortes of patiences, of the spirite, and of the flesche. No doubte wee must vse both, that we may be exercised, tried and confirmed not only in our flesh, but in our spirite also, to the hope of things to come.

The difference of the body is not required in patience.

Place of holy Scripture, by vvhich patience is commended vnto vs.

MOst for their helpe whiche be smally exercised in holy Scriptures, I will not sticke to recite some places, wherin true patience is sette forth vnto vs, either by way of commendation, or by aduice & counsell.

Rom. 5. 15.

1 First by commendation, as to the Romaines: Knowing that affliction worketh patience, patience, tryal or proofe, and that proofe worketh hope: and, What soeuer things be forewritten, they be forewritten to our doctrine, that we may haue hope through patience and cōfort of scriptures. And to the Galathians. The fruite of ỹ spirite is loue, ioy, peace, patience, &c. And to the Thessalonians. In so muche that we our selues do glory of you in the Churches of God, for your patience & fayth in all your persecutions and afflictions whiche you doe sustayne. &c. And Christ himselfe cōmendyng patience vnto vs, sayth: And that seede which fell vpon the good lāde, be they which hearing the worde with a good & honest heart, do keepe it, & bring forth fruyte through patience. Agayne: Through your patience (sayeth hee) you shall possesse your soules.

Gal. 5.

2. Thessal.

Luk. 8.

Luk. 21.

2 Secondly, by aduice & counsel: as to the Corinthians. Let vs yeld our selues (sayth Paule) in all things, as the ministers of God, in much patience, in troubles, in necessities, in straightes and daungers, &c. And to the Ephesians: I beseche you therefore, which am in bandes for ỹ Lord, that you walke worthily for the vocatiō whervnto you be called, with al mildnesse & humblenesse, with patience, bearing one with an other in charitie, &c. Put therfore you on (sayth he) as the holy & well beloued chosen of God the bowels of mercy, gentlenesse, humblenesse, sobernesse,

2. Cor. 6.

Ephes. 4.

Colloss. 3.

patience,

patience, bearyng one with an other, and forgiuyng among your selues, in case any one of you haue any quarell agaynst an other: and like as the Lorde pardoned you, so doe you also. Agayne: Folow rightuousnelle, godly lyfe, fayth, charitie, patience and humblenelle, &c. And, Rebuke them (sayth he) with all patience, And to Titus: Aduise the olde men to bée sober, shamefast, wise, sound in faith, in loue, in patience. And to the Ebrewes: Patience is necessary for you, that in doyng the will of God, you may carie away the promisse. And Peter sayth also: But vnto this ende apply al your endeauor, and declare your fayth in your vertue, & in your vertue knowledge, and in your knowledge temperãce, in your tẽperãce patiẽce: agayne, patiẽce in your godly life, in your godly life brotherly loue, in your brotherly loue, a generall loue, &c. Thus we do reade of Patience in the newe Testament. And there be many places also of the olde Testament, wherein the great vertue of Patience is much commẽded, specially in the Psalmes of Dauid, and Prouerbes of Salomon: All which be to this purpose sette forth, that we should be moued to the studie of patience, at the least way by the authoritie of Gods worde, that beyng exercised and tried thereby, we may constantly perseuere & continue in the course of godly lyfe, throughout all kinde of aduersities, & after our long cõtinuance, be saued.

1. Tim. 6.

2. Timoth. 4.

Tit. 2.

Ebr. 6.

2. Petri. 1.

The church is furnished with godly examples of patiẽce.

Examples of Patience.

LIke as the skie aboue is wonderfully decked and garnished with the brightnelle of the Sunne and Moone, and multitude of Starres, so the Churche hath bene furnished alwayes from the beginnyng, with moste manifest examples of fayth & patience, wherin the elect haue farre excelled all other folke in all ages, so that in case that there were no lessons, precepts, nor aduices of Scriptures to informe vs by, yet wée might take lighte inough hereof by the examples of them that are already paste, whiche the Prouidence of God hath layde before our eyes to folowe. And therefore we will call to remembraunce some of them, in whiche the godly person may as it were in a glasse, consider the patiẽce of the holy Saincts, & appoynt himselfe to folow the same.

And the first of all, and farre passing al others in the example of patience, is in God himselfe, as Tertulliã thought, and not without reason. For lyke as Christe sayde, be you mercyfull, lyke as your father is also mercyfull, so we may say aright, Be patient, lyke as your heauenly father is also patient: and how God is patient, wée haue in fewe wordes declared before. Tertullian bothe ascribe it vnto the patience of God, that he doth bryng forth his sunne vpon the good and the euill, that hée suffereth the course of the seasons & tymes, the seruices of the elements, the increase of all things that are bredde, to serue the turnes of the vnworthy as well as of the worthie, bearyng with the wicked and vnworthie, whereas he might of hys iuste iudgement destroy them all at once.

God.

The nexte example of Gods Patience is shewed vnto vs in Christe our Sauiour, whose whole lyfe doth represent a wonderfull patience in all poynts, and therevnto we ought all to frame our selues as many as do glory of his name, and are iudged to be Christians vpon his fayth and religion. So Peter meaneth, where he sayth: If you do abide & continue patiently in well doyng, that is the grace & fauour with God, for therevnto you be called, for asmuche as Christ also hath suffered for vs, leauing to you an example to folow his fotesteps, who cõmitted no sin, nor there was no guyle founde in his mouth, who spake not euil when hée was euill spoken vnto, he threatened not when he suffered, but yelded the reuenge vnto him whiche iudgeth iustly, &c. This example of Christes patience, bothe peculiarly concerne thẽ, which be afflicted for righteousnelle & vprightnelle, & not for euil doyng. Therefore he sayd before, This is a grace or fauour, if a man suffer griefe for Gods sake, vniustly. For what grace or thanks worthy is it, if you suffer stripes hauing offended: And for this cause he reporteth of Christ, that he had not offended, nor that there was any guyle foũd in his mouth: so that we should folow hys example, not only in suffering, but in vpright liuyng also, and in patiently abyding the afflictions layde vpõ vs, for our vprightnelle. And thus we be prouoked vnto true patience by both the exãples of our heauenly Father, and of Christ also his onely begottẽ sonne, by the folowyng of whom we may declare our selues to bée the children of God.

Christe.

Christi.

Secondly, we muste consider also the patience of some holy menne, to learne therby, how men may be able to folow the bryghte shinyng vertue in God, according to the proportion of his heauenly grace. Suche a one we finde ỳ Noe was, who liuyng in the middes of the malice of the moste corrupt worlde, beyng armed with the vertue of Patience, continued til the ende in the trade of godly life and innocencie, and proceeded still in the worke and making of the Arke, wel neare a hundred yéres, notwithstãding that he was mocked to scorne for it, and ouerthwarted of the wicked. Loke in Genesis: And this was also a great proofe of his patiẽce, that whereas he had liued a whole yeare with his children in the Arke amongst all kyndes of beastes, after that the water was ceased, and the lande restored vnto the olde commoditie and vse thereof, yet for all that he did not impatiently departe from thence vpon his wil, but did patiently abide vntill he should be called frõ thence by the commaundement of God, lyke as he had entred into the Arke at his commaundement.

Noe.

Gen. 6.

If we cõsider the history of Abraham, shal we not finde it full of moste goodly examples of patience? What soeuer we do reade that he did vpon the fayth and obedience of God, the same was wrought and lightned, as Tertullian sayth, by this vertue of patience. Vnlesse that he could haue had patiently forsaken the lande where he was borne, his kinred and fathers house, and vndertaken to wander like a straunger in an vnknowen countrie, he could not haue had obeyed the will of God. It was through patience that he cõtinued to dwell vnder tentes in the Promised lande, like as in a straunge countrie, and patiently abode the accomplishment whiche was to come of the promyses: and so departed out of this lyfe, that he did see and perceyue lōg before the promisses which were not yet receyued, and knew himselfe to be but a straunger or pilgrim vpō the earth. He did patiently circūcide the fleshy of his foreskinne, and of his sonnes, as he was cōmaunded to do, when he was within one of a hundred yeares olde: when he hearde it to be Gods cōmaundement that he should turne his sonne Ismaell out of his doores, as Sara would haue it, he did patiently obey, albeit it seemed very hard vnto him at ỹ first. Who cā sufficiētly expresse, with what patiēce he vsed the matter, when he was commaūded to offer vp his sonne Isaac?

Abraham.

Isaac.

And did not Isaac declare a singular Patience, in that he did patiently yéeld and suffer the frowarde & stubborne stoppyng vp of his water pits, as wee may see in Genesis: and also that he did nothing vpon impatiēcy agaynst his sonne Jacob, when he was so deceyued by him, that whereas he thought to blesse hys eldest sonne Esau, whome he loued, he bestowed his blessyng vpon Jacob?

Gen. 25.

Jacob.

And Jacob declared himself to be patient also in that, that he was so obedient vnto his parentes, that hée was contented to forsake them, and to trauayle lyke a straūger into Mesopotamia: yea & besides that, that he did so oftentimes patiently suffer the wrongfull dealyng of his vncle Laban: and that he did so humble himself to appease the displeasure of his brother: yea and that he did so patiently digest, and yet not without great grieke, ỹ cruelti of his sonnes which they had shewed first agaynst the Sychimites, and secōdly against his most déere sonne Joseph.

Ioseph.

And the Scripture doth set forth the like spirite of patience also in Joseph, in that he did not onely not reuenge the malice of his brethern beyng well able, but also he did excéedyng much good for them: neither did he not disclose the wickednesse of his mystresse, although that hée were clapte into prysō for hyr, but he did constantly conceale it, and patiently abode the helpe of God.

Moses.

What shall I say of Moses? who is able to vtter how great paynes he toke, strengthned by the vertue of Patience, in the deliuering, leadyng out, and gouerning of the Israelites, a most stubborne people: what misliking and contrarying he susteyned of suche, as murmured and rebelled agaynst him, yea and of his owne brother & sister? so that it is not spoken for naught, in Numeri, that hée was a man most afflicted (or as some men do translate) moste meeke of all that euer liued.

Numeri.

Prophets Apostles & Martyres.

After Moses there commeth king Dauid, a notable example of patiēce, in that that he did by the vertue of patiēce, ouercome the rages of king Saul, that is to say, moste sore and continuall persecution. Secondly in that also that when Semei rayled vpon him, he would not haue any reuenge done for the same.

Dauid.

Holy.

2. Sam. 16.

Who can wonder inough at the excéeding Patience of Job, for which he is commonly called the Patient man: whē he was hurled downe frō the highest degrée of earthly felicitie,

Iob.

vnto

vnto the very bottome of misery, he nother did, nor spake any otherwise, than became a godly & patient man: he tare & rented his clothes, he shore his head, he fel to the ground & prayed, saying: I came naked from my mothers wombe: I shal returne thither againe naked. The Lord gaue it, the Lord hath taken it away, as it pleased the Lorde, so it is wrought, The name of ỹ Lord be blessed. And whē he was stroken with most poysoned blaynes & sores, from the sole of his foote to the crowne of his head, & sate vpon the dunghil wiping of the matter with a shel, and that his wife sayd vnto him: Standest thou yet still in thy simplicitie, or slimes? Blesse god, and die: he did not for all that speake any one worde of impaciencie, but sayd: Thou hast spoken like a foolish woman: If wē haue receyued good things at the Lordes hande, why should we not suffer the euill?

And Christ himselfe doth cōmend the patience of the prophets, in that that he sayth, they susteyned slaunders and rebukes, and persecution. And the Apostle to the Thessalonians: They haue slayne (sayth he) the Lorde Jesus and the Prophets. And after the Prophets and Christ, there foloweth the patience of the Apostles and Martires. To be shorte, all the holy Saintes haue wrestled in this fielde of patience, of which some haue susteyned scornes and scrypes, setters and imprisonment, and some haue bene stoned, sawen and put to the death of the swoorde: some haue gone about in beastes & goate skins, needy, vexed, and afflicted, whiche the worlde was not worthy to enioy, wandering in wildernesses, in mountaynes, in dennes and caues, &c.

Therefore, what must we doe else in these latter tymes, setting before our eyes all this company of patient holy men, but caste off the burden of sinne, which we be cumbred withall, and by patience rūne vnto the game and rewarde whiche is sette vp vnto vs, and in spyte of hell gates, doe the wil of God, and endeuour our selues wholy to the felicitie that is promised vs? This many men haue done, and yet doe in our age, whome Antichrist maye a greate deale better for his persecution, condemnation, and deathe put into the Kalendar of Saincts, than some of those whiche he doth charge the Churche of God to worship, by takyng them vp out of the earth, and canonising them as Saincts.

Hovv farre forth Patience ought to be kept.

There is a questiō, whether that patience ought to bée kepte alwayes in all cuils and aduersities which doe betide vnto men, and it is not without reason that the questiō is asked. For lyke as our flesshe is of it selfe frowarde and croked, so it falleth out oftentimes, that we be patient when we ought to withstande euill: and contrarywise that we doe withstande, when we should not doe so, but patiently suffer, whatsoeuer betideth vnto vs.

To this question I thinke it good to make answere by a distinction, and so doe some of the Schoolemen: but I can not like their distinction, for they doe make the difference in ỹ sorte, that they say, that Patience ought alwayes to be kepte within our harte, & not alwayes outwardly. In my iudgement men are not boũd to kẽpe Patience alwayes, neyther outwardly, neyther within theyr hartes, as shal appeare by the distinction which we wil make. And yet it is sufficiently declared before, that euery mãner of Patience, is not true & to be alowed, but that there chaunceth some times a reprobate Patiẽce, whiche ought not to be kept, neither inwardly, nor outwardly.

Patience not alwayes to be kepte.

Firſt, we do make a difference betwixt euill & euill: some euil is sinne, & some is not. They do call the one, the euil of the offence and faulte, and the other, the euill of the punishment & payne. Secondly, there is one kind of euill whiche is done vnto our selues, or to God, or to our neighbor, or to them that be vnder our subiectiõ and charge. Thirdly, the parties whiche doe the euill, be eyther pryuate persons, eyther bearyng some office in some common wealth or family: For herein there is a greate diuersitie. For it maketh no small matter, what the euill be whiche we doe suffreyne, and to whome an euill be done, and what mãner of persons we be to whome it is done.

Difference betwixt euill & euill.

VVee ought to suffervvrõg but to doe no euill.

Firſt, in case that the euil whiche is done to vs, be any sinne, so that it make vs, if we suffer it, not only miserable, but also worthy of blame, we may not suffer it. As for an exãple. A Tyrant compelleth me to betray my fayth, to denie the truthe of God, to alowe a lye or falshode, and to vse counterfayte seruices of God. I may in this case without blame suffer the violence whiche is done to my body, and kẽpe my patience, but to be dryuen to doe that, whiche hée goeth aboute to haue me do, plainly that can not be done without my blame. He doth persecute, spoyle me of my gwdes, banishe me out of the countrie, & from all good company, he catcheth, & casteth me into prison and yrons, he doth torment, condemne, & kill me, &c. all this geare I may abide without blame. He plucketh from me the bookes of the holy Scripture, and burneth them before my face, I suffer this also, bycause I can not chose, but not without greate griefe, not so much for ỹ harme that I take my selfe, as for ỹ villanie that they doe vnto the truthe of God. He doth condẽne me of Heresie, schisme, vngodlinesse, of forsaking ỹ churche, & of vntolerable obstinacy: herein I do wel also to kẽpe my patiẽce, & do recõmende the iudgemẽt of my cause vnto the iuſt Judge. Besides that, he doth take away the open teachyng of the truth, & the true preachers also out of the churche, and setteth vp false, deceptfull and wicked doctrine in stẽde thereof, and will haue vs to heare, to alow, & to folow the same. I may abyde the firſte, but I may not doe the laste, vnleſſe I will presume to betray ỹ truth: in this poynt I ought not to kẽpe my Patience, neyther inwardly in my harte, neyther outwardly in my worke. In dẽde it is his offence and faulte, that hé dothe so fiercely rage agaynſt innocent persons, in oppugnyng and striuyng agaynſt Gods truthe, but by hys so ragyng, hé can not make me an offender by sufferyng, vnleſſe I do perfoyme that which he would compell me to do.

Furthermore, in case any mã wold enforce mé to walke a myle wyth him, I may without offence go with him, yea thrée myles: but if he requyre me to go with him to some idolatry, to robbe, to steale, to haunt harlots, &c. here I can not without offence be patient, and perfoyme his requeſt. If any man take my coate from me, I may lette him haue my cloke also: but in case he go about to take frõ me my faith, hope, & duty vnto god, I may not abide this euil, for not only he doth offend which goeth about it, but he ſhould make me an offender also if I ſhoulde ſuffer it. And agayne, he ſhall not be able to cõpaſſe, though he be neuer so strõg, to make me let goe that whiche hée would take from me, if I liſte to be conſtant through the grace of God.

Willeth whome euill be done.

Mat. 5. Luc. 6. Matthew.

Secondly, it maketh some matter to the kepyng of patiẽce, vnto whom the euill turne be done. For if a man ſhould ſlaunder or speake villany of the name of God, no Chriſtian man ought patiently to heare and abide it. Chryſoſtomes doctrine is this. In case you chaunce to heare any man blaſpheming God, either by the way ſide, eyther in the market, go to him, rebuke him, & if thou nẽde to ſtryke him, ſticke not at it, and giue him a blowe in the face, breake his mouth, and sanctifie or make holy thy hande with the blowe. And if any body doe complayne vpon thée, and draw thée to pryſon, folowe hym: and if the Judge ſeke to puniſhe thée in the place of iuſtice, say frely and frãckly, that he blaſphemed the kyng of Angels. Thys sayth Chryſoſtome. Furthermore, if any mã ſhould ſlaũder the worde of God and his truth, were it conuenient for a Chriſtian man patiently to heare suche a blaſphemy, and not so speake againſt it: And in case that the wicked ſhoulde damniſie and decay our neyghbours lyfe, wealth or honor, doth not very charitie require vs to ſhew no patience but impatience rather in thys matter, to declare therby in wordes at the leaſt way, if we canne not in dẽde, how much we do miſlike with all? It is no vertue but a vice, to be patiente at an other mans harmes. If a man ſhoulde defile thy wyfe or daughter, or any manner wiſe hurte any of thy houſe, that were committed vnto thy truſte and charge, the Patience of suche a shrewde turne, were not worthy to be commended, but to be blamed, specially if thou were able to let it.

There is an other conſideratiõ to be had, of that wrong whiche is done neyther vnto GOD, nor vnto our neighbour, neyther vnto our people, but vnto our selues. Chriſt when he had sayd: But I say vnto you, reſiſt not euill. To expounde the matter, he added after, But whoſoeuer giue thée a blow in the right cheke, turne him the other also: and to him that will plucke thée to the law, and take away thy coate, lette him haue thy cloke also: and goe two myle wyth him, whiche would haue thée to goe one with him. He sayth not: Who ſo euer giueth thy neighbour a blow in the right cheke, but who ſoeuer giueth thée a blowe: and he sayth not, whoſoeuer will bryng thy neighbor, but thée to the law: & he would haue him to gyue not his neyghbours coate, but his owne. So he saith not, he that would haue thy Neyghbour, but Thée, to goe with him one mile.

So that this kinde of Patience, is playnly expressed to be kepte not in the wrong whiche is done vnto others, but vnto our selues. And therfore serueth the place of the Apostle to the Corinthians: Why doe you not rather suffer wrong? Why doe you not rather take harme? If we had bene commaunded to loue our selues, then no man coulde without offence haue had suffered a wrong done vnto himselfe: but seyng that we be commaunded to loue not our selues, but our brethren, we can not without offence patiently suffer any wrong that is done to our neyghbour and brother. 1.Cor.6.

Thirdly, it is a great matter whether that we be priuate persons, or beare any office. Those wronges whiche be done vnto vs as priuate folke, ought to be patiently taken, but they ought not to doe so whiche beare any office of gouernaunce: they may not suffer one to hurte and to doe wrong to an other. So that whereas Christe sayde: Resiste not euill: it is not to bee applyed to the Magistrates, but to euery priuate person. For the doctrine of Christe doth not condemne the office of the magistrate, whereby euill ought to be repressed, as appeareth in the writings of the Apostle to ỹ Romaines. Wherefore it were a very vnseemely patience for them which ought to vse the swoorde, to restrayne the wicked, to beare patiently with the euill doyngs of the people. Rom.13.

Neither is it meete for parents to suffer patiently, and abyde the euill doyngs of theyr children, if one of them doe the other wrong.

And yet notwithstandyng it appertayneth vnto the wisedome of a magistrate, to beare with the euill, whiche he can not reforme for the present, vntill suche time as he may punish them, to the daunger of lesse euill. Such manner of patience doth not decay the authoritie of the Magistrate, but doth rather helpe that it be not weakened, or brought into greater daũger by the vntimely correction of the euil, or least ỹ the same whiche ought to be reformed, be not reformed, but made worse than it was before, & so to leaue open a gap to other worse euils. Dauid vsed this patience in bearyng with those sore & wicked matters whiche were wrought by Ioab, like as Isboseth the sonne of Saul was constrayned to suffer the pride of Abner. At the beginning, before that things be well setled & staied in a realme, there must many matters be borne withal, whiche else should not be suffered. It is likewise also in most cõmon welths, where it happeneth oftentimes, that the magistrates muste of necessitie, beare with the offences of great personages, or of a multitude, for asmuch as they can not be reformed without sore and daungerous changes. And thys kinde of patience hath place also in the Church, where men haue nede either to beware of sects, either when the godly be fewer in number, than be able to reforme the offences of many, & them of the frouter sorte, to doe it vnto the edifying, as the Apostle doth prescribe.

What is the vse of Patience.

Three maner vses of patience.

IT can not be worthily inough expressed, how large, how notable, & necessary the vse of true patiẽce is. And yet notwithstanding we doe make three sortes thereof, like as all thyngs which doe betide vnto vs bee of three sortes, for all our things cõmeth eyther from God, eyther from creatures, either frõ our selues. And whensoeuer any thing happen vnto vs that is not, or semeth not to bee troublesome, then there is no vse of patience. So that the firste vse of patiẽce doth stãd in those things which do concerne God: the second, in those whiche doe touche our neighbours: the thirde in the reste of the things which do appertaine vnto our selues. And those things doe concerne God, which do belong to faith, godly life, & our saluation: and those do concerne our neighbours, which do hang vpõ the common life of men: and those do touch our selues, which do belong to the mortifying of the olde Adam, to the denial of our selues, & to the holinesse of life: & this we wil briefly consider. Firste the Apostle sayth, that fayth commeth by hearyng, and hearing by the worde of God: for how shall men beleeue him, of whom they haue not hearde? Nowe vnlesse that there be patience in the hart of men, and eares to heare, it can not be that they should heare the doctrine which is folish to the iudgement of reason, and refused by the wisemen of thys worlde. They lacked this patience which sayde: This saying is harde, who canne abyde to heare it? So the moste parte of Christendome dothe now adaies also abhorre the hearing of sounde doctrine, and can not patiently abyde so muche as to heare it. Therefore patience is chiefly necessary herevnto, that the worde of the Iam.1. Without patience to the hearing of the doctrine of fayth, men come not vnto fayth.

Iam.5.

crosse be hearde, for vnlesse that it be hearde, it can not be beleeued, and it can not be heard, vnlesse ỹ the iudgemẽt of reason be so ouercome by the benefite of patiẽce, that those things which be spoken, may be well heard, and with quiet mindes.

2 Secondly, vnlesse that the resistence of the minde be repressed, faith can take no place, though that the sounde doctrine be hearde. And that is not repressed as long as the impatience of assentyng continueth in the hart, so that men nede to haue this patience of harte, to consente vnto those things which they haue heard. He that lacketh this patience, canne not abyde to credite those thyngs whiche he hath hearde, and so is not yet able to receyue fayth.

3 Thirdly, for asmuche as the good things ỹ be promised, be not presently performed, but bee reserued till the time to come, it is necessary to loke for thẽ by hope. And this hope can not stande, vnlesse it be bolstered vp by patience. So the Apostle sayth to the Romains: And not only they, but wee our selues also, whiche haue the firste fruites of the spirite, wee doe waile to our selues, loking for the adoption the reseption of our body: for by hope we be saued: & if hope should be seene, it were no hope, for howe should a mã hope vpõ ỹ hee seeth: but if we do hope vpon that which wee do not see, we do loke for it by patience. By these words, he doth signifie, that the promised redemption whiche we do hope vpon that do beleue, can not be loked for, but by patience.

4 Fourthly, for asmuch as ỹ course of the godly in this worlde is such, that by many troubles they muste enter into the kingdome of Heauen, who perceyueth not how necessarie this vse of patience is, to beare al aduersitie constantly for the truthe of God: Who is able stedfastly to confesse his fayth before his aduersaries to the daunger of his lyfe, vnlesse his harte be cõfirmed by patience: The Apostle sayth, that men do beleue in theyr harte vnto rightousnesse, & that the confession is made by the mouth vnto saluation. Take away pacience, and there can be no suche confession, for whiche men will be contented to abide all manner of perils.

Proofe requireth patience.

5 Fiftly, it is requyred of the faithful, that they be sufficiently proued and tried in the faith of Christe. And no manne canne be well tryed by troubles, but through patience: wherefore the Apostle sayth: Trouble bredeth patience, and patience worketh the proofe or triall of men.

Rom.5.

By patience wee doe saue our soules.

6 Sirtly, forasmuche as he that wil saue his life or soule, doth lose it, & he whiche will lose it for Christes sake, dothe saue it, it is not possible, that beyng once vnder the crosse, wee should any otherwise saue our liues or our soules, but by patience. Wherfore our Sauiour saith also: In your patience you shal possesse your soules. We must in this life striue agaynst Sinne, the World, and the Prince of the worlde: if we doe not striue, we shal not ouercome, and in case we ouercome not, we shall not be crowned, & no man can striue or fight wel without patience. Therfore the Apostle doth counsel vs to runne our appointed race by patience & speaking of himselfe: I haue fought sayth he, a good fight, I haue accomplished my course, I haue kept my fayth, for the reste, there is layed vp for mee a crowne of rightousnesse, which the Lorde shal giue me at that day, who is the iuste Iudge.

Luk.21.

Ebre.12.

2. Tim.vlt.

V Without patience vve shall not do the vvil of god, Luk.8.

7 Seuenthly, we muste consider also, that no man is able to worke the will of God, and to bryng forth the fruytes of the Gospell without Patience. The saying of our Sauiour is well knowen: The sede that falleth vppon the good lande, be they whiche hearyng the worde, doe with an honest and good harte hold it fast, and bryng forth fruite through Patience. For lyke as the sede which is caste into the lande can not beare frute, vnlesse it be able to suffer and abyde the sunne, rayne and colde, so the faythfull person can not bryng forth the frute of the Gospell, vnlesse that hee doe patiently suffer and abyde all kinde of aduersities falling vnto him for the worde of God. And what is it else to beare the frute of the Gospell, but to doe the will of God, accordyng as it is sette forth by the doctrine of the Gospell: and this no man is able to doe without Patience. And therefore the Apostle sayth: Patience is necessarie for you, that in doyng the will of God, you may beare away the promyse. And thus muche briefly of the firste vse of Patience.

Hebr.10.

The second vse of patience concerning the life of man

2 Touchyng the second vse therof notwithstandyng that charitie beareth the chiefe swinge in the commõ life of manne, for the nurrishment of peace and concorde, yet for all that, vnlesse there bee ioyned Patience withall, there can not continewe any quiet betwixte moste dearest and nearest friends. For vnlesse that all quarels of offence be kept of by

by the vertue of Patience, no loue can long endure: what streighter bande is there than that of man and wife, whereby two are knitte into one flesh? And yet vnlesse that bothe their stomackes bee armed with the vertue of Patience, the one shall not be able to beare the conditions and combers of the other, and so shall the vnitie and concorde betwixt them bee broken. What else shall we iudge also of all other contractes in the fellowship of men? How commeth it to passe that neyther straungers nor kinsfolkes be safe one from an other, yea that brothers agree so euill, but bycause that patience is so rare and seld to finde in the heartes of men? In respecte that we be men, it is not possible, but that they whome we can not charge to be vtterly naught, must speake and do many things not altogither pleasaunte: and in case they chance vpon impatient harted men, they do stirre greate variance, strife and contention, and doe breake the tranquillitie of quiet and peace: in this respecte we maye well call patience the preseruer, yea the repayrer of peace. For as Salomon saith: The Prince is appeased by patience, whiche is not to be vnderstanded of that patience only, when the Prince being somewhat offended, doth himselfe restraine the rage of hys anger, but when he with whome he is displeased, dothe patiently suffer all his sayings and doings, and doth with a cõtented mind abide all suche burthens and charges, whiche he putteth hym vnto. If Patience dothe worke thys in the minde of a Prince, how shall it not better worke the same effecte in them, which be of a muche baser condition and degree?

The thirde vse of patience (as we sayd) is when the mortifying of oure selues, whiche is troublesome to the flesh, the denying of our selfe, and holynesse of life is wrought with a patient & stoute minde. Mortifie (sayth the Apostle) your membres which be vpon the earth. And I do chasten my bodie (sayth he) and bring it vnder. And Therfore most deare brethren, hauing these promises, let vs cleanse our selues from all filthines of flesh and spirit, making vp our sanctification or holinesse in the feare of God. And Christe sayth: If any man will come after me, lette him denie or forsake himselfe. And how can wee doe this, I beseech you, without the patience of the spirit and flesh? Therfore whether we consider oure liage towards God, or towardes our neyghboures, or oure owne selues, surely the vse of true patience is in anye wise necessarie vnto all, and that not only for the affayres of religion, but for the rest of our whole life also.

Colloss.3.

1.Cor.9.

2.Cor.7.

Luke.9.

Of Impatiency.

According vnto the nature of contraries, lowe what good things be attribute vnto patience, the cõtrary therof may aright be ascribed vnto impatience. Patience is a vertue whereby all aduersities be borne for godlinesse, and in honestes sake. Therefore Impatience is the vice, whereby there is no aduersitie suffered for godlinesse and honestes sake.

Impatience vvhat.

The partes of patience be, to bée farre from anger, to loke for the Lordes helpe, to stand in that whych is good and iust, and to be able to suffer all aduersities. Therefore the partes of Impatiécie be, to be enclyned to anger, not to loke for or tarry the hand of the Lorde, to departe immediately from that which is ryght, and to be able to abide no aduersitie. Patience hath God himselfe, and our Lorde Chryste hys onely begotten for the author thereof. Impatiency hathe the Deuill for hir author and beginner, from whome the poyson of it was fyrst poured into our first parent. And loke howe contrarye they be one to an other, I meane God and the Deuill, so contrary is the vice of Impatiencie vnto the vertue of Patience. The fyrste Impatiencie of the Deuill consisted in that that hée coulde not beare with the glorye of man, when he was created to the Image of God, and made ruler of all hys workes. So that the bronde of impatiencie (as Tertullian sayeth) is in the very Deuill, and impatiencie and malice were brought vp both togyther in hys bosome. Patience dothe yéelde to the hearing of sounde doctrine, as we declared in the article before, but Impatiencie worketh the contrary, whereby our eares bée stopped and turned away, leaste they shoulde heare that whyche is good. Patience maketh menne to giue credite vnto Gods word, but the Impatiencie in not consenting to suche things as they do heare, is the minister of vnbeliefe, in hindering them from gruing theyr consente vnto the truth. Patience dothe loke for the good thinges to come, whiche we doe hope vpon that do beléeue, and impatiécie in that it cā not abide to hope, and loke for the same, doth gape only for the présente. Patience doth make vs to confesse that with our mouth, which we do beléeue with our heart. For therby we be ready to suffer the crosse for the truth of God. Ergo, the impatiencie of the Crosse, maketh vs eyther to dissemble or to denie also, that which we do surmise we doe beléeue rather than beléeue indéede, by oure patience of troubles we bée made allowable in ỹ faith of Chryst, therefore by impatiencie we be refused as vnworthy. By patience wée doe possesse our soules, Ergo by impatiencie we doe lose them. By patience we doe fyghte and ouercome, and shall be crowned after the victorie, Ergo by impaciencie we do yelde and flée, and be shamefully ouercome, deseruing euerlasting rebuke and reproche. By patience we do performe the will of God, and bryng forth the fruites of hys Gospell. Therefore by impatiencie we doe straye from the will of God, and worke ỹ fruites of the fleshe, of darkenesse and of destruction. And therefore it is that Tertullian doth ascribe all kindes of sinnes vnto impatiencie, by whiche not only Eua, but Adam also sinned, so that the firste offence of man was impatiencie. Impatiencie bréedeth anger and hatered, Impatiencye of humilitie, bréedeth pride and vayneglory, Impatiencie of chastitie, falleth into wantonnesse, and becommeth seruaunte vnto it. Impatiency of pouertie, bréedeth theste and robberies. Impatiency of labor, is the mother of idlenesse, out of whyche springeth all vices. Impatiencie of wrongs, bréedeth chiding and brauling, strife and contention, and desire of reuenge.

The partes of impatiencye.

The Deuill the author of impatience.

What impatiency worketh.

Tertullian doth ascribe all kindes of sinnes vnto Impatiencye.

Examples of Impatiencye.

And we do finde euery where examples of Impatiencie, not onely in the Scriptures, but also throughout all our whole life. It came of Impatiencie that Caine slewe hys brother Abel: whereas Esau deuised to murther hys brother Iacob, it came of Impatiencie. When Laban persecuted his sonne in lawe Iacob, hée was moued vnto it by Impatiencye. What was it else but Impatiencie, that the brother of Dina, did so cruelly reuenge the offence that was done vnto hir? The hatered of the brethren of Ioseph rose vppon the impatiencye that they couloe not beare, that he shoulde be more loued of his father than they, and for that, that he tolde them his dreames as prophecies of thinges that were to come. Whereas the Egyptians wife caused Ioseph to be put in danger of hys lyfe, it procéeded of hir impatiencie, bycause he refused to lye with hir. Whereas Pharao did so often times withstande the will of God, and whereas the Israelites did so stubbornely murmure against the Lord, it came of nothyng else but of impatiencie. Whereas Saule dyd persecute Dauid, and murther the Lordes Priestes, and presumed to minister the sacrifice, he did it vppon impatiencie. To be shorte, you canne not well name any sinne that is committed, wherein is not some representmente of impatiencie. And thus muche of Patience and Impatience.

Of Heresye.

Or asmuche as the reproche of Heresie is not the leaste of the slanders, wherewith godly folke bée charged: I thinke it expedient to speake somewhat hereof also, in these our Common places, and wée meane not to make anye greate adoe in the treatye of thys matter, but to note those pointes only, whyche maye be good and profitable for the faithfull.

I. What Heresye is.

MAny menne can not so well skyll what Heresie is, and who ought to be called Heretikes, as they can alwayes haue the worde in theyr mouthes. Heresie, as concerning the signification of the worde commeth of ỹ Greeke worde αἱρέω ‡ αἱρέομαι, whyche is as muche to saye, as to chose. And therevpon Chrysostome dothe sometimes tearme the chosing of a Bysshoppe, whyche was done at those dayes by the people of the faithful, by the word αἵρεσις. So that it is a clére case, that he is called an Heretike, whych chooseth himselfe anything. And so Hierome noted vpon the Epistle to Titus, saying: Heresie, the Greeke worde commeth of choyse, I meane when euery man chooseth that to himselfe, whiche séemeth to hym best. This signification of the worde hathe nothing in it worthy blame. For who is so madde, that wyll esteéme that prayer to Heresie signifyeth choyce.

chose

Heresie signifying choyce condemneth no man.

chose any thing gyuen frælye vnto man, for a fault or vice: In this respect Heresie damneth no mã, vnlesse it come of some other thing, or otherwise it hath no fault in it. Therfore it cõmeth of an abuse, that this word is become slaunderous. Tertullian in his book de Virginibus, a little after the beginnyng, defineth Heresie after this manner: Whatsoeuer sauoreth contrarie to the Truth, is Heresie, yea though it be an auncient custome. Thys definition is neyther proper, nor necessarie, but oute of order. For if he had expressed the greke word in Latine, he should haue said, What soeuer sauoreth contrarye to the Truth, is a thing new taken vp, election or choyce, and so hée shoulde not haue declared his meaning neyther. For choyce is not asmuche to saye in the Churche, as that whiche men by abuse haue begon to call Heresie. And yet notwithstanding, I do not condemn the abuse of this word, for the Apostle vsed it also, saying: There must nedes be Heresies, that suche as be tried men, may be manifestlye knowen among you. And to the Galathians, he recounteth Heresies amongst the workes of the flesh. Agayne, he sayeth: Eschue the heretike after one or two warninges, he vsed the worde, because it was common amongest the Gentiles, by reason of the Philosophers, and amongest the Iewes, that vnderstode the Gréke tong, by reason of the sectes of the Pharisays and Saduceis. And the Latine men vsed this word also, as we may perceue by Cicero where he sayeth that Cato was in that Heresie, that hé cared not for no fyne or figured speche.

Abuse in the vvorde Heresie.

1. Cor. 11.

Gal. 5.

Tit. 3.

It séemeth that Augustine vsed this worde Heresie for an opinion, and that therefore he wrote after this manner. He is an Heretike in my opinion, whiche dothe eyther begin or follow any false or new opinions, for any worldlye gaine or commoditie, and specially for glorye and gouernance sake. The Grékes do vse the word αἱρέομαι sometimes for to will, and in this sense he is aright called an Heretike, which choseth to himselfe some opinion to sticke vnto, more vpon his owne will, than anye truth, although that he be not able to confirme it, by anye holye Scriptures truly and directly alleaged. So that Heresie is taken for that disease of the minde, when vayne men, and suche as doe to muche flatter themselues, doe varye from the common determination of others, not vpon any iudgement, but of purpose to dissent, and do chose to themselues opinions, whiche they themselues wyll follow, and appoynte others also to followe the same, and will not suffer themselues to be driuen from them by any reasons or Scriptures. The Grékes do make a shorte definition of an Heretike in this wise, Hé that taketh in hãd, and holdeth any thing besides the truth. The Scholemen do call him an Heretike, which doth beginne or followe any secte contrarie to the grounds of our Religion. And they saide that there be thrée things concurrente in Heresie, whereby it maye be perceyued, that is to saye, cruelnesse and ouerthwart will, and stubbornesse to contende, meanyng that he is not immediately an heretike, whiche dothe erre in mistaking the false for true, vnlesse he haue a

VVhat a Heretike is after the minde of Augustine. Lib. de vera & falsa credendi cap. 2.

froward

froward wil & stubbornesse to striue, and therefore one sayd: I maye erre, but I will not be an heretike. Thys is their opinion. But a man may bée called an heretike, as I suppose thrée manner of wayes.

Heretike three vvais

1 First, he may be called an heretike, whosoeuer doth chose any thing vnto him to follow which he taketh to be good, and worthye to be followed: And in case this man doe chose that which is in déede true and profitable, as true and profitable, he is a good heretike and without blame. After this ỳ proper sense of this worde, the very Catholike Church and euerye Christian man is an heretike, bycause they haue chosen them the faith of Christe to follow, forsakyng all others, and for whiche they be sequestred from all the world. What else is the Christian faith to be compared to the whole world, whiche is not in Christ, but a certayne heresie condemned by the wise men of thys world as it was termed to be by the vnbeléeuing Iewes, when they sayd vnto Paule: We knowe of this Heresie, for that it is spoken against, euery where. And Tertullian dothe call the Christian religion a Secte, in the beginning of his booke vnto Scapula.

The churche hath Christ vniuersall.

Acts.

2 Secondlye, hée is an heretike whosoeuer vpon erroz chooseth anye thing to be obserued for a truth, whiche is not true: and therunto seruyeth the definition of the Grékes whych we alleadged before, in that they call hym an heretike, whiche taketh in hand, and holdeth any thing besydes the truth, and he is an heretike whiche so doth, not bycause that through errour he dothe chose that whiche is false in stéede of a truth, but bycause he doth chose to himselfe anye thyng to followe. When Augustine sayth, I may erre, but I will not be an heretike, he is not against our saying here, but vseth the worde after the common meaning. But why maye not I say, I may erre, but yet I will not be one that shall erre, that is to saye: I will not to my knowledge erre, and yet it doth not follow thereupon, that he dothe not erre, whyche doth in déede erre, and so it followeth not that he is not an heretike whych would not be an heretike, albeit that by erroz he doe chose vnto hym that which is false. It is one thing to say he is, and an other that he will not be an heretike.

It is an vnmeke thyng by a mã to be ouercõme that whiche is false for a truth.

VVhat is to be a Heretike with the Grekes and Schoolemen.

3 Thirdly, an heretike is he whiche taketh vpon him, the false for the true, not of erroz, and ignorance, but of a natural disease or malice, in that he dothe ouermuche sèeke for newe, straunge and vnwonted matters, and passing the common vnderstandyng, and dothe with toth and naple vpholde them to be such, and stoutely defende them, notwithstanding that they be false, this disease maketh verye mischeuous and popyshe Heretikes. And of suche are those thynges to be vnderstanded, whiche wé doe reade of in the Ecclesiasticall hystories of the lawes of the Emperours.

He is an heretike vvhich of erroz but of purpose of singularitie standeth a newe false doctrine.

Hovv sundry sortes there be of Heresyes.

LYke as the falsehode is dyuers, manifolde and plentifull, so there be also manye and sundrye heresies euen as there be manye and sundrye meanes, to strape out of a high and

The Iewes the Philosophers the false Christian heresies beaten

beaten way which men do misse out off, not euer alike, but sundry wayes. First, the Iewes haue some heresies to themselues, the Philosophers of the Gētiles some other, and the false Christians other. The Heretikes amongst the Iewes were as wee may perceyue by Iosephus, and in the Actes of the Apostles, the Pharises, the Saduces, and the Essees, whyche all hadde diuers and sundry heresies one from an other. The heretikes of the gētile philosophers, some wer Stoykes, some Peripatetikes, some Epicures, and some of the secte of Plato, &c. Of whiche we nede not to speake. The heresies of ỳ false Chrystians be innumerable, and passyng diuers, the multitude and varietie of which, no man was able to expresse, no not in the tymes of the olde Fathers: notwythstandyng that there were some whyche wente muche about it. But yet this is the chiefe difference of them, that some of them doe ouerthrowe the very grounds of our faith, and some of them do linger as moze weake, about meaner matters. Of the first sozt be the Marcionites and Manichees, making two beginnings, that is to say: two Gods, one good, and an other euill. The Noetians, saying that the father, sonne and holy Spirit be all one. And the Sabellians, with the Patripassioners, so called, bycause they sayde, that the father suffered foz vs: and the Carpocratians, and Cozinthians, and Hebionites, and Theodocians, and Photinians, and Arrians, whyche all denyed the Godheade of Chryste, and vpholde wickedly, that hee was onely man, and the Valentinians, whyche sayde, that Chryste toke nothing of Mary, and the Appellites, whiche sayde that he toke his flesly of the elementes of ỳ wozld, and gaue it vp agayne vnto ỳ same, and that he rose vpe againe, and ascended into Heauen without it, and the Basilidians, whiche denied that Christe was crucifyed, and all they which withstode the godheade of the holy Spirite: and specially they whiche did eyther so holde the vnitie of Gods essence, that with the Iewes they toke away the holye Trinitie, eyther so confessed the holy Trinitie, that they made three distinct Gods in number, and one vnder an other, denying the vnitie of Gods essence. Ieteth the Pelagians, which weakened the grace of God and forgiuenesse of sinnes. Finally, the Seuerians, and Hierachites, which reiected and cast off the resurrection of the flesshe. All these folke erred about the grounddes of our faith, and were so much worse than others, the more mischeuous that he is, whiche goeth about to vndermine and ouerthrow the foundations of a house, than they whyche are occupyed in pluckyng downe those things that be none of the principals.

We may putte them in the latter sorte, whyche bee heretikes also, but yet haue kept the grounddes and principals of our faith, and haue erred in some other matters, such as the Chiliastes were, whiche held an opinion that Christe shoulde raigne in thys wozld in all felicitie with the elects, foz the space of a thousande yeares, and the Elcesaites, whyche taughte menne that they myghte denye their fayethe in persecution, keeping it only in their heartes. And the Tacians, which whiche they called Encratites, whiche condemned Mariage, and the Cataphrigies whyche reputed the seconde marriage foz whozedome, and the Peputians, whyche attributed so much honoz vnto women, that they dyd aduaunce them vnto the dignitie of priesthode. And the Artotirites, whyche offered breade and cheese, and the Quartadecimanes, whyche kepte Easter daye the fourtenth mone, what daye soeuer it fell vpon, and the Adamians, whiche followed the nakednesse of Adam vsed in Paradise before hys sinne, and refusing also marriage. And the Valesians, which gelded themselues and their guestes, as though they dyd therein serue God. And the Apostolykes, whyche receyued none into their communion, but Sole men and suche as possessed nothing of theyr owne. And the Aquaries, which vsed water in the Sacramente, and Anabaptistes whiche doe stand againste the baptising of Childzen, and the taking of any othe, and manye others, whyche do trifle about the lyke matters.

Which heretikes doe ouerthrowe the foundation of our faith

Which Heretikes haue erred in some matters

Secondlye, some Heresies bee priuate, and some publike. They be priuate, wherewith some one manne is blinded in the Churche, oz some familye, oz some fewe priuate persons. Such all Heresies are wont to be at the firste inuented by some one man, and infecting some houses by little and little, and getting them here and there some to harken and followe them. Suche be the Heresies of the Cloistermen, whiche although that they crepte out of those corners into the open wozld, yet not withstandyng they be neuer made publike oz common, but did still remayne priuate. They be publike, with which all the people in all degrees are entangled, so that a man may aright call them Catholike and Ecclesiastical. Suche hath bin the heresies of the Papistes, and of the Maometanes, these many hundzed yeares. And suche was a long time the heresie of the Arrians. Wherefoze euerye religion is not straightway true, whiche is publike and catholike, foz asmuch as heresies may grow so great to be publike and catholike.

Thirdly, some be new, some olde, and some renewed. They that bee new, do so winde into the heartes of the vnwary and vnstedfast folke, foz their newelte and some certayne speciall zeale, that whatsoeuer they be of themselues, they doe finde some followers. The olde are wont eyther to decay and differ muche from the beginning and beginners of them, oz else to be the stiffer the elder that they be. Such as haue bin wozne out be sometimes renewed again by the wickednesse of the Deuill, euen as we doe see some rayled vp agayne in our age which haue bin ouerthrowe, and then the vnlearned do take them to be new.

Fourthly, some do make a Schisme and yet they doe gather them no Churche, as the Swinefeldians. In deede they doe plucke many from the bodye of the Churche, but yet they doe not gather them into anye Churche seuerally. Some others do make not onely Schismes but seuerall Churches also, bycause they would not be taken foz Heretikes. Of them Chrysostome speaketh, saying: All those things that doe belong to Christe in the truth, those heresies haue them also in the Schisme, churches alike, Bishops alike, and other degrées of the Clergye, baptisme alike, the Lordes supper alyke, and all the rest, &c. Some doe make nother Schismes nor seuerall Churches, but do continue in the Church where they beganne, bycause they bée not yet strong ynough.

to

Fiftly, some do not receyue al the scriptures, but do refuse some of thē, whiche they perceyue, contrarye to their opinions. Some do receyue all, notwithstanding they do not receyue the right sense of them in all poynts, but doe weaken and decay them by false exposition, to the intente they woulde not be reproued of falsehode by the authoritie of Scriptures. It were a great trauel and a long matter of it selfe alone to set forth in examples the diuersitie of heresies to make them all to be knowen, and so to refell the opinions of each of them, wherefore I haue thoughte this sufficient to note for this present.

III. Whereof Heresye commeth.

The good heresye is of God.

NO man ought to doubt, but that the good Heresie, wherein we do chose to cleaue vnto God by sincere and true faith, commeth from aboue, neyther may men thinke it any wonder, that we do make God the author of Heresie. For if wée consider the nature of the word, which signifyeth Chosing, he is the firste and chiefe choser or Heretike: for vnlesse that he had bin a choser, howe shoulde hée haue chosen vs of his owne will before the foundations of the worlde, and haue had so spectall a prouidence and care of them whome he hath cōstantly chosen vnto his faith: By his Spirit the heartes of the electes bée moued to become good Heretikes, or chosers, that is to say, to chose them the best part with Parte, which can neuer be taken from them, albeit that they be afflicted with all kindes of aduersitie for the same. So Heresie commeth of heresie, that is to say, chopse of chopse: our chopse of Gods chopse, and therepon is grounded an argumente to proue that we bée chosen by the chopse of God.

The beginning of euill heresie is eyther generall or speciall. I cal that generall, which hath place in euerye naughty heresie: and that speciall, which is in some certayne only. The generall beginning commeth first of Satan, and secondly of oure corrupte flesh. From this all the euill heresies or chosings do proceede, though they do varry neuer so much one from an other. They do come from Satan as from the beginner of lyes, errors, obstinacie, discorde and destructions. He by his flattering falshode, made our first parents heretikes and schismatikes, and sequestred them from God, not onely to their owne hinderance and harme, but vnto ours also. And oure flesshe is so infected by his poysoned breath, that it is enclyned vnto all heresies, and of a certayne inclination readye to fall to all falsehode and lyes. And therefore the Apostle doth recken heresies amongst the other workes of the flesh, saying: The workes of the flesh be manifest, whiche be these, Adulterie, whoredome, vncleanneste, wantonneste, seruice of Images, witchcraft, enemity, strife, emulations, angers, variance, seditions, heresies, &c.

The beginning of euill heresie of the Deuill.

Arrius.

Gal. 5.

Why the Apostle doth recken Heresies amongst the workes of the flesh.

So that heretikes bée no lesse carnall or fleshly than the Adulterours, whoremongers, and other vncleane persons, although that they woulde séeme to bée of all others moste spirituall. Neyther is it anye maruayle, that they doe sometimes fall into moste sore and outragious offences, considering the alliaunce and knot that is betwixte the workes of the flesshe, whereunto they be specially inclined of nature.

Heretikes do sometimes fall into sore offences.

The speciall beginnyng of heresies commeth of suche sortes of men, whose wittes bée fine and sharpe in Sophistrie, or puffed vppe wyth the spirite of pryde, or else bée stayned wyth the disease of enuy, or else bée impatient to suffer those thyngs whiche do mislike them. For the verye ground stocks wherupon heresies do spring, be pryde, sophistrie, enuy, and impatientnesse. Vnlesse ỳ Arrius had of a pryde contemned his Bishop, and woulde haue séemed better learned thā he, he had neuer conueyed so sore an heresie into the church. And thys pryde of hys was armed wyth sophistrie, wherewith he was well furnished to dispute, and moue questions & doubts. So the enuy whiche many haue borne towarde their superiors, hathe made sundry heretikes.

How Heresie came vnto men.

VVhy Tertullian calleth Marcion Nauta side.

It is written of Tertullian, that hée fell to Montanus syde the heretyke, bycause of the pryde of the Clergie of Rome. If he coulde haue borne with that, he had not embraced that heresie. And surely the impatientnesse of euill folke nowe adayes maketh many heretikes, and Schismatikes. So that euery naughtie heretike, is either proude and hastie either a Sophister, enuious, or impatient. I meane chiefly of them which be the authors of heresies.

But the Champions of the Popishe heresies nowe a dayes doe say, that the holy Scripture dothe make heretikes: which foule slaunder the Lorde will not lette goe vnpunished. The naughtie sorte of heresie commeth of the flesh, and not of the holy Scriptures. The flesh, & not the holy scripture is the mother of heretikes. But they do take al them to be heretikes, whyche had rather folowe the holye Scripture, than the fond imaginations of the Papistes. Truely thys kynde of heretikes doe rise indéede from the holye Scriptures, wée doe acknowledge it to bée true, and will stande vnto it: but they doe goe about to defame the holye scripture, and the chosen of God, by the name of heresie, to abuse and deceyue the symple and vnlearned withall.

IIII. What kinde of men are moste seduced by Herettikes.

MEn be wont to maruell howe it falleth out, that there neuer dyd yet rise any heresie in ỳ Church whiche hath not founde a great many of followers, notwithstanding that it were verye vayne, wicked and of no grounde, as it appeareth by an innumerable sorte of the examples of olde heresies. In case it were amōgst such as doe liue in moste blinde and grosse darkeneste, void not only of the light, but also of the name of Christ, there were no cause of the wonder at all.

But nowe when it doth so betyde amongst Christian men, whiche doe crake and boast of their Religion, it were not without reason to aske, what manner of Christian men they be, in whome naughty heresies do so easily take holde, that they will suffer themselues to be drawen by them from the most godly and wholesome heresie or choyse.

They that be not of the tryed men, is easily fall into heresies. 1.Cor.11.

When the Apostle sayeth: There muste nedes be heresies, that they which be tried men among you, may be knowen, he dothe sufficiently declare in generalitie what manner of Christian men they be, whiche are enclined to receyue heresies, that is to say, they whiche be not men tried. For the tryed do stād stiffe, and sticke fast to the truth of God, whensoeuer there doe rise any heresies, and so doe shew a manifest argumente of themselues, that they be tried men. Therefore it followeth, that the rest be such as doe easily fall vnto all manner of heresies, forasmuche as they be not tryed men. But let vs see whych bee the peculiar faultes or lackes in them. For whiche they doe easily slippe into heresies.

Ignorance the mother of error.

First, there is in most part of them a childishe ignorance, which a man may well cal the mother of seduction. For it is not only destitute of ryghte iudgemente, but it lyeth also in danger of the wickednesse of all craftye dealers. Wherefore it is not without cause that the Apostle warneth vs, to lyke that we be children or yong in malice, and not in sense or vnderstanding, and therefore it is, that the crafty mē which do practise their gouernaunce and gaine in the Churche, doe prouide by all meanes that they can possible, that the cloud of ignorance be not taken away frō the mindes of the seduced multitude.

1.Cor.14.

The wauering of the minde.

Secondly, there followeth this ignorance a wauering of mind, whereby it commeth to passe, that they which be childishe in senses and perseuerance, are carried aboute with euery blast of doctrine. The Apostle toucheth this wauering to the Ephesians, saying. And he appointed some to be Apostles, some Prophets, some Euangelistes, some Pastors and Doctours, to the accomplishemente of Saintes, to the worke of the ministerie, to the edifying of the bodye of Christe, vntill we come all vnto the vnitie of the Faithe, and knowledge of the sonne of God, euerye one to a perfecte man, vnto the measure of the age of the fulnesse of Christe, that we be nowe not wauering children, and carried aboute with euery wind of Doctrine, in the wickednesse of men, through craftie, to be begyled by errour. So that thys ignorauncе and wauering of minde, doth set open the gate vnto all kynde of errours and heresies, in that it doth make the vnlearned multitude subiecte vnto the wickednesse of Heretikes and of craftye deceptefull persons.

Eph.4.

Thirdly, all hereticall error dothe easily take hold, whersoeuer the vice of curiositie is muche vsed. For as sone as any newe or strange matter is disclosed, immediately suche as bee curious, be desirous to vnderstande what, and what kinde of thing it is: they be greedye to reade and heare it, and bee ouertaken, entangled, and caught withall, euen as mē say, that apes are wont to be with gaselings.

Fourthly,

The slauerie of our desires.

Fourthly, they be in the lyke case also, which be as it were slaues vnto their owne desires, for when they do heare of anye doctrine that is more pliable vnto their desires than the true and sounde doctrine is, whiche they heard before: they doe strayght way lay both minde & eare towardes it, and giue themselues wholly therevnto. The Apostle did prophesie before of this saying: The time shal be, when men shall not abide the sounde doctrine: but shall heape them vppe maisters, according to the itching of their eares, and shall turne their hearing from the truthe, and giue themselues to fables and tales. The doctrine of the truthe, whiche he calleth heere the sound doctrine, is the verye same to oure corrupt flesh, lingering vpon our desires, as a medicine is to a sicke person. Like as the faithfull Phisition is cumbersome and lothsome to the sicke person, when hee forbyddeth hym those things whych hee doth earnestly desire, and prescribeth hym those thynges whyche bee contrarye to his appetite, and is nothyng so well welcome as the false Phisition or leach is, whiche seeketh his owne gaine, and letteth him haue hys owne desire, euen so the Apostle sawe before that the doctrine of the truth shoulde be lothsome to carnall persons, and suche as be slaues to their owne desires, and that therefore they shoulde turne their eares from it vnto false teachers, and greedily embrace theyr fables, whyche shoulde not be so lothsome to theyr flesshe, but sometymes more pleasant and sweete. Therefore whersoeuer there is any greate number of suche carnall Christians, what wonder is it, if any heresie do take holde among them? For this purpose the Diuel is wont to coyne some entitement vnto euery heresie, to allure carnall men to receyue them.

Doth not this appeare in the most diuelishe and cursed Heresie of Dauid Georze, whiche doth teache hys followers the nakednesse of Adam and Eua, common leacherie without anye difference of women, and promiseth vnto them that doe obeye him true felicitie?

Fiftely, theyr myndes bee meete also to admitte Heresies, whyche of nature bee vnstable and vnstedfast in euerye thyng. The Apostle Peter dothe make mention of them, where he sayeth: that lying maisters doe entice vnstable soules. This kind of menne doe not onely vppon anye lyghte matter shake off the truthe, but euery opinion also, and embrace euery day one after an other, so that there is no rēde lyghter, nor more moued wyth euerye winde, than they bee.

Sirtly, they be suche also, whyche doe negligently behaue themselues, when they be in the way of true Religion: of them Augustine doth make mention, saying in this wise: But these men do decеyue such as be negligent in the Catholike Faithe, and will not learne their owne faithe, being manifest to knowe in the scriptures, and (which is a sorer matter, and muche to be pitied) wheras they do negligentely vse them selues in Catholike faith, they doe diligently giue eare vnto heretikes. Thus sayeth Augustine. And so it is no doubt, They which do negligētly come to ỹ church or congregatiō, do negligētly heare the woꝛd of saluation, do negligently pray, doe negligently come to the Lords table, do negligẽtly reade oꝛ not reade at all the holye Scriptures, and haue no regard oꝛ care of the knowledge of God, they do altogither lye open, and are easye to bee deceyued by Heretikes. And who seeth not, how great this negligence begunneth to growe in the Churches, whiche be called pꝛofessoꝛs of the Gospell?

And this manner of negligence commeth either vppon the pꝛeposterous and naughty pꝛesumption of the grace of God and saluation, and that we suppose we knowe God well ynough already, either of a wearisomenesse of sanctitie and holye thinges, whiche the plentie and abundaunce thereof is woont to breede. Whereof we maye see the examples in those Churches where Sacramentes bee dayly ministred. It is a wonder to see, how carelesly all things be passed ouer, not onely by the people, but by the verye ministers also themselues of the Sacraments.

Our greate estimation of persons.

Seuenthly, their mindes also bee open to receiue Heresies, whiche doe ouermuche esteeme the persons of them whome they imagine to excell others in learning and holynesse of life. Foꝛ therevpon men are woont to mislike and contemne them: yea, and at length vtterly to foꝛsake suche as doe teache the truthe, and do withall liue naughtyly, and be falsely pꝛesuaded by the counterfaite holinesse of Heretikes and vayne imagination of their godlinesse and holinesse of their life, to embrace heresie in steede of the Truthe. So manye doe wolue adayes fall vnto the heresie of the Anabaptistes, bycause of that lightenesse and vanitie of the Ministers of the woꝛd, which is founde euerye where.

Conscience burdened with sinne.

Eyghtly, it chanceth oftentimes, that they whose consciences be clogged with sinnes, when they fall into the suttle pꝛesuasions of heretikes, be entangled therewithall oute of hand. Hereof the Apostle maketh mention vnto Timothie. Foꝛ they be of those, whiche do enter into houses, and doe entangle the poꝛe women which be burdened with synnes, and be ledde by sundꝛy desires, euer learning, and neuer atteyning vnto the knowledge of the truth. Like as they whiche haue diseased boyes, are contented with no one Phisition, but do committe themselues vnto euerye man that wyll pꝛomise them anye helpe: so it fareth also with them, whiche haue their consciences ouerpꝛessed with the burthen of sinnes. They can be contente to yeelde themselues vnto euerye heretike, that will but pꝛomise them libertie. 2. Tim. 3.

Moreouer like as they be alwayes vnder the hande and cure of some Phisition, and yet foꝛ all that are neuer bꝛoughte vnto perfect healthe, so these folke doe alwayes seeke and euer learne, and yet foꝛ all that, they doe neuer come vnto the assured and certayne knowledge of the Truthe.

The cause oꝛ reason in the fyrste is, foꝛ as muche as they doe not yeelde themselues stylle vnto any one medicine, and therefoꝛe although they shoulde hytte vppon the true waye, yet they doe not abyde vppon it: and euen so it is the second, foꝛ as muche as they doe not sticke continually vnto anye one doctrine, but thꝛough thꝛough the vnsteadinesse of theyꝛ heartes and vnbeliefe of their mynd that can not be persuaded, whē they haue scarcely talked of one doctrine, they do runne to an other, yea and foꝛ the most part quite contrary.

Therefoꝛe, if youre question bee, what kinde of men be most oꝛ soonest seduced by heretikes, you shal quickly perceyue how it is, in case you do diligently cõsider what we haue said that they be tryed men, ignoꝛaunte, wauering, slaues to their owne desires, the vnstable, the negligente, the lothsome, the esteemers of persons, and the ouercharged with the burthen of sinnes, be most in daunger of this mischiefe. So that it is no wonder, that there neuer rose yet any heresie whiche founde not many followers thereof in the Church. Foꝛ who can doubt, but that the Church hathe alwayes bin pestered wyth a multitude of such kinde of men.

V. Hovv Heresyes be Culpable.

GEnerallye al Heresies be blameworthy. Foꝛasmuch as they bee patched vp with lyes, falshoodes, and vntruthes. Hauing that only heresie oꝛ choyce, which the true Christians do pꝛofesse, in the whiche there is nothing at all woꝛthy of blame. Foꝛ that is all and whole, sound and good, albeit it be condemned by the Chyldren of this woꝛld, which can not like withal, bycause they can not receiue the spirit of Truth, whereof it dothe consist. All others heresies oꝛ choises besides this only, be culpable & blame woꝛthy. And they be culpable in thꝛee respectes: Firste, foꝛ the very matter and substance of them. Secondly foꝛ the authoꝛ oꝛ beginner thereof. And thirdlye in respecte of the heretikes themselues.

In the matter.

That whiche is to be blamed in the matter, is the very lye, and errour it selfe. Foꝛ all doctrines of heresies be either false of themselues, eyther seruing to those thinges that bee false, and they be chiefly false in those pointes, wherein the verye substance as it were of all heresies is comprehended, in respecte whereof it dothe varrie from the true and sounde doctrine. As foꝛ those poyntes which bee not the chiefe and principall in them, there is sometimes mingled some Truth, wherby that whiche is false, may be resembled to the Truth.

And thys generall occasyon oꝛ blame of Heresies is in some verye greate, in others greater, and in some others greatest of all. It is greate when men do of a stubburnesse erre and speake agaynste the truthe, in suche thynges as bee but secundarie, and not of the grounde. It is yet greater, when men doe stande againste any article of our Faithe. But it is greatest of all when the verye groundes and foundations of our saluation be shaken eyther touchyng the Holie Trinitie, eyther the vnitie of Goddes Maiestie, eyther when the one, oꝛ bothe natures in Christ be denied, eyther when Christ hym selfe is displaced, as the moste wycked heade of Heresye, Mahomet, and after hym Dauid George hathe attempted to doe, so that the greater the errour oꝛ offence is, so muche the more wee oughte to abhoꝛre and eschewe the Heresye that maintaineth the same.

The ſecõd ſtame in the Deuill the begin-ner.

In the Heretikes.

Secondlye, if we conſider the begynner of the hereſies, they be in reſpect of hym alſo culpable and abhominable. And we declared before, that the verye beginner of them, is Satan, by whose motion and inſtinct they be firſt enkindled, to the intente to bring a cloude and darkeneſſe ouer the truth of God. And therefore it is, that ſome whē they burne heretikes, do putte vpon them a linnen or paper garment, wherein be painted the Images of Deuils, to admoniſhe all men, that their hereſies came of the inſtincte of the Deuill. And the ſame is abuſed by others that do cõdemne and burne true Chriſtian mē in ſtede of heretikes, as they dyd ſometimes in the burning of John Huſſe, at the Councell of Conſtãce.

Thirdlye, there be many matters concurrente vnto the Hereſie in the very heretikes themſelues, which be worthy of great blame. For Hereſie is neyther firſt deuiſed, nor after that it is once deuiſed by others, it is not receyued without great offence and blame. For it is deuiſed either by the drift of pride, eyther of enuie, eyther by the infectuous deſire of newfangles, eyther vpon a luſt to ſtriue and contend, whiche miſchiefes who ſeeth not how damnable they be? And it is receyued not only into the ignorante and wauering minde, but alſo into the negligent, vnſtable, ſenſuall, contemptuous, and curious heart, the offences whereof, when they be compared vnto the former, be in degree ſomewhat lighter, but yet in this caſe they muſt not be iudged to be lyghte. There may alſo many other thynges be ioyned to theſe vices in the perſons of heretikes, whiche bee better knowē by the ſpeciall experience and trial therof, than by our annotatiõs.

VI. Hovv hurtefull Hereſyes be.

Hereſies do leade men out of the hygh vvay.

It may be ſufficiente to make a Chriſtian to eſchewe Hereſies, when he vnderſtandeth howe greate offence there is in them. But we wil beſides that partly put you in minde alſo, howe pernicious and noyſome they be. Firſt, to ỹ Heretikes themſelues, and next vnto others. For the Heretikes themſelues doe receyue theſe exceding great harmes therby. Firſte, that they be ledde out of the waye of the Truthe vnto the wilde thicket of lyes. Wherevnto they doe ſo ſtubbornely bend themſelues, that they will neuer, or verye hardlye, abide to be brought backe againe into ỹ plaine high way of ſound doctrine.

It maketh them enimies of the truth.

Secondly, the Hereſies do make them to become aduerſaries and blaſphemours of ỹ Truth, as though it were not pernicious ynough for them to forſake the way of ỹ Truth, vnleſſe they did blaſphemouſly alſo rayle againſt the ſame. Thus hereſies do not only withdraw Chriſtian men from the truth of God, but they doe alſo make them moſt ſpitefull enimies thereof. For like as, ſaith the Apoſtle, Jannes and Mambres, dyd withſtand Moſes, ſo doe they reſiſte the Truth.

Titum.3.

It dothe exclude them out of the Kingdome of God.

Thirdly, Hereſies doe ſhutte men out of the Kingdome of God, as the Apoſtle doth teſtifye, ſaying: When after he hadde reckened hereſies alſo amongſt the workes of the fleſhe, hee dothe conclude in thys wiſe, Of whome I doe warne you before, as

They decay Scrip

I haue tolde you already, that they that do ſuch thynges, ſhall not obteyne the Kingdome of God.

Galathe. It maketh them corrupte in minde.

They do ſhew vnto the Deuill.

Fourthly, they do make them corrupte in mynde. Therefore the Apoſtle dothe call them men of a corrupte iudgemente and minde and reprobate in faithe. And what healthe can there be in that bodye, where the bloud is infected and corrupte? And what ſincere and vpright iudgement in the man that hath a corrupt heart or minde?

Fiftly, hereſies do ioyne them vnto the Deuill, and do make them cõpanions with all the reprobate and wicked, and ſhall at length make thē ſubiect vnto euerlaſting confuſion, what tyme their foliſhe dealing ſhal be diſcloſed vnto al the worlde, as the Apoſtle ſayd it ſhal be. This I haue briefly touched not al, but ſome of ỹ euils only which do betide to the heretikes themſelfe by reaſon of their hereſyes. And woulde to God that they did therein hurte themſelues alone, but it is not ſo. They doe as muche as they can, hurt others alſo. They do exceedingly diſquiet ỹ churches in ſtirring vp quarels, bartace, contention, and moſt poyſoned hartburnyng in them, wherby the tranquillitie and quiet of the Churche, is muche diſturbed.

They do trouble the Church.

Secondly, they doe ſeduce the ſimple. Naughtye perſons ſaith the Apoſtle, and ſeducers, doe growe worſe and worſe, they erring themſelues, and ſeducing others alſo in to erroꝛ. And what can betide moꝛe daungerous vnto anye man, than to chance vpon a ſeducer, by whome he may be ſeduced out of the way of ſaluation, into the bottomleſſe pitte of deſtruction.

Thirdly, they doe decay the authoritie, and commoditie of the holye Scriptures, in peruerting ſomtimes the meaning, and ſomtymes the letter therof. Yea, now and then vtterly reiecting and refuſing ſome part of it: What is this elſe to doe, than to corrupte and ſtop vp the Fountaine of lyfe?

Fourthlye, they doe defame and ſlaunder the Chriſtian Religion amongſt ſtraungers, making them to be ſuſpected of an vncertaincie and vntruth in their Religion by newfangleneſſe and variance. For they do take Heretikes alſo to be Chriſtian men, like as we do them that do liue amongſt the Turkes. And therefore whatſoeuer new doctrines or opinions be ymagined amongſt them, it is imputed not to their vanitie, but vnto the Chriſtian Religion. So ſay they, ſee the Faith of the Chriſtian men, there be therein as many opinions as there be heades, ſo that it appeareth to be nothing elſe, but a verye lincke of all kyndes of erroꝛs. Theſe hurtes be done to the Church of Chriſt by Hereſies, wherefore we had neede to be exceedingly ware of them. A diligente reader may yet gather moꝛe matter out of ỹ writings of the Fathers, but this is as muche as came preſently to my minde.

VII. What is to be done with Heretikes.

In caſe that Heretikes were altogither ſtraungers and forerunners to the Churche and Religion of Chriſt, than the faithful ſhulde haue nothing to doe with them for Heresies, but seeing that they be accounted also to be in the Christian faith, and doe liue in the lappe of the Church, it is not possible, that we can so shift vs, as to haue nothing to doe with them.

Heretike must be reformed.

Therefore we muste see, wherein and who ought to haue to doe with them. Firste, men muste endeauor to reforme them and bring them to a better mind. Here vnto serueth that place of James the laste Chapiter: My brethren. If any of you do stray from the Truth, so that any man doe conuerte him, he muste knowe that whosoeuer do cause a synner to turne from the erroure of his waye shall saue his soule from death. But nowe a dayes you maye fynde menne that wyll trauell rather to ouerthrowe, than to turne Heretikes. The Lord, saith Augustine, dothe ouerthrowe the kyngdomes of error through hys seruauntes, but he giueth charge that the menne, forasmuche as they be menne, shoulde bee rather reformed than lost. Neyther ought we to despayre of the turning of oure brother whyche is fallen into Heresye. For vnleste that suche a one mighte bee conuerted by the Grace of the Lorde, the aduice of James had ben vttterlye to no purpose. This Augustine knewe well, and therefore hee employed hymselfe wholy vnto the conuertyng of Heretikes, and that with greate lenitie and myldenesse of Spirytе, accordyng vnto the monition of the Apostle. And he dydde it not withoute some fruite of hys labye trauayle. For so hee wryteth: For wee doe reioyce of the reformation of many, which do so true lye holde and mainteyne the Catholike vnitie, that they themselues bee gladde, that they be ridde out of their errour, in somuch that we doe wyth greate thankesgiuing, wonder at them.

Against the Epistle to Fundamentus.

August. ad Faustin. 48.

And it is a greate pointe by what manner of reformation, by whome and howe Heretikes be reclaymed. The Papists do suppose that an heretike is reformed, if he forsake his heresye, and become a Papiste, but wee seeke not for such a kind of reformation. There be two partes of reformation: The one is, that whereby he which erreth, is brought out of hys error, and the other whereby hee is ledde to embrace the rightenesse of the Truth. The firste without the laste is not sufficient vnto saluation: and the latter without the firste can take no place nother. He that bryngeth a Iewe from his Iewes obstinacie, so that he be no longer a Iewe as he was before, he hath wrought the firste parte of reformation, but in vayne, vnleste that he bring him also vnto the true Faith of Christe. For in case that he doe make hym of a Iewe an Idolater and a slaue of Antichrist, he hath not reformed ỹ powre man, but chaunged hys naughtinesse into an other sorte of naughtinesse. Therefore let my Maisters the Papistes loke well what manner of Christian man they doe make of a Iewe. The true reformation is altogyther of this nature, that it muste nedes haue both these partes. One wrong is not corrected by an nother wrong, but by the right, one error is not reformed by an other error, but by a truthe, darkenesse is not made brighte with darkenesse, but wyth light.

How and by whom heretikes ought to be reformed. Two partes of reformation.

One Heretike can not be reformed by another.

It belongeth vnto Christian men, to reforme heretikes.

light. So that it is no reformation of an Heretike absolutely to bryng hym from his olde errour, to make him to be otherwise minded than he was before, whiche may be done, in case he be trayned from one errour vnto an nother, but the very way is to bryng him from falsehode vnto the knowledge of the Truth.

By this description of true reformation it doth well inough appeare, by whome it ought to be done, one Heretike can not be well reformed by an other. The Manichee shal not be able to reforme the Arrian. The Papist may burne the Anabaptiste, but he can not reforme him, vnleste that burnyng be reformyng. Wherfore reformation is not the feate of any, but of true Christian folke, by whome the Heretike may be taught not only of his errour, but also of the truthe of God, and so be holesomely reconciled. It appertayneth vnto Christian men, and not vnto Heretikes that the Apostle sayth, you are the light in the Lorde. It belongeth vnto the light to disclose the errours of darkenesse, and to open the truth. Thus no darkenesse though it be neuer so gay is able to doe. Wherefore it is out of the dutie of true Christian men, to ouerthrowe and destroy them that doe erre, but it is peculiar and conuenient for them, to bryng them vnto light and saluation.

Peraduenture no man doubteth of that that we say that it belongeth vnto true Christian men to reforme Heretikes. And in deede there is neuer an Heretike but will boast that he is of the number of true Christiã men. Therefore let vs consider the way whereby Heretikes not onely ought, but bee also reformed of true Christian men, which way they can not folowe whiche be Christians rather in name, than in deede.

The Christian

2. Tim.

Firste, the Christian man dothe reforme the Heretike after the certain and infallible rule or square of the Truth, as Seneca sayde: You shall not amende the crooked, but by the square or rule. And he doth take this rule not out of any olde custome, or decrees of Popes, but out of the writings of Gods worde, whiche the Apostle sayth be profitable vnto doctrine, to reprouyng, to reformation and instructiõ. Therfore the fathers did moste wisely appeale vnto them, as often as they shoulde haue to doe with Heretikes. The writings of the fathers can be no rule or square, bycause they be in many thyngs so wry and crooked, that they nede to be mẽded themselues. And if it were not for that they might as well bee reputed for Canonicall, as they whiche be called Canonicall, vppon this consideration, that they ought to bee in stede of a square or rule, whereunto all things shoulde be leueled & reformed in the Churche of Christe.

The Christian

Secondly, the Christian manne doth endeuour to reforme the Heretike vpon no other motiõ, but of the Spirite of Christe, whiche is the spirite of Loue, mildenesse, humblenesse, and well doyng. It skilleth muche vpon what minde a man endeauour to reforme the Heretike. They whiche doe not seeke his saluation, but theyr owne glory or reuenge, be farre wyde from the spirite of Christ, and they can not to any profite performe the worke of reformation, and strine with bitternesse and wordes inough, but they can not so trayne the minde of him that is out of ỳ way, to bring him to the Truth. It is an olde saying, a mans minde is gentle, manlyne and valiant, it is easyer ledde, than dryuen or drawen. His harte must first be moued, which thyng is sooner and better wrought by good turnes, & by the spirite of mildnesse, than by violence, or much talke and reasonyng. When the harte is once quieted & softened, the eares be lightly moued to heare, and so is the strength of iudgement also to conceyue and vnderstande those things that be spoken, and not to striue, but to consent vnto them, when they bee vnderstanded. Wherfore they do oftentimes trauayle in vaine, whiche goe the contrary way to worke and care not for the harte, but go about to ouercome the minde by disputation, or talke. The hartes of them that be out of the way, be better bowed by the spirite of mildnesse, hūblenesse & well doyng, than by any Logical syllogismes, and arguments.

A mans harte is gentle, manlike, ie is rather ledde than dryuen.

Augustine in the place before.

That Augustine vnderstode, and therefore wrote in this manner. It was our dutie to chose and to wishe the best, that we mighte make our way to your reformation, not in cōtention, brawlyng and persecution, but by comfortyng of you gently, by aduising you fauourably, by reasonyng mildely, as it is wrytten: It behoueth not the seruaunt of the Lorde to stryue, but to be lowly towardes al men, fauourable to teach, patient, reformyng them that be of a contrary minde, in modestie. Thus sayth Augustine.

Thirdly, a Christian man dothe vse suche an indifferencie, that what things soeuer he doth finde eyther in the doctrine, eyther in the lyfe of the Heretike, whiche be good and without blame, he doth not onely not reprehend them, but he doth also alowe and commende them. Wherfore the holy Fathers, as Augustine doth testifie, kepte this holsome custome, to alow rather than to deny any godly, and lawfull thing, that they founde vprightly vsed in any Heresie or schisme, and yet they did truely reproue and reforme all matters that were out of the way, & peculiar vnto the errour & dissention. Thus I say the true Christian man whiche hath the spirite of God, dealeth with the Heretike. As for others whiche bee more sturred with hatred, than moued with any affection of loue, they doe seeke the confusion & destruction of Heretikes, and do impugne, or at the least way dopely dissemble, not only the errours, but their good qualities also: whiche euill dealyng doth more hinder than helpe the reformation of him which is out of the way. For assone as he vnderstandeth that they seeke not to saue, but to vndoe him, and that vpon hatered all those things be condemned in him, whiche be vndoubtedly true, he doth not only not loke to the reformation of his errours, but begynneth rather to embrace them as true, and that more wholely, than he did before.

The Christian man commēdeth the good things that be in an heretick.

But thus muche we haue briefly spoken touchyng of reformation of Heretikes, what, by whom, and how it ought to be wrought. Now let se herte, what is then to be wrought with Heretikes, and by whome and how, when they doe refuse to bee reformed by ỳ doctrine of Gods worde and Arguments either which dehyrthat Heretickes ought to be compelled.

VVhether that heretickes ought to be compelled.

and Christian gentle dealyng. And now the question is, whether it bee lawfull or no to compell them to forsake theyr Heresie, and to embrace the Christiā truth. Some be against it, and some be with it. They that be agaynst it, doe bryng reasons, and Scriptures, whereby they thinke to confirme theyr opinion.

1 First, they doe alleage for thē selues mans frée will, which is giuen of God hymselfe, and thereof they do gather, that it is not conuenient, that any man should be compelled to good, agaynst hys will. GOD (say they,) coulde haue constrayned our firste parentes to continue in theyr obedience, and kéepyng of hys precept whiche he gaue them, whether they would or not, but he lefte them vnto the libertie of theyr owne frée will, to doe of their accorde, whatsoeuer they liked, eyther to kéepe it, either to transgresse it.

2 Secondly, God (say they) is of that nature, that hée doth not alowe them whiche do good enforced and agaynst theyr will, but requyreth of vs to doe those things that be vpright, gladly and willingly. And so the Apostle sayth: God loueth the gladde giuer. Ergo (say they,) it is not Gods will that any man shoulde bée compelled to do good.

3 Furthermore, they do alleage Scriptures. What time (say they) that many of the Disciples went fro the Lorde, he sayde vnto the twelue. Will you be gone also? by whiche wordes he signified, that he cōpelled no man to folowe him agaynst his will. And ỳ Apostle doth in this wise giue order, what a man shoulde doe with an Heretike, if he will not take warning: Refuse or flie the Heretike after one or two warnings. He saith not: in case he will not be ruled, compel him. And vnto Timothe he saith not: Compell them to vnitie, but eschew and auoyde them.

2. Tim. 3. Titum 3.

4 They do alleage also the saying of Tertullian vnto Scapula. It appertayneth vnto the authoritie of the lawe of man and nature, that euery man may worship as hée thinketh good: and one mans religion dothe not hurte or profite an other. Neyther is it any péece of religion, to inforce religion, whiche muste be vndertaken by a mannes owne accorde, & not through violence. These things they doe obiect for the maynteuance of theyr opinion: wherevnto what is to be answeared, and what to bée iudged of the contrary parte, it may be séene in Augustine, in his lacke Epistle vnto Donate the Priest of the Donatistes. And in my opinion we muste first make a differēce betwirt the states of ỳ churche, and secondly, betwirt the two kindes of reformation.

Differēce betwixt the two kings of pulion two kindes of the church.

The primitiue Church of Christ did lacke the authoritie to compell menne to good, as long as the Magistrates were straungers and voyde of Christes religion, vnto whom the office of exercising of all authoritie ouer the disobediente is committed by God. In those dayes when there was no Christian Magistrates, there was no power in the Churche to compell Heretickes vnto reformation. Wherefore the Apostle could not say: Compell the Heretike if hée will not bée ordered after once or twise warnyng. For as muche as the Ministers of the worde coulde not, no nor ought not to compell any man to the obedience of the worde, but it was sufficient for thē, if they did eschewe and flie the disobedient. And it belongeth neyther to the people, nother to the ministers of Chriſte, to compell any man to obey whether he wil or not, forasmuch as they haue not this powre giuē them from God, yea they haue no order or meanes how to compell any man agaynſt the will of the Magistrates. How can or ought the Chriſtian mē whiche doe liue vnder the dominion of the Turke, compell any Chriſtian man whiche is fallen into an hereſie, or elſe is otherwiſe diſobediente, to do that agaynſt his will, whiche they would haue him to doe: hauing no iuriſdiction ouer his body, nother ouer his goodes?

coulde

The condition of the ministers of the vvorde.

So that the example of Chriſte dothe ſerue for the miniſters of the worde to admoniſhe them, how they ought not to enforce menne agaynſt their will. Chriſte came into thys worlde to compel men vnto him. In dēde he coulde haue compelled all men, but he did apply himſelfe vnto the charge that he had taken in hād, and to the cōdition of a teacher. And he that is the miniſter of Chriſte, muſt folow him. This Chryſoſtome did acknowledge, wryting after this manner: In caſe that they which doe allure men from vs vnto the company and ſect of moſt filthy folke, think that they be able to get away ſome great and notable perſon, then they tremble and quake excēdingly, and be much afrayde, leaſt he ſhall turne backe agayne, he will be of their ſide, (ſay they) and in dēde ſuch a fellow will turne a thouſande times. I meane not of them that be ſinners, but in caſe that there be any whiche is without any ſpotte of ſinne, and will be turned and altered, lette hym goe and turne. Surely I am ſory for it, and doe waple and lament, and am ſtryken to the very harte withall, no leſſe then if it chaunced mee to haue one of my owne members cut off. But yet for all that, I doe not ſo lament that, that I ſhal be dryuen vpō this feare, to doe any thyng that is vncomely. Wee doe not lordly rule or gouerne your fayth, my moſte deere brethren, neyther doe we commaunde you theſe things vpon any title of Imperie or Lordlyneſſe. It is the doctrine of the worde which is committed vnto vs, not the authoritie of principalitie or power. Wee ſtande in the degree of counſellers & aduiſors, hee whiche gyueth aduiſe, and ſheweth hys opinion, bothe not compel the hearer: but doth leaue a free choyſe to his power what to doe: and he is to be blamed only for this, if he ſay not thoſe thyngs whiche becommeth him, and which he is bound to doe. This ſayth Chryſoſtome. Nowe compare mee the Prelates of the Churche in our time herevnto, & ſee howe they doe frame themſelues vnto this order of the Byſhops and Miniſters of Chriſte, when they doe with fyre, faggot and ſworde purſue as many as doe diſſent from them. After the iudgemēt of Chryſoſtome (which is in euery behalfe true,) the churche doctours and miniſters of the worde, ought not to compell any man to come vnto them, nor to withholde him when he will depart. The degrees of Byſhops and of Magiſtrates be not all one in the churche.

Chryſoſt. in epiſt. Pauli ad Ephe. hoc mihi.

Note.

It

The order of Magiſtrates and Byſhops in the church of Christ.

It is not the parte of the Biſhop to compell any man againſt their will: and it belongeth to the Magiſtrates to ſuffer no man to ſtirre any thing in the Churche at his owne liberty, eyther in doctrine, eyther in ceremonies, but rather to compel them whether they will or not, vnto the rule of ſounde doctrine, and to the vnitie of the Churche. And, Take me a ſimilitude to vnderſtande thereby, what belongeth vnto a Byſhop, It is not the office of the Phiſition to compel any man to be healed, and yet for all that it chaunceth oftentymes that the patient is compelled, eyther by his parents, or his friendes, and not by the Phiſition, to folowe Phiſicke. So it is not the office of a Byſhop to cōpell folke agaynſt their willes, but it belongeth vnto the Magiſtrates ſo to do, bicauſe of the power whiche they haue receyued frō God. Therefore let the Miniſter of Chriſt haue a regarde vnto his office, and be ready to counſell all men, but let hym compell no man, let him ſuffer ſuch as will departe, to departe, and ſuch as will come, to come, and ſuch as will tarry, to tarry, and withall let him leaue the power of compulſion vnto the Magiſtrates, vnto whō the ſame belongeth & not vnto him.

The argument of free will.

As for that whiche they doe alleage touchyng free will, it is eaſie to bee anſwered. There was gyuen frēdome of will vnto our firſte parents at the begimyng before that they were yet tranſgreſſours, ſlaues vnto ſinne, & corrupted, ſo that they mighte then haue done well if they would. But it is but fondly gathered herevpon, that we muſt giue frēdome of will vnto the corrupte and depraued man, whoſe wil is naught, and harte croked and inſearchable, to doe frankly what he liſte without lawe and interruption. Secondly, this frēdom of wil was ſo gyuen vnto thē, that there was a threatening alſo of death annexed vnto the lawe that was giuen. And I pray you what a libertie was that, which was lifted in with a law, and threatening of death? In caſe that our firſte parents were thus dealt withal before ſinne and corruption of our nature, how much more muſt we be ſo hādled after the ſinne and corruption of mens hartes: that we muſt be compelled vnto good, and from euill, by lawes and penalties? Wherefore it is but a trifle which they argue here of frē wyll. In caſe that the naughty will ſhal not be bridled nor compelled vnto good, then let the whole vſe of lawe and Magiſtrates goe, let ſubiects doe frankly as euil as they liſte, let children runne out at libertie vnto all manner of miſchief without any rodde of diſcipline, or chaſtiſement of their parents, & let no maiſter compell his ſeruaunts vnto obedience, no huſbande reſtrayne hys wife vnto the keping of the promiſſe of mariage and honeſtie, and what can be imagined more vnlawful and noyſome, than this libertie? or ſhall wee thynke that the ſame libertie ought to be gyuen vnto Heretikes, whiche is to be gyuen to no lyuing men elſe? And vnto that point where they ſay, that God doth not alowe it when any good thyng is done with a forced and vnwillyng minde, wee to aunſwere, that there be two kyndes of compulſion, one, when there is nothing elſe ſought, but that the punished

ed worke be absolutely done whether it be willingly or vnwillingly. This vse of compulsion hath place in worldly matters. The other is, when a mã is so long holden & compelled to the doyng of those things that be good, til at length he do them well of his owne accorde. In case ỳ a man may by no meanes be made willing when he is vnwilling, than Jonas was in vayne compelled to preache vnto the Niniuites, & Paule to leaue off frõ the persecution of the church and to become the Apostle of Christe. True it is, that God doth not like a compelled or vnwillyng rightuousnesse, & yet withal he dothe not mislike, if they whiche be subiect vnto powers, be restrayned from euill, and compelled to the good. And who doubteth but that the constrayned rightuousnesse whiche may become willyng with time, is more acceptable vnto hym, than the wilfull vnrightuousnesse, whiche groweth euery day to be greater and greater, till at the laste, it bee paste amendement? When the Magistrate dothe cõpell the heretike to abiure his herefie, leaste he shoulde afterwardes seduce others & cast away himselfe too, he doth that whiche belongeth to the power of his office: and in case the heretike whiche is compelled at the first, do the same afterwarde with a good will, it is wel done and to a good ende. But in case he doe continually remayne vnwillyng, the Magistrate shall not awnswere for it, notwithstanding that the obstinate mynde of the heretike, and his enforced abiuryng of Herefie in it selfe, dothe not displease God. For the Magistrate is excused by the charge of hys office, and is not guilty therein, if the herefike doe not correctly frame himselfe vnto a perfect amendment. For the alteration of the mynde is the worke of God, and not of the Magistrate. But of the Magistrate wee meane to speake in a place alone by Gods leaue.

Here may be a question, whether that it lie in the power of a husband to compell hys wife, a father to compell the sonne or daughter, or of the mayster to compell the man or woman seruaunt to the abiuryng of herefie, and to the confession of sounde doctrine. In my iudgement, in case that suche folke can not be brought vnto a good vnderstandyng by the doctrine of the worde, and gentle correction, it shall not be vnlawfull for the husbande to vse his authoritie vpon his wife being an heretike, and the father towardes his sonne or daughter, and the mayster to his mã or woman seruant, as farre forth as may agree to their condition and estate. But in case that there can be no good done this way, then it remaineth, that they muste be lefte to be restrayned by the power of the Magistrate, as the higher and superiour authoritie. And yet they must exceedingly beware, least of some rage or impatiencie they dispaire not of the conuersion of them, sooner than reason shoulde requyre, and so forgette the duetie of their office, and yelde vnto harder and sharper remedies without any necessitie. That saying of Cato is well knowen, if you giue counsell to any man whiche setteth lighte by it, yet in case he be your friende, doe not so leaue hym. And whereas the Apostle sayth: Eschew the VVhether the husbãd may cõpell his wyfe, the father the childe &c. to the confession of the faith.

Eschew a heretike after once, or twyce vvarnyng, vnde. ffended.

the Hereticke after once or twice warnyng, it is not to bee wyshed vnto all suche as be seduced, specially if they be of our family and household, but it is meante of suche seducers, of whome it can hardly be hoped, that when they haue bene once or twice admonished, they can bee content to be reformed, albeit that they bee oftentymes chastened and corrected.

When and howe, and to what ende, Heretikes might be compelled to amendment by the Magistrate.

The Magistrate muste see, before that hee vse hys power to compell and restrayne heretikes, that the ministers of the worde, Pastors, and Doctors doe theyr duetie vprightly and faythfully, that is to say, that they teache sincerely, that they lyue without blame, and through the spirite of lowlinesse seeke the saluation of suche as bee out of the way, by as muche patience as is possible for thẽ to vse. And there bee twoo reasons why they ought so to doe. The firste is, bycause it falleth out oftentymes, that there ryseth vp Hereses in the church through the faulte of the ministers, yea & do increase also therby after they haue ben bred in some other place. The seconde is, that the Magistrate is somtimes hindered by the faulte of the ministers, and not able to bryng that vnto a good passe, whiche he entendeth to doe in that poynt, by puttyng his authoritie in bre. When the doctrine of the church is eyther vncleane, or negligently and not loked vnto, or sophisticall, and by contentious and cunnyng disputations framed more vnto ostentation of mens witte than to edifying, what can it breede else, but all kindes of errours and hereses? Did not Alexander the Bysshop of Alexandria mynister the occasion to the hereste of Arrian, in that that he negligently vsed the matter in the churche, what time he did rashly and vnaduisedly dispute of the holy Trinitie? as wee may see in the first of ỳ church historyes of Socrates. Wherupon Constantine also the Emperour amongst other matters dothe write in this wise, in the epistle vnto Alexãder, & Arius. I knew ỳ the first occasion of this question was ministred of ỳ, when thou Alexãder didst demaund of the priests, what euery of them thought of a certaine place writte in ỳ law, yea rather of a vaine patche of a certaine question. And thou Arius didst vnadvisedly speake ỳ which either ought not to haue bin thought vpõ at the firste, either after ỳ it was cõceiued in thought, it shold haue bin handsomly couered with silẽce. Wherupõ it is now fallen out, that by this variaunce risen betwixt you, both the whole Synode was disquieted, and the deuoute people is also cut from the consent and harmony of the common body, vnto the parties of you both. Thus sayde hee.

Secondly, the Magistrate muste not bee moued immediatly with the clamors & cries of those ministers, whiche do of spite and not of spirite, prouoke the power of ỳ Magistrate, more to oppresse and destroy them that doe erre, than to reforme them. I haue bothe heard, and knowen of some Anabaptistes, whiche haue

Before the worde to be puttie doctrine of ỳ lyfe, & reuerẽce of ỳ sacra-ments.

Howe he reseis da rise throug the faule e the mi-sters of th vvolde.

Cap. 5.

They shoulde no be heard vvhiche d seeke ra-ther the d struction than refor mation o the here tike.

than

many yeares be kepte in prysone, and cried vpon by the cruell mynisters to be dispatched out of their way, which when they might by the mercy of God with more fauourable ministers, haue bene so talked withall, and perswaded by the grace of God vnto the reformation of their errour, that they haue bene wel called home, yea & some of them haue done good seruice afterwardes in ỹ church of Christe, to conuerte others. Such examples may moue the Magistrate that he doe not so some yelde to the clamors and cries of such ministers, but see rather that the minister doe their dutie faythfully in the feare of the Lorde. But when the minister can doe no good with his diligence, or if there be any daũger, least the scabbed shepe may infect the rest of the flocke, or if they beginne to spread abrode theyr hereſie by teaching, then it is time for the Magistrate to vse his authoritie, whereby to dryue the stubburne & vnquiet persons to kepe silence and better order.

VVhat is to be done with him which kepeth his Hereſie in his harte.

But here riseth a question, what is to be done if a man kepe his hereſie close in his harte, so that it can not come to the knowledge of any man, but of the minister alone: whether that such a one ought to be complayned of vnto the Magistrate or no, when he will not obey the admonition of the minister. In my iudgement it is not mete for the minister of Christe to drawe out the secrete person into the open sighte of the world, for the hidden errour is more easily reformed, than the open. For there is no man that can well abyde to be knowen openly to haue erred. All men doe commonly eschew open shame and rebuke. And he is drawen into the face of the open world, whosoeuer is yelded vnto ỹ Magistrate to be punished. Wherefore the minister had nede to haue a great patience and wisedome herein, least hee do kindle suche an offender agaynst him, by the opening of his errour, & so make him to be more stubborne. For in so doyng, he shall lose all the fruytes of his labours for euer afterwardes. But when it appeareth to be requisite, that the obstinate heretike should be deliuered to the Magistrate to be compelled vnto reformatiõ by other meanes, than by admonitions, it may be better done by some others, than by the very minister of the worde himselfe.

A secrete errour is soner reformed, than an open.

So that it can not be determined in any certaine prescribed rule, what meanes the Magistrate shall vse in compelling of Heretikes. For lyke as men be of sundry dispositions, so they muste bee also bee by sundry meanes compelled, he shall find some whiche canne not be moued by any kynde of death to abiure theyr hereſie, on the other side there be some whiche will not yelde, vnlesse they be hardly handled. Wherefore it appertayneth to the wise Magistrate, so to temper his authoritie in thys case, that he may fruytfully & wholsomely compell them, whiche he entendeth to compell vnto good.

No certayne vvay of punishment to be set.

And this moderation doth chiefly become the Christiã Magistrate, that hee forbeare from fiercenesse and cruelnesse. I will not dissemble, but confesse that I am one of them whiche doe muche misliyke that men be slayne, when the errours shoulde be slayne. This poynt pleaseth no

The ouerthrowe of heretikes be slaine, the more loued.

August. Contra Cresco. gram. Lib. 3. cap. 50.

August. Lib. Quæst. Euangel. Quæst. 40. Super Epist. Galatarum.

men (sayth Augustine) in the Catholyke churche, when there is cruelnesse vsed vnto death agaynst any person, though he be an heretike. Ioan other place he sayth: Loue the men, & kill the errours. Striue for the truthe without extremitie. And agayne he sayth: Let thé rage against vs, which know not howe rare & harde a matter it is to ouercome carnall phantasies with the purenesse of a godly minde. Let them vse crueltie against vs, which know not with how great difficultie the eye of our inwarde mã is healed, to be able to loke vpon his sunne, not this whiche you doe see bright & shining in the beauely body, with the fleshly eyes of beasts & mẽ, but that same whiche the Prophete writeth of, saying: The sunne of righteousnesse is risen vnto me. And of which it is sayd in the Gospel: He was the true light, whiche lightneth euery mã ỹ cõmeth into this worlde. Let thé vse crueltie against you, whiche know not by what sighes & waylings it is wrought, that God may be euery way vnderstãded. Finally, lette them vse crueltie against you, which be themselues deceyued by no such errour, as they do see you deceyued withall, &c. Ergo, it behoueth not wise men to vse extremitie & cruelnesse, no not to the moste detestable heretiks, such as ỹ Manichées were, vnto whom Augustine writeth these things. For asmuch as men of iudgement doe vnderstande with howe great labour the truth is found, and how hardely errours be ensued, and by what sighes and waylyngs it chmeth to passe, that God may in some parte be vnderstanded.

The first of the Emperours that embraced the fayth of Christe, had great care and diligence to dryue the heretikes of that tyme vnto some order, and yet for al that they went not so farre as to seeke their bloud, I meane of them which did maintayne the true faith. For they which defended the hereſie of the Arians, did rage cruelly inough agaynst the Catholikes, whereby we may perceyue in very deede, that the spirite of cruelty doth not belong vnto the true Christians, but vnto heretikes. The christian Magistrate doth punishe heretikes, but so moderately, that they may amend. He suffereth them not to teach of the faith, he doth not permit them to make assemblies, to appoint Bishops & other Ministers, he doth deprive some from their honors and degrees, he doth take from some the cõmunion of the citie, he doth banish, he doth punish some by a fine of monie, as we reade it was done in the time of Augustine, he doth restrayne and kepe the seducers and deceyuers themselues, and shutte them vp in prysone, vntill that they come to themselues agayne, and amende, to the intent that when they appeare once to be past recouerie, they should not seduce any mo. And so they ought to be restrained, which will not yelde to be compelled vnto good.

The first christiã Emperours sought not the bloud of heretiks.

How the Christian magistrates do punish heretikes.

By this moderation of punishments mẽ may attayne vnto the end whervnto the Christian Magistrate ought to shoote and leuell, and that is that heretikes may be conuerted from theyr errours, & be saued after theyr conuersion. He whiche sayeth him that erreth in his errour, either doth not beleeue that he doth pernitiously & dãnably erre in the sight of God, or elſe if he do beleue it, he hath ſmall care of his ſaluation. I ſpeake of thoſe heretikes, whiche notwithſtandyng that they doe grieuously erre, yet for all that they be not blaſphemous againſt God. The lawe of God doth not ſuffer ỹ blaſphemous perſon to liue. The Canonikes and Lawyers doe after many penalties make the laſt to be fyre, & ſay that it is ſo of cuſtome. It may be aſked them, when that cuſtome began, for aſmuche as it was not vſed in the times of the fathers: notwithſtãding they had much ado in ouerthrowing of moſt foule hereſies. It was wont to be ſayd of Antichriſt, that he wold burne them with fire which will not obey him. So that this cuſtome to burne the heretikes, whiche he & his do condemne of hereſie, may be well aſcribed vnto him. For he is ỹ childe of deſtructiõ, ſeruing his father herein, to deſtroy as many as hée can, whom mẽ may thanke of this poynt alſo, that they whiche do recant, can not be ſpared, but muſt be murdered with ſome other kinde of death. If this cuſtome had bene in the church in the fathers dayes, what had become of Auguſtine, ſo notable an inſtrument of Gods, was not he infected a many of yéres with the hereſie of the Manichées, and a ranke heretike? In caſe that the magiſtrate had burned this hereticke, what a loſſe had it bene to the church? Therfore this is my iudgement: Lette the heretikes be compel'ed vnto good, & when they will not be ordered by counſell, let them be reſtrayned and punished by the magiſtrates: but without extremitie and cruelties, and to this ende, that they may be ſuche as may amende, & be ſaued with the faithfull, and ſometimes doe good to the Churche of Chriſte whiche they began to hurt in their errour.

The lawe of God doth not ſuffer the blaſphemous perſon to liue.

When the punishment of fyre began.

But ſome man will ſay: What & if the heretikes can by no reſtraincte be brought into frame and ſet in order when the multitude is infected with hereſie, & the magiſtrates thẽſelues, and higher powers be heretikes? I anſwer, that the ſame which may bée profitably wrought vnto good purpoſe ought not to be ſo preſumed vpon, that it ſal vnto a worſe. For all things ought to be done vnto edifying, and nothyng vnto deſtruction: and the compulſion can not bée profitable, but when hée whiche is compelled, is of an other minde than the multitude is of: but when there is one like diſeaſe in many, or in the mighty, yea and in the Magiſtrate himſelf, there is nothing elſe lefte (ſayth Auguſtine) to good folke, but ſorow and wayling. And for a truth the very caſe it ſelf declareth, that when the faythfull be ſo fewe and feeble, that they be not able to reforme the multitude and the Magiſtrate when they be out of the way, they muſte nédes ſuffer the heretikes, and yet for al that loke wel to themſelues, that they eſchew their hereſie, notwithſtandyng that they can not auoyde their outwarde communication and company. Euen as Chriſte our Sauiour ſayth, that the huſbandman anſwered his ſeruants that would pluckе vp the cockle, or darnell: Plucke not vp the cockle, or darnell, leaſt you plucke vp ỹ wheate withall: that may well be applied vnto this purpoſe, when bothe the might and multitude of the euil that doe

VVhat is to be done if the multitude and magiſtrate be in hereſie.

Matth. 13.

doe erre is ſo great, that they can not be rooted out without the loſſe of the wheate, that is to ſay, of the faythfull: but it is otherwiſe when there be not many, or pallyng one or two to be called vnto reformation, and hauyng not many fauouryng their parte, that they may without daunger be ſo eſchued, that no man ſhall eate or drynke with them: and to be ſhorte, I will before I goe any further, ſette before you the place of Auguſtine. For almuch (ſayth he) as he ſpeaketh vnto his ſeruaunts, hée ſayth not: At harueſt tyme I will ſay vnto my ſeruauntes, Gather vp firſt the cockle, but I will ſay (ſayth he) vnto the reapers, whereby it is vnderſtand, that there be others doe ſerue for the gathering togither of cockle to be burnt, and that no childe of the churche ought to thinke, that this office dothe belong vnto him. Therfore when any man beginneth to be ſpirituall, he knoweth the errours of the heretikes, & doth altogither diſcerne and iudge whatſoeuer he heareth or readeth, ſwarueng frõ the rule of the truthe. And vntill the time that he be made perfect in thoſe ſpiritual maters, and become almoſt through rype to the fruyte, whiche the graſſe yéloed, he may be moued in his owne minde, conſidering, how vnder the name of Chriſtendome, there hath ryſen ſo many falſhoodes of hereſies, and in that reſpecte the ſeruaunts doe ſay, Didſt thou not ſowe good ſéede in thy field, and how commeth it, to be ſo muche darnell in it? Afterwardes when he vnderſtandeth that the Diuell hath deuiſed thys deceyte, to couer his knauery and falſhode vnder the name of Chriſtendome, whereas he perceyued that he was of himſelfe able to doe nothing againſt the power of ſo great a name, he may haue ſome will to ridde ſuche kinde of men out of the worlde if he were able, but hée dothe aſke counſell of the righteouſneſſe of God, whether that hée ought ſo to doe or no, and whether he doe eyther commaunde or permitte him to doe it or no, and whether he would haue this to be the office of men or no, and in this reſpect the ſeruaunts doe ſay: If you will, we will goe & gather them, vnto whome the truthe it ſelfe doth make aunſwere, that a man is not at that poynt in this life, that he can bée aſſured what euery man ſhall be hereafter, whoſe errour, he ſeeth preſently: or what his errour alſo auayleth to the profite and furtherance of the good, & that ſuche folke ought not to be put from this lyfe, leaſt when they ſhal goe about to kill the euill, they may kil the good withall, as peraduenture they might become afterwardes, or leaſte they hurte the good, vnto whom they tarrying peraduenture might bée profitable, whether they will or no. But he ſayde, that it may bée well done then, when at the laſt end there remayneth no tyme, eyther for the chaunge of lyfe, eyther to do good to the truth, vpõ the occaſion and compariſon of an other mans errour, and that then this ſhall be wrought not by menne, but by Aungels. And therefore it is that the huſband man aunſwereth, No, leaſt peraduenture in gatherynge the darnell, they may plucke vp the Wheate withall by the rote. But at the harueſt ſeaſon, I will ſay vnto the reapers, &c.

Legatines sentence wrote but two of the 4 states, to wit, in latin.

And by these meanes he made them most patient and quiet. These be the wordes of Augustine, whereby hée doth expound the parable of the cockles, most aptly in my iudgement, agaynst the killers of Heretikes.

What difference there is betwixt the Heretikes which doe seduce, and them which be Seduced.

Two things to be disalowed in the heretike seducer.

THere be two things worthy to be reproued in the Heretike whiche is a seducer, that is to say, his falshode, and the spreadyng abrode of hys falshode, whereby hée goeth aboute to seduce euery body else. And he can not be excused by pretence of errour and ignorance. For albeit that ignorance may deserue some pardon in him whiche is seduced by errour, yet notwithstanding it is the more aggrauate in the seducer, the greater that the death & destruction is, wherein he decayeth the saluation of the simple persons. Now if that ignorance dothe not so much excuse the seducer, as the poyson of his seduction doth accuse him, who seeth not how damnable and accursed the deceyte of the seducer is, whiche doth not onely erre himselfe, but doth knowing and wittyng perswade that to the vnlearned, whiche he perceyueth to be false, standyng vpon this onely, either to get himself a name, either to serue his gayne and belly. The primitiue or first example of these seducers was in the Diuell, the olde Serpent. He did so seduce Eue our first mother: for he knewe that it was false whiche hée bare hyr in hande. So hée dothe also transfigure and turne hymselfe into an Angell of light, and his Apostles into the Apostles of Christe, whereas hée dothe well knowe, that hée is not the Angell of light, but of darknesse. And that the Apostles whiche he sendeth, be not Christes, but hys owne. Notwithstandyng the slie marchauntes doe deepely dissemble this spectall malice of theyrs, in wittingly and willingly seducyng the simple, when they teache them those things which they know to be false, in stede of true. Therefore the Magistrate muste not haue regard therof, but he hath sufficient occasion to punishe the seducers more sharply than the seduced, bycause that they doe not only miscary themselues, but they doe drawe others also with thé into that bottomlesse pitte of perdition, whether they doe it warely or ignorantly. This kinde of menne ought eyther to be shutte vp in prysons, eyther banished farre off, so that the multitude may be saued frō theyr seductiō, and to the entent they might be brought to amende at somtyme, or other.

Offedacers vvhich doe not seduce but of errour of knovvlege.

In them whiche be seduced, wée must disalow the ouer-hasty credite, which they giue to the wordes of the deceyuers, whereas they ought to kéepe it whole and sounde to the doctrine of the truth onely. For vnlesse they did so some credite, they shoulde not be so some deceyued. And this the ouerhastie beliefe of theirs is either aggrauate, eyther made lesse by the qualitie of the circumstances.

1 Firste, it is a great matter, whether that a mā be seduced wittingly or ignorātly. For it is possible to be bothe wayes: once it is possible for a maried womā to be enticed eyther wittingly, eyther ignorantly. Wittyngly, when she doth knowyng and forseeyng, yéelde vnto the adulterer allured by hys wordes: Ignorantly, when she supposeth that he is hir husbande to whome shé yéeldeth hir selfe, whiche may chaunce sometymes by night. Euen so a manne may forsake the hygh waye, not onely ignorantly, as when he knoweth not that he is strayde out of the right way and gone wrong: but wittingly also, as whē he knoweth wel inough that the same is the right way from whiche he is ledde at, but yet suffereth himselfe to be perswaded of an other as shorter and playner, and so is deceyued by this perswasion, and ledde out of the way. It is a like also in this case. He is wittingly seduced, which is not ignorant that the strade of religion, wherein he hath liued together with other faythfull, is the true way, and leadyng to the kingdome of heauen: but yet for al that he is also perswaded by some sectaries, that there is an other shorter & safer way, whereby he may be saued, and be made partaker of many mo merites, and so he is deceyued and trayned into some secte and Heresie.

If them vvhiche be seduced vvittingly ignorātly.

Their fault greater vvhich begin a vvil offe- vvithin the Churche then suffer to be deceyued.

2 Secondly, they whiche beyng in the Churche where the worde of God is purely taught, and where the light of the truth, whiche is sette vp vpō the candelsticke, doth giue light vnto al thē that be within the house, and doe yet not withstandyng gyue eare vnto the seducyng heretikes, & so bée seduced themselues, deserue more blame than they whiche doe liue in the Churches that doe lacke the light of Gods worde, and there be seduced by suche craftie conueyers as there be. Who seeth not that the wyfe whiche neuer lacketh the presence and company of hyr husbande, and yet will harken and bée allured by the inticements of the adulterour, deserueth lesse pardon, than she whiche is seduced as forsaken by the falshode and euill handelyng of hir husbande?

They do sorer offā vvhich do folovv an herefie a the first b ginnyng thereof.

3 Thirdly, they doe more grieuously offende, whiche be seduced at the firste beginnyng of the heresie, when there be fewe folowers thereof, than they whiche do at length departe from the true religiō, by what tyme they haue the multitude & the Princes themselues to lead them. For like as ỹ Apostles whiche were the firste folowers of Christe, ought to haue more commendation than others, which began at the later hand to sticke vnto hym, when they sawe that the Magistrates and whole nations dyd beléeue on him. So on the contrary parte, there is more faulte in them, whiche doe euen at the very firste pulse embrace a newe sprong heresie, than they whiche doe latewardly come vnto it.

4 Fourthly, they be in lesse fault, whiche doe therefore credite Heretikes the sooner, bycause they doe not openly slaunder the truthe of God, and the receyued doctrine, than if they shoulde heare that they do seeke to deface the same.

He hath lesse excu vvhiche deceyu by bare vvorde

5 Fiftly, they which doe vpon a head, strayght way beléeue the only bare wordes of heretikes, without any testimony of prowe and of miracles, do more offend, than they which be seduced as deceyued by miracles. For so it faareth with them which be now a dayes called Dauidias. They gaue credite vnto the moste wicked and shameleſſe naughtypacke Dauid George, which did openly slaunder Christe, and auaunced himselfe farre aboue him, and that in fonde talke and wordes alone.

6 Sixtly, this point is aggrauated also by those causes, of which we made mention before in the fourth article. For they whiche be moued eyther of some curiositie, eyther of some lothsomneſſe of sound doctrine, eyther vpon some other like occasiō, to beleue false seducing Heretikes, they haue leſſe to lay for themselues, than they whiche doe beleue a false tale, as moued vpō some good Zele, thinking that they do folow ỹ truth. This we may find to be great differēce not only betwirt them that be seduced, & such as do seduce them, but betwirt the very seducers also, yea & also betwirte them that be seduced, whereof I thought good to speake, to minister vnto thē some occasiō to vse a cōuenient discretiō with heretikes, whose office & suite it is to sustayne the care of the reformation of them.

Howe Heretikes ought to be receyued.

Three kindes of heretikes.

THere bee three sortes of Heretikes. The first is of thē which doe institute no Churche, nor haue receyued themselues, nor ministred vnto others any other Baptisme thā the same whiche is giuen in the true Churche of Christe. The seconde is of them, which beyng once baptised in the true Churche, be baptised againe by heretikes. The thirde is of them, whiche be consigned firste in baptisme, not in the true, but heretical churche: of these, the two laſte, some of the Fathers woulde not receyue, vnleſſe that they were baptised a newe. And Augustine, and some other of the old fathers were against them. And we reade, that this question was treated of in many Councels. The later men decreed, that it suffised for the receyuing of an heretike, if the Bysshoppes handes were layde vpon him. So that the fathers were not alwaies neither of one opinion, albeit that the Papists do take the mayntenaunce of their errours from them. We doe agrée in iudgement with Augustine, that the Heretike must be after an other sorte receyued into the church, than he whiche was before a straunger vnto Christ. The latter not without Baptisme, to be consigned thereby vnto Christe, as by the Sacrament of cōmission: the other without iteration or renewyng of Baptisme, so that he were baptised before in the name of the holy Trinitie, none of them both without amendment and penaunce, bothe for theyr errours, and also for theyr former lyfe.

Augustine.

Howe the burnyng of heretikes bokes.

Howe it is conuenient to receyue heretikes which do amende.

Notwithstanding, for the receyuing of Heretikes, I think we ought to haue a great consideration of the church, and of him also whose saluation is sought vpon, so that in case it be the ringleader or archheretike, that doth amend, he is otherwise receyued than he which was deceyued and seduced by an other. Yea and the secrete Heretike after one sorte, and the open heretike after an other sort, and one alone, one way, and many, an other way. The case may require to haue an open and solemne recantation tion of his errours: and the confession of the founde doctrine of Christ: and sometimes there is no necessitie thereof, whiche matter the faythfull and wise minister of the worde may conueniently and profitably order, accordyng vnto the consideration and qualitie of the case. And shall specially forsee, that he whiche is receyued, vnderstande & perceyue that he is louingly receyued, as of his brethern not disdaynfully, as of his enimies.

What is to be done vvith the bookes of Heretikes.

THe fire knights doe pronounce, that the Heretikes bookes muſt be burnt with their mayſters. And it is a very ready way surely to burne and consume altogither, not only those workes which be naught, but those also which be good and profitable. But that way is not so ready to cleare and discerne the case (for that the eyze regardeth not) and it is to troublesome a matter for suche greate Lordes and Prelates to vndertake. One of them is better able and willyng to sette a eyze in a thousande bookes, than to reade a lyne of one of them. They doe alleage the place out of the Acts of the Apostles, where we doe reade: how that they whiche had folowed curious matters, brought theyr bokes togither, and burnt them before them all: accomptyng the value of them, founde that they were worth fiftie thousand pence. And vpon this authoritie they suppose that they doe make a maruelous strong argument in this wyse: In case that the bookes of the curious folkes were burned in the Apostles times, howe muche more ought the bookes of heretikes be burned? Those curious bokes were full of witcherafies, inchantmentes and diuinations, and they serued for the worship of Deuils, so that it was not without great cause, that they were burnt. No man doth denie, but such ought to be burned also now adaies. But there is an other manner consideratiō to be had of heretikes bokes. In them there bee many good matters mingled with the euill, whiche ought not to be contemned. Yea although that there be many euil matters and fewe good, yet for all that men ought not to set light by the cōmoditie of the few. And it chanceth oftentymes, that the false may be refuted by the true, whiche bee founde scatered in the heretikes bokes, as Augustine vsed, & was wonte for to doe. For it is not possible, that hee whiche goeth aboute lies in steede of true tales, shoulde alwayes remember what he had sayde before. And thereof came the Prouerbe, that the liar had nede to remember himselfe wel. Therfore it is not without reason, that Augustine admonisheth me to reade the bokes of heretikes, but warely. They doe teache profitable things in many of their bokes, and meddleth not with the maintenance of their heresies, & there euery man may reade them to their profite. For they be not all lies that be in those bokes, nother where they do intreat of their doctrines, but there be many true thinges mingled withall, whi he learned men vse to reade to the confutation of the false.

Libro. 3. Doct. Ch. capite. 50

Secondly, the Apostles did not burne those curious bookes, of which mention is made in the Actes, nor any others, at the commaundement of the Apostles, but they which were the owners of them. They brought forth their bookes vpon their owne accorde, and burnt them in the sight of them all. But we doe see the matter handeled farre otherwise now a dayes. They doe by violence pull bookes from men, not of heresie, but such as be good and godly, after they haue once condemned them, and doe deliuer them to their executioner to be burned, wherin they do so outrage sometimes, that they hurle the holy bibles, and specially the bookes of the new Testament into the fire, which we haue seene done in Vniuersities, to the great shame & slaunder of learning. So that this example whiche they do alleage so far from the purpose, doth nothing serue the turne of the booke burners.

Whether they reade heretiks bokes.

And yet withall, I will not so maynteyne heretike bookes, that I would haue them read at liberty, and without discretion, of euery man that liste. The vnskilfull and vnlearned sorte, whose senses be not yet so practised to iudge vprightly, that they can accordyng vnto the opinion of the Apostle proue all things, and sticke to that whiche is good: muste haue things layde vnto them out of the Scriptures, meete for their vnderstandyng: but as for the rest whiche be able to iudge, it may be borne with them, to proue al things frankly and profitably, to hold such things as be good, & vtterly to auoyde those things that be euill.

I will here alleage what Hierome wrote of this matter, vnto Trãquillus in this wise. For asmuch as thou doest aske my poore Iudgement, whether that accordyng vnto the opinion of our brother Faustinus, Origine ought to be vtterly abandoned, or else after the opinion of some men, redde in some parte: I am of the opinió, that Origen should be reade sometimes, as Tertullian is, Nouatus, Arnobius, Apollinarius, and certayne other church writers, as well Greeke as Latine, so that we may picke out that whiche is good of them, and refuse the contrary, as the Apostle sayth: Proue al things, and sticke to that whiche is good. But they whiche of a naughty stomache and minde be drawen either into ouer-great loue, eyther into sore hate of him, they seeme to me to be in daunger of the Prophets curse, whiche pronounceth Wo vnto them that doe reporte good to be euill, and euill to be good, whiche do make that which is sowre, sweete, & that whiche is sweete, sower. For no man ought to receyue hys euil opinions, because of his good doctrine, nor wee ought not vtterly to refuse those good and profitable commentaries whiche hee wrote vpon the holy Scriptures, by cause of the naughtinesse of his opinions. But in case that his fauorers and slaunderers will stil stryue & cõtende, and be content to keepe no meane, but will eyther onely alowe hym or disalowe him, I had rather chose the godly rudenesse, than the learned slaũder. This saith he: which saying is so written for an answere touchyng the bookes of Origen, that it may be well applied also vnto the bookes of other Heretikes.

Hierome the reader of Origens bookes.

Whether that the appeachment of Heresie ought to be patiently suffered or no.

The saying of Hierom not suffering the iudgment of Austin.

Hierome writing vnto Pammachius against Iohn the Bishop of Hierusalem, sayth, that he would haue no man to be patient in the suspition of heresie. And he giueth the reason why: least the dissembling or saying nothing, be iudged for a conscience, if he holde his peace amongst them whiche knowe not his innocencie. And I will briefly declare my minde, by other mens leaue, what I thinke of this saying of his.

1 First, there is no kinde of slaunder wherewith our innocency is touched so outragious, but the godly and most innocent person ought patiently to sustayne it. Wherefore whereas he saith: I will not haue any man to be patient in the suspition of heresie, in my iudgemente it is not verye well aduisedly spoken, if you enforce the words. For what followeth thervpon else, if a Christian man shal not be patiente, no not in the suspition, much lesse at the open slaunder of heresie, but that it is required of vs, that we muste be impatiente in thys poynt, which no peece of holy Scripture doth teache vs: But as it appeareth, he meant by the worde, to be patiẽt, to dissemble, and to say nothing. For as much as he saide after, Least his dissembling, or saying nothing, be taken for a confession or conscience, If he holde his peace amongst them, whiche do not know his innocency. And yet for all that it is not al one for a man to suffer patiently to himselfe the wrong whiche is done vnto him, and to dissemble and holde a mans peace. Nor it is no impatiencie, if a man do not holde his tong when he is charged with heresie, but do with gentle words maynteyne his innocẽcie. Christ our sauiour which was most patient of al others, when he was stricken, sayd: In case I haue spoken euil, giue witnesse of the euil, and if I spake well, why doest thou strike me? These wordes did not breake his patience, and yet he dyd thereby sufficiently vphold his innocencie. Wherefore I suppose that the meaning of Hierome in these words was this: I will not haue any man to be so patient in the suspition of heresie, that he shall dissemble hys innocencie, and say nothing vnto it, least he be iudged to doe it so, that his owne conscience accuse him of the heresie.

2 Secondly, we muste thinke thys also. The Papistes doe call me heretike, by what proofe therefore shall I testifie and declare my innocencie, by impatiencie, and not suffering the slaunder? But it is no proofe of innocencie, when a man doth not patiently suffer a wrong. For they whyche be rankest Heretikes, can abide nothing worse, than to be charged with heresie, and do make a marueilous adoe thereat: and yet for all that they can not trie themselues to haue that innocencie, whiche they haue not, with all their loude and lewde clamors and out cries. If you cal a harlot, harlot, she can not hold hir peace, but sheweth hir selfe to be moste impatient therof. So that for the proofe or triall of a mans innocencie, there is not requisite any impatiencie, but a sober vpholding of the truth, which may be vsed by the most patient person that is.

That ought to be perceiued in Hierom.

3 Thirdly, it is a great matter also what they be whiche call vs Heretikes, and in comparison of whome we be reputed for Heretikes. Hierome writeth in this wise: If I bee called Heretike of the Arrians, it is worthely. Why doth he say, that hee is worthely called Heretike by the Arians, whereas they were the Heretikes and not he? Bycause that in respecte of them he was an Heretike. For he did so differ from their heresie, that he could not be otherwise taken of them, than for an Heretike. In case that the Arrians faith had bin vpright and good, then no doubt Hieroms faith hadde bin heresie. So they take it to be, and therefore he sayth, that he is worthily called heretike of them. To say the truth, to be an Heretike to the Arians, is to be no Heretike to Christian folke. There is no true Christian man, but he is an Heretike to the rankest heretikes in the world. But it is one thing to be an Heretike vnto Christiā men, and an other matter to be reputed for an heretike of heretikes.

Therefore let vs saye also: If the Papists do cal vs Heretikes, yea and well worthy. For we be and will bee any thing rather than Papistes, as long as we intende to kepe oure promise safe and sound, whiche we haue made vnto Christ our sauioure. But they take euery man to be an Heretike, that is not a Popish Christian, for they do account vs for heretikes for no other cause, but for that we do not in all poynctes agree with them in opinion. Surely I had rather be an heretike vnto them, than a catholike vnto whome the very Apostles, if they were alyue, shoulde be reckte ranke Heretikes, vnlesse that they woulde subscribe vnto them in all things. We doe stedfastly holde the beliefe of the Apostles with ỳ Crede also of Athanasius. And we do embrace all the holy scriptures of bothe Testaments, for Canonicall and allowable: and yet the Papistes do not take vs to be Catholikes, bycause that we do differ from them in anye of their opinions, whiche they be not able to teach and proue to be true by anye authoritie of the holye Scriptures. So that I do not only take it patiently, but doe reioyce also that it is my chaunce, by the grace of the Lord to be one of that number, which be now adayes accounted heretikes, with the Papistes, bycause they will no longer be Papistes. And as I say of Papistes, so I iudge the like also of all Heretikes, what soeuer secte they be of. I can be contented to bee accounted for an heretike vnto al heretikes, so that I may be knowē still for a Christian man vnto such as bee Christians.

I am not moued when the Papists doe call me heretike.

But in case that they call me Heretike, whom I do embrace for christians and my moste deere brethren in the Lord, I will impute it not vnto their malice, but to their errour and zeale, as not sufficiently instructed of the truth. And God forbydde, that I shoulde lacke that modestie whiche is méete for Christian folke, and call them eyther Heretikes agayne, eyther by some other slaunderous name. But I must rather praye vnto God, to deliuer their hearts frō the tentation whiche they be burthened withall, by the light of his truth, and VVhat is to be done when our brethern call vs heretikes.

and I muste withall willingly declare the grounde and nature of my faith.

And this we haue spoken peraduenture more than ynough of heresie, what it is, howe sundrye heresies ther be, wherof heresie cōmeth, what kind of mē are soneste seduced by heretikes, how heresies be blame-worthy, how hurtfull they be, what is to be done with Heretikes, howe Heretikes ought to be receyued againe: what is to be done with Heretike bookes, and lastly, howe the charge of heresie ought to be borne and abidde.

Of Schisme.

The greatest sores that the Churche of God is subiect vnto, be heresie & schisme, of which the former doth corrupt the sincerite and pureneste of our faith, and the latter doth depart and breake the vnitie of the Church and the band of peace, that is to saye, Christian loue and Charitte. Wherefore now that we haue spoken almuch as we haue thought good of Heresie, we thinke it not amisse to saye somewhat also of Schisme, and that not so muche for them, which be offenders therein, as for the true Christians whiche are wont to be wrongfully charged with the wickednesse of Schisme.

What Schisme is.

Schisme is a Greeke word, lyke as Heresie is, and signifyeth a cutting of a diuision or a breach, deriued from the Greeke worde σχίσα, which is as much to say, as to cutte, to diuide and to breake asunder. Augustine dothe allow their definition, whiche doe defyne Schisme to be a new dissention of some congregatiō vpon a diuersitie of opinions: and heresie an old worne Schisme. But seeing that the signification of thys worde is manifest, and knowen, I thinke it a playner way to defyne a Schisme to be a cutting asunder of the Ecclesiasticall vnitie and peace, whereby the felowshyp of the faithfull is deuided into partes and opinions: and that it skilleth not whether that it be new or olde, or else frō whence it procéede. It was surely a Schisme, when the Corinthians were diuided into parties, and sayde one: I am of Paule, and an other: I am of Cephas, and an other: I am of Apollo. Lyke as ỳ Schisme of the kyngdome of the Israelites was when the tenne trybes were separated from Juda and Beniamin, vnder Roboam, was as well a schisme when it came to be olde vnder ỳ lasse kings of that people, as when it was yet but now begun vnder Roboam. So the Schismes also of the Church be as wel schismes after al their ancientie of times & cōtinuance, as they were at the firste beginning, though they cōuey ỳ neuer so great a colour of ỳ catholike Church, bycause they haue bin so lōg vsed and accustomed.

What difference is betvvixt Heresie and Schisme.

Men doe make this difference betwixte Heresie & Schisme, ỳ it is Augustin. de Ciuit. Dei. Crisostom. Gal. 5. Lib. 2. cap.

heresie,

hereſie, when anye falſe doctrine is obſtinatelye vpholden in the matter of faith, contrarye vnto the common meaning of the Churche: and that it is a Schiſme, when the Churche is diuided vpon any opinion in doctrine or for anye other cauſe. And ſo it is poſſible that there may be a ſchiſme in the Churche without hereſie, and as ayne an hereſie without a ſchiſme. When the Phariſes ſaid: This man is not of God, whiche kepeth not hys Sabbath. And whereas on the other ſide ſome ſaid: How can a ſinner doe theſe ſignes? no doubte there was a Schiſme amongſt them, as the Euãgeliſt alſo dothe touche. But in that Schiſme there was no hereſie, as there was not in that matter neyther whereof we doe reade in the tenth Chapiter. Agayne, when an hereſie is ſo growen in a Churche, that it is nowe become Catholike or vniuerſall, and that there is no bodye to ſpeake againſte it, is not there an hereſie without a ſchiſme? whiche for all ỳ could not be without a ſchiſme when it firſte beganne. It is a cléere caſe, that the Popery is full fraught ted with al kindes of erroures, ſeductions, and with the firſte hereſie that euer was ſo called, Symony, and yet notwithſtanding the Papiſtes doe ſo agrée all in one, aboute the matter, ỳ they ſéeme to be voyd of Schiſme, and therefore doe crake and boaſte themſelues to be very catholike.

Ioan. 9.

Hereſie may be without ſcisme, and ſcisme without hereſie.

Hovv many kindes of Schiſmes there be.

Schiſme good and euill.

There be of Schiſmes ſome good and ſome euill. That is an euill ſchiſme, whereby the good vnitie and concord is cutte and put aſunder: and that is the good ſchiſme, when the naughtye knotte and neſt is broken. The vnitie of ỳ Iewes was naught before they hearde the doctrine of Chriſt, and that concord was broken by ſchiſme after ỳ hearing of Chriſt. So we doe reade in John: And there was a ſchiſme a newe amongſt the Iewes, bycauſe of theſe wordes and talke. For manye of them ſaide: Hée hath a Deuill, and is madde. Why doe you harken vnto him? Others ſayde: Theſe be not the wordes of one that hathe a Deuill. Can a Deuill open the eyes of the blinde? Thys ſchiſme the doctrine of Chriſt ſtirred vp amongſt the Iewes. And what godly perſon will ſay, that the vnitie and concord which went before, was better than it? By the lyke ſchiſme the whole worlde was diuided afterwards through the preaching of the Goſpell, whiche diuiſion Chryſte doth expreſſly chalenge vnto himſelfe, ſaying: I came not to ſend peace, but a ſworde. For I came to ſeparate, &c. This ſchiſme came vppon good, that is to ſaye, vppon the Goſpell of ſaluation, and it tended vnto a good ende, that is to ſay, vnto the ſaluation of mankynde: and it dyd breake vppe the naughtye vnitie whyche reſted in the Catholike or vniuerſall blyndneſſe of mennes mindes, and it called all menne vnto the true vnitie.

Ioan. 10.

The ſchiſme whiche the Corinthians were in, was naughte, and it is reprehended and corrected by Paule. For it came firſt of ỳ naughtye meanyng of the falſe Apoſtles, and ſecondly it did breake aſunder ỳ good vnitie of the church in ỳ faith of Chriſt.

1. Cor. 11.

Chriſt. The faithfull were well knit togither in Chriſte, Therefore they were naughtily deuided. He whyche dothe ſeparate them that doe well cleaue togyther, dothe bryng in a naughtie ſchiſme. They doe cleaue well togither, whome God hath knit togither: And they naughtily, whom the Deuill hath linked togither. So that the one ſorte be ſeparated by a naughty ſchiſme, and the other by a good ſchiſme. But we haue noted muche touching this matter in oure Commentaries vppon John, and before in the place Of the Church.

Secondlye, ſome ſchiſme dothe breake the Chriſtian integritie or ſoundneſſe, whiche conſiſteth in the puritie of faith and charitie: ſome other dothe not breake it, but rather preſerue it, if there be any alreadye, and brééde ſome, if there be none before. And that is a good ſchiſme, whiche dothe not breake it when it findeth any there, but preſerueth it, and bréédeth ſome if there be none. That is naught which doth ſcatter and deſtroy the Chriſtian ſoundnes where it is. Suche diuiſions alſo when the body of the Churche is diuided, as it were into hys members, doth not annoy the Chriſtian vnitie and cõcord. There be degrées of miniſters of hearers, and there be diuiſions alſo of graces or gyftes: And the one Churche of Chriſte whiche is diſperſed through the compaſſe of the whole worlde, is diſtincted into manye particularities: and the notable Churches haue theyr difference to themſelues, and all doe not vſe one kynde of rites and ceremonies. Such manner of ſchiſmes or diuiſions doe not hynder, but help the vnitie of the Churche.

Thirdlye, there is one kynde of ſchiſme whych conſiſteth in ſentence and opinion, an other in the eccleſiaſticall communion, and an other in names and diſciplines. It was a ſchiſme in ſentence or opinion, when ſome ſaid of Chriſt, He is good: ſome others reported the contrary of him, and ſaide: He is not good, but he ſeduceth the people. Others ſaide: This man is not of God, which kepeth not the Sabboth: Others ſayde agayne. Howe is it poſſible for a ſinner to worke theſe ſignes? It was a ſchiſme alſo of ſentence or opinion, when the Church was diuided (in tymes paſt) about the kéeping of the feaſt of Eaſter, and about the bread of ỳ Lordes ſupper.

Some ſchiſme of ſentence, ſome of eccleſiaſticall communion, & ſome of diſcipline. Iohn. 7.

The ſchiſme of communion is, when Churches be deuided not only in opinions, but in the very communion of the Sacraments alſo of the Church, ſo that the one doth eſchewe the communion of the other as damnable. It is a ſchiſme of names and diſciplines, whiche maketh ſo manye ſortes of Monkes and Friers, as profeſſed vnto ſundry maiſters, whoſe diſciplines and rulers they do vndertake to followe. The ſchiſme of Heretikes, which doth riſe vpon the doctrine of faith, muſt be referred vnto the ſchiſmes of ſentences and opinions: and thoſe alſo which do riſe vpon the Preſidents or Paſtors of Churches, as allowed by ſome, and refuſed by other ſome. We could yet recken vppe other kindes of Schiſmes, but this is ſufficient for this place.

Whether

Whether that vve be rightly called Schismatikes by the Papistes.

WE touched this matter before in the place Of the Church, where we spake somewhat of the vnitie of the church, and whether that a Christian man maye without offence depart from the Church or no. Wherfore I will be the shorter in it here. If anye man aske me, whether that the Papistes doe arighte charge and condemne me of schisme, I can not confesse the charge as it is ioyned with any offence. And yet I must acknowledge that it is not without reason, that he calleth me schismatike. For it is one thing to be called absolutely Schismatike, and an other to be in fault of schisme. Christ our only sauior and Prince of peace, was a schismatike vnto the Iewes, yea and to all the world. The Apostles were schismatikes. And they were all schismatikes both Iewes and Gentiles, as many as beleeued in Christe, and brake the vnitie of that religion, wherein they were borne and bredde. But suche manner of schismatikes doe deserue no condemnation, but commendation. And suche like is the condition of oure schisme, whereby we haue diuided the Churche of euill doers, and broken the vnitie of their errours and seductions. In this respect we doe acknowledge our selues to be, and to be also called aright Schismatikes. Let them keepe to themselues the vnitie of errours and of their Popish Catholike Apostasie, and lette vs be schismatikes, fallers away, and forsakers of their Church, and the daye of the Lord shall iudge and trye thys cause of our difference and dissension.

Schisme is one thing, and the fault another.

But whereas this Schisme of oures is condemned as faultye and worthye blame, that is the poynte whiche we doe not confesse, nor they able to proue that we ought to confesse it, vnlesse that they can first declare, that we haue broken the vnitie of the true Church, whiche consisteth in the true doctrine, faithe and religion of Christ. Firste, the very manifest declaration of Gods truth, hathe compelled vs to dissente from the superstitious sufficiaries, Pharisies, hypocrites, and idolaters, in manye counterfaite and false doctrines, and so to enter into the schisme of opinion. Secondly, there followed after thys the schisme of the Ecclesiasticall communion, for almuch as the Prelates of the Church woulde not abide to haue any of those thynges, whiche oughte to haue bin either reformed, either vtterly taken awaye, to be found fault withall, much lesse to be either reformed, either quite taken away. Thirdly, whereas we doe forbeare from their communion, they were not contented therewith, but did condemne vs of heresie, and most fiercely persecute vs, as they do still. The manifest shewing and lokyng vnto the truthe of their parte, might haue kept the Christiã vnitie, and stayed that ther should haue bin no schisme in the Church of God, if they could haue loued the light thereof, more than the darkenesse of errors. So that there is not onely no blame of Schisme in vs, from whych we be cleered by the necessitie of oure charge to kéepe the truth: but it is also most clearely conuinced and proued, that the whole occasion of these dissentions and schismes, lyeth vpon the neckes of the Prelates of the churches themselues. And in case that they pretende that it is not true that we saye, they be at libertie to auouche and proue the truth of their matter, and the falshode of oures, by the testimonies of holy Scriptures: whiche if they were able to doe, they shoulde handle the matter more honestlye and vprightely, than as they do, seéking to haue the vpper hand, by swoord, halter, and fyre.

How the schisme of our time is Wherof Schismes do come.

THere can be no schisme or diuision, where there is no knot or coniunction. Therefore God is indiuisible, bicause that he is not made of partes, but is of nature most simple. So there can rise no Schisme betwixte vs, which be Christians, and the Iewes or Turkes, bycause we be not ioyned togither in any knotte of religion. But when there is a coniunction of many knitte togyther as it were into one body, then ther may be some schisme. So the church whiche is compacted and framed into one body of a multitude of faithfull, may be touched with schismes. And nowe if you aske me the matter and occasiõ of these schismes in ỹ church, surely the chiefe and generall cause of them is, the diuersitie of the members which be there compacted togyther. For like as our bodyes be therfore apte and easie to be parted asunder and diuided, bycause that they be made of partes, diuers in nature, that is to say, made of flesh and spirit, and of moyst, hote, colde, and moyst qualitie, so it fareth also with the church. In case that they whiche be assembled into the Churche were fullye of one minde in all poyntes, agreeyng all in faith, hope and loue, and all electe, then there should no schisme in religion take place with them: but for as much as ther be mingled some euill with the good, in the congregation of the Church, ioyned somewhat togither by the outward felowshippe only, which is of names and ceremonies, and not by the inward communion of true godlynesse and of one spirite, it is not possible but that there must sometymes ryse some schisme amongst them, vppon some occasion, to cause them to fall asunder one from the other. In case that they were all euill, they myghte stiffely sticke togither in euill, and all alyke abhorre that which is good and true: Againe, if all were electe and good alike, they might all with one hearte and minde persist and continue out in the true faithe and Religion of Christ. But now, seeyng that we bée nother all good, nother all euil in this lyfe, but that we be ioyntly good and euill in the Church, euen as wheate and darnell be in the field, it can not bée chosen, but that there must needs happe some occasion of Schisme, whereby that outwarde felowshippe must fall asunder. The occasion of the euill Schisme riseth of euil, and by reason of the euill which the electe and good can not subscribe and consente vnto. But the beginnyng and occasion of the good Schisme, proceedeth of the good, and bycause of good thynges whereunto the euill can not assente. So that the blame of the euill Schisme muste not bée attribute vnto the good, but vnto the euill: as for the occasion of the good Schisme, the good do not refuse, but are glad to acknowledge it. Thus I suppose it appeareth, whereuppon Schismes do rise in the Churche. In ỳ naughty Schisme we must charge not only the cause, but the blame also vpon the euill and reprobate, and not vpon the good, whiche be neyther the begynners or occasioners of it, nor do not offend at all, in that that they can not followe euill folke in an euill matter.

There can be no diuision, but where there is no knot or coniunction.

V Which of the euill be specially occasions of schismes. Osee. 9.

And whiche of the euill persons chiefly be ỳ occasioners of Schismes in the Churche, the case is so playne, that Hierome vpon Oseas dothe expressly say: When I do search old hystories, I can not fynde that anye haue diuided the Churche and seduced the people, out of the house of the Lord, but such as haue bin placed by God for Priests and Prophets. And therefore it was appoynted, that they be wont to chose one out of the mids of the Priestes, to be aboue the rest, to the intente to cutte off the occasion of schisme, least when each one shall goe about to drawe the Church vnto hym, it may be rēt and torne by the meanes. And the same Hierome touched the same pointe also in other places: But they do lay the place of the Psalme vnto vs: They diuided my garmentes amongst them, and caste lotte vppon my coate: and they doe make the garment or coate of Christ diuided, whiche notwithstanding the Souldiers would not part nor cutte, because it hadde no seame, but was wroughte whole ouer. And they doe construe this to be the vnitie of the Churche, whyche ought not to be parted asunder: But I beseech you, let all wise folke iudge, what kynde of souldiers these be, whiche do saye: Let vs not cutte this coate: and why they do say so. Is it for Christes and his Churches sake? or else for desire of gayne, and of preferremente in the Churche? Loke vpon the hystories of the councels, and see, whether that the Bysshops of Hierusalem, of Alexandria, of Constantinople, and of Rome, as it were for stoute souldyers, haue not sayde, that they wouldo not haue the Churche parted, but added withall, Yet let vs cast lotte, whose it shall be, in that they haue sought eache of them to be taken for the vniuersall Bysshop and Lorde of the whole Churche? What was thys else, but that they wouldo not haue Christes coate, that is to saye, the vnitie of the Church parted, and yet notwithstandyng that eache of them sought withall to bryng it into hys owne iurisdiction? Herevppon came so greate Schismes amongst those principall and head Churches, that euerye of them wouldo rather haue the vnitie of thys garment not deuided asunder, than to haue no peece of it at all. Notwithstandyng these Schismatikes doe reproue vs with the Schismes of oure tyme, as though that the vnitie of Chrystes Churche hadde continued whole and sounde vntill oure dayes, and that they themselues were voyde of all blame of Schismes.

Epist. ad Evagrium. Et in Comment. in Tit. cap. 1. Psalme. 22. Of the cutting of Christes coate.

Hovv greeuous the sinne of Schisme is.

There be some which do make the offence of Schisme equall with the offence of Heresie, and there be some whiche doe enforce Heresie aboue it. Surely any man may easily vnderstande, that it ought to be accounted no trifle, whosoeuer wayeth howe noysome a matter it is, and contrarye vnto brotherly Charitie, whiche is the badge or cognisaunce of all Christian men.

The Schismatike doth departhim-self.

Firste, the Schismatike dothe endaunger hys saluation, when he departeth awaye from the communion of the Lordes flocke. For by that departure hee is sequestred and turned out not onely from that Ecclesiasticall and outwarde fellowshyppe of the faithfull, but from the communion of the bloude and spirite of Chryste also, in whyche our life and saluation dothe consiste: euen in lyke sorte as if a bough departyng from the companye of the reste of the boughes, doth not leaue the boughes onely, vnto whyche hee was ioyned before, but forsaketh the very vyne also, of whence commeth the lyke, nourishmente and power to beare fruite vnto all the boughes thereof: or lyke as when anye member parteth it selfe from the rest of the members of the bodye, and so dothe not only forsake the olde felowshyppe of the members, but dothe lose the very lyfe and continuaunce also whyche came of the incorporation, and so decayeth it selfe vtterly. Wherefore the Schismatike doth deceyue hymselfe, when hee departeth wythoute cause from the Communion of the Churche, surmysyng that hee goeth not from Chryste, and from hys grace, but that hee is sequestred onelye from the companye of men, whiche God dothe but slenderlye and smallye regarde. Suche departure from the bodye of the faithfull of Chryste canne not bee so wroughte, that Christe canne bee kept with all, no more than a man maye keepe on hys head, wyth the societie and companye of other of the members. But as the Apostle witnesseth, Christ is the heade of hys bodye, that is to saye, of the Churche, and so can not be asunder from it. Therefore hee can not communicate with Chryste, whiche doth not communicate with hys Churche. For he can not be so diuided to be head bothe of his owne bodye and also of the members whiche be sequestred and cutte off from it: and there is no hope to bee hadde, that hee wyll leaue hys owne bodye, and become a head of schismatikes. So that when a man shal withdraw hymselfe from the grace and incorporation of Christe, whereunto wee be frankely and freely receyued, besydes that it is hys vndoyng, whych so dothe, it doth also declare a greate contempt of Christ himselfe.

Christ cannot be diuided.

Secondly, the Schismatike doth as muche as in hym lyeth, rente asunder the whole bodye of Chryste, when he dothe breake the vnitie and integritie thereof. And what is it else to rente asunder a lyuelye and quicke bodye, but eyther vtterlye to destroye it, eyther to putte it vnto moste greeuous tormentes and paynes?

The Schismatike doth cut the vnitie of Christes bodye.

Thirdly, he doth thys to the moste proude contempte, not of one or two Chrystian men, but of all the whole of them whose communion he refuseth, and declareth himselfe to refuse the same by his departure. And how haynous an offence it is, to cōtemne the Church of God, the Apostle doth teache vs whereas hée dothe pressе the Corinthians therewyth whyche were Schismatikes, saying: Doe yée contemne the Church of God?

1.Cor.11.

The Schismatike doth condemne the Church of God.

Fourthly, hée dothe not onely contemne, but also condemne the church of God, as though it were not true and righte, but false and counterfeyte: and when hée hathe once condemned it, he doth also speake naughtyly of it, and wrongfully slaunder it.

The Schismatike doth breke the lake of peace.

Fiftly, he dothe also breake off the bande of peace. I meane the Charitie, wherewyth Christ himselfe doth lincke hys Churche togyther. For that the schismatike dothe not onely forsake it himselfe, but doth also set togyther by the eares as many as he canne, and maketh them singulare from the reste, and troubleth all the worlde with contention, hatered, and strife.

These and such other lyke, be the naughtye fruites of schismes. And I meane not of al kindes of Schismes, but of suche onely, whereby they be deuided asunder, whome God ioyned togyther. As for those things whiche wée spake of before of the good schisme, they serue nothyng to thys purpose. Augustine sayeth, that the waighte of the offence whyche the Schismatikes doe committe, is declared in the punishmente of Chore, Dathan, and Abiron, whereof wée do reade in Numerus. And oure aduersaries doe feare the sympler sort from dissenting or departyng from them by thys hystorie, whereun they doe muche lyke, as if the Wolues get tyng them on Shepheards clokes, shoulde goe about to perswade the Shéepe, that they should forsake the true Shepherdes, and runne into daunger of losing, in case they wente from them. It is true that they dyd lyke Schismatikes ryse against the true and faithfull seruauntes of God, and dyd forceably enter into the priesthode, whych dyd not appertayne vnto them. If they would haue the world to beléeue that we doe the like, in forsaking the Romish tyrannis and seduction, lette them make proofe, that they bée not counterfeite, but true shepherdes, not Lordes of the Churches, but the seruauntes of Chrysste, not seducing, but teachyng vprightelye: and when they haue so done, we wil returne vnto their communion. Else let them leaue the example, which cannot be aptly applyed nother vnto them, nother vnto vs: for as muche as they be not in the same degrée, in the Churche of God, as Moses and Aaron were at that tyme: nor we be not suche schismatikes nother, as those seditious persons were, whome the Lorde by the swalowyng of them vppe into the earthe, lefte for an example of reprobate and rebellious persons: but such as Tobias was, who alone fledde the companye of all menne, and gate hym vnto Hierusalem, vnto the temple of the Lorde, what tymes all Israell went out vnto the golden Calues.

Tobi.

Of the Schismatikes Chore Dathan, and Abiro, Num. 10.

Of

Of Magistrates, And what a Magistrate is.

I Meane not to make muche adoe in discussing how many kyndes of Magistrates there be, but I doe thinke it méete for our purpose, to speake so muche only of Magistrates, as maye serue for the instruction of the consciences of the faithfull, and set them on to the studyes and endeauour of true and vpright dealing. The word Magistrate is deriued from Master, and signifyeth the Authoritie and office of them whiche doe eyther by ryghte of inheritaunce, gouerne subiectes, peoples, or Citizens, eyther haue the rule appoynted them by frée election and choyse. Some do deriue the worde Maister, from the lattine Aduerbe Magis, whyche is to saye: more, for that Maister can doe more than others, as excelling them in dignitie and authoritie. Some doe drawe the worde Maister from the Greeke worde μέγιστος, whiche signifyeth greatest. But whether that Maister come of the Aduerbe Magis, eyther of the Greeke word μέγιστος, euerye way Magistrates doe represente the authoritie & office of Maisters. And we be also thereby informed, that it were méete for them whiche do rule others, to aduaunce and passe them, whome they doe rule in the prerogatiue of Wisedome and Authoritie.

We maye haue the lyke Judgemente of Ministers, that as the word Maister, commeth of Magis, whyche is more, so the worde Minister is deriued of Minus, whiche is to saye, lesse. For that hée whych doth serue, is of a lesse and lower estate and degrée, than they be, whome hée dothe serue. For to minister and serue, doth not belong nother vnto superiors nor equals, but vnto them whiche be lower and of lesse power, whose dutie it is, to be readye and at hande, at the will and commaundemente of the greater. For so the prouidence of God hathe ordered the matter, that for as much as no Maister, though he excell neuer so much in wisedome, degrée and power, yet is not able to serue sufficientlye for the gouernaunce of himselfe in all poyntes, muche lesse of others. Hée muste néedes haue some men of a lower degrée, readye alwayes at hys hande, whome he maye vse as Ministers for the execution of hys office. And allowe it, that he be in degrée and power greater than others, yet for all that he is still a man, and clothed wyth the infirmitie or feeblenes of man, and perceyueth not al things alone, nor vnderstandeth not all, nor is not able to doe all hymselfe alone, whyche he oughte by the reason of hys office to perceyue, vnderstande, and bée able to compasse. Wherefore hée muste be so holpen by the relefe of Ministers or seruauntes, that hée maye be able to doe that, whiche hée can not performe of himselfe.

And these degrées of Maisters and Ministers bée not auoyded by the Lordes wordes, where hée sayde: He whiche is the greater amongst you, let him be the Minister of all: for he declareth by his owne example, how he spake it. In verye deede hée is the maister of all, as he dothe witnesse, saying: And you call me Maister, and you saye well, for I am so: For I haue but one Maister Christe: and yet notwithstanding, bycause he wouldе leaue a patrone of humilitie vnto his Churche, hée dyd those thynges amongst hys Disciples, whych do not belong vnto a maister, but vnto a Minister. And in so doyng, he did nother vndoe, nother confounde the degrées of superiours and inferiours, but wente to teache them, how much the superioures of the Church ought to eschewe pryde, and to embrace humblenesse of mynde. These degrées of magistrates and ministers doe remayne in oure doings from the beginning vntill this day. Paule dothe call the magistrate a Minister, but not absolutely Minister, but the minister of God. And who is not ware, that there is no Magistrate vppon the earth, nor Emperoure, nor Monarche, but is a thousand fold inferioure vnto God? Wherefore it is no vnsémely poynte at all to the degrée of superiorítie, or inferiorítie, but rather most or altogither conueniente, that he whiche is the magistrate and a maister amongst men, be the minister of God, as of hys superioure.

Rom. 13.

And albeit that Magistrate come of the worde Maister, and that there be many sortes of maisters, yet men haue vsed to call that power onely Magistrate, whiche beareth the swoorde. Nor we will not otherwise vse it, but accordyng as it is customably receyued, comprising thereby all those degrées of superioures and gouernoures, whyche haue the power of the swoorde committed vnto them, as Emperoures, Kynges, Prynces, Dukes, Earles, Iudges, Officers in Cities and Countries. &c.

Of vvhence the Magistrate is.

NO godlye person doubteth, but that the worlde is gouerned by God, by whome it was also made, Wherefore all the powers and gouernaunces whyche be in the worlde, and whereby mankynde is ruled, muste néedes come of hym whome they do serue in the gouernaunce of the worlde, that is to saye, of God the creator, comforter, and gouernor of them al togyther.

Theimagistrate is of God.

In deede Satã is called the prince of the worlde, but not of righte, but of falsehode and malice, and that onlye by Goddes sufferance. He sayeth, that all the Kyngdomes of thys worlde be in hys dominion, and that he gyueth them vnto whome he lysteth, but he lyeth lyke a lying spirit as he is, and fyrste forger of al lyes. So that powers and Magistrates be not of Satan, but of hym who is the Lorde of all, and vnto whose iurisdiction and authoritie, all thynges be subiecte. They whyche doe consyder nothyng else therein, but eyther the ambition of them that doe aspyre and séeke by all meanes to raigne and rule, either by wrongfull violence and tyrannie, by haughtinesse, pride and wreasted iudgementes, and suche other lyke matters, whych be manifestly perceyued in most magistrates: they do charge the faultes of the superioures vppon the degrée it selfe of the magistrate, as though that it were nothing else, but a wicked violence, and a wrongfull gouernaunce, and therefore they cã not acknowledge it to be of God. And truly suche men we be through the corruption of oure nature, that we be more enclined to commaunde, than to obey and to be commaunded. We doe climbe and aspire vnto soueraignetie and Godhead, whiche affection is conueyed into vs through the poyson of the olde serpent, which oure firste mother tasted of immediately in paradyse, when she hearde and beléeued that saying: You shall be as Goddes, &c. So that whereas this affection of soueraignetie is of Satan, and that nature dothe make vs all lyke or equall, the vnlearned do surmise, that the Magistrates and rulers bée not grounded vppon the ordinaunce of God, nor lawe of nature, but that it beganne of the instincte of Satan, and of the presumption of wrongfull persons. But oure myndes muste bée armed agaynste thys imagination by the authoritie of Goddes worde, whych is so expressly sette forth by the Apostle, where he sayeth: Let euery soule be subiecte vnto the superioure powers. For there is no power but from God. And these powers which be appointed, bée appointed by GOD. These wordes muste be diligently wayed. For fyrste hée doth not say, There is no princelinesse, nor rule, but there is no power but from God. For hée dothe not say, that euery gouernance and abuse of authoritie, when Princes doe sometimes vse tyrannie ouer their subiects, but that throughout euerye lawfull power is of God, to the intent that the euill may be punished, and the good be had in honoure. All power is of God, but the abuse of power is not of God: like as the marriage of mã and wife is of God, but the abuse of wedlocke is not of God, but of the Deuil. Their princelye gouernaunce was not of God, of whome he dothe synde faulte by hys Prophete, saying: They raigned, but not by me: they became Princes, and I wist it not. Yet for all that, lette no man thinke that suche tyrauntes doe raygne ouer theyr subiectes without the iugemente of God. For he causeth not onely the good, but the euill Princes also to raigne, bicause of the sinnes of the people. For so he sayth: I will giue thée a King in my furye, and take hym awaye in my displeasure. So that the Tyrannie commeth also by GOD, but the Tyrannie it selfe is not ordeyned from God, in that sorte as the lawfull power is appoynted by hym.

Secondly, it is not without cause, that hée dothe not absolutelye saye, The power is of god: but there is no power but of God. But the powers that be, be ordeyned by God. No doubte that seditious spirit of rebellion of the Iewes, hadde somewhat infected the Christian men.

There were some of the opinion, that the raigne of Ethnike Princes was verye vnlawfull, for that it could not be so of God, as the raigne of the Kynges of Israell was: and that therefore it was not conuenient, that Christian menne shoulde bée obediente vnto Ethnike Magistrates. So that to ouerthrowe them, he sayd expressly: There is no power, but of God. As if hée shoulde haue sayde, The power not onely of the Kynges of Israell commeth of God, but generallye all power commeth from him. For the Lorde is not only the God of Israell, but of the Gentiles also, and dothe not onely iudge Israell, but the people of the whole worlde also.

Thirdly, it is not withoute some vehemencye, that hée dothe not saye, all power is of God: but, there is no power, but of God: by which wordes hée dothe not onely declare thys, that all power is of God, but that there can no where be any power amongst menne, whiche maye come from any other, but from God. For the power whyche is armed with the swoorde to the reuenge of the euill, and prayse of the good, and hath iudgemente of lyfe and deathe, is wholly a godlye matter, and suche as canne gette no authoritie nor strength from menne, but hath néede to bée established vppon the authoritie and vertue of God, as it dothe chiefelye appeare in that that so manye thousandes of menne doe not of compulsion and feare, but of theyr owne voluntarye mynde obeye the commaundemente of one man, to the losse of theyr lyfe, whereas one or two were able alone ynough to kyll hym. Whereof came thys wonderfull subiection, and howe hath it continued so long, but of that that Dauid sayeth: Whyche subdueth peoples vnder mée? Who dothe not daylye fynde by them whiche bée vnder hys charge, howe hard a matter it is, to bowde the affection of one manne towardes a mylde, and to be able to kéepe him allways in frame? Whereby wée maye easily conceyue, that it is impossible that whole nations, yea and a multitude of manye nations, shoulde suffer the dominion of one man, vnlesse that God hymselfe dyd subdue the lyfe and liuelyhode of mẽ vnto that power whiche hée hath ordeyned.

Fourthly, least anye body shoulde surmyse, that the powers whyche be in the worlde, bée no otherwise of God, but a certayne permissyon and sufferance, in that hée suffereth the mightyer to practise the masterie ouer the multitude of inferioures, in respecte that hée hathe subdued thys earthe to the children of menne: hée dothe immediately discharge thys ymagination, and sayeth: But those powers that bée, bée ordeyned of God. Hée dothe not say absolutelye, They be of God, but they bée ordeyned by God. The condition or degrée of those thynges whyche bée permitted, and of those whyche bée ordeyned and appoynted, is not alyke. It can not be sayde, or at the leaste waye not very properly, of him whiche doth ordeyne and appoynt a thing, that hée did permytte it to bée. Those thynges whyche bée ordeyned by the iust Prouidence of GOD, are sufficientlye tryed to bée iuste and profitable, by the very ordinance of them, whyche can not bée the case of those thynges that bée permytted. So the Apostle thoughte it not sufficiente, to applye all power vnto God, vnlesse hée shoulde withall admonish them, that all powers do proceede from the verye wysedome and prouidence of God, whereby all thynges be ordeyned and appoynted vnto our commoditie

The Magistrates, by God be not fully his permission, but by his ordinance.

Three kindes of Gods ordinances, of whence the Magistrate commeth.

ditie and profytte.

Some man wyll aske me the question, when and howe God did ordeyne the powes, whyche wée do sée amongst men. Therefore wée muste vnderstand, that there be thrée sortes of the ordinaunces of GOD. The first is of those, whyche be ordeyned by the establishmente of nature, the seconde by worde, the thyrde by the secrete instincte of the spirite. By the order of nature, they bée sette to rule the multitude, and to haue dominion ouer them, whiche bée wyser and stronger than the rest: as wée maye perceiue also in beastes, where the stronger dothe leade the waye to the weaker, as in heardes of Oxen and Horses, and in Bées & Cranes, and suche lyke of thys naturall order, specially at the begynning of the worlde, and when the tymes were somewhat rough and harde, there beganne powers and regimẽts amongst menne, whereby the multitude myghte be gouerned, stayed, and trayned in order, to the lyke resemblaunce as it was in the heardes and flockes of cattell. Therefore like as we doe sée it so fall out by nature in the gouernaunce amongst other liuing thinges, and in the father and hys children, the husbande and hys wyfe, that the better dothe rule and ouerlooke the weaker, and that no man doubteth but that this authoritie commeth of the speciall prouidẽce of God. So we may easily vnderstande also in this case, that they be borne to the authoritie of gouernãce, and that by the ordinance of GOD, whome we doe fynde to be more excellente than the rest. It is mẽte for wisedome and mighte, to ouersée and gouerne: and for foolishnesse and impotencie or féeblenesse, to be vnder and to be gouerned. So the gouernance in oure body is giuen vnto the head, and seruice vnto the rest of the members. And in case that it fall out otherwise than so amongst vs, as that the foolishe and weake be set to ouersée the wyse and strong, it is a disorde and plague sente from God, for the sinnes of the people. The power of regimente is established vpon the grounde of Goddes worde, for as muche as there were lawes gyuen and iudgementes appoynted from GOD, whereby the gylty shoulde bée punished. And vnto that purpose the same was spoken: Who so euer sheddeth the bloud of manne, hys bloude shall bée shedde. And those matters whiche bée charged in the lawe, concernyng the people of Israell of iudgementes, iudges, and Kynges: doe comprehende the ordinaunce of thys authoritie and power.

Gen.

God dothe order and appoynt powers to rule hys people with all, when he dothe so furnishe them with hys spirite whome he hathe chosen vnto that office, and so styreth them vp, vnloked for, and vppon the suddayne, to succour the people, whyche standeth in some greater perill and dannger. This kinde of Gods ordinaunce is sette forthe by sundrye examples, in the booke of Judges. For so we do reade: And when the Lorde was angry againste Israell, he deliuered them into the handes of Chusan Rasathaim King of Mesopotamia, and they serued hym eyghte yeares, and they cried vnto the Lord, who reysed them vppe a Sauioure, and deliuered them, meaning Othoniel the sonne of Chenen, the yonger brother of Caleb, and the spirit of the Lord was in him, and he iudged Israell. In like manner he appointed also the gouernaunce of certaine other Iudges which folowed. As of Aiot, Sangar, Delboza, Barach, Gedeon, Samson, and Samuell. He stirred vp these men by his spirite, to deliuer Israell, and to vse the power of regimente. And he dyd also ordeyne Moses, Iosue, Gedeon, Samson, Saul, Dauid, &c. both by his worde and spirite. But when a man commeth to bee a Magistrate, and to beare office, whiche is addressed therevnto, neyther by the benefyte of nature, nor by the worde nor spirite of God, lyke as he is conueyed vnto it by the meere deuise of man, so must hee needes very euill fauoredly exercise the office. And yet the same aduise of power doth not derogate anye thyng of the saying of the Apostle, in that he sayeth: There is no power, but of God.

Iud.

What manner of men they ought to be, which doe beare office, and be Magistrates.

I Can hardlye beleeue, that anye of them wyll reade this symple worke, whiche be in high authoritie and office, so that it may seeme smal reason to speake any thyng of them, what manner of men they ought to be. Nor the case is not alike for the condition of these kindes of subiects, as it is of the Church of Christe, for whome it is both profitable and necessarye to vnderstande for a certaynetie what manner of men theyr ministers and Superintendentes or Ouerseers ought to be: and for that purpose they be diligentlye instructed thereof in the writings of the Apostles, bycause that as Cyprian testifyeth, if they haue no Christian Magistrate, it is in their power to remoue the vnprofytable and naughtye pastors, and to putte others that bee good and profytable, into theyr places: whyche libertie is not permitted vnto all sortes of subiectes euerye where, that be vnder the gouernaunce of kynges and princes, or vnder the estate of a publike gouernance of many or few, but they must of necessitie abide their gouernaunce and obey them, such as they chaunce to haue, either of the grace, eyther of the displeasure of God, whether they bee good or euill, and take them as they come. And therefore it seemeth also to little purpose, to admonisthe what manner of menne Magistrates ought to be, seeyng that it is not lawfull for them to refuse the euill, and to chose the good. But for asmuch as those thinges whyche wee doe putte in writing, maye peraduenture serue theyr turne, whyche haue the charge to teache in the Churche of GOD, and bee bounde by theyr office which they beare, to teache not onely the Subiectes, but the Magistrates also, howe they oughte to behaue themselues, and howe to punishe offenders, I haue thoughte good to saye somewhat of thys matter also vnto the Commodytie of the simpler sorte. For the condition of the Churche is not lyke nowe adayes as it was in tymes paste, when when they were subiect vnto Magistrates whiche professed not Christe, at which time there was small occasion to instructe the faythfull, what maner of men they ought to shewe themselues towardes Magistrates when they were not christened: nor it was not then lawfull for the ministers of the worde, to tell them of theyr duetie. But now that Kings and Princes and other Magistrates also haue submitted themselues vnto the yoke of Christe, it is not onely lawfull, but necessary also for the ministers of the worde, by reason of theyr duetie and office, to beate into their heads, with how greate trusse, fayth, care, and diligence, they ought to serue Christ their Lord, and king of kings, according vnto that saying of Dauid: And now you Kings vnderstand, be you instructed whiche do iudge the lande: serue the Lorde in feare, &c. At that tyme when the Apostle wrote vnto the Romaynes, touchyng the Magistrate, he did not meddle with this parte, bicause there were no Christian magistrates any where, to warne them of their dutie: and therefore he did employ his doctrine to the vse of the faythfull subiectes, warnyng them of theyr obedience, due vnto the Magistrates, as powers appoynted from God. And in case that he had founde any Christian Magistrate anywhere, he wold haue admonished him also of his dutie. Wherefore the Minister of the worde must not say, that he will informe the subiectes, how they ought to obey theyr Magistrates, and that he will leaue the Magistrates to bee reformed by the iudgement of the Lorde, and therein do as the Apostle did, whiche gaue no lessons to the powers or Magistrates. He that is of this minde, dothe abuse the example of the Apostle, and hath the lyke opinion of Christian Magistrates. He sayth as of the Ethnickes, which be not of the Church of Christe.

Furthermore, in case you consider of those common wealths, whiche haue that libertie giuen them from God, that they chose theyr Magistrates by the comon voices of their owne citezens, to commit the authoritie of their publike estate vnto, doth not the very matter it selfe requyre, that when they chose, they be informed, what maner of persons they ought to chose? least they abuse the benefit of theyr libertie, if they chose such as be vnfit, as it must needes be many tymes, when men haue not so greatly regard what they be that be chosen to beare rule, as to haue their frendes aduaunced vnto the place of honour. Therefore it is not without the iuste iudgement of God, that some commō wealths haue not this libertie to chose theyr Magistrate. In case there belonged nothyng else to the Magistrate but to be taken & reputed for a Magistrate, then it were no matter whatsoeuer they were that should be chosen to beare rules: but forasmuche as it is requisite, that the powers doe serue God also aright, whiche be thereby appoynted by him, and that they muste exercise theyr office to the profite & commoditie of the subiects, who perceyueth not howe waighty the regarde ought to be, what maner of persōnes be preferred to beare any office of charge? And here we speake not of an Ethnike, but of a Christiā magistrate, that is to say, whiche is not of an Ethnical, but of Christian religion, and hath rule ouer the people of Christe. The Ethnike is also the minister of God to punish the reprobate, and to defend the harmeles, and to serue to the cõmon peace and quiet, whiche worke asketh not euery raskall, but iuyly spyted persons, and well qualified with vertues, as wisedome, foresight, iustice, louingnesse, or mãlynesse & strength, &c. But lyke as there is a great difference betwixte a Stewarde of a house to take the rule of seruãts, and a schoolemayster whiche taketh the charge of his maysters chyldren, so the difference is also great betwixte the prophane or Ethnicke Magistrate, whiche ruleth prophane and Ethnicke people, and the Christian, which is the ouerseer of the elect and holy people and children of God. For as it is absolutely loked for of euery magistrate, that hee passe hys subiectes not onely in dignitie, but also in excellencie of vertues, so it is worthily requyred of hym, whiche doth professe the Religion of Christ, that hee must excell the faythfull whiche bee vnder hym, in true godly lyfe and zeale of Religion.

V What difference betwixte the Ethnike & Christian Magistrate.

And suche Magistrates be giuen vnto the faythfull by the speciall gifte of God. And there hath passed exãples of such in Moses, Iosue, Samuell, Dauid, Iosaphat, Ezechias, &c. vnto whome it behoueth all Christian Magistrates to haue a respecte, to the intente to folowe theyr fayth, godlynesse, iustice, and zeale of Goddes glory. In flockes of sheepe, menne vse to haue one bell weather or ryng leader, whiche goeth before the reste: and it is no lesse mete, that amongst Christian menne hee shoulde be a very excellent chosen person, that shall gouerne the multitude: but he whiche shoulde beare rule amongst Christian men, ought to be not onely some excellent person, but some excellent & godly Christian also. And I do not call him the godly Christian, whiche is more excelliente than other Christians in mighte, stoutenesse, and wealth, but whiche exceedeth the reste in fayth towardes Christe, in loue towardes his brethren, in zeale of God, in studie of Iustice, & holinesse of life. And lette them whiche haue free libertie to chose magistrates, picke out and make theyr choyce of suche, out of al the whole multitude of their people. And whereas the Princes doe succede by inheritaunce and not by choyce, the men must haue this principall care, that he which shal be the Prince of Goddes people, may be brought vp of a child, by most choyce and godly persons, first in the fayth, Religion, and loue of Christe, and secondly in wisedome, iustice, and other heroicall noble vertues: & they muste specially beware, that he bee not to much nuselled in courtly wantonnesse, pleasures, and packpynes, whereby it may happen that the old vessell may sauer of the same, which it began withall at the first.

V What the Christian magistrate ought to be.

Those things whiche bee written in the bookes of Moses, touchyng magistrates, what they ought to be, are of two sortes: for some of them doe concerne policie, and some of the religion and godly life. It concerneth policie that they must be wyse, true, haters of auarice, and louers of Iustice:

Iustice: and it belongeth vnto religion, that they must feare God, and haue a speciall regarde of the religiõ whiche is instituted accordyng vnto Gods worde. But of this poynt wee will speake more hereafter.

What is the office of the Magistrate.

THere is nothyng wrought by God in vayne. Al things be so ordayned by hym, euen those things whiche any manne woulde thynke were wrought to no purpose at all, be created to some certayne offices and purposes. All Magistrates bee ordayned by God, as ỹ Apostle doth testifie. So that the meanyng of GOD is not, that the Magistrate shoulde bee idle and serue to no purpose, but that euery of them shoulde haue hys office lymited vnto hym. Wherefore lawfull Magistrates ought to bee vtterly voyde of vaile and wretchelesse presumption, whereby many of them doe measure al the preeminence of theyr power and authoritie, as though that the maiestie whiche is mete for a Magistrate, did consiste in a lyfe gyuen ouer vnto wantonnesse and pleasures. But lette vs see what is the office or dutie of the Magistrate that is appointed by God. Firste wee muste consider it generally, and afterwardes in particularities. The office of the Magistrate in generall is to be the minister and seruaunt of God. So the Apostle doth call the magistrate, Gods minister. And he speaketh not this vnto theyr abasement, as though ỹ he would plucke downe the maiestie of kings and Princes, vnto any vilenesse of ministerie, or to bring it into contempt, but he doth rather entend the contrary: For hee doth wholly trauell to bring it vnto estimation and honour: I meane in the faithful, which do so entierly and hartily loue God, that they do exceedingly esteeme and regarde al things of his, specially those persons which doe particularly minister towarde and vnder his maiestie. And for this purpose he doth the thirde tyme tell them, that the powers be Goos ministers, to the entẽt that men should not onely way the power of man in them, nor suppose that they doe not obey God when they obey them, nor withstande hym when they do withstande them, and so haue a wicked opinio of the magistrate. For asmuch as to minister vnto any man, is not to do his owne worke, or to serue his owne appetite, but to folow his wil, and to bee rather hys than his owne man. And this may bee done two wayes. Firste by seruyng menues turnes in ministring them worldly things, &c. Secõdly, in ministring the office of an other, when we do minister to any, and serue in those things whiche do belong vnto his office. In the first sorte no man is able to minister vnto God, no he is not a whitte holyen by the ministerie of menne, no nor of Angels neyther. But we may minister vnto hym in the later sorte, when wee doe those things whiche hee vouchsafeth as GOD, to worke by vs vnto the salvation and preseruation of mankynde. Notwithstandyng wee may minister and serue kyngs and Princes bothe wayes. And who doubteth, but that it is a more noble ministery to serue a king as a king, in those things whiche doe concerne hys pryncely office, than to serue him in the consideration onely of an other man in things necessary vnto him as a man? And so it is a greater dignitie to minister vnto God as God, the keper and gouernour of all things, than to mynister vnto him, as in respect he were poze and needy to be ayded by vs: whiche kinde of ministery can haue no place in hym. Therefoze when the Apostle doth recommende the Magistrate vnto vs, in this poynt, that he saith, hee is the minister of God, what doth he else, but admonishe al men, how that hys office is not of the ordinaunce of man, but of God: and that the power which he practiseth, is not mans, but Gods power.

The office of the magistrate in generalite.

VVhich be the kyndes of that ministery wherein the Magistrate doth seeke God.

Secondly, forasmuch as there bee sundry sortes of Gods ministers, we must see which be the kindes of that ministery, wherein the Magistrate is made Gods minister. The Apostle is also the minister of God, the Euangelist the shepeheard of Christes flocke, &c. But both theyr ministeries be distincted by the diuersities of the kingdomes. The one of them is a minister of grace, and a beslower of the misteries of God. The other is a minister of Iustice, of gouernance, of displeasure, of reuenge, and defence, bicause that the Apostle woulde strike a feare of the Magistrate to the euill after that hee had sayde: If you do that whiche is euil, feare, for hee carieth not the swoorde in vayne: for he is Gods minister: he added, A reuenger vnto anger of him whiche dothe that that is euill. He did not set out in these woordes al the kindes of this ministerie, but the same only, whereby reuenge is take of the reprobate, for which cause the Magistrate also doth carie ỹ swoord. For ther be others also besides this, namely the order of the people, whiche is done by lawes, iurisdictions, wherby iudgements be vsed, and the keppyng of the publicke peace. But yet the same which the Apostle doth expresse, doth more properly pertaine vnto the Magistrate than any of the reste. You may happly finde some wise men whiche be able to conceyue and make good lawes, and to iudge thereby, but vnlesse that they be Magistrates withal, they can not punish the euil doers, bycause they haue not the power of the swoorde committed vnto them. And wheras that is not, the vse of lawes and iudgements is but vayne. For the malice of the reprobate cãnot be repressed, but therby. These sortes of ministery do not appertayne vnto the Pastors and Doctors of the Churche. For it is not for them to gouerne the people by lawes and iudgements, nor to punishe the reprobate with the swoorde, but to informe the ignorant by the woorde of Grace, to correct the sinful, to comforte the afflicted consciences, and to preach euerlastyng lyfe in the name of Christ, and so to bestowe the mysteries of God.

Augustin.

Rom. 13.

And there be two swoordes of reuengemẽt. The one is, by which the subiects be punished, whiche by their naughtinesse do eyther hurte others, or worke wickedly agaynst God. The other is, whereby their enimies be repressed. And both of thẽ be very necessary for the conseruatiõ of peace and quietnesse. The first may be called, the swoorde of iudgement, ment, and the seconde the swoorde of warre. The office therefore of the magistrat, is to serue God in gouernyng theyr subiectes by lawes and iudgements, to the mayntenaunce & preseruation of mans lyfe, and also in restrayning the reprobate by the swoorde of reuenge: so that the publyke peace and vprightnesse of iustice may be alwayes preserued and kept, that is to say, that menne may not onely liue, but also liue cõmodiously and well. In deede peculiarly it is ỹ worke of God to preserue, & gouerne mankinde, whiche he of hys spectall purpose first created: but like as he doth instruct men, deliuer them from theyr sinnes, make them partakers of his grace, and saue them by the ministery of man, albeit that in very deede these be not the workes of man but of God, euen so he doth gouerne and mayntayne the lyfe of man, defending the innocent, and punishyng the wicked by the ministery of mẽ, such as he hath chosen to this purpose to bee mynisters of his power, iudgement, mayntenaunce, and reuengement.

Tvvo svvoords of reuenge.

The Magistrate is the minister of God to our good.

And that we may the more orderly and largely discourse of the office, vse, and ende of the Magistrate, it may be wel done to open the meanyng of that that we sayde, that the ministery of the Magistrate is, that such as the prouidence of God hath chosen to the execution of his power, must be the ouerseers, gouernours, and preseruers of the lyfe of man. The Apostle doth in one woord touch this point, when he saieth: For he is the minister of GOD, for the good. Thus good goeth large: and he speaketh more openly of it to Timothie, where he sayeth: Therefore I counsell you, that before all things there be prayers, intercessions, and means made, and also thankes giuyng for all men, for Kings, and all suche as be in preeminence, that we may liue a quiet and a peaceable lyfe with all godlinesse, and honestie. So that the vse of the Magistrate is, that wee may liue in this woorld cõmodiously, honestly, and godly, vnder his gouernaunce. He whiche created vs to bee when we were not, and gaue vs life to liue, is so louyng vnto vs, that hee would not haue vs onely to liue, but also as neare as wee may for this flesche of sinne, to liue in quiet, comely, peaceably and orderly, yea & honestly, refusing al filthinesse, whiche is for beastes and not for men, that be made to the image of God: yea & lastly, deuoutly and godly, that is to say, in the religion, honour and seruice of God, of whom we bee, & haue altogether. And the Apostle doth aduise thẽ to pray for the Magistrates, to the intent that they may enioy these three good things in this lyfe, meanyng that this is their office & vse thereof, that they may so defend and gouerne the lyfe of men, that they may liue commodiously, honestly, and godly. But let vs consider euery of these poynts in order.

1.Tim.

Commodiously.

WE do meane by a commodious life, that whiche is quiet and peaceable, without any sore trouble and toyle. And our meaning is of the publyke quietnesse. For otherwyse the lyfe of man is subiect vnto many trauayles, miseries, & misfortunes, whiche the Magistrate can not lette or helpe. And firste wee be neyther borne, neyther brought vp without discommodities, whiche the Magistrate can not restrayne. Secondly, we muste labour for our liuyng and clothing, according vnto the saying of God to our first parent: Thou shalte eate thy breade in the sweate of thy face. For this can not be done without many and greate troubles. And God did not ordayne the office of the Magistrate to this ende, that wee should idelly feede, and so make the determination of Gods purpose voyde. Thirdly, our bodyes be subiecte vnto innumerable diseases and dammages, yea and to death at the laste, that the Magistrate can not do withall: nor remedie, nor deliuer vs from the same as to shifte off our sicknesses and plagues, and to make vs that we shall not feele the pangs of death. Fourthly, there doe ryse many troubles of mennes liuing together in house, as when men muste beare with the conditions of theyr wyues, chyldren, and seruauntes: the reformation of the whiche doth not appertayne vnto the Magistrate, but vnto the good man of the house, whiche for all that canne seldome or neuer reforme them so as he woulde. Fiftly, a Magistrate can not lette, but that Cytizens and neyghbours muste bee sometymes troublesome and combersome one to an other. There muste needes bee hate and hartburnyng betwirte Citizens and neyghbours, and muche adoe when one of them can not loue the other, wherein it passeth the power of the Magistrate to lette enemities and hatereds. Lyke as it lieth not in hym to worke with all men, so that euery Citizen shall loue and doe good one to an other. There be many other troubles also to bee borne withall, whiche doe priuately happen to euery one of vs, which the Magistrate canne not relieue vs of. Therefore let vs see what commoditie & quietnesse of our lyfe the same is, whiche the Magistrate is ordeyned to preserue and keepe. Surely, It is no other, but the publyke or common safetie and quiet of our life and goodes. This the Magistrate dothe keepe and mayntayne when he doth breake off strife by his Iudgements and verdites, he repressleth wrongful violence, when hee reuengeth the wrongs of them whiche do hurt the innocent, whe he punisheth the wicked, as theeues, robbers, and murderers. &c. when he doth auoyde, or by strength of defence put off ẏ assaults of enimies. To this ende he maketh iudges to iudge wisely and vprightly, according vnto lawes. And thereto they haue theyr mynisters alwayes ready, prison, swoorde, executions, gardes, Captaynes, and souldiers. By these meanes he bringeth the matter to passe, that they whiche be good and innocent, may safely and commodiously liue in the middes of the euil, whiche coulde not be otherwyse wrought. For hee may be wel able to suppresse ẏ outward wrongs of naughty men, and the comberers of vniuste violence, notwithstanding he is not able to compasse that there be none euill folke at all, or that they whiche be euill, may become iuste and good. No doubte there riseth hereby greate commoditie vnto all good folke, whose chaunce it is to leade theyr they? life amongst the euill, and to be subiecte vnto sundry wrongs and combers in this worlde: so that the Apostle sayde not in vayne. For he is the mynister of God for good to them. Lyke as the shepheard goeth not without his shepehooke and hys dogges, to defende his flocke from al daungers, and to leade them safely to and from theyr feedings: In like maner the Magistrate hath also hys weapons and defence, and therefore in the olde times the Kings were called Pastors or Shepardes, wherin the magistrate muste specially beware, that he rage not to far against any man, vpon his furie of anger or hatred, least hee fall into tyrannie. The iuste and lawfull Magistrate will doe iudgement and iustice, and wil punishe the reprobate by iudgement, according vnto the lawes and qualities of the offences. He will defend good folke, not bicause that they be riche, but bicause they? quarell is good, whether they be riche or poore: he will punishe the euill not bycause they be poore, and may be easily ouertrodden, but bicause they be naughty and mischieuous liuers, hauing no respecte whether they bee poore or riche, least of a good & lawful prince, he may otherwise become an accepter of persons: whiche God doth alwaies abhorre, & the common course of reason condemne of wickednesse.

Honestie.

Secondly, it belongeth vnto the office of ẏ Magistrate, to keepe and mayntaine publike and common honestie. He will not abyde, but banish farre from the sighte of the people all euil, that may hurte or hinder honestie, least they may be corrupte by the filthy exaples of vncleannesse, or vnshamefastnesse of others. And this is the poynt specially loked for of al Christian mē, that they lyue honestly. So the Apostle sayth: The night is paste, and the day is come on, let vs therfore cast off the workes of darknesse, and put on the armour of light, and let vs walke honestly: as in the day time, not in banketting & drunkennesse, in chambring and wātonnesse. &c. We muste auoyd naughty occasions whereby good maners doe decay such as is wanton leaping and dauncyng, bawdy songs, vncomly garments: surfettes and dronkennesse, whoredome and aduiterie: yea and filthie sole lyfe, and the licēcious leachery of the Clergy, wherby they doe runne at libertie into all kindes of vncleannesse, and doe defile the whole multitude of the faythfull. If a litle leauen doth corrupt the whole masse or lompe of dowe, what shall not so much filthinesse be able to do, wherewith we see all Churches full replenished and pestered?

Rom. 13.

Therefore, the order of those magistrates is worthy to be commended, which haue by lawes restrayned all kind of vncleannesse & filthinesse, to restore againe the honestly & purenesse of lyfe amongst theyr subiects, meete for Christian people: and haue not crempted the Church menne in that point, but haue driue thē chiefly from licentiousnesse of whoredome, either to become maried, either so to liue in their sole life, that they haue no fault found with them. And well worthy, for they specialy haue corrupted ẏ whole cōpasse of christendome, by the open examples of their foule vncleane lyfe.

The magistrate ought to represse the vncleanenesse of churchemē.

So that the Magistrate had nēede by his authoritie to breake that bande of forced sole lyfe, through whiche the degrée of the Church fell into their wanton lustes at large, & he muste make it franke and frée for all Churche men to marie, that the saying of the Apostle may take effect: He whiche dothe not contayne himselfe, lette him marry. And, It is better to mary, than to burne, elles he shall make answere vnto God, for all those offences that be so enormiously committed amongst his subiectes, by the Popishe sole life. For he hath not so receyued the authoritie of his office from God, that he may vse it if hée liste, and omitte it if he liste not, but he is bounde to the administration thereof in his cōscience through the duetie of his office, from whiche he shal not be discharged by any priuiledge of the Clergie.

The magistrate muste see that euery state keepe a comlinesse.

Furthermore, it belongeth also vnto publycke honestie, that euery estate or degrée, kéepe a certen séemlinesse or comelinesse conuenient for them, that is to say, that menne vse themselues manly, women womanly, children and seruaunts obediently, that no man ware to be sluggyshe through idlenesse, that no man lyue vpon vsurie, or otherwise vppon the sweate of other folkes browes. It is an vnhoneste kinde of lyfe, to lyue at an other mans table, vnlesse that that man be compelled therevnto by extréme necessitie and nēede. Wherfore the Apostle doth counsell Christian men after this wise: But wée beséeche you brethren, that you abounde your selfe more, and apply herevnto that you may be quiet, and doe your owne things, & worke with your owne handes as we haue commaunded you, that you may deale honestly, with straungers, and haue nēede of nothing. Let the cloisterers, whiche they doe rightly call not labourers, but beggers, consider how farre they be from this honestie of lyfe, which the Apostle requyreth of Christian men. They ought to bée brought into frame by the authoritie of the magistrate, so as they must be compelled whether they will or not, to doe that whiche is agreeable vnto publyke honestie, and to the doctrine of the Apostles. For the Christian Magistrate should not suffer any such like restraynt, as that is of Iewes in some cómon wealths, that they can not gette and earne their lyuing honestly by their handy labour amongst Christian people, and yet they be suffered to lyue and growe riche by vsurie, and that very dishonestly. Surely their dishonest dealyng can not be so well charged vpon themselues, as vpon the Magistrate where it is vsed, and by whō they be driuen from honest labour and worke, to the vntolerable taking of vsuries.

1. Thessal. 4.

Godly.

IT dothe belong also vnto the Magistrate, so to order the lyfe of his subiectes, that they may lyue not onely commodiously and honestly, but godly also and religiously in the true seruice of GOD. It is in Gréeke ἐν πάσῃ εὐσεβείᾳ, that is to say, in all godlinesse, for so signifieth εὐσεβεία the seruice of God. And this this may be done two wayes.

If he suffer no man to swarue frō the receyued religiō.

1 Firste, in case that the Magistrate trouble no man for religion, but leaueth it at liberty to all his subiectes, to followe and chose himselfe what God he lik, and to serue as he lik without any maner of restraint, so that they be like subiects and obedient in other things, which may be done vpō sundry causes, as if the magistrate himself hold him to no God, but say in hys harte: there is no GOD, or thinketh to no purpose to serue any God. Truly it is all one to such a one, whether that his subiects do serue any God or none, nor he careth not whome they serue or how. Againe, in case that the Magistrate be not altogither vngodly, but perceyue in his conscience in déede that there is a God, and that he ought to be worshipped of all mē, and yet notwithstandyng thynke that it is not méete for him to make any restraint, but that it shal be lawful for euery man to serue what God, & after what sorte soeuer he lik, mē may vnder suche a Magistrate also serue God both truly & vprightly. Tertullian writeth somewhat like in his boke Ad Scapulam, a litle after the beginning, where as he saith: It is a péece of the law of mā & of the power of nature, for euery man to worship that whiche he thinketh god, nor no mans religiō doth hurte or profit an other. For it is not any part of religion to compel and enforce religion, whiche ought to bée vndertaken of mens owne accord, & not by violéce. Thus he doth abiect vnto the Ethnikes, which did cōpel christian men vnto the seruices of their false Gods. But of what strēgth this is, & when it may reasonably be spoken, we wil touche hereafter. This lawe of man they may be suffered to vse, whiche were neuer called vnto the cōmō religion of the realme wherin they do liue. And so christian men do liue vnder the Turkes, & the Iewes amōgst them both. And none of them enforced to forsake their countrie religiō.

If he suffer it not to be lawfull for any to swarue from the true and lawfull religion of God, nor dothe not folow any false doctrine himselfe, nor set it forth to be folowed by others.

Another way the magistrate doth stay with men to lyue godly and religiously vnder hys iurisdiction, if he suffer it not to be lawfull for any to swarue from the true and lawfull religion of God, nor dothe not folow any false doctrine himselfe, nor set it forth to be folowed by others. And thus is the order vsed amongst Christian magistrates, as well Papistes as professors of the Gospell. And yet this is done vppon sundry pretences: for you shall finde some, whiche for some filthy grēdinesse of gayne, will so punishe them that doe swarue frō the accustomed religion, that they will be contented to haue them murdered, to haue a good occasion to confiscate their goodes, and therfore doth make a straight inquisition of the riche: and therein be so furious, that they will at the firste complaynt caste them away bothe life and goodes, when they haue once with their couetous clawes seysed vpō them, so that many be more hindered by their owne wealth & riches, than for their diuersitie in religion. Some Magistrates be moued of a vayne glory, to make some restraint in Religion, for they thynke it to be a shame and dishonour vnto them, if they suffer any of their subiectes to vse any other order in Religion, than such as they kéepe themselues, and the people of theyr realme also. For they suppose that suche a one should contemne and condemne their religion, whiche they can not away withall. Others haue regarde vnto their forefathers, supposing that they coulde in no case erre in the religion and seruice of God, & thinking that it should be a shame vnto thē to make any alteration therein.

Some vpon the consideration of theyr office and dutie, knowyng thereby, that they be bounde to loke strayghtly vnto suche matters as may hurte theyr subiectes, doe forbidde all alterations from the receyued religion, supposing that it can not be otherwise than false and hurtfull, whatsoeuer is taken in strange and newe. Under all these sortes of Magistrates the true religiō may stande in daunger, and possible ynough that the godly may bee scourged, and the superstitious and idolatrous persons rule the roste. Nowe there remayneth suche as doe themselues folow the rule of Gods worde, and doe forbid all suche seruices as they do finde be agaynst the holy scriptures, whether that they be newe or old. Under their regiment the obseruaunce and keping of true godlinesse is not onely at libertie, but also necessary. And there can be no daunger at all for the compulsion of any man vnto false seruices. In deede it is a greate matter, when men may at libertie embrace true godlinesse, we must estéeme it a greater matter, when it is not onely at liberty to serue the true God, & in true, and thankeful kindes of seruice, but when withall no man is suffered to swarue from that true godly religiō, which is ruled ouer vnto all men in the worde of God. Who is of such a dul head that he vnderstandeth not, how muche safer it is, if it be prouided that no wayfaryng man cā goe out of the high way if he would, thā if it be left onely to mens liberty to take whiche way they will?

Whether that the Magistrate haue auctoritie to take order in Religion or no.

The controuersie of the power of the Magistrate in religion.

NOw forasmuch as we be now fallen into this matter, I thinke it meete to examine, whether that it do belong vnto the office of the Magistrate to take vpon him the charge of religion or no. For there hath bene muche a doe aboute this poynt. And first of all they doe stande against it, whiche vnder the pretence of theyr annoynted clergie and priuiledge of priesthod, cā not abide to haue their abuses reformed: & they also secondarily which be eyther thēselues infected with heresies, or else doe dally with heretikes. And they doe deny this after diuers & sundry sortes: for the first sort do require of the Magistrate to defend and maintayne that which they do decree to be good, & not to suffer any man to goe from the receyued forme of religion. And the latter sorte do holde, that this poynt neyther doth belong vnto the office of ỹ Magistrate, but that his charge is onely, that the publike peace bee kept, and not to regard what others doe beleeue, or not beleue. So the Churchmenne haue discharged the Magistrate from the care of Religion, and appointed it vnto Bishops whereby whereby wee may bothe see and lament, how great a sea of mischiefes hath ouerflowē the church of Christ. But in case that the same which the latter sort do seeke, should take place in the Churche, I beseeche you, what peece of all Christian religion could stande fast and sure? It is the whole trauayle of Satan, to hinder all appoyntments for the reformation of the decayed religion, and to stay that it bee not agreed vpon, & in case that it be once agreed vpon, to ouerthrow it agayne. But wee be of theyr opinion, which do teach that the charge of publyke religiō doth not absolutely and in some parte, but chiefly and moste belong vnto the Magistrate. This the wyse men also of the Ethnikes did acknowledge, which gaue the firste place vnto religion, in the order of euery common wealth. In deede those Ethnike mē were ignorant of the way of God, and were strangers to his church, but yet they did not amisse in that point, that they thought that no policy of any common wealth could be well instituted & ruled, without the obseruaunce of godlynesse and religion. And some lawyers reckened this to be a parcel of the lawe of al natiōs, for that that we doe perceyue by the very dyrkte of nature that there is a God, and do finde, that he ought to be serued and reuerenced in all feare and worship. And who knoweth it not, that not onely the moderation and order of positiue lawes, but of those matters also which do concerne the national law, doth appertaine vnto the magistrate, vnto whō euery soule is subiect, & power of lyfe and death giuen from God? Therfore, seing that the truth of this case is so manifest that Ethnikes could not but vnderstand it, ought it not to bee the more acknowleged & embraced, whiche doth far passe, not only the gentils, but the people of God also in the knowledge of God? And there is none of them can say, that we Christiā men ought not to regarde in religion what the light of nature doth tell vs, but what the holy scriptures do prescribe vnto vs, as giuen vs to that intent, to instruct vs vnto all good workes: For albeit that we ought not to seeke vnto the law of nature, but rather vnto the holy Scripture, in those matters which do concerne the mysteries of our fayth, yet withall wee muste not make light of those things which be naturally writtē in our harts by the order of God, as ỹ law is whiche we do cal, the law of nature: the direction wherof not only the Prophetes, but Christ and his Apostles also doe recommend vnto vs, as we haue declared before in the place of lawes.

The chiefe parte of religion, belongeth vnto the Magistrate.

Religion is the chiefe parte of duty of men.

Is not that power whiche the father hath ouer his children, grounded vpon the lawe of nature, whiche the holy Scripture dothe also confirme? And who can deny, but that it dothe chiefly belong vnto him, to bryng vp his children with all diligence and care in the true religiō of God, in whiche standeth their whole saluation and felicitie? The Angell cōmended this in Abraham, that hee should giue charge to his children, to kepe the way of the Lorde. And is it not a parcell of Religion, to giue charge for the keping of the way of the Lorde? And God gaue the charge vnto euery of the Israelites, not only that they thēselues should kepe those

It belongeth vnto the charge and power of the father to bring vp his children in true religion. Genes.

wordes in theyr harts, namely: heare Israel, your Lorde God is one God: Thou shalt loue thy Lorde God with all thy harte, and with all thy soule, and with all thy strength, but that they shuld tell them, that is to say, expounde, and beate them into the heades of their children, in whiche wordes there is plainly comprehended the whole ꝛ summe of ỹ doctrine of Faith, of loue, and of the obedience vnto God, so that we may thereby see what the care and power of fathers ought to do in religion. Nowe if we consider the Magistrate, what shall we accompt of him else in this case, but to be the supreme father of all his subiects, whose authoritie is far greater than the father is ouer hys children: ꝛ therfore it is more conuenient for him thã for the father, so sustaine the speciall charge of religion, ꝛ to ordayne the same amongst hys subiects. The fatherly care ꝛ forsight authoritie ꝛ power, whiche is in the person of the father ought in deede to be acknowledged ꝛ reuerenced of all his family: but all these things doe excell in the Magistrate. There is a care and charge, which foreseeth for al his subiects, a power or iurisdiciõ to commaunde and punish al disobedient, which is the greatest that can be vpon the earth, as hauing a right to determine of euery mans life and death: and therefore he careth the swarde as the minister of Gods reuenge. Shal not the same be lawfull than for so greate an authoritie and power, whiche is lawfull for euery husband to do in his house, yea seyng that this is required of him: shal not the greater doe that whiche the lesse may do? may not euery publike father doe that whiche belongeth vnto the father or husband of the house?

But let vs see whether that the holy Scriptures also doe not beare with this poynt. Moses the firste generall Magistrate of the Israelites, who did represent not the person of a Priest, whiche was put vnto Aaron, but of the superiour power, lyke vnto the authoritie of a King, whiche did gyue the order of all religion in the people of God, ꝛ did appoint vnto Aaron ꝛ to the order of the Leuites what they should do, ꝛ what eschew. Whereby wee doe manifestly perceyue, that the care for the order of religion, doth rather belong vnto the superiour magistrate, than to the degree of priesthod.

That the charge of religion more vnto the Magistrates than vnto the priestes. Moses.

But some man will say, that Moses did dispose all things whiche appertayned vnto the order of religiõ, at the commaundement of God. I aunswere that it is true: but lette him tell mée the reason why GOD gaue not the cõmaundement for the order of religion vnto Aaron, whom he had consecrated to be a priest, but gaue it vnto Moses, whiche was no Priest, but the chiefe Magistrate of Israell: So that forasmuch as Moses did not of himself, but of the commaundement of GOD, sustaine the care of religion, it is nothing against vs, but it doth rather confirme this our iudgement. For it is declared by him, that the charge of the institution and gouernaunce in religion, doth belong vnto the Magistrate, ꝛ that the institution, charge ꝛ ministratiõ therof doth appertaine to the priest, so that he which doth serue in the priesthod, is the minister therof, ꝛ not ỹ institutor or gouernor of it.

God gaue the charge of religion to Moses and not to Aaron.

Exod. 3.

Leuit. 24.

The charge of religion descended not vnto Eleazar but vnto Iosue the Magistrate. Iosue 5.

And after the death of Moses, the charge of religion and the office of magistrate withal, descended not vnto Eleazar the Priest, but vnto Iosue the sonne of Nun, of the tribe not of Leui, but of Ephraim. And the Lord gaue cõmaundement vnto him, to circumcide the children of Israel the second time, whereas Circumcision was the signe of the couenant of God, pertaining wholy vnto religiõ. Likewyse the Arke of God was at his commaundement caried by the Priests, and the reste of the things done which do belong vnto religion, the altares builded, the people sanctified, ꝛ those commaundements fulfilled which Moses hath prescribed, and he left none of those matters vntouched, which Moses had willed to be done, but he did require and rehearse thẽ all againe before the whole multitude of the Israelites. And gaue them charge also to feare the Lord, ꝛ to serue him with an vpright and faithful harte, and to ridde out of the way al strange Gods from amongst them. Finally he did renew the couenant betwixt God ꝛ his people, and compiled the wordes of the couenãt into the booke of Gods law, and sette vp a title for witnesse of the couenãt which was stricken betwene them. In all these things there is no mention made of Eleazar the high priest, whose priesthod for all that, was no idle nor vayne matter: whereby it dothe well appeare, that the chiefest charge for the disposition ꝛ order of Religion consisted in the authoritee of Iosua, as the magistrate: and that the ministration thereof, stode in the office of the priests, who were bound to obey the cõmaundment of Iosua.

In deede the office of a magistrate ꝛ priesthod both, were ioyned togither in the person of Samuell. Notwithstanding he had the charge of the order of religion not as priest, but as magistrate, beyng (as he was) the chief mã at that season in Israel. He iudged Israell as a magistrate, and disposed and ordered al publike matters, aswel holy as worldly: and as priest he did make sacrifice, he prayed for the people and taught them. King David, vnto whome all Christian magistrates ought to haue an eye for his godlinesse, did earnestly ꝛ deuoutly vse this authoritie of disposing and settyng forth of religion. He recouered the Arke of God from the contempt whiche it had receyued in the time of the iudges, and of Saul, and placed it more comely than it was before. He appoynted Priestes, Leuites, Singers and Dorekepers, to minister in the tabernacle of the Lorde. He caused the temple to be builded vnto the Lorde, ꝛ appoynted all the ministeries and offices of the same. And forasmuche as he knewe that this is the principall charge whiche belongeth vnto Kings ꝛ magistrates, that the religion of God be well ordered, therfore he admised them to loke vnto ỹ dutie of theirs, saying: And now ye kings vnderstande, be learned whiche iudge the land: serue the Lorde in feare, &c. A King, saith Augustine, serueth God one way, in asmuche as he is a man, and an other way, for asmuche as he is also a King. For asmuch as he is a mã, he serueth him in liuing faithfully, but in asmuche as he is also a King, he doth serue him in making of straight lawes, to commaunde vprightnesse in dealyng, and to forbid the contrary. Salomon also dyd sustayne the highest charge of religion, not only in buylding the Lords temple, but in consecratyng and halowing also the same. And Asa king of Juda, hauuing the charge of religion, did rid away the idols out of al the lande of Juda & Beniamin, & out of the cities whiche he had taken in the mount of Ephraim, and did dedicate the Aulter vnto the Lord, which was before the gate of the Lorde. Iosaphat also the king of Juda, did the lyke, of whome wee reade, that when hys harte had taken courage in the wayes of the Lorde, he toke away the hil altares and groues out of Juda, and in the thirde yeare of his raygne, he sente certaine of hys Princes Benail and Abdias & Zacharias, and Nathanael, and Micheas, to preache in ỹ cities of Juda, and he sent with them Leuites, Semeias, and Nathanias, and Sabadias, and Asael, &c. And with them Helisamas, and Joras Priestes, and they taught the people in Juda, hauyng the boke of the Lordes lawe with them, & went aboute al the Cities of Juda, & instructed the people. Item. Iosephat did set Leuites and priests also in Hierusalem, & gouerners of families out of Israell, to iudge iudgement, & the Lordes cause vnto the dwellers thereof, and he cõmaunded them, saying: Thus you shall deale faithfully in the feare of the Lorde, and with an vpright hart: Open vnto them euery cause of your brethrẽ, which is brought vnto you, of suche as doe dwell in theyr cities, betwirte kindred and kindred: how soeuer the question rise of the lawe, of the commaundement, of ceremonies, and of iustificatiõs, so that they sinne not against the Lorde, and that the anger of God come not vpõ you, and vpon your brethren. And Amarias your Priestе and Bythop, shall haue the ouersight in all those things whiche doe belong vnto God, &c. He geueth the priest the higher place in that assembly of Iudges, which shall iudge of the Lordes cause, but yet withall hee doth not giue him authoritie to appoynt iudges of Priestes and Leuites, but hee dothe appoynt them himself, by his princely power and authoritie, and chargeth them to iudge with the feare of God, and with a sounde harte, and to declare vnto the people out of the lawes of God, what they ought to doe, & what to eschewe.

Ezechias also that mooste godly King, folowyng the forestepps of his father Dauid, employed hys chiefe and speciall care to the reformation of religion, as we may see in the second booke of Paralipomenon. For strayght after the beginnyng of hys raigne, the first yeare, and the firste moneth of all, he opened and refurnished the gates of Gods house, and commaunded the Priestes & Leuites to heare hym, and to become holy: and after they shoulde be once holy, to cleanse the Lordes house, and to rid away all vncleannesse out of hys sanctuary: whiche done, he charged them to offer vpon the Lordes aulter, and to make a burnt offering for al Israel, for sinne. He appointed also Leuites in the Lordes house, with Cimbals, Psalters and Harpes, according vnto the ordinaunce of king Dauid. He caused the multitude also to Disciples of evil kings cannot degenerate the lawfull power which the good haue had.

Ezechias did with a special care order religion as Josias did.

2. Par. 29. 30. 31.

2. Par. 43.

to offer prayse, & burnte offerings in the Lords house. He did also suspend the solemnization of the Passouer, vntil the second moneth, because that the number of the Priestes was not sufficient for the ministery thereof, & that the people was not yet gathered togither vnto Hierusalem: besides that he sent letters into all Juda and Israell, to call men vnto the lawfull seruice of the true God.

And Josias the kyng of Juda vsed the lyke power also, in the order of religiõ, as we may see in the xxiiij. chapter of the same boke. And whereas the Kings of Israell abused their princely authoritie to the Ethnicke prophanation of the true seruice of GOD, and to all kinde of Idolatry, contrary vnto Gods lawe, it dothe not derogate nor decay any iote of that rightfull and holy authoritie, whiche the godly Kings vsed. You may finde some whiche doe naughtily abuse the authoritie of fathers, and yet for all that no man muste diminishe any parte of theyr power, whiche meaneth to gouerne his children a right. So the examples of the vngodly Kings ought not to bee alleaged, because they did wickedly and damnably take vpon them the power to order religion, aswell amongst the Israelites as amongst the Gentiles, not so that absolutely they shold not haue vsed it as kings, but for that they should not haue had abused it as wicked kings. In deede they toke it wel, in that they thought that the charge of Religion did principally belong vnto them, notwithstãding they be to be blamed in that, that fleeyng from the prescripte of Gods word vnto Ethnical seruices, they did set vp Idolatrie, and appointed it to be folowed of the people, in stede of the true religion and seruice of one God. The Israelites had a religion gyuen vnto them by Moses from God hymselfe, to be steadily obserued, and the Magistrates whiche dwelt amongst them, ought to haue had the care, that this should haue bene tolde them. When King Joas was cõsecrated vnto his kingdome, there was deliuered him into his hands a booke of the law of God, according vnto the lawe whiche is in Deuteronomie.

2. Par. 23.

Deut. 17.

Some man wil say: What if the faythful people haue no faythful magistrate, but bee subiect vnto an vngodly Prince and enimie of true religion, in whom shal then the power be for the charge of religion? When the Israelites were in slauery in Assyria and Babylon, and subiecte vnto the power of those wicked kings, vnto whose iurisdictiõ did the charge of the true Religion appertayne at that tyme? I aunswere. It dyd appertayne vnto the very Kings of the Assyrians and Babylonians vnto whome they were subiect. It was theyr duety both to vnderstande and to serue the Lord, by whom they did raigne, and also to haue the care and order of his true religiõ. And whereas they did the contrary, it was an vngodly abuse of theyr god authoritie, whereunto the people of God was not bounde at all to obey. So when Nabuchodonozer did sette vp an image of golde, and commaunded it to be worshipped, he was not to be harkened vnto: but then men were bounde to harken vnto hym, when hee forbadde by open proclamation, VVho hath the charge of religion when the Magistrate is vngodly and enimy vnto it.

Dan. 3.

that no man shoulde blaspheme the name of the true God, the God of Israell. When the Kings be wicked and aduersaries to godlynesse, the charge of religion commeth to the Priests & Elders of the people: suche as at that tyme, Esdras, Nehemias, Zorobabel, &c. were the Judges, Priestes and Elders of that people, after the captiuitie vntill the time of our sauiour Christe. And when they became also corrupte, the power of the charge and order of religiō was put ouer by Christe himself vnto the Apostles, and to the ministers of the worde, vntill the tyme that Kings & Princes beganne to vnderstande the truth of God, to beleeue in the Lord, and to serue him. And how they vsed this power, wee may perceyue by theyr lawes. But in case that neyther Kings nor Princes, nor the Priests nor Elders, nor the people it self, should take vpon them the care of well ordering of religion, but should go out a contrary way from the worde of God, so that the saying of Hierom should be fulfilled. There be wonders and meruayles done in the earth, the Prophets do prophecy falsly, the Priestes doe clappe theyr handes at it, and lyke it well, and the people doe loue suche geare: then there is no shifte else, but that euery husband man & mayster of his family, must practise the power of religiō in his own house, & dispose and order the same, according vnto ỳ prescript of Gods word. So the matters were vsed in the times of the fathers, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, &c. And what can they doe else, which do still kepe & stand to theyr Christiā faith stil vnder the dominion of ỳ Turks.

Hovve farre forth the authoritie of the Magistrate serueth in Religion.

Hovv farre the power of religion in the Magistrate doth extend.

HItherto we haue declared, that true Religion dothe principally appertaine vnto the charge & power of the Magistrate: nowe wee muste consequently consider this also, how farre this power of his doth extend. The Churchmen, as some men call them, or as we may much better call them, the Popes menne, do stande to this that they will suffer the Magistrate to haue no more to do in Religion, but to be as it were the warder and champion, bothe of it and of such Ecclesiasticall lawes wherevnto the policie of the Churche may alwayes be stayed & vpholden. Wherefore they doe deme that it dothe belong vnto any man in auctority as hee is a Magistrate, to make and sette forth any Ecclesiasticall lawes, because that power (say they) dothe belong vnto them whiche doe represent the Churche, whose degrees and orders ought to be mayntained and defended safe and sound, by the authoritie of the Magistrate. And to proue this, they do alleage the examples of Achab Kyngs of Israel, whom God punished, because they brought in new orders & rytes into the churche of God, at theyr owne arbitrement. But I can not lyke theyr opinion. Surely it is not the charge of the Magistrate, to attempte that whiche Hieroboam and Achab went about: and I doe clerely confesse, that in case any Magistrate doe attempte the same as they dyd, that he dothe greuously offende therein, and is worthy

VVhat Hieroboam & Achab vvēt about in religion.

worthy to be plaged by the Lorde. And what went they about? dyd they make bowes to the vse of the church, whereby the subiectes mighte be instructed to godlynesse, and be restreyned from wickednesse? did they bring in any new orders, which might profite ỳ faithfull to vse? They did none of these things: and if they had, they had not fallen frō the charge of their authoritie. Therefore let vs heare the scripture it selfe, and learne of it what they did, wherefore they became subiect vnto the plague of God. Of Hieroboam we doe reade in this manner. Hieroboam said in his heart: Now I perceyue that the Kingdome will returne vnto the house of Dauid, if this people goe vp to do sacrifice in the house of the Lorde at Hierusalem, and the heart of this people will be turned away vnto their Lord Roboam King of Juda, and they wil kill me and go vnto him. Here we doe learne what he was afraid of, and what he would beware of: let vs heare consequētly what he did, what lawes & ceremonies he made, whether that they were absolutely new, and not rather vngodlye and contrarie vnto the word of the Lord. And diuising vppon the matter (saith he) hée made two golden calues, and said vnto hym: Goe no more vp to Jerusalem, lo where thy Gods be Israell, whiche brought thée out of the lande of Egypt. And he placed one in Bethell, and an other in Dan. And thys worde became sinne, for the people went as farre as Dan, to worshippe the calfe. And he made hill aulters, and priestes of the basest and worst of the people, whiche were not of the sonnes of Leui: and he appoynted a solemne day to be kepte in the eighte moneth, the fifteenth daye of the moneth, for a resemblance of the solemnitie which was kepte in Juda. And he did the like at Bethel, to offer vnto the Calues which he hadde made: and he ordeined Priestes for the high aulters which he hadde made at Bethel, and he wente vp vnto the aulter which he had builded at Bethell, the fifteenth day of the eight moneth, whiche he deuised vpon in his hearte, and he made a solemne feaste vnto the children of Israell, and went vp vnto the aulter to burne incense. Thus the scripture telleth of Hieroboam, whereby we maye perceyue that he sustayned the anger, not bycause he did ordeyne ecclesiasticall lawes and newe rites, but bycause that he did vpon a malitious purpose forsake the true seruice of God, and deuised a wicked, reprobate and idolatrous religion, and charged the Israelites withall.

We do reade of Achab in the first booke of the Kings. And Achab did euill in the sighte of the Lorde, more than all that were before him. For it was not sufficient for him to walke in the sinnes of Hieroboam the sonne of Nabath, but he did besides that, take to wife Iesabell, the daughter of Methaal the King of the Sidonians. And he wente awaye and serued Baal, and honored him, and made an aultare vnto Ball in the Temple of Ball, which he had builded in Samaria, and planted a groue. And Achab aduanced in his worke, and stirred the Lord God more than all ỳ kings of Israell whiche were before hym. Thus much of Achab. Now who seeth not, that hée is not blamed for that he did ordeyne anye thing for ching the religion of God, and sette forth the lawes cõcerning the same, but bycause that he did followe Idolatrie agaynste the lawe of God, not onely suche as Hieroboam had deuised, but that same also of the seruice of Baall, Dauid, Salomon, and Ezechias, did all make orders in Religion, not onely without offence, but also to greate commendation, bycause they ordeyned nothing that was agaynste the lawe of God, but suche things rather whych were agreeable therevnto, and serued to the glory of Gods honor. Wherefore it is nothing to the purpose that the Papistes do say, that it is no charge of the magistrate to sette oute ecclesiasticall lawes, least he fall into the sinne and destruction of Hieroboam and Achab: whiche were well sayd of them, if the question were of wicked doers and ceremonies, such as were ordeyned by Ieroboam and Achab, who did most wickedly abuse their princelye power and authoritie therein.

Achab. 1. Reg. 16.

But to be playne, this is our opinion: Like as the superior power and charge of religion is in the Magistrate, so it is in him also to ordeyne ecclesiasticall lawes, and also to reforme such as be decayed in religion. For ẏ very nature of making lawes doth not beare, that they shuld charge and establishe lawes, which haue not the authoritie and power to maynteyne and defende lawes, and to take reuenge of the reprobate: or that the same magistrate should maynteyne lawes and punish, in whose power it standeth not to make nor to establish the lawes whyche he woulde maineteyne. Loke whose power and authoritie it is alwayes to commaunde men, and to him also it belongeth to punish the transgressors of the commaundementes. I know that it doth appertayne to the Magistrate to punish the transgressors, not only of his owne, but of Gods commaundemẽts also. Notwithstanding it is an other matter if the question be asked of the ecclesiasticall lawes, whiche bee sette forth nother immediately from God, nother by hys Apostles, but by men that be appointed to the ministerie of the Churche. There is no reason in that, that they which be in a lower authoritie, should make lawes in the Churche, for the superior powers to maynteyne and defende. Men of inferior degree maye mainteyne lawes, but none can appoynte them but superiors, by whose authoritie the inferiors be bound to obey, and who haue power gyuen them from God to punish the disobediente. Therefore in that that they do attribute the authoritie to make and set forth ecclesiasticall lawes vnto them whyche they say do represent the Church, and doe leaue vnto the magistrate the kéeping and punishmente of them only. What doe they else, but alotte the chiefest office of ẏ superior powers, vnto the inferior and subiectes, and put it from the superiors, vnto whom euery soule is bound to obey, turning vp and downe the ordinance of God, and making lawgiuers of subiectes, and subiectes of lawgiuers?

But if a man goe nére and aske them, how the Churchmen came by this power to make lawes, what can they alleadge for theselues, to proue their founde assertion withall? They saye, Wheresoeuer is the maioritie or vpper hand, there is the authoritie to commaunde, and the reste muste standе to the necessitie to obey. Well sayde, you see withall that the maioritie or vpper hande was giuen by God to the Magistrate, and not to the Churchmen. They doe coloure the matter by the Church, whose power they saye they do vse. But there was neuer anye power giuen to the Churche to make lawes, onely there is appoynted vnto them an humblenesse to heare and obey. They will obiect vnto vs the saying of Christe: Tell the Churche: and in case he herken not to the Churche, let hym bée vnto thée as an Ethnike and a publican. I aunswere. The Churches of God were at that time destitute of a godly and faithfull Magistrate: and therefore the iudgementes and quarrels betwirte the brethren in the congregation of the Churche, were taken by the elders, like as it fell out also in the Christian Churches planted by the Apostles. But it fareth farre otherwise with those Churches, whiche by the gwdnesse of the Lorde haue gotten Christian Princes and Magistrates, in whome standeth the maioritie, the power the lawgyuing and gouernaunce, not onlye in prophane and worldly, but in holy and Religious matters also. In déede it is a poysonsome erroure, when men doe make no more of the Christian Magistrate than of a prophane, and worldlye ruler, as if the power shoulde be acknowledged onlye in prophane and worldlye matters.

It is nother lawe, righte nor reason, saye they, nor God hathe not so instituted and ordeyned, that the whole Churche vniuersallye togyther, shoulde bée withoute anye authoritie at all. And that there shoulde bée lesse credite gyuen to the whole body thereof, than to some particulare or speciall members, and yet it is not possible, that the whole church togither shoulde ouersée thys whole charge and office. Wherefore it is necessarye, that there should be some certayne chosen out of the Churche, as it is in ciuill causes, besides thys whole body of the Churche, to be appointed and authorised by ẏ church, and to take vppon them the office wherevnto the whole Churche hath once appoynted.

I aunswere, that it is the lawe, right, and reason of the Churche to obey them which be set ouer them by God, and to be contented to be instructed, ledde, and gouerned by them as the body is by the head, whome it is vnder and subiect vnto. The multitude is of that nature, that it hathe néede of a guyde and gouernor, and not that it shoulde aduaunce it selfe in power of gouernance. For God hathe not so instituted his Churche, that it should rule it selfe, but that it shoulde be ruled, as it were a flocke, by certayne shepharde and herdmẽ. They thinke it a foule matter, if there be lesse authoritie giuen to the whole bodye, than to euery member seuerally. And yet God attributeth more vnto the head, as touching the habilitie of gouernance, than to all the reste of the body. Moses alone hadde more power and authoritie, than the whole Churche of Israell: wherefore it standeth vppon no sure grounde that they saye, that they haue power to make ecclesiasticall lawes from the authoritie of the Church, whome the Church doth chose and authorise thereunto. All power is ordeyned from God, sayeth the Apostle: the Church can not gette or giue that vnto any, which it hathe not it selfe, for as muche as it neuer receyued it.

VVhether that the councell of the Church be well appointed by the authoritie of the church.

Of that that Paule vvrote of making iudges betvvixt brother and brother.

Some man will saye, Yet for all this, the Apostle giueth the church power to appoint iudges, to iudge betwirte brother and brother. I aunswere: We must make a difference betwirte the estate of the Churches whiche then were, and that whiche nowe is, as I tolde you before. And agayne, he speaketh expressly of those iudgementes, which doe belong vnto the vse of thys presente life, and liuing. Which iudgementes be called prophane, or worldly, and be exempted from ecclesiasticall persons. If they will absolutely herevppon vpholde the Churche to haue power of iudgementes, Ergo they shoulde haue not onely the ecclesiasticall authoritie, but the prophane and worldly authoritie also, whiche they be yet content to attribut vnto the Magistrate alone. In case that the Corinthians Churche had had any Christian Magistrates at that time, there had bin no cause for the Apostle to haue said: Appoynte them whyche be despised in the Churche, they might haue left Ethnike and prophane men, and taken the Christian persons to debate their causes, suche as Christian men might conuenyently haue bin iudged by. But for as much as at that tyme Christian men lined vnder an Ethnike and vnfaithfull Magistrate, to the intente that one brother shoulde not striue with an other vnder hym, to the reproche of the name of Christiandome, hee admonished them, that they shoulde knytte vppe suche controuersies, by appoynting some dayes men or iudges, to that end and purpose. Of which place there can be picked out no autenticall rule for the iurisdiction and power of the church, nowe subiecte vnto Christian Princes and Iudges. Therefore we be of a contrary opinion vnto them, whych doe holde that the Christian Magistrate hathe no authoritie to make ecclesiasticall lawes. For we do earnestly stande to this, that all that power, whereby any authentical lawes be made, binding the consciences of the subiectes, whether that they be ciuill or ecclesiasticall, doe belong nother to the Churche, that is to saye, the multitude of the faithful and subiectes, nother vnto the Ministers thereof in Gods worde, but peculiarlye vnto the Magistrate only, whiche hath the mere and clere gouernance giuen him ouer the subiectes: and therefore they bee called in Scriptures, Gods, whiche do beare the office of the Magistrate, whiche name of honoure we do neuer reade gyuen vnto Priestes. And the verye reason, kind and nature of gouernaunce, can not beare, that there shoulde be two contrarye authenticall authorities and powers in one people, two byuers and sundry lawgiuings and gouernaunces, vnlesse they be one vnder the other, no more than there may be two heads to one body. Let Ethnikes, and infidels, which do not liue in the bnitie of truth, but in confusion of falsehode and lyes, haue sundry lawgiuers and magistrates, some prophane, and some holy, whose whole life is nothing but prophane and worldly, and religion nothing else, but a templish and churlish superstition. The Christian people is holye in all poyntes, and consecrated vnto the name and glorye of Chryste, not only in temples and ecclesiasticall ceremonies, but in all their life also in all places, at all tymes, and in all things, so that according vnto the aduice of Paule: whether he eate or drinke, or whatsoeuer he doe, he doth it vnto the glorye of God. Agayne: whatsoeuer he doth eyther in worde eyther in deede, he doth it in the name of our Lord Iesu Christ, and gyueth thankes vnto God the father by him. Wherefore this distinction of ecclesiastical and prophane lawes, cannot take no place amongst Christians. For as much, as ther is no prophane thing in them, but their endeauoure alwayes is to be a holye people vnto their Lord God. And the Magistrate hymselfe is holye also and not prophane, and his power holy, his lawes holy, his sword holy, whiche is the reuenger of the reprobate and wicked, in seruing the moste high Lorde and lawgiuer, iudge and reuenger of all euill: oure verye bodyes be the members of Christ, and our members also be the temple of the holy Spirite, and we be commaunded to glorifye God, not only in spirit, but in our bodye also. Therefore God did forbidde that this Church of Christ should be in part holye, and in parte prophane: holy to the shew and in the face, and prophane behinde, like an ydole, whiche seemeth beautifull in the face, and in the backe is fylthy to loke vpon, and full of copwebs.

VVhether that by cause of the prophane ther ought any prophane lawes to be suffered amongst Christians.

If anye man shall obiecte, that the life of all Christian men is not holye, but that there be very many whyche do liue most prophanely in respect of whome there maye be suffered some prophane lawes amongst Christian people. I aunswere. That like as in the multitude of Christian people, there be more naughte than good, so there be more prophane also than holye, more vncleane than cleane: whiche are to be chastened and restreyned by the seueritie and sharpnesse of the lawes. And yet for all that it followeth not therupon, that the lawes of the Magistrates, whereby they be punished, be therfore prophane and not holye and ecclesiasticall, bycause that the body of the Church is by the cleansed from the prophane life and disposition of vncleane persons. For like as oure winde whereby we doe blow out, and auoyde the filth of our head out of oure nosthrilles, is not therfore filthy, bycause it doth purge out the impuritie from vs, so lykewise the lawes be not prophane nother, whereby the filth of the Church is cleansed out by the authoritie, and power of Magistrates. How is that prophane, which suffereth not Chrystian menne to be prophane, but dryueth them, yea and that against their will, vnto holynesse of lyfe? Was not that a prophane fact and offence, whē the Corinthian did by incest abuse hys stepmother? It was no doubt of it. Shall we then saye, that the sentence of the Apostle was prophane, and not ecclesiastical, in that he commaunded him to be excommunicate? Wil they whiche would haue lawes made by the Churche, whereby wicked and prophane persons shoulde be restreyned from the communion of holye thinges, saye that they be pro-phane,

What it is to be ecclesiastical.

phane, and not rather holy and ecclesiastical? And how be they prophane then, if they be made and placed by the Magistrate? In deede (saye they,) they be holy, although that they bee placed by the Magistrate, but they be not ecclesiastical. And why not ecclesiastical? bycause (say they) they be not appoynted by the Church, nor by the Councel of the Church, which vseth and enioyeth the authoritie of the Church, Ergo is that only ecclesiastical, which is done by ỳ Church, or else by certayne chosen men vnder the authoritie of the Churche? I beseeche you, what is the lette that the same also may not be ecclesiastical, which is taken in hande, commaunded and established in Gods Church, nether by the Church it selfe, nother in the name and power of ỳ Church, but by the Magistrate in the name and power of God, to procure the profyte of the Churche, and to suppresse the euill? Shall not they bee schole lawes, whyche be established not by the schole it selfe, nor by the Scholemaister, but by the Magistrate, for the profyte of the schole? Shall there be no ciuill lawes, but suche as be established by the Citizens, or by their authoritie? God forbidde. Like as they be aright called Ciuill lawes, whiche bee established by Emperors & other Magistrates, to the vse and commoditie of Citizens, so they be aright called Ecclesiastical, which be set forthe by Emperoures and Magistrates, to the vse of the Church. I know the maner of the Lawyers, whiche do call that the peculiar and ciuil lawe, of euery Citie, whatsoeuer euery people embraceth and taketh to themselues for lawe. But yet they do generally in their destinction call euerye Magistrate ciuile, which is furnished with the sword to punish the euill: and hys lawes also ciuill, whereas it is right well knowē, that al Princes, Kings, and Magistrates be not chosen by the people and Citie. Thus wee haue somewhat with the largest aunswered them, which do denye that the establishment of ecclesiastical lawes doth belong to the Magistrate. Lette them at the least way loke vpon the constitutions of Christian Emperors, and see whether that manye of them be not commaundements touching the holy Trinitie, and the Catholike faith, and restraintes that no man striue or contend openly thereypon: they do also determine, for not iterating of Baptisme, for pyctratures & Images, for holy dayes, for the number of clerkes, both of the greater and of other churches, for the riches and goodes of the Church, for holy ministers, for prayying places, and suche other like matters perteining altegyther vnto Religion and to ỳ Church.

The Ecclesiastical decrees of Emperors.

Now let vs consider next of what matters of oure religion the Magistrate ought to take order. For as much as the charge of the institutiō, gouernaunce and maintenaunce of Christian Religion doth principally belong vnto the Magistrate, hys power and authoritie doth reache vnto these poyntes, whereof we shall tell you hereafter.

Of what matter of religion the Magistrate ought to take order.

1 First, it belongeth vnto hym to appoint the ministers of the Church where they be lacking, whether hee chose them him selfe, or whether hee confirme them after they be chosen by others, at hys commaundemente. For it is not conueniente that anye man practise any publike office in the Churche, withoute the authoritie of the publike power. But you wil say, that it was otherwise handled in the primitiue Churches, when the Byshoppes or Presidents of Churches were chosen by the ministers and cōmon people. I aunswere. The estate of the Church was such at that time, ỳ the ministers could be no otherwise chosen bycause they had no Christiā Magistrate. If you lik to loke backe to cal to remēbrāce ỳ doings of those dayes, you must loke backe withal to the condition & estate of those dayes.

It belongeth to the magistrate to make the ministers of the Church.

The Magistrate had nēde also to be circumspecte and warie what order he vse in the choyse of Ministers, seeking vpon nothing else, but to profite the Lords flocke. He must chose menne not only Godly, but also well furnished and apt to teache. He must eschew Simony worse than a dogge and an adder. He must vse that manner of choyse which is mēteth for the churches. And for bycause he can not alone do all that belongeth thereynto, he must vse the aide and helpe of such persons as be faithfull, and doe feare God, whether they be in the ministerie of the worde, or in any other degree, that suche maye helpe to beare part of this burthē vpon their shoulders also, but so for al that, that he knowe them himselfe whiche bee chosen, and confirme and allow them by his authoritie & power, in case ỳ be iudge them to bee mēte therynto.

Furthermore, it appertayneth to the Magistrate to appoint degrees of ministers, according vnto the necessities of the Churches, so that euery manne maye profitably serue in the Lordes flocke, according vnto that which he hath receyued of the Lorde. He must shutte out the vnprofitable humblebees from their feedings, and chasten and reforme the ministers that liue out of order. and he must remoue all such from their office, whyche do offende the Church by the wickednesse of their life, or seduce it by their madde doctrine. He must attone them whiche doe dissent, and putte the contentious persons vnto silence: and he muste haue an earnest care that there bee kept all quiet and concord amongst the ministers, to the edifying of the Church.

The Magistrate ought to appoynte the orders of ministers to exclude the reprobate, and to put the contentious to silence.

2 Secondlye, he must be alwayes watchfull and warie, that the worde of life and saluation be preyghtelye, conueniently, and faithfully set forth vnto the Churches, according vnto the order of Chrystes Gospel, wherin the ground of our life and saluation resteth, and without whiche the nature of all gouernaunce decayeth. Wherefore like as it was commanded to the King of Israell, that hee should continually haue in his hand, reade ouer, and reade agayne the booke of the lawe: it behoueth so the Christian Magistrate to trauel continually in the booke of the new Testament, and to be alwayes readyng of him, that he maye the more assuredly susteyne the charge of settyng forth sound doctrine vnto the church. In case that Christian Magistrates had done this in times past, ther had not ouerflowen so greate a sea of error and seductions into the Church of Christ, through ỳ breache of corrupt doctrine. And would to God ỳ Princes would yet in these dayes loke vnto the necessitie of this matter, specially such as doe glory of the reformation of religion.

3 Thirdly, after doctrine the nexte care that he muste haue, muste be employed about the sacraments, instituted by our sauioure Christ, and to see that they be ministred aright, comely, and religiously, as we reade that Christian Emperors did in tymes past. The Emperor Iustinian made a law that suche Gentiles or Iewes as do turne vnto the faith of Chryst, should be baptised after two yeares spent, in which space they shoulde bee instructed and tryed in the faythe of Chryste.

In Nouellis const. 144.

4 Fourthly, he muste haue a regard also vnto the ceremonies of the Church, and take away all such as be hurtfull or vnprofitable: he muste reforme suche as be corrupte, and cutte them off that be superfluous, purge them that be vncleane, and restore them that be decayed: and he shall banish out of the way such as be nerer vnto Gentilitie than to Christianitie, specially when they be agaynste Gods worde.

He must looke to the ceremonies of the church.

5 Fiftly, he muste kaye the ministers and people also in good order by some seueritie of lawes, so that the ministers maye doe their dutie faithfully, and the people come willingly and deuoutely to the assemblies of the Church, to the hearing of ỹ word, to the communion of prayer, to the sacrifice of prayse, and to the celebration of the Sacramentes, and to send their children diligently to be instructed in the Catechisme.

He muste keepe both the ministers and people in order.

6 Sixtlye, he muste haue no small care nother of scholes, for thereby may growe great commoditie to the Churche, specially in this oure time, when all things that may serue vnto godlinesse, and to the lighte of vnderstanding, be euery where expounded: therefore it is a thing to be loked vnto with diligence, that the youth bee not in anye wise too negligentlye taughte.

He must see that the scholes bee well ordered.

7 Seuenthly, he muste punishe the disorders of all hys subiects, specially of ministers, ouerseers, elders, and officers, by the sharpnesse of his law and rodde of discipline: and hee muste restraine not only adulteries, whoredomes, dronkennesse, theft, stealing, and all wrongfull dealing, whych the Ethnike Magistrates also do, but he must punish all other wickednesse also, as blasphemy, heresies, sacrileges, the contempte and forsaking of the Churche, &c.

He must punish the disorders of his subiects.

8 Eightly, he muste haue a diligent care also to loke vnto the goodes of the Churche: he shall suffer no parcel of it to be imbecilled away: and then he muste see that they be duly & faythfullye bestowed to the vse that they oughte to be, so that the ministers of the Churche, the poore fatherlesse and widdowes, may be conueniently susteyned thereby, and that they maye serue also to the other vses and necessities of the Churche. But some man will saye. Howe is it possible for the magistrate to susteyne the care of all those things, with the gouernance of the common wealth also? I answere. Lette hym follow the counsell of Ietro, which was Moses father in law, of whome we do reade: Let him appoynt wise men, and fearing God, in whome there is truth, and whiche do hate and abhorre couetousnesse, and embrace and loue godlynesse and righte-

He must looke to the Churches goodes.

How the Magistrate may take charge of the Church and policie both. Exod. 18.

righteousnesse. He may part his burthen vpon their shoulders, so that hee may reserue the greatest pointes vnto himselfe, and let others order the smaller matters. To this effect some Magistrates haue appoynted iudges to determine of lighter matters, betwirt brother and brother. Besydes that, there be consistories (as menne call them) whiche be like a Clergie counsell, and therein be hearde and aunswered matters of Religion, of marriage, and touching good life. Besides this, in some common wealthes the Magistrate doth appoynt honest persons to haue the oversyghte of schooles, and to see that they be generally well ordered. So that by thys manner of parting of the matter, the Magistrate may susteyne the superiour and chiefest charge of all things, whilest the ministeries, or executios thereof be done by vnderministers, iudges, and ouerseers. But the power and authoritie of all, is reserued vnto the Magistrate himselfe. What is there then (saye you) lefte vnto the Ministers of the Churches, Bishops and Priestes, in case that it do belong to the Magistrate to beare the care of Churches, ministers, doctrine, sacramentes, rites, and ceremonies, consistorie, scholes, and church goods? I aunswere. There is left vnto them the ministerie, to which seruice they be chosen and appoynted. The magistrate doth nother teach, nother administer sacramentes, but the ministers doe these thinges. The magistrate dothe not teache in the schole, but the scholemaister. The Magistrate doth not iudge in the consistorie, but they that bee appoynted by him to the office. And yet notwythstanding, the superior power and authoritie in all these matters doe not belong to the ministers, but vnto the Magistrate. Like as in a well ordered house, the authoritie and power of all things that are to be done, doth belong vnto the good manne of the house, and yet the trauaile and ministerie vnto the steward and others of the family. By this difference or distinction, there is ynough lefte vnto the ministers of the Church. Would God they woulde do that faithfullye, wisely, and profitably. If they so doe, they be worthy to haue double honor, and to be rather holpen then hindered in their worke, by the superiour power. The doctrine of the worde is committed vnto them (saith Chrysostome) not any Princelinesse and authoritie of power. They be in the degree of teachers, counsellers, and aduisers, and not of gouernors and cõmaunders by lawes and statutes.

Chrysostom.

Ergo (saye you) all these matters apperteyning vnto oure Religion, bee done in the Church by the authoritie of man, and not of God: and the ministers of Sacramentes themselues be the seruauntes of Magistrates and not of God, for so thou doest submitte all the charge and gouernance of religion to the power of the Magistrates. And yet the Scripture dothe witnesse, that the ministerie of the Church is not of menne, but of God, which did place in his Churche some Apostles, some Prophets, some Euãgelistes, some Pastors, and Doctors, to the worke of the ministerie, &c. I aunswere. It is not against our saying, that the word of the Gospel and sacraments, and ecclesiasticall ministeries be of God. For this followeth not: The Christian religion commeth not from men, but from God, Ergo the Magistrate oughte to haue no care of it. The very power it selfe of the Magistrate is of God, and yet those things which do pertayne thervnto, be ministred by men: and the Priests and ministers also of the old testamente were of God, and all the holy things thereof, and yet notwithstanding the godly Kinges were not stayed thereby frō taking the charge of those things, and to appoynte the ministers thereof. Yea the magistrate maye be the moze confirmed thereby, to dispose and take ozder in religion, bycause he vnderstandeth, that God would so haue it, that there should be chosen out godly and learned persons, to preach the doctrine of true godlinesse and life to the church of Christ, and to dispense the misteries of God. Moz that followeth not: This is ozdeined by the Magistrate, Ergo it is not of God. Forasmuch as the Magistrate is the minister of God, and hys power the power of God, how is not that of God, which is vprightely and lawfully ozdeyned by the strength of hys power? The doctrine of Christe is of God, his sacraments be of God, the ministeries whereby they be dispenced, bee of God: The power of the Magistrate is of God, whereby these things bee lawfully ozdered in the Churche of Christe, and those things repressed, whiche be contrarye therevnto, and shall any man doubte whether that the ecclesiasticall ministeries bee of God, if they be placed by the magistrate, and be in no doubt thereof, if they be appoynted by annoynted Bishoppes, not freely, but for money: not syncere and pure accozding vnto the prescripte of Gods wozde, but counterfaite and discrepante from the wozde of GOD: done not to any edifying, but vnto the decaye of true Godlinesse, and for most filthy gayne?

The Ministeries of the Church be of God, though the Magistrate do appoynte them.

Of the Magistrates of the Romane Empire, sworne to the Emperoure.

SOme doe moue a question touching those powers oz Magistrates whiche be subiect vnto some other superiоz power, as to the Emperoz, in the Romane Empire, whether that they haue frée power of themselues in the ozder of religion, oz no, whereof I thought good to say somewhat: some doe argue in thys maner: That forasmuche as the estates of the Romane Empire, being Princes, Counties, Barons, and other cōmunalties, doe acknowleage the Maiestie of the Emperoz to bée aboue them, and that they be subiect vnto him, and doe receyue all the power they haue from him, is it méete (say they) that they should take vpon them to procéede in any matter contrary to his wil and ozder, chiefly in Religion? Besides that ther be found decrées of Emperozs, forbidding any man to attempte to alter any thyng in Religion. Wherefoze there is left no righte oz authozitie to the Magistrates of the Empire for them, to pretēd for their ozdering of Religiō.

My iudgemēt is this, that the authozitie & power touching ỳ charge of Religion, dothe belong vnto those Magistrates whiche haue the méere and peculiar dominion vpon the subiects, hauing the power of the swozd, the gouernaunce of mans life, and authozitie to make lawes, and that they néede not to require the consent of anye superioure therevnto. And herein the Maiestie of the Emperoure oughte not to weaken, but to strengthen, not decay, but to encrease their power. And I will briefly shew my reasons, why I thinke thys so.

The Apostle dothe witnesse, that there is no power but of God. And that those powers that be, be ozdeyned of God. Ergo, if all powers be ozdeined of God, surely not only the power of ỳ Emperour, but of all other magistrats also is appointed by him.

Secondly, euery power that beareth a swozde, is the minister of God, as the same Apostle testifyeth: Ergo the power not only of the Emperoz, but of other Magistrates also is the minister of God, by whome it is set vp and appoynted. Thirdlye, in case that euery Magistrate be the minister of God, then all that be placed in office, are bounde by Gods lawe, whether they be higher oz lower, to serue God, whose ministers they bée in ỳ power whiche they haue receyued. Fourthly, in case ỳ not only the superioz, but the inferiozs also bée bound therevnto by Gods law, Ergo they haue power also so to doe. For no man is bound vnto any thyng by Gods law, which he hath not receyued power to do. Fiftly, the ministerie of Magistrates, wherein they bée bound to serue God, must be directed vnto this ende, that their subiectes maye liue commodiously, honestlye, and godly, as we declared before.

Sixtly, we doe gather hereuppon, that all power of Magistrates appointed by God, is authenticall & ordinarie in causes of Religion, as well to the inferiozs as to the superiozs. I meane of them, which haue the méere and clére gouernāce vpon their subiects. For the power of the Emperoz cōmeth also of God, & is the minister of God, & his ministerie is employed about the selfe same matters, as the inferioz Magistrates be: that is to say, to procure the commoditie, quietnes and godlinesse of his subiects. Wherefoze he can by no right forbid that whiche is good, oz depriue any of the inferioz Magistrates from the power whiche he hathe to serue God by. No noz the Emperoz nother hath anye power, but such as he receyued of God. And suche powers as he receiued from God, albeit that they bée in degrées one vnder an other, yet for all that they do not extinguish oz decay, but rather confirme one an nother. So that the Emperoz is not therefoze superioz to hinder anye inferioz magistrates from lawfully vsing their authozitie to the prozpte of the subiectes and glozye of God, but rather to ayde them, and to stay with them. Yea and in case they doe negligentlye loke to their dutie, oz doe otherwise than they ought to do, then to bring them into ozder, and help to vpholde true Religion & iustice, that it shrinke noz quaple not. This is the verye consideration why the Emperoz dothe passe other Magistrates in authozitie and Maiestie. Wherefoze it is least of all others conuenient for him, to diminishe oz take away the authozitie concerning the charge of Religion and godlynesse from suche Magistrates, as bée placed by God.

The power of the Emperour doth not derogate the power of the vnder Magistrates.

Whether that Christian mē neede to haue a Magistrate.

IF a man consider what the condition and case of a Christian man is or ought to be, and then compare it vnto the vse of Magistrates, he may thinke that Christian menne shoulde in nothing haue any nēde of any Magistrate: and that therefore they should not be Christian Cōgregations or common wealthes, wherin Magistrates be placed: or if they be, that it is to no reason or purpose for them, to haue anye Magistrate. For the vse of a Magistrate amōgst the people is (as I sayd before) to bee the Minister of iustice, gouernance, defence of the anger and reuenge of God, so that the subiectes maye lyue commodiously, honestly, iustly, and Godly. But Christiā men, as endued with the spirit of Christ, do of themselues willingly applye iustice, they be ruled and gouerned by the spirit of God, that like as there is no lawe set vnto iust menne (as the Apostle testifyeth) so they nēde no lawes nor gouernance directed by lawe.

Secondly, they doe liue vnder the cure and defence of God, knowyng that not so much as a little Sparow doth fall to the earth without ỳ prouidence of our heauenly father.

Thirdlye, for asmuche as they doe liue iustly, they be not endaungered to the wrath and reuenge of God.

Fourthlye, it is not lawfull for them to withstand euil, for ỳ Christ saith: Resist not euill, but so dothe the Magistrate, Ergo, &c.

Matt. 5.

Fiftly, Their portion or choice in this worlde, is not to liue commodiously, but to be tossed in many troubles, and so to enter into the kingdome of God.

Sixtlye, as touching Godlinesse and Religion, they doe honor God and the Father in spirite and truthe, and they do serue him of theyr owne accorde, and depende vpon him in sincere and pure trust of hearte, so that they nēde no constitutions or ordinances to inforce them vnto Godlynesse, or to drawe them from vngodlynesse. To what purpose then (saye you) is there any Magistrate amōgst Christian men?

That the magistrate is necessary for Christian folke.

I aunswer: No doubt the Apostle wrote vnto Christian men when he spake of the Magistrate, and sayde: For he is the minister of God, to the good or profite. In case that the Magistrate be the minister of God for good vnto Christian men also, how is not the vse of the Magistrate to some purpose amongst Christian people? Besides that, the Magistrate in those dayes when the Apostle wrote, was not of the Faithe of Christe, and in case that he could profite Christian men, why should not he do good, whiche doth profesle the faith of Christ, as well as the subiectes?

And that Christian men be endewed with the spirit of Christ, and be so gouerned thereby, that they doe of their owne accorde apply themselues to righteousnesse, it is nother to bee referred vnto all them which do profesle the name of Christ, either to bee vnderstande of anye perfection, as though that they were not subiecte anye lōger vnto lackes or faults. Vnles that it were possible ynough, that the Christian man might do euill, it had bin to no purpose for the Apostle to haue said as he did: If thou doest amisse, amisse, feare, for he carieth not the sworde in vaine. But whereas there be still mingled with the good, and the very good be also so vnperfectlye good, that they maye yet fall to sinne, there the Magistrate muste in anye wise take place, as the minister of the rodde and reuenge of God.

As for that that Christian men do liue vnder the charge and protection of God, it is not againste the vse of the magistrate, whiche is therefore the minister of God, to defende the good and godlye from the malice of naughtypackes, and in so doing to serue in the charge and protection of God.

And that saying: Resist not euill, dothe not take awaye the vse of the Magistrate, but forbiddeth that the Christian man shoulde not reuenge wrong done vnto himselfe, but rather abide it patientlye, and to ouercome it by sufferance. But the power of the sworde remayneth safe and sound withall, wherewith the Magistrate may punish them whyche doe wrong to others, and may so muche the more defend the innocent, the lesse that they doe defende themselues againste the wrongings of the euil. But of this matter we haue noted in the fifth of Mathew.

Furthermore, it dothe not hynder the vse of the lawfull Magistrate, that Christian men muste abide now and then many tribulations, whyche the wicked children of this worlde do worke vnto them. God dothe dispose this happe of theirs vpon some spectall meaning, and doth not make anye certayne and generall rule or lawe therein, to comprehende all menne alike. He doth graunt to many to liue in quiet and commodiously vnder a iust and lawfull Magistrate, as the thing it selfe declareth: and therevpon the Apostle doth aduise Christian men to pray diligently for the magistrates, to the intente that they maye lyue peaceablye, honestlye, and godly in this worlde. And the more wayes that Christian menne be subiecte vnto the malice of the wicked, the more nēde they haue of a Magistrate amongst them, to bee kepte from the malice of the vngodlye: as Shēpe haue so much the more nēde of a Shepherde, the greater daunger that they be in of naughty wylde beastes.

Lastly, it is true in deede, that the Christian faith and godly life, dothe depend vpon the drift of the spirit, in the heartes of the elect: and yet it followeth not therevpon, that the Christian magistrate can to no purpose serue to the gouernance and order of religion: like as it followeth not, that it is to no purpose to haue ministers of the word, or of the ceremonies and Sacramentes that bee vsed in the Church, bycause that faith commeth of the gift of the holy spirit, and that it is necessary that we must bee new borne frō aboue. But these matters be so manifest, that they nēde no declaration.

Whether that a Christian man may be a Magistrate.

THey whych doe consider the office of a Magistrate with a prophane and irreligious minde, when they be conuinced and ouercome of the necessitie thereof, doe fall to denie that it may be administred of a christian man. And for this purpose they doe alleadge that agayne: Resist not euill, for that those words were spoken vnto all Christian men, and that the office of the Magistrate is to resiste euill. But they be deceyued in that, that they do not take the words of Christe in that sense, whiche they were meant of. The Magistrate in respect that he is a Christian man, doth not refuse priuate wrongs, but doth pardon and forgiue them, but in respect that he is the Magistrate and minister of God he dothe his outie, in that he doth not suffer his subiects to do wrongs at libertie one to another. And to this ende he doth carrie the swoorde. The good man of the house doth resist euill, when hée dothe foresée that none of his householde do any thing amisse, and in so doing may neuertheless be a good Christiã mã. It is euill if anye manne doe sinne: Shall not therefore the Christian man kéepe an other from sinning, least in resisting of euill, he shall not be taken for a Christian? Then let the doctrine of godly life and iustice, whereby sinne is resisted, be thrusste out of the Churche: let no wise man correct him that sinneth, but lette all things ruane at libertie to the Deuill, least Christian men shoulde resist euill. God forbidde. If anye one manne ought to resiste euill, it is the Christian man, which ought chiefly to do it. Therefore Christe dothe not speake of this kind of euill, when hée sayth: Resist not euil, but he doth forbidde that we shoulde not our selues turne off oure wrongs that be done vs, by violent resistance and reuẽge. And the Magistrate dothe not so in defendyng not hys owne, but hys subiectes innocencie agaynste the wickednesse of naughtye dealers. Wherefore as he dothe not contrarye vnto Chrystes doctrine in faithfully fulfylling his office, so he is not letted thereby that he may be both a good Christian mã and a magistrate also.

Resist not the euill.

It is an easie matter to aunswere those poyntes, whych be obiected out of other places of holye Scriptures: as, Be you merciful. Item: Forgiue, and you shall be forgiuen, and, Leaue the reuenge to me. And, Iudge not, least you be iudged. These thinges (say they) be spoken vnto all Chrystian men, and yet be of that nature, that they can not be obserued of Magistrates. For he whiche is placed in the office of a Magistrate, can not haue pitie of the poore wretched person in iudgement, but is enforced by his office, to punish the guilty without mercy: and so he doth not forgiue the offence, but vseth the reuenge, contrarye vnto that saying: Leaue the reuenge vnto me, and I will paye it home. And in case he will deale vprightelye, he must sometimes iudge and condemne his owne brother. And all this he dothe by the office that hée beareth, which he should not do, if he were a Christian man.

The Christian man maye be merciful and yet vse his office against the reprobate.

Rom. 13.

I aunswere. The Christian Magistrate bearing office, is merciful for his owne person, as a Christian man pardoning and forgiuing pitifully his own cases, if any man hurt hym: but he doth iudge and reuenge as a Magistrate, in the causes of the subiectes: and in so doyng, he doth represente a Minister of iudgemente and of Gods reuenge, so farre he is from sinnyng. Yea in case the Christian man for his owne person, neyther iudging nor reuẽging, but mercifully pardoning: and the magistrat in the causes of his subiectes, not sparing the giltie, but iudging the cause of him which is wronged, be compared togyther, he which doth so punish the giltie to maintayne and defende the innocent, ought to be deemed to vse no lesse vertue, than he whiche in his owne person dothe pardon hym that doth offend him, which he might by good righte prosecute, if he were not a Christian man. And lyke as both these thinges maye be done by one selfe same person, so there is nothing to the contrarye, but that the one selfe same man may be in fayth a Christian man, and in office a Magistrate. He maye without all nay sustayne both the persons, and truely serue in them both if one selfe same Christian can not bée mercifull in his owne case, as a Christiã mã, and a punisher of sinne in an other mans case, as a Magistrate, bycause that to be mercifull and to punishe, do séeme to include contradiction, one agaynst an other, let them that thinke so, answere me, howe one selfe same man as a Chrystian man, dothe pardon hys neyghboure offendyng hym, and dothe not spare hys sonne doyng a faulte, as a father, but dothe chasten hym, when he offendeth, with the rodde of discipline: yea howe one selfe same God is mercifull in pardoning oure synnes, and contrarywise is not merciful, but a iust iudge in punishing the malice and wickednesse of some others? The selfesame God is a father and a iudge: as a Father he dothe spare vs, and as a Iudge he doth punish vs. Where is hérein no contradiction. So it may bée well enough, that one selfesame man as a Christian, may accomplish the woordes of Christe: and as a Magistrate, minister in the iudgemente, wrath, and reuenge of God, whereunto the doctrine of Christe is nothyng at all repugnant. When wée doe way thys, it is made thoroughly manifest and playne, that they be in a fonde opinion, whiche doe so iudge of the Magistrate, and of Christianitie, that they surmise that both of them can not stande togither in one man. If they would searche the scriptures more diligẽtly, they should bée of an other minde. After that Paule had conuerted Paulus Sergius vnto the faith of Christ, he dyd not forbidde him, that he shoulde no longer exercise the office whyche hée bore, whiche he oughte to haue done for all that, in case that he coulde not haue bin a Christian man, kéepyng styll hys office. In like manner wée do not reade, that Peter dyd forbidde, but that the Centurion shoulde bée both a Christian man, and continue also still in hys office. Nor Philippe did not so conuerte the Eunuche of Quéene Candaces, being a greate personage, vnto Christianitie, that he should forgoe his office whiche he had about his Quéene and Mistres. Nor John Baptist did not require of the souldiers, that if they woulde be baptised, they shoulde giue ouer their warres, but charged them thys onely, that they shoulde violentlye hurt or hynder no manne, but contente themselues with their wages and stipende.

Of Paulus Sergius the Centurion, the Eunuch and of the Souldyers baptised of Iohn.

Acts. 8.

Luke. 3.

In case that they way this matter aright, they would rather wishe

To bee wyshed that all Kingdoms had Christian Magistrates. Psalme.2.

there were no Kingdome, no gouernaunce, no common wealthe in the worlde, but that hadde true Christian men to their Magistrates. It is required of Kinges and iudges of the lande, that they serue the Lorde in feare, and kisse or embrace the sonne of God. Where can they fynde anye one of all sortes of men, that is better able to doe this, than the true Christian man, which is more abundantlye than others, endowed wyth the knowledge, faith, and feare of God? The Apostle sayeth, that the Magistrate is the minister of God, to this intent and purpose, that he muste vse his office to the good of the subiectes, and to the commendation of the good. Who canne doe this better than the Christian man? Moses requireth the Iudges to be wise, fearing of God, louing the truthe, and hating courtousnesse. And Iosaphat the godlye Prince sayde so vnto them: Loke what you doe, for you do exercise the iudgemente not of manne, but of the Lorde, and what so euer you shall iudge, shall returne to youre owne heads. Lette the feare of the Lorde be with you, and doe altogither with diligence. If this may better be handled by an Ethnike than by a Christian man, I see not howe it shoulde not be to the great shame and rebuke of Christianitie. But in case that the verye office of the Magistrate doth require the best sort of men, and that there can no better be founde than the Christian, who perceyueth it not, how vnreasonable a matter it is to enbarre him from the office of a magistrate, whiche is more fytte than others to exercise the same?

2. Paral.19.

No man can better vse the office of Magistrate, than a Christian.

What is due to the Magistrate from his Subiects.

All this whole matter may bee deuided into two partes: the one concerning the Magistrate, and the other the subiects. Of the firste wee haue spoken already, that is to saye, what a Magistrate is, of whence hee is, and of what sorte and behauior hee ought to be, what his office is, whether that the charge of religion dothe belong vnto him or no, how farre his power reacheth in religion, what is the condition in this case of the Magistrates of the Empire, whiche bee sworne vnto the Emperour, whether that Christian men nede any magistrate, and whether that a Christian man may beare the office of a Magistrate or no. Of the latter parte wee haue now to entreate hereafter, that is to saye, what is due to the Magistrate of the subiects. Secondly, whether that ecclesiasticall persons ought to be accounted amongst subiectes. Thirdly, how farre forth men oughte to obey the Magistrate.

There be some things mentioned touching this matter in the Epistle written to the Romaynes, whereby may be argued, what dutie the subiects do owe vnto the magistrat. And there be two maner of poyntes reckned there, wherein is comprehended the dutie of the subiect, which he standeth bound to his Magistrates. The one point belongeth to the affections of the heart, and the other to the outward conuersation of life. Those that perteyne vnto the heart, be honor and feare. The second, which is of things outwardly, consisteth in tribute and subiection, or obedience.

Rom.13.

So

Honour is due to the Magistrate from his subiects.

So that the firste is that wee bee bounde al and singular of vs to yeld honour vnto our Magistrate, and to haue an honorable and reuerēt estimation of him, as of Gods minister, appointed by God, to vse and exercise the power of gouernaunce in his place and steede vpon the earth, and to represent the very image & countenaunce of God, in gouerning, preseruyng, and defendyng vs: and in case we are vnthriftie, in the punishyng of vs accordingly. And therefore in some places of Scriptures they be called Gods, as we sayd before. But the corruption of our flesh is the cause that there be few found, whiche do in this respect honorably esteeme the Magistrate.

Feare due to the Magistrate.

Secondly, our dutie is to haue a feare and a reuerence towardes the Magistrate. And there be two kinde of feares for the subiects to feare the magistrate: the one is the feare of punishmēt, so the magistrate is feared of them, which either haue done or entende to doe any vnhappinesse. Of this the Apostle maketh mentiō, saying: If thou haue done euil, feare: for he carrieth not ỹ sword in vaine. The other feare riseth vpon the respect, wherevpon we sayde, that the honor of the magistrate ryseth: and that is nothyng else, but a certayne reuerence, whiche we do first feele in our hartes, as often as we do thynke or speake of the Magistrate, and afterwards we do declare and expresse the same also in our wordes and doings. The negligent Magistrate, whiche is ouermuch fauning and fauorable, light & vayne, doth decrease, decay, and sometimes vtterly lose both this feare and honour, yea and turneth them vnto a contempte, as we see it fal out with fathers and gouernours of houses, when they kepe not the comelinesse of their person and estate, and specially if they bee wicked against God, to fulfil the saying of the Psalmist: I will poure out contempt vpon Princes.

Rom.13.

Psalm.17.

Tributes & customes to be payed to the Magistrate.

Thirdly, men muste pay tributes, customes, subsidies, & exactions vnto the Magistrate, whiche he needeth to the execution of his gouernaunce and power. For there must be cōtributions and taxes leuied out of mēs priuate possessions, for the publyke and common vse of the magistrate, without the whiche neyther our life neyther our priuate wealth can bee kept in peace and quiet. No man goeth a warfare vpon his owne charges, and no man dothe exercise an office at his owne proper coste and expence: wherefore it is conuenient that it be leuied vpon the subiectes. The Apostle, to giue the reason why tributes ought to be payed to ỹ Magistrates, wryteth in this wyse: For you doe for this cause pay subsidies and customes: for they be the ministers of God, applying their very dutie and office. This reason consisteth in two poynts: the firste is in that that he sayth: For they be the ministers of God. Wherin we muste not haue this opinion of God, as though we had nothing to doe with hym, and that his trauayle and care stoode vs in no steede: but we muste herein cōsider that it is he who doth rule, gouerne, and alwayes preserue this worlde, and that to this effect he appointed the higher and superiour powers. Wherefore when wee doe pay subsidies to the Prince, we muste do it first vpon this respect, that it is our dutie to pay it, as to the minister of God, by whose trauaile & authoritie, we be ruled & gouerned. The other poynt consisteth in that wtiche he addeth, saying: Applying the very same office and charge. Wherby he meaneth, that the Magistrates be so occupied in the ministerie of God, ỳ they be not able to sustayne theyr owne priuate necessities, & publicke charges both, and that therefore the subiects ought to cõtribute towards it, that they may haue alwayes sufficient at hand for themselues & theyr frendes, to lyue vpon, and to execute also the cõmon and publike affayres of their iurisdictions and businesse. He dothe vse a trim wordes when hee sayeth: Earnestly, constantly, and continually abyding and dwelling vpon that poynt and purpose. Chrysostome sayth: For asmuch as they be careleese of theyr owne things, and care for the commõ and publike cases and matters, and do employ all their tyme therevpon, wherby that which we haue is preserued.

VVe muste obey the Magistrate.

Fourthly, we be bounde also to yeelde our subiection and obedience to the Magistrate. Hereof the Apostle writeth in this wise: Wherefore it behoueth vs to be subiect, not only for feare of anger, but also for conscience sake. In that he sayth, It behoueth vs to be subiect, he dothe declare the necessitie of this obedience and subiection of ours: and when he addeth, Not only for displeasure, but also for conscience sake, he doth sette forth the causes, of which the first is, the feare of anger, that is to say, of reuenge, when the magistrate dothe punish the disobedient & obstinate: & that is for carnal and reprobate persons. The second is conscience, when we be priuie of Gods ordinaunce, whereby the magistrate is placed, & do know that we ought to obey him by the will and constitution of God. This causeth doth stirre godly persons to obey the lawes & decrees of magistrates, though that they coulde escape theyr knowledge and go quite, whẽ they haue done naughtily. So ỳ carnall man hath reuenge for his cause, to obey the magistrate, but the godly mans cause is his owne conscience. And besides that, the wise man is moued otherwise also thereunto, considering that this obedience doth not so much profite the Magistrates, as the subiects also and them that do obey, & that disobediẽce doth much harme. For he whish is disobedient to the magistrate, doth vse the matter as fondly, & to asmuch hurt of himself, as the marryners do, whiche traueling the seas, be disobedient to their master and sterne man, & therin be the occasion to cast themselues away, & to lose their own liues. Thus much briefly for the dutie of the subiectes towardes the Magistrate.

Who, and vvhether that eccleſiaſticall perſons ought to be reputed for ſubiectes.

Of them vvhich clayme to be vnder.

THere be many to be found of thẽ, which do disdayne to be recognied and reputed in this case of subiection and obedience with other subiects, that is to say, with the commõ sorte of people: as they that be exceeding riche and passing others in reputatiõ of birth & wisedome, specially when they perceyue ỳ they whiche be the magistrates, be neither better, neyther equall vnto them in wealth byrth nor iudgement. And this chaunceth in those common welths, where men be chosen to be counsellers out of the common sort of people, honest men, but yet meane and artificers, whiche the greater sorte of citizens cã hardly acknowlege for their magistrate, and therefore they do sometimes make meanes if they can not thẽselues attayne to be magistrates, to be exẽpted by the Emperours priuiledge out of the condition of subiectes, and so be as it were, in a middle degree, betwixt the Magistrate & the people that be subiect.

But we do determine absolutely, that al they which beare not office of Magistrates, ought to bee reputed subiects: and we do mislike with the hautinesse of these kind of mẽ, wherin for that they doe not so much contẽne their Magistrate, as God himself, in not suffering him to raygne ouer them after that order which he hath appoynted, so that it may be applied vnto them, which God spake of the Israelites vnto Samuel: They haue refused not thee, but me, & will not haue me raygne ouer them. For in case that whosoeuer dothe resiste Gods ordinaunce, doth resist power: by the selfe same reason whosoeuer doth contẽne the ordinaunce of God, doth contemne the power. And that no lyuyng man ought to be exempted from this subiection, it is confirmed by the testimony of the Apostle, where he sayth: See that euery soule be subiect vnto the superior powers. He spake this after the Ebrewes manner and phrase, euery soule, for euery man and woman. He might haue sayde absolutely, Men muste obey powers, vnlesse ỳ he had meant to except, that no lyuyng person is excepted from this subiection. Therfore he sayde: See that euery soule be subiect vnto the superiour powers. So that as long as there is soule or lyfe lefte in our flesh, so long we bee bounde by the ordinaunce of God, to yelde subiectiõ and obedience vnto the Magistrate. The dead be discharged from this dutie, with which the Magistrate can no longer deale, witnesse Christe, whiche sayth: Bee not afrayde of them, whiche doe slay the body, & after that, haue nothing more to doe.

Dead folke be free frõ the obedience of the Magistrate. Luke.12.

We see that the order of the Clergie, which men cal spiritual persons, be exẽpted frõ this subiection in the Poperie, & be subiect vnto the bysshop of Rome only, as their only master & head. They suppose that carnal, lay, & common men, (as they call secular persons) ought to be subiecte vnto magistrates, and not spirituall men. And they goe about to mayntayne this opinion of theirs, by the exposition of Origene, whiche sayth, that the worde Soule, in the saying of the Apostle, is set for a fleashly and carnal man, and that so he maketh a difference betwixte the carnall and the spirituall man, in exemptyng the spirituall person from this subiection, and byndyng the carnall man therevnto. But who perceyueth not, that this expositiõ is quite cõtrary to the meanyng of the Apostle, and to the manner of speach of the holy Scriptures? The Apostle and the scripture doth take Euery soule, to be asmuch to say, as euery manne, whatsoeuer

Of the clergy vvhether they be discharged frõ the obedience of the Magistrate.

Origenes.

Euery soule as much as euery man.

he bo, inste, or vniust, worldly or spiritual. When Abraham sayde, gyue me the soules, take the rest vnto thy selfe. I beseeche you, did he desire to haue the carnall men only deliuered vnto him? And whereas the Scripture sayth: All the soules of the house of Iacob whiche entred into Egypt, were seuentie: shall we take it to be vnderstand of carnall menne onely? so that all the soules shall bee all one as to say, al the carnal men? And shall we thinke, whereas God sayth by Ezechiel: All soules be mine, that the fleshly men onely doe not belong vnto God? We do read in the Actes: There were increased vpō that day, aboute three thousande soules. Thus Lucas wrote of them whiche did beleue in Christe, and were baptised. And how can the exposition of Origene agree herewithall, to vnderstande by soules, carnall soules? Agayne: We were (sayth he) all the soules that were in the shippe, two hundreth, three score and fiftene, doth he meane it of carnall menne onely, whereas he and Paule bothe beyng spirituall persons, were in that shippe? And we do reade in Peter, that there were eyght soules saued by the water, and how folish a poynt were it, to expounde it of eyght fleshly men? So that the matter is cleere by these and other places of Scriptures, that euery soule, is nothyng else to say, but euery man. Wherefore this exposition of Origen is to no purpose.

Gen. 4. Gen. 46.

Ezech. 18.

Act. 2.

Act. 27.

1. Pet. 3.

Fourthly, Chrysostome did expound this place more aright, whose wordes be these: And to declare that this commaundement stretched not onely vnto secular menne, but vnto Priestes also and religious persons, he opened the matter euē at the first, saying: Lette euery soule be subiecte vnto the higher & superiour powers, whether thou be an Apostle, or an Euangelist, or whatsoeuer thou bee, for this commaundement bothe not ouerthrowe any Godlynesse. Thus sayth hee.

If soule taken for the carnal man, vvhat folovveth there, ypo

But let vs graunt them this, to expounde the worde Soule, for a carnall man, that not all those things be excluded withall, whiche be necessary to the sustentation of the carnall mā, which we haue al of vs neede of, as long as we liue here in the world, and be therfore subiect vnto the magistrate, by the ordinaunce of God: Then reason would, that the church mē, the Popes, Bysshops, Cardinals, Priestes, Clerkes, Monkes, Friers, & Nonnes, shoulde proue themselues to be so meare spirits, or silie soules, that they haue no more to doe with this carnall lyfe: and those things which be of necessitie requisite to the sustinaunce thereof, to proue withal, that this saying of the Apostle bothe not pertayne vnto them. Peter and John (saith Origen) had nothyng to giue vnto Cesar: for Peter sayde, I haue neyther Golde nor Siluer, and he that hath not so, hath nothyng to pay to Cesar, nor whereby to be subiect vnto the superiour powers. But who soeuer hath mony or possessiōs, or any thing in this worlde, let hym harken to that saying: Lette euery soule bee subiecte vnto the hyghe powers. Thus sayth Origene. Now I pray you, tel me my brethern, hath the Pope of Rome, the Bishops, Prelates and Abbotes any money or no: haue they no possessions: haue they nothyng at all in this world: where as

as they haue caught into their hāds well neare all the treasures of this worlde, and be so drowned in worldly wealth, that if they should be tried by the truth, no Christian man could be of right more compelled to the obedience of the Magistrate, than they, whiche surmise that the saying of the Apostle bothe of all least touche them. But now seyng that they be not spirituall neyther, but of all others most carnall, yea & though that they were so, yet notwithstanding be not for that cause exempted and shut of from this subiectiō, who seeth not, that they had no reason at all, to withdraw theyr neckes out of the coller? What spiritualtie haue they, which was not in the Apostles, Euangelists, and Prophetes: & if it were both a like, why did it not quite them from theyr dewe obedience to the Magistrate, aswell as these idle folke? Shall wee determine that the Bysshops of Rome, Cardinals, Bysshops, Prieste, Monkes, and Friers haue a greater dignitie and prerogatiue, thā the Apostles and Prophetes had, whiche did obey their Magistrates, and withall forsoke not their office & vocation allotted vnto them? Then let men of iudgement cōsider, how great a mysterie of wickednes this is, that the Clergie haue not only withdrawen, but preferred themselues also aboue the Magistrates, which haue the very gouernaunce in deede, and that not onely in dignitie and excellencie of office, but in authoritie also of gouernaunce: as though it were not sufficient for the secte of Antichrist, to denie theyr obedience vnto the Magistrate, and to contemne gouernaunces: accordyng vnto the saying of the Apostle Peter, vnlesse they dyd also auaunce themselues aboue the Maiestie of princes, and presume to be Lordes, whereas they ought to be subiectes. It was a Bysshop whiche sayde, that the Bysshop of Rome hath the gouernaunce ouer heauen it selfe, as that the law grew from shepehards vnto the Maiestie of kings: and that the Gospell is growen from fishermen vnto the Maiestie of Emperours, to rule ouer earth and Hell, to haue power ouer Angels, men and Deuils, vpon the quicke and the dead, yea ouer kings also and the Maiestie of Emperours, ouer all things as wel secular as spirituall, ouer all mens possessions, bodies, and soules. They doe place him in all fulnesse of power, due vnto Christe: who sayde, that all power was gyuen to him in heauen and in earth. That saying is knowen in theyr owne lawe: He gaue to Peter the iurisdictions both of the heauenly and of the earthly Empire also. We may se the same in the Clemētines where we do reade in this sort: Bothe the swordes be in the power of the Church, that is to say, the spirituall & the Materiall. But in deede the one of them is to be vsed for the Church, and the other by the church: the one is in the hande of the Priest, and the other in the hande of kynges and Souldiers, but at the cōmaundemēt and becke of the Priestes. So one sworde muste bee vnder an other sworde, and the temporall authority subiect vnto the spirituall power. For when the Apostle sayth, There is no power but of God, and those that be, be appoynted by God. They should not haue bene orderly appoynted, Transmitted of interim in the story of Clergie.

VVhat they do attribute vnto the Pope

Dist. 22. Cap. Omnes. In Clement. Rom. de Iure iurād. in Extra. Bon. 8. Vnā Sanctā.

vnlesse

vnlesse the one swoorde were vnder the other, & brought as it were by an other to the highest, &c. And a litle afterwardes: Now we must so much the plainlier confesse, ỹ the spirituall power doth passe al earthly power in worthynesse and nobilitie, the more that spirituall things do excell & goe beyonde temporall matters. Which things we haue more playnly layde before our eyes, by the giuyng of tēths, & blessing, by their sanctifying, by the receyuing of their power, and by the very gouernaunce of things. For as the truthe dothe testifie, the spirituall power ought to institute & iudge the earthly power, &c. so that earthly power is iudged by the spiritual power: but if the spirituall person goe awrye, the lesse of thē is iudged by the greater, but in case that the high spirituall power do swarue out of the way, he can not be iudged of man, but of God only, as the Apostle witnesseth: The spirituall man iudgeth all things, but he himselfe is iudged by no man, &c. This stuffe yée shal find in that place, scarce worthy to lose any tyme therein. For who perceyueth not how vaine an imagination that is of the two swoordes: They giue bothe of thē vnto Peter, both the temporal and the spirituall swoorde, whereas he had but one, and not two. Nor we doe not reade, that any one of the disciples had an other. Wherefore it is a very stale & stinckyng deuise, that they doe gather vpō this place: that the two swoords: the spirituall and the temporall, doe appertayne vnto the Pope, as successour vnto Peter. And whereas they doe alleage out of Paule, that the powers hee orderly appoynted of God, so that one swoorde is vnder the other swoorde, the temporall swoorde vnder the spirituall swoorde, it is not Paules minde nor meanyng. For he dyd not vse the woorde of Ordayning to the sense, but absolutely to the sense of appoyntyng. Those powers that be, be appoynted by God. So was the power of the Romayne Emperour also, vnder which Paule lyued, ordeyned and appoynted by God, albeit it was not agreeing with the Churche of Christe, nor subiect vnto any spirituall person, nor receyued or approued by any Christian Apostle or Byshop. I beseeche you, how cōmeth it to passe, that Chrysostome vnderstode not this exposition, but dyd absolutely acknowledge, that all men, yea Apostles, Euangelistes, and Prophetes be subiect vnto the power of the Magistrate? Peraduenture he was not inspyred with the spirite of Poperie. As for theyr tenthes, blessings, & sanctifications, what shall I say? In deede they doe take not only tenthes, but almost all manner of ware. And they do blesse to the shewe and sanctifie, whereas in very deede they doe rather curse and prophane, or distayne all things they goe aboute. But lette it be so: Can they therevpon gather aright, that Magistrates bee subiect vnto Byshops? and that it appeareth by that, that they doe gyue them tenths, and agayne be blessed, and sanctified of them? Dyd not the kings of Israell giue fyrste fruytes and many other thynges also to the Priestes, and were sanctified of them: What wyse body can argue therevpon, that the kings were subiect vnto the priests, whereas the contrary appeareth to be true by the holy Scripture, as we declared before? And that saying: The spirituall person iudgeth all things, and hee is iudged of no other man, is not asmuche to say, as the Pope iudgeth all thynges, and hee is iudged of none other. For the Apostle entreateth not of the order and power of Popes, but hee maketh a difference betwixt carnall and spirituall men, and doth lay to the fyrste that they be not able to knowe those things that be of God: and he dothe graunt to the latter, whiche be lightned with the spirite of God, whiche do lyue by the leadyng or guyding of the holy spirite, and not by carnal affections, that they doe vnderstand al things through the spirite of God, meanyng those thyngs, whiche bee touchyng the Spirite of God, and be set forth in the Gospell: and that they be iudged, that is to say, knowē or discerned by no man that is carnall, though he be neuer so wel learned and wise. For the worlde (sayth John) knoweth you not, bycause it knoweth not God. Now I beseeche you, howe dothe this frame to their purpose? How is that wrested to the Byshop of Rome, which concerneth the Christian faithfull onely? If to iudge in this place, be asmuch to say, as to haue authoritie to sitte, and to determine ciuile cases: & to be iudged of no man, asmuche to say, as to be subiect vnto the iudgement of no superiour power, then the Christian man hath power ouer all matters, & is subiect vnto the iurisdiction of no Magistrate: and that should be to no purpose at all, whiche the Apostle doth prescribe vnto Christian mē to the Romanes. O how grosse & great was the blindnesse of the times passed, wherewith our forefathers were so abused, that they could not vnderstand the sleightes and guyles of the Bysshops of Rome. They haue sundry sortes of malice, wickednesse and craftes, but of all others this is most detestable to the godly, when they do falsely wrye and wrēste holy Scriptures, to cloke and couer their crafty conueyaunce withall.

They doe allege also for the maintenaunce of theyr imagination, the saying of Cōstantine the Great, out of the Ecclesiastical histories, which he spake vnto the Bysshoppes when they brought theyr contentious causes vnto him. God (sayth he) hath appoynted you to be Priests, and hath giuen you power to iudge also of vs, & therefore we be orderly iudged by you, but you cā not be iudged of mē: Wherefore loke for the iudgement of God onely amongst you, and lette al your quarels and brawles be referred vnto the trial & examinatiō of God. For you be appoynted vnto vs of God, in lewe & steede of Gods, and it is not méete that mā should iudge Gods, but he onely of whome it is written: God, stode in the congregation of Gods, & iudgeth Gods in the middes of them. And therefore leaue these matters, & set an order in those things which doe belong to the faith of God, without any contention of minde or harte burnyng. This is there: wherby they suppose, that they haue a most strong testimony of the Christian Emperour, to proue that the Bysshop of Rome hath authoritie to iudge ouer al Emperours, & withall that he ought to be iudged by no man, but by God alone.

The blindnesse of the times passed very great.

Of the wordes of Constātine the Great out of Ruffinus. Lib. 1. Cap. 2.

But lette vs see what helpe they haue of this Hystory. Firste of all there is not one worde mentioned of the Bysshop of Rome, but it is generally spoken of all the contentious Bysshops, whiche accused and complayned one vppon an other before the Emperours Maiestie. And as for that whiche the Christian and wise Emperour answered them, hee spake it onely to bryng them at one, and neuer so much as once thinking of the preeminence of the Bishop of Rome.

Secondly, he did not sende backe those Bishops to the see and iurisdiction of the Bysshop of Rome: he said not, You haue the Bysshop of Rome the vicare of Christe, and the successor of Peter, put ouer the cases of your dissentions to be determined by hym: but he sayd: Let your dissentions be reserued vnto the examinatiō of God. Abyde the iudgemēt of God onely. Let him only iudge vpon you, of whome it is written: God stode in the Synagoge of Gods, &c. So that his opinion was, that the Bysshop of Rome neyther had the iurisdiction ouer the Bysshops, but God onely.

Thirdly, the Bysshops themselues did not thinke nother that the iudgement of their matter did belong to the hearing and determination of the Bysshop of Rome, but they iudged that the Emperour had the ordinary power and iurisdiction also ouer the Bysshops. And therefore did cōmitte their matters vnto him. And whatsoeuer ỳ Emperours meaning was in his answere, this is alway a cleere case, that the Bysshops of Christes Churche whiche were at that time, were of the same opinion, touchyng the power of the magistrate, as wee doe now vpholde and stande vnto.

Fourthly, it appéereth by the Hystory, that the same Emperour dyd put hys authoritie and power in vre and practise towardes the Bysshops like as others did also, which succeeded him. He did not onely iudge of euery one of them particularly when they offended, but hée practised his authoritie also vpon all them which were subiect vnto his dominion, cōpellyng them to the Councell by his commission, whiche libertie the Simon of Rome thinketh not conuenient to be graūted to the Emperours maiestie in these dayes.

Likewise his successours also did by theyr authoritie cal Bysshops vnto Councels. Pope Leo with all hys Synode assembled at Rome, humbly besought Theodosius ỳ Emperour, that he woulde commaunde a generall Synode or councell to be kept in Italy: in which matter he trauayled also by an other letter vnto Pulcheria Augusta, and yet the Emperour beyng a wise man, did not appoynt his councell in Italy, as the Popes requeſt was, where the contention rose: but in Greece, in a citie called Chalcedon. And we may perceyue in the Epistle vnto Martianus Augustus, that neyther the place, neyther the time of the Councel was yéelded vnto the requeſt of the Bysshop of Rome. We do read also in this sorte of the Cōcell of Chalcedon, in ỳ beginning of ỳ firſt Synode: The holy, great, & Oecumenicall Synode, which is gathered togyther in the chiefe citie of Chalcedon, of the prouince of Bythinia, by the grace of God, and the Cōstantine vsed his authoritie towardes the Bysshops.

Emperours called by Bysshops to councels.

the holy commaūdement of our most godly and deerely beloued vnto God, the noble Emperours Valentinian and Martian. And a little after that. Our Lorde Christe hauyng regarde of mankinde, hath styred our moste godly and Christian Emperour to a zeale, and hée hath called vnto hym from euery where the chiefe of the priesthode. And in the Epistle of Leo the successor of Agathone, wee reade in this manner. The holy vniuersall and great firſt Synode, which your clemency assembled togither at the appoyntment of GOD, and which he gouerned according to the mynistery of God, &c. Item, we doe read also in his Actes, cōcerning the fifte Synode of Constantinople, after this manner, This preſent holy Synode is now assembled togyther, which was of late dayes summoned by the godly commaundement of our Emperour, whome God loueth and preſerueth. And Hierome in the Epitaphe vnto Eustachium of the mother of Paula, wryteth in thys sorte. And when the Emperours letters had brought togyther the Bysshops of the East, and of the Weſte Churches, vnto Rome, for certayne dissentions of the Churche. And in the Acte of the firſte Synode there is sette before the godly and sacred letter of Flauius Constantinus the Emperoure, vnto Agathon the Bysshop of Rome, wherin he doth aduise him to come, or sende his Bysshops in his stéede to the councell at Constantinople. We charge (sayth he) your fatherly blessednesse, in any wise to be no let to the will of God, but to set them forwarde. For so we hope vpō his goodnesse, that he which would haue the motion made of such a chapter or assēbly at this preſent, will graunt by his holy spirite, that the truth shall appeare, and all men be instructed, &c. Item, In the beginning of the firſt meeting we do reade this. And when the holy and vniuerſall Synode was assembled togither in this princely Cittie (God saue it) at the cōmaundement of the Emperour, &c. And in the fourth acte, We do read in the epistle of Agathon the Bishop of Rome vnto ỳ Emperour, at whose commaundement the firſte Councell was called in this wise. And therfore O my moſt Christian Lordes & sonnes, at the motie godly commaundement of your fauor and goodneſſe, we haue sente you our seruants or deputies here preſent, according vnto the obedience that wee ought, &c. Let the reader marke well that point, According to the obediēce which we ought. Did not this Pope acknowledge, that he did owe his obedience vnto the power of the Emperour? Thus it doth manifeſtly appeare, that the christian Emperours vsed theyr iurisdiction & power vpon the Bysshops: so that where as wee see the contrary vſed now adayes, it riseth altogither of the falshode and ouerthwartneſſe of the Popes that came after. For as long as the Empyre stode whole & safe, this mistery of wickednesse and of the kingdome of Antichrist could not crépe vp, as it hath done since that tyme.

They do obiect also the liberties & priuileges, whereby they be so erēcted by the ordinaūce of Emperours from the subiection of secular magistrates, that they ought nother to be iudged by them, if they offend in any matter, nor be subiect vnto any publike exactions. In dede Iustinian would, ỹ if clerkes do offende in any thing contrary to the Canons, they should be corrected by the measure & punishmẽt of their Bishops. Secõdly, he did ordeine also, ỹ in ciuile causes men of the clergy should be conuented first before their bishops, but in criminall causes, which cã not be reformed by the arbitrement of Bishops: he did not exẽpt thẽ frõ the publike iudgements of the Empyre, as we may se in his Cõstitutions. Let his Constitutions be sought, & se in the Nouelles. Notwithstãding there were certayne reasons to leade him so to doe, least they should be withdrawen frõ their duties, in case they should be entangled with litigious & brabling matters & actions, & therby be enforced to be absent from theyr Churches. And besides that also, lest they shoulde not be punished according vnto the qualitie of their cases and deserts. The Emperour neuer thought vpõ this, that the priuileges whiche be graunted to the Clergie, should serue to the licẽtious libertie of al kinde of mischiefe, wickednesse, & vngodlinesse, which the church mẽ chalenge to haue, & for that do striue to be exempted from the iudgements of Magistrates. If you liste to consider to whome, and why priuileges & franchises were giuen, you shall manifestly finde, that this order of the Church, as it is now in the Popery, is so turned, corrupted, decayed, and become quyte contrary vnto that that it was before time, when the priuileges of the clergy were giuen, that there can be left no reason, why they should enioy that any longer.

Iustinian.

In Nouellis. 5. 16. 17. 67. 73. 82 86. & 123.

A priuilege is lost, bycause of ỹ abuses therof. They haue abused theyr priuileges, & do dayly abuse them to farre beyond ỹ nocke. Ergo they haue lost the priuileges, of which they do so much boast & crake. A priuilege is lost by reason of an offence. And the faultes of the churche, yea their mischieuous liues & outragious crimes, be most manifestly knowen. A priuilege is losse by doyng of a contrary facte. For they ought to do the greater good to the churches, the more cõmodious priuileges they gatte. But they do thereby more hurte & hinder the churches, so that the cõtrary falleth out of ỹ whiche the moste goodly Emperours appointed vpon. A priuiledge is losse for an enormious harme done, & how great detrymẽt & dãmage redoundeth to the Emperour & to the Church also, of the immunities & frædomes of the churche men the wiser sort do know ful wel. In times past, when the nũber of ecclesiasticall persons was small, they were to the lesse detrimẽt or dãmage of mẽ, exempted frõ publike charges & burdens. But now who is able to recounte to how great a hinderance & discõmoditie of the publike Magistrates and people, so huge a multitude of idle bellies, born only to waste corne & cattel, are so priuileged, that what soeuer commõ charge or burden commeth to be borne, they go away clere and scotfre. A priuilege is losse and decayed, when the occasion and cause therof doth cease. Generally the care and keping of religion was the cause of priuileges. For it was not conuenient that these priuileges should be giuen without an apparant cause, which can not be graunted,

A priuilege is losse bycause of abuse. Quæst. 11. cap. 3. Priuilegium.

The priuileges of the Church men to proue that they ought to be subiect to Magistrates.

graunted, but casually, and vpon certaine reasons. Therefore, seyng that this cause of priuileges hath bene long since voyde in the churchmen, who perceyueth not, how reasonable it is, that seyng religion it selfe ceaseth, the priuilege should cease also?

Yet notwithstãding, whatsoeuer become of the priuileges and franchises, it can not be well gathered therupon, that the Church men be out of the number of thẽ, that be subiect vnto Magistrates. But it is rather gathered therupon, that they do appertaine vnto the iurisdictiõ of thẽ of whome they haue receyued priuileges. For vnlesse that this power of the swoorde & mere Empire had all ecclesiasticall persons subiectes vnto thẽ by Gods law, and bound also to their iudgements and exactions, how coulde the priuileges whiche they graunted, be ratified and assured? Wherfore the Christiã Emperours in times passed did not altogither refuse their power, whiche they had ouer ecclesiastical persons & Bishops, as we may perceyue in the Emperours law, but they did practise, & put the same in vre, as often as they nẽded. Yea and the Bishops also of old time did acknowlege the same, and did gladly yelde thẽselues therunto, as we may perceyue by their writtings & other ecclesiastical histories. Whiche of all the bishops of Rome did with more carefulnesse gouerne the Apostolicall church, as they call it, than Gregory the Great? And yet not withstanding he wrote vnto one Theodorus a philitiõ touching ỹ emperour Mauritius, in this manner: He thinketh it to be a harde matter, that hee should forbid his Souldiers frõ the seruice of him, who hath not onely gyuen him all that he hath, but hath graunted him also to gouerne not onely ouer Souldiers, but ouer Priestes also. And in the ende of the epistle vnto the Emperour Maurice himselfe, he sayth, I haue done my dutie, and haue performed my obedience to the Emperour, and I haue concealed no pece of my minde, that I ought to say for God. This sayth he. How cã it be then, that the lower sorte of the clergie should not be subiecte to the Magistrates by Gods law, seyng that this Bishop did not onely obey the Emperour, but did cõfesse also that he ought to obey him, & did openly testifie, that God graunted him to gouerne not onely the Souldiers, but Priests also?

Therfore we do cõclude according vnto the saying of the Apostle, the scriptures, ỹ Ecclesiastical histories, & the old fathers, yea and some Bishops of Rome, & by emperial lawes also, that euery soule ought to be subiect vnto the superiour power, which hath receyued the swoorde of the Lorde, meanyng by euery soule, all sortes of men, of what estate or degrée so euer they be, spirituall or temporal, & that of conscience, bycause of Gods ordinãce. So that they must al obey his statutes & ordinances: and that whosoeuer they be, that doe refuse to do the same, do endaũger thẽselues to the wrath and reuenge of God, as resisting his ordinance. And the Emperours, Kings, Princes, and other Magistrates may thẽ lawfully exẽpt any man clerely out of this obedience, when they thẽselues be so exempted and frely discharged, that they be no loger ỹ ministers of God, nor bounde to obey & to serue hym: which thing shall neuer be. For like as it is not lawfull for any liuyng man to resist the ordinaunce of God, so it is not lawfull neyther for any Magistrate at al, no nor for the Emperour, to decay or neglect, or gyue ouer, or forsweare the same ordinaunce, as long as hée carieth the swoorde, and beareth the office of the magistrate. And thus much we haue sayde touchyng subiectes, and whether that Ecclesiastical persõs ought also to be taken for subiects.

Hovve farre forth men ought to obey the Magistrate.

FOr almuche as they be menne which do beare the office of magistrates in this woorld, and therfore as men may erre, and offende aswell as others subiect vnto infirmitie, ignorance and affections of the flesshe, and that so it falleth out oftentimes, that they do naughtily, vniustly, perniciously, and mischieuously vse the good, iuste, profitable, and holy power whiche they haue receyued of God, it is no vayne question to be asked, howe farre forth men ought to obey them. When wée talke of the obedience which ought to be yéelded immediatly to God, then this question serueth not: for no godly person will thinke it méete to be called into question, how farforth men ought to obey God, when he chargeth or commaundeth vs any thing: knowyng þ we must absolutely by all meanes, and in al things obey him, what, and of what sorte so euer it be that hée wil haue vs eyther to beleue in hart, or to doe in déede. Surely that man doth obey God, which in obeyng the Magistrate, dothe obey Gods ordinãce. But for asmuch as this kind of obedience is wrought by þ means of mãs ministery, whereby things may be cõmaunded, which can not be performed to stande with God it is algates necessary to demand how farforth men must obey the cõmaundements of Magistrates.

It is one thing to bey God immediatly and by meanes.

The Apostle Peter séemeth to cõmaunde vs to obey all constitutions of the Magistrates, when he sayth: Be subiecte vnto euery creature of man, as though he should say, be subiect vnto euery constitution of man. But these woordes are not to be vnderstand of the constitutions & commaũdements of men, but of the sorts of Magistrates, of whiche some bée chiefe and principall, some secõdarie, and vnder officers as it appeereth by that, which he addeth after: Eyther vnto the king as principal, either to the presidents and rulers as sente by hym: elfe hée should haue sayde, whether they be kings or theyr presidents. Wherfore this place doth not so much enforme vs howe farforth as what Magistrates we ought to obey and wherefore, therefore he added: bycause of the Lorde.

Hovve p ter sayth, subiect v to euery creature man. 1. Per. 2.

But yet vpon that, that he sayth, Bicause of the Lord: and, To the punishment of them that do harme, and to the prayse of them that doe well. And that Paule sayth: that Princes be a terrour, not vnto them, whiche doe well, but euill. Item: That he is the minister of God vnto good, and that hée is the mynister of God vnto anger, for hym whiche doeth that, that is wicked. Upon this (I say) may may bée easily gathered, that wée muste so farre forth obey the Magistrate, as hée commaundeth those thynges, which may be commanded by the minister of God, and be conuenient and fitte for him, which doth beare the swoorde, the reuenger of the euyll, and the defender of the good. But in case that hée doe commaunde wicked things, contrary vnto Gods will and woorde, wrongfull, and vniuste, and against the office of a Magistrate, it is not méete that we shuld obey hym in such cõmaundements, but then we must say, that we ought to obey GOD, rather than menne. But of this poynt wée haue oftentymes spoken, & I suppose that there is no man that doth openly and absolutely say agaynst it. For who seeth not, but that nothyng ought to be commaunded which maketh against God, and is euill, and that it ought not to be performed, if it shoulde be commaunded: For it is not possible that the obedience whiche is gyuen vnto the Magistrate agaynst God, can excuse the offence of the faulte. Lyke as the houshold seruaunts be not excused of theyr obedience, when the stewarde of the house commaundeth them any thing that is contrary to the good mans minde, but what and if the magistrate do vse violence towardes them, whiche doe not in al poynts obey him?

Rom. 13.

A violence wrongfully done by the Magistrate.

In this respecte it behoueth the Christian mã to suffer patiently any wrong or trouble done vnto him, rather than to abide to be driuen to offend agaynst God. And yet for all that, it shall not be vnlawful for any man, to shifte himselfe away, flée, or somewhat séeke to mitigate an vn wrongfull violence, so that it be not wrought by any vnlawfull meanes & wayes, as it appeareth for a certeine holy mẽ haue done, as Dauid, Christ himself, the Prophetes also & Apostles. But if that can not be, the Christian man must beware, that he go not about to put of a wrong done hym by an other contrary wrong, but he muste rather beare with all thyngs, & not thinke vpon his owne reuenge, but committe the reuenge vnto the iuste iudge, whiche sayth: Leaue the reuenge vnto mée, and I wil pay it home. Yea, he shall rather pray for them that do afflict him, according vnto the doctrine of our Sauiour. Notwithstandyng we muste make some differẽce of those things, whiche bée violently wrought agaynst Christian men by the wicked Magistrate. For some of them doe cõcerne temporall and worldly matters, as our bodyes, goodes, and honour, &c. Some be wrought agaynst the euerlastyng goodes, as the truth of Gods woorde, fayth in Christe our Lorde and onely Sauiour blessed for euermore, agaynst the knowledge of GOD, the true seruice, inuocation and adoration of God, the sacrifice of prayse, the communion of the faythfull, and such other like. As touching temporal goodes the Christian man may with good conscience suffer all hurtes and hinderances whiche be done therein, yea and death also, muche more the spoyle of his temporall good, bannishment, outlawe and imprysonment. In all those things he may kéepe his fayth and hope of euerlastyng lyfe, safe and sounde, but as concernyng the euerlastyng goodes, he muste not suffer them to be

Rom. 12. Matth. 5.

A differẽce betwixt things wrongfully done.

wrongfully wrested from him. For there is no mã so mighty, that is able to plucke away any of them agaynst a mãs will. For the lotting of the lande dothe not in the might of the Magistrate, but in the will & consent of the beleuer. Though the Prince shoulde enforce vs neuer so muche to ble a counterfayte & false seruice of God, & seeke to turne the true religion of Christ into superstitions & idolatrie, we be not bound to obey his cõmandements, nor he can not wreste out his purpose of vs agaynst our willes.

There is very muche difference betwirt them which doe patiently abide a wrõg, and them whiche yelde to worke vniustice. A christian man can not with a good conscience abide those things, whiche bee wrought through vniustice. Nor can not with a safe conscience doe vniuste things when they be commaunded, he must haue a regarde of Gods will in those thynges which ought to be done: and he must haue a will to doe that, whiche he ought to do, and to omit that, whiche he ought not to doe. But in case that a man can not be suffered to do that which he is bounde to doe, accordyng vnto the will of God, and is hartily desirous to doe it if hee could, in such a case the will is reputed in stede of the facte, before God: but in case that he be commaunded to do those things which ought to be eschued, he can not excuse himselfe before God if that he doe thẽ, though hee say, that hee was compelled to abide it by force and wrong, and that he coulde not doe withal, nor auoyde the doyng of it, but alleage that hee did agaynst his will: this will not serue. For no man is in this case excused if he say: I did this vnwillingly. For it is not onely requisite, that we will not do that which is vniust, but it is requisite also, that we doe not the same whiche we know is vniust. Who is able (say they) to withstande the superiour power, who: Mary the Christian man whiche by the strength of his faith is able to ouercome any Monarche, not only of one or two realmes, but al the whole worlde taken togither. This is the victory (sayth John) which ouercometh the worlde, your fayth. How shall we withstand Satã the Prince of this worlde, in case we be so feeble in faith, that we cã not asmuch as resist the worlde? How shall wee ouercome the world, in case we shal yéld vnto the power of one Prince alone in the defence of Gods truth? He y feareth god more thã y might of any mã, be he neuer so great, may easily ouercome the world, much sooner a Prince or two. It is not harde at al for hym, whiche is crucified vnto the worlde, and the worlde agayne vnto him, to withstãd the whole power of this worlde in Gods cause. Whosoeuer is newe borne by the spirite of God, may truely say: It is not I, that lyue now, but it is Christ which liueth in mée. And I desire to be dissolued, and to be with Christe. And, Who shall separate mée from the charitie of God, whiche is in Christ Iesu? whether is it trouble or anguishe, or famine, or persecution, or the sworde, or lyke, or death, &c. Hée will neuer say: Who is able to withstande the power? The thrée chyldren of the Hebrewes were so strengthened in fayth, that they woulde rather abyde to bée hurled into Hell gates can not preuayle against the christian to euill, much lesse the Magistrate.

Three children in the burnyng ouen.

into the burning ouen, than to yelde to the wicked decree of the most puissante King, and to be compelled to worshippe the golden Image. They coulde abide the wrongfull enforcement, and horrible to the fleshe, but they could not be ouercomed by him, but escaped away with glorye, and had the vpper hand. And seeyng these Hebrewes being vnder the olde Testamente could do this, by the grace of God, why should not the faithfull Christian man be able, by the same grace, to do the lyke, considering the passyng excellency of the newe Testament?

When the doctrine of the Interim was firste opened to the estates of the Empire, and receyued also at Augsburg at the assemble of y Empire, to the corruption of the truth of the Gospell, Anno 1548. what time many mens consciences did wrestle withall, some sayde, to make a colorable excuse in a matter vnexcusable, that the Princes and estates of the Empire were subiect vnto the Emperoures Maiestie, whom they were bound to obey and might not resiste, and that they should yet heape a further euill vppon them, in case they should withstand hym, whiche were nothing else, but to tempt God. And these excuses in sinne were vttered by some folke, that were not all vnlearned, yéelding themselues more to the time than to the truthe that they knew, whiche is rather to be lamented, than excused and coloured, we haue declared before howe, and how farre forth the Magistrates of the Empire be subiect vnto the Emperors maiestie. And who séeth not this, that there is no excuse for hym, whiche dothe obey his superiors in this worde more than God? For almuche as there is offence done not only by them, whiche do commaunde their subiectes things contrary vnto Gods worde, but by the subiects also in obeying the vnlawfull commaundement more than God. Doth that saying, It behoueth vs to obey God more than men, not touche the Emperor also, so y in case he commaund things contrary vnto God, mẽ should rather obey him than GOD? God forbid: nor I thinke not that the Emperour himselfe woulde haue it so, if he might by any meanes be instructed of the truth of God. No doubte subiects oughte to obey theyr superioures: but they be so bounde and in suche case of obedience, if the commaundemente runne of those things that be iust. Secondly, notwithstanding they lay vppon vs sore and vnreasonable burdens in worldly matters, we must beare withall, but not so in case that they commaunde thinges contrarye vnto God, and hurtfull vnto godlye mens consciences. For the example is not good of the vnder Magistrate, whiche they alleadged. For no Christian Magistrat is so bound to obey his Prince, that he must yelde vnto hym, and serue him in things whiche be cleane contrarye vnto the keping of Christian religion. For in case he so doe, he can not be excused before God. Now how vayne a thing it is which they did bidde them beware of, leaste the states of the Empire shuld heape vppon them and theyr subiectes some greater euill, if they shoulde not followe the Emperours minde, euerye man of vnderstanding dothe easily percepue. It is not so clére a matter, that he whiche refuseth to obey the vnlawfull commaundements of hys superiours, dothe purchase hymselfe an euill turne. For it is possible that God may alter their heartes or stay them, and cause that the refusal of such obedience may be blameles, yea and be commended also of them, when they be better informed. Secondly, notwithstanding that he purchase himselfe a shrewde turne, that is to saye, fall into the displeasure of his superiours, be spoyled of hys goodes, yea and be slayne also, what euill turne can this be to a Christian man, whiche sticketh not to weare out all stormes in this worlde, to eschew the wrathe of God and euerlasting damnatiō: Let iustice be done, saye they, and let the worlde sinke or swimme, but the Christian mā doth rather say, Let that be done, whyche is acceptable vnto God, and let heauen and earthe fall. Let the truthe of Gods word remayne, and let Heauen and Earth passe. Herein Christian Princes be not exempted, whome that saying toucheth: Be you learned whiche iudge the lande, serue the Lord in feare, and kisse the sonne, &c. They be the seruauntes of Chryste, the hyghest Emperoure and kyng, and for his sake it is méete for them, as well as for other Christian mē, to sustaine all daungers and perils, and not to haue a greater loue & affection vnto their kingdom, thā to God their Lord, vnlesse they wil heare said vnto them: Whosoeuer loueth father or mother, his substaunce or his gouernment, yea & his soule also, more thā me, is not worthy or mete for me.

Wherefore men must earnestlye beware, that the fault of the estates and Princes of the Empire, whyche receyued & did set forthe to their subiectes false doctrine, contrarie vnto the teaching of the Gospell, at the instance and force of the Emperoure, be not excused by such imaginatiōs. I knowe it was not wrought of malice, but of weakenesse of faithe: but yet it is not méete so to excuse it, least in seking of excuses in sinnes against our consciences, we prouoke the patience of the Lorde against vs and our Princes, and shut out our selues from the way of amendemente. For when shall men beginne to reforme ẏ fact, wherof the offence is not only not acknowledged, but also maintayned and excused by coulored and fained reasōs: The weake mās part is not to denie his weakenesse, but to acknowledge it rather, and to lament it with the Apostle Peter, and to pray that he may receyue forgiuenes of his fault of God, and be afterward better stayed and confirmed in faith. The hope of Gods grace is not to be denyed to anye weake person. And yet withall no man can be excused to maynetayne hys synne by such vayne excuses, as to saye, that it was done by the weakenes of faith, and to bereaue himselfe of that heauenly grace, whiche is offered vnto them that do truly repente. For oure nature is suche, that as long as wée goe about to excuse our faultes, wée doe not lamente and séeke pardon of them, and so consequentlye wée doe not thynke at all of the amendemente of them: and séeke to beware of them afterwardes. And loke, whereas that there is no repentance of sinnes, nor séking of pardon, nor

The Princes of the Empire not excused for suffering the Interim.

amen

amendment, there is no forgiuenesse to be trusted vpon, without which no liuing man can be saued. And this we haue briefly spoken, not so muche to note the slipper fall of times past, as to giue warning of that which is to come, for them whiche haue yet anye eares to heare.

And forasmuche as we declared, that it belongeth to the Magistrates to haue the special and chiefe care of religion, least that the ignorannte shulde take it, to thinke that whatsoeuer they do determine in matters of religion, ought to be followed: we haue thoughte good to speake somewhat largelyer of this pointe, before we knit vp this place. Like as no mā is made of hymselfe but of God, as the rest of the creatures be, and none of vs nor any man else can haue anye minde, vnderstanding or strength of himselfe, but whatsoeuer we haue therof, we haue receiued it al of God our creator, and that there is no mā that is able to rule, gouerne, and preserue himselfe in al poyntes, but that al haue nede to be gouerned and preserued by God. So it doth belōg vnto euery man, to directe his whole lyfe, vnderstanding, wil, and strength that he hath, vnto the order and appoyntment of Gods wil, and to apply himselfe in al things vnto him, of whom he hath receyued both life, and altogither, and must know, that he hathe no power further than is appoynted and bestowed vpon him from God.

And all things ẏ may be wrought by man, be distincted into three membersFor eyther they doe concerne the man himselfe by whome they be wrought, eyther some others, eyther God himselfe. If we cōsider the first sort, I suppose we shall finde no man, that can iudge, that our factes or doings whiche do concerne our selues, may be by god reason exempted frō this rule. And in case that anye man shal obiect the place of Ecclesiasticus where we reade in this wise, God from the beginning made man, and left him in the hand, or power of his owne counsel, he gaue him precepts, and commaundements: If thou wilt kéepe the commaundementes, they shall kéepe and preserue thée. And thou shalt for euermore kéepe a pleasant faith. He hathe set before thée water and fyre, lay thy hande to whiche thou wilte, &c. I answere, that this is not spoken of euery man, but of Adam, how he receyued frée wyll of God, when he was firste made to the likenesse of him. After which sort Augustine doth expound it also.

Ecclesiast. God made man at the firste, &c.

Lib. de Cāti. cap. 8.

Secondly, there is herein mentiō made of the commaundements and preceptes of God, whiche doth vtterlye take away the libertie of mā. So that this place dothe nothing derogate the truth of this sentence, wherof we speake. And hereby it may easily be gathered, that man hath much lesse libertie in those matters which doe concerne others: as wiues, chyldren, seruauntes or other that be vnder him. And thirdlye, least of all in those things which doe concerne the glory and seruice of God, as those be which do touch religiō, we shal make an accompt vnto God of euerye ydle word, as Christ doth testifye. And what libertie can man haue in matters of religion, to appoint what séemeth him good without the worde of God? For ye can not saye, that in déede this libertie can not be giuen man see more ferther thā ẏ duhe of ẏ.

to a priuate person, and notwithstãding that they be in an nother case which do beare the office of a Magistrate, and be set in high power, and withall be Christian menne: for in deede this libertie dothe so much the lesse belong vnto them, the more they be restreyned both of their ministerie and of the Christian faithe togyther. For as concerning Christianitie, they haue Christe to their Lorde, ẏ only begotten of God, vnto whome the father hathe giuen all power in Heauen and in earth: whose wordes they ought to beleue and sticke vnto, in as much as they be Christians, and to serue him in that power whiche they haue receiued in that respect that they be Magistrates. Wherefore it is for none lesse mete than for them, to ordeyne any thing in the religion of Christ at their will, wythout the word of God. So muche lacketh it of that, that they be exempted from this rule, whiche as we sayde, byndeth all sortes of menne, beyodes that willworshippings whiche be appoynted at the arbitrement and commaundement of men, doe exceedingly displease God. And therefore hee charged hys people also, saying: Do this only to the Lorde God, and nother adde nor diminishe any poynte. And Christe himselfe doth in expresse wordes alleadge that saying of Esay: They doe worshippe me in vayne, teaching the doctrines and commandementes of menne. And other of the prophetes also are wont to reproue and condemne suche arbitrarie and willworshipping for abhomination and ydolatrie. Saule did sacrifice to no forren God, but vnto the very true God of Israell. And yet notwythstanding he is blamed of Samuell, that he did a thing not mete for him to doe, and vppon that occasion made himselfe vnworthy to continue king.

1. Sam. 15

In consideratiõ hereof it is made manifeste, that albeit that the care and charge of religion doe belong vnto Christian Magistrates, yet for all that it dothe not apperteyne vnto them, to order any thing in religion without the worde of God. For it is possible that willworshippings should please God, forasmuch as they be not conformable vnto his will, nor they can not assure mens cõsciences that they doe truly serue God, that is to say, do that which is acceptable vnto him. Wherefore God gaue not that power vnto Moses, nother to order religion as he listed, but he prescribed all things by his expresse worde, which he would haue him set forthe vnto his people. Nay he did not informe and giue charge secretely of this matter, but toke him vp vnto him the second time to the hil, for the space of fortie dayes, and instructed him, and made his seruice to be authentike and allowable by great portentes and wonders shewed in the sighte of all the people, to the intente there shoulde be lefte no occasion of mistrust, but that the religion whych he dyd sette forthe, was delinered vnto him from God, and no wayes presumed vpon at mans arbitremẽt and pleasure. Nor our Sauiour dyd not leaue it to the arbitremente of his Apostles, to sette forth what doctrine and religion they listed, vnto the worlo, but he dyd hymselfe firste enforme them of the doctrine of life, and then he did ordeyne also the Sacraments of religion, and confirmed the

It belongeth not to the Magistrate to order any thing in religion vvithout Goddes vvorde.

the same by signes and wonders: and then, lastlye hee gaue them in commaundemente to teache and preache those things, whiche they had receyued by information from him, as the Apostle doth testifye of himselfe, saying: For I haue receyued that of the Lorde, whiche I haue also delyuered vnto you. So that it is a clere case, that the religion of both the Testamentes, was delyuered and confyrmed by the tradition and power not of man but of God, and that with the testimonie of myracles ioyned withall. God will not haue his ministers to be in doubt and vncertayned of hys wyll, to the intente they maye serue hym with a clere faythe and conscience, wheych can not bee, if the Magistrate do presume to order things apperteyning vnto Religion vppon his owne head. They vnderstode this also, whyche did institute the orders of Religion amongst the Romaines. So Numa Pompilius when he did sette order for the seruice of their Gods, did persuade the people of Rome, that ẏ Goddesse called Ageria, did appeare vnto him by night, and informe him of all thynges that were to be ordered amõgst thẽ. For he wist well, that what religion so euer he should sette vnto them, shoulde be but vayne, withoute the feare of God. And therefore his purpose was, to make the people beleeue that he ordeyned nothing vpon his owne head, but accordyng vnto the will of the Gods. So that wee should be very vnwise, if we shoulde haue an opinion, that all things whiche the Magistrate dothe institute, touching religion, were authenticall, and worthy to be obserued vpon the only colour and pretence of his office, which were nothing else, but to make an exchaunge in so serious a matter, in taking away the arbitrarie power in the order of Religion, from our maisters the Bishops, and to rõuey ouer vnto the Magistrates. Therefore when we teache that the charge of Religion doth belong vnto the Magistrate, we do not meane of such a charge as the churchmen doe abuse, but of the same whiche is conformable vnto the word and doctrine of Christ. So that they may sustaine the care and charge of the making of ministers, and of wholesome & sound doctrine, and ecclesiasticall ceremonies, according to the example of the faithfull Kings, whiche ordered the seruices and ceremonies of the law, not after their owne willfull presumption, but by the prescripte of Gods lawe, as we sayde before, speaking of this their office and dutie. This we meante to adde vnto that we spake before, least wee shoulde seeme to allowe the dammable ouersight of those Magistrates, which do sette forth vnto their subiectes what forme of religion they list, withoute the word of God, & will haue it to be allowed & obserued through the authority which they haue receiued frõ God: and in case that any man refuse to follow it, they doe condemne hym straightway of obstinacy & rebellio, as though that Christian religiõ depẽded vpon ẏ power of Magistrats, and not rather vpon the infallible sincerie and authority of Gods word.

Numa Pompilius.

I beseech our Lord Jesus Christ, the onely mediator, redeemer, and teacher of all men, ẏ he will delyuer his Churche frõ the Popes tyranny, and giue so much vnderstãding vnto Christiã magistrates, that they may perceiue the office and dutie of their authoritie, and suche zeale of godlye truth, that they maye vndertake and beare the care of our Religiõ faythfully & religiously, according to ỳ prescript and order of Gods word. And that they may so serue to the profyte of their subiects, with feare and trẽbling. Some men do argue of the lawes of Magistrates, whether that they doe binde the consciences of the faithfull or not. And we may easilye answere to their question out of the Apostle, which commaundeth Christian mẽ to be subiect vnto their Magistrates, not only for feare of anger and displeasure, but for conscience sake also. Whereby it appeareth, ỳ our consciences be bound to obey the lawes of oure Magistrates, though we might be without them well ynough touching our selues. We bee so tyed vnto the lawes of hygher powers by dutie of obedience whereunto we be subiect by gods ordinãce, that we be bound in conscience to the keeping of them: for whereby is oure conscience more tyed, than by the wil and ordinance of God? But wee doe meane of suche lawes as may be obeyed with a good and vpryghte conscience. For if it maye not so be, no Christian man is bound to obey thẽ.

and

VVhether that the lavves of magistrates bind the consciẽces of the faithfull.

Besides ỳ, there is arguing what the subiects haue to do, if the Magistrate fall vnto Tyrannie, and whether that it be lawfull to kill a Tyrant. Item in case that the Magistrate do not defẽd his subiects, whether that they may defende thẽselues by their owne strengthes: but these kindes of questions can not be debated to any edifying or good doing, nor there canne bee no aunswere made thereof to grounde vpon. For these pointes do depend vpon some certaine speciall order, without whiche they can not be well enterprised. Besydes this, there is an other question touching those punishmentes of the offenders, which we do reade as determined vppon in Gods law, whether that the malefactors ought to be punished and vsed according as it is ordered by those lawes: and my opinion is that no Magistrate is bounde vnto them anye further, than so farforth as they do appoint what offences ought to be punished by deathe, and whiche ought to be chastned, sauing the parties liues. I maruell, if any mã of vnderstanding can thinke it to be liked, that pety thæues be hãged vppe, and the filthye adulterers chastned with some slighte punishment, without danger or losse of life.

Of punishment of offenders.

And as touching warres, whether that it be lawfull for a Christian man to goe a warfare, and to yelde the obedience of a souldyer vnto the Magistrate, and what kind of warre is lawfull, and what not, And what is to be thought of forren warres: I thinke it good to set forth in a speciall treatise alone. And we do speake nothing of this matter at this present, bycause it hathe bin already treated of by others, and that we coulde bee contented nowe to make an ende of this trauell about our common places, which I wish of God, may serue more to the edifying of Godlye mindes, than to any vayne and scrupulous reasoning, and arguyng.

FINIS.

WE HAVE ANNEXED HERE-vnto, gentle reader, two other places, one of Othes, and an other of Vsurye, taken out of the sayd Wolfgangus Musculus Commentaries vpon the Psalmes: Very necessary to be considered in these our tymes.

¶ Of Othes.

FOrasmuch as ỳ Prophet in the fiftenth Psalme, in ỳ two last verses, doth amongst other things require to haue this integritie, & soũdnes in the Citizen of the kingdome of God, that he must neither alter ỳ which he hath sworn to his neighbour, nor giue his money out to Vsurie, I haue thought it good, to giue ỳ reader some notes touching Othes, & Vsurie: specially bicause that in our times all the worlde is ful of swearing, & vsurie is growẽ to be very excessiue & great. I know right well, that some kinde of men haue no eares to heare of this doctrine, but be so farre wide frõ the soundnes of all Christian godlines, that they haue no reuerence at all to the name of God, much lesse are any thing gouerned with the spirit and affection of brotherly loue and charitie, yet notwithstanding, lest I should neglect my dutie of trusty & faithfull denice also herein, I will simply and plainly tell you what ỳ godly persone ought to thinke, and endeuour to doe in these pointes. And first, what an othe is, we nede not to define. For it is so wel knowẽ and vsed, that it needeth no declaration: when God is taken to witnes by the vse of his name, to testifie of some truthe, or to promise solemnly to keepe any thing ỳ we be charged withal. Here we speake not now of a vaine, but of a lawfull oth.

The reason or consideration of othes is grounded vpon this point, ỳ forasmuch as it is presumed yõ al men, that they do beleue that there is a God, vnto whom al secrets be open, & of whom faith & truthe is well liked, & that on the contrarie side he is much offended w falshode, deceit & lies, & hath so great regarde of iustice, that he will sende worthy punishmẽt to such as do forsweare themselues, it was receiued by a cõmen consent & custome of al mẽ, to vse & take the name of God, the God of all for witnesse, whan we would haue men to credite these things which we can no otherwise confirme & assert to be true, & appoint him to be ỳ reuenger therof, in case we do sweare any thing ỳ is not true, or do not performe our pretence, of whom all men be perswaded that he will not suffer the abuse of his name to goe vnpunished. And our forefathers haue euer from the beginning had a great reuerence & religion in this manner of swearing, not only amongst the Iewes, but amongst the Ethnikes and Gentiles also. So that these things that be doubtful & vncertain, are wont to bee confirmed by an othe taking: and in case any controuersie do rise, it is cleared by the meanes of an Othe. So sayeth the Apostle, men do sweare by one that is greater than them selues: and the ende of all their controuersie to grounde them vpon, is an Othe. This goeth clére awaye without any staye or doubt, wherefore it néedeth no larger declaration. Therefore we must proceede vnto those pointes, wherin is more matter. As whether that an Othe be lawfull for Christian men to vse. Secondly, what is the abuse of an Othe. Thirdly, of the discharge of Othes.

Hebr. 6.

Whether it be lawfull for Christian men to vse Othes.

Anabaptistes.

THis question should not néede, vnlesse hat the Anabaptistes had so troubled many mens consciences with this erronious opinió also in our age, traueling to take vterly away al Othes, as vnlawful, and that by the colour of Christes wordes, where he speaketh after this manner: You haue heard agayne, that it hath bene said to the fathers. Thou shalt not forsweare, but persourm those things which thou hast sworne to the Lord: but I say vnto you, sweare not at all, neither by heauen, bicause it is ỳ seate of God, neither by the earth, bicause it is his fotestole, &c. but your talke shal be yea, yea, nay, nay: whatsoeuer is put more to this, commeth of euyll. By these wordes they doe gather, that there is no kynde of Othe at all, lawfull for a Christian man, vicause of the generall word vtterly or altogether. Wherby they surmise that it is forbidden, that no man in any wyse shoulde sweare: but we wil declare hereafter how naughtily they doe vnderstand Christes wordes, to inferre this doctrine therupon, and for this presét I thinke it méetest to declare whether ỳ an Othe made in truth without guile, & with the reuerence of Gods name, be of it self a thing euill & vnlawfull or not. If it be euill of it self to vse an Othe, surely it must then be vnlawful. If it be not of it self euil, it is not vnlawful, vnlesse it be made euill & vnlawful by circumstances. But in case a mã wil hold it to be euil, it must nédes be euill, bicause men doe sinne in sweareing, either against the glorie of Gods name, either against ỳ loue of our neighbour, & in case it be no sinne any of both these wayes to sweare, so that neither the loue of God, nor of our neighbour be hindered thereby, I sée it not, how it can be said by any direct & groũded reason, ỳ an Othe is euill & vnlawful.

That an Othe is not against the glorie of Gods Name.

FIrst, if we consider the reason why the vse of sweareing was taken vp of all nations throughout all the world (as I sayd before) I suppose it shal appeare, ỳ it doth nothing blemish the glorie of God, ỳ the truth is confirmed by the vsing of his name, & that the man findeth credit thereby, which can by no other meanes, witnesse or signes, make ỳ worthy to be beleued, which he doth els know to be true, but only by the vsing of the name of God. For séeing ỳ God is truth it selfe, it is not possible ỳ he should be miscontented with this custome & manner, when the truth is confirmed by the testimony of his name. And this reuerence & religiõ is no rebuke vnto his name, that there is credit giuen to him that is sworne in a darke & doubtfull case, not bicause of ỳ persone of him that sweareth, but bicause of the reuerence of Gods name, which is vsed in the Othe, in that it is perceiued both by them ỳ do sweare, and by them also that do offer the Othe, that God only is ỳ knower of priuities and secretes, & the hater & punisher of all falshood. No man of vnderstãding is so mad to thinke that it were a decay of his estimation, if he were sought of all men of the testimonie of the truth, and had such authoritie with all men, that euery one would giue credit vnto his name wout any gainesaying, when others did but name him. Wherefore he must be a verie vniust man, that will not acknowledge that the vse of an Othe, so that lying and lightnesse be away, doth not only not derogat any point of Gods glorie, but rather auaunce it. So we do reade in Jeremie: And thou shalt sweare, the Lorde liueth in truth, iudgement and iustice, and the nations shall blesse and prayse him. Howe doe the nations prayse the Lord, by that that his people do sweare by his name? they do praise him, that is to say, they doe make his name glorious and renoumed, when they doe giue credite vnto them that doe sweare by it, and do finde so great an obseruance and reuerence therof in the swearer, that he doth always in déede persourme the same which he hath sworne. Wherfore ỳ Prophet sayd not simply: Thou shalt sweare, The Lord liueth, but he added In truth, iudgement & iustice. Therfore that which is vsed with a religion towardes God, & giueth occasion to aduaunce the name of God, is no doubt not simply, but excellently good, good (I say) in it self, if it be handled aright.

Hebr. 6.

That an Othe is not against the Loue of our neighbour.

THe place of the Apostle, which we recited before, doth sufficiently declare, that the vse of sweareing doth much good amongst men in that ỳ it doth ende many strifes and controuersies. The othe (sayth he) is the ende of their strife, to the confirmation, meaning of truth, and quietnes. For like as debates, strifes contentions and brawlings, &c. doe disquiet men, and take awaye the most excellent benefite of peace: and as he is also worthely reputed for a most noysome enemie of men, whosoeuer is either a beginner of debate and strife himself, or els doth maintaine the debates that be kindled by others, or hinder their attonement, so ỳ thing must nédes be accounted a cõmodious & friendly matter vnto mẽ, by the vsage wherof debates & strifes be ridde away, truth is established, peace restored, and a quietnesse set and continued. And séeing that this is wrought through the benefite of that Othe which is deuoutly & religiously taken in truth and good faith, who perceiueth not, that ỳ vse of an othe is such, that it can not be taken from men without their great discommoditie? Wherefore the very necessitie of it doth almost crie out, ỳ they be very vnwise, (I goe no farther) & vnderstãd not how much they go about to hinder the life of man, which sake vtterly to subuert the whole vse of sweareing. Albeit that the Othe dyd in no respect touche the glorie of God, yet notwithstanding God is so louing towards mã, that he can in no sorte like their endeauours, which goe about asmuch as in thẽ lieth, to ouerthrow the good and benefite of publique quietnes. And now seeing that the condition of a lawfull othe is such, that it is not onely commodious & necessarie for the trafike of men, but doth also by a speciall meanes aduance the glorie of the name of God amongst the Gentiles, we do for a certaintie conclude, that the vse thereof is so farre off from being euill and vnlawfull, that it is also tried to be good and necessarie.

That an Othe is commaunded by God.

ALthough that it be sufficient inough for him that is quiet and loueth not many wordes, to be resolued vpon this question, if he do once assuredly knowe that the nature and kynde of a lawfull othe is such, that there is not onely no euil nor vnlawfulnes in it, but that it doth also auaile much, bothe to the glorie of Gods name, and to the commoditie and quietnes of men, yet for all that let vs adde this thereunto also, as being more than sufficient, that the vse of an othe is besides this commẽded also in the holy Scriptures. First by that that it was taught to ỹ people of God by his commaundement. Secondly, by the examples also of most godlye persons. Thirdly, for that it is a peece of Gods seruice. Fourthly, in that it was foretolde by the saying of the Prophetes, touching the time of the newe Testament, that it should fal out, that the Gentiles turned vnto the faith, should sweare in the name of God. And that an othe was commaunded by God, we may see in Exodus, where we doe reade in this wise. If any man lende his friende mony or vessel to keepe, and in case it be stolen from him which borowed it, if the thiefe be found, he shall restore double, if the thiefe be not founde, the master of the house shall be put to the Gods (that is to say, to the Magistrates and Iudges) and he shall sweare, that he reached not out his hand to his neighbours good, to cõmit deceite. Item, in case any man do deliuer to his neighbour an asse, ore, or any other beast to keepe, and if it die or decaye, or bee caught with enemies, and no man see it, the othe shal be the meane betwixt thẽ both, to proue that he layd not hand vpon his neighbours good, and the owner shall take his othe, and he not bounde to restore it. So that the vse of swearing is not only for the qualitie of it selfe, but for the commaundement of God also so commended, that it were the parte of a madde mã to minde to take it away as offensiue, and to defeate the quieting of matters which is wrought thereby.

The Othe is commended by the examples of most godly Fathers.

ABraham the Father not onely of many nations, but of ỹ faithful of Christ also, vsed an othe without offence: as it appeareth in Genesis, where we doe reade in this wise. At that time, Abymelech and

Exod. 22.

Abraha Gen. 21.

Phycol the Prince of his armie, said vnto Abraham. God is with thee in all things that thou doest, therefore sweare by God, that thou hurte not me, nor my aftercõmers of my stocke, but thou shalt deale with me & with the lande, in which thou liuedst as a straũger, according vnto the mercy and fauour which I haue shewed vnto thee. And Abraham sayd, I wil sweare, and a little after, And therefore the place was called Berfabee, bicause they swore both in that place, & entered a couenant for the pitte which before the name of ỹ othe. Likewise we reade also of Isaac, who did also take an othe, and entered couenant with Abimelech. So Iacob also swore vnto Laban his wines father. And Dauid which was a man for Gods owne hart, entered an amitie with Ionathas by the means of an othe, and afterwards also he swore vnto Saule. These examples of so excellent personages, do sufficiẽtly proue, that an othe hath no euil in it of it selfe if it be vsed a right, nothing displeasant vnto God, nor vnsemely for the godly persone. Wherefore it followeth of necessitie, that the Anabaptists be of a cõtrarie minde to the fathers, which do diffame ỹ holy othe, being altogether vngodly, and so blinded, that they perceiue not how they doe herein condemne them, with whome the elect gathered from the East and West, from the South & North, shal repose thẽ selues in the kingdome of God, whose godly life and faithe, is set forth for vs to followe, as a president in the holy Scriptures.

That an Othe is a peece of the seruice of God.

IN case that this which we haue hitherto spokẽ, cõcerning othes, be of no great force, as that they be good, and auaileable to the glorie of God, and to the commoditie of our neighbour, and vsed of the holy fathers, let vs then procede to greater pointes. An Othe hath also the commendation in Scriptures, that it helpeth towards the seruice of God. So we do reade in Deuteronomie. Thou shalt feare thy Lord God, & serue him only, and sweare by his name. And likewise Thou shalt feare thy Lord God, & serue him only, sticke vnto him, & sweare in his name. In these two places God doth not onely commaunde othes to be made in calling vpon his name, but we may also easyly vnderstand thereby, that the othe which is giuen by the taking of his name, procedeth from a minde that feareth & worshippeth God, & sticketh fast vnto him. And what man of vnderstanding perceiueth not, the feare, worship and fast sticking vnto God, is such a parcell of his seruice, that the whole obseruance & religion of God, which is as it were the roote of all those things that may be required vnto ỹ true seruice of God, doeth chiefly consist in thẽ. So ỹ Prophet Esay also, shewing that a peece of Egypt should be brought vnto the knowledge & seruice of the true and only God, telleth them that it shal so betide, that fiue Cities in Egypt shal sweare by the Lord of hoastes, and that there shalbe raised vp an Altare of the Lords in the middes of Egypt, with the title of the Lorde at the end of it, for a token & testimony to the Lord of hostes in the land of Egypt, wherin we se̅ that ẏ Prophet doth also ioyne an othe taken vnder ẏ name of the true God, to the seruice of God. The Gētiles also were persuaded, ẏ the solemne taking of othes was a pece of gods seruice, and therefore they did take holde of the altars of their Gods when they swore. And therevnto agreeth that which we do reade in Exodus: Se̅ that you kepe al those things which I haue said vnto you, and sweare not by ẏ name of straṅge & forrē Gods, nor there shal no such thing be heard out of your mouth. Exod.23.

Deut. 6.

Cap 10.

Esay. 19.

And Iosue: Lest whē you enter to the nations, which shal be amongst you, you may sweare in the name of their Gods & serue them, & worship them, but you shall sticke vnto the Lord your God. So that it is a refusal of the true God, to sweare by thē which be not gods, as we do reade also manifestly in Jeremie, in the person of God. Thy childrē haue forsaken me, swearing by thē which be not gods. And what nede we the testimonies of Prophetes? haue we not had a manifest proofe of this matter, that when mē began once to worshippe dead Saincles, they stucke not to cal vpon them also, and to ioyne their names with the name of God, after the manner of an Othe? Iosue.23. Ieremi.5.

That the Othe made in the fayth of God, in truth and iudgement, is the badge, or cognisance of the new Testament.

SEast some busie body shoulde striue with vs, and saye, that all these matters which we haue hitherto spoken of, take effect in the old Testament, but not so in ẏ new, and that therefore it is necessary ẏ all that we haue said, be proued by the scriptures of the newe Testament (for by this shift the Anabaptistes do seke to slippe their necke out of the coller,) let vs now therfore se̅, by what testimonies it may be tried, that ẏ vse of an Othe made vnder the name of the only & true God, doth belong chiefly vnto the times of the new Testament. And I suppose that no true Christian man doth denie, that those things which be spoken of the kingdom of Christ by the reporte of the Prophets, do without doubt concerne the newe Testament, & be most aptly vsed of the faithfull of Christ. Wherefore let vs heare the reporte of the Prophets touching this point. We doe reade in Esaie, that God speaketh in this sort: Where is no iust nor sauing God besides me. Turne vnto me all you the endes of ẏ world, & you shalbe saued, for I am God, & there is no other. I haue swore by my selfe, there shall go forth of my mouth the word of iustice, and shal not returne againe voyde, for all knées shalbe bowed, & al tonges shal sweare vnto me. First ẏ very words themselues do declare, that this prophecie doth belong vnto the times of the new Testament, and to the kingdome of Christ our Sauiour, wherby not only ẏ Israelites, but al the endes of ẏ world be called vnto the knowledge & seruice of God. And it is prophecied ẏ the worde which goeth forth of the mouth of God, shal not returne again voyde, but shall so well prosper, ẏ all knées shalbe bowed vnto God, & al tōgues sweare vnto him, that is to say, that al nations shall acknowledge, serue and worship ẏ true God, & forsake Esai.2. Psal.14. Phil.2 Esai.45. Rom.10.

false gods, and sweare by his name, and so declare, that they be cōuerted vnto him: which matter doth thoroughly agrée to none, but to ẏ kingdome of Christ & the new testamēt, vnder which all the nations of the world be turned vnto the true God through ẏ preaching of the gospell, which serued straṅge gods in the times of the olde Testament. Secōdly, the writings of the Apostles also doe testifie the same. Where this prophecie is applyed vnto the kingdome of Christ. There is a lyke place in Esaye, where we do reade this. He that shall bleste himselfe in ẏ earth, shal bleste himselfe in ẏ true god, & he ẏ shal sweare, shall sweare by the true God. And all the chapter concerneth the calling of the Gentiles, and the refusall of the Iewes, and therefore the Apostle vsed the testimony therof. So that it is made manifest, & perfectly tryed by these testimonies of the Prophets and Apostles, so well agreing together, ẏ the shifte of the Anabaptistes is but fonde, in ẏ they do so restrayne the vse of lawefull Othes to the olde Testamēt, that they would make it vnlawfull in the newe, whereas it is in manner of a cognisaunce of the true knowledge of God, and a very testimony of Gods seruice belonging vnto the newe Testament.

That God, Christ his sonne, and the Apostles vsed Othes.

YF Dauid muche as the hard harted Anabaptistes do neither shame nor shrinke at the examples of the fathers, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and Dauid, which we alleaged before, but doe acknowledge it to be well done in the olde Testament, & doe not suffer the same to be followed in the new, let vs go to ẏ examples of them, which without an opē face of vngodlinesse, they can neither restraine to ẏ times of ẏ olde Testament, nor shift of frō the new. They must of necessitye graunt, that the Lord is Lord not only of ẏ Iewes, but of the Gentiles also: God not only of the olde, but God, Lord and beginer of ẏ new testamēt also. Secōdly, that Christ his sonne, though (as Paule sayth) he came as a mynister of circumcision, is for all that the mediatour & head of the newe Testament. Besydes ẏ that Paul was also a minister without match, not only of circumcision and of the olde Testament, but also of the Gētiles, of the new Testament, & of ẏ gospell of Christ. So ẏ if the examples of God, Christ, and Paule doe finde authoritie w̄ any sort of men, reasō would, they should haue most credite with Christiā men. Wherefore let vs se̅ whether that the vse of Othes be such, that it doth not misbecome neither God, neither Christe his sonne, neither Paul the minister to them both.

First, there be many places of Scripture, which do testifie that god did sweare. I do sweare by my self sayth the Lord, forasmuch as thou hast done this thing, & hast not spared thy only begottē son, I wil bleste thē, &c. I swore vnto Dauid my seruaūt. Item, I swore once in my holy one. To whome I swore in my anger. The Lord hath sworne and shall not repēt him. The lord swore truth vnto Dauid, &c. Many such testimonyes men doe read in the writings of the Prophetes. Gen.22. Psalm.89 Psalm.95. Psalm.110 Psalm.132

Hebre. 6.

And why it is that God sweareth by himself, ỹ Apostle doth declare, saying. Forasmuch as he hath none greater than himselfe by whom to sweare, he sweareth by himself, but men do sweare by him, bycause he is greater thã they. By which place it appeareth, that there is this only difference set betwirt men & God in the case & vse of othes, ỹ albeit they do both vse to sweare, yet notwithstanding mẽ do not sweare by thẽselues, but by him, who is greater than they be, that is to saye, by God: but God dothe sweare not by any greater, but by himself, not bycause it is of it selfe vnlawfull to sweare by a greater, in case there were any greater than he, but bycause he hath none greater aboue him, by whome he may sweare. Wherefore they can not shift off & say, ỹ the Apostle meaneth of ỹ children of this worlde, & not of Christiã folke & electes, when he saith, But men do sweare by their greater, for the Apostle doth not cõpare mẽ together, as the elects & chosen, with the children of this worlde, but he doth put this difference onely betwirt thẽ, that men do sweare by a greather than thẽselues, & God by none greater but by himself. Secõdly, if ỹ busy folke wil not be so answered neither, let vs loke to the example of the Apostle Paule, he speaketh in this wise: I cal God to witnesse vpõ my soule, that I came no more to Corinth to thintẽt to spare you. In these words is a manifest othe, for he calleth God to a witnesse against his soule, in case he lie, to persuade the Corinthiãs, that it is true that he sayth, that is to say, ỹ he came no more to Corinthe, bycause he would spare thẽ. And this is ỹ chief vse of an othe, so ỹ no man of vnderstanding is so dul, but perceiueth that Paule toke here a plaine & an expresse othe. And Paule was not afraide neither to take God to witnes in other places, & to get credit to his wordes by vsing his name. Ye and he doth coniure his scholer Timothe also by most earnest obtestatiõ, saying: I do earnestly obteste and sweare thee before God and Christe Iesu, who shall iudge the quicke & the dead, & by his cõming and kingdome, preach the word, &c. Ye ỹ doth coniure & sweare an other mã, yea & that his brother & felowe, by so earnest mãner of binding, how would he haue refused to take an othe himself in ỹ like case? Wherfore if the exãple of so notable an Apostle & minister of ỹ new Testament be any thing worth, it appeareth that ỹ Anabaptists must needs be shameleslie creatures, in holding that ỹ vse of swearing is not lawful for Christiã folke. Thirdly, let vs proceede vnto Christ himself, and se whether he did not vse to sweare also. No doubt, as often as he sayd, Verely, verely I say vnto you, so often he swore in dede, although that he did not expressly alege ỹ name of God. For ỹ strẽgth of an othe doth not cõsist in any expresse naming of God, but in those things also which do concerne the glorie of God: as truth doth peculiarly pertaine vnto God, & belongeth vnto his glorie. And ỹ speach, Amen, Amẽ, I say vnto you, is nothing els to say, but Truly, truly, I say vnto you. I vphold it to you by truth, for ỹ word, Amẽ, is taken for truth,

Corin. 1.

Rom. 1. Gala. 1. Philip. 1. 1. Thess. 2. Tim. 1.

Gen. 6.

truth,

truth, as they knowe which do vnderstand the Ebrew. And Paule vsed ỹ same also when he saith, that the promisses of God in Christ, be yea, & Amen. Wherefore all godly folke be afraide to make light of it. For ỹ they doe perceiue ỹ it is as very an othe whan this word Verely is vnadusedly vsed, as if they should cal God himself for witnes. So Paul doth alleage ỹ God swore, saying in this wise, for God made promisse vnto Abraham. And when he could not sweare by a greater, he swore by himself, saying, ἦ μὴν εὐλογῶν εὐλογήσω σε, ỹ is to say, verely, & without doubt I wil bless thee with blessings, for the word is asmuch to say in the Greeke, as τὸ ναὶ ναί, that is, in dede, & verely. And the sonne of God who is equall in all respects with the father, hauing none greater to sweare by, did most conuenently frame his othes vnto this fashiõ of swearing, in ỹ he did sweare by himself oftentimes, saying: Verely, verely I say vnto you, wherby it doth openly appeare without nay, ỹ not only God the father, but Christ his sonne also did diuers and sundrie times sweare. Therefore, seeing it can not be denied but that an othe is lawful, bicause it is not euill but good, & furderung to ỹ glorie of the name of God, & to the profite of our neighbours, cõmãded by God and vsed of ỹ most godly fathers: furder ỹ it is also a peece of ỹ seruice of God, a cognisance of the new Testament, forasmuche by ỹ reports of ỹ prophets, & finally: ỹ God himselfe did sweare, ỹ the Apostle Paule swore, & that Christ himself swore: who perceiueth not ỹ where as the same Christ saith: But I say vnto you, sweare not at all, is not so to be vnderstande that it make stande against so vndoubted testimonies of the manifest truth, & to make him to be not onely against God his father, but also against himself, but ỹ it is necessary to take out ỹ sense thereof which conteineth no cõtrarietie, & withal agreeth to ỹ purpose of ỹ matter ỹ he vndertake there to entreate of: If ỹ Anabaptists had vsed this circũspection & warenes, they had not moued this question at all in the church of Christ, to trouble the consciences of the faithfull.

Of the sense of the wordes of Christ: But I say vnto you, sweare not at all.

IT is taken for a most necessarie rule, in expõuding of Scriptures after ỹ comen vnderstanding of men, not so much to marke the words as ỹ minde & meaning of ỹ speaker: otherwise if a mã shall enforce ỹ words without the waying of ỹ sense wherin they be spoken, it is not possible but there must ensue great errour, as for example. Christ sayth in the self same chap. Resist not euil: if a mã enforce the wordes, it shal not be lawfull any way to resist euils, so ỹ both ỹ office of ỹ Magistrate, & ỹ ministerie also of the word, & the authoritie of parents towards their children, is taken quite away, & a most smoothe race opened vnto all kindes of euils. Againe he saith: If any man come vnto me, & hateth not his father & mother, brethren & sisters, wife and children, he can not be my disciple. Let a man stande vpõ this, that ỹ wordes be open & plaine: & what shall followe els, but ỹ the precept touching the honoring of parentes, and of leuing a mans wife, is quite abrogated & vnscharged to Christian men? so ỳ they which be charged to loue also their enemies, should be appointed to hate their parentes, brethern & sisters, wiues & children, vnles they refuse to be Christian men.

Luke. 14.

Matth. 23. He sayth of ỳ Scribes & Pharisées. Whatsoeuer they do say vnto you, that do you. They may cõclude thẽ, that the doctrine of the Scribes and Pharisées ought indifferently to be embraced of all sortes, so ỳ the same should be to small purpose, which he sayth: Beware of the leauen of the Pharisées. Whosoeuer (sayth hæ) came before me, were robbers and thæues, Ergo the Prophets & John Baptist were robbers & thæues, for they came before Christ. And Paul sayth, I became all vnto all, Ergo he became an idolater to the idolaters, in case we shall enforce ỳ generall words. All things be lawful for me, Ergo it was lawfull for him to vse whoredom & adulterie. See how vnseemely & foule matters may be inferred vpon the wordes of Christ & the Apostle, if the sense which seemeth to the outward shew, be enforced absolutely without vnderstanding. The very like falleth out also here in the wordes of Christ: But I say vnto you, sweare not at al. Whẽ the word, at al, is vnaduisedly snatched vp, & such a sense gathered therupon, as al the other scripture shall generally be against it, & not only ỳ doings of the fathers, but of Christ himself also, & of Paule be to the cõtrary. Wherfore, when we do way this place, it doth folow plainely, ỳ Christe speaketh not of a lawfull othe, but of ỳ customable vse & lightnesse of swearing, whẽ in our talke we do forswear with othes almost whatsoeuer we speake. This custome the Iewes had gotten. They swore vnaduisedly by heauen, by earth, by ỳ citie of Hierusalẽ, & eche one by his own head: forasmuch as such othes wer not made by any expresse name of God, they were persuaded, ỳ none was boũd by them, to kẽpe ỳ which he had sworne, or ỳ he did amisse in case this waye he swore falsly. And this persuasiõ was confirmed in ỳ mindes of ỳ cõmon people, by ỳ secondary exposition of the Pharisées & Scribes, in ỳ they did so expound ỳ cõmaundement of God, of forswearing, & that, Thou shalt not take the name of thy Lord God in vayne, to teach ỳ there was no offence done against ỳ name of God, if any mã did forsweare, vnles the othe were made by some peculiar & proper name of God. And so Rabi Salemon wrote also vpon the place of Exodus: but the wordes of Christ do sufficiently discouer ỳ errour of ỳ Iewes. For this he sayth, Mat. Wo vnto you blinde guides, which say, Whosoeuer sweareth by ỳ Temple, it is nothing: but whosoeuer sweareth by ỳ Gold of ỳ tẽple, is an offender. Oh folish & blind, which is greater, ỳ gold or ỳ Temple which doth sanctifie ỳ golde? And whosoeuer sweareth by the altar, it is nothing, but whosoeuer sweareth by ỳ gift which is vpon ỳ altar, is an offender. Oh you blinde bussards which is ỳ greater, ỳ gift & present, or ỳ altar which sanctifieth ỳ gift & presẽt? Ergo, whosoeuer sweareth by the altar, sweareth by it, and by all that is vpon the same: & whosoeuer sweareth by the Temple, sweareth by it and by him also which dwelleth in the temple: & he ỳ sweareth by heauẽ, sweareth also by ỳ throne of god, and by him which sitteth therein. By these wordes it appeareth well inough, how erronious a doctrine ỳ Scribes & Pharisées brought in of Othes, wherby to cõfirme ỳ false opiniõ of the cõmon people. But the Lorde speaketh against it. Also it taketh not away ỳ authoritie of the law, which gaue order for ỳ lawful making of an othe: nor he doth not cõdẽne ỳ exãples of ỳ most holy fathers, which vsed othes well, for he speaketh not of ỳ lawful, but of the rashe & customable daily oth, which was vnaduisedly vsed in common speach, and lightly vpon a naughty custome & persuasiõ of swearing, as if they were not bound to the performãce therof, bicause they swore not by ỳ name of God, or by ỳ golde of ỳ tẽple, or ỳ present of ỳ altar: & in this sence ỳ wordes of Christ be manifest & plaine. It was sayd (saith he) to your fathers, that is to say, it was taught them by Scribes & Magistrates, Thou shalt not forsweare. That ỳ law cõmaunded. For so we do reade in Leuiticus: Thou shalt not forswear in my name, least thou defile the name of thy Lorde God. The Scribes did expoũd it after this sort. If thou forsweare by the name of ỳ Lord God, thou shalt be guiltie, & thou hast defiled the name of god. But in case thou do forsweare, and not by the name of God, thou shalt not be guiltie, for thou hast not defiled ỳ name of God. And to this Lawe they added this clause: But thou shalt performe thy othes vnto ỳ Lord, ỳ is to say: if thou hast vowed any thing by Othe vnto the Lord God, by vsing his name, thou art better to performe it. Otherwise thou art not bounde, bicause thou swearest neither to the Lord nor by his name. As though ỳ he were not bounde which sweareth not to God, but to his neighbour: not by ỳ name of God, but by any Creature. Therfore Christ to declare ỳ this doctrine of ỳ Pharisées was naught, added, But I saye vnto you, sweare not at al. How? not vnto God neither? not by the name of God in iustice & iudgement, & after the lawful forme of an Othe? Harken, he doth not saye: neither to God, neither by ỳ name of God, neither in iudgemẽt: & why? bicause no doubt the Iewes thẽ selues knew this, that he was not giltles, which did forswear in iudgmẽt vnto god or vnto his neighbors in ỳ name of God, and therfore it was no nede to recite this. For he meant not of ỳ lawfull Othes, but of the customable othes, wherin they did forsweare at libertie without the name of God, and without any renounce of synne. Therefore he sayeth thus: But I saye vnto you, whatsoeuer your Scribes haue taught you, sweare not at all, neither by Heauen, bicause it is the throne of God, neither by the earth, bicause it it is the fotestole of his feete, neither by Hierusalem, bicause it is the citie of the great king: nor thou shalt not sweare by thy head, bicause thou art not able to make one heare white or blacke. See what fashions of swearing he toucheth. Neither by Heauen (sayeth he) neither by Earth, neither by Hierusalem, neither by thy head: but no man vsed these fashions of swearing in iudgement, no mã in couenants, no mã in law-full contracts, no mā in vowes made vnto God, but in such cases ỳ othes were conceiued by the vsing of the name of God, as it appeareth by ỳ, that no man was deemed to be tied or bounde by those othes, which Christ here reciteth. Therfore they were not lawful, but daily accustomed & vsed in cōmon talke. Secōdly, marke ỳ reasons also which he addeth, Sweare not, saieth he, by heauen, And why? bicause it is the throne of God, nother by ỳ earth, & why? bicause it is the foote stole of Gods fete: nor by Hierusalem, & why? bycause it is the citie of the great king: nor by thy head, & why? bycause thou art not able to make one heare, neither white nor black, that is to saye, bicause it is not thy owne workmanship, but ỳ worke of the vertue of god. In case that these othes had any fauth, truth, or deuotion in thē, wherby the name of god might be glorified, as we declared before of the lawful othe, thā these reasons should be to no purpose, for it had ben reason inough to sweare by heauen, bicause it is the seate or throne of god, so that the glorie of god might be auanced thereby. And so in ỳ rest of ỳ cases, which do any wise belong to the glory of God, & so it should haue bene better sayd, Sweare by heauē, bicause it is the throne of god, than sweare not by heauen: so ỳ it appeareth by this cōsideratiō also, ỳ Christ speaketh not of lawful, but of light, rathe, & daily othes, which when they be vsed wout faith, deuotion, & truth, do rather seruo to the cōtempt of the throne, fotestole & citie of God, and other his workes, than to the honour of the same. And to ỳ end also he saith, Let your cōmunicatiō be, yea, yea, & no, no, meaning to reforme ỳ naughtie custome of their rathe swearing in their talke, either in affirming, either in denying of any thing. He sayth not, Let your vowes, let your promisses, let your requestes & vndertakings in cases of law. &c. but let your cōmunication be, yea, yea, & no, no. And to the like purpose he addeth, Whatsoeuer is more than this, is naught. As though he sayd, Wher as you be not cōtented with these words, yea, yea, and no, no, but adde othes therunto by heauen, by the earth, by Hierusalem, &c it proceedeth of this, that you be vayne in your heartes, stayed with no reuerence & religion, of ỳ throne of god, of his foote stole, & citie. And ỳ you beleue no man, onles he sweare, bicause for the most part, your talke is false talke & lies. Oneles ỳ we do after this sort vnderstand ỳ words of Christ, what answere shall we make vnto Porphirius & Julian, when they reproue Christ also, that his talke nother, was not yea, yea, & no, no, for as much as he did so often times double his word, Amē, Amē, and that therfore it came of euill: And how shal we defend ỳ Apostle, that he wrote not of euil, as often as he sayd, god is my witnesse. Itē I call God to witnesse against my soule? But God forbidde that either Christ, either his Apostle might be charged with so great lightnes: Wherfore this errour of the Anabaptistes is very grosse and foolish, wherin ỳ rude & simple folke be deceiued, by false & sly creeping, not bye thern but brothels, & crafty varlets, seruing not Christ, but their owne appetites.

1. Cor. 10.

and

full

And

And thus much touching that question, Whether that the vse of swearing be lawfull for Christian folke or no.

Of the abuse of Othes.

There be two thinges chiefly requisite of necessitie in ỳ maintenance of euery matter of truth: One, that the same which is true, be discouered and vpholden: The other is, that in case ỳ there be growne any abuse therunto, it be reproued and taken away. For such is the hope of truth in this worlde, that either it is condemned before it be knowen, by the ignorant, or els it is wrested vnto some abuse by the that doe knowe it. And both these doe betide in this case of othes. The Anabaptistes doe of a stabbernesse condemne that which they neither vnderstand, nor can be contented to be instructed of. Couetously and carnal men, bereaft of the faith and religion of God, doe peruerstly abuse that which they do not condemne, wherfore to vse this matter well and in order, the truth of the lawfull othe must firste be auouched, & then the abuse thereof vtterly folowed, so that after our fault finding with the error of the Anabaptistes, we will turne our talke to touche the abuse of othes. And the same is so exceding large, that I take it to be impossible to reherse & examine al the kindes & particularities therof, for whatsoeuer is done almost in the life of man, is so pase vp with othes, that by reason of the multitude of the othes, it must of necessitie betide in this case as it doth in much talke, wherein it can not be chosen, but must escape many ouerslyghtes and faultes. Therefore I will enter somewhat further into this matter, for your sake, which be trained with a certaine religion & deuotion of the name of God, to admonish them that they may be able to kepe their consciences cleere from the defiling of the name of God. And bicause of thē we will discourse how both he which doth exact the othe, and he also which doeth yelde the othe, may abuse the religion and reuerence of the othe.

How they do offende which do require an Othe.

The exactors of othes do offend three maner of ways. I first, when they doe put such men vnto othes which be light persons, & suspected of little or of no credite at al, of whom men can not conceaue any hope, that they haue any loue to the truth, or religion and feare of the name of god. For albeit that no man know what is in man, but the spirite of man which is in man, and that mans heart is of it selfe vnsearcheable, yet for all that, the matter can not be excused, when such men be put vnto othes, which do declare by open proufe and trial, how light and vaine they be, voide of faith, and of all feare of God: and altogether such as no iudge would giue any credite at all vnto, though they were charged neuer so much vpon their othes, if the case of their swearing did concerne themselues. They that doe put such persons to the sacrament of an othe, do wittingly minister occasion of periure. Wherefore that lightnes and indifferēce to minister Othes vnadui-sedly vnto euery mā, doth argue a lightnes also in Iudges and Magistrates. He which putteth a man to an Othe, and knoweth ỳ he that forswears himself, is worse thā the murderer, for the one killeth but ỳ body, but the other killeth ỳ soule also. 2 The second offence is, whē the iudge either of his own accord, either entised by the accuser, doth minister thē a solemne Othe, that is to say, the vsing of the name of god in a light mater & of no waight. And this fault falleth out also oftētimes when ỳ truth might be tried out, & the matter which is in strife passed ouer by other meanes, vnles they do it more for spēde thā for a iust trial. 3 The third offence is, when an Oth is charged in a matter either impossible to be brought to passe, or such as ỳ iudge knoweth already shall neuer be performed, & doth require the Othe not to ỳ intent to haue it kept but to kepe the custome, & for the respect of his own cōmoditie & gaine. So they doe misvse the matter in our daies, which vnder an Othe require the vowe of sole life & chastitie, of masse priestes and cloyster creepers, wheras this order of theirs is manifestly declared by the vniuersall corruptiō of so many yeres & ages, to be the nurse of al manner of wantonnes and vncleannes. And such is the Othe also which is enforced vpō the suffragan Bishops, ỳ they must conuerte those churches vnto the faithe of Christe through the preaching of the Gospell, of which they take their titles and names. The case of it selfe is not such, that their Othe is thought impossible, nor the thing is not required of them in earnest, but they do perfectly know, that the Othe is to no purpose which is required, & be at length absoyled from it more men, colorably, to ỳ intent they may more carelesly procede in sinne.

differencie

4 Fourthly, they do offende in the forme of the Othe, which do couple the names of saints vnto the name of God, for they do minister cause vnto that sinne, which is foūde fault withal in the childrē of Israel. Thy children saith he, haue forsaken me, and do sweare by them which be no gods. None of the Papistes wil say, that saintes be Gods. Therefore when they do sweare by saintes, no doubt their conscience doth testifie vnto thē, that they do sweare by thē that be no Gods, which offence is a kinde of forsaking of God. And Chrysostome saith, ỳ he doth cōmit idolatrie, which sweareth by any thing ỳ is not God, bicause he doth put ỳ in the degrée of God, whereby he doth sweare. And what is it els to put any in the degree of God by an Othe, than to attribute vnto him or it the knowledge of ỳ secrets of mens heartes, to vnderstande what is true & what false in all mens promises, vndertakings & testimonies, and to be of that iustice & power, ỳ it can worthely punish the periured persons. If that saintes be able to perform this, they be worthy to be set in the degrée of Gods, by the reuerence of othes. But in case ỳ this knowledge, iustice, and power in al things do appertaine vnto God only, what man of vnderstanding perciueth not, how that mē ought not to sweare in iustice & iudgemēt, but by God onely, the knower of all secrets, & the punisher of al deceit and falshode:

falshode: And thus much how they do offend now & then which do put and minister Othes vnto others.

How they do offende which doe Sweare.

The fault of them which do offende in swearing, is to be cōsidered two wayes. First, how they do offend daily in their cōmon talke not being put to othes, but swearing of themselues. Secondly, how they do offēd which be put to othes in place of iudgement. And men do offende by swearing in daily talke: First, when they do sweare vnadui-sedly without cause, though not vntruely & falsly: for the name of God is taken in vaine contrarie to the third precept, & they do also offende contrary vnto the admonition of Christ, whereas he sayth: But I say vnto you, sweare not at all, but let your cōmunicatiō be, yea, yea, & no, no. The copulation of man & womā is good as appointed by God, but so that it be in lawful wedlock: & it is not so, if it be out of Patrimonie. It is good to sing, so it be to the Lord, and with deuotion, but it is not so in banckettings for a wantonnes, or in the Churche for gaine, when Psalmes be song without any religion or deuotion. Likewise an othe is good which is made by ỳ name of God, so ỳ it be done in iudgemēt, and reuerently wt the feare of the Lord: & it is otherwise, if it be vsed rashly & lightly. Secondly, the fault is greater, when mē do sweare not only in a lightnesse, rashnesse, and without cause, but falsly also & vntruelye: It is naught of it selfe to lye, but this naughtinesse is doubled, by the putting to of an Othe. It was death among the Egyptians, in case that any person swore by the health of Pharao, and howe cā he be reputed giltles, which doth forsweare himselfe by the name of God? Thirdly, this offence is also much encreased, whē our neighbour is hurt by ỳ periurie, and there be degrées herein. In case that thy neighbour be hurt in his goods, it is one degrée: in case he be dammaged by his fame and estimation it is an other: & ther is a third, if he be damaged in his body or life: the last is when he is harmed in his soule, and touching hys true health and saluation. And when that common sweerers be blamed for their so doing, they doe excuse the matter after this manner. 1 One will say, that he sweareth not for anye euill entent, but of a custome. But this is rather an accusing, than excusing. For such a custome is gotten not by once or twice, but by verye often swearing, & it is a token of a minde voide of the feare of GOD.

2 An other doth pretende that the multitude doth sweare in like sort, & the multitude of the offenders doe encrease & not diminysh the fault, & at length when the syn is come to a strength & rypenesse, it prouoketh the wrath of God. 3. Some will saye, no man is the worse by my custome of swearing, waye the case to thy self. Thou shalt hurt no man (thou sayst) if thou denye GOD and serue Sathan, and yet withall thou dwell vndoe thy self. And how can he be guiltlesse which is ỳ cause of his owne condemnation? Item, howe doth he hurt no man, which doth hurt God: no doubt hee doth

grieuously

Matth.5.

greuously hurte God, whosoeuer by rashe swearing doth prophane and abuse his name. 4 Some saye, that they do not sweare by ỳ name of God, and they do not marke the admonition of Christ, wherin is declared, that the glorie of God is prophaned, when men do fondely sweare by his Creatures. 5 Some will saye, that they doe not lye in their swearing: as though it were inough for the excuse of the offence, if they make no lie: and as though there were not sinne in the verie custome and lightnes of swearing. Wherefore, that man which feareth God, must most diligently beware, that he disraine not the name of God, by his rashe and vnadvised swearing. But in case that some othe doe shape his might against his will, let him not excuse it, but rather accuse him selfe, and desire the Lorde to pardon his offence. I do knowe some cõmon wealthes, whiche were so ordered before these troublesome yeares, that if anye of the Citizens did offende by lyghtnesse of swearing, hee should be chastened by order of law: but nowe we se that all lawes of holy discipline be broken amongst vs, and all libertie giuen to whoredome, adulterie, dronkennes, blary, and rashe swearing. Wherefore we muste looke for the extreme wrath of God to be kindled, and fal vpon our countrey ere longe, which will be so great, that it wil specially plague noble and great personages, such as thinke they stand vpon a most sure & quiet grounde, in that they haue forsaken the yoke of the Lord, and be no lenger subiect vnto any daungers for the Gospel of the kingdome of God. In shifting of the anger and displeasure of that man, whose breath is in his nostrels, they may fall into the wrath and displeasure of God, by whose breath the whole worlde is shaken and crushed together.

Secondly, we must consider howe they doe offende which doe sweare being put to othes in iudgements.

1 First, they doe offende which do take an othe for some small pece of money, which they should rather be content to lose than to cal vpon the holy name of God for so light a losse. 2 Secondly, they do offend, which doe willingly and wittingly sweare fallly, & that is two wayes: First when they doe vpholde that to be true which they know to be false; or maintaine that to be false, which they knowe to be true. Secondly, when they do promise ỳ in their swearing, which they minde not to performe, but meane onely to shifte themselues for the present from the brakes that they be tied in by forswearing the matter.

3 Thirdly, when they doe not performe the same which they haue sworne: thereof the Prophet meaneth when he sayth, Which sweareth vnto his neighbour, and chaũgeth not. This kinde of periurie hath alwayes had an euill name amongest the Gentiles also. The olde Romaines were so stoute and sure of their worde, that they woulde not haue their promise made by othe broken, no not with their most deadly enemies. The history of Attilius Regulus is knowen, but now a daies Popes can say that it is not for kinges and Magistrates, but for Marchant men, to keepe their promises. The Popes of Rome haue as often as they listed, and as it serued to their purpose, broken the leagues of Kings and Princes, which haue bene ratified by Othes, and haue by their bulles discharged their subiectes frõ their Othe of fidelitie. So Pope Nicolas dischargeth the Bishop of Treueris from the bandes of his Othe. So Pope Zacharie deposed the King of Fraunce, and set Pipine ỳ father of Charles the Emperour in his place, and withall did discharge all the Frenchmen from the Othe of their fealtie, or fidelitie towardes him: and howe greatly this rashe dealing displeaseth the Lorde, & how sore it was punished in King Zedechias, which fallly forswore, did breake his Othe of fealtie, which he made vnto ỳ King of Babylon. 4 Fourthly, Swearers do offende, whẽ they do sweare and take the name of God in any vnlawfull matter, which can not be performed without sinne. As in case any minister of the worde shoulde vndertake by Othe, that he wil not correct the sinnes of great men, nor speake against false doctrine, and ther be an innumerable sort of this kinde of offences. Wherefore he that is put to take an Othe by the name of God, must diligently forsee whether that he be able to performe that without the offence of God, which he doth promise by othe or no. 5 Fiftly, they doe offende in the fourme of the Othe, which do ioyne the names of saintes vnto the name of God. Which kynde of offence we touched before. Thus muche I thought good to speake briefly and in fewe wordes of the abuse of swearing, to admonish godly folke, that they learne to looke to themselues and others in the case of Othes, that they offend not therin wittingly and willingly against the Maiestie of Gods name, hauing euer that threaten in their mynde, which sayth in the Decalogus, For the Lorde will not take him to be giltles, which doth vse the name of his Lorde God in vaine.

Iosh.c

Of the discharge of Othes.

Deut.23

For asmuche as the Prophet sayeth, He that sweareth vnto his neighbour, and doth not alter, we may well aske the question whether there be no consideration, wherefore an Othe may be voyde. And this question were good to be weyed not bicause of them, which haue little, or no respect nor religion at all of an Othe, but for their afflicted consciences, which are so entangled & streightened by the bands of Othes, that when they be driue to keepe the promise of their Oth, they be compelled therein to offend against God. Wherefore we must consider vpon what causes ỳ bande of an Othe ought to be broken.

1 First, when the Othe is vnlawfull, so that there is sinne both in the sweraing and also in the obseruing thereof, as when men sweare to do that which is against the wil of God. As if an Israelite had vowed an offring vnto the idol Baal, or that he would burne his childe, or if he promised vnto God the price of a dogge or of a harlot, such othes be both vnlawfully sworne, and obserued also with great sinne. Such a case it is, if a married man shall forswearc his wife. Item, if a man vowe any offering or seruice vnto any Sainct, he doth committe sinne in the swearing, and yet offendeth more in keping his Othe.

22. Quæst. 4. 2 Secondly, when there is occasion of sinne minystred to keepe ẏ Othe, and that such an Othe ought to be broken, it may be proued by that, that is read: That an Othe is not ordeined to this ende, to be a clogge of wickednesse, as for example. The Priests, Cloysterers and Bysshops, be enforced to forsweare lawfull Matrimonie, for the keping of a sole life, & to helpe thē to keepe this Othe, they be not restrained from whorehunting, but they bee forbidden frem wedlocke. And so there is giuen to the worse men occasion of much sinne, bicause the knot of their Othe must not be broken. Such an Othe is in very deede no Othe of iustice and cleannes, but of vniustice and vncleannesse, and therefore lawfull inough to be broken. For as the Apostle testifieth, it is better to marrie, than to burne. Nor the Apostle meant not to snare the consciences of the faithfull, but he suffered euery man to continue at libertie in that grace, which he had receiued of the Lord, clere and tied in no bandes, whose example, spirite and doctrine, all Bysshops ought to followe, if they were Bysshops in deede, and neither entangle the consciences of the faithfull with any restraintes of othes, nor herdle and tye them fast to sinne by their bande of wickednesse, but to let thē be at libertie to the Lorde which hath redeemed them frō the snares of Satan, by his bloud. Notwithstanding, forasmuch as the Churche of Rome hath not such Bysshops, but is subiect vnto Lords and Princes, there is no other waye to helpe our brethern, but that they may first vnderstande, that no religion of any Othe ought to be so great, that it may be a bande of wickednesse and sinne. Secondly, they must seeke to be at libertie, according to the mynde of the Apostle, if they may, and shifte themselues out of the snares of Satan, and flee the tyrannie of the Bysshops, leaste in their seeking to obserue the Othe that they haue taken, they entangle and destroye themselues in most terrible and greuous sinnes and offences. Such a parte it was that Iepthe murdered his owne daughter, because of his Othe. And Herode wickedly sleiwe John Baptiste, to saue his Othe that he had made. And they, bicause they would not be periured, sleiwe others against the wyll of God. But thou my brother, which continuest still in whoredome, bicause thou wilt not breake thy vowe, doest murder thy selfe, not in body, but in soule, which is a great deale the worse.

Iudic. 11.

Leuit. 5.

3 Thirdly, the vnlawfull Othe ought not to be kept neither, when by reason thereof there is offence wrought against the loue of our neighbour. If any man had sworne the death of his neighbour, it ought to be broken by the example of Dauid. Pou shall finde some men now a dayes also which will take an Othe, that they will lende no man nothing, though it be neuer so little, bicause they haue bene once or twyce deceiued. And this Othe is a buckler to thē, to keepe them from the relieuing of the neede of their brethren.

1. Sam. 25.

brethren. Such an Othe is against the loue of our neighbour, and is contrarie to the doctrine of Christ. Wherefore it can not be kept without sinne. They which doe lyue in Cloysters, be so tyed by the bande of their Cloyster vowe, that they may not vse the order of humanitie, nor performe the duetie of childe, no nor the verie Christian charitie towardes their parentes, brethren, sisters, and other Christian folke, so that their vowes, for asmuch as thei be against the lawes of humanitie, and of Christian charitie, they can not please God. Wherefore they may lawfully be broken: and the same which is clogged by mens traditions, ought to be set at libertie, that men may vndertake the yoke of Christ. So the Apostle sayth: Pou be bought by a great raunsome, become not the seruauntes of men.

1. Cor. 7.

Fourthly, they Othe or vowe is nothing worth, which be not at theyr own libertie, but be subiecte to the power and commaundement of others. Wherefore that which they haue sworne can not be lawfully obserued, without the consent of their superiors, albeit that they vowe any thing vnto the Lorde God. And there is a most manifest proofe of this thing, in that which is written in this wyse. This is the word which the Lorde hath commaunded: if any man hath vowed any vowe vnto the Lord, or bound him selfe by an Othe, he shall not make his worde voyde, but fulfill all that which hee hath promysed. If a womā hath vowed any thing, and bounde hir selfe by an Othe, beyng yet in hir fathers house, and but a wenche of age, if hir father knowe of the vowe which shee hath promised, and of the Othe wherewith she hath bounde hyr soule, and kepe it priuie, he shall be guyltie of the vowe, and what soeuer she hath promised & sworne, she shall accomplyshe it in effect. But in case that the father as sone as hee vnderstande of it, doe speake against it, both hir vowes & Othes shalbe voyde, & she shall not stande bounde to hir promisse, bicause hir father was against it. It followeth there likewyse also of Wiues, so that their vowes and Othes must also be vtterly voyde, if their husbandes hearing of the matter, be against it: whereby it appeareth, that suche vowes and othes which be made by them that be not at their owne libertie, ought not to be obserued, but to bee reputed as vaine and voyde, vnles their consent, vnder whose iurisdiction they lyue, be ioyned therevnto. Wherefore it ought not to be counted to be of any strength, when the sonne or daughter do bynde themselues in Matrimonie, where as their partes be against it. For the gouernaunce of the matter resteth in the father, which ought not to be taken from him. Secondly, that is also a wicked matter, when the sonne or daughter will withdrawe them selues from the iurisdiction of their partes, and against their wils shut them selues vp in Cloysters, & there submitte themselues vnto I wote not, Friers or Nonnes arbitrement and order, so that hee must needes be very wicked and an enemie vnto Gods law, whosoeuer is the causer that they shall treade their parentes vnder feete & runne to the superstition of the Cloyster, and so accomplishe the saying of Christ: You doe make my commaundementes voyde, bicause of your owne inuentions. For God sayd, Honor thy father and mother: and whosoeuer curseth his father or mother, let hym dye the death: but these folkes do teache, that wée ought to ouerthrow our parentes, and treade vnder feete at the doore, if they withstande vs, & so get the Cloyster vpon our backes. Who seeth not, howe much lighter and more tollerable that poynte was, which the Scribes and Pharisées did, in teaching mé to say vnto their parentes: That Present which I doe offer into the Temple, doth profite you also. For first they taught thé to offer presentes into the temple of God. Secondly, they did admonishe them how to satisfie their parentes in the expostion and interpretation of the church presents, and in so doing they were the causers of the withdrawing of the due relefe vnto their parentes: and yet for all that they did not therein teach thé to withdraw themselues wholy from the iurisdiction of their parentes, nor they did not bidde thé to treade their parentes vnder their feete in the dores, and yet notwithstanding the Lord doth charge thé, that they made the commaundement of God, touching the honouring of parentes, voyde, bicause of their owne inuentions. And I beseeke you, can we imagine, ỳ god is so altered, that he doth suspende or chaunge his opinion towards them, which be the authors of a more greuous & haynous sinne then ỳ was? 5 Fiftly, the Othe which is made of a thing impossible, doth not bynd. And I call a thing impossible, not onely that which is of it selfe impossible, but that also which is vnpossible vnto the wofemaker and swearer. As for an example. To lyue an Angels life, is a thing of it selfe possible, but vnto Angels, and not vnto men as men. Albeit that it is possible for them to kéepe the continencie of virginitie, whiche haue the gift giuen them of God, yet for all that it is not possible for all folkes, he that can come by it, let hym take it, sayth Christ. Therefore, in case it be impossible for him whiche hath sworne it to lyue an Angels life remaining in this flesh, it were better to breake his foolishe and vnaduised promise, than by the bande of his impossibilitie to fall into a lyfe, not manlyke, but dyuelish. Paule woulde not that wydowes shoulde be admitted to the relefe of the Churche before they were threé scoare yeares olde. And now a dayes boyes and gyrles be enforced to kéepe the vowe of chastitie, before they haue had any tryall and experience of themselues, that God hath giuen them the gift of chastitie. Wherefore all they must be aduised herein, whiche through the impossibilitie of this matter, do fall vnto the lustes of the flesh, and to filthinesse at large, that they recouer them selues from that fonde vowe, and flye to the aduyse of the Apostle, where he sayeth: For the eschuing of whoredome, let euery man haue his wyfe, and euery woman haue hir husbande. This matter concerning the discharge of Vowes and Othes, might be more largely and fully intreated of, but

Matth. 15.

1. Tim.

I sup-

I suppose that this which I haue heere spoken, is euen sufficient inough for suche persons as bée godly and quietly disposed.

Of Vsurie.

The Preface.

Amongest the reste of the mischiefs of our tymes, the pestilent botche and sore of Vsury is growen to be so great, and waxen euen rype to the reuenge of GOD, that I thinke it vtterly vayne to speake any thyng against it, although I should doe it right earnestly and diligently. For I knowe by my owne experience, that this disease hath then growen to bée stronger, when it hath bene most spoken against, and reprehended in our dayes by the preaching and wrytings of Godly and learned persons, so that it is almost lyke the disease of the Canker, which groweth to bée more deadly, after the incision and launcing, and is become almost passe cure, mete to loke for nothing els but for vtter destruction, after so iust and worthie reprehention and speaking against it. Wherefore mé might well thynke, that I take a vaine & thankeleese office in hande, asmuch as to make the Rauen to bée whyte with washing, vnleese that I dyd consider my promyse, and the requestes of my friendes. Therefore to satisfie my promyse in some part, and to fulfil the desire of my brethren, I wyll so farre forth speake of Vsurie, as it may doe good to some godly folke, which bée not yet desperate and passing recouerie, altogether poysened with this pestilent disease. I know howe and by whome this poynte of Vsurie hath bene talked of in tymes passe, but I wyll not medle with the Schole trickes, no lesse intricate than is the verye nature of couetousnes it selfe, but I wyll symply set forthe, and without all crabbed disputation, that which I thynke méete to bée sayd. And I wyll first tell you, what Vsurie is. And secondly to the entent wé maye perceyue whether that it bée lawefull or no for Christian men. I wyll compare it with the doctrine of Christe, and with the profession of Christian religion.

What Vsurie is.

Bycause none of the Champions and maintayners of Vsurye, shall chalenge mé, I wyll bring them that definition of Vsurie, which I haue not deuised of my owne head, but hath bene manye yeares past disclosed by them whose godlynesse hath gotte more authoritie in the Churche of Christ, than that it may be ouerthrowen by any Vsurers, or of their bolsterers.

Hierome. Hierome lib. 6. vpō Ezechiell.

Hierome writeth in this wise: Some folke doe surmise that Vsuries doe consiste onely in money, which the scripture of God did forse, and therefore taketh awaye the ouerplus of all things, so that thou shalt receiue no more than thou deliueredst. Item, others are wont to take sundrie sortes of rewardes or presentes, for their lending of their money, and doe not understand that the scripture doth call that an Vsurie and an ouerplus, whatsoeuer it be, that they receiue againe more than that which they gaue out.

This sayeth hee. And Ambrose speaking of Naboth, sayth, that many men to auoyde the daunger of the commaundements of the lawe, when they haue giuē out their money vnto Occupiers and Marchant men, doe not demaunde their Vsuries in money, but doe take the cōmoditie and profit of Vsurie vpon their wares. Therefore let them hearken what the Lawe sayth: Nor you shall not take any Vsurie in meates, nor of any other thing. So that a dishe of meate is Vsurie, and a garment is Vsurie, and whatsoeuer commeth aboue the principall, is Vsury, and what name soeuer you giue it, yet it is Vsurie. This sayth Ambrose. And Augustine also doth himself define Vsurie in this sorte. In case thou lende out thy money to any man, of whome thou lookest to receiue more than that thou deliueredst forth, whether it be corne or wyne, or oyle, or anye other thyng, if thou lookest to receiue anye more than thou deliueredst, thou arte an Vsurer, and worthy to be blamed. This sayeth hee. So that after the mynde of these men, it is not Vsurie onely to receiue and take, but also to hope and looke for anye thyng, more thā the principall, as they terme it, that is to saye, more than that which was delyuered, by what name so euer it be cloked. For the alteration of the name doth not alter the malice of the vyce which remayneth.

And it appeareth well inough, that Vsurie is that which is receyued aboue the principall. Whereas the Prophete sayeth: He that giueth not to Vsurie, and receyueth not an ouerplus. For as D. Kimhi doth well expounde it, it is expressed what it is to giue to Vsurie, by the parcell which followeth, when is added. And receiue no ouerplus.

Exod. David Kimhi Deut. Leuit.

So wee reade also. Thou shalt not take of hym anye vsurie, or ouerplus, but thou shalt feare thy GOD. Thou shalt not gyue him out thy money to Vsurye, nor thy meate to receyue an ouerplus.

The Ciuile lawes also in the Code, De Vsuris. doe likewyse call that Vsurie, which is receiued aboue the principall, and yet they doe permytte the vse of it some waye, of whiche wee will speake hereafter. And it was called Vsura of the Latine men, bicause there is receiued, as it were, a certayne recompence or interest for the vsage of the money whereby some profite may come to the lender.

lender. The Greekes doe call it τόκον as it were a certaine thing bred of the principall. And the Ebrewes doe call it נשך of byting, bicause it doth at the ende byte, and wringe him which payeth the interest. And thus much what Vsury is.

Whether that Vsury be lawefull or no.

OVr question here is not of Vsury vppon Vsurye, which the Iewes doe vse, whereof no man doubteth but that it is vnlawfull and detestable, but we doe speake of simple Vsury, when more is receyued than gyuen out, whether that it be much or little, or whether it bee done in money, wares, or any other thyng.

For some men suppose that Vsurye is not vnlawefull of it selfe, vnlesse it be made vnlawefull by certaine vnlawefull circumstances. I doe not denye, but that there maye be found some kynde of Vsurye, not onely not vnlawfull, but also profitable, as that Vsury is, which wee call the Vsury of the lande, whereby is much more receyued than was committed vnto the land in the seede.

This Vsury he gyueth, who giueth all to all men: and yet notwythstandinge, hath neuer a whyt the lesse by it. That Vsury is so gyuen, that it hurteth not the gyuer at all, notwithstanding that it bringeth a great gaine to him that receiueth it. And it is so farre wide frō any spot of courtuousnesse, that it ought rather to bee exceedinglye commended bicause of the greate fauour and noble benefyte of the gyuer.

Loe heere is a lawefull, profytable and godly Vsury, whereby Abraham and Isaack became ryche men. By thys there is bothe gyuen of GOD and receyued by man, sometimes thyrty folde, sometimes threscore folde, yea and sometimes an hundred folde, and that without sinne.

This Vsury was most dylygentlye applyed and folowed in times paste of our forefathers, which is nowe accounted vyle, and is compelled to gyue place to the damnable Vsurye of money.

There is an other sorte of Vsury also, whereby wee maye without offence receyue an hundred for one. And this Christ himselfe, as a surety and vndertaking for his father, doth promise hys faithfull, saying: And euery man, that forsaketh house, or brethren, or sisters, or father, and mother, or wife or children, or lande for my name, shal receiue an hundred times as much agayne and possesse euerlasting life.

Loe heere is an other heauenlye kinde of Vsury, whereunto we bee also called, and not frayed from it. But I beseeke you, howe manye kynde we of them whiche doe afyre their myndes, to gather them these heauenly treasures, which bee giuen with so great an interest, ouerplus and gayne? So that it is proued by these examples, that it is not vnlawfull of it selfe, to yelde more than is receyued or to receiue also more than is giuen out.

But thys is the poynte whych wee muſt conſyder off with ſymple and pure eyes, whether the order and nature of that Vſurye which is vſed in oure dayes, and whereof our queſtion goeth at this preſent, and that Vſurie of the land and of heauen, of which both God the moſt mightie Lorde is the giuer and lender, bee all one or no. They which doe mayntayne the accuſtomed Vſurie, doe deuyſe manye meanes to coloure it by, and to vpholde it to bée lawefull. They doe bryng for them the law out of the Code in the treatie De vſuris, whereby is permitted, yea, and appoynted the hundred and halfe hundreth parte &c. and they thynke to worke theyr feate by the authour of the ciuile lawes, ſo that the ſame whiche they doe, ſhal not ſeeme to bée Vſury, or if it bée Vſurie, yet it ſhould not be vnlaweful. Wherevnto wée aunſwere, that the lawemaker was enforced of neceſſitie not to maynteyne Vſurie, but to ſet ſome ſtaye in theyr couetouſneſſe, which grewe to bée paſſing great at thoſe tymes, as the very text it ſelfe of the lawe doth proue. For it eaſeth the ſorenelle and outrage of Vſurie, and appointeth certayne boundes, beyonde which none ſhall demaunde more. No doubte hée had rather there myght haue bene ſuche charitie amongeſt Chriſtian men, that there ſhould bée no entry to Vſurie at al. But for almuch as the couetouſneſſe of men was then wared exceadyng great, hée thought it neceſſarie to hedge it in, by certayne lymmittes and reſtrayntes, and therefore did cutte off the exceading enormitie thereof vnto the one halfe. Wherefore that lawe doth not maynteyne Vſurie, nor make it lawefull, but doth rather teſtifie, that Charitie was then waren colde among Chriſtian men, and moſt filthye and deteſtable couetouſneſſe growen vp: in ſo muche that there needed the authoritie of the Emperour to reſtrayne it.

So that lyke as the lawe of refuſall and diuorce, which was giuen by Moſes, dyd not excuſe the Iewe (which vſed it) before GOD, but that hée was giltie of the breache of wedlocke: So that Ciuill lawe doth not ſo make Vſurie to bée lawefull, that the Chriſtian man which vſeth it is cleered before GOD. Wherefore lyke as Chriſte ſayde vnto the Iewes, of the lawe of diuorce: It was not ſo from the firſt beginning. And bycauſe of the hardeneſſe of your heartes, Moſes ſuffered you to vſe the libell of diuorce, and ſo ſent them backe to the firſte trade of lawefull wedlocke, wherevnto they ſhould frame them ſelues.

So wee muſt alſo haue a reſpect in this caſe of Vſurie vnto the puritie, principles, iuſtice, and order of Chriſtian religion, whereof wée maye vnderſtande in the Goſpell, and not vnto Ciuile lawes. For they were not made for true Chriſtian men, which neede no Ciuill lawe to be reſtrayned by from paſſing of theyr boundes in followyng of couetouſneſſe. For they be ſo ledde on by the Spirite of loue, that they doe hartyly loue theyr neighbours, and be readye to beſtowe ſtowe vppon them, not onely their money, but theyr lyfe alſo, if nede bee. And where as this loue is, there no deſyre of gayne can take place: nor there is no reaſon, why to eſtablyſhe ſuch lawes, whereby to reſtraine couetouſneſſe. Wherefore the Lawyers meaning was not to maynteyne and defende him which requyreth Vſurie in lending, but to relieue him, which is the borrower, leaſt when he is dryuen and compelled by neceſſitie to borowe money, (when charitie is waren ſo colde, that he can finde no mã that will gyue him frankely, or lende hym without intereſt,) he bee not worne out to the verye bones by the vnſatiable couetouſneſſe of the Vſurers.

Luce. 6. Matth. 5.

Wherefore that Lawe which the Chriſtian Emperour made touching Vſurie, is an argument to proue by, that the loue towardes mens neyghbours, was waren colde at that tyme to the ſhame of Chriſtendome, ſo farre is it from excuſing of it for not being vnlawful. It is the parte of Chriſtian menne, to bee withdrawen from all thoſe thynges which doe diſpleaſe GOD, partlye by the inwarde drifte of the holy Spirite, and partlye by the light, and authoritie of Gods worde, ſo that it ſhould not be neceſſarie for them to bee pricked forwarde, and reſtrayned back by the compulſion of anye Emperyall lawes. The Ciuile lawes doe not forbidde all thyngs, which bee vnlawefull before God, nor they doe not punyſhe thoſe thyngs, which they forbydde not. And yet notwythſtandyng it followeth not therevpon, that all thoſe matters bee lawefull in the ſighte of God, which bee not reſtrayned by anye ciuile lawes. They doe not forbydde anger, diſpleaſure, impatiencie, enuie, hatred, pryde, naughtie luſte, couetouſneſſe, and ſuche other lyke, which the Apoſtle doth call the workes of darkeneſſe.

Galat. 5.

And attributing vnto them, that they doe exclude ſuche from the kyngdome of God, as be therevnto diſpoſed. Wherefore no man that doeth theſe thynges is therevpon excuſed in the ſight of God, bicauſe he is not condemned by anye Ciuile Lawe.

Agayne, the Ciuile lawes doe not preſcribe all thoſe matters which bee requiſite vnto true iuſtice. No Ciuile lawe doth charge vs with faythe, hope, charitie towardes God and our neyghbour, patience in aduerſitie, myldeneſſe, meekeneſſe, humbleneſſe and modeſtie, &c. And yet for all that, no man ought to ſurmyſe therevpon, that hee is not bounde vnto theſe thynges, bicauſe that in caſe hee vſe hym ſelfe otherwyſe, he is not condemned by the Ciuile lawes.

Beſydes this, they doe permitte ſome thynges vpon certayne reaſons, and conſyderations whyche bee vnlawefull for all that in the ſyght of God, and bee vtterly condemned by his worde, and they doe ſuffer them not as vpryghte and lawefull of themſelues, but to cutte off thoſe thynges which be worſe. So they doe ſuffer Vſurie alſo to this reſpect to make ſome meane in the couetouſneſſe of men.

They doe not punithe whoredome, they doe not take awaye fewes, and yet no whoremaister is excused thereby in the sight of GOD. Nor that saying of the Apostle is not made voyde: Wedlocke is honourable and holye, but as for whoremasters and aduiterers the Lorde shall iudge them.

In lyke manner all those threatenunges bee not voyde, which doe condemne Vsurars in holy Scriptures: bycause that they bee not condemned by the Ciuile lawes, but wee must consyder what is the marke & ende of the Ciuile lawes, and not suppose that they were set to this intent, to make men iuste before God, but to make the estate of mans lyfe somewhat able to bee abyden, and to restraine and pale in the malice of man.

This I haue thought good to touche briefly, to aunswere them which doe maintayne and defende the Vsurie vsed in our dayes, by colloure of the Ciuile lawes, that they saye: It is not vnlawefull before God.

Howe men ought to lende according to the doctrine of Christ.

Forasmuche as our question is where of Vsurie, whether it bee lawefull or vnlawefull, not before the worlde, but before GOD, and that therefore the pretence or colloure of the Ciuile Lawes, or of anye other constitutions of men, can take no holde in this question, the very nature it self of our Christian profession, doeth compell vs to hearken vnto Christe hymselfe, the Sonne of God, and to learne at his mouth, howe Christian men ought so to lende one to an other, that they synne not in the sight of God. For we must fullye persuade our selues, that the same can not be lawefully done, whatsoeuer is against the doctrine of our Sauiour. Therefore wee must waye howe Vsurie doth agree with the wordes of Christe. And I doe first of all protest vnto you, that I doe speake not vnto the children of this worlde, but vnto the faythful folke, which bee fully persuaded, that the lessons of Christe bee so godly, conteyning the rule of true godlynesse and righteousnesse, that they must all of necessitie displease God which doe not with all their heart apply and frame themselues vnto them.

Matth. Luce.

Wee doe reade in Matthewe: Denye not him which is desyrous to borowe of thee. And in Luke: Lende trusting for nothing to come of it. And in case you doe lende there where you hope to receyue somewhat agayne, what thanke haue you? For synners doe lende also vnto synners, to receyue the like. By these wordes Christ doth teache and instruct his followers, howe they ought to vse themselues in this case. And hee putteth a difference betwirte them and the children of this worlde.

First, hee chargeth them, that they denye not hym which is wylling to borowe, meanyng if they be able to lende. For howe can he lende which hath it not hym selfe? He

He doth not haue his people at liberty if they haue the substance of this worlde, to lende as they lyst, but doth declare that they be straungers to the kingdome of GOD, and to the righteousnesse which belongeth vnto the children of God, as manye as do refuse to lende vnto such as be needy and do desire it. And therefore hee giueth warning to his flocke, that they do not so, in case they will be his people, and be reckened the children of God. This charge and commaundement the children of this worlde do not acknowledge, nor yet be not doyuen vnto it by Ciuile lawes, but they will haue it bee at theyr liberty to lende or not to lende.

Nor they doe not beleeue that they do offende, if they do denye hym which maketh requeste vnto them, when they bee able to relieue him. Wherefore in case that wee do lyke the profession of Christian religion, wee must endeauour to be otherwise affected than they bee. It is offence inoughe and inough that wee dw deny our ayde vnto him that woulde borowe of vs. But surely this is more than ynough, that lyke infidels we do not beleeue that we do offend when wee do not bestowe the duetie of Charitie vpon our brother that desireth to borow of vs, as though they were but nilles and trifles which CHRIST telleth vs, when hee sayth: Denye not hym which woulde borowe of thee.

They aunswere, that there is no commaundement, but a counsell. The commaundement ranne expressly to the Iewes in this wise: In case that one of thy brethren which dwelleth wythin the gates of thy citie, in the lande which the Lorde thy God shall giue thee, come to pouertie, thou shalt not harden thy hart, nor close thy hande, but open it to thy power and lende him that which thou perceiuest that he lacketh. Howe then is it reason that the iustice of Moses lawe shoulde bee perfecter than the righteousnesse of the Gospel of Christe: and that it shoulde bee left to our libertie to do or leaue that worke of charitie, wherein the Iewes were not at libertie? Agayne, though that it had bene spoken as a counsell: Denye not hym which is desirous to borowe of thee, howe can it be conuenient for Christian men to make so lyght of the counsel of christ so earnestly set forth, to imagine that they without daunger despyse it? I say vnto you, sayth hee, which doe heare mee, Ergo they which wyll bee the hearers of Christ, are beunde to the obedience of this counsell: neither can they shift it off without offence and perill of theyr soule health, euen lyke as the syche person can not neglecte the aduise of the Phisition, without the perill of the health of his body.

But the matter is cleare, that they do sinne against the wyll of GOD, which do denye theyr brother that desyreth to borowe, least hee crye (sayth he) to the Lorde against thee and so turne to thy sinne.

Secondly, Christ doth informe his folowers howe they ought to lende. Lende, sayth he, trusting

vpon

vpon nothing to come of it, which some do so vnderstand, that men should truste vppon, or receiue no profit or gayne, or interest, more than that which is lent, which is in deede principally requisite of him that desyreth to keepe his handes cleane from the filthynesse of Vsurye: but this doeth not fullye aunswere and satysfie the meaning of Christe, which doeth in thys place require of vs to lende them also of whome we can not hope to receiue anye thing againe, as it doth playnly appeare by that which hee addeth in saying: In case you do lende where you hope to receiue againe, what thancke haue you? For sinners do also lend vnto sinners, to receiue asmuche agayne. Marke, hee sayth not, to receiue in Vsurye, or an ouerplus somewhat more than the principall, but to receiue the lyke, or asmuch.

Wherefore hee doth herein also make a differrence betwixte hys people, and such as doe not belong vnto hym, and requyreth of hys folowers to relieue theyr neighbour and brother, not onely without gayne, forasmuch as sinners also doe so sometymes, but further to theyr hinderaunce and the losse of theyr money, which they doe lende, and so to lende, that the lenders may purchase themselues thereby the fauour & thanke of GOD.

And we muste herein also make a dyfference betwixt Ethnikes and Christians. The Ethnikes doe lende fyrst vnto suche as be able to repaye as much as they haue receyued.

Secondly, to them which haue also sometymes lent vnto them before, or maye lende them againe an other tyme.

Thyrdly, vnto theyr frendes and kinsmen.

Fourthly, to them of whom they may truste to fynde some fauour. And in deede there is no offence in these sortes of lending, but yet there is not expressed thereby the iustice of the kingedome and spyrite of Christe. Therefore they that be of Christes flocke doe lend in this manner.

Firste, vnto them which hath not so much welth as to pay them some againe.

Secondly, vnto them also which neuer lent vs any thing before, nor are not able to lend vs againe.

Thirdly, not onely vnto our frendes, but vnto our enemies also. Not onely vnto our kinsfolke, but vnto straungers and forreyners.

Fourthly, where we can loke for no thanckes giuinge, recompence nor fauour. And in so doing we doe declare in verye deede that we be his children, which bringeth forth his Sunne vpon bothe good and euill, and rayneth vpon the thankefull and vnthankefull, which Christe doth also require of his folowers, saying: That you may be the children of your Father, &c.

Now compare me them which do lende vpon Vsury now a dayes, vnto this square and rule of Christian rightuousnesse, and se howe farre they bee out of the square of Christes worde, whiche is so set set forth vnto all Christian men, that vnlesse they do confirme themselues vnto it, they muste needes be accompted amongest synners, and not amongest the chyldren of God: yea, and that scarcely able to reach to the ryghteousnesse of synners. For there is so muche righteousnesse attrybute also vnto synners, ỹ they doe lende out without Vsury, and that they couet not to receiue any thyng for gayne, but the same onely whiche they lent out. So that it is an easye matter for vs whiche doe loke vnto the righteousnesse of the kyngdome of Christ, and to ỹ tenour of Christes wordes, and to the profession of Christian religion, to iudge vppon this comparison, whether that Vsurye bee lawefull for them or no whiche haue professed Christe, and wyll seme to be Christians, as for others, wee neede not to iudge. A Christian man ought to aunswere to his profession, and not to iudge otherwyse of thinges whether they be lawefull or vnlawefull, but according to the tenoure of the doctrine of Christe, and not to sette hymselfe that marke or end in the folowyng of righteousnesse, whereby he may escape blame of vniustice in the face of the worlde, but in the sighte of God. Wherefore we doe conclude agreeinge vnto the holye Scriptures and sayinges of Christ, that the Vsurie which is waren to bee exceeding marueylous and greate these latter tymes in the Churche of Christe, is not lawfull but dammable and farre out of the square from the profession of Christian righteousnesse.

And how greate the wickednesse of Vsurie is, consydered of it selfe, it is not hard to knowe, but onelye vnto them which take a swete sauoure of lucre and gayne of any thyng, howsoeuer it ryse, whose heartes the greedinesse of auarice hath blynded vp. Furste the vice of auarice hath allwayes beene reputed moste filthie and foule, not onlye amongest Christian men, but with Ethnickes also, and that is the verye rote of Vsurye. Take me awaye the loue of money and desyre of gayne, and we shall haue neuer an Vsurer left in the Church of Christ.

Secondly, who seeth not, howe wycked and wrongfull a matter it is, to seeke a gayne vppon the pyntching and payne of others, for the Vsury whiche is giuen, is reysed not vppon the trauayle and labour of the Vsurer, but of hym that payeth the interest.

Thirdely, it is out of all equitie also and reason, that the Vsurer doeth receyue a gayne without any losse or daunger of his money, so that hee is out of all hazarde how so euer the dyce fall, and he onely enforced to beare the daunger of the losse, which payeth the interest, what so euer losse or mishappe falleth, it is his lotte. The Vsurer hath nothing to doe, but onely to receyue his gayne, and haue his principall also saued.

Fourthly, this is also an other poynt, that though the debter paye neuer so great vsurie, yea and continue in it neuer so many yeares, yet for all that, the principall stock doth euer remayne whole, and no peece thereof dimunished. And how sore this matter doth torment the heart

heart of hym which paieth ỳ interest and howe thynne it maketh hys stocke, I nede not to tell you, for experience doth wel teach it, when ỳ powre being once in this case, and finding him selfe to be in such a plagie bracke, as he can not wynde hym selfe out of, falleth to be desperate, and to forsake his wife and children, and to leaue behinde him the rest of all his goods, for the vnsatiable couetousnesse of the Vsurer to spoyle. Such a matter we reade chaunced vnto them, which being in daunger and debt, fled vnto Dauid when he was an outlawe. Suche pitifull sightes and lamentable cases, godly folke doe se dayly before their eyes, to their great griefe and sorowe, when the Magistrates doe but winke at the matter. And yet the worst poynt of all is that, whereas such Vsurers ought not to be taken for Citizens, they be preferred to places of honor and reputatiõ, as well Ecclesiasticall as worldly affaires.

1. Sam. 22.

The obiection of the Vsurers.

IT is an olde saying (sayth the Vsurer) in euery mans mouth, that the partie that is willing, taketh no wrong. I sende for no mã, I enforce no man to take my mony, they come of their owne accord, and they take my mony vpon no other condition, but for Vsury, nor they require not otherwise: what doe I offende in this matter? Let them leaue me my mony, if the burden of the Vsurie be so sore. I answere, that this is a saying more for no Christian, but for an Ethnicke, yea, and enemy vnto man. Necessitie is a harde and sore weapon. The powre miserable men come vnto thee as driuen thereby, and thou doest most foully make their miserie gainfull vnto thee, without all perseuerance of humanitie or gentlenesse. Againe, the Vsurer doth obiect: But Syr, they were well appointed, and gaue me thankes when they toke my mony vpon the condition to pay interest. What wrong is this I praye you, which maketh men full glad, and to giue me great thankes? I answer. It is not for any benefite they fele, that the powre men do reioyce & giue thee thankes, but bicause they thinke that they shalbe better able to shift off by the hinderance of Vsurie that cruel necessitie wherewith they be pricked. No doubt they had rather to haue had borowed the mony after ỳ plain fashion of borowing, than to take it with the hynderance of the Vsurie. But forasmuch as the vngeltie dealing of men is so farre gone, that they can not finde ỳ fauour in any place, they be glad in dede whe they haue gotte that mony vpon any Vsurie: and yet this sort of gladnesse turneth them at length vnto a great bruines and sorowe: and where as they thinke they haue escaped one diuell, they fall into the clawes of the diuell and his damme both.

Chrysostome doth most handsomly compare this ioye of them which do take mony vpon Vsurie, vnto the biting of an Adder, for lyke as hee which is bitten with an adder, falleth with a certaine delite into sleepe and in the swetnesse of his deadly sleepe dieth, by reason that by the meanes of his sleeping the poyson passeth ouer throughout al ỳ partes of his body. So he which receiueth money vpon interest, doeth so reioyce for the present, as if he had receiued a good turne, notwithstanding the Vsury doeth in continuaunce so sucke vp his substance, that it turneth it all into debte. So Cato also the elder, being asked at a time, what it was to take Vsury, answered, as much as to murder a man.

Thirdly, it is replyed also by others, which hath some shew of the taste of the gospell of Christ, not to amende theyr life, but to couer their wickednesse withall, and say, that the whole law and summe of the scriptures of the Prophets, by the testimony of Christ consisteth in this point, that I must do the same to others, which I would haue den to my selfe. And I would me no better luting, than to haue an hundred crownes euery year for the paying of fine, than I pray you what fault is there in that that I do take as much of others. I do vse the same trade my selfe as often as I haue nede, I do giue the like and take the like againe of others. I answere. It is a most wicked matter to abuse the words of Christ, which bee of that nature that they ought not to mainteyn the couetousnesse of men, but all brotherly charity. Thou doest the same to others which thou desirest of others. If thou do this of a charitable spirit & motion, imagine thy self to be the powre and needy person, and put on the affection of his necessitye, weying wyth thy selfe what thou wouldest wish to haue done to thee from them that be welthy if thou were in his case, whether thou wouldest haue them to lende thee with Vsurye or without Vsurye. No doubt thou haddest rather haue it without Vsury, for it were better for thy purpose than to abyde the hinderance of the Vsury: wherefore whereas Christe sayth do the same vnto others which thou wouldest haue done vnto thy selfe: thou must vnderstande it as spoken in this sense: Do that to thy neighbour which thou wouldest haue done vnto thee if thou were in his case, with the verye same friendly and fauorable affection of loue, as thou bearest vnto thy owne selfe.

Examine thy owne conscience & iudge vprightly, whether that thou canst truely say, that thou doest so loue and relieue thy powre and nedy neighbour, as thou wouldest be loued and relieued in case thou were as hee is. And seeing that thou canst not so say of thy selfe and speake truely, to what purpose is it to vse the guile to make a mockage of the sentence of our sauyour Christe?

Secondly, thou sayst that thou doest both giue and take Vsurye: but tell me I beseeche thee why doest thou giue, vppon what neede or necessytie? Lyke as they doe of whome thou doest take it? No no. They doe sustaine the smartes of Vsurye, as compelled by necessitye, but thou felest no smart, thou giuest not for necessitye, but of a couetous mynde, for the hope of a greater gayne, fiue in the hundred to wyn tenne: fifteene to get twentie.

And doest so giue and take as some Pallinge priestes are wont to do, which will themselues somtimes offer a halfepeny vpon the pax to continue and keepe in the gaine of the offering in the Church, and to moue the people to offer by their example, and by that meanes for one halfepeny to get vp twenty.

Thus the Simonists do trymly agree with the Vsurers, for they be possessed both with one kinde of couetousnesse. Fourthly, when the Vsurer perceyueth that he is driuen into a narow corner, & wotteth not by what meanes to maintaine his Vsurie, he turneth himselfe to other shiftes, and saith: if Vsury be of this nature that I do offende in receauing, I know what I will do, I will hereafter lende no man any of my mony, I will keepe it to my selfe least I be an Vsurer. I answere. This is that shift of couetousnesse, for which the ciuill lawes woulde not vtterly forbyd Vsurie. Wilt thou keepe thy mony to thy selfe? notwithstanding any restraint of the worlde, thou maist do so, but in the court of conscience and of Christ, thou canst not do so, by whose commaundement thou art charged, that thou shalt not deny him which will borow of thee, but lend him without hope to receaue any thing againe. Therfore which soeuer thou dost of the both, thou shewest thy selfe to be nothing lesse than a Christian man, whether thou refuse to lende thy brother mony when thou art able, or whether thou do so lend that thou receaue Vsurie, thou doest all alike offend God and thy neighbour. In case thou lende nothing at all, in deede thou art not burdened with the offence of Vsurye, but yet thou doest still nourishe vp the rote of Vsurye, that is to saye, couetousnesse in thy hart, and becomest a trāsgressour of the word of Christ. To be short, thou doest (asmuch as in thee lieth) as well to destroy thy neighbour in not lending to him at all, as in the lending to Vsury. If thou refuse to lende, thou arte worse than an heathen sinfull person: for sinners do also lend vnto sinners, to receaue asmuch againe. If thou lend for Vsury, thou art in that respect also worse than a number of heathen men, which do by the law of nature kepe them selues from this vice.

Fiftly, the couetousnesse of the Vsurer doth reply also in this sort. If I shall lende without Vsury, it is not possible that I should be payde home my owne agayne: for the poore mans substance is not so great to paye me againe my whole summe. But in case he do paye me yearely a certayne Vsurye, I maye be payde at the least way yet some parte of my money. I answere. Dost thou confesse then that the pouertie of thy brother is so great, that he is not able to pay thee thy mony which he hath borowed? Why dost thou not thē harken to the wordes of Christ, whereas he sayth: And your rewarde shall be great in Heauen, and, You shall be the sonnes of the highest. And, Thou shalt be payed it at the regeneration of the iuste, How canst thou saye that thou receauest nothing, when for an earthly commoditie thou arte payde an euerlasting?

Luce.

Luce.

So

So that this pretence is quyte contrarie vnto the doctrine of Christ, which teacheth vs to be beneficiall to the poore, for that very cause, bicause ỳ he hath nothing to repay it withall, to the entent to purchase thee the heauenly rewarde. And thou wilte lende the poore body nothing for this occasion, bycause hee hath not so much wealth to be able to repaye thee that which thou wouldest els lende him.

Doest thou not beleeue then, that the same is true which Christ doth promise, or doest thou better like the temporarie rewarde and gayne than the euerlasting, the earthly than the heauenly?

Sixtly, That little that I haue (saith he) I haue gotten it togither with great trauaile and much a do, what reason were it I shoulde bestowe it vpon others for naught? what is that to mee, that other folkes haue not as well husbanded theyr thinges as I?

Doe I owe them anye thyng? I aunswere. It was a chargeable and costly matter also vnto Christ, that he redeemed thee with hys owne bloud vpon the Crosse, and for thy sake became poore, to the intent to make thee rich. Secondly, what matter is that to Christ, that we loke no better to our selues? Agayne, what thou owest to thy brother, heare the Apostle where he saith: Owe you (saith he) nothing to any man, but this, that you loue one an other. So that thou owest loue vnto thy needye brother, and consequently not onely thy mony, but thy selfe also. Why? bycause that Christ also hath loued vs, and giuen himselfe for vs: wherefore we ought also to laye our soules for our brethren as he dyd.

We bee all of vs far to slacke in this pointe, that we do consider the basenesse and pouertie of our brethren without any affection of true loue, and do not rather weye the wyll of God and his manifest commaundements, and the exceeding worthynesse of his free redemption. Doth not the poore man deserue to haue thee to lende him? yet no doubt, Christ doth well deserue it, which doth require it at thy hand. The poore man is not worthy to receiue so good a turne at thy hand, that thou shouldest lende him thy mony for nothing, but Christe is worthy inough. The poore man can not pay thee thy mony again which he borowed but christ can restore it an hundred fold thicke, and withall giue thee euerlasting lyfe, as he hath promised also.

Seuenthly, accordinge to the Matth. 9.
most stubbern nature of the shiftes of couetousnesse, the Vsurer replieth yet eine agayne, and sayth: Wherevpon shall I lyue? howe should I prouide for mee and my familie, in case that I shoulde so lende, that I shoulde receiue nothing agayne? I aunswere thee. The lorde saith: See you seeke first the kingdome of God and the righteousnesse thereof, and al this geare shall be ministred vnto you. And, The Heathen do seeke all these thinges, so that this maner of shifting and holdinge off, is not conuenient for Christian men: nor wee must not be afraid, least we husband our owne thinges naughtely by our ayding of our needy brethren.

C.i. We

We do reade that some do deuide and bestowe their owne thinges, and become the richer for it, and some do catche that which is not theirs, and be alwayes in pouerty. The soule which blesseth, that is to saye, doth good shall wax fatte, and he which doth replenish, shall be replenished also. And, Breake thy breade, sayth he, vnto the hungry, and bring the needy and straying into thy house: and when thou seest one naked, cloath him, and neglect not thy flesshe. What tyme thou powrest out thy soule vpon the hungry, and doest refreshe the afflycted and troubled soule, thou shalt be like a well watered garden, and lyke a fountayne of water, which shall not slake or decay. And the Apostle sayth. He dispersed and gaue to the poore, his righteousnesse remaineth for euermore. And he which doth bestowe seede to the sower, will giue breade also to eate off. So that the faithfull ought not to feare penury and lacke, for that that he doth relieue the poore. And yet I woulde not so much myslike this matter, in case that at the least way that meaning of the Apostle could be admitted, that the aboundance and ouerplus of the rich, might relieue the lacke of the poore. For although that we dyd not so readily departe from our owne necessaries vnto others, it might be borne withall, so that we did not excuse, but confesse the weakenesse of our faith therein. But who can like this in the church of Christ, that in so great excesse or waste of all thinges, we be neuer afraide of lacke, but that we be than afraid, when we should succour the necessities of our brethern? If we should folow the Apostles rule, which is prescribed, saying in this sorte: Hauing to fede vpon: and to couer our carkas, let vs be contented withall, this care and feare woulde some be gone. For nature as he sayth, is serued with a little, but rauening greedinesse wouide haue an vnreasonable deale to be satisfied withall. Let vs laboure in that which is honest, eschewe Idlenesse, and cast of all the waste: let vs banyshe away the abuse of all thinges, and we shall be careles vnder the protection and prouidence of God, and haue no neede at all to feare the necessitie of penury and lacke, but nowe when there is so much cost bestowed vpon stately and gaye houses, and buildinges, vpon excesse and waste of apparell, vpon all kinde of delitions meates and drinkes, besydes all other vnnecessarie deuises, what wonder is it if men be afraide of pouertie? No doubt he hath neede of muche, which determineth with al symnesse and gaynesse not to nourish, but to nussell men in naughtinesse. He hath neede to haue much which purposeth to leaue great wealth vnto his heiers after him. And he that hath neede of much doth vse manye sleightes, & conueiances by right or by wrong, whereby to attaine to his purposed pretence. Away with this, and you shall finde it an easie matter, not onely, to shake of this detestable Vsury, but also euery way to relieue the necessities of our bretherne.

(:)

Of Prouerb. 11

Esay. 58.

2. Cor. 9.

2. Cor. 8.

1. Tim.

Of the Vsury of them which do deliuer their money to interest to Merchants or Princes.

Hitherto wee haue considered that kinde of Vsurie, wherein the poore man is bound to the rich, and the substãce of the bare & needy sucked away, and we haue also spoken of that kinde of lending, wherwith Christ doth charge vs to succour the necessities of our brethren. Nowe we haue to speake of them which do put out their mony to vse, fallen vnto them by inheritaunce or otherwise gotten, vnto rich men, Merchantmen, or Prynces, vpon condition to receiue some certaine pẽce monthly or yearely for the interest thereof and withall to haue their principall to remaine whole which may remain in their libertie to call home when soeuer they lyst. And here riseth the question, what the offence is in such kynde of Vsury. There is none of them both wronged or greeued (say they) in this dealing, neither he which giueth, nor he which receyueth the Vsury, but they haue a handsome commoditie both thereby, he which giueth the Vsury doth turne the penny well for the principall, and gaineth so much therby that he may welynough giue Vsury without any losse. On ỹ other side he which receiueth the Vsury, doth gather vp as it were a fruit or rent yearely vpon his mony, without daunger, or perill of the principall, and may by this meanes kepe it whole to the vse of his heiers. Therefore seeing that there is neither harme nor hinderance herein to no parte, how is there any offence of charity in it? And if there be none, how can it be said of this vsury, that it is vnlawfull? I answere, That in deede we muste needes confesse, that there is not so great offẽce in this kinde of Vsury, as there is in that, when Vsury is extorted of the barer sort of men, which in humanitie or vnkindnesse is condemned not onely by the lawes of Christ, but also of nature. For it is a very vnkinde point to scratch and scrape for gaine vpon the sweate & wretchednes of ỹ poore. So ỹ this vsury wherof we shall now entreate, doth much differ from it, which can by no meanes at all be tollerable. And yet withal we may not surmise, that there is no point in this Vsury of the rich, which may be reprehended. For ỹ righteousnesse of a Christian man doth not rest onely in this point ỹ he wrong or greaue no man in any matter. And therfore we must wey the circumstances of this Vsury in respecte of the which it can not bee commendable, and well to bee liked.

Firste of all I thincke it is a clere case, ỹ ther doth concurre in both parts, as well in him which giueth, as also in him which taketh ỹ vsurye, a respect of their owne proper gaine. For neither he which putteth forth his mony to the riche Merchauntman, doth it for any brotherly charitie, but to receiue a monthly or yearly cõmoditie vpon it, nor the other is not so ready to the giuing of Vsurie that he woulde giue it if he coulde with his commoditie and ease keepe it still.

For as one saide, the loue of mony

r.iij. groweth

growcth euen as the mony it selfe encreaseth. And yet hee payeth the Vsurye without any sticking, least he should bee enforced to deliuer vp the whole principall, and so to be reputed a banckrout. Wee haue knowen notable examples in thys matter. Therefore seeing that the seeking of mens owne proper gaine is the roote also of this Vsurie, I see not howe it can frame with Christian folke, without offence or blame, or rebuke, which of all others ought to be most void of al desirefull seeking of their owen cõmoditie. Let no man (saith the Apostle) seeke thinges to himselfe, but vnto others. In deede it is to farre out of the way, yea and it can not be borne amongest the Heathen, to seeke a mans own cõmoditie, with the hinderance of others. And yet withall it ought to be as straunge a matter of it selfe vnto Christian men, to hunt after their owne againe, yea though it were without the hinderance of others as it ought to be, to giue thẽselues vnto lustes and idelnesse, without anye hynderance or incommoditie of others.

Wherfore like as they do offende, which doe giue themselues vnto wanton lustes & pleasures in Princes Pallacies and noble and riche mens houses, notwithstandinge that they feele no harme that they take thereby, so the Christian man doth also offend, which is greedy of his owne gaine, notwithstanding that he doth so apply it, that hee seeke his gaine, not out of the miserie of the poore, but onely of the wealth of rich men.

Secondly, he which taketh Vsury must take circumspectly, that he feede not his humor of his owne vnbeliefe thereby. For it is not sufficient for a Christian so to deale with his neighbour, that he haue no cause to mistike, but he muste consider also, what faith hee haue towardes GOD, and howe that which he doth, agreeth or disagreeth with a sincere and cleare faith. And to make a proofe thereof, let him which taketh the Vsury ponder with himselfe, whether that it be not better for him and for a safe conscience, to call home his mony, and vtterly to eschewe gaine of Vsury.

And in case that he bee destitute of faith, he shal immediately meete with these imaginations: If I shall liue vpon my very principall, and not vpon Vsury, it can not be able to serue my whole necessarie expences and charges, during my lyfe tyme.

Secondly, what shall bee lefte to my children & successours after my death? Wherevpon shall they liue, in case that I spende all? But those imaginations do not come of Faith, but of diffidence and mistrust, and do argue that the minde of men is so wedded vnto Vsury, that it supposeth they shall haue nothing left to liue on, if they shoulde forsake that way and trade.

But hereunto they do obiecte, that men ought not to tempt the Lorde, as though it were a temptinge of the Lorde, to depende with a stedfast trust vpon his prouidence, according vnto the worde of GOD, and to refuse that kinde kinde of lyfe, wherein mens necessaryes be idely purchased by the gayne of vsurie. If it bee a temptinge of God, when a man wil not lyue vpon vsurie, I beseeche you, howe shal so many godly Fathers, Prophets, and Apostels aswell of the old, as of the new Testament, and others be defended, which dyd rather abyde penurie, than embrace the commoditie of vsurie? Doth Christe than teache hys people to tempte the Lorde, when hee commaundeth them, that they shall not heape them vp treasures, and that they shall lende, truslinge for nothinge thereof? It is a temptynge of the Lorde, to trust vnto the Lord when the lorde promyseth nothing, and to neglecte the wayes and meanes to lyue, which hee prescribed, and to vse the contrarie. But I do not read any wher, that ỳ lord promysed, that he wyll feede vs, and maintayne vs in idelnesse and pleasures by vsurie.

Wherfore that is rather a temptynge of God, to lyue in idelnesse, and to trade our children in idelnesse, and there while to hope that ỳ same mony wherof we do receiue a yearely interest, may serue vs for euer, to this ende, to suffyce not onely for our necessarie expences, but to the paumperinge vp of our pleasures also and lustes.

Wherfore their obiection is but vayne, which say to cloake theyr vsurie, that they doe put their money to aduenture, that is to say, that they lende or laye it out to daunger, whé for vsurie they doe commyt theyr mony to the credite of others. For it maye so happe, that the same merchaunt which vseth the trafyke of my money, may fall into decaye and powertie, either by misfortunes, eyther through his own negligẽce, and so my whole pryncipall maye decaye and be losse.

Wherefore it is not so far out of the waye, that I doe take vsurye of hym, whyleft hee hath good lucke. Thus the vsurer standeth alwayes vpon incertaynties, and aduentureth hys goodes, which thinge they doe not, whose doings bee practised with a fayth towards GOD, and as it becommeth honestye. Dyce players also and gamesters do aduenture theyr money vpon an incertaintye, and yet for all that no man of vnderstandynge wyll alowe the folowinge of playe in a Christyan man. In this maner, whiles they wil not be such, as to tempte God, they doe confesse not onely in fact, but also in wordes, that they doe aduenture their money vnto vncertayn chaũces and daungers, and so tempt God in that that they do put forth their mony to interest.

Thyrdly, thou must consyder also, howe the rych person, Merchaunt, or poynce dothe vse hymselfe of whome thou takest vsurye, thou thinckest it sufficient to excuse thy vsurie, ỳ he is not so poore that he shall decaye his substaunce by gyuing of vsurie. But if thou weye the matter well, thou shalt perceyue, that there bee other thinges to bee obserued withall. And in case hee doe so deale in the matter, that hee abuseth thy money, either to ỳ heaping vp of wealth, either to sumptuousnes & wastfulnesse, either to practise some thyng that to make vnlawfull warres, and to the destruction and conquest of cõtreyes, (as it is somtimes employed) I beseech thee, how canst thou boast that the Vsurie which thou gyuest, is not to be blamed, where as thou doest therein serue the sinfull appetite of other men, in yeldinge thy mony to the ouer and abuse of such persons? Thinckest thou that it maketh no mater to thee, vnto what vse thou do lay out thy mony so that it be to thy profit? What may we thincke for the outragyous dayly wantonnesse, and lust of our tymes more than Ethnick, so shamefull vilenesse of so many thousandes, so many sturres and ouerthrowes of warres, and pyllages of the people, but that money which is lente out by Vsurers? If thou be a Chrystian man, how canst thou haue no care or regarde of these matters? So that there is as it were, a certaine conspiracy betwirt thẽ which doe gyue, and them which do take Vsurie. For they doe one of them gyue ayd and helpe to ỳ other wher by their gaynes and affections be serued on both sydes, & so be lynked togither to synne. It is a sore matter, if a man do synne alone & pryuately, but how much sorer musse it seeme, when a man for his own proper gayne, shall so employ his ayde to hys neighbour, that he shall minister vnto him matter to kindle, and mayntayne his wickednesse?

Fourthly, wee must consyder also howe this kinde of vsury doth hinder the workes of Charytie. The vsurer supposeth ỳ his mony which he hath more than nede, & which he is not driuen by any present necessitie to bestowe in the charge of housholde, ought to bee put forth to some vses, to the entent that it shoulde not be ydle, barren, and vnfruitfull, but that he may take some commoditie of it. Therfore he doth put it forth to vsury, and furnisheth that hee doth by this meanes, best husbande his matters. And as long as he is of this mynde, I beseeche you when shall he ayde and relieue hys poore and needy neighbors, whiche hee hath aboute him? As for that which commeth vppon the interest, hee doth employ parte of it to his owne necessarie vses, & part to gaine more, to encrease his principall euery yeare as much as hee can. And what is that thincke you out of which hee will gyue to the poore? Where is that which he will lende freely to the needy, without interest takinge? Is it anye peece of that, wherewith hee doth mayntayne himselfe and his familye? I thincke not. Why shoulde I gyue that vnto others (sayth he) which I haue nede of my owne selfe? Paule sayth: That your abundaunce, and ouerplus, may supply and furnyshe their nede. Here is no abundaunce, no more than nedeth. All is necessary ỳ I haue. It is mete for mee to loke to bewtyfie my degree and estate, which I haue receyued of my forefathers, to haue a consideration & regard of my reputation & honour, to fynd my wyfe and chyldren, not barely nor basely, but bountifully as reason woulde. Hereunto is requysyte no scarse, nor small peece of money, but a large and plentyfull stocke. Should he gyue out of that which he hath appointed for vsury? No, that is as holy as ỳ chalyce, it may not be touched. Therefore what is to bee locked for els in suche a man, but that all workes of charitie must bee extinguyshed by the greedy desyre to gather money, specially if he beleeue that this vsurye bee not vnlawfull when the couetouse harte is not bytten with any sause of synne, but wadeth out in the matter, castinge no peryll at all, as though it were lawful. And therfore we may heare them say, when they be desyred to lende: I would lende thee (say they,) if I had any mony in my handes, but I am without mony at this tyme, wherefore I pray you be not mislcontented that I lende you not, for I haue it not. Thus they doe excuse theyr shyfting ouer of the workes of charitie. But why haue they no mony in theyr handes? No doubt because they haue appoynted one peece of it to the dayly expences and charges of theyr house, and an other peece to the aduauncinge and encreasyng of theyr pryncipall, or stocke. And herevpon it falleth out oftentimes, that they which be thus nusseled in vsurie, be not very readye to paye theyr own debts, but runne in with taylers, shoemakers, carpenters, & other artyficers, and can bee content to let them bee vnpayd a yere, two or three, tyll it come to great lumpes, bycause they would not be dryuen to diminyshe anye percell, neyther of theyr stocke that they haue at vsury, neyther of it whych they haue culled out thereof for the expence of theyr family: notwithstandinge at nede or necessytie, the poore artyficers which they be indebted vnto, bee pynched withal for the mayntenaunce of themselues and theyr familye. And what can bee imagyned more wretched and wicked than this?

So that in case these poyntes be well wayed wherof I haue spoken, that is to saye, how this Vsurie is the nurse and feding of mens own proper gayne, and serueth to the mayntenaunce of vnbeliefe & mistrust, to what abuses the mony put out to vsury, is employed, and how the workes of Charitye bee extynguyshed and decayed by the greedy desyre of gatheringe of mony, I suppose it doth manyfestly appeare, that this vsurye, neyther which is practysed amongest the rycher sort, can bee estemed to bee lawfull by them which doe vnderstande what is requyred of the professors of the Christian Faythe, seynge that brotherly charitie and the contempt of worldly goodes, is the very cognysaunce and difference, without which they can not bee reputed to be Christians.

Of the Vsurye of Widowes and Pupilles.

They which be the guardians of Widowes and Pupilles, doe moue a question in this place, whether that it bee lawfull or no for them to put out to Vsurie, not their owne money, but the money, of Wyddowes and Orphanes lefte vnto them by theyr inheryttaunce or bequeste of theyr predecessours, and to delyuer it to the vsynge of them, which will yelde them yerely some encrease or gaine therof wout any hinderance or losse.

The mony (say they,) is not ours but put vnto vs of a speciall credyt or trust. And that which wee doe, we do it not for our owne gain, but for the commoditie of the widowes and Orphanes. Wherefore no man is able to charge vs, ỳ we do seeke our owne gaynes in the takinge that interest, for we do not seeke our owne profyt, but the profyte of others: I meane of widowes and Orphanes, and there in we do fyrst accomplish ỳ worke of charitie, and secondly discharge the truste also that we bee bounde vnto. I answere, I am not ignorannt, that our predecessours vsed this order before that ỳ pestelent plague of Vsurie had prophaned and defiled the Church, and were contented to permyt and beare that with wydowes and Puppylles, which was permytted in none else. All vsurie was foule & euyll fauoured, besydes that of wydowes and Pupilles. But at length, all gappes were layde wyde open vnto this wickednesse, and gaine vpon Vsurie permitted vnto all men. And howe well Widowes and Puppylles haue bene husbanded with all, the corruption of the tymes that came after do clearly and perfectly declare. There coulde haue bene no greater mischiefe brought into the Christyan Church, as it began to be abused afterwardes by synistrall dealing to the hinderaunce & vncommoditie of widowes and pupilles. For when mens substances be wasted before hande in theyr lyfe time by the fyre of vsurie, what is there lefte (I pray you,) to the widow and hir child after the death of hir husbande to be laide out to bee founde of hir kinsfolke, and in case that coulde not bee, than ther should be relieued of the reuenew of the Church after the order and custome of the Apostolike Church. How were the goods of the Church bestowed when they were brought togither at the fyrste growinge vp of the Church by the contribution of the faithfull? Surely they were parted, and deuided accordinge as eche man had nede: they were not put out to make a rent of Vsurie. That simple and playne dealinge was meet for ỳ Christian fayth and dyd recommende vnto vs that charitie by the iudgement and tryall whereof the Disciples of Christ be knowen. But nowe that the world is all giuen to Vsurie, we doe finde by ouer many examples dayly with what fayth and truste the necessitie of Widowes and Pupilles is prouided for.

bee

But in case that ỳ confuse heape of all other Vsuries and vnlawfull contractes might be ridde out of the waye, either by the authoritie of Gods worde, amongest them which wyll seeme to feare God, either by the power of magistrates, (which ought to be none of the last cases worthy to be treated of in our Parliamentes, if wee seeke the true reformation of Christian Religion, as it is pretended) that Vsurie might easely be borne withal, wher in men thincke that the necessitie of Widowes, Pupilles, and Hospitals, be holpen. Wherfore it were to bee hartely wished that though this Vsurie can not bee wholy wiped out of the Church of Christe, yet and the worst fall, that Vsury maye be banished, wherby the substances of the poore and bare persons bee so wretchedly pilled, against all Christian charitie, yea so sucked vp when the rich man catcheth, & scrapeth vpō the poore man, whom he knoweth to be so weake to beare the eating of ỳ interest, vnto whom he ought by the affection of true loue, accordinge vnto the sayinge of Christe our Sauiour, reache not out hys robbinge, but reuninge handes, eyther in liberall gyuing, either inuocable lendinge.

The Canonistes haue determined with what paynes this kynde of Vsurie ought to be punished, besides the reuenge of God.

Fyrst, that they shall be reputed for defamed persons by the infamy of the lawe, as well Ciuill as also Canonicall.

Secondly, that they shall not be admitted vnto the Communion, and societie of the Church.

Thyrdly, that they shall be turned off from the burtall of the Churche.

Fourthly, that their Testamentes, and last willes shall not be ratified, or approued by any lawe with certaine other kindes, of worthy penalties. But these matters do remayne still in paper, & not put in vre, and that notwithstandinge Vsurers do clyme vnto all kyndes of honours and promotions in the Church by the meanes of their vnlawfull wealth and riches. And the worlde is growen to that libertie and lacke of shame that many Magistrates, Paynces and Estates do giue libertie vnto Iewes to practise not symple Vsurye in theyr territories and dominions, but Usuries also vpon Usurye, as they terme them: and they do not onely gyue them licence, but house them also and bargaine with them vpon certayne tares and eractions, what they shall paye vnto them yearly for their lycence to lyue vpon Usurye: fynally, they do most wrongfully bynde their subiectes, also to endaunger themselues to the payment of such Usuries. And herein the Popes curses and excommunication is quyet and calme inough, winckinge vpon the theefe, and executing the innocent.

But nowe we will draw to an ende, touchinge this consyderation of Usurie, for (as I sayde at the beginninge) it may be thought very folyshnesse in me, to busy my selfe to much in such a matter, which like an olde goute, can take no phisycke nor medicines. This mischiefe is growen to be so greate, that after ỹ admonition of many a good man, it is become vncurable. For it is crept vp into the crowne of the heades, whose dutie it were, by their authoritie to kaye such corruptions, and to direct & order their members which bee subiectes vnto them, in the studye and endeuoure of true iustice. The sayinge of Christe is: In case that salt be infatuate, and lose the taste, whereby shall it bee turned to a saltnesse or sauerinesse? Item. You be the lyght of ỹ worlde. In case that the light which is in you, be darkened or dymmed, how greate shal the darkenesse of the bodye bee? The ende is, that wee must looke for the hand of the lord who will come eare it bee longe, and cleanse his Church of all kinde of corruptions. Oh, that he woulde come and deliuer his electes.

(:)

FINIS.

Imprinted at London by Henrie Bynneman.
Anno Do. 1578.

¶A Table wherein is briefly conteined the principal matters of the Common places of M. Wolfgangus Musculus.

I.

Of God.

Nothing is more daungerous than the ignoraunce of God. 1.
God is not to be thought vppon without great reuerence. 1.
We haue need of a deuout & circúspect mind in this behalfe 2

Whether there be a God. 2.
The occasion why this question is asked. 2.
The cause why this question is set in the first place. 2.
Howe men come to the knowledge that there is a God. 3.
Three meanes to knowe that there is a God. 3.
Howe the Philosophers knewe God by his workes. 3.
Of them that doe thinke that there is nothing els, but that which is seene with the eyes 4.
The inuisible beeing and essence of God, is declared by his working. 4.
God is knowē also by his word, 5
The elect doe not refuse the consideration of Gods workes. 5.

Who God is. 5.
The occasion why this question is asked. 5.
It is not well done to aske who God is. 6.
Whereof it came that the Heathē did worship false Gods for the true God. 6.
We may easlier determine who is not God, than who is God. 6.
God can not be called by anye proper name. 6.
It was not declared vnto Moises who God is. 7.
Howe god declareth who he is. 7.

What God is. 7.
The cause why this question is asked. 7.
This questiō may be three waies considered. 7.
Of the worde Deus, which signifieth pearcing. 7.
Of the essence and beeing of God. 8.
The difinitiō of god accordīg to his essence is not to be sought. 8
That which is Finite. can not cōprehend that which is Infynite. 8.
God is a Spirite. 8.
To knowe what God is by his office and working. 8.
What the office of God is. 8.
They that denie Gods prouidence doe denie God. 9.
Who they be that doe sufficiently knowe what God is. 9.

Of what qualitie God is. 9.
There is qualitie in all things. 9.
There be no qualities of bodies in God 9.
In what pointes the qualitie of God is to be considered. 10.

Of what qualitie God is in consideration of his essence. 10.
What may be spoken of the essence or beeing of God. 10.
Of the vnitie of the essence of God. 10.
Philosophers and Poets did acknowlege the vnity of God. 10
Wise men had that vnderstanding. 10.
The foolishnesse of them that make many Gods. 10.
The creator is greater than the worke which he created. 10.
The Maiestie of God can neither be augmented nor diminished. 11.
A similitude of the sufficiency of GOD by the Sonne and by the Soule. 11.
There be many other things besides that may be spoken of the essence of God. 11.

Of what qualitie God is concerning substance of person. 12.
The difference of these twoo wordes, Vsia and Hipostasis. 11.
Things common to the persons of the holy trinitie. 12.
Things proper vnto euery person of the trinitie. 12.
Of the names of the three substances. 12.
The reuelatiō of the holy Trinitie, by Christ. 13.
That God is one in Trinitie. 13.
The names whereby these persons be called in Scriptures. 13.
Ther is not appointed 3. Gods. 13
A similitude of three qualities in one man, which make but one man. 13.
A similitude of three qualities in the sonne, which is but one sonne. 13.
Those thinges that be seerte in the holy Trinitie be not to bee searched for. 14.
The testimonies of the holy scriptures be necessary. 14.

Of the Godhead of Christ. 14.
Christ is the word of God. 14.
Christ is the onely begotten sone of God. 15.
Christ is God, 15.
Christ doth ascribe vnto himself the workes of Godhead. 15.

Of the Godhead of the holy Ghost. 16
In what sorte God is in consideration of nature. 16.
Howe we doe vse this word, Nature, in God. 16.
What things bee declared as it were naturally in God. 17
The naturall thinges that bee in God, be euerlasting. 17.

II.

III.

When

IIII.

When God seemeth to bee contrarie to himselfe, 17.

How great God is. 18

Howv the question of Gods quantitie, 18.
What manner the quantitie of God is. 18
Wherein the excellencie of Gods goodnesse is to be considered. 18

Of the works of God. 18

God can not be idle. 19.
God can not vvorke but according to the qualitie of his nature. 19.
Gods vvorkes are testimonies of his goodnes and vvill. 19
There bee fiue kindes of vvorkinges. 19.
When things be vvrought according to the strength of their nature, without vnderstanding or will. 19.
Things which folow their owne nature vvith their will, vvithout reason. 19
Working of men hauing the qualitie of their nature, with reason & wil, subiect vnto a greater. 19
Working of good Spirites and Angels. 19.
Working according to the nature of the vvorker, subiect to none, &c. 19.
The kindes of the vvorkes of God. 20.
Howv farre foorth men may consider of Gods workes. 20
God willeth vs to be lookers on of his workes. 20.
Mans capacitie can not comprehend the capacitie of Gods vvorkes. 20

Of the Creation. 21.

The vvorke of creation is the first of Gods vvorkes. 21.
What God created. 21.
All is created saue onely the Creator. 21.

V.

The father, the sõne and the holy ghost, be all one creator and vvorker. 21
God created not euill things in respect they be euill. 21
God created all thinges of nothing. 22
How God created all thing. 22.
He created all things with no labour but vvith his vvord. 22
When God created. 22
God created in the beginning of times. 22
To vvhat ende God created. 22.
God created to this ende that some might knovv, vse & glorifie gods goodnes and glory for euer. 22.
To this ende vvere Angels and mankind created. 22
God vvas made man to the ende man might be brought to that end vvherto he vvas created. 22
That God vvorketh all thinges for himselfe and the vvicked to the euill day, is not to be referred to this creation but to his prouidence and gouernance. 22
We can not say by these vvordes that god made the vvicked man as vvicked. 23

Of the creatiõ of Angels. 23

The Scriptures teach nothing of Angels, but that is neeessary to be knovven. 23
It declareth that there bee Angels 23.
It declareth that they bee by nature spirites, by office Angels. 23.
Angels be not gotten of God, but created. 23
They be created and made 23.
Scripture declareth not vvhen they vvere created. 24
A man may gather, Iob. 38. that they vvere made at the foundations of the vvorld. 24
Moyses vvrote nothing of Angels, bicause the people vvere giuen to Idolatry. 24

VI.

Of the fall of Angels 24
Some of the Angels fell from their estate. 24
The Angels fell for sinne. 24
Originall sinne passed not from one to another in Angels. 24
What the sinne of Angels is. 24
They did set vp themselues against God. 24
Lucifer vvas throvvn downe into hell. 24
vvhy the sinne of Angels is not expressed in Scriptures. 24
Bicause the sin of the Angels is vnrecouerable, it is not expressed. 24
The sinne of man is expressed plainly, punished in mediately & promise giuen of relefe and remedie. 24

The Creation of man. 25.

After the knoledge of God is requisite the knovvlge of man. 25
To the knowledge of man is chiefly requisit to knovv his beginning 25.
God in creating man vvould set foorth a peece of vvorke that should passe al other creatures. 25
Mans hart can not iudge rightly neither of his creator nor of himselfe. 25.
The creation of man is to bee sought out of scriptures. 26
Man is a creature. 26
All that is in man, is in the vvill, vvisdom and povver of hys maker. 26
We must not forsake our creator but depend vvholy on him. 26.
We must not aske vvhy god made vs thus. 26
The fayth that vve be created of god, vvorketh three things in our hartes. 26
We depend vvholy vppon him thereby. 26
We embrace & are cõforted vvith the estate vvith thanks giuing. 26

VII.

We do not contemne therby the vile or miserable estate of our neighbour. 26
The scripture doth declare, vvhereof man is made, 27
The vilenes of the stuffe vvher of vve be made, doth teach vs to vse modestie. 27
Howv man vvas made. 27.
God made man out of the dust and put spirite and life into him. 28.
Howv Eue vvas made. 28
By these three vvordes, he formed, made & enspired, may be perceiued gods purpose in creating man. 28
Scripture declareth also of vvhat qualitie man vvas made concerning his bodily shape and fashion. 28
No mã can knovv what worthinesse the nature of man vvas at the beginning, concerning the qualitie of original righteousnesse. 28
The originall righteousnesse comprehẽded knovvlege of god, faith, loue, free and vpright vvill 28
Man had free vvill, so that hee might obey or not obey. 28
Scriptures do declare of the vvorthynesse of the first man. 28
Tertullian did vnderstand by the Image of GOD, the free vvill of man. 29
To bee created to the Image of God, is to be made and appointed as it vvere a god. 30
Of the soule. 30
It is better to abstein from, thã to meddle in this matter of the Soule. 30

Of the fall of man 30
The corruption of our nature, doth declare that mankinde did fall. 30.
Why the fall of man is to be considered. 31.

VIII.

What the fall of the first man was. 31
The history of Original sin. 31
Two partes of this Historie. 32
The easines and fauour of gods commaundements. 32.
The maner of the transgression. 32
The vvoman knevv the fauourablenesse of god tovvard them. 32
The woman knew the commaundement and rehearseth it. 32.
The vvoman knevve of the threateninges and declared them. 32
In saying peraduenture, shee shevved hir self to doubt of gods threatenings. 32
In doubting the Serpent toke auantage to tempt and denie gods vvords. 32.
The vvoman delited to beholde the tree. 32
When she had committed sin she toke no remorce of conscience, but allured Adam to the same. 32.
Adam neglected his estate, forgate his obedience & did eate. 33

What is the strength, working and paine of sinne. 33
Wee make a difference betvvixte the efficacie, and the paine of originall sinne. 33.
The vvhorlepole of original sinne is vnsearchable. 33
Adam before his fall shemed him not of nakednesse, bycause hee vvas not subiect to filthines. 32
After the fall they lost the benefite of innocencie. 33.
They lost the benefite of clere conscience, and trembled at gods voice, vvhich afore they were not afraide of. 34
Their harte and will beeing before vpright, vvas corrupt. 34.
They loste the libertie of a right vp vvill, and became slaues to sinne. 34

Of the paine of sinne laide vpon Adam for his transgression. 35
The earth vvas cursed in mans vvorke. 35
The vvorthinesse of the first man is lost. 35
Corruption and death is layde vpon vs. 36
Nature it selfe is infected and perished. 36

To whom the fall of mankinde is imputed. 36
The Serpent deceiued Eue, Eue deceiued Adam. 36
The beginning of sinne, generally is of the Diuell. 37
The first a that euer sinned vvas Eue, not onely beeing deceiued, but also deceiuing Adam. 37
The spreading abrode of sin is onely in Adam. 37.
The Diuell entised Eue, Eue entised Adam to sin, Adam sprede it abroade by propagation. 38.

To what purpose of God mankinde did fall in Adam. 38.
God knevve before that Adam should fall. 38.
The foreknovvledge of mans fall vvas iudged to some certayne purpose. 39
God could haue let the fall of Adam. 39.
God letted not the fall of Adã bicause he would not. 39
It was not vvithout cause that he vvould not. ibid:
It was for some good cause that he vvould not let it. 39
That god in respect vvhereof he permitted man to sinne, came vpon a purpose, and not by chaunce. ibid.

IX.

X.

That good must then needes be of Gods purpose and appointment. ibid.
To what purpose God suffred man to fall. ibid.
It vvas vvithout Gods fault that man sinned & lost man kinde. 40
What good that vvas, in respect vvhereof God dyd not let the fall of man. ibid.
Angels and men fell from their estate without cause. 40
The sinne of Angels resteth in Imitation, and doth not infect the vvhole order. 40
Mans sinne infecteth by Imitation and propagation the vvhole nature of man. ibid.
God concluded all vnder vnbeleefe, that he might haue mercy on all. ibid.
The saluation of man vvas not appointed according to his first estate, but according to the repairing & amending predestynated in Christ. 41

Of free will. 42

Man, before and after his fall hath affections to loue, hate vvill, and not to will. 42
Man hath in common vvith Angels and beasts to loue, hate vvill, and not to vvil. 42
Whether mans vvill bee free or bonde. ibid.
In this matter wee may not straie out to things of mans life, and conuersation. ibid.
In this matter vvee must remaine in this point and article of obedience vnto gods commaundementes. ibid.
Free vvil is to bee considered three waies. ibid.
When a man may chose vvhat he vvill do or not doe being bound to none. 24. 43.
When mans vvil is made free

XI.

to will as God vvilleth or contrary. 43.
When free powver to doe, is ioyned to free will. ibid.
Free vvill that is bounde to none, perteineth to god onely. ibid.
Will that is made free, is that a man may desire both good and euill. ibid.
This free vvill had our parentes before their fall. ibid.
Libertie of powver to do good according to the freedom of their will, vvas onely in the Angels and our parents before they fell. ibid.
Libertie both of vvill and of powver to will and do good vvas lost after the fall. 44.
Powver to vvill and doe euyll is left ouer to vs after the fall. ibid.
No euill person doth the euill vvhich hee doth against his vvill. ibid.
The bondage of Sathan doth not extinguish the free vvill in euill. 45.
In them vvhich be not yet regenerate, there is both free and bond vvill. ibid.
Whether carnall and fleshlie men haue any free vvill to do good. 46.
It can not be that an euill tree should bringe foorth good fruit. ibid.
The strength of our nature can doe nothing in good vvithout grace. ibid
Whether we haue any liberty of will to doe good. ibid.
In this matter vvee must put difference betvvixte good & euill, fleshly and spirituall. ibid.
We must neuer talke of free vvill without a double distinction. 47
Betvvixt man before the fall and man after the fall. ibid.

XII.

Betvvixt good men and euil, children of the vvorld, and children of Christes kingdome. ibid.
Euery man is both free and bound. ibid.
The euill man is bounde to sinne, free of vvill and ready to sinne. ibid.
The good man is bounde to goodnes, free of vvill applying himselfe to doe well. 48
The prouidence of god taketh not avvay free vvil from the euill nor from the good, though hee vvorke all in all. ibid.
Disputations of the necessitie of gods presence, and prouidence, destinie and happe, doe darken the truth in this matter. ibid.

Of Sinne. 48

Sinne is a diuers, manifolde, and cumbersome euill. ibid.
What sinne is. 49.
Euery man is perswaded that sinne displeaseth God, but euery man knoweth not what sinne is. ibid.
Two great mischiues come of the ignorance of sin. ibid.
Some fall into desperation, thincking that to be sinne which is no sinne. ibid
Some become careless, thinking that not to be sinne which is sinne. ibid.
Certayne definitions of sin. 49
Sinne is an acte straying from the end it is directed vnto. 49
Sinne is the breach of Gods lawe. ibid.
Sinne is an euill affection and voluntarie. 50
Sinne is a wil to obtaine that vvhich iustice doeth forbid ibid.
Sinne is the vvill turned from God, ibid.

XIII.

Sinne is the turning backe frō God. ibid.
In these diffinitions though there bee nothing that is false, yet they do not sufficiently declare what sin is. 50
To sinne is to mysse from the right marke. ibid.
What marke ought to bee considered in the diffinitiō of sinne. ibid.
The scope and marke in the diffinition of sinne is generall and speciall. 51
It is generall, touching God onely. ibid.
It is speciall, according to the diuersitie of person, and degrees of men. ibid.
The lawe of nature in the minde of man, and the outvvard lavve be testimonies of gods vvill. ibid.
Whatsoeuer is vvilled or desired contrary to the loue of God and our neighbour is sinne. ibid.
Wee must referre this diffinition to that vvill of god vvhereby he doth require vs to be obedient to him, not to his secrete vvill. ibid.
We must consider vvhat God doth require generally, and vvhat specially. ibid.

What is the beginning of sin and what the increase. 52

A double consideration of the beginning of sinne. ibid.
Originall sinne begon in Adam. ibid.
This is the fountain and roote of all our sinne. ibid.
Sinne beginneth in vs by our concupiscence. ibid.
A poysoned strength of concupiscence in vs, breedeth a kinde of sinne. ibid.
First there creepeth into our hartes temptation and suggestion. ibid
The temptation is infected

XIIII.

vvith a certaine delite. ibid.
There folovveth delite a consent of sinne. ibid.
This is a ful committed sinne before God, though it be not done outvvardly. 53
He that feareth GOD, doth vvatch to quēch these suggestions. ibid.
No man is able to auoide the first suggestiō of sinne. ibid.
The very delectation of sinne can not be eschevved in the conset, but by vvithstanding it. ibid.
Suggestion, delite and consent do finish vp sinne. ibid.
The light inclinatiō of minde is not to be taken for a perfect consent. ibid.
We may not giue sentence of a wauering mind, except it haue fullye consented. ibid.

What it is to sinne. 54

To sinne simply is to thinke, speake or doe any thing vnlavvfully. ibid.
All men doe sinne. ibid
Some sin of infirmitie of the flesh, some of malice. ibid.
The elect doe not committe sinne, though they do sometime sinne. ibid.
The vvicked doe both sinne and commit sinne. ibid.
Hovv this vvorde of dooing is taken. ibid.
To doe is not simply the outvvarde acte but the deuice purpose and malice of the hart. ibid.
When Christ sayde that thou doest, do quickly, Iudas supped, but his hart betraied his maister. ibid.
To do the lavve, is somtimes to purpose to do the lavv. 54
They that haue the seede of God in them doe abhorre sinne. 55
Some of the Anabaptistes say they are vvithout sinne, 56

XV.

Whether one sinne be greater than an other. 56

The stoickes say, that all sins be equall. ibid.
The stoicks thought it serued much to restraine sinne to thinke all to be equall. 57
The stoickes opinion vvas refuted in their time. ibid.
The stoickes opiniō doth increase and not restraine the leevdnes of euill doers 57
The inequaltie of sinne is to be considered two vvaies. 57
Sinne against God is greater than sinne against man. 58
Sinne hath his degrees whereby it becometh greater. ibid.
One sinne is more grieuous thā another by the circumstances thereof. ibid.
We must vse the consideratiō of the circumstaunce of sinnes about our own sins, but not about other mens. 59

Of the difference of venial and mortall Sinne. 59

The scholemē brought in this difference of venial and mortall sinne. 59.
They call mortall sinne that vvhich is committed against the commaundementes of GOD, of nature, and of man. ibid.
Veniall sinne they say, is done besides a lavve, but not contrary. ibid.
They say mortall sin is made veniall by confession. ibid.
They say veniall ought lesse to be punished than mortall sinne. ibid.
They say venial sinne hath an ende of punishment. ibid.
We saye the person that doth sinne, is more to be considered than the sinne it selfe 59.
The least sinne is worthy of

XVI.

eternall death. ibid.
If the persons bee electe and faithfull in Christ, the sin is not mortall but veniall. 60
The sinnes of the vnfaithfull bee mortall thoughe they seeme light. ibid.
The sinnes of the elect be veniall by the grace of redēption, but of the vnfaithfull not so. ibid.
Whether the faithfull maye vvithout daunger, liue according to the flesh. ibid.
They that dwell in the catholicke Churche of Rome thinke so. 61.
It can not bee saide that they that haue true faith shoote sinne so enormiously. ibid.
If the faithfull doe fall, they remaine not not delite therin. ibid
VVhether veniall sinne maye become mortall. ibid.
If he that hath once receiued heauenly grace fal from it, venial sinnes may become mortall. ibid.

Of sinne against the holye Spirite. 62

The Scholemen make sixe kindes of sinne against the holy spirite. 62.
The wordes of Christ concerning sinne against the holy Spirite. ibid.
The sinne against the holye Spirite conteineth blasphemy. ibid.
Euery sinne is not blasphemy, but euery blasphemy is sin. 62
The sinne against the holye spirite is cōmitted by slaunders and taunts. 62
The slaunderous reproch in lying vpon Christ vvas the sinne against the holy spirite. ibid.
Euery sinne against the holy

XVII.

Spirite is not condempned for irremissible. ibid.
There be two kindes of Blasphemers, one through ignoraunce, the other witting ly and vvillingly. 64.
Blasphemours of ignoraunce, must be praied for, and may be forgiuen. 64.
Blasphemours againste the knowledge of their owne consciences, do sinne vnto death, and may not be praied for. ibid.

Why blasphemie against the holy Spirite is not remitted. 64.

They which blaspheme the holy Spirite bee not forgiuen bicause they do not repent. ibid.

Of Lawes. 65.

What the lawe is. ibid.
The knowledge of the lavve is necessarye. ibid.
Wordes vvhereby the lavve is signified. ibid.
Lavve vvithout doctrine. ibid.
A lawe is equitie to be considered. ibid.
Two kindes of lavve, a generall and speciall. ibid.
Lex, is deriued of Lego, to reade. 66
The difinition of Lavve. ibid.
To vvhom and by vvhom lavve is to be giuen. 67
We neither vnderstande, nor loue true Iustice. 67.
The ordinaunces of the lavve vvherevnto vve be subiect, doe argue our baseues. ibid.
By vvhom the lavve ought to be giuen. ibid.
The Pope sayth, vvhere Maioritie is, there is powver to commaund. ibid.
God onely is the perfect lavve giuer. 68

XVIII.

Howe many kindes of lavve there be. ibid.
The lavve of nature. ibid.
What the lavve of nature is. 69
Difinition of the lavve of nature by Thomas of Aquin. 69
The exposition of the same disinition. ibid.
Wee must put difference betvvixt naturall affections and iudgementes of reason. ibid.
Affections some bee sounde, some corrupt. ibid.
Iudgmentes of reason, 70
Iudgments of Religion. 70.
Religion hath ben from the beginning. 70.
Iudgementes of the equitie of mans life. ibid.
The lavves of the gentils. 71.
The common and vulgare equitie in mens harts. ibid.
Howe it appeareth that the lavve of nature is giuen vs of God. 72.
Of the lavves giuen by GOD, not by vvritinge, but by worde. ibid.
Euery commaundement hath not the strengthe of a lavve. ibid.
The first lavve giuen to man of multiplication and dominion. 73
The first lavv hath three partes. 74
The lavve of paradise. 75.
The lavve of vvedlocke. 76.
The lavv of man and vvoman after sinne. 77.
The lavve of first birth. 78
The lavve of rhe restormente ginen after the floud, ibid.
The repetition of the fyrst lawe. ibid.
Of the lawe written. 79.
What the lavv vvritte is. ibid.
The diuisiō of the lavv vvritten. ibid.
Of the morall lavve. ibid.
What moral precepts be. ibid.

XIX.

The summe of the morall precepts. ibid.

Of the Decalogus and ten commaundementes. 80.

The preceptes bee called the ten vvordes. 80
This name Decalogus is cōprehēded in x. sentences. ibid.
Hovv the lavves of the Decalogus vvas first set forth. ibi.
These ten cōmaundementes vvere set forth after a most ernest & terrible vvay. ibid.
Nothing hindereth true godlinesse more, than not to haue a deuout opinion of Gods cōmaundemēts. ibid.
A double diuision of the Decalogus. 82
They vvere vvritten in tvvo tables of stone, to the cōmodite of the posteritie. ibid.
All vvas not vvritten in one table confusely. ibid.
Howve the second table is lyke vnto the first. ibid.
The first commaundement is higher than the other in degree, dignitie, and excellencie. ibid.
The seconde table is not equal with the first, but like in qualitie & conditiō. ibi.
They be like in qualitie, bycause in both is commaunded sincere loue. ibid.
In condition of the loue of the neighbour, is chiefe touching men, as the loue of God is chiefe in the first concerning Gods cōmaundementes. ibid.
The true loue of our neighbour dependeth vpon the loue of God. ibid.
To say that ordinary charitie beginneth of it self is true, if it be ment of Gods charitie els not. ibid.
Some deuide the preceptes of the firste table into three, and the seconde table in

XX.

to seuen, therby to exclude the commaundemente of grauen Images. 83
Augustine deuided the firste table into thre precepts, to allude to the Trinitie. 83
The rest of the olde fathers do not so. ibid.
It is very euill done to take avvay ye old deuisiō of the Decalogus which the Greekes & latinistes vsed. ibid.
Augustine in an other place is contrary to himselfe in this behalfe. 84
It is no reason that in this behalfe one man dysagreeing vvith himself, should be credited aboue al others ibi

The first commaundement. 85

Why this is ye first precept. 85
The first precept is the ground of true relygion. ibid.
In the first precept bee tvvo partes. ibid.
The meaning of this precept. ibid.
I am the existent, essence, or being of all. 86
He can not be true god, that is not Iehouah. ibid.
The vvordes of the first commaūdemēt agree vvith the mistery of the Trinitie. ibi.
He doth not simply say, I am the lorde God, but I am the lorde thy God. ibid.
The authoritie of the Lord and the dutie of the subiectes to obey, can not be separated. 87
He declareth that he is theyr Lord, in that hee brought them out of bondage. ibid.
What it is to bee any mans God. ibid.
To be a mans god is to be his creator, redeemer, and Sauiour. ibid.
In this precept the Israelite

XXI.

vvere admonished of their olde bondage. ibid.
He saith not vvhich succoreth thee in Egipt, although he did succour them. 88
This precept doth admonish that vve bee deliuered out of the house of bōdage. 88
He saith not out of bondage but out of the house of bondage. 89
Therein is declared the abuse of kynges houses. ibid
The fashion of the bondage of kinges. ibid
VVhy God did not multiply his people in the lande of Canaan. 89 90.
Whether god vvith fauour of the Egiptians multiplyd his people ther, or brought them avvay. 90
Hovv this parte of the precept may serue to vs. 90
There is a double bondage of sinne, & of Sathan. ibid.
Our estate & condition is other than the Ievves vvas in Egipt. 91
A man may sin three vvayes in vvorshipping god. ibid.
In worshipping false gods for the onely God. ibid.
When the true and only god is vvorshipped, but not rightly. ibid.
When the true and onely god is vvorshipped, but not alone. 92
This is a common faulte among the Papistes. 92
He saith not thou shalt haue no counterfaite gods but me, thou shalt haue no other gods before me, vvhat soeuer they be. ibid.
VVhy the Romains did not vvorship the God of Israell ibid.
VVhy god vvill be vvorshipped alone. 93
It is a vvrongfull matter to couple falthoode vvith

XXII.

truth. ibid.
The vnitie of the Godhead is not encreased but diminished thereby. ibid.
Gods omnipotencie hath no neede of aide. ibid.
He giueth more thā man can or dare aske ibid.
He can not abide ỹ his peple loue any other but him.ibi.
Why he did set this lavve in the beginning of the commaundements. ibid
Bicaute the principal of ỹ couenaūt standeth in faith.94
Bicause the people vver giue to serue other gods. ibid.
Bycause the people of Israell vvere vsed to Idolatrie in Egipt. ibid.
Against the worshipping of saintes. 94.
The saincts of the Christians succeeded the gods of the Gentiles. 94
The excuses of ỹ papistes. 95
They say they worship them not as gods. 95
They say they vvorship God in the Saincts ibid.
They say, they vvorship them not as Gods, but call vpon thē is intercessours. ibid
Whatsoeuer is loued or vvorshipped abeue God, is a counterfeite God. 96
The summe of this precepte is, vve must vvholy depend vpō God, as God doth giue himself wholy vnto vs. ibid.

The seconde commaundement. 96.

The seconde precept teacheth the first. 96
Images do serue to the worship of false Gods. 97
This precept hath three members. 97
Thou shalt make no grauen Image. ibid.
That Images ought not to be vvorshipped. 98
A dehortory reason containing both threatnings and promises. ibid
The exposition of the Hebrevvs vpō this precept. 99
Of vvhat kindes of Images this precept is so be vnderstanded. ibid.
Three opiniōs of Images. ibi.
Some say there may no Images be made in religion nor vvithout. ibid.
Some alovve thē in prophane matter, but not in Churches. ibid.
Some alovve them in Churches also, so that they bee not vvorshipped. idid.
This last opinion is to be reproued. 100
What harme cōmeth to the vnlearned by the vse of Images. ibid.
The sight of thē doth allure ỹ simple to worship thē ibi
The sight of them taketh away the consideration of god that we ought to haue in liuing creatures ibid.
They spende those thinges vvhich ought to bee giuen to the liuing. Images. 101
The place of Clemens, concerning Images. ibid.
Athanasius of Images. 102
The place of Epiphanius of Images. ibid.
What is to be gathered of the place of Epiphanius. ibid,
We ought to giue them no place in Christs church ibi.
It is against the auethority of Scriptures so to do. ibid.
All be generally vnlavvfull, both great and small. 103

XXIII.

They ought to be ridde out of the Church both by teaching and doing. 103
They ought to bee expulsed vvith an earnest zeale, ibid.
That Bishops ought to bevvare that no Images be erected in the Church. ibid.
That the vse of Images in Christes Church is scrupulous & superstitious. ibid.
Religion is obserued more chastely vvithout Images. 104.
There can bee no Religion, vvhere an Images is. ibid
The corruption of mans hart is declared in this precept. 105.
The vainnes of ỹ Ethnicks is declared in this precept. 105
The illusion of the olde serpent is declared in this precept. 106
Ther haue bene Christians that haue vvorshipped a serpēt in steed of Christ. 106
The mainteyners of Images are greatly to blame. ibid.
The expositions and excuses of Idolaters be represſed in this precept. 107
The excuse of them vvhich vvorshippe the Images of Saincts. 108
There kneeling & vvorshipping can not be excused. ibi
They ought to trēble at this vvorde, bovve not, &c. ibi.
They vvorship creatures. that do worship dead saincts 109
Of them which vvorshippe the Image of the father & the sonne. ibid.
The Image of God in the papistes Churches. 110
That God ought to be vvorshipped in spirite. 110
Of the Image of Christ. ibid.
It is not lavvfull to set vp any Image of Christ in the Church. ibid.

Hovv

XXIIII.

Hovv vvorship appertayneth to Christ. ibid.
Images quick and dead. ibid
If Images of God and Christ vvere to bee vvorshipped, the quick Images are more to be worshipped. 111
The tondenesse of the doctrine is declared by a simylitude of the husbande and vvife. ibid.
All vvorship and adoration pertaineth onely to God the Lorde. 112
God declareth in this precept what maner of god he is. 113
God is Ialouse. ibid.
Wee haue a God that loueth his people as a good husband his vvife. 114
Of vvhence this zeale of God commeth. 115
Gods zeale commeth of his loue, and his loue of hys vnspeakeable goodnesse. ibid.
The nature of zeale & emulation. ibid
Our God is not like other Gods. ibid
Let vs cleaue to God altogither, or els forsake him altogither. ibid
He calleth the vvorshipping of Images wickednes. 116
Hovv to visit the fathers wickednesse in thē childrē doth agree vvith Ezechiell. ibid.
It is spoken in both places, vpon children that folovve their fathers wickednes. 117
There is difference betvvixt the times of ignorance and of knovvledge. 117
They that say, let vs beleeue as our forfathers beleeued, shalbe punished both for their ovvne sinnes & their fathers. 118
Hovv the reuenge of God is extended vnto the thrid & fourth generation. ibid.

XXV.

The vengeaunce of God may be put of frō the children by amendement of life, and continuing in the same. 119
To serue Images is reputed to hate God. 119
They that so doe, bee their ovvne foes. ibid.
The mercy & goodnes of god exceedeth his Iustice. 120
God punisheth in the thirde & fourth generation, but hath mercy vpon thousāds. 121.
God is perfectly iust and infinitely good 121
Of true and false iustice ibid.
True Iustice hath a cōpassion vvithall, the false hath disdaine. ibi.
GOD is not lyke vnto ty raunites. 122
Tiraunites be easy to anger, & harde to do good. ibid.
The nature of loue in God, and in godly men. ibid.
Bycause god loueth vs, he desireth to be loued againe of vs. ibid.
There groweth no cōmodity vnto God of our loue. ibid.
True loue doth good to them that loue one an other. ibi.
Wee declare our loue in keeping gods commaundementes. 123.
Differēce betvvixt the loue of the father & of the son. 123
The father loueth in giuing cōmaundements, the sonne in keeping them. ibid.
Loue & keeping the cōmaūdementes are ioyned togyther. ibid.
He saith not, them that loue and serue mee, but them that leue me & keepe my commaundementes. ibid
This precept is againste vvilvvorship. ibid.
The true worship is the endeuour to acōplish his wil. 123

XXVI.

Whither euery thing do please God vvhich is vvell ment to his seruice. 124
He sayth not fulfil, but keepe his commaundements 124
To keepe gods commaundement, is hartely to leue & keepe them in minde. 125
The keeping of gods cōmaūdement doth not exclude the fulfilling of them. 125
This precept is against the teachers of Merites. 125
He saith not yelding all dette and due, but doing mercy to thousands. 125
The loue of god in keepinge the cōmaundements is not against the iustifying of fayth. 125
The vvordes of the lavve doe not vveaken the preceptes of grace. 125
Loue commeth of fayth, and not fayth of loue. 126

The thirde commaundement. 126.

What is required by this third precept. 126
Two parts of this precept. 126
What it is to take the name of god in vaine. 126
This precept requireth the sanctifiyng of gods name after the maner of forbiddinge the vnhallovvinge thereof. 126
All Nations are accustomed to sveare. 127
The causes of forbiddings in the lavve, are to be considered. 127
Of the reuerence and deuout vsing of gods name. 128
He saith not, take not my name, but take not the name of the Lorde the God in vayne. 128
He vvil haue the people to regard & vse holily gods name, d.ij. bycause

XXVIII.

bycause hee is their Lorde God. 128
Magistrates ought to keepe the people in subiectiō,not as to theselues, but to gods ordinaunces. 128
Parentes shoulde demaunde the obediēce of their children also in Gods name and behalfe, 128
The husbande likewyse of his wyfe to be subiecte vnto him in gods name and behalfe. 128
It is much to be regarded, in what respecte men doe worship God. 129
He that worshippeth GOD onely bycause God is almighty,would do it to any other,if he were so perswaded of any other. 129
We must loue and serue god onely,bycause he is god,& Lorde. 129
He saith not,Thou shalt not take nor vse the name of God,but he saith, take it not in vaine. 129
God cōmaunded vs to swere by his name. 129
Hee sayth not, Take not the name of thy God maliciously. 129
The smaller sinnes be forbidden, that wee should abstaine from the greater.130
How the name of God is abused much. 130
Of the abuse of Gods name. 130.
The name of god is abused in setting it vpon the Popes Bulles. 130
False Byshoppes abuse Gods name to maintaine theyr authoritie. 131
They abuse Gods name in calling cōsels to maintain the popes affaires. 131.132.
The name of God is abused in Rings and badges. 132

XXIX.

The name of god is defiled in magical inchaūtemēts.132
The name of God is abused, in vsing it to cōmonly for euery tryfle. 133
They abuse the name of god which sing & praye with their lippes onely for gaine & for the bellyes sake. 133.
The name of God is misused also in our euil example of liuing in the sight of the Heathen. 133
It was obiected to Dauid that he gaue the enemies of God an occasion to blaspheme the lords name.133
The name of God is contemned whē it is neglected.133
The gospellers do now more misuse the vertue of the gospel, than they did in tymes past the popish ceremonies. 133.134.
The suffering of the blaspheming of gods name,is helping to the contempt of Gods name. 134
The name of god is contēned whē vnworthy mē be apointed to holy ministeries. 134
The neme of God is abused by simonicall priestes. 134
Euill teachers abuse Gods name. 134
Flatteres of great men and dispisers of the poore,abuse gods name. 154
He that setteth an vnlearned in a learned mans place, abuseth gods name. 134
They that go two waies seeking earthly gains in godly matters abuse gods name. 134
He that accepteth a vitious man in stede of a good mā doth contēn gods name.135
The precept & the threaten beioyned togither very aptly. 135
If our nature were not corrupt, we should not abuse gods name. 135

XXX.

The familiaritie of the couenaunt, breedeth contempt throughout our corrupte nature. 135
If we lacke the partaking of the misteries, we bee gods enemies, if we haue the cōmunion of them,we vainly abuse them. 136
For the securitie sake, it is threatened that god will not holde him guiltles, that taketh his name in vaine. 137
The differēce of the thretning of the precept going before & of this third precept.137
The qualitie of the threatning. 137
It determineth no certaine paine. 138
In how great earnest this precept is set foorth. 138
What is to be looked for,for the abuse of Gods name in our time. 138
Whither no man can escape this threatning, that hath at any time abuse gods name. 138
Threatninges either temporarie or eternall, haue onely respect to the impenitent. 139
The fourth precept.139
In what sort this precept is nexte adoyned vnto the three that go before. 139
Why this precept was giuen, 139
The true inward loue, needeth outward exercise. 140
The disposition of this precept. 140
He declareth what he commaundeth. 140
It specifieth and appointeth the daye. 140
It expoundeth the halowing & sanctifiing not fully. 140

XXXI.

The first parte of this halowing is exercise of religiō & rest from vvordly labours 140.
The cause of this precept is the example of God hymselfe. 140

The consideration of this precept of the sabboth. 141.
The sabboth is three waies to be considered. 141
The lavvish sabboth. 141
Two vses of the lavvish sabboth. 141
Our fayth is exercised in the sabboth daye. 141
Charitie must be exercised in the sabboth day. 142
Thinges to be preserued in the letter of this precept. 142
It prescribeth not onely Ceremonies, but the tyme to vse Ceremonies. 142
It sayth remember thou keep holy &c. 143
The keeping of Gods commaundemēts, doth require a mind ỳ doth remēber.143
It sayth remember thou hallovve.&c. 143
The sortes of hallovving the Sabboth. 143
It belongeth to God to sanctifie. 143
We can not sāctifie that god doth not sanctifie 144
God sanctified the sabboth first. 144
Baptisme & the Lordes Supper be first instituted and sanctified of the lord. 144
He saith not remember thou sanctifie the sabboth, but the day of the sabboth.144
Men ought to be holily occupied vpō the holy day. 144
The regard of daies is to be taken out of the lords appoyntement onely. 144.
Of the sixe dayes of vverk.144
Why there is made mention of sixt dayes. 144
In this matter of sixe dayes, there is a double meaning 145.
To the precept contayninge two partes, is added an occasion and reason of two partes. 145
The laboure of sixe dayes, is agreeing to the Primitiue lavv giuen to Adam. 145
God vvrought sixe daies him selfe in creating. 145
Gods will is not that man after the fall shoulde haue the libertie of Idlenes, 145
Gods minde in this precept is to consecrate as vvell the vvorke as the rest. 145
Sixe dayes vvere employed to vvorke, and but one to rest. 145
God thought it more profitable for the people to giue themselues more to vvorke then to rest. 145
The number of holy dayes is thartefull. 146
We must doe our owne vvorkes, & not other mens 146
We must not take vpon vs to do that pertaineth to God but ỳ vve ought to do.146
He saith not thy sabboth,but the sabboth of the Lorde. 146.
Wee maye not sanctifie it to our affections, but to the name & glory of God,147
To seeke our owne fleshely rest,is a prophanatiō of the Sabboth. 147
No holy dayes are to bee appoynted vnto the names or memories of sainēts.147
Thinges that may hinder the sanctifiyng, are forbidden in this precept. 148
The sanctifiyng of the sabboth, requireth a vvhole minde,& not an halfe.148
What hinderaunces or lettes of sanctifiing forbidden.149
There be tvvo kind of vvorks of men,one lavvfull,an other vnlavvfull. 149
Necessary cares and vvorkes, must be set aparte. 149
This lavve doth not agree vvith Idle bodies. 150
In matters of religion, there is no difference, betvvixt the good man of the house and the housholde. 150
The povver of the superiour is not preiudiciall vnto religion. 150
Why the rest of the Sabboth vvas commaunded them cōcerning their Cattel.151
Of that that straūgers had sōe place amōgst gods peple.151
Straungers must frame themselues to the lawes of ỳ coūtrey vvhere they dvvell.152
Straungers ought not to bee cōpelled to Religion that is straunge vnto them. 152
God doth not onely in thys precept cōmaund his auctoritie, but also prouoke by the exāple of his doing.152
That man is disobedient & vnnaturall, vvhich neither obeieth gods commaundemēntes nor folovveth his example. 153
How vve shall conforme our selues vnto the example of God. 154
All the vvorks of God be not alleaged in this precept,but the vvorks of creation.154
Why ỳ faith of ỳ ceratiō was set forth to the Israelits.154
VVhat folovveth of the faith of the creation. 155
That the creatiō of heauē & earth,is the vvorke of the true onely God. 155
That all thinges pertaine vnto god their creator. 255
VVe lyue & dvvel not in our ovvn,but in ỳ belōgeth to an other. 155.

XXXIIII.

Wee haue but the vse of all thinges, that we haue graũted for a time. 156
Whervnto the vse of proprietie ought to be referred 156
Al thing that we haue, be proper vnto vs in respecte of other men, but not in respecte of God. 156.
Therfore vve must liue in the faith and seruice of our creator. 156
God rested from his vvorkes the seuenth day. 156
God pansed or staied not, but ceased & lefte quite of. 156
Some reste is commendable, some not. 156
Reste vpon vvorke finished, is cõmendable, els not. 156
What the halovving of the seuenth day signifieth. 157
The spirituall sabboth is, vvhē the doings of the old man be buried. 157
The vvorkes of the olde man are deuided. 157
The vnderstanding of the old man, doth hinder the Spirituall Sabboth, 157
The affections of the olde man, are the corrupte desires of the flesshe. 157
The spirirual Sabboth belongeth not to carnal men. 157
The Spirituall Sabboth is not bounde to any time. 158
The heauenly Sabboth is, vvhen vve reste both body and minde. 158
The heauenly Sabboth shall take avvaye all cares and troubles. 158
The heauenly Sabboth is perfect and euerlasting 158
The lawisshe Sabboth coulde not be euerlasting. 158
The Spirituall Sabboth is not perfecte in this lyfe. 159
The like reason there is of Sacramentes as of the Sabboth. 159
Ther be three degrees of Sacramentes, and of the Sabboth also. 160
A grosse outvvard & elementary degree. 160
An invvarde and spiritual degree. 160
Degree of perfection & consummation, vvhich onely shall abide euer. 160
Of the abrogatiõ of the lavvisshe Sabboth. 160
The errour of the sabbataries is refuted. 160
The obseruation of the lavvisshe Sabboth, doth not concerne the Gentiles. 160
That the Decalogus doth pertaine to the Israelites onely, in that it is cõmaunded vvith the lavve. 161
The Decalogus pertaineth to the Gentiles, in so much as it agreeth vvith the lavv of nature. 161
In this respect wee ought not to refuse the Sabboth. 162

The seconde Table of the Decalogus. 163

The fyfth precept. 163.

The diuisiõ of this Precpt. 163
It commaundeth vvhat is to be done. 163
It admonisheth of the profite and benefit of the keeping thereof. 163
Which the Lorde thy God shall giue thee. 163
Thinges to bee obserued in that he saith, Honour thy Father and Mother. 164
True religiõ doth not so worship God, that it doth neglecte men. 164
What kinde of men bee set forth vnto vs to keep righ tuousnes vnto. 164

XXXV.

759

XXXVI.

The first table appointeth to vs God, the second to men aliue & not to dead mē. 165
VVhom he appointed to bee honoured, 165.
VVe must keepe the differēce of the estates of mankinde. 165
This precept speaketh absolutely of parentes, not of magistrates. 165
Parentes bee to be honoured next after God. 165
Vnto parentes is appointed not the chiefe, but the seconde honoure. 166
The vvordes of honouring is to be considered. 166
VVhat it is to honour the Parentes. 167
This commaundement is to honour not onely the father, but the mother also. 167
Ther is no estate nor conditiõ of the parentes added. 168
Whatsoeuer thy parentes be, they be to be honored 168
What it needed to cõmaund by lavve, the children to honour their parents. 168
Of the transgressours of this precept. 169
Of them that be the occasion that this precept is not obserued. 169
Of our popishe Pharisies and Hipocrites. 169
They teach men to runne into Abbeis against their parentes vvill. 170
They tech their shaueligs not to releeue their parētes. 170
They that maintaine mariages to bee good, againste their parentes vvill. 170
They teach childrē, that mony bestowed on diriges &c. do profite their parentes, vvhen they be dead. 170
This precept is much broken by the parents thēselues. 170

XXXVII

By their euil exāple of life. 170
By cockering them and bearing with their faultes. 170
By ouer much feuertie. 170
The parentes must not with cruelnesse make bytter the harts of their children 170
What children muste doe, if their parēts be culpable. 171
Counsell in this matter for good children. 171
Of them vvhich honour not their parentes, there bee three sortes. 172
Some reuerence their parents outwardly, and dispise thē invvardly. 172
Some behaue thēselfe naughtily to their parēts both in vvorde and deede. 172
Some behaue themselues wel, saue when they offende. 172
Thinges to be obserued in that he saith, that Thou maiste liue long in the lande which the Lorde thy God shall giue thee. 173
There vvas promisse added to this precept. 173
The qualitie of this promisse. 173
The Apostle doth also set forth this earthly promisse vnto Christian men. 174
The equitie of this promisse, 174
What good it is, if a man liue long in the earth. 175
If it bee good of it selfe to lyue it is also good to liue long. 175
It is not therfore euil to liue here, bicause it is better to liue in heauen. 175
Whether, to dye sone be alvvaies a token of the anger of God. 176
No man is to be euill reported off, for ouer timely dying. 176
The lande is the Lordes to giue where he please. 176

XXXVIII.

Dvvelling in the lande, requireth the keeping of the cõmaundementes. 177
The vvicked be turned out of the lande tvvo waies. 177
By pestilence or by punishement by the Magistrate. 177
By captiuitie and expulse out of the coũtrie by foren Nations. 177

The sixte precept. 177.

Manslaughter is forbiden. 178

Thinges to be considered in this Precept. 178.

Howe this precept is ioyned vnto that vvhich goeth before 178
As the instrumentes of thys lyfe be to be reuerenced, so this life is to be preserued vvithout harme. 178
Two states of mans lyfe of them that do beget, and of them that be begotten. 178
Without specifiing of person, manner or number, it is said, Thou shalt not kil. 178
No mā hath powver to kil or destroye, but to edifie, 178
There is no vvaie specified vvhereby to kill. 179
This lavve is uot restrained to any number. 180
Howe great the corruption of mans nature is. 180
He saith not, be uot angry, but kill not. 180
This lavve vvas giuen to the people of god and the circumcised. 181
VVe muste consider and beholde in the lavve as in a glasse, what vve be. 181

Howe men doe sinne against this lawe. 181.

Murder is three vvaies committed, in thought, word, and deede. 181

XXXIX.

No man may kill an nother, vvithout lawfull authority 182
No man may kil himselfe. 182
Impacience of misery, causeth men to kill thēselues. 182
The detesting & flying from the wickednesse of others causeth men to kill themselues. 182
Vehement repentaunce of a mans ovvne sinne, causeth it also. 182
Desire of life to come causeth the same. 182
Desire vf vaine glory, causeth the same. 183
Of Samson who killed hiselfe to the end he might be reueged vpō Gods enemies. 183
Lavvfull manslaughter, and without offence. 184
The Magistrate & his sword be directed to one mark. 184
The magistrate & his sword do god seruice, punishing the giltie, 184
The Magistrat may not abuse his svvorde. 185
The authoritie of the Magistate is nothinge vvorthe vvhen he taketh vpon him to do any thing vnlavvfully. 185
The rightnesse of the iustice, is to be iudged according to the auctlioritie of Gods vvil. 185
Of the writ of gods sētēce. 186
The offences against the first table vvere punished by death. 186
Offences punishable by the death of the secōd table. 186
Men sinne as vvell in not killing, as in killing. 186
Of murder committed by any man vnavvares. 187
Casual murder or by chaunce medlay. 187
Casuall murder by drinks & purgatiõs giuē to womē. 188

LX.

Casual murder by surfettes & ryot. 188
Casuall murder in defence of a mans selfe. 188
Two sorts of defensory murders. 188
The murder of Moises. 189

Of them which though not in act, yet in worde become murderers. 189

There is manslaughter committed in vvorde also. 189
Manslaughter is committed in vvorde fiue manner of vvayes. 190
By persvvasiõ & coũsell. 190
By cõmaundement secrete or manifest, to kill innocente bloud. 190
By sentences and iudgement against innocẽtes, vnder pretence of office. 190
The fathers and iudges of coũsels be guilty in that. 191
The assistence of such iudges be giltie in that. 191
By treason the innocẽt is delyuered. 191
Traitors be cõmõli hated. 191
Treason is liked sometime, but not the traitor. 191
By false vvitnesse mẽ become guyltie of murder. 191
The vsers of Ievvish cõuenticles, vvill not be acknovvledged thereof. 192
Of them that bee murderers in harte. 192
The murder of the hearte, commeth of the corrupte nature. 192
Enuy & hate do breed a purpose & mind to kill. 192
Enuy and hate cause men to delit in murder conceiued. 193
Gods lavv cõdẽneth the malice of the hart, saying: kill not. 193
Carelesnes is daũgerous. 193

LXI.

The murder of the harte is more dangerous, than that of the facte. 193

The seuẽth precept. 194.

A cõsideratiõ of vvedlock. 194
Pureness of lyfe is required in this precept. 194
The faith of vvedlock muste be kepte. 194
VVedlock is the fountaine of mans lyfe. 194
This precept defendeth not vvhordome. 194

Things to be considered in this precept. 195.

VVhat adulterie is. 195
Adultery is the stayning of the faith of vvedlock. 196
Horv great care god hath of vvedlock. 196
Contemners and defilers of Matrymony, are not vvorthy to be men. 196
No excepting of any man is specified in this precept. 196
The corruption of our flesshe, is to be noted in this precept. 197
This precept vvas giuẽ to the circumcised people. 198

Of the transgressions of this lawe 199.

We must iudge of the transgression of the lavv, according to the minde of the lavv giuer. 199
Men do sin by vvorke, words, signes, & in harte. 199
Ther is great difference vvith vvhom, and hovve a man sinne. 199
VVith them that be marryed. 199
VVith affinitie. 199
VVith a Virgine 200
VVyth violence and rauishment. 200
The sole man vvith the sole vvoman. 200
Against nature. 200
Adulteries cõmitted by signes and vvordes. 200
Not onely the act, but the vvil and endeuour of adultery is forbidden. 201
The concupisẽce of adultery, in the harte, is adultery before God. 202
Ther is difference to be made betvvixt the iudgement of God and of man. 202
The qualytie of the harte, is the qualitie of man before God. 202

The causes of Adultery and of all kinde of vncleanesse. 202.

It is the part of vvise men and of them that earnestly seeke for the remedy of euill, to search out the causes of the euils. 202
The first cause is the vniuersal corruptiõ of the flesh. 202
The secondary causes, be fillyng of the belly vvith delicate meate & drinke 203
The hart is prouoked by sight hearyng, feeling, and filthy reading. 203
Not punyshing of licentious lyuers. 204
Opportunitie and occasion is the cause of adulterie and vncleannesse. 204

Of the greeuousnesse of whordome and adultery. 204.

Generall greeuousnesse. 205
Speciall greeuousnesse. 205
To offende against the tables of the couenaunt. 205
The greeuousnesse of sinne is to be considered by the circumstaunces. 205

LXIII.

Of the euill that commeth of whoredome and adultry. 206

The euill that is cõmon vnto all sin, excluding mẽ out of the kingdome of God. 206
The fountaine of our nature is defiled thereby. 206
Publike honestly is destained. 206.
They sinne towvardes their ovvne bodies. 206
It maketh men blinde & void of vnderstanding. 207
It grafteth a continuall desire of sinne in men. 207
It maketh a man vaine & vnprofitable. 207
It bringeth men into greate daungers. 207
It vvrappeth tvvo at once in sinne. 208
It doth much harme, peculiarly to Christian men 208

Of the punishment of forbidden lustes, whoredome, deflowring, incest, rauishment, adultry, Sodomie and beastlesse medling. 209

VVe must not heare the Precepts, but also feare the penalties. 209
Two kyndes of Penaltie for sinne. 209
Penalties not cõprehended in lavves, but sent by god 210
Penalties of adulteries comprehended in lavves. 210
Christian Princes haue vvakened the lavves of adulterers. 210
Of the penaltie of incest 211
Penalty of deflourers of maidens, 211
Penaltie of rauishers. 211
Penaltie of them that sinne against nature. 211
The seuerite of the penaltye must bee tated after the enormitie of the sinne. 211

LXIIII.

The sea of Rome spareth vvhormongers, adulterers, and Sodomites. 211

The eight precept. 212

The disposition of this precept. 212
This precept forbiddeth not onely stealing of goodes, but also deceiuing. 212

How many kindes of stealing there be. 213

Ther be two kindes of theft, simple theft and sacrilege. 213
It is theft vvhen a man is craftely or maliciously deceyued. 213
Bishops are theeues of the Church goodes. 213
Robbers of vviddovves, houses vnder pretence of long prayer. 214
They that goe not in at the dore, but clime some other vvay, are theeues. 214
Theues of the name & vvord of God. 214
Theeues in vvorldly matters. 215

From whence the desire of stealing commeth. 215

The sin of theft hath a sprig, vaines and a course. 215
The hart is the fountayne of theft. 215
The vaines of theft bee incredulitie, falsehead, and auarice 215
Carelesnesse, ryot, and beggery, make the course of theefte. 215
Opportunitie & occasion entiseth to theefte to steale. 215
Against calculors that do ascribe the necessitie of stealing to the starres. 216

LXV.

How grieuous a sinne theft is. 217

The transgression of Gods precept is grieuous. 217
Some theft is grieuouser than another. 217
Scriptures that doe extenuate the sinne of theft. 217

Whether that euery theefe be culpable to sinne. 217

Thinges rehearsed in the ten commaundementes be of two sortes. 218
The first perteine to abolish the seruing of false Gods, and be alvvayes diuelly to be kept. 218
The other may by some occasions lavvefully bee broken. 218
The keeping of the sabboth, may in certayne cases bee omitted. 218
The honour of the parents, is remitted in respect of Christ and his vvorde. 219
Killing may lavvefully bee done in some respectes. 219
Theft may be done by obedience to Gods vvord sometime of righteousnes & of industry. 219
Theefe of obedience vvas done by the Israelites. 219
Theft of Iustice, to conueye or steale the innocent out of a tyrauntes hande. 219
Theft of industry 219
Theft of vvarenesse. 219
Theft of diligence. 219
All kyndes of theeftes are not to be condemned. 220

Wherfore the lord did not rather forbid violence, robbery, and depredation than theft. 220

Difference betvvixt theft and robbery. 220
Theefte is done vnknovving

LXVI.

to the owner. 220
Extortion and robberie, be done with violence, the owner knowing of it. 220
The offence of theft is more generall thā of robbery. 220
Robbery is more manifest thā theft. 221
Men doe withstand robberies more than theft. 221
Where the lesser sinne is forbidden, it followeth, that the greater is forbidden. 221

How many manner of waies a man is partaker of theft. 221.

By beeing accessary. 221
By bidding or commaunding 222.
By counsaile. 222
By consent. 222
By beeing with theeues praising their dooing. 222
By concelement. 222
By partaking of the thing that is stolen. 222
There be foure manner of partakings. 222
By sufferaunce, not hindering the theft though he can. 223
By silence knowing where stolen gere is, and saying nothing. 223

Of the punishment and correction of theft. 223.

Reformation and correction by lawe. 223
Of the hanging of theues. 224
Thinges stolen are snatched vp by the Princes. 224
Of the ecclesiasticall correction. 224
Restoring of the thinges stolen. 224
The things stolen are restored to the owner. 225
An exāple of a certaine young man at Ausburge. 226
If the stolen thinges can not

LXVII.

safely nor honestly bee restored. 226

The ninth precept. 227

The meaning of this precept. 227
What a witnesse is, and what the vse of it is. 227
Whatsoeuer good or euill is constātly reported, is a witnesse. 227
We haue more vse of faith than of knowledge. 227

How many kindes of witnesses there be. 228

Two kindes of mens testimonies. 228
Testimonies in open courtes, be done alwaies by othes. 228
Testimonies out of the courtes. 228

We be not forbidden to beare witnesse. 229.

No man must stande to much vpon his owne knowledge in witnessing. 229
No man must vnaduisedly receiue any mans iudgement 229

We be not forbidden to beare witnesse against our neighbours. 229.

How a man may beare witnes against his neighbour not breaking charitie. 230
How wee must loue our neighbour. 230
How without breach of charitie a man may beare witnesse against his neighbours. 230

How many waies false witnes is borne. 231
Euery vntruth is false wyt-

LXVIII.

nesse. 231
False witnesse is borne sometimes of ignoraūce, sometime wittingly. 231
Some lye to helpe their neighbour. 231
Some lye of purpose to doe hurt. 231
Some tell pleasaunt lyes. 231
Some beare false witnesse in iudgement. 231

Of what witnesse this lawe of the ten commaundements doth speake. 232

It speaketh of the testimonies of the open court. 232
It is not amisse to take it generally. 232
The false witnesse in the opē court is more daungerous than others. 232

What it needed to forbid, that false witnesse should not be borne against a mans neighbour. 233

This precepte seemeth to be superfluous, bicause the lawe of nature inferreth the same. 233
The generall cause of the hole Decalogus. 233
The speciall cause is, bicause euery man is a lyer. 233
We knowing the better doe the worse. 234
The lawe of the Decalogus was sent to ratifie the lawe of nature. 234
If we beare false witnesse against our neighbours, how much more will we doe it to straungers. 234

Of the euill that commeth of false witnesse. 234

Generally it coupleth vs to the diuell. 234
It excludeth vs frō the mount

LXIX.

of God. 234
It doth defile our tongue. 234
It taketh awaye faith and credite. 235
It is encreased by circumstances. 235
A christian man that lyeth, shameth the name of Christian men. 235
He that lyeth vnto God hurteth his seule more than to lye to man. 235
He that maketh a lye of God is a false teacher. 235
There be two kindes of flattery. 235
The one seeketh his owne commoditie, the other the destruction of him that is deceiued. 236
The one is vsed in great mens howses, the other is dyuelish. 236
The euill of backbiting. 237
Backbiting hath flattery to be his companion. 237
Backbiting marreth or hurteth three persons. 237
Backbiting hurteth him that is absent. 237
It hurteth the neighbours good name and life. 238
It doth most harme whē it is brought into princes eares. 238
What the scriptures do attribute to a backebitinge tongue. 238
The euill of false witnesse is great and diuers. 238
It abuseth God himselfe 238
It defileth the name of God. 238
It corrupteth and ouerthroweth the iudgementes of men. 238
It casteth the innocent into extreme daunger. 239
Of cruell inquisition or examination. 239
Of the penaltie and reuenge of false witnesse. 239

LXX.

The reuenge of God declared by no lawe. 239
The reuenge of man establysshed by Gods lawe. 240

The tenth precept 242

Howe this precept is ioyned vnto thē that go before. 241

What concupisence is. 242

The strength of concupiscēce 242
The contrary vnto concupisence. 243
The nature of cōcupiscēce. 243

How many sortes of concupiscences there be. 243

Concupisence before sin. 243
The affectes of concupisence are of two sortes. 243
From whence the corruption of our concupisence is. 243
We must consider the woorkes of God, and the woorkes of Sathan in vs. 244
The cause of naturall affections in vs. 244
To desire nothing belongeth to the deade, not to the quicke. 244

What kinde of Concupiscence is forbidden. 245

Concupiscence of the Spirite is not forbidden. 245
Naturall concupiscence is not forbidden. 245
The concupiscence of the corrupt flesh is forbidden. 245

Of the motion of naughty Concupiscence. 246

By what meanes the naughty concupiscēce is moued. 246
Concupiscence ioyneth it selfe to our naturall senses. 246
Concupiscence is stirred by

LXXI.

thought onely. 246
The lothsomenesse of honest and lawefull thinges doth moue vs to euill concupiscences. 246

Of the naughtinesse and malice of inordinate desire. 247

Euill concupiscence is placed within the affections of our hartes. 247
Concupiscence is minister of sinne. 247
Concupiscence blindeth. 248
Concupiscēce doth choke the worde of God in the harts 248
Concupiscence doth prouoke the man altogether to sinne. 248
Concupiscence doth torment the hart. 248
Concupiscence is rather stirred vp by the lawes of iustice than restrained. 249

In what accompt Concupiscence is before God. 249

How Concupiscence alone is sin, in the sight of god. 249
If the desire is before God as the fact what auaileth it to abstein frō the fact. 250

What things are to be considered in the word of this Precept. 251

Of the diuision of the Decalogus. 251
The lawe maker applied him selfe to the qualitie of his people. 252
God doth astribe his good things vnto vs. 252
The proprietie of thinges is cōfirmed by this precept. 253
In that he saith not, thou shalt not couet any mans house, but thou shalt not couet thy neighbours house. 253

LXXII.

Neighbours ought to be loued for tvvo respectes. 253
He maketh no difference betvvixt neighboures. 254
He maketh no difference betvvixt our estates. 254
Whether ignorannce doe excuse vs in desiring an other mans goodes. 255
Of the cocupisence of a woman not knovven. 255
VVhether that vve may bury that thing vvhich vice can not couer. 256
We must cõsider that he saith or any thing that is not thine. 257
The eies bee the ministers of Concupisence. 258
We must chasten all the vnlavvfull concupisence. 258

The conclusion of the Decalogus. 259

The order of these ten Precepes. 259
Of the addition or enlargement of the morall precepes. 260
The lavve vvritten is deuided into morall, iudiciall and ceremoniall. 260
Some precepes of this addition concerne religion. 260
These precepts concerne Religion, vvhich doth forbid soothsaying, vvitchcrafte &c. 260
Some concerne sanctifying of life. 260
Some concerne the loue of our neighbours. 261
Some concerne the vsinge of the earthe o' the earth. 261
Some concerne our vsing of thinges growing vpon the earth. 264
Of the Iudiciall precepts. 262
What Iudiciall precepts be. 262
The diuision of the Iudiciall precepes. 263

LXXIII.

The causes of the iudiciall precepes. 264

Of the Ceremoniall precepts of the olde Testament. 265

Some ceremonies bee personal, some tabernaculer. 265
Some concerne sacrifices and oblations. 265
Some doe concerne purifying 266
Some doe pertaine to clensing. 266
Some doe pertaine to sãctyfiing. 266
Some bee of times, some of garmẽts, some of meats. 266
Some be sacramentall. 266
Why God prescribed so many ceremonies vnto his people. 266

The vse of Moises lavve. 267

The vse of morall precepes. 267
It teacheth ꝑ vvill of god. 267
It teacherh vvhat vve be, and vvhat vve ought to be. 267
The vse of the Iudiciall preceptes 267
The vse of the ceremoniall preceptes. 268

The strength and efficacie of the lavve. 268

It is one thing to be good; & an other thing to make a man good. 269
Of the vveakenesse & vnablenesse of the lavve. 269
The lavve is spirituall. 269
The lavve is compared to a chast maiden liuing chast in the middest of a stevvs. 269
Hovve the Gospell is also vveake. 270
The Gospell is the vertue of God vnto saluation. 270
The gospell consisteth of the spirite, not of the letter. 270
The efficacie of the lavve is double. 271

LXXIIII.

The lavve reproueth & condemneth sinne. 271
The lavv bringeth home trãsgression. 271
The lavve stirreth vp sin. 272
The lavve vvorketh anger & death. 272
Against them that say it had ben better that no lavv had bene giuen. 272

What it is to fulfill the law. 273

The lavve is fulfilled vvhen the figures and promises be fulfilled in Christ. 273
The lavv is fuifilled by teaching and liuing. 274
In the lavve must bee had respect of times. 174
In the law is to be considered ꝑ determinatiõ of place. 274
The lavve must be fulfilled in all the preceptes. 275
The lavv must be fulfilled not onely in worke, but in hart also. 275
Who can then fulfill the lavve. 275
None euer fulfilled the lavve perfectly but Christ alone. 275

Of the lawe of the Spirite. 275

What the lavve of the spirite is. 376
The lavve of perfect lyberty. 277
The lavve of nature beeing vvritten in vs by Gods finger, vvhat needed the lavve of the spirite. 277
VVherein the lavve of nature lacketh. 277
Of the abrogation of the lawe of Moises. 278
The lavve of Moises abrogated in deede. 278
It vvas prophesied before, the lavv of Moises shoulde be abrogated. 278
The abrogatiõ of ꝑ lavv must come by the comming of Messias, 279
Whether the vvhole lavve of Moises be abrogated. 281
The partes of the lavve abrogated. 281
Whether the Decalogus bee abrogated. 281
Why the Decalogus is parcell of the Christian Cathechisme. 283

Of the couenant & Testament of God. 283

The Scripture doth call it a leage, couenant, and Testament. 283
It is a vvonderfull thing that god made a couenant with man. 284
The cause of Gods couenant. 284
The couenant of GOD is of tvvo sortes, generall and speciall. 284
The general couenãt is to the vvhole earth, and all that is in it. 284
The special couenant is to the faithfull and the elect. 285
VVhy it is called speciall. 285
VVhy Abrahams name vvas chaunged vvhen the couenant vvas giuen. 285
The Ievves haue respecte to Abram rather than to Abraham. 286
It is called the euerlasting couenant 286
Tvvo partes of perpetuitie of this couenant. 287
The chiefe pointes of this couenant. 587
The pointes or capitulations of Gods couenantes, bee euerlasting. 288
The grace of the couenant of God, is not determined by death. 288
A three folde eternitie of the couenant of God. 288

LXXV

The second chiefe pointe of the couenant. 288
To vvalke before God. 288
Some obiecte of the Godlye men that liued before Abrahams time. 289
Some obiect of the thinges annexed to the couenant. 289
VVe must put difference betvvixt the substãcial ponits and the accessary pointes of the couenant. 290
Some do obiect the couenant of Moises, and of the nevve Testament. 290
Ther be three principal times of the vvorlde, and three principall persons in those times. 291
A nevve couenant requireth to haue nevve couenant of admission. 292
Christ altred circumcision into baptisme, but not the couenant. 292

Of the difference of the olde and new testament. 293

Hovve vve doe call the olde couenant of the lavve the olde testament. 293
The vvorde testament agreeth vvell vvith the nevve. 293
This vvord, olde, hath respect to the conenant of Abraham, but not to Moises law 293
The olde testament and the nevve be both nevv in respect of the couenant of Abraham. 293
The difference of the olde and nevve testament, is knovven by comparing the thinges conteyned in them both together. 294
The temporal dispensation of the olde testament, declareth great diuersitie. 294
The dispensation of the nevve Testament is spirituall. 294

LXXVI.

Of the grace of God. 295

VVhat grace is. 295
Hovv the affection of grace is attribute to God. 296
God is both iust and mercyfull. 297
Of vvhence the affection of grace is in God 297
The grace and fauour of the flesh and of the vvorlde is vnstable. 298
The nature of grace is to bee franke and free. 298
The grace of God is not temporary but eternall. 298
Hovv many sorts of the grace of God there be. 298
The Schole men haue grace vvorking & going before, and grace vvorking vvith an other and comming after. 398
God vvorketh and vve worke vvith him. 300
We vvorke vvith God as the instrument vvith the vvorkman. 300
In considering the vvorking of Gods grace, vvee must looke in to the ground of our common health, and redemption. 301
This grace of God is to be deuided into grace purposing and grace vvorking. 301
Grace purposing is Gods vvil to redeeme mankinde by his sonne. 302
By his vvorking grace he created man, vvhom he purposed to saue by Christ frõ euerlasting. 302
Grace vvorking before the nlavve. 302
God vvrought by grace in admonishing and chastening, Caine. 302
Grace vvorking vnder the lavve. 302

LXXVIII.

The ende and purpose of the dispensation of the olde testament vvas to shewe that Christ vvas the sauiour of the vvorld. 302
The lawe is not excluded frō the counsell of gods grace. 302.
After the lawe succeeded the singuler vvorke of the grace of God. 303
The priuate vvoorking of grace. 303
The Schole men set foorth grace ouer slenderly 303
In reasoning of election, predestinatiō, &c. vve must respect & auance the glory of Gods grace. 304

Of the redemption of mankinde. 304

What it is to redeeme. 304
Who it is ꝑ is redeemed. 304
Mankinde is redeemed. 304
Mankinde cōprehēdeth al mē frō the first to the last. 304
The redemption is vniuersall. 305
That the redemption is vniuersall by the similitude of the Sunne. 305
The deliuerie of bonde men in the yeare of Iubile, is a similitude of the vniuersall redemption. 305
It is not for lake of the grace of God that the reprobate do not receiue it 305
Christ is the sauiour of the vvorld. 305
Christ gaue himself the price of redemption for al men. 305
We be redeemed out of the bondage of sinne. 305
Saincts and holy men be not excluded. 306
Hovv much the redemtion frō the bondage of sinne is to be esteemed. 30
By vvhō vve be redemed. 30

LXXIX.

It is not euery mans vvorke to redeeme vvhole mankynd, & that for euer and being captiue. 306
A redeemer must be able to redeeme and haue right to redeeme. 306
The right of redemptiō consisteth in tvvo partes. 307
The right of proprietie and ovvning may redeeme. 307
The right of aliance and kinred may redeeme. 307
Iesu Christ the sonne of God hath onely this povver. 307
The povver of Christ to redeeme, is greater than Sathans tyrannie. 307
In Christ is the right & title to redeeme. 307
The strength of man, nor of Angels can doe nothing a gainst the povver of sin, and of the Diuell. 307
The right of redēptiō is feūd full & vvhole in Christ 307
We be his ovvne of right, because he made vs. 307
Christ is our brother by incarnation. 308
Whether Christ ought to redeeme mankinde or no. 308
If it shoulde come of duety, it coulde nōt be imputed vnto grace. 308
If he ought not to redeeme mankinde, then his right and title to redeme is taken avvay.
If it be attribute vnto his povver onely, the enimy vvil say he did it of might and not of right. 108
In respect of vs, Christ ought not, but vvilled and purposed by grace to redeeme vs. 308
In respect of his right and title: Christ did both that he could, would & ought. 309
Christ bound himself by promise to redeeme vs, not biall not temporall. 313
To whom, and to vvhat purpose Christ hath redeemed vs. 314
VVe be not free at our ovvne arbitrement by this redēptiō, but we be the lords. 312
VVe are not at liberty to liue to our selues, nor glory of our ovvne vvill. 312
It is not lavvefull to serue any other, than him that redeemed vs. 312
It is not meete for vs to iudge our brethren 312
VVherevnto vvee bee redeemed. 313
The largenes of this grace requireth that vve should be a people vnspotted. 313

The incarnation of the word. 315

The vaine and curious chats of the Scholemen concerning the incarnation. 316
The testimonies of Scriptures concerning the vvorde of God. 316
The Ethnicks doe declare the vvord to be in God. 316
No man must bee to curious to search hovv the vvorde is in God. 317
The vvorde is the Sonne of God. 317
Iohn reporteth tvvo things of the vvord of God, the godhead & the incarnatiō. 317
Hee saith not, God vvas made flesh. 318
He saith not, Christ was made flesh. 319
He saith not, God made the vvorde 319
He doth not say, the vvorde is made man. 319
The word was made flesh. 319
The Lord tooke vppon him mans vveakenesse. 319
He saith not, ꝑ vvord toke on

LXXX.

cause he ought, but bicause he vvould. 309
The fulfilling of his promises in redeeming vs, is of his meere grace. 309
Hovv Christ deliuered vs frō sinne and Sathan. 309
Christ redeemed vs by a price and raunsome. 309
Christ payed the raunsome to God the father. 310
Christ deliuered vs by strong hand from Sathan. 310
The raūsome of our redemption and the destruction of Sathan vvas vvrought vppon the Crosse. 310
Whē the redemption of mankinde vvas vvrought 311
Order vvas taken before all times, vvhen mankinde should be redeemed. 311
We ought not to demaunde, when that order vvas taken to redeeme. 311
The vvorke of redemption requireth a prefixed time. 311
The fulnesse of time vvas the accomplishment of the prefixed time. 312
Christ came at the euening of the vvorld. 312
Why Christ came not immediatelve after the sinne of Adam. 312
It vvas requisite that the extremities of euill should be set foorth and knovven to the vttermost. 312
That Gods pacience and bearing vvith the times of ignoraunce shoulde be knovven. 312
To sharpen the faith, & hope of them that looked for redemption. 312
What became of thē ꝑ dyed before christ was born. 312
The vvorke of redēption is tied to a time, but not the vertue & effect of ꝑ worke. 313
Redemption in Christ is eter-

LXXXI.

ioined flesh vnto him. 320
The natures of the word and of the flesh be contrary. 320
The vvord and the flesh be so vnited, that the vvord may be said to be made flesh. 320
VVhether it may be saide that flesh vvas made the vvorde. 320
He saith not, the vvorde vvas chaunged into flesh. 320
The vvord receiuing flesh left not his nature. 321
The testimonies of the Godhead & manhood of Christ can not be vaine. 321 322
The fathers trauailed much to confute thē that deny tvvo natures in Christ. 322
VVe must vvisely put a difference betvvixt nature and person. 323
The beginning of Christes flesh. 334
The true good and right opinion of the sound church 735
Of the vvay hovv the vvord is incarnated. 328
It passeth the compasse of mans vnderstanding. 329
Christ tooke vppon him the soule, spirit, and flesh of man. 32
Of the cause of this incarnation. 330
The generall cause is to redeeme mankinde frō sinne and euerlasting death. 330
To declare the loue of God tovvardes mankinde. 330
That he might like his brethren. 330
That he should be a faithfull and mercifull Bishop. 330

Of the dispensatiō or bestowing of the grace of God. 331

The grece of god is opē vnto all the vvorld. 331
It is necessary that it be profitably receiued. 331
Tvvo partes belong to a redeemer: to redeeme, and to bestovve the grace of his redemption. 331
This dispensation hath three considerations, vvho doth it, how it is done, and to vvhom it is done. 331
Christ himselfe is the dispensour of the grace of God. 332.
The efficacie of dispensing grace, perteineth onely to Christ. 332
Hovv the dispensation of the grace of God is perfected. 332
The perfecting and fulfilling of the dispensation of gods grace, consisteth in tvvo pointes. 332
That the grace be rightly offred. 332
That the grace be rightly accepted 332
Saluation is giuen rightlye, & offered vnto men ꝑ the Gospell. 333
The grace of God is rightlye receiued by hearing, beleeuing and obeying. 333
It is needfull that the gospell bee heard, to stirre vp faith in the hart of men. 333
The preaching, the hearing, the opening of the hart, must be ioined together. 334
The minister, the man, and the Lord must go together in this dispensation. 334
Obedience is requisite to the receiuing of this grace. 334
There is no true faith vvhere by disobedience the hearer doth not bring foorth the fruites of the vvord. 335
Vnto vvhom the grace of our saluation is dispensed. 335
It is dispensed vnto all. 335
It is not rightly receiued of all. 335

LXXXIIII.

The light came into ye world but the vvorlde embraced the Prince of darkeneſſe. 336

Of the Goſpell of Ieſu Chriſt. 336

The worde Euangelium, ſignifieth tidings to bee vviſſhed for. 336
The vvorde Goſpell, pertayneth moſte properlye to Chriſtians. 336
The goſpel hath many good ly titles and names in holy Scriptures. 337
The Goſpell is called the vvord of God. 337
The Goſpell is called the vvord of Chriſt. 337
The Goſpell is called good doctrine, good ſeede, good tidings. 337
It is called the Goſpell of the kingdome, the vvord of the kingdome. 338
It is called the Goſpell of grace, and vvord of grace. 338
It is called the Goſpell of health, and the vvorde of health. 339
It is called the vvorde of life. 339
The vvorde of the ſerpent, is the vvord of death. 339
Death laye in the taſt of the forbidden knovvledge. 340
The goſpel is called the word of reconcilement. 340
It is called the Goſpell of peace. 340
It is called the vvord of truth tvvo vvaies. 340
Bicauſe it is cleere from lying and deceite. 341
Bicauſe it doth tell the truth of God. 341
It is the ſame that purgeth the barne flovvre. 341
A vvhile men did forſake the LXXXV.

peace of the vvorld, for the truth of the word, but now they turne the frō the truth of the vvorde to the peace of the vvolrd. 341
The goſpel is called the vvord of faith. 342
It is called the doctrine of the Spirite. 342
It maketh men ſpirituall. 343
It is the ſvvorde of the Spirite. 343
It is the ſeede. 343
It is called meat. 343
It is called nevve vvine. 343
It is called a denouncement or publication. 343
It is called the Goſpell of the Apoſtles. 343
It is called the vvoorde of the Croſſe. 344
It is called the Goſpell of the glory of Chriſt. 345
The principall ende of the Goſpell, is to be to the glory of God the father. 345
Therefore the Angels ſong Gloria in excelſis. 346
It is called the eternall Goſpell. 346
Why the Goſpell is put in vvriting. 347
The letter and the ſpeach of mouth, be the miniſters of the ſpirit. 347
Why the Euangeliſtes vvere moued to vvrite. 347
Matheevve vvrote to bring the Iewes to the faith. 347
Marke vvrote to ſerue the Greekes turne. 347
Luke vvrote to take avvay the doubtfulneſſe and falſifiing of other mens vvritings. 347
Iohn vvrote to declare of the Godheade of Chriſte that vvhich lacked in the other Euangeliſtes. 347
Paule wrote bicauſe he could not bee preſent to preach &c. 347

LXXXVI.

They wrote bicauſe the word is ſoone gone and paſt, but the letter remaineth. 348
Satan leadeth men frō things vvritten to things vnvvritten. 348
The partes of the doctrine of the Goſpell be three. 348
Amendement of life, faith, the keping of the precepts. 348 and. 349

Of the holy Scriptures. 349

The certaintie of our faith, is grounded vppon vvritings of the olde teſtament. 349
The Apoſtle calleth them holy. 349
By calling them holy they bee ſeparated from al prophane Scriptures. 349

Of the beginning of holy Scriptures. 350

There vvere no holy Scriptures extant in the Church before Moiſes. 350
If ther had ben any ſcriptures before Moiſes, Chriſt wold not haue begun at Moiſes bookes to teach to the diſciples. 350
God vvrought by viſions vnto the holy fathers, that they might enſtruct others. 351
The beginning of holy ſcriptures vvere vvritten by the finger of God. 351
Viſions did not ceaſe ſtraight vvaye after the holy Scripture vvas deliuered, but did decreaſe by lyttle and lyttle. 351
After Moyſes the prophets receiued aunſvveres from god, and did put them into vvriting 351
The Scriptures of the nevve teſtament were brought in alſo

LXXXVII.

alſo vvith ſuch vvonderful thinges by Chriſt and his Apoſtles. 351
To giue eare to viſions, the holy Scriptures beynge once receiued is againſt the order of gods diſpenſation, and doth open avvay to Sathan. 352

Of the diuiſions of holy Scriptures. 352

The Canonicall Scriptures of the olde Teſtament. 352
The canonicall Scriptures of the nevve Teſtament. 352
The Apocriphall bookes of the olde Teſtament. 352
Apocriphal bookes be ſecret, and hidde bookes. 353
Apocriphall bookes of the nevve Teſtament. 353
The diuiſiō of the ſcriptures of the olde teſtament. 433
The diuiſiō of the ſcriptures of the nevve teſtament. 354

Of the auctheritie and excellencie of the Canonicall Scriptures. 354

The auctheritie of the Scriptures, is of neceſſitie to be declared. 354
The auctheritie of the ſcriptures is to bee accompted the very gate and entire to the knovvledge of the ſcriptures. 354
No man doth lighly obeye any, vvhoſe auctheritie he doth not acknovvledg. 354
Falſe auctheritie is to bee eſchevved. 355
There be tvvo kindes of auctheritie. 355
The euerlaſting and hygheſt auctheritie. 355
The temporarie & lower auctheritie. 355
The euerlaſting and higheſt

LXXXVIII.

auctheritie is in God onely. 355
The lovver auctherie, commeth frō god vnto mē. 355
It is called the lovver, bycauſe it ought alvvaies to haue reſpect vnto the higher. 355
The diſpenſation of auctheritie. 356
Lyke as Gods vvorkes can not be called to any accompt, no more can his vvords be. 356
God purchaſeth credite, to holy ſcriptures tvvo vvaies. 356.
For that the thinges conteyned therein, ſauour of heauenly vviſdome, truth and goodneſſe. 356
For that the men that do vtter it be of Godly life. 356
Holy Scriptures be called the rule, to examine all things by. 357
Faith muſt needes faile if the auctheritie of ſcriptures do faile. 357
There is nothing darkely ſpoken in one place, but it is moſt plainely ſpoken in an other place. ibid.

What difference is betwixt the holy Scriptures, and vvritting of the Fathers, Biſhops and councell. 359

Our aduerſaries do fly to the fathers. 359
Ierome doth accompt it wicked, if the counſels decree againſt the Scriptures, 360
We muſt iudge of the vvritings of the holy fathers, according to the rule of holy ſcriptures. 360
The vvrittinges of the fathers, can giue no auctheritie to the ſcriptures. 361
We proteſt that vve vvill not

LXXXIX.

be bounde to the auctheritie of the Fathers. 361
Wee alleadge the fathers vvhere they agree vvith the Scriptures, to beate the papiſtes vvith their ovvne vveapons. 362
The Papiſtes ſay, the Church is of more auctheritie than the Scriptures. 362
Therby it appeareth that the Papiſtes do not contende for the truth of the Scriptures, but for a counterfaite Church of Antichriſt. 362.
The Papiſtes doe plucke a ſunder the Scriptures of both Teſtamentes, & neglect the firſt. 363
The Papiſtes bereue the Scriptures of their aunciencie, thereby to diminiſhe their auctheritie. 363
Vnder the name of the primatiue Church, they ſet forth their counterfaite Church. 363.
Aunciencie is not conſidered in Chriſtes Churche, but truth of doctrine. 363
The Scripture is autenticall, vvithout auctheritie of the Church. 363. & 364.
Holy men vvrote not by motion of the Church, but of the holy ſpirite. 364
The Papiſtes ſaye, that the Churche appoynted out vvhich Scriptures be Canonical, Ergo it is of more auctheritie than ſcriptures. 364
VVe ſay the auctheritte of being Canoneall, is an inferiour auctheritie, but the auctheritie of gods truth in Scriptures, is the higheſt. 394.
Moiſes & the woman of Samaria, vvere els of more auctheritie then Chriſtes ovvne vvordes. 364

XC.

The holy scriptures cauſed the Church to be credited firſt. 367
The Church muſte alleage ſcriptures for hir auctho ritie. 368

Of the languages of holy Scriptures. 368.

The Scriptures were writen in Ebrew & Greke. 368
Why the old teſtament vvas vvitten in Ebrew. 369
Ebrevve vvas the language of Gods people. 369
Gods oracles vvere ſpoken from the beginning in that language. 369
Moiſes did conſecrate holy Scriptures to the holy language. 369
Therefore the language is called holy. 369
Why the nevv Teſtamēt vvas vvritten in Greeke. 370
The ſpirite of God vvoulde ſpreade the ſcriptures of Chriſte vnto the vvhole vvorlde. 370
The Greeke tongue was more famous than the Latyn. 370.
The profeſſors of the holy tongue are to be ſet by in the ſcriptures. 370
Of the varietie of tranſlations. 371
Men be not able to iudge of the varietie of the tranſlators, except thei haue knowledge of the language. 371
Younge men ought to bee pricked foorth to learne holy tongues. 372

Of the reading of holy Scriptures. 372

The reding of holy ſcriptures is publike and priuate. 372.

XCI.

The ordaining of publike readers in the church. 372
The profit of the publike readinge of holy ſcriptures. 373.
The Church ſhould not bee ſo eaſely deceiued. 373
It ſerueth for ſuch as can not reade. 374
Sermons and preachinges be the better vnderſtanded. 374.
The vnlearned can better remember the texte reade, then preaching. 374
Priuate reading of Scriptures is done three manner of vvaies. 374
In colleges and felovvſhips it inſtructeth men tovvards the miniſtery. 374
In faithfull mens houſes, to their houſeholde. 375
Euery godly man doth priuately reade Scriptures whē they haue leaſure. 375
The Papiſtes ſay, that laye men may not read Scriptures. 375
They ſay Heretickes tranſlated the ſcriptures corruptly. 375
It is not lavvfull in deede for lay men to reade publykely in the congregation. 376
The Apoſtles and primitiue Church & Doctors mindes vvere, that laye men ſhould reade the ſcriptures in their houſes. 376
The cauſe of all euils, is that Scriptures be not knovven. 377.
The laye men ought to haue the Scriptures abūdantly to teache one a nothet. 377.
The reading of holy ſcriptures doth not make men Heretickes. 377
Bycauſe Scriptures doe not agree vvith the Papiſtes Ca

XCII.

nons, they ſaye they doe breed Hereſies. 378
A diſcretion in readinge of ſcriptures declared by Nazianzeen. 378
Some ſcriptures are to be red but onely to them that be of lavvfull age, ſome to all men, at the firſt. 378

Of the profite of holy Scriptures. 379.

The profits of the holy ſcriptures is great. 379
The anſvveres and minde of God came to vs by Scriptures. 379
By Scriptures vvee haue the Prophetes, Chriſt and the apoſtles talking with vs. 380
The ſcriptures doe profit to inſtruction. 380
The doctrin of the ſcriptures is of toure ſortes. 381
The doctrine of the Scriptures is of the knovvledge of God, godly loue and iuſtice. 381
The ſcripture is profitable in triall, 382
Tryall or reprofe is neceſſarie to repreſſe the indeuours of Sathan. 382
Ther be tvvo kinds of proofe or tryall. 382
Tryall vvherby opinions bee reproued. 382
Tryall whereby our factes be reproued. 382
Scriptures ſerue to redreiſe and amendement. 382
By Scriptures the faultes of doctrine and lyfe be amended. 383
The Scriptures ſerue for inſtruction, Iuſtice, or diſcipline. 383
They ſerue that the man of God may be furniſhed in all good vvorkes. 383
The cofert of holy ſcriptures 384.

XCIII.

Scriptures do comforte the afflicted. 384
The Scriptures do arme vs againſt temptations. 385
The ſcriptures be pleaſant & do refreſh. 386
The ſcriptures be the gardein of Paradiſe. 386
Paradiſe is not to be compared vvith the holy Scriptures. 386
All the vvritings of the Phyloſophers, are not to bee compared to holy ſcriptures. 387
Secular vvriters may bee red, but they may not bee our principall ſtudie. 387

Of the Truth and accompliſhement of holy Scriptures. 387.

The truth of Scriptures dependeth vpon Gods truth. 387.
Which ſcriptures they bee, that do peculyarly require credit and faith. 388
The fulfilling of holy ſcriptures dependeth vpon gods truth. 389
The fulfillinge of the Scriptures is diuers vvaies. 389
Some Scriptures are fulfilled by God, ſome by mē, ſome by the Diuell, 389

Of the miniſteries of the word of God. 389.

Why God doth vſe the miniſterie of the vvorde. 389
God coulde haue prouided by other meanes for the ſaluation of men. 390
We muſt not raſhely enquier vpon the cauſes why God vſeth the miniſterie of the vvorde, nor in anye caſe condemne it. 390
God doth inſtruct men othervviſe, then he doth other creatures. 390
The diſpēſation of the word, vvorketh nothing in vs effectually, vvithout the inſpiration of the holy Spirit 390.
The diuiſiō of miniſters. 390
Miniſters of the vvorde. 390
Miniſters before the lavve vvere Angels. 391
Miniſters in the lavve, Moiſes and the prophetes. 391
Miniſters after the lavve, Chriſt, Apoſtles, Enangeliſtes, Doctors, &c. 391
Diuiſion of the miniſters of the nevve Teſtament. 391
Howve great the order of miniſters is grovven in the Church. 391

Of the duties of the Miniſters of the word. 391

Three things be to be looked for of the Apoſtles, Prophetes, Euangeliſtes, Paſtors, Biſhops, Doctors. 391
That they miniſter to the execution of the ſentece that vvent before. 392
That they be the miniſters of Chriſt. 392
That they bee the diſpentors of the miſteries of god. 392
The difference of the Miniſters. 393
An Apoſtles charge is to declare the Goſpell in euery place throughout ꝑ world. 393.
Prophetes do foreſee and tell things that be to come. 393
Ambroſe taketh them to bee ſuch as expounde the ſcriptures to the people. 393
An Euangeliſte is eyther hee that preacheth or vvriteth the hiſtories and doctrine of the Goſpell. 393

CXIIII.

Paſtors, Doctors, Prieſtes and Biſhops be all one. 393
Prieſt, is the name of age, and Biſhop of office. 393
Paſtors and Doctors be al one as to feede and to teache is all one. 394
The vſe of Elders in the churche vvas to be Heades, Gouerners and teachers. 394
Howve ſuperiorme is crept vp in the Church. 395
Two ſortes of true miniſters of Chriſt. 395
One ſorte ſpecially appoynted for the beginninge of the diſpenſatiō of the Goſpell. 395
An other ſorte to feede the people, throughout all the tyme of the nevv teſtamēt. 395.
What is preſcribed to biſhoppes, after the Apoſtles time. 395. 396.
What the Apoſtle doth require of a Biſhop. 396
Biſhops are become maskers. 396.
Masking biſhops be ſheppardlye clad for the vvether, but they ſeeme not the flocke. 396.
This Maſking Biſhop thinketh his dutie vvel diſcharged in ſinginge twvife or thryſe a yeare a pompious Maſſe. 397
He putteth it to his ſuffragan and commiſſary, to make miniſters. 397
The Maſking Biſhop committeth all preachinge to his Chapleins being Doctors or friers, ſvvorne to a certayne forme or rule. 397
They make Prieſtes for nothing but to ſinge and ſay Maſſe in the Church, contrary to Pope Gregoryes inſtitution. 397
Pope Gregory of the ſinging

XCV.

XCVI.

in the Church. 397
Some ministers of the Gospel do ministers negligently. 398
It is not only required of the faithfull that they be not onely not superstitious hipocrites, iustitiaries &c. but also to be truely faithfull, sounde in Christes faith, in the feare of God, hope, charitie, nevvnesse of lyfe, &c. 398
Of Deacons. 398
Deacons vvere the ministers of the poore at the firste. 398.
At length they vvere appointed to the ministring of the Sacramentes, afterwards to reade and sing the Gospell. 399.

Of choosinge and ordayninge of Ministers in the Church. 399.

It is to rash a thing to thruste himselfe in to the ministerie. 399
Two manner of choosing of ministers. 399
The choosing of ministers, is decayed since the tyme of the primitiue church. 399
Ministers vvere chosen by laying on of handes. 400
In the Primitiue Church, Priestes, Pastors, Bishops and Deacons, vvere chosen by the people, by lyftinge vp of handes. 400
The consent of Princes and Magistrates required in the electiō of Priestes, Bishops and Deacons 401
The Bishop of Rome vvas chosen by the people, with the consent of the Magistrate, vntyll the election was giuē to ꝑ Emperor. 401
The right as vvel of the Emperor as of the people, in electing of the Bishop of Rome vvas shaken of by a false pretence of prerogatiue of the Apostolike Church of Rome. 401
Hovv the lavve of the full election is disanulled. 402
For a peece of money novv a dayes they be ordinated not being chosē by ani. 402
It is no matter novv a dayes, hovve, and vvho be ordeined. 402
The custome of the Apostolike Churches can not bee vsed novv a dayes in the Churches of ꝑ Gospel. 403
The necessitie of our tymes requireth that the Magistrate should be enduced to the election of meete Ministers. 403
They that bee not lavvfully called doe make the doubt of the calling. 404
The manner of choosing of Ministers in the Church of Berna. 404

Of the power of the Ministers. 405.

They that seeke more for preheminence in the Church then for the dispensation of the ministerie, do tosse this article exceedingly. 405. 406.
Euen they also that haue shaken of the tyranny of the Bishop of rome, be assaulted vvith thys temptation novv a dayes. 406
Some doubt that the zeale of such men should bring in the old Lordlinesse into the Churches lyke as the popish zeale brought in the Popish Lordlinesse at the firste. 406
Betwixt both it is to bee feared that they ꝑ do faithfully serue Christ shall be vily troden vnder foot more then the other. 406
Whether ꝑ ministers of Christes churth haue any power. 406.
There is ioined some povver to the ministerye of the vvorde. 407
What kinde of povver lōgeth to the ministers. 407
Ther is povver of right and proprietie, and povver of office. 407
The povver of right and proprietie, perteineth to God and to Christ. 407
Antichrist doth arragate the povver to himsefe. 407
Antichrist is in that respecte rightly called both Aduersary and Vicar to christ. 407
The povver of office is that vvhich is giuen to Ministers. 408
The provver of office is of tvvo sortes. 408
It is determinate and prescribed vnto certain bondes which the minister may not exceede. 408
It is determinate in accessary matters, not being namely forbiddē by scriptures. 408
What povver belongeth vnto ꝑ ministers of christ. 409
They haue power to minister to the Lorde in his church beinge lavvfully chosen therevnto. 409
They be no true Christians that do not honour thys parte of the ministery. 409
Christs ministers do minister vnto him in the vvorde of grace. 409
Where the ministery of christ is, there is povver to preach and teach. 409
Determinate power doth certainly depende vpon the vvorde. 410

XCVII

XCVIII.

Indeter-

XCIX.

Indeterminate povver is in things not expressed in the vvorde of god. 410
The Apostles, Euangelistes, and Prophetes, had no place determined. 410
The Bishops, priestes, and Pastors haue a place determined. 410
The povver of riches or basenesse or powerte, make not a Bishoppe higher or lovver. 411
The ministers by indeterminate povver, vvith the consent of the people, maye ordayne dayes of prayer and open gathering, hearing the vvorde, & discipline. 413
This indeterminate power of ministers taketh no place vnder a christiā Magistrate. 413
By povver of right and dutie, the minister maye vse the povver of Iustice and equitie, in thinges due vnto him of Iustice and equitie. 414
There is due to ministers necessarie & honest huclode. 414.
The minister may take honour due to him, as due to his office. 415
By the povver of lavvfulnesse ꝑ minister may also preach for nothing if he vvill. 415
By the power of lavvfulnesse, Paule did also circumcise Timothie. 416
The minister must haue the povver of dooing, vvhich consisteth in knovvledge and habilitie. 416
Power of Iustice auaileth nothing vvithout knovvledge and habilitie to performe the same. 417.
Povver of knovvledge and habilitie, be giuen of the Lorde. 417

Of the blameleſſe lyfe & honeſtie of the ministers. 418.

What maner of men the ministers of Christ ought to be. 418
A Bishopricke is a vvorke. 418
A Bishopricke is an honeste vvorke. 418
A Bishop must be blameleſſe. 419.
What it is to be irreprehensible. 419
The Apostle meaneth not that they should be vtterly voide from all sinne. 420
What integritie of lyfe is requisit in a minister. 420
He must be the husbande of one vvyfe. 420
Whether a minister must of necessitie be married. 420
A bacheler may be a minister as vvell as a married man, but none that haue more vvives than their ovvne at once. 421
The Apostle forbiddeth not the ministers seconde mariage, but manye vvives at once. 421
Scripture accompteth it no bigamie, but vvhen a man hath tvvo vvives at once. 421
Why the Apostle doth require Monogamy in the Ministers. 421
Paule thought not vpon the deuises of the Bishoppes, Scholemen, & Canonistes, vvhen he made the rule of chooseng Ministers. 422
Seconde mariage is not to be blamed of sinne nor of intemperance. 422
It is vvicked and diuelishe to sclaunder second mariage of intemperance. 422
The Papistes do cast out of the ministerie such as hane but one vvife. 423

C.

The Apostles had vvives and caried them about vvith them. 423
Some obiect that the Apostles caried about other vvomen that vvere none of their vvives. 424
The vvords and circumstance of the text do inferre they vvere their vvives. 425
To range about the countrie vvith other mens vvives, & to leaue their ovvne vvives at home, must needes haue a suspicion of euill. 426
Clemens & Ignatius do testifie, that the Apostles were maried. 426
Men may better credit the Apostles disciples, than the aftercommers. 427
The vvords of Hierome concerning the same matter resolued. 427
The Canons & Pope Sericius, ſequester married men from the ministerie. 428
The councels of Nice and Gangrēe, did strive against their vvickednesse. 428
Paphnutius did speake in the defence of marriage. 428
That the ministers vvere maried after the Canon of the Apostles. 429
To forbid the vse of mariage is to separate them that God hath ioyned. 429
That it vvas no vncleannesse nor incontinence for a man to ly with his ovvn wife. 429
That lavve made against mariage of ministers, should be a great occasiō of whordome. 429
The tyranny of Rome tooke avvay mariage frō priestes and ministers. 431
The order of ministers in the Church vvere corrupted therby. 432

CI.

CII.

The people that coulde not abide the seruice of married men, can now abide the seruice of vvhoremongers, &c. 432

VVhy marriage was taken away from ministers. 432

It vvas taken avvay for tvvo principall causes. 432

The purpose of Sathan to ouervvhelme the Church with lechery, vnder the pretence of sole lyfe. 432

To heape and keep togither the goods of the Church. 433.

Whether it be lavvfull for a minister after his institutiō to take a vvyfe. 434

If it be lavvful to choose one to be a minister that is the husband of one vvife, then it is lavvfull for one to become the husband of one vvife after he is chosen. 435

Ministers in the East churches vvere married. 435

If marriage bee honeste and lavvfull, the beginninge of it is honest and lavvfull, at any tyme. 435

A minister must be sober. 436

A minister must be sound of minde. 436

A minister must bee modest. 436.

A minister must be giuen to keepe hospitalitie. 536

A minister must bee able to teach. 437

A minister must not be giuen to much vvine. 438

A minister must be no brauler nor fighter. 438

A minister must not bee gyuen to filthy lucer. 438

A recitall of certaine ordinaunces made by the Pope to the polluting of Matrimonie, and maintenaunce of superstition, Idolatry & vvhoredome for filthy lucer. 440. 441. 442. 443. 444 445. 446. 447. 448. 449 450. 451. 452. 453. 454. 455. 456.

To what vse these riches thus filthy gathered vvere bestovved. 457

A minister must bee vpright. 458.

A minister must be no fighter, brauler nor striuer in vvordes. 458. 460

Gregory Nazianzeen, reputeth the councelles of the Bishops to be cōtētious. 459

Of the contentions of our tyme. 459

Ministers must bee no mony louer. 490

He must be one that gouerneth vvell his ovvne house 460.

He must haue the knowledge to gouerne his own house. 460.

He may not be a young christian. 461

He must haue a good report of straungers. 462

He must not bee heady. 462

He must not be irefull. 462

He must be one that loueth that vvhich is iust & good. 462.

He must be one that holdeth fast the faithful word. 493

There be many disobedient. 463.

Of Deacons. 463

A Deacon must be graue and honest. 463

A Deacon must not be double tonged. 464

Not giuen to vvine. 464

Keeping the misterie of the Faith. 464

A Deacon must be first tried. 464.

Hovv they vvere vvont to try men. 464

Of the wiues of Deacons. 464

The reformation of ministers of the worde. 465.

CIII.

Ther is no hope of reformation in false pastors. 465

It is a harde matter to continue in vvell doing, yet is it chiefly needfull vnto the ministers of gods vvord. 466

Foure sortes of discipline bee requisite to correct ministers. 467

Ministers be not rashe'y to be corrected, but vpon tvvo or three vvitnesses, 467

They that sinne in the sight of all men, be to bee rebuked openly. 467

The minister may be corected by remouing him to another place. 468

Ministers may be corrected, by suspendtng from their office for a season. 468

Sometimes by putting them cleane out for euer. 468

Sometimes by excommunication. 469

By vvhō this discipline ought to be ministred. 469

Of Faith. 470

What faith is. 470

Some take Faith, to bee nothing els but an opinion. 470.

Such manner of faith is common not onely to false christians, but also to Iewes, Turkes, and all other nations of the vvorlde: that be subiect to errors. 471

The definition of Faith, Ebre. 11. 471

What is declared of Faith by this definition. 471

There can be no certaine beliefe or faith of a false thing 471.

Faith is of things hoped for, and of thinges that be not seene. 471

The definition of the name or vvorde of Faith. 471

CIIII.

What faith is. 472.

There bee three partes of Faith. 472

What thinges vve do beleeue of God. 472

That vvhich vve doe beleeue of God, is the first degree of Faith. 472

To beleeue God as God, is the second degree of faith. 473

The third degree of faith, is to beleeue God. 473

These three partes of faith be declared by Christ, Iohn. 14. 474.

Of the difference of the parts of Faith. 474

The two first partes of faith ought to be applyed not onely to God and Christe, but to the Prophetes and Apostles also. 474

The thirde parte belongeth onely to the father, the son and the holy Ghost. 474

We doe beleeue Moises the Prophetes and Apostles, but vve do not beleeue in them. 474

Howe Faith is necessarie. 475.

Of vvhat sorte of necessatie thinges faith is. 475

Faith is of that sors of necessary thinges, vvhervnto no man is compelled, but euery one that desireth to be saued, must needs haue it. 475

Wherefore faith is necessary to the disposition of God. 475.

1 Bicause God is most faithfull, no vnfaith full person can please him. 475

2 Bycause he vvould saue al them that vvouide beleeue by preaching of the Gospel 476

3 Faith is necessary for vs, bicause vve be absent from God in this lyfe. 476

4 Bycause vvithout faith, thinges necessary for our saluation can not be apprehended. 477

5 Bicause the vvorkes of the holy Ghost in our hartes do require faith. 478

CV.

Of whence Faith is attained. 478

God hath grafted in vs by nature, povver to beleeue. 478.

Vayne faith being nothinge but an opinion frō vvhence that doth come. 478

Vain faith cōmeth of the admiration of outvvard miracles. 478

Vaine faith is conceiued by hearing a manifest Truth vvhich can not be denyed. 478.

Vaine faith is that when men be moued to beleeue by the authoritie of some principall persons & heade men. 479

Vaine faith is vvhen men be moued to beleeue any thing bicause the multitude doth agree therein. 579

Vaine faith is vvhen men are moued to beleeue anye thing bicause of a longe custome. 479

The beginning of true and sincere faith is of God. 479

Men must pray for the gyfte of fayth. 579

Howe Faith is giuen from God. 480.

Of vvhat sort of Gods gyftes fayth is. 480

CVI.

Faith is one of those giftes of God vvhich be perceyued vvhen they be receiued of God. 481

Faith is one of those giftes vvhich be receiued of God by the ministery of me. 481

Hovv faith is giuen from god by the ministerie of men. 481

Faith cōmeth by hearing the vvorde of Christ preached by the minister. 481

What thinges doth come & concur togither in giuing of faith. 481

The grace and worde of god, the minister to preach, hearing of the vvorde, & gods vvorke in the hearte of the hearer, doe go togither in the giuing of faith. 481

It skilleth much tovvardes the giuing of faith vvhat is preached. 481

The qualitie of faith is according to the qualitie of the doctrine. 482

Whether faith be giuen vvith out measure. 482

One selfe same faith, but not all one measure of faithe. 482.

The measure of faith is sufficient vnto saluation. 482

Why ther is greater measure of faith giuen to some, than to the rest. 482

Vnto whom faith is giuen from God. 483

Faith is one of those giftes vvhich be not giuen to all men. 483

Faith is not giuen in respecte of our qualitie, merites or dignitie. 484

The gifte of fayth dependeth vpon the election of God. 584.

Fayth is the infallible token

CVIII.

of Gods electe. 484
We may not rashly iudge that any man is reprobate from this faith. 484
The vvorde of faith is preached publikely, that the vnfaithful should haue no excuse. 484
The publike preaching of the vvorde of faith, is not to be reiected. 484
Faith is the token of election. 485.
No man May iudge the reprobate rashly. 485

When faith is giuen of God. 485.

To consider vvhen faithe is giuen is profitable, specially vnto ministers. 485
The giuing of faith is bound to no time, age, nor qualitie of lyuing. 486
Faith as vve define it according to the Scriptures, can take no place in infantes. 487.

Of the nurishementes of Faith. 488.

It sufficeth not to haue faith, except it be nurished when vve haue it. 488
The nurishement of Faith commeth chiefly from god. 488.
By what meanes Faith is nurished. 489
Faith is nurished by the vvord of Christ. 489
Faith is nurished by the vse of praying & singing. 489
Faith is nurished by the vse of Communicating the Lordes supper. 489

Of the increase of Faith. 490
The increases of Faith is in CIX.

two sortes, One vvhen the membres of the faithefull do encrease, the other is vvhe faith doth encrease in the hartes of men. 491
Wee must bevvare leaste that vvhich vve take to be the increase of faith, bee arrogancie and pride. 491
The increase of faith is knovven by loue & Patience. 491.
The ende and measure of the encrease of faith. 491
The increate of grace mutte bee agreeable to the measure of it. 491
What the increase of faith, vvhich is meete for euery one and common to all, is. 492.
Christ must vvaxe in vs to a perfecte man by faith. 492
Of the efficacie of faith. 493
Vneffectual faith is but a certaine vaine opinion. 493
Howve efficatie is attributed vnto faith. 493
The partes of faith, 493
Faith bringeth foorth some thinges, layeth holde of some things, and vvorketh some thinges. 494
Faith bringeth foorth repentaunce, 494
Faith laieth holde of reconciliation & iustification. 494
Faith doth take holde of the adoption 494
Faith doth take holde of the spirite of God. 495
Faith doth take ꝑ true knowledge of god and of christ 495.
Our faith in Christ doth take holde of euerlasting lyfe. 495.
Faith doth take holde of the gyftes of God vvhich vvee praie to him for. 496
Faith doth vvork foure waies 496.

CX.

Faith doth vvorke peace of conscience towvardes God 496.
Faith vvorketh loue towards God and Christ. 496
Faith vvorketh hope of the glory to come. 497
Faith vvorketh an assured confidence and boldenesse to come to god. 497
Faith vvorketh inuocation & vvorshipping of God. 497
Faith vvorketh confession of the Truth. 497
Faith vvorketh obedience to GOD vvhen hee calleth. 498.
Faith vvorketh perseuerance in dvvelling vvith Christe. 498.
Faith vvorketh yelding vp & commending of the soule and spirite vnto god at the poynte of death. 498
Faith vvorketh concorde towvarde the faithfull. 498
Faith vvorketh the affection of brotherly loue. 498
Faith vvorketh patience in aduersities. 499
Faythe taketh avvay all carefulnesse of minde. 499
Faith bringeth comfort. 499
Fayth mortifieth the flesshe. 500.
Faith is effectuall against the diuell and the flesshe. 500

Of Election. 501

What it is to be chosen. 501
To be chosen is taken two vvaies 501
The first is to be chosen out of other. 501
The seconde to be a chosen thing aboue the other. 501

Whether Election be of God. 502.

It is manifeste that GOD hath

C.XI.

hath chosen some. 502
God hath libertye to chooose some. 502

How many folde Gods election is. 503

The election of god is of thre sortes 503
Of them that are to be saued, of the people of Israell, & of ministers. 503

When God chose. 503

God chose vs before we were 503
To dispute of the number of the elect is fonde and foolish. 504
Predestination must bee requestred from forknovvledge. 505

In what respect God hath chosen vs. 505

God chooseth not in respect of qualities of the persons vvhom he doth choose 505
The respect of our election is to bee fought for GOD himselfe. 506
He hath chosen vs bicause it so pleased him. 506
The certaintie of our election is gods vvill. 506

In whom we be elect. 506

The choosing of vs is not vvrought vvithout meane. 506
Wee bee chosen by GOD in Christ the mediatour. 507
VVe bee chosen by GOD in Christ and for Christ. 507

Whom God hath chosen. 508

Iris possible for them that be chosen to knovve them selues

C.XII.

be chosen. 508
We must earnestly giue our myndes to knovve the elect. 508
In seeking to knovve the elect vvee may not search godcounsell. 508
We must be first elect, if vvee shoulde deserne the electe. 508
The elect can not knovve the elect vvithout tokens. 509
VVe may not curiously seeke to knovv the elect. 509
VVhich ought to bee taken for elect. 509
VVe may deserne the Faithfull lovvers of Christ to bee elect. 509
Hovve vvee may knovve our selues to be elect. 509
VVe knovv our selues to bee elect by such tokens as vvee knovv other. 510

VVhat manner of persons God hath chosen. 511

This question is not to be referred to ꝑ truth of election vvhich hath no time, but to the times in this vvorlde 511.
God chose vs before vve vvere or had any qualine, or beeing 511
VVhether the elect bee borne one vvay and the reprobate an other vvay. 511.
The elect are borne parteners of the same euill that the reprobates be. 511
The elect are borne in sinnes 511

To what purpose God hath chosen vs. 513

The purpose of GOD in making man to his Image is accomplished in the electes

C.XIII.

of Christ, 513
God chose vs in no respect of his owne game. 513
VVe be chose generally to be made happy for euermore 514

Of the Reprobate. 514

Contentions touching reprobate are to be eschevved. 514
That some bee reprobated. 514
They be reprobate vvhich be forsaken of or given ouer by God. 515
VVhen, howv, and vvherefore the reprobate be forsaken of God. 516

Of Repentance, 517

VVhat repentance is. 517
The diffinition of repentance by Schoolemen. 517
The diffinition of repentance by Lactantius. 518
True and full repentance. 518
The definition confirmeth in three vvordes, repentance, amendement and turning. 518

VVhence true repentance commeth. 519

True repentance commeth of faith. 519
True repentance commeth first of grace, by the admonition of the vvord, and of Faith. 519
The grace of true repentance is offred to the reprobate in vaine. 519
The common calling to repentance is by the Gospell. 519

The parter of Repentance. 520

ev. The

CXIIII.

The Scholemen deuide it into contrition, confession, and satisfaction. 520
VVe deuide it into sorovve of the hart, alteration of the minde, and turning to God 520 521.

Of confession of sinnes out of the holy Scriptures. 521.

Confession of sinnes is of two sorte. 521
Confession of sinnes to God. 521
Confession of sinnes to thy neighbour. 521
Confession to GOD is three vvayes. 521
Priuate confession betvvixte god and vs. 521
Common confession in and vvith the Church. 521
Open confession of a crime committed in the face of the congregation. 521
VVe be reconciled to GOD and to our bretheren by tvvo kindes of confession. 521.

Of the Popish confession which men doe call Auricular. 522.

Aricular confession is not of Gods lavve. 522
The peruerting of the Scryptures by the Papistes, to proue their Auricular confession. 522.523.524.525 526.
Auricular confession vvas not vsed in the fathers times. 526.
The beginning of Auricular confession. 527

CXV.

The saying of Lysander the Idolatrous priest. 527
That Articular confession doth not auaile to the forgiuenesse of sinnes. 527
Hovv hurtfull the doctrine of satisfaction is. 528
Christ hath made satisfaction not onely for our sinnes, but for the sinnes of the vvhole vvorld. 529
VVee vvill cleaue to that, and leaue the Popes vvares. 529
VVee acknovvledge an outvvarde satisfaction of iniury done to our neighboure. 529

VVhat the efficacie of true repentaunce is. 529

VVhat repentaunce doth vvorke in the reprobate & in the elect. 529
Repentaunce openeth the eies of the minde. 529
It vexeth the minde. 530
It condemneth that that is done. 530
It altereth the mynde. 530
It dehuereth from the snares of the Diuell, 530
It reconcileth vs vnto GOD. 530
It correcteth that vvhich is done. 531
It maketh men humble. 531
It is not effectuall in the reprobate. 531
It bringeth the vvicked to desperation. 531
It giueth the vvicked taste of eternall punishment. 531

VVhat the necessitie of repentance is. 531.

CXVI.

In vvhat sorte it is necessary. 531
Repentance is necessary in the necessitie of condicion not of compulsion, nor naturall consequence. 532
Repentance is necessarye to amende the faultes of our corrupt life. 532
Repentaunce is necessary to attaine Gods goodnesse. 532
VVithout repentance no man is receiued to grace. 532
For vvhat causes they that be impenitent, are not to bee receiued to grace. 533
Least the Iustice of GOD should be to much derogated. 533
Least the grace of god should be despised. 533
Least gappes should lye open to sinne. 534
Least all shoulde bee saued vvithout difference. 534

Of Iustification. 534.

VVhat it is to iustifie, 534
To iustifie with the Latinists, is to make iust. 535
The doctryne of iustification is chiefly taken out of Paule. 535
This vvorde Iustifying is not vsed of the Apostle after the Latinistes meaninge. 535
To Iustifie in Hebrevve, is to acquite a man of his sinne. 535
To Iustifie in Scriptures, is not to make any man iuste that is vniust. 540
To iustifie, in Scriptures, is to be vnderstanded to be acquited from sinnes. 540

VVho it is that doth Iustifie. 540

CXVII.

GOD onely doth Iustyfie 540
Christ Iustifieth. 542
The holy Trinitie doeth Iustifie. 541

How God doth iustifie. 541

God doth Iustifie by forgyuenes of sinnes. 541
How God beeing iust, can iustifie the vniust. 542
GOD beeing both iust and mercifull, doth iustifie the iust, and condempne the vvicked of his iustice, and forgiueth the sinfull of his mercy. 542
Some doe disceaue r forgyuenesse of sinnes from iustyfication. 543
God iustifieth not as careleese or ignoraunt hovve men liue. 543
God imputeth iustice to them that amende their lyues 543.

In what respect we be Iustified. 544

No liuing person is iustified in respect of his ovvne iustice. 544
We be iustified vvithout any merite of ours going before. 544
VVe be not Iustified for any amends that vve can make 544
VVe be iustified by the onely respect of Gods grace. 545

VVherein we be Iustified. 545

There is one meane vvherein vve bee iustified, and an other vvherby vvee take holde of iustification. 545

CXVIII.

The meane vvherein vve bee iustified is Christ. 545
Christ iustifieth not onely by mediation and intercession 546
Our iustification doth consist chiefly in Christes death. 546
Wee bee not iustified parte by Christ and part by our selues. 546
The meryte mongers make good vvoorkes, the meane to laye holde on Iustification. 546
VVe bee not iustified by our vvorkes. 546
Workes doe declare vs to bee iust. 546
VVe bee iustified be Fayth. 547
Iustifying fayth, is the gyfte of God in Christes bloode freely by grace. 547
Iustifying fayth is an assured truste in the Gospell of Christ. 547
Some thyncke this fayth not sufficient to iustification. 548
Some adde vnto it obedyence and all good vvorkes 548
Some put to it the loue of GOD and good vvorkes. 548
Some saye, fayth iustifieth in apprehending Christ, but most in apprehending forgiuenesse of sinnes. 548
Some saye, fayth apprehendeth forgiuenesse of sinnes in our first conuerting onely. 548
Iustifying fayth in deede can not be ydle nor vvythout vvorkes. 549
But faith iustifieth alone vvithout respecte of the vvoorks. 549.
Hovve Faith onely iustyfieth. 549

CXIX.

Fayth iustifieth not in respect that it is effectuall by loue. 549
Fayth iustifieth in that it hath holde of Gods mercy. 549
Faith iustifieth, in respecte that it clenseth our hartes. 549
That fayth onely iustifieth the Fathers doe vvitnesse. 549.550,551,552.
The aduersaryes aleadge the saying of Iames concerning faith. 552
Iames rebuketh vaine boasting of fayth vvhich iustifieth not. 553
The vvorde fayth is confounded by Iames in the example of Abraham. 553
Paule deuideth better the iustifying faith frō the common faith. 553
The offering vp of Isaake vvas but the Testimonye of Abrahams fayth. 554
VVhether that faith vvyth loue doe iustifie. 555
The aduersaries aleadge that Christ forgaue the vvoman many sinnes, becaute thee loued much. 555
VVe saye that the vvoomans loue vvas not the cause of the forgiuenesse of hyr sinnes. 555
Fayth iustified the vvoman and made hir safe. 555
The opinion of Osiander sequestereth forgiuenesse of sinnes from iustification. 555

To what purpose God doth Iustifie. 556

GOD Iustifieth vs hauinge regarde bothe to our saluation and to his glory. 656
The glory of Gods grace is CXX.

the fruite of this iustification. 556
The peace of conscience is the fruite of this iustification. 556
Holinesse of life is the fruit of this iustification. 557
The glory of them that bee iustified is the fruite of this iustification. 557
Saluatiō and euerlasting life, is the fruite of this iustification. 557

Of good workes. 558

God made al mankinde that they should doe continually good. 558
VVe must consider vvhich be good vvorkes and vvhich not. 559
Workes of superstition be no good vvorkes. 559
Good vvorkes be the fruites of our life declaring the goodnes of our minds. 559
It is to bee considered vvyth vvhat minde good vvorkes be done, good vvorkes must be such as doe profite our neighbours. 559
Good vvorks doe proceede of a faithfull hart and affection of Charitie. 559
The vse of good vvorkes must be considered. 560
Good vvorkes must be done to aduance the glory of our heauenly father. 560
Good vvorkes do assure vvee of our election and calling. 560
Good vvorkes doe feede and encrease our faith. 560
Our good vvorkes doe sturre vp other folkes to godlynesse. 561
Good vvorkes doe resemble the dyspositiō of GOD in releeuing the poore. 561
Wee must consider vvhether

CXXI.

our good vvoorkes doe please GOD, and vvherefore. 561
God is pleased with our good vvorkes, though he neede them not. 561
Good vvorkes please god bicause they be the fruites of our faith. 561
Good vvorkes please GOD, bicause they bee done by his spirite. 561
Good vvorkes please god, bycause they bee done for gods sake. 561
Good vvorkes please god, bycause he loueth that, that is iust and good. 561
Good vvorkes please god for the truthes sake. 561
We must doe good vvoorkes not onely bycause they be profitable, but bicause they please god. 562
Good vvoorkes god doth reward. 562
The reward of good workes is to be attributed to gods goodnesse, not to the merites of the vvorkes. 562
Faith and good vvorkes bee in degree one vnder an other, and cent ary one to an other. 562
Good vvorkes bee requyred of the faithfull as the fruytes of effectuall Faith. 563

Of merites towards God. 563

What merite is. 563
VVee doe call a reward merite, but not merite a reward. 564
The Scholemen make three sortes of merites. 564
Merite of congruence, vvhereby man of hys ovvne nature doth deserue the first grace. 564

CXXII.

Merite of vvorthinesse vvherby a iust person doth deserue to bee hearde vvhen hee prayeth for the sinner. 564
Merite of condigne, vvhereby one hauing the first grace doth make hymselfe vvorthy of euerlasting life 564
A declaration of the Scholemens diuision of merites. 564
Their merite of congruence, is no merit but meere grace 564
Their merite of vvorthinesse is no merite, but a fauoure and grace to the vnvvorthy 564
For prayer hath respecte vnto grace, but merite looketh for reward. 565
The Scholemens deuise repugneth ỹ heauenly grace, 565
It is a pelagianysh pestylence. 565
Christ spake not like a scholeman vvhen he said, he that beleeueth in me hath euerlasting life. 565
Let vs consider our vvhole lyfe vvhether any merite can be founde in it. 565
There is no merite in them that be not yet conceyued; 565
There is no merite in them that be not yet borne. 565
The Pelagians doe vaynely maynteine it by the argument of Esau and Iacob. 566
There is no prerogatiue of merite in our infancie. 567
There is no merites in them that be grovvne of yeares. 567
The Pelagians aleage the example of Cornelius. 568
The is no merites in them that bee conuerted from

CXXIII.

sinnes & be become faithfull. 568
To bee revvarded of Gods goodnes, is one thing, and to be vvorthy to be revvarded is an other. 568
God giueth revvarde for his ovvne grace. 568
Wee bee not our ovvne men whereby to merite. 568
A seruant doth but his duety and can not merite. 569
We be not able to thincke a good thought vvhereby to merite. 569
We can not merite by vvoorking through gods strength and not through our owne 569
The aduersaryes obiect that Paule saide I haue fought a good fight. 569
But Paule did attribute his vvorkes and revvard thereof vnto the gyft and grace of God. 569
We can doe GOD no good, vvhereby to merite any thing of him. 569
God crowneth in vs his owne giftes. 569
The greatnesse of the glorye to come, commeth not of mans merites. 570. 571. 572
All men knovve that not habilitie to deserue can bee in men after this life. 572
Revvard is not properly to be termed revvard. 572
VVhere merite doeth keepe place, there is no rome for grace. 573
Of the merites of Saincles, 573.
GOD doth in deede giue his benefites and mercyes to the aftercommers of the iust. 573
But those benefites and mercyes doe concerne vvorldly things, but not euerlasting life. 573

CXXIIII.

They be giuen vvith a condition, that is, that they make not themselues vnvvorthy of this grace. 573
They be also more to be attributed vnto Gods goodnesse, then to the merites of the Saincles. 573

Of Remission and forgiueneſſe of sinnes. 573

Forgiuing of sinnes is mercyfully to pardon the sinner. 573
It is called in Scriptures forgiuing of sinnes. 574
It is called forgiuing of vvickednesse. 574
It is called forgiuing of dets. 574
Hovve necessary forgiueneſſe of sinnes is, appereth three vvaies. 574
In that no man is cleane, no not the nevve borne childe 574
In that all our lyfe longe, all doe sinne. 574
In that none is able to satisfie for vs 574

VVhose part it is to forgiue sinne. 575

It is a vvise point to knovve, vvhose gift it is. 575
There is like order in forgiueneſſe of sinnes, as in forgiuing of dettes. 575
It is Gods parte onely to forgiue sinnes, bicause all doe sinne against him. 576
Some vvill obiect that Christ gaue his Disciples povver to forgyue sinnes. 576
There bee three manner of povvers to forgyue sinnes. 576.
Povver to forgiue sinnes of authoritie, vvhich pertayneth onely to God. 576
Povver by minestery, vvhich perteyneth to the Apostles and Ministers. 576
Power of priuate right, which euery man hath to forgiue his brother. 576
Vpon the first povver to forgiue sinnes dependeth all our saluation. 576

CXXV.

To whom sinnes be forgiuen. 577

All men bee called generallye vnto forgiueneſſe of sinnes 577.
The forgiueneſſe of sinnes is appointed vnto al men and the Gospell thereof to be preached vnto all men. 577
This general grace of forgiueneſſe hath some conditions going vvithall. 578

By what meanes the forgiueneſſe of sinnes is gotten. 578

Though forgiueneſſe of sins be not due to our merites, yet it is not bestowed with out certayne meanes and conditions. 578
Tvvo meanes of forgiueneſſe one in vvhich, an other by vvhich forgiueneſſe is bestovved. 578
The meanes in vvhich, is Christ the redeemer of all men. 578
The meanes by vvhich, is of tvvo sortes, one by vvhich it is giuen, an other by vvhich it is receyued. 578
The Scholemen say, that the Sacramentes be the meanes vvhereby forgiueneſſe of sinnes is gyuen. 578. 578
Wee saye the vvorde of grace is the meanes vvhereby

CXXVI.

forgiueneſſe of ſinnes is giuen. 578
Whether forgiueneſſe of ſins may bee attributed vnto baptiſme. 578
The forgiueneſſe of ſinnes is reall and Sacramentall. 578
The reall forgiueneſſe is done by the invvarde grace. 578.
Forgiueneſſe of ſinnes is giuen ſacramentally onely, by baptiſme. 579
Forgiueneſſe of ſinnes by baptiſme, is onely of originall ſinne, and of ſuch ſinnes as vvere done before baptiſme. 579
Forgiueneſſe of ſinnes ſacramentally, is attributed to baptiſme, but not to the lordes ſupper, much leſſe to the Popyſh maſſe. 579
VVe ſaye that the vvorde of grace is the meane vvherby forgiueneſſe of ſinnes is giuen generally or ſpecially, publikly or priuatly. 579
The meane whereby forgiueneſſe of ſinnes is receiued is faith. 579
A contrite hart is able to receiue forgiueneſſe of ſinnes but vvithout faith it receyueth nothing. 579
Faith concludeth confeſſion of ſinnes and prayer in receiuing forgiueneſſe of ſinnes. 580

Vpon what condition our ſinnes be forgiuen. 580

Sinnes be forgiuen vpon condition of true amendement of life. 580
Vpon true reconcilement to our brethren. 580
Vpon true forgiuing of our brother his offences. 581

CXXVII.

VVhether all ſinnes bee forgiuen. 581

Chriſt comming to ſaue that vvas periſhed doth forgiue all our ſinnes. 581
Chriſtes office could not bee fulfilled, if he did not forgiue all our ſinnes. 581
Hee that forgiueth not the vvhole debte, keepeth the detter ſtill bound to him in lavve. 582
If al be not forgiuen we muſt needes peryſh, for vvee bee not able to ſuffice for one ſinne. 582
The parable of the king forgiuing his ſeruaunt all hys debt doth proue that God doth forgiue all our ſinnes 582.
VVe ought to conſider vveil the greatnes of thys grace, vvhich forgiueth all our ſinnes. 582
There is no ſinne ſo greate, haynous, nor ſo manifolde but that god doth forgiue it all. 583
By this doctrine vve may be the bolder to praye for the forgiueneſſe of all our ſins, be they neuer ſo great and many. 583

VVhether wehn forgiueneſſe of ſinnes is once gotten, it may be voyde againe. 583

Forgiueneſſe of ſinnes muſt be firme, els vve ſhould not be ſaued. 583
Ther be ſome places of the ſcripture vvhich ſeeme to teach the contrary. 583
Concerning god, forgiueneſſe of ſinnes ſtandeth faſt and can not be voyde. 584

CXXVIII.

But as concerning our ſtanding faſte in the grace and keeping of the condition, it may be voide. 584
Men muſt keepe a difference betvvixt Gods graces without conditions, and thoſe that haue conditions. 584
It is moſt conuenient that in reſpect of vs, not keeping the conditions the forgiueing of ſinnes be made fruſtrate. 585
Some do obiect if grace once giuen may be made voide by the ſinne that folovveth, vvho ſhall bee ſaued. 585.
There is difference betvvixte ſinning through vveakneſſe and falling quite avvaye. 585
Euery ſinne doth not decaye the grace that vvent before but returning to our olde vvickedneſſe doth decaye it. 586
This iudegement of forgiueneſſe of ſinnes is agreable vvith the Scriptures, and vvith the Lordes parable, 586.

VVhether, not the fault onely, but the puniſhment alſo be forgiuen. 586

The Scholemen doe ſaye the puniſhment is but chaunged from euerlaſting vnto temporarie. 586
True forgiueneſſe is vvhen both ſinne & puniſhment is taken avvay. 586
To ſatiſfie for ſinne committed, is the thing that vvee ovve vnto God. 586
The debte beeing forgiuen, the ſatiſfaction is forgiuen 586.
Therefore Chriſt taught vs to praye, forgiue vs our &c. 587
Chriſt doth not forgiue vs by peece meale, but full and vvhole. 587
The forgiueneſſe of the debte maketh the detter free. 587.
The Scolemen with theyr argument doe take avvaye the benefite of Chriſtes bloude ſhedding. 587
The Scolemen ſay our mortalitie is not taken avvaye by Chriſtes death, ergo the fault is taken away, not the puniſhment. 587
They ſaye alſo that Nathan declared forgyueneſſe of the faulte to Dauid, reſeruing puniſhmente for the ſinne neuertheleſſe. 588
VVe ſaye Mortalitie and other corruption of this life in vs be the remnauntes of ſinne, but not the puniſhment of ſinne. 588
So longe as vvee bee in thys earthly Image vvee bee ſaued in hope, though not in full perfectneſſe. 588
There is a differenee betvvyxt puniſhment, ſatisfaction & chaſtiſment. 589
The puniſhment and ſinne bee forgiuen, but not the chaſtiſment. 589
Dauids ſinne and puniſhment thereof vvere forgyuen, but not the chaſtiſment and rodde of diſcypline. 589
Chaſtiſment is no ſatiſfactyon of Gods iudgement, but an inſtruction of Gods chyldren. 589
Chaſtiſment is diſpenſed by GOD, not diſcharged by Maſſes or Popiſh pardons. 589

CXXIX.

VVhether ſinnes be forgiuen alſo after death. 589.

Scholemen ſaye ſinne againſt the holy Ghoſt is not forgyuen in this vvorld nor in the vvorlde to come, ergo ſinnes bee forgiuen in the vvorld to come. 589
We ſay ſuch maner of ſpeach ſignifieth to bee neuer forgiuen. 590
Chriſoſtome expoũdeth it to be puniſhed heere and elſe vvhere. 590
The Scholemen alleadge to mayntayne their purgatory. The fire ſhall trie euery mannes vvoorke. &c. 590
The mayſter of ſentences, doth miſuſe Auguſtines vvordes vpon the ſame to proue his purgatory withall. 592
The Maiſter of the ſentences is reproued & Auguſtines vvoords truely expounded 593
The forgiueneſſe of ſianes is not conſuming of ſinnes by fyre. 593
Veniall ſinnes are forgyuen in this life. 593

Of the prieſthoode of the newe Teſtament.

594.

The nevve teſtament in the bloude of Chriſt hath hys peculiar prieſthoode. 594
VVe deny not the prieſthood of the nevve Teſtament. 594
VVe chalenge that, that is due to it by Scriptures. 595
There is but one onely hyghe prieſt of the nevve Teſtament. 595

CXXXI.

There bee other Prieſtes vnder him or lovver degree 595
There bee Sacrifices and other thinges pertayning to the ſame Prieſthoode. 595
What the prieſthoode of the nevve Teſtament is. 595
Neither the Jevviſh nor Ethnicall prieſthoode hathe place in the nevve Teſtament. 595
The Papiſtes hath brought in Maſſing prieſthoode. 595.
The Papiſts erect their prieſthoode vvythoute commaundement of ſcriptures 595.
Chriſt tooke not y honour to him vvithout authority of Scriptures. 595
The Miniſters of the nevve Teſtament are placed by God. 595
Paule maketh mencion of diuers ſortes of Miniſters. 595.
Paule maketh no mencyon of the Popiſh prieſthoode. 595.
The Apoſtles knevve nothing of the Popyſh prieſthoode. 595
Paule ſpeaketh of Deacons for the almes of the poore, not ſeruitoures and attendoures of Maſſing pryeſthoode 595
The Papiſtes ſaye that the Apoſtles dyd not forbyd their prieſthoode though they made no mencion of it. 596
They ſaye their prieſthoode is confirmed bycauſe the elders vvere Prycſtes. 596.
They ſaye their ſacryfyce is confirmed bycauſe the Elders dyd Sacrifice,

CXXXII.

after Erasmus translation. 596
Wee say that Erasmus declareth the preaching of the vvorde to be that sacrifice. 596
The Papistes are offended bicause vve call Ministers elders and not Priestes. 597
The common people vnderstand massing Priestes, by the name Priestes. 697
The Papistes do confesse that the massing priesthoode is not founde in Scriptures 597
The Papist say their massinge Preisthood is of aucthoritie bicause the fathers instituted it. 597
The Papistes say the Pope is high priest. 597
Wee saye Christ is onely chiefe priest and mediatour 597
There is none other chiefe priest but Christ. 597
That vvhich the Apolste writeth of the high priest, can not be applyed to the Bishop of Rome, ergo he is not high priest. 698
To the office of priesthoode perteyneth mediation. 598
The Scriptures attribute mediation onely to Christ. 598
The Papistes handle this matter of mediation Sophistically. 598
They say Christ is one mediatour, but not one onely mediator. 598
VVe saye, if it be all one to say, one God, or one onely God, then it is all one to say, one mediator, or one onely mediator. 598
The Papistes make a distinction in the vvord Mediatour 598
They say, ther is but one mediatour, but many intercessours. 599
Augustine proueth the contrary against them. 599
All men pray one for an other but Christ as highe priest prayeth for all. 599
Christ vvas prefigured by the priest of the olde Testament, vvho prayed for all, but none for him. 599
Paule declared himselfe to be no mediator. 599
If Paule had bene mediatour he could not haue said one God, one mediatour Christ &c. 600
If Paule had bene a medyatour all his felovv Apostles had bene mediatours. 600
Vnto mediation doe pertaine sacrifice and praiers. 600
The sacrifice of clensing perteineth onely to Christ. 600
The sacrifice of Christ is the offering vp of his body. 600
Concerning prayer Christ is a priest for euer according to the order of Melchisedech. 600
Christ praied for vs a little before he suffred. 600
Christ entred into heauen to appere in Gods sight for vs. 600
Christes sacrifice passed all the sacrifice of the olde Testament. 600
Christes sacrifice once offered can not be Iterated. 601
Christes sacrifice is effectuall in Gods sight. 601
Christes sacrifice decaieth not in processe of time. 601
Christes sacrifice reconcyled this vvorld to GOD the Father. 601
Scriptures declare Christes Priesthoode, to bee euerlasting. 601
This perpetuitie of Christes priesthoode, the Pope can not chalenge. 601

CXXXIIII.

The perpetuitie of Christes priesthood can haue no successoures. 601
The perpetuitie of Christes Priesthoode taketh avvaye al occasiō from the Church to erect any other chiefe priest. 602
The chife priesthoode of the Byshop of Rome can not be acknovveledged vvythout contumely and rebuke of Christ the euerlasting Priest. 602

Of the communicating or participiation of the Priesthoode of Christ. 602

There be foure places in the scripture that doe declare that this priesthood is common to all Christians 602
This priesthood pertaineth to all Christians in generall, and not to the Pope, nor his Church men. 602
Augustine, Ierome, Origen and Beda, declare the same 603
The Scholemen are compelled to graunt the same. 603
They graunt it to be generall in respect of specyall masking Priesthoode, vvhich they haue imagined vvithout Scriptures. 604
They maintaine this speciall priesthoode vvith vnvvrytten verities. 604
We say ther is great differēce betvvixt that vvhich vvee ought to beleeue by Scriptures, and thinges appointed by Customes, Counsels and other auethorities. 604
If their priesthoode be a matter of faith, they muste bring foorth Scriptures. 604.
If it bee a right or custome made by them then it is no Priesthoode. 604.
There can by no truth bee estabished tvvo Priesthoods in the Church. 604.
Seing all Christians be Priests they must offer acceptable offerings to God, 604.
The offeringes of Christians be spiritual & not outward. 604.
There bee three manner of Sacrifices in this Priesthood. 604
The first is of expiation or clensing vvhich pertaineth only to Christ. 604.
The second is of praise and thankes giuing vvhich is common to all Christians vvith Christ. 605
The Cannon of the Popishe Masse doth declare the same. 605
The Sacrifice of praise and praiers is acceptable vnto God. 605.
This Sacrifice is offered vp in euery place, 605.
The aduersaries aleage the fathers vvhich name the Sacrament of Christes bodie and bloud a Sacrifice. 605. and. 606.
There is a difference betvvixt a Sacrament & a Sacrifice. 606.
There is ioined to the Sacramēt the Sacrifice of Praise. 606.
Augustine doth mingle together the vvoordes of Sactifice and Sacrament. 606.
It is better to deuide the Sacrifice of Praise from the Sacrament, in sence and vnderstanding. 606.
When the Minister of Christ offereth this Sacrifice, hee doth it of Ministerie not of a singuler Priesthoode. 606.

CXXXV.

There is in the Church but one Priesthoode, one cheife Priest Christ, and one honor of Priestly people. 606.
The thirde kinde of Sacrifice is to offer vp our bodies after the example of Christ. 606.
Paul calleth this an holy, liuely, and acceptable oblation to God. 607.
Paule calleth it our reasonable seruice, 607.
This Sactifice can not be made vvithout forsakinge our selues, taking vp our Crosse, folovving of Christ. 607.
The Popishe shauelinges vvill rather slay Christ an Hundreth times and burne thousandes of his Members, than once offer this Sacrifice. 607.
We may adde the fourth Sacrifice to theſe Sacrifices, of the nevve Testament. 607.
The fourth Sacrifice is to succour Christes Ministers, and releeue his members. 607.
The Popes shauelinges doe like but one peece of this Sacrifice, that is, the taking at other folkes handes. 608.
Nothing is more holy or acceptable to GOD in all mans life than this true and lavvefull Priesthood 608.
Nothing is more detestable in the sight of god, than fals and counterfaite preisthood. 608.

Of the Church. 608.

Thoſe thinges that doe truly belong to the Church, are dilygentiye to bee declared. 608.
They that vvill seeme to bee Churchmen, doe vnder colour of the Church reiecte the truth for lukers sake. 608.
They barter forged vvaers in the Church. 608.
They cleaue to Simon Magus and not to Peter. 608.
They runne rather headlonge to the Deuill, than giue place to the truth. 608.
We must consider vvhich is the true and vvhich is the false Church. 609

What the Church is. 609.

The vvoorde Ecclesia in Greeke signifieth a calling out. 609
But the vvoord Church is taken for the faithfull vvhich bee called foorth. 609.
There bee three sortes of calling of the faithfull. 609.
The invvarde calling of the Spirite. 609.
The outvvarde calling by preaching. 609
The calling of the faithfull into the felovvesship of the Congregation. 609.
The place of the assemblye is called the Churche. 610.
The Fathers vsed to call it so. 610
The name of Church agreeth better to the nevve testament than the glorious Titles of Temple. 610
God is not in loue vvith gay building. 610
We doe not alovv the superstitious discription of a

CXXXVIII.

materiall Church by the Papistes. 610
The Papistes also doe cal the Romishe Prelates vvith the Pope the Churche. 610.
The Churche in respecte that it is the callyng out of the faythful is not to be considered by multitude nor place. 610

Howe manye sortes of churches there be. 611.

The true Church of Christe is one onely Catholike Church. 611
The Church of Rome maye be percell of the Churche but no vniuersall church. 611.
The true churche is not of good and badde mingled together. 611
Thonghe the Cockle & Darnell doe beare a great sway in the outvvarde felovvshipe thereof yet they doe not belonge to the felowshipe. 612
The name of the Churche is peculiar onely to the saincte not to the wicked 612.
The proprieties attributed to the Churche in Scriptures doe not agree vvyth the fashions of the vvicked. 612
Church, absolutely spoken doth in no vvise pertaine to the reprobate. 612
Men deuide the true church into the militant, and triumphant 612
The church seemeth to bee deuided into three partes before the lavve, in the lavve, after the lavve. 612.

CXXXIX

Ther is in deed but one churche of saincte throughout all ages, one order of salvation, one Testament of God. 612.
The Fathers make mention of the church of the Israelites and of the church of the Gentiles. 613
All is one selfesame churche knytte together in christ. 613.
The Papistes do also declare that there is no saluation out of the vnitie of their Romyshe church. 613
VVe say he that sequestreth himselfe from the true church must needes perish. 613.
There is difference betvvixt the true catholike church and those that seeme to be percell of it. 614
It can not bee proued that the Sea of Rome is the only body of the churche. 614.
A perticular church may bee such, that a man can not bee of the true churche except he goe from that. 614.
Any man maye bee in the body of Christe thoughe hee neuer heard of the Sea of Rome. 614

What the true Church of Christe is. 614

It is hearde in thys tyme of errours to trye the true church from the false. 614.
The true church once knowen, the false is sone decerned. 614
The knovvledge of the true church is co be sought for in the Scriptures. 614
In tymes past the true churche myght bee knowen diuers vvayes. 615
Novve the Schismes haue gotten all thinges proper vnto christes Truth, it can bee knovven but by the Scriptures onely 615
The true church vvas knovven in tymes paste by the conuersation of lyuing. 615.
Novve the conuersation of the church is become worse then the conuersation of Heretykes, the true churche must be knovven onely by Scriptures. 615
The true church is the company of the true faythfull holy electe people. 615.
This definition excludeth the counterfaite churche. 615.
This definition agreeth vvith Scriptures. 616
The church is the house of God. 616
The church is christes flocke. 616.
The church is christes spouse. 616.
The church is christes bodye. 616.
Christ is the onely foundation of the church. 616
The felovvshippe of rhe electe bee the stones and building of christes churche. 617.
The church is christes flocke and hath none other shepherde but christ. 617
The church vvhich is Christes spouse can not be false christians. 617
The churche vvhich is christes bodye, consisteth onely of christes members. 617.

CXLI.

The true church is pestered vvith vvicked and reprobate, as a bodye vvith botches and Builes 618
As Botches be no part of the bodye, so bee the vvicked no parte of the churche. 618.

Of the Catholyke Church. 618.

The Fathers cal the true teaching church the catholyke church. 618
The catholike church is the vndefiled felovvshippe sequestred ftom the vnfaithfull. 619
The vniuersall church is Ierusalem the citie of the liuing God. 619
Three properties are giuen to the catholyke churche. 619.
The catholike church is spred throughout the vvhole vvorlde. 619
The church of the faythfull is dispersed throughout the vvhole vvorld but the Romyshe churche is not. 619.
Adam, the Patriarkes, Prophetes. Martyres, and other faithfull, &c. vvere members of the churche, before Rome beleeued. 619.
Therefore the seconde proprietie of the churche, is to bee borne and vvritten in heauen. 619
The third proprietie is to bee cleane & vndefiled, which the Romish church is not. 649.
The Papistes saye that the Prelates of the churche of Rome doe represent the catholyke church. 619
They saye the elders of Israell represented vvhole Israell, and receyued blessinge of Salomon in the name of vvhole Israell. 620.
They say vvhen Christ sayd: Tell the church, he spoke to the Prelates onely. 620.
VVee saye all mankinde of Israell vvas commaunded by the lavve to appeare before the LORDE, not the Elders onely.. 620
The saying of Christe: Tell the church, Is to bee referred to euery particular church, not to prelates representyng a catholyke church. 620
The Popish Prelates confesse themselues not to bee the church, in that they saye they represente the church 621.

Of the knowledge of the true Church. 621.

The makers of the interim sette foorth foure tokens to knovve the true church. 621.
The firste pure and cleane doctrine. 621
The seconde the right vse of Sacramente. 622
The thirde vnitie consisting in loue and quietnesse 622.
The fourth vniuersall consent throughout the vvhole vvorlde. 622
The firste token vvee alovve sequestring all mens traditions from it, vvhich the popishe church doeth not. 622.

CXLII.

The seconde token vvee alovve sequestring all misuse of the sacraments and such Sacramentes vvhich christ himselfe did not institute. 622.
The thirde token vve alovve, if it bee poured in by christes Spirite, effectuall in all our lyfe, and no vvorldly vnitie. 622
The fourth token vve alowe reseruing the vniuersall consent to the chiefe pointes of our christian Faith, not in ceremonies, mens traditions, &c. 622
The catholike consent muste not be referred to any one time. 622
The Papistes take the catholike consent to bee the consente of the Pope and his adherentes. 622

VVhat the heade of the Church is. 623.

The Church being a bodye must needes haue a heade. 623.
VVhat manner of heade the church hath. 623
The church hath not a stráge heade, but his ovvne head. 623.
The Church hath not many heades but one heade. 623.
The church hath not an vnprofitable heade but an heade able to doe all that belongeth to a true heade. 623.
The churche hath an heade vvhervnto belongeth and it is subiecte. 623
The Church hath an heade giuen it by God. 624
The church hath a spirituall and heauenly heade. 624

CXLIIII.

What the Apoſtle Paule ſaith the head of the Church is. 624.
God hath made al things ſubiect vnder Chriſt. 624.
God hath giuen Chriſt to be heade ouer all thinges. 624.
Chriſt is the head of the congregation and miniſtreth ſaluation to the bodye. 624.
Chriſt being the beginninge and firſt begotten of the dead, is the Church. 624
What things be conuenient for a heade. 624
The heade muſte haue excellente vvorthineſſe, gouernaunce and povver. 624
The heade muſte miniſter to the body, Spirite, and lyfe. 624.
The heade muſte keepe the members in a continuall concorde, directe the motions and prouide for the health of the vvhole body. 624.
Such a head is Chriſt vnto the congregation. 624
The Papiſts do ſubſtitute the Pope to be the heade alſo. 624.
They vvill haue an ouerſeer of the church to be aſmuch as heade. 624
Princes, Captaines, and kings are called Heades of the people in the olde Teſtament. 625
But the Apoſtles & Biſhops be not called Heades in the Scripture. 625
Auguſtine ſayth, the Apoſtles can not be called heades in the Church. 625
The Apoſtles can not be the heade of Chriſtes body for that all Chriſtiā men make but one body in Chryſte. 625.

CXLV.

The Papiſtes make Peter the heade, bycauſe Chriſte ſayde to hym, feede my Sheepe. 625
Is ther any difference betwixt Paules planting and vvateryng and Peters feedinge. 626.
Peter neyther coulde nor did feede all, neither vvas it commaunded him. 626
If Paule might be iuſtly called Doctor and Teacher, he might alſo iuſtly be called a feeder as vvell as Peter. 626.
We muſt conſider of vvhat Church the Pope is head, if they vvill needes haue him to be an head. 626
If there be a Churche that maye bee called the Popes bodye, vve hinder him not to be head therof. 626.
Their boaſtinges of Peters ſucceſsion, be but tryfles. 626.
Peter vvas neuer head of the Catholike Churche, and though he had, it folovveth not that other may be ſo. 626.

Of the Vnitie of the Church. 626.

The particular and counterfaite Vnitie perteyneth to Heretikes 627
The Catholike and ſounde Vnitie perteyneth not to Schiſmatikes. 627
Let the Papiſtes that vvould haue vs keepe the vnitie of theyr Churche, make their vnitie an vniuerſall vnitie, and no particular Vnitie. 627
It is not the true vnitie by

CXLVI.

and by vvhich they boaſte off in the name to the Catholike vnitie. 627
We muſt diligently ſearche vvhich is the true Catholike vnitie. 627
The vnitie of the Church is deuided into three. 627
It is one of it ſelfe. 627
There is an Vnitie in the Church of the head Chriſt and of the Church the bodie. 627
Thirdly, the membres of the Church be at an vnitie in themſelues, vvhich can neither be encreaſed nor deminiſhed. 628
Who be breakers of this vnitie. 628
They break this vnitie which dyſplace the true heade or ioyne anye other vnto it. 628.
They breake this vnitie that ioyne vvicked mēbres thervnto. 628
They break this vnitie vvhich vvill haue vs folovve ſuch an vnitie as is contrary to the heade Chriſt. 628
The firſt and laſte breache of Vnitie the Papiſtes make. 628.
The Goſpellers vvhich regard not charitie make the ſeconde. 628
The true vnitie of the church requyreth mutuall loue and breedeth the ſame. 628.
By vvhat meanes thys vnitie doth conſiſt. 628
The Papiſtes ſaye, it ſtandeth in obedience to the Romiſhe Church. 628
VVee ſaye the vnitie of the Church is Catholicall, and vvas before the Romyſhe Church and ſhall be vvhen it is gone. 628
The vnitie of the members of the

CXLVII.

of the Church is lyke the vnitie of the bodye vvith the heade. 628
The vnitie of the Churche doth not exclude the communion of fleſhe and bloud in this lyfe. 629
The miſterie of this vnition of fleſhe and bloude vnto Spirite and Lyfe, is in the Sacramente of the body and bloude of CHRIST. 629.
The life of Ieſu muſt appeare in the mortall fleſhe of true Chriſtians. 629
It is not poſſible that the life ſhould be diſagreing from the vnitie of the ſame ſpirite. 630
The qualities of the lyfe ryſeth vpon the qualities of the ſpirites. 630
In the vnitie of the body being ioyned to the heade Chriſt, is comprehended the vnitie of God the Father. 630
They that bee knitte vnto Chriſt, be not onely knit in the felovvefhip of the Spirite, but of Fayth, Hope, and Baptyſme alſo. 630.
For this true Vnities ſake it is neceſſarie for all men to depart from the vnitie of perticular Churches. 630
The vnitie of the Catholyke Churche is to bee preſerued aboue all perticular Churches. 630
He that is bound to the vnity of the Romyſhe, is not in the vnitie of the Catholyke Church. 630
In the Romiſhe church there bee many naughtypackes. 530.

CXLVIII

The Vnitie of the Church doth not conſiſt in Ceremonies. 631.

Diuerſitie of ceremonies doe not breake the vnitie of the church, if the beleeuers be all of one ſoule and one hart. 931.
It is to be wiſhed that vvee ſhuld all agree concerning the caſe of ſaluation. 631
The vnitie of perticular churches vvas alvvayes vvont to be broken by the diſagreements of the Biſhops. 632.

Of the Faith of the Catholyke Church. 632.

The Faith of beleeuers is all one, as the vvill of them that vvill all one thing is al one. 632
This Fayth is one, not in member but in kynde. 632
The Fathers called it Catholike bycauſe all Faithfull do vniuerſally profeſſe the ſame. 632
The fathers brought it into a ſhorte and playne leſſon called the creede. 632
Athanaſius Creede declareth the ſame more at large. 632
According vnto this Creede vve be iudged catholike. 633.
In thys Fayth vve be baptiſed. 633
They bee vnreaſonable and raſhe that do require the Faythfull to beleeue other thinges not mentioned in this creede nor at Baptiſme 633.
Such thinges doth the Pope demaunde of vs. 633

CXLIX.

Of ſuch thinges do ryſe the great gaynes, Lordſhippe and kingdome of the prieſtes. 633
The Popes Prelates knovve, that no vvorldly gaynes is to bee gotten by the confeſſion of the catholyke Faith. 633
Hovve Fayth is one in the church. 633
It is neceſſary to knovve in what reſpect fayth may be diuers without any breach of the vnitie of the church 633.
In queſtions concerning rites and obſeruations, the beleefe of the Faithfull may be diuers. 634
Diſagreing in rytes and obſeruations, hurteth nothing the catholike vnitie. 634
Contentions vpon opinions of Doctrine, vvorſhyppinges, contrary to Gods vvorde, can not be beleeued without breach of this vnitie. 634
The beginners of ſuch contentions, and the mayntainers be in the fault, though they bee moſt in number. 634.
The church iudgeth neither is iudged after the greatneſſe of number, but after the truth of Scriptures. 634

Of the power of the Church. 634

The povver of the church is not to bee referred to the vniuerſall church. 634
The povver of the church is to be refetred vnto all perticular churches, being members of the vniuerſall

CL.

Church. 634
It is no reason that anye one Church shoulde haue lesse powver than others. 635.
That some smaller churches be subiect vnto greater it is more vvorldly the church lyke. 635
Euery perticular church hath three kindes of powver. 635.
Powver to iudge those things vvhich bee hearde in the Church. 635
Thys powver is not to iudge the holye Scriptures. 635.
This powver is to ibuge by the Scriptures other Doctrines vvhich the Prophets declare out of the scriptures. 635
Wee muste not giue credite vnto them that gyue the church authority to iudge the scriptures. 635
In colour of such authoritie, the Pope auanceth hymselfe aboue the scriptures. 635.
The vvicked sorte of menne, doe suppresse the authoritie of the Churche, to iudge opinions and mens traditions, and giue it to the Pope. 636
The second kynde of power is to excommunicate. 636.
Thys powver the Churche hath, if it lacke a Christian Magistrate. 636
Thys powver the Pope hath taken avvaye from the perticular Churches. 636
The thirde powver is to depose naughtie Pastoures and to choose better. 636.
This powver the Churche vseth vvithout consent of the Ministers if they lacke a Christian Magistrate. 636.

CLI.

This kynde of powver is now a dayes oppressed moste of all by Bishops and other Prelates. 636
The aduersaries say, that the Prelates maye by their authoritie decree, chaunge, and abrogate all lavves asvvell the Apostles as others. 637
They alleadge that the churche hath altered the Sabboth daye from Satterday vntill the Sunday. 637
They saye that Christe came to fulfill the lavve, and the Apostles did abrogate it. 637
They saye, the Churches after the Apostles tymes did alter the Apostles decrees concerning catyng strangled thinges and bloude. 637.
We saye the liberall obseruation of the Sabboth vvas temporarye, and figuratiue and vvas taken avvaye by Chrystes truthe. 637.
The Apostles did not take avvaye the lavvishe decrees but declared onely that Christ tooke them avvay. 637.
The Apostles did not decree that men should for euer abstayne from strangled thinges but for a season, leaste the Gentilse should be offended. 638

Whether the Church may erre. 638.

The aduersaryes contrarye to the olde Fathers saye, the CLII.

Churche can not erre. 638.
They saye, Christ forsaketh not his spouse the Churche, ergo it can not erre. 638
They say, the Church is the kyngdome of Heauen: Howe can falsehoode raigne so many yeares in the kyngdome of Heauen? 638.
They saye, the Churche is the Piller and foundation of Truth: ergo it can not erre. 638
Wee saye, These sayinges do not pertayne to euery perticular Church. 638
The anoyntyng of the holy Spirite doth alvvayes teache the Churche: ergo, it can not erre. 630
No perticular Churche is Christes spouse, the kingdome of heauen, the foundation of the Truthe. 639.
These sayinges pertaine to the onely Catholyke churche dysperſed in all the vvorlde in all ages. 639
The catholyke Churche can not erre. 649
The other perticular Churches, both can, haue, and do erre. 639
Christ neuer forsaketh hys Church. 639
If the Church of Rome or any other perticular church can not erre, vvhy dothe Paule admonisshe the Romaines, and feare leaſt the Corinthyans shoulde bee seduced. 639
Pope Hormida didde feare, leaſt they shoulde forsake Christ, and be forsaken of him. 640
They excuse themselues by that Christe forsaketh not hys Church, as a vvhore

CLIII.

doth vvhen shee sayth, I haue an honest man to my husbande. 640
In respect that the Catholyke Churche is the kyngdome of Heauen, and not of the flesshe it can not erre. 640.
But in asmuch as it is vveake in some of his members, it dothe sinne and erre also sometymes. 641
The Romyshe Churche is rather the kyngdome of the vvorlde and the Dyuell than of Heauen. 641.
If for some electes sake in the Romyshe Churche, it myghte bee called the kyngdome of Heauen, yet doth it not folovve that it can not erre. 641.
By the same reason that they saye it can not erre, they may say, it can not sinne. 641.
No Papist can for shame denye but that asvvell the Prelates as the common sort of the Romysh churche doe sinne moste abhominable. 641
It is more greeuous to doe vvickedly, then simplye to erre. 641
Bycause they vvyll seeme to bee ryngleders of the Churche, they bee more asshamed that men should perceiue that they doe erre, than they bee to doe vvyckedly. 641
They compare their Churche Prelates to a Pylote, vvhome all that bee in the shyppe doe beare vvithall, being neuer so vvycked, bycause shee is their guide. 641

CLIIII.

They deny not that they bee sinners, but they denye that they erre. 641
They feare theyr kyngdome shoulde bee loste, if they shoulde bee tryed to haue seduced the people. 641.
So farre foorth as the Churche obeyeth the gouernaunce of the Spyrite, so farre it erreth not. 642.
It can not bee proued that the Churche obeyed in all thinges, and did not erre. 642
The first Father erred often in keepinge the lavvyshe custome. 642
The churches of the Apostles erred in the Apostles lyfe time. 642.
The Apostle calleth the Church the piller of the Truth, in respect of the elect which continue vnto the ende. 642
VVe say not that the church altogither in all hys members hath erred. 642
Our variaunce is about correcting of erroures in the Church. 642
The vvhole vvorld erreth either in the Church, or out of the Church. 643
The Truth is the Piller of the Church, not the Churche the Piller of the Truth. 643.
The Church is firme in the faythfull, and erreth in the vveake members. 643
The Churche of Ierusalem erred long vnder the Apostles concerning lavvish Ceremonies. 643
The Churche of the Galathians erred. 643
Peter erred and vvas repre-

CLV.

hended of Paule. 644
In affirming that Christes Church can not erre, the Romyshe Churche is perceiued not to be of Christ. 644.
There bee tvvo kyndes of errours and of Christians that doe erre. 644
One is vvhen the Truth is vtterly forsaken, that men can not abyde to heare it. 644.
This is the erroure of the reprobate. 644
The seconde kynde commeth of ignorance of thinges pertayninge to the ground of our Saluation. 645.
In thys kynde of erroure the churche and the electes, may erre. 645
Who can reherse all erroures of all ages and perticular chuches. 645
The church of Rome and of Aphrik erred in ministring the Lordes Supper to infantes. 645
The church of Rome erred vvhen it so did, or els it erreth novve. 645

Whether a Christian man maye departe from the Church without blame. 645.

It is not seemely that the faythfull Pastoure or other christian shoulde forsake his churche not that the church should forsake any suche. 645
The church is forsaken of hir members and doeth

CLVI

forsaken of hir members often tymes. 645
It is a vvisemans part to consider the causes vvhy both commeth to passe. 645
VVe may not indge the facte but searche the causes. 646.
It maye bee that a christian maye bee caste out of the church vpon necessary causes. 646
It may be that a christiā may depart from the church vpon good occasion, and be blameles. 646
VVe doe forsake the Romish church. 646
Let all men consider, not the fact onely, but the causes of it. 646
Let no man esteeme hir falsе tytles vvherevvith she doth auaunce hir selfe. 646
Let men consider theyr vvicked Lordlyneſſe forbidden by christ. 646
Let all men consider their excesse in Fare, and apparell. 646.
Let all men consider theyr Robberies, and Simony. 646
It shall bee founde to be Babilon it selfe, and the Seate of Antichrist. 647
Bernarde perceiued and declared the same. 647
The man of sinne, the Antichrist of Rome being discouered, hovve can man finde faulte vvith vs for departing from obedyence thereof. 647
Hee is vvorthy to be blamed for a runagate, that departeth frō the true church, but not so if a man forsake Antychristes churche. 647.
The communion of the churche novve a dayes can not bee kepte vvithout Papistes, vvhich bee confederate with Antichrist and defyled vvyth Symony. 647.

CLVI.

The Canons forbid the communion of Simonistes, and suspend all their ministerie 647.
The Popish lavve forbiddeth to heare masse of a Priestе that keepeth an vvhore. 647.

Of Sacramentall signes. 648.

The cloudie Mistes of the Schole Doctors and the scrupulositie of learned mē make the Sacraments intricate. 648

VVhat a signe is. 648

VVhere a signe is, there is a signification. 648
All doctrine is either of thinges, or of signes. 649

The kindes of signes. 649.

Naturall signes. 649
Signes giuen. 649
Naturall signes be they that naturally do declare some other thinges than themselues, as smoke shevveth that there is fire. 649
Sygnes giuen, be some giuen of God, some gyuen of men. 649
Signes giuen do shevv things past, present, or ro come. 649.
Sygnes of thinges paste bee signes of remembraunce and thankes giuing. 649
Signes of thinges present bee

CLVIII.

signes of grace of couenaunt. 649
Signes of thinges to come be vvonderfull tokens in the Skye and earth. 649
Signes sent from God, some bee miraculous some not. 649.
Sygnes giuen of GOD vvithout vvounder haue a diuersytie in the vse they be giuen for. 650
Some to signifie and to admonyshe onely. 650
Some bee called signes of admyssyon bycause they signifie to admonyshe and consigne. 650
Some signifie and offer somthing vvithall. 650
VVe vvill novve speake of sacramentes or Sacramentall signes. 650
The Scriptures speake but of tvvo Sacramentes onely and three Sacramentall signes. 650
The knovvledge of signes is necessary to christian Doctrine. 650

What a Sacrament is. 651.

The olde vvriters vnderstood this vvorde Sacrament otherviſe than the Church novve doth. 651
The olde vvriters called a sacrament an Othe. 651
VVhen the church attributed binding to Sacramentall signes they named them Sacramentes. 651
Some saye Sacramentes, is asmuch to say as Misterie. 651.
A Sacrament is an holy signe and the visible forme of an inuisible Grace. 651.

CLIX.

VVhereof a Sacramentall signe doth consist. 951

A Sacrament consisteth of tvvo thinges, one visible, and an other inuisible. 651.
There be three thinges in a Sacrament, the vvorde, Element, & inuisible grace. 652.
The Papistes saye the Priestes doe consecrate Sacraments with speaking the worde. 652
We say the Lorde by instituting the Sacramentes did consecrate Sacraments for the Church, to the worldes ende. ibidem
It pertaineth to God only to make Sacraments, not to the vniust. 652
We be not makers but administratours of Sacraments. ibidem.
The Element is that whervnto the woorde is added, Water, Wyne, and Bread. ibidem.
The Element is called the visible fourme of the Sacrament. ibidem
The inuisible grace is the thing vvhich is signified by the visible forme. ibidem
A Sacramente is a visible forme of an inuisible grace 652
They vvhich deuide the Sacramentes into two partes only, doe omitte the effecte of the Sacrament. 653
Some leaue out the vvoorde. ibidem.
It helpeth much to the plaine vnderstanding of the Sa-

CLX.

cramentes, if the diuision be considered full. 653
This vvorde Sacrament maye not be giuē to all the three partes of a Sacrament. ibidem.
The Element is called a Sacrament, but the vvord nor the inuisible grace be not ibidem.
The Sacramente is chavved vvith teeth, but the effect of it is not. ibidem
The Sacramente is receyued vvhere the effecte is not receiued. 653

Of the number of the Sacramentes of the new Testament. 653.

The Papiste maketh seuē Sacramentes. 653
The Fathers knevv not of the number of seuen Sacramentes. 653
There bee but tvvo Sacramentes, one of Baptisme and one of the Lords Supper. 654
Misteries bee called Sacramentes in one sense, and Sacramentall signes in an other. ibidem
There must be diligēt distinction kept betvvixt Misteries, called Sacramentes and Sacramentall Signes. 655
The Papistes make penaunce a Sacrament. ibidem
Bicause it calleth the signe or visible forme, it can be no Sacrament. ibidem
The Papistes saye that Iames did institute an oylyng to be a Sacrament. 655
We saye Iames instituted no Sacramente of the nevve lavve. 656

CLXI.

Doctor Dunce sayeth, Iames had no suche authoritie. 656
The Papistes make confirmation a Sacramente. ibidem.
But bycause it hath neither vvoorde of Christes institution, nor Elemente, therefore it can bee no Sacrament. ibidem
They saye creame is the Element or outvvarde Signe. ibidem.
There is no testimonie of creame in Scriptures. 657
Laying on of handes vvas not delyuered of the Lorde nor vsed for a Sacrament. ibidem.
The Papistes make orders a Sacrament. ibidem
But it hath neither vvorde of institution nor visible signe therefore it is no Sacrament. 657
The Papistes make Matrimonie a Sacrament. ibidem
But they can not proue it to be a Sacrament of the nevv lavve. ibidem
Sacramentes be giuen to the faythfull onely, but Matrimonie belongeth to all nations. 658
Matrimonie is a misterie but not a Sacrament. ibidem
Euery Sacrament is a Misterie but not euery mistery a Sacrament. 658
We do allovv penaunce, confirmation, orders, and Matrimonie, but vve doe not alovve them to be Sacraments. 659

VVhy Christe did ordeyne outvvarde Sacraments. 659.

In giuing Sacramental signes

CLXII.

God applyeth hym self vnto our capacitie. 659
Sacramentall signes bee giuen to bee tokens of Gods Grace to put in vre oure faith. 660
Saluation is to be sought in Christe, not in the Sacramentall signe. ibidem
The opinion of saluation by the vvoorke vvhiche is vvroughte in the Sacrament is not to bee borne vvithall. ibidem
Sacramentes bee not onelye the marke of our professiō and Christian societie. 661.

VVhat manner of Sacraments the Lord hath instituted. 661.

The multitude of outvvarde Signes is not meete for the nevve Testament. ibidem
The Sacraments of the Iewes vvere combresome. 662
The Sacramentes of Christe be outvvardly base, in meaning most excellent. 662
Hovve the Sacramentes of Christe bee precious and noble. ibid.
Sacramentes are not to bee iudged after outvvard qualitie, nor yet superstitiously. 663

The difference of the Sacraments of the olde and new Testament. 663.

They differ in fevvnesse. 663
They differ in varietie of signes. ibidem

CLXIII.

The olde Sacramente consisted in bloudshedding, the nevve shedde none, but are signes of Christs bloud shedde. 664
The olde are turned by the nevve. ibidem
In the outvvarde respectes they differ, in the invvarde not. ibidem
There is but one Auᵭhour of them both. ibid.
There is all one cause of bothe their institutions. ibidem.
In them bothe the signe and that vvhich is signified is not all one. ibid
The effecte of them both is al one. 665
The fauh of both Sacraments is all one. ibidem
Concerning the efficacie of Sacramentes the Fathers erred. ibid.
They attributed saluation & grace really vnto the Sacramēt though there vvere no fayth. ibid
This errour is contrarie to the doctrine of iustifying faith. ibidem.
As the Sacramentes be signes of Grace, so they signifie Grace both in the old and nevve Testament. 665
Sacramentall signes doe confirme in both Testaments, as enseales signes, but not as the Spirit hym self doth. 666.
Not the Sacramente but the faithe of the Sacramente doth iustifie. 666

VVhether there be grace annexed vnto the Sacramentes. 667.

CLXIIII.

The faythfull do not dispute vvhether Grace bee annexed vnto the Sacramentes. 667
They that lacke faythe doe seeke to be saued vvithout Grace, and therefore dispute thus of Sacramentes. ibidem.
Suche menne doe alvvayes finde Doctors that be sycke of the same disease. ibid.
They knovvve that the signe is not the thyng signified. ibidem.
They knovvve that a Sacramente anayleth not vvithout grace. 668
They knovvve that a Sacrament can not bee vvithout the vvorde. ibid.
They aske not vvhether grace be tyed to the vvorde but vvhether grace bee tied to the Sacrament. 668
They seeke a coniunction of Grace vnto Sacramentes, for both good and badde to take parte off. 668
Hovvve and in vvhat sorte Grace is not tyed vnto the Sacramentes. ibid.
Grace is not ioyned naturally to Sacramentes. ibid.
Grace is not locally in Sacraments. ibidem
Grace is not bodyly ioyned to Sacramēts. ibidem
Grace is not bounde to Sacramentes as it were absolutelye by obligation. ibidem.
Grace is not in the Sacrament as fyre is in a peece of Iron. 669.
Grace is ioyned Sacramentally to the Sacrament. ibidem.
If grace bee excluded from the visible forme, it shall be no Sa-

CLXV.

no Sacrament. 569
Grace is so tyed to the Sacrament, that hee that receyueth vvithout faith, is not partaker of the grace. 670
Example of receyuing the Sacrament vvithout grace, is Simon Magus. 670

Of the integritie or wholenesse of the Sacrament. 670.

He that beleeueth not at all, eyther beleeueth amisse, can not receyue the whole Sacrament. 670
Sacramentes be very often receyued not whole, but in halues. ibidem
The people in the Popesie do not receyue the whole Sacrament. ibid.
They receyue not the vvorde of institutiō, for the Priest mumbleth it vp. 670
They receyue not the Sacrament vvhole, for the Priest keepeth the cup of Christes bloud from them. ibid
If ye will recken Grace for a part of the Sacrament, than they receyue none at all. ibidem.
Though Sacramentes bee of them selues vvhole, they be not so to vs, except all their partes be receyued in pure fayth. 671

Of Baptisme. 671.

What this vvoorde Baptisme is. 672
There be sundrie opinions of the definition of Baptisme ibidem.

CLXVI.

Hovvve Baptisme maye be called the Sacramente of penaunce. 672
Baptisme is the Sacrament of faith. ibidem
Baptisme is the Sacrament of lyfe. 673
Baptisme is the sacrament of Christian profession. 673
Baptisme is the Sacrament of Christian societie. ibid.
Baptisme a token of afflictions. 673. and 674
Baptisme is the vvasshing avvaye of sinnes. 674
Baptisme is the bathe of regeneration. ibidem
Baptisme maye bee vvithout the Spirite. 675
The full and perfect definition of Baptisme. ibid.
Why Baptisme can not bee Iterated. ibid.
Baptisme of inspiration. 676.
Baptisme of bloude. 676
Hovvve the Baptisme of Iohn and the Apostles doe differ. 677
The comparison of the Baptisme of Iohn and of the Apostles. ibidem.
Paule Baptised agayne the twelue Disciples. Act. 19. 678.
Sundrye opinions of this fact of Paule. 678
The twelue disciples vvere twyse baptised. 679
Yet is there no gappe opened for Anabaptistes to rebaptise. ibid.

Of the institution of Baptisme, 681.

Iohn baptised first. ibid.
The Institution of baptisme enlarged. ibidem
VVho instituted baptisme. ibidem.

CLXVII.

The Auᵭhour of the Grace must needes be the author of the Signe. 682
Vnto vvhome Baptisme is appointed. ibidem
The manner of Baptisme. ibidem.
VVhy Christ sayeth not, baptise in the name of the God of Abraham. 683
VVhy hee sayde not, in the name of God, the vvorde, and the Spirit. 683
VVhy the Apostles vsed the fourme of baptising mentioned. Act. 28. 10. 684
VVe must beware vvee make not three Gods. 685
It is not hard to knovvve the Trinitie in vnitie, and vnitie in Trinitie. ibidem
There is not set forth any inequalitie of persons. 685

Of the Administration of Baptisme. 686.

Vnto vvhome baptisme may be giuen. 686
No man ought to bee put from the Baptisme of Christ. 686
The communication of grace doth include the communicating of the Sacrament. ibidem.
Infantes dying vvithout baptisme, bee saued thereby. 687.
The Communion of Grace standeth vpon two things. ibidem.
Vpon the common necessitie of al men and vpon the vvill of God. 687

Vnto whome Baptisme ought to be giuen. 687.

CLXVIII.

Euery man is not immediatly to be baptiſed. 687
Two impedimentes of Baptiſme manifeſt. 688
The ſecrete impedimentes lacke of election, and hath the outvvard ſigne but not the invvarde grace. 688
The manifeſt impediment is the open refuſall of the grace offered by preaching, vvherevnto the outvvarde ſigne can not bee giuen. ibidem.

Of the Baptiſme of children. 689.

Anabaptiſtes ſaye, Infantes ought not to be baptiſed. 689
They rebaptiſe ſuche as bee baptiſed in infancie. 689
Infantes can not beleeue. 689
In Baptiſme is requiſite an open profeſsion of fayth, not a ſecret faith. ibidem
Euery thing is not required of infantes that be required of them of vnderſtanding. ibidem.
Infantes can not be blamed of incredulitie, though thei haue no fayth. 690
The Anabaptiſtes do vayncly require a fayth and repentaunce of infantes. ibidem
They alleage inſufficient definitions of Baptiſme. 690
They alleage, he that beleeueth and is baptiſed. 691
Wee ſaye that Chriſte preſcribeth which ſhalbe ſaued, which condemned, not vvhich ſhalbe baptiſed. ibidem.
Hee ſayeth not, let them

CLXIX.

that beleeue bee baptiſed. 691
The firſt foundation of oure ſaluation is election. 691
Infantes departing out of the vvorlde vvithout baptiſing be ſaued thereby. 692
The Apoſtles baptiſed them that had vnderſtandyng, ibidem.
That argueth not, but that they might alſo baptiſe children. ibidem
They ſaye it is not redde, that infantes vvere baptiſed. ibidem.
It is not reade alſo that the Apoſtles vvere baptiſed. ibidem.
We can not argue from not vvritten to not doyng. 692
There vvas no cauſe of neceſſitie to vvrite of infantes. ibidem.
They ſaye there is no precept of the Lord concerning infantes. ibidem
Therefore vve haue authoritie to applie baptiſme to the infantes by example of circumciſion. 693
Of them that doe haſte too ſcrupulouſly vvith their infantes to baptiſme. ibid.
The vayne queſtions of the Schoolemen of baptiſing of infantes before they be borne. 693

How Baptiſme is to be Miniſtred. 694.

The Sacrament is to be miniſtred fully and vvholy. 694.
Acceſſaries to Baptiſme vſed in the papiſtrie. ibidem
Oyle, Salte, Spittle, burning Candels, Coniuring, hal-

CLXX.

lovved vvater. 694. and 695.
Of the dipping in of Children. 696
It is free for the Churche to vſe other dipping or ſprinkling. ibidem.
A childe or one of vnderſtanding, may conueniently be baptiſed ſundrye vvayes. 697.
It is meete the father of the childe ſhoulde be preſente at the baptiſme of his ovvn chylde. 698
Baptiſme is to be vſed in the vulgare language. 698
They ought to vſe reuerence in Baptiſme. 698

Of the vſe of Baptiſme. 699.

The vſe of Baptiſme is that he that is baptiſed doe employe him ſelfe to liue according to his profeſsion. 699
The fulfilling of baptiſme is in tvvo partes. 700
The Spirit of ſanctification. ibidem.
What is required of thē that be baptiſed. ibidem
VVhat faithe is required of them that be baptiſed. ibidem.
Nevvenes of life is required of them that bee baptiſed. 701.
That vve be dead vnto ſinne. ibidem.
It is not enough to be deade vnto ſinne, except vve liue vnto righteouſnes. 702
Faythe and obedyence is required of them that bee baptiſed. 703

They

CLXXI.

They that bee baptiſed muſt folovv Vnitie. 703

Of the Lords Supper. 704.

The decay of vnderſtanding and minde is hurtefull in thismatter. 704.
What theyr endeauour muſt be that vvill ſpeake of the miſterie of the Lords Supper. 704.
The deuiſions of this matter. 705.

VVhat the Lords Supper is. 705.

The Lords Supper is a compounded thing. 705.
Single & compoūded things are diuerſly to bee conſidered. 705.
The vnitie of things cōpounded. 706
The Lords Supper is both an holy, miſticall, and ceremoniall thing. 706
What maner of gueſtes the Lords ſupper doth require
The names of the Lords Supper are to bee conſidered. 707.
The names of the Lords Supper be of three ſorts. 707
The Body and Bloud of the Lord. 707
The breaking of bread. 708
The Bread and Cuppe of the Lord. 708
The Lords Supper. 708
The Cōmunion of the body and Bloud of the Lord. 708.
The Lords Table. 708
The Sinaxis or congregation 709.
The holy table. 709.
The Publyke Mynyſterye. 709

CLXXII.

The memorie of the Lord. 709.
Thankes giuing. 709
It is called Loue. 709
The Sacrament of the Body and bloud of the Lorde. 709.
The Sacryfice of the Bodye and Bloud of the Lorde. 709.
Abuſes in this worde of Sacrifice. 710
The definition of the Lordes Supper. 710
VVhat is the inſtitution of the Lordes Supper. 711
The vvoorde of inſtitution is declared in Scriptures. 711.

VVho did inſtitute. 712

The auᵭhor of the Lords Supper. 712
Of vvhence the abuſes in the Lordes Supper doe come. 712.
Why the apoſtle ſetteth forth the auᵭhority of the Lord. 712.
The duetie of a faithfull Miniſter. 713
Chriſtian people ought to accept nothinge but the auᵭhoritie of the Lorde. 713.

VVhat the Lord did inſtitute. 713.

Both the deede and vvordes of Chriſt are to bee conſidered in this behalfe. 713.
VVhat the deede that Chriſte did vvas. 714.
VVhat manner of deede it vvas that Chriſte dyd. 714.
VVhat Breade hee vſed 714.

CLXXIII.

Why Chriſt vſed vnleauened Bread. 714
The cōtrouerſie of the Greeks and Latiniſts of the Breade of the Lords Supper. 714
VVhat the Cup is. 715
Some mingle vvater vvith the vvine. 715
The faſhion of the Eaſt cuntrie. 716
Of the doings of the Greeks. 716.
Why Chriſt brake the Bread. 716.
The threefould breakinge of the Bread by the Papiſtes. 717.
VVhy hee gaue not his Diſciples the Bread to breake. 717.
Chriſt ſaide, Take, Eate, &c. 718.
Chriſt ſaid, drincke of this al. 718.
VVhether Chriſt did eate and drinke firſte. 718
By vvhat vvords Chriſt declared his doings. 718
There is requiſite an vnderſtāding of a faithful mind. 719.
The ignorant muſt be enformed of the meaning of the Lords Supper. 719
The purpoſe of the auᵭhor to vſe modeſty in this matter. 719
There bee but tvvo Sacramēts, aſvvel, in the olde as in the nevve Teſtament. 720
Hovv Chriſt ioyned the nevv Teſtament after the olde. 720.
The paſſinge ouer of the olde Teſtament to the nevve. 720.
Hee toke the Breade, &c. 721.
The Sacramēt is of two parts. 721.
There is meate and dryncke

CLXXIIII.

in the Sacramente of the nevve Testament. 721
He sayde this is my body, &c. 722.
The pronoune This, is referis referred too the bread. 723
The vvoorde This, is the subiectum, and contemneth the things that Christe spake off. ibidem.
Christe speaketh not simply of bread. ibidem
We muste consider vvhat the Lord speaketh of the bread ibidem.
Christe sayeth of the bread, This is my body. 724
The naturall man abasshieth at this, as the Capernaites did. ibidem
The manner of reasonyng vvhereby the Papistes are deceyued. ibidem
The transsubstantiation of the breade brought vp by the same. ibidem
The subtill reason of the Sophisters doe serue for the same. ibidem
We must keepe a difference betvvixte vvordes that declare the nature of a thing and vvordes Sacramentally spoken. 725
These vvordes, Is my body, be Sacramentally spoken by Christe of the pronoune, This. ibidem
Christ vvould haue the bread to bee the Sacrament of his body. ibidem
Christe sayde not, In this or vnder this is my bodye. 726
In these vvoordes of Christe, there be tvvo subiectes and tvvo predicates. ibidem
In the vvoorde This, is contayned bread, which is said to be his body. 727

CLXXV.

In the vvorde, vvhich, is conteyned his body, vvhich is sayde should bee giuen for his disciples. 727
VVee may not flee from the vvoordes of the Lorde. 728
The Lordes bodye is not in the bread by vertue of the vvordes. ibidem
It is not all one to saye this is my body, and in this is my body. ibidem
They goe about to chaunge the LORDES vvordes. ibidem.
VVe muste stycke faste to the Lordes vvordes. 728
Howve the bread may be the Lordes body. 729
VVhether the bread bee naturally, personally, or really the LORDES bodye. ibidem
VVhether it be corporally the Lordes body. 729
VVhether it be spiritually the Lordes body. 730
VVhether it bee figuratiuely the LORDES bodye. ibidem.
VVhether it be significatiuely the LORDES bodye. ibidem.
The bread is the Lordes body Sacramentally. 731
They saye, that the vvoordes bee spoken in their proper sense. 732
The bread is the Lordes body not naturally, personally, corporally, nor really, but Sacramentally. ibidem VVhat is Sacramentally. ibidem.
It is an holye signe and remembraunce of his body giuen for vs. ibidem
Whether we haue the Supper vvithout the presence of Christe. 733

CLXXVI.

There is a spirituall presence of hys vvhich vvee ought to seeke, and not the corporall. 733
Some go about to proue the corporall presence, by the personall vnitie of Christes clarified bodie. ibidem
The vvordes of the laste supper vvere spoken before his body vvas clarifyed, vvhich sence is to be kept. 734
Of the vbiquite of Christes body. ibidem
The Fathers declare Christe to bee in heauen concerning his manhode, and euery vvhere concerning his Godhead. 735
The ignorance of the Sacramentall vvaye hath sylled Christes churche with horrible superstitions. 735
Christe sayth, vvhich is giuen for you. 736
It is no reason to thinke that Christe sayde this of the bread. ibidem
The bread vvas gyuen to the Disciples, but not for the Disciples. 737
The body vvas gyuen for the Disciples, but not to the Disciples. ibid.
VVe muste attribute to the bread, that vvhich is conuenient for a Sacrament, and attribute the grace it selfe too the Lordes body. ibidem.
He gaue his bodye also to his Disciples. 738
That Sacramentall gyuing doeth assure vs, that his body is ours. 738
He sayeth not, this is my bodye vvhich shal rise againe. ibidem.
VVhen vvee speake of the Lordes supper, there needeth no disputation of his CLXXVII.

sytting at the ryght hande of the father. 738
Howve the vvoordes of breaking do agree to the Lords body. 739
Christes bodye vvas broken, vvhen it dyed vpon the Crosse. ibidem
The breakyng of the breade, in the Lordes supper, is onely the breaking of the signe. ibidem
Some doe apply these vvords, is gyuen and broken for you, vnto the bread verye vnaptly. ibidem
This Cuppe is the nevve Testament. 740
The pronoune This, is referred to the Cuppe. ibidem
It is spoken of the Cuppe, as it is before of bread. 740
Cyprian sayeth, vve cleaue to the Crosse and sucke the bloud. 741
If these vvoordes bee Sacramentally spoken, there is no inconueniency in them. 742
The naturall taste of the Sacramentall vvyne doeth sauour of Christes bloude Sacramentally, not of corporall presence. 742
By this saying, it is the Testament, is ment it is the Sacramente of the nevve Testament ibidem
What a Testament is. ibidem
The conditions, vvhateby a Testament is ratified. 742
That the testatour haue free power too make a Testament. ibidem
The Father had gyuen all things into Christes hands. ibidem.
The things bequeathed must bee the Testatours ovvne propre. ibidem Christe is the onelye begot-

CLXXVIII.

ten and heyre of all 742
The onely begotten hath no aliaunce, to vvhome the Testament maye be preiudiciall. 743
Menne can not saye they haue deserued that vvhich Christe hath bequeathed. ibidem.
The order of a Testamente doeth requyre executours. ibidem.
Christes Testament hath Ministers and disposers of Gods misteries. 743
To the ratifying of a Testament, is requisite the death of the testatour. 743
Howve the nevve Testamente is in Christes bloud. 743
By the sheading of bloude there vvas signified a bloudy death. 744
The vvorde of sheading, is not to bee referred too the cuppe of the Sacramente but the bloude of Christe. 744.
He speaketh not of the glorifying of his bloud, but of sheading vvhich vvas vpon the Crosse. 745
The opinion of the corporall presence is to no purpose. ibidem.

VVhat is the reason and profite of the sheading of the bloud of Christe.
746.

Hee tooke vppon hym the cause of vs all. ibidem
Christes bloude vvas shedde also for the Apostles. 747.

CLXXIX.

VVhat the Lord commaunded vs to doe in this matter of the Supper.
747.

Christe did some thing hym selfe, and some thing hee commaunded vs too doe. 747
This do in the remembrance of me. ibidem
He set forth his Sacramentall deede for vs to doe, but he died for our sinnes once for all him selfe. 748
He sayeth not offer this too God the Father. ibidem
Hee biddeth vs too doe that vvhich vvee can do, no that vve can not doe. 748
He commaunded no myraculous thing too bee done. ibidem.
He sayeth not this vvyll I doe agayne, but this doe ye. 748.
The Byshop of Rochester doeth confesse, no priest doth consecrate the bodye and bloud of Christ. 749
That the Lorde did once, is one thing, and that continually is done by vs is an other. 750
The Papistes presume to doe that vvhich the Lorde neither dyd nor commaunded vs to doe, and that GOD commaunded they vvyll not doe. 750
Christe sayeth doe this in remembrance of me. 751
He reciteth this vvorde, this, tvvise. ibidem
He sayeth not, doe this to my presence. ibidem
Whether that vvee haue the remembraunce of Christe in the Lordes Supper, CLXXXII.

Christ beeing absent. 752
Some doe confound the spirituall and corporall presence of Christ. 752
He saith not, doe this to the forgiuenesse of sinnes. 753
Some brethren do argue that the nevve testament is in the Lordes Supper, and hath forgiuenes of sinnes. 753.
Forgiuenes of sins is to be attributed to the simple oblation of the Lordes body and bloud once done vpon the Crosse. 754
By vvhat gradation wee must seeke the forgiuenesse of sinnes. 755
The vvorde hath the Crosse, the Crosse hath the body and bloud, the body and bloud hath the nevve Testament, the Testament hath life eternall. 755

VVhat is the right disposig & administration of the Lordes supper. 755.

By vvhom the Lordes supper ought to be ministred. 755
The Lordes supper is not to be ministered of euery ma 756.
In some places the Mynister of the vvorde, doth not administer the Sacrament, 756.
The Papistes ordeyne forsweters of mariage, & keepers of vvhores, to mynyster the Sacraments. 756
They dispute vvhether the Sacramentes ministration of naughty packes be allowable. 756
The authoritie of the Sacramentes dependeth vpon Christes true instruction, not vpon the qualytie of the Mynister. 756

To whom the Lordes supper is to be ministred, and to whō not. 757

The Lordes supper is common and publicke to all the Church. 757
The Papistes dispence their massing sacrifice to the dead also. 757
After the Apostles time there vvas menciō made of matters, to a thanckes giuing to God for their stedfastnesse. 757.
The Lordes supper is to bee ministered to the lyuing, not to the dead. 757, and 758.
With so dooing, vve doe not exclude the dead from the efficacie of Christes death. 758
There be tvvo kindes of dead folkes, to vvhom the Sacramentes be not to be ministred. 578
The one dead in body, the other dead in soule. 758
Of them that are ready to dye, and of prisoners, 758
The Papistes thincke there is no vvay to heauen, vvythout the last Communyon, at the poynte of death, 758.
They call the last Communion the pasporte or safeconduct. 759
Other doe not admitte pryuate Communion of the sicke for three causes. 759.
Bycause the LORD vvoulde haue it publicke and ecclesiasticall. 759

CLXXXIIII.

That men shoulde not forsake the publike, in hope of the priuate and last cōmunion. 759
That the opinion of attrybuting to muche to the vvoorke that is vvrought, shoulde take no place. 759.
They that be fallen and bee excommunicate, if they seeke to be reconciled, are to bee receyued into the Communions. 759
An history of one that fell. 759.
The, Papistes doe not giue the Sacrament to prysoners, and such as shall suffer. 760
Such prysoners as haue worthyly repented ought to haue the sacrament gyuen them at their ende. 760
Paules vvordes, that a man shoulde proue himselfe, be spoken to them in whō daunger is to eate vnvvorthily. 763
We alovve the dooinges of Elders after a sorte and yet not improue the present. 764
VVe disalowe that Augustine sayth, that infantes dying vvythout the participating of the Sacramentes can not be saued. 764

VVhen the Lordes supper ought to bee ministered. 764.

Christ prescribed no tyme, but sayde onely, Doe this, 764.
The Elders doe not agree of the time of Celebratyon of the Lordes supper. 764.

CLXXXIII.

In Augustines dayes they thought good to celebrate euery daye. 764
In all meetinges of the churche. 765
Some onely vpon the Sundayes. 765
At lengthe it vvas ordayned to be done three tymes in the yeare, 765
The poperie brought it to once a yeare. 765
It is not so much required that they do it oftē, as that they doe it vvell. 765

Howe the Lordes supper ought to bee celebrate. 765.

This sacrament is vvholy to be ministred. 766
The cōmunion in one kinde onely, is against the manifest institution of Christ. 766.
They offende againste the holinesse of the sacrament. 766
They offend against the confirmation of the nevve Testament. 767
Eckeus saith, there is as much in one kinde, as there is in both. 768.
In so saying he condemneth Christes institution. 768
They offend against the traditions of the Apostles. ibid,
They breake the custome of the primatiue Churche. ibid.
Ierom saith, they do vvickedly againste the lavve of Christ. 769
The vse of the communicating vnder both kindes, continued till Thomas of Aquinas daies. ibid.
It continued vntyll the councell of Constance. Anno. 1414. 770

CLXXXIIII.

Chrisostome maintaine the the communion in both kindes, ibid.
The conclusion of the matter doth declare, that the papistes do offende in euery behalfe, as is aboue said. ibid.
The Lordes supper must bee ministred cōueniently. 771
Three respectes of conuenient ministrarion. ibid.
The respect of the minister, vvho represēteth the good stevvarde. ibid.
Respect of the thing that is ministred. 772
The communion maye bee done in silence. ibid.
Respect must be had in the people that doe communicate. ibid.
In the people vve must take heede of superstytion and contempt. ibid.
The communion muste bee done in the vulgar tongue. 773.

VVhat is the true and lawfull vse of the Lordes supper. 774.

There is a double vse of this sacrament. ibid.
Of that vvhich Christe doeth fulfill tovvards vs. ibid.
Of that vvhich vvee ought to performe and fulfill. ibid.
What thinges be required of vs. ibid.
That vve doe not contemne it. ibid.
That vve do it conueniently and accordingly. 775
That vve do it not onely sacramentally, but vvith the harte. ibid.
With vvhat harte vve muste communicate. ibid.
With an healthfull and hungry harte. ibid.
The health of the harte is CLXXXV.

true fayth. 776
The hunger of the harte, is a greedy desire of Christes grace. ibid.
Who they be vvhich neither eate nor dryncke the body and bloud of Christ. ibid.
The eatyng of the Lordes body, is to be taken metaphorically. 777
The breade is eaten properly in his kinde, the Lordes body is eaten improperly and metaphorically. ibid.
Some deny that the lordes very body is eaten, and hys very bloud dronke. 778
They that denye that the Lordes body is eaten properly in his naturall kinde do vvell. ibid
They that say, the very body is eaten improperly and metaphorically, doe vvell. ibid.
There is no cause vvhy the faithfull shoulde striue about this matter. ibid.
Three sundry vvayes of eatyng Christes body. ibid.
The one is temporarye and Iterable, that is sacramentally. 779
The sacramentall eating, is not yterated, becausse vvee shoulde yterate the receyuing of the Lordes verye body. ibid.
The continual and vnceasing eating of Christes body is not sacramentall but spirituall. ibid.
Hovve vve be made partakers of the continuall fruition of Christes body. 780
By being incorporate & grafted in Christe, the Sacrament of vvhich grafting in is Baptisme. ibid.
What manner of men vvee ought to bee, comming to the Lordes table. ibid.

CLXXXVI.

VVe muſt be alreadi partakers thereof by faith. 781
VVe takenot avvay the ſpirituall eating frō the lordes ſupper. 781
Of the eating of the vvicked. 781
VVe ought not to beſtovve anye labovre aboute the queſtion. 781
It is not gathered aright vpō the Lordes vvordes that the vvicked do eate of the Lordes body. 782
A man maye eate, the lordes bread vnvvorthely, but he can not eate the Lordes bodye, but ſacramentally. 783.
They alleadge that Iudas receyued the Lordes body and bloude. 784
Hyllarie doth holde that Iudas vvas not preſent vvhen this ſacrament vvas inſtituted. 784
Whether the ſacraments be common as vvell to the euill, as to the good. 786
Naturall giftes be common both to good and euill. 786
It may be a doubt vvhether the order of ſpirituall gifts and ſacramentes bee ſo. 786.
The vvorde is all one in it ſelfe, but not all one in the mindes of the hearers. 787.
The ſacramentes bee all one in themſelues, but to them that receiue them, it is not all one. 787
Though God bee immutable he is not all one to the euill as to the good. 787
Hovve the true faithfull doe behaue themſelues at the laſt ſupper. 788
They prepare theſelues with careful heede. 788

CLXXXVII.

They giue eare to the doctrine of the truth and pray faythfully. 788
They frame their lyfe aftervvarde according to the ſpirite. 789

Of the Popiſh Maſſe. 790.

The cuſtome of euery age is the tirannie thereof. 790
We muſt preferre the manifeſt truth before anye cuſtome. 790

Of the ſubſtance of the Maſſe. 790.

The Maſſe is not the outvvarde things that be done and ſpoken. ibid.
The ſubſtaunce of the maſſe conſiſteth in that vvhich none els but the prieſts may doe by their auctoritie. 791
They ſay they offer vp Chriſt to God the Father. ibid
It appeareth by the vvordes of their Canon. ibid.
What thinges the prieſtes do attribute to their maſſe. ibid.
They performe the office of mediation betvvixt God and his church. ibid.
They offer vp Chriſtes body and bloude. 791
They obtaine by the vvorke of their oblation forgiueneſſe of ſinnes for bothe the quicke and deade, and all that euer is good beſides. ibid.
In vvhat things vve do finde the maſſe to bee naught. ibid.

CLXXXVIII.

VVhether that the prieſt when he ſingeth Maſſe do playe the mediatour betwixt God and the Church. 792

Gabriell Byell ſayth that the prieſt is a mediatour betvvixt Chriſt & his Churche. 792
We ſay it muſt be proued by Scriptures that ther is ſuch a ſacrifice inſtituted by God. ibidem
VVe finde no mention of this prieſthood in the new Teſtament. 793
VVhether that Biſhops and Elders vvere prieſtes in the primitiue Church. ibid.
The office of a Biſhop & Elder ſerueth not for the Popiſhe prieſtes. 794
No man can readily proue that the miniſters vvere called prieſts in the primitiuec Church. 794

VVhether that the body and bloude of Chriſt be offered to God the father at the Maſſe. 794.

The vvordes of the Canon of the maſſe concerning offering. 794
The vvordes of the Canon ſpake of manye ſacrifices not of one alone. ibid.
The vvordes of the Canon be ſpoken before their cōſecration and tranſubſtantiation. ibid.
The vvords of the canon can not be ment of the offering vp of Chriſt. 795
If they offer vp breade and vvine, they doe it beſides Chriſtes ordinances. 795

CLXXXIx.

Chriſt offered not bread and vvine to his father, but gaue it his diſciples 795
They alleage Melchiſedech. ibid.
Melchiſedech did not offer bread to the Lorde, but brought it to Abraham. ibid.
In the primitiue church the rych fedde the needye at a common table. 796
The vvordes of their Canon ſpake further of a ſacrifice, but not ſuch as they onely, and none els can offer in their maſſe. 796
A ſacrifice of prayſe is common vnto all faithfull. 796
The old fathers call the lords ſupper a thankes giuinge. 797.
The ſacrifice of prayſe can not be offered of al mē. 797
Chriſt neuer offered nor commaunded vs to offer at the ſupper. ibid.
Chriſt can not bee offered agayne. 798
Chriſt can not be offered but by himſelfe. ibid.
That vvhich is offered is not better thē the offerer. ibid.
It is not neceſſary that Chriſt ſhoulde be offered againe. ibid.
They alleadge, Euery Biſhop taken from men is appointed for giftes and ſacrifices for ſinnes. 801
VVe ſay theſe ſayinges of the prieſtes of the olde Teſtament can not bee referred to the nevve. ibid.
They alleage the place of Malachie, I haue no pleaſure in you, &c. ibid.
The abhomination of their Popiſhe prieſthoode doth declare this of Malachye to be ſpoken againſt them. 801. & 802.

CXC.

God doth receiue revvarde of none vvhome hee can not abide. 802
They ſay Chriſt vvhom they offer doth pleaſe God, although they doe diſpleaſe God. ibid.
Chriſt offered himſelfe once, vvho bid them offer him agayne. ibid.
They ſay the maſſe is a continuall ſacrifice. 803
The continuall ſacryfice vvas the ſacrifice of the lavve. ibid.
They ſay the fathers called the Lordes ſupper a ſacryfice. 803.
The fathers called it a ſacrifice not properly, but improperly. ibid

VVhether forgiueneſſe of ſinnes & all the merites of Chriſtes death with all other thinges that be good, be obtayned of God by the Maſſe. 804.

Gabryell Byell ſayth, that the prieſt may applye the vertue of the maſſe ſpecyally. 804
They ſay that the vertue of the maſſe is auailable moſt ſpecially, moſt generally, and in a meane ſorte. 804
Moſt ſpecially is onely to himſelfe that ſaithe the maſſe. 804
Moſt generally is to the hole vniuerſall Church. 804
The meane auaile and profite is to a certayne apointed perſons mentioned in their prayers. 804
VVe ſay, they can not proue that Chriſt or his Apoſtles did inſtitute their office, vvhereby they vvill offer Chriſt vnto god the father. 805.

CXCI.

They muſt declare how their vvorke vvhich they do, can deſerue forgiueneſſe of ſin, ſeeing God did not inſtitute it, nor hys apoſtles taught it. 805
VVee maye therefore more lavvfully deoy their prieſts povver of applying Chriſtes geace and vertue to vvhom they lyſte, as they may affirme it. 806
In that they ſaye, their maſſe hath his efficacie by the merites of the Church, they do iniury to Chriſtes death. 806.
The maſſe prieſt doth applye ỹ euerlaſting lyfe moſt ſpecially to himſelfe, for charities ſake. 806
They ſay, orderly charity beginneth at hir ſelfe firſte. ibid.
It is maruaile that any prieſt doth miſcarie, ſeeing that they can appoynt theſelues euerlaſting lyfe in halfe an houre, by ſaying maſſe. 806.
The prieſte doe not greatly regarde their ovvne generall applycation, bycauſe they haue profite by it. 806
They vſe the name of it, to ſet foorth the dignitie of their office. 806
Their ſpeciall application for their founders and benefactours, bringeth them moſt gaines. 807
Why they doe not delyuer ſouls vvith one maſſe with out any more coſt. 807
VVhy the ryche mans ſoule hath neede of more maſſes then the poore. 808
The more men doe beſtovve vpō maſſes, the more they neede Maſſes. 808
How could the ſoules of the dead in the apoſtles times

CXCII.

be saued vvhen the masse vvas not knovven. 808
Why there vvas not so great a multitude of masses in old tyme. 808
VVhether the fathers vvere not as religious as they that came after. ibid.
VVas the masse of more effecte of olde time vvhen there neede not so manye masses. 809
Hovv can he neede any masse that is deliuered out of purgatory by the Popes pardon. ibid.
If the Popes pardon be effectuall, vve neede no masses: if masses be effectuall vvee neede none of the Popes pardon. ibid.
If vve haue neede of masses notvvithstanding the Popes pardon, the pope deceiueth vs falsely. 809
If vve haue neede of the popes pardon notvvithstanding the masses, then the massing Priest deceiueth vs falsely. 809
It is meruaile the Pope doth not curse to death the massing priest. 809
An historie of a shomaker, that vvoulde bestowe no mony for masse at his vvyues buriall, bicause she had bought the popes pardon before. 809
VVhat maner of applicatiō is vsed in Christes church. 811
The free povver to dispense the merites of Christ, is in Christ onely. 811
The ministerie of the dispensation belongeth to the Apostles, Euangelystes, Prophetes, pastoures, and doctours. 811
Their ministerie is truely to preach the vvorde. 811
This dispensatiō is receiued

CXCIII

of such onely, vvhose hart God doeth open by hys holy spirite. 811
The mynister can aplye no more of the grace of Christ, neither vnto any other, than God doth appoynt to embrace it. 812

The seconde parte of the Popish masse, is of the accessorie errour and abuses therof. 812.

Thinges necessarie to the priest. 812
Some be absolutely necessarie, some bee necessarie of congruencie onely. 813
Absolutely necessarie be authoritie only to consecrate, habilitie of speach, stedfastnesse of intent and purpose. 813.
Thinges necessarie of congruence be, putting awaye of impedimentes, and the application of things conuenient. 813
Thinges conuenient. 813

Thinges necessarie to the action of the Masse. 813

They saye they bee generall thinges, instituted and appointed to his action by the church. 813
They graunt there is nothing set foorth by Christ in the Masse, besides the institution of the sacrament. 814
Scholasticus vvas the auctour of theyr Canon. 814
Thinges necessarie of congruence. 814
The cautels of celebration & the obseruations of the masse be innumerable. 814
Of these thinges vvhich bee

CXCIIII.

absolutely necessarie for the priest, as they saye. 815.
They referre the saying of the Lorde, Do this, vnto the priest onely. 815
God gaue the communion to the vvhole church, not to the Apostles onely. 816
It vvoulde els folovve thervpon, that Christ dyed not for all the faithfull, but for the Apostles onely. 816
Do, vvith the papystes is as much to say, as offer. 816
By these vvords, Do this, they saye Christe doth ordeyne priestes to consecrate the breade, and chaunge it into his body and bloude. 816.
Hovve they performe theyr vvorke of consecration and transubstantiation. 817
It is onely Gods povver, that chaungeth the substance of thinges. 817
Of the vvordes of the consecration. 817
The vvordes be the Lordes and not theirs, but the sense that they do vse therein, is theirs and not the Lordes. 817.
They vvill haue the sence of these words to be, this form of breade, is my body. 817
If that vvere the true sense of these vvordes, then muste there be other vvords spoken before, vvhich might inferre transubstantiation. 817.
Gabriell Biell graunteth, that the doctours be not all of one opinion in the matter 818.
They say, it is not certayn by holy Scriptures, hovve Christ did consecrate. 818
They ground themselues vpō this vvorde, Blessing. 818

To

XCV.

To blesse, is not to consecrate, but to giue thankes. 818.
The Bishop of Rochester doth confesse the same. 818
Hovv transubstāciation doth agree vvith the sacrament and the Lordes bodye and bloud. 819
Augustine saith, The vvord is ioyned vvith the element, and there is made a sacrament. 819
The vvorde commeth to the bread and vvine, in respect it is spoken by Christe, not in respect of the ministers speaking. 820
The element doth not onely remayne vnchanged by the words, but is so much the more requisit to be ther. 820
If the priest can take avvaye the substaunce of breade and vvine, then is the truth of the sacrament taken avvay. 820
If the sacrament haue no similitude of these thinges vvhose sacraments they be, then be they no sactamentes. 821
That vvhich is seene is bread and the cup. 821
Augustine saith not, That vvhich is seene is a bodily forme. 821
The nature of a Predicate is not to take avvay the subiection. 821
Our faith can not be instructed, that the breade is the body of christ, if ther be no bread in the sacramēt. 822
The Papists do say, that their massing priest must haue a purpose to that the church intendeth, els hee can not consecrate. 822
The prieste masseth for hys ovvne gayne, vvhereof the church knovveth not. 822

XCVI.

Of things necessary of congruence as vvell to the Massing priest, as to the Masse it selfe. 822
Some of thē be superstitious. 822.
Some be good of thēselues. 823.
Some bee neither good nor euill. 823
Through the gaye glose of the masse, the true supper of the Lorde is set at naught. 823

Of the Canon of the Popish Masse. 823.

The Canon is one of the absolute necessary things. 823
Men vvere not acquainted vvith thys Canon in the tyme of the Apostles and fathers that folowed them. 824.
It is not lavvfull for the Priestes out of the masse time to peruse the Canon. 824.
When they come at the Canon in masse time they are in a great dumpe and terrible feare. 824
To speake the vvordes of the Canon negligently is heynous sinne, but to read the Gospell negligently, is no sinne vvith them. 824
Wherein the Canon of the masse is to be found faulte vvithall. 824
It is heynous that the priest doth praye to God to accept his sonne. 824. & 825.
They pray God to accepte it as the gifte of Abell, Abraham, & Melchisedech vvere accepted. 825
If Christes sacrifice bee no better accepted of God thā the sacrifice of Abell, Abraham, Melchisedeth, fare-

XCVII.

vvell the saluation of the vvorde. 825
Gabriel vvould faine expoūd that prayer somvvhat clenly. 825
They pray sayth he, it may be accepted in consideration of them that doe offer it, not in respecte of the sacrifice it selfe. 825
They pray sayth he, that it may be accepted in respect of the fayth of the offerers, as Abell vvas, &c. 825
We say the sacrifices of Abrahā and Abell vvere accepted in no respect of the sacrifice, but of the persons vvhich sacrificed. 825
The Papistes are not contented vvith Christes sacrifice offered once for all, but make it like a lavvishe sacrifice. 825
Hovve can they praye that Christ may bee acceptable to the father, bicause of the faith of the offerer. 825
Christes offering hadde neuer vviped avvay sinne, except the person of Chryst had incomparablye pleased the father. 825.
It standeth not vvith reason, to pray that Christe maye please god bycause of the fayth of the offerer. 826
To vvhat purpose is it so to pray, seeing they teach that it skilleth not vvhether the sacrifice bee good or euyll. 826.
They teach the cōmon people one thing openly, and mumble an other in the canon secretely. 826
They pray more in their canon, that god vvil cōmaund his Angell to carry thys to goddes holye Altare. 826.
The expositers can not tell

CXCVIII.

hovv to expound this. 826
The vvords that vvent before doe plainely inferre it to Christ. 826
They deny therby that christ sitteth at the right hande of the Father. 826
If they meane it of Christes body and bloud, then they separate Christes body and bloud from Christ. 826
If they meane it of the vovvs of faythfull onely, and not of the body and bloude really, vvhy doe they not teach the people so. 827
They flee in this Canon to deade saintes also. 827
The Scriptures doe teach no such matter. 827
They say, they offer vp Christ in their masse to the father, and yet they thinke him not to bee a sufficient mediatour, but flee to the mediation of saintes. 827

Of the outwarde abuses of the Popishe Masse. 828.

Some abuses they maintaine as good and vpright, some they doe not maintaine as good and yet vvill they not correcte nor amende them. 828
They saye their masse in a straunge tongue. 828
They doe not declare the Lordes death, 829
They doe their Masse without Communion. 829
In times passed the minister and people did communicate together. 830
The Church of Rome forsoke that vvhich vvas left to them by the Apostles. 830.
The ecclesiasticall Communion instituted by Christe, continued tyll dissentions didde aryse betvvixt the Priestes and the Bishops 830

CXCIX.

VVhy they did rather masse priuately, than to communicate together. 831
It vvas altogether vvrought by the spirite of errour and falshoode, to aduaūce that nevv deuised priesthud. 831
To gette the more reputation, they toke the vvhole communion to thymselues in both kindes, & gaue the lay men but the halfe. 831
To be esteemed to bee holye they brought vp the sole lise of Priestes. 832
By Christes institution, married men vvere vvorthye ynough to preach the gospel, but by the Papists institution they are not vvorthy ynough to say Masse. 832.
They say masse vvithout vnderstanding. 832
They say Masse vvithout Religion & deuotion. 832
They say masse for lucre and gayne. 833
The very beginning of the massing priesthoode, is defiled vvith Simonie. 833
The coueting and seeking of the prebendes and promotions of the Church is Simonie. 833
The masse and all that pertayneth vnto it, is infected vvith Simonie. 833
The massers and Massemongers bee manifeste and shameleste vvhorehunsrers. 834.
In so plaine a detestable matter they seeke excuses. 835
They say the vvorthynesse of the vvorke that is wrought is good ynough of it selfe, hovve vncleane soeuer the

CC.

massing priestes bee. 835
They saye vvhatsoeuer the Priest is, the masse is good, bicause he doth celebrate in the name of the church 836.
What Church is that, that doth apointe open vvhormongers and Simonistes, 837.
Christ church doth excommunicate such. 837
They say that amonge the Massing priests ther be many good soules. 837
VVe bee sory for the blindnesse of such, and do meruaile hovv they can avvay vvith the filthy dregges of so many vvicked massers. 838.
If they be good why do they communicate vvith the reprobate, 838

Of the worshipping or seruing of God true-lye. 838.

What it is to vvorship. 839
That God is to be vvorshipped. 839
God is to be vvorshipped for tvvo causes. 839
The first cause is of dutye, 839.
The seconde cause to vvorship God is for our necessities. 839
The causes of vvorshippyng God, are to be referred vnto tvvo respectes in God. 840.
The Godly & vngodly haue tvvo sundry opinions in the vvorshipping or seruing of God. 841

VVhich is the true seruice and worshippyng of God. 841.

All doe confesse that they ought

CCI.

ought to serue & vvorship God. 841
Some thinke that it maketh no matter in vvhat things a man serue or vvorshippe God. 841
Some doe referre the seruice and vvorship of God vnto the institutions of the fathers. 841
Some do not regarde vvhom they do serue and worship. 841.
VVorshippers of Images and Idols. 842
VVorshippers and seruers of Diuels. 842
VVorshippers and seruers of Saintes. 842
VVorshippers of god but not alone, but vvorshipping others ioyntly vvith him. 842.
We ought to vvorship and serue God according to gods ovvne vvill. 843

VVhich be the partes of the true seruice and worshipping of God. 844.

The first part of seruing and vvorshipping of God, is obedience. 844
The seconde parte is inuocation. 845
The nature of Gods goodnesse, is to do good vnto all men. 846
The thirde part of vvorshipping and seruing God, is the sacrifice of praise. 846
The fourth part is Adoratiō and vtter submission. 846

To whome it belongeth to serue and worship God 847.

The seruice and vvorship of God, is in fevve. 847

CCII.

Which those fevve bee, that doe truely serue and vvorship God. 847

VVhat kinde of seruice pleaseth God best. 848

The seruice of a pure spirite and in truth deliteth God. 848

An addition of the seruice of Angels. 849.

We ought not to serue Angels. 849
Nothing that pertaineth to the seruice of God, ought to be done to Angels. 850. &. 851.

VVhy it is heard to forsake the false seruice. 852.

Byeause it is giuen out vnder the title and pretence of gods seruice. 852
Hovve the ignoraūce of gods seruice commeth. 852
A vvise Christian is not deceyued in the seruing or vvorshipping of god. 851
The beste vvorshipping and seruing of god, doth not please most men. ibid.
Vnto the title and pretence of gods seruice is ioyned an outvvarde gorgeousnesse, vvhich doth deceyue the simple. ibid.
This is the beginning of Errour in gods seruice. 854
Also byeause the vvorshipping and seruyng of god in spyrite and truth, hath no outvvarde obseruation of ceremonies. ibid.
The basenes of the outwarde seruice and vvorshipping of god in the primitiue Church. 855
The Churches vvhich folow-

CCIII.

ed continued not in the same baseneese of gods seruice. ibid.
The estate of the Ievves in outvvard seruice and worshipping of God is not more tollerable than the estate of the Christiās novv a dayes. 856
The long cōtinued custome of a false seruice and vvorshipping of god, doth vvithhold the simple from the true leruing of god. ibid.

Of the newnesse of the doctrine of Faith, religion and seruice of God wherwith the aduersaries do charge vs. 857.

The pretence of Antiquitie is plausible. ibid.

VVhether that which is newe be alvvaye euill 8-7.

To be nevve is not euill of it selfe. ibid.
A nevve thing may bee good as vvell as naught. ibid.
Nevvnesse is not euill except it be made euill by circumstaunces. ibid.
That vvas naughty nevvelty, vvhen the Ievves presumed to serue strange gods, 858.
That is a good nevvelrye, vvhen vvee doe cleanse out the olde leauen and become a nevve sprinklinge. ibid.
It maketh much matter vnto vvhom nevvnesse in religion is set foorth. ibid.
In the Apostls times the people called the gospell nevve doctrine. ibid.
It is euil to giue nevv doctrin

CCIIII.

to them that haue receyued the true doctrine alreadye. 859

VVhether our doctrine be new, and whether our aduersaries bee innouatours of holy thinges. 859.

What it is to be nevve. 860
That is new which neuer was seene nor heard of before. 860.
It is one thing to make nevv and an other to renew. 860
The lavve at the first giuyng, and the Gospell at the first vvere nevve. 860
When the lavve vvas restored agayne by Godly princes it vvas not nevve. 860
The truth of the Gospell, which is restored agayne novve a dayes, is not nevv. 860.
The Popishe doctrine is new. 860.
The doctrine vvhich is true is auncient. 861

By whose faulte it is come to passe that our doctrine seemeth to be new. 862.

The faulte is not to be laide vnto our tymes, but to our forefathers vvhich refused the truth and receiued fables. 862.
They ought not to beare the blame vvhich doe bringe home agayne the olde religion. 862
The booke of the lavve vvas not nevve, vvhen Iosias founde it. 862
The vvhole Bible is not new byeause it hath bene of long time vnknovven of many. 862

CCV.

Our doctrine is not nevv, but it is very auncient doctrine of the primitiue Churche. 863.

Of traditions. 863.

VVhat this vvorde of trading or deliuering is. 863
Some call traditions, constitutions. 864

The kindes of Traditions. 864.

Tvvo kinds of traditions. 864
Traditions deliuered to the Church by the Apostles as receyued from the Lorde. 864.
Traditions not receyued frō the Lorde, but deliuered by the Apostles ovvne auctoritie. 865
The traditions vsed in the vvest churches vvere not the traditions of the Apostles. 865.

To whom it belongeth to giue Traditions. 865.

It is one thyng to haue that vvhich thou mayst delyuer, and an other to haue that vvhich thou oughtest to delyuer. 865
Some thinges bee deliuered to bee beleeued, other some to be obserued and kepte. 865
Thinges to be beleeued may bee set foorth by the auctoritie of the vvorde. 866
Things to be obserued, must bee sette foorth by them that haue auctoritie, either of their ovvne or of some other. 866
The Apostles did delyuer thinges not as men, but as Apostles. 866

CCVI

Some traditions be of God and some of men. 867.

Thinges deliuered by the Lorde or by the Apostles, be of God. 867
Thinges deliuered by man onely, and by mans counsell, be of men. 867
Deuilish traditions are brought in by men. 867

VVhat traditions ought to be obserued. 868.

All traditions be not refused, nor all to be vsed. 868
All good traditions are to be obserued. 869
VVhich bee good traditions. 869.
Antiquitie hath some prerogatiue in rytes and ceremonies if they bee good. 869.
It must be decided by truth, and not by antiquitie, vvhether they be good or euill. 869
Those that bee of God bee good. 869
There is great reasoning whiche be of that sort. 869
The Papistes say, that popish traditions be of God. 869
The papistes father their traditions vpon the Apostles also. 870
They can not be saide to bee the Apostles traditions, except they haue byn alwaies kept in all churches. 870
It is not so much to be generall, as to be ouer generall. 870.
Which traditions ought to be obserued. 871
That bee not repugnant to gods vvorde. 871
They must be not onely lawfull, but profitable for the present tyme. 871

CCVII.

They must be comely, moderate, and easie to be kept. 871
What traditions ought to be refused. ibidem

How traditions ought to be obserued. 872.

The causes of traditiōs ought to be considered. 872
There bee sundrie causes of traditions. ibidem
Men must respecte charitie in traditions. ibidem
Popishe traditions are to bee refused. 873

How perilous, yea, and sometimes pernicious mens traditions be. 873.

There is no tradition so good of it selfe, but it maye bee abused. 873
The euil of mēs traditiōs. 873
When men do thinke they do serue & honour God vvith such traditions. ibidem
They that so do, do sone fall to trusting in their ovvne merites. 874
They that so do, are alvvayes troubled in their consciences vvith the necessitie of keeping of them. ibidem
Mens traditions be the occasions of discorde in the Churche. ibidem

Of the name of God. 875.

What the name of god is. 875
The vse & reason of names. ibidem.
Whether any proper name be conuenient vnto God. 875
No proper name can declare the essence and substance of Gods Maiestie. 876
That is the name of GOD, which is reported of God. 876.

VVhat it is to do any thing in the name of God. 876.

To do any thing to gods glorie, is to doe it in his name. 876.
To doe any thing in the confidence of gods name. 876
To doe any thing in the persone and steede of God. 877

To whom it belongeth to doe any thing in the name of God, and to whom not. 877.

It is not for euery man to doe any thing in the name of God. ibidem
Some thinke nothing can bee done to Gods glorie, except it be expressed in scriptures. 878
All things bee not comprised in scriptures which do serue to the glorie of God. 878
Things good of them selues, must be done with a good minde and fashion. 878
To vvhome it pertaineth to do any things in the name of God. ibidem
The faithfull onely can doe things in the name of God. 878. and 879.
It belongeth to all men, and not to al men, to do things in Gods name. 879
All our life ought to bee the true seruice of God. 880
To whom it belongeth to do any thing in the truste of Gods name. ibidem
All things can not be done to the glorie, nor in the truste of gods name. 881
Things that be good of them selues, must be done aright els can they not be done in the truste of gods name. 881
All truste of the flesh must be put away. 881
No man is altogether voyde of all fayth and truste, but euery faith and truste is not alovvable. ibidem
Whether that this truste in God belong to the beleeuers only. 881
All men be bound to beleue. 882.
To vvhom it belongeth to do any thing by the authoritie of God. 882
The Minister of God ought not too svvarue from the minde of the commaunder. 882
How the commaundementes of God ought to be done. ibidem.
This matter belongeth to the Ministers vvhich serue the Church in Gods name. 882
Gods vvorde is abused, when the minde of the Lorde is not set forth aright. 883
The Anabaptistes doe this in the Sacrament of baptisme. ibidem.
Sathan seduceth them that alowe nothing but vvith the letter of Gods vvorde. 884
Hovv it appeareth who is sent by God. 884
There be tvvo maner of lawfull callings. 884
Calling immediatly by Christ vvhich is not vsed novve. 884. and. 885.
Ordinarie calling which the Church vseth. 885
Three markes of a true Minister. 885

Of the nature of God. 886.

Knovvledge of the nature of CCX.

God is necessarie for the order of religion. 886
To comprehende Gods nature is very hard, but much harder to expresse. 887

What nature is. 887.

The vvord Nature, is diuersly defined. 887
Nature is not the thing it self which is begonne and borne, but the proper strength naturally giuen to it. 887

Whether nature haue any place in God. 887.

Nature according as it is defined, can not be attributed vnto God. 887
GOD is not subiecte to any lavves of nature. 883
That there is nature in God. ibidem.

How many sortes of nature there be. 888.

There bee tvvo natures, one made, an other not made. ibidem.
Gods nature is not made, but maketh and vvorketh all things. 889
Gods nature being most simple, is deuided into three partes, concerning the three persones in Trinitie. ibid.
The Manichees apoint tvvo natures in God. ibid.

Whereby the nature of God may be known. 890.

Perfect knowvledge of Gods nature can not bee attained. ibidem
The holy scriptures and gods vvorde, doe leade vnto the knowvledge of gods nature. ibidem.

CCXI.

Difference must be kept betvveene thinges vvrought naturallye, and thynges vvrought accidentally or by chaunce. 890
Things naturall be often and continuall. ibidem
Plagues and destructions bee not naturall vvoorkes of God, but straunge to hym. 891.
There be tvvo kindes of gods vvorkes, his ovvne, and of others. 891
God vvoorketh his naturall vvorkes vvillingly, the other he doeth not vvithout being moued therevnto by others. ibidem
By experience of Gods outvvard vvorkes and by faith in holy Scripture, Gods nature is knovven. ibidem
Mans reason can perceiue the inuisible poinctes of gods nature and the euerlasting vertue and Godhead by the visible vvorkes. ibidem

Of what qualitie the nature of God is. 892.

Which vvee make to bee the qualitie of gods nature. 892

Whether God doe communicate his nature vnto his worke. 893.

Whether that creatures bee partakers of Gods nature. ibidem.
If all things be of God, howe bee they straunge from his nature. 893
The communicating of nature consisteth bearing, but not making. ibidem
Whether that man bee partaker of the nature of GOD. 894.

CCXII.

How man is called the kinde of God. 894
Man is called the kynde of God, because of the prerogatiue of reason, and spirite, and countenaunce of gouernance. 894
Whether the elect doe participate of Gods nature. 895.
To bee of God is ment tvvo vvayes, by byrth and by election and predestination. ibidem.
Whether that mans nature in Christ vvere not turned into Gods nature. 895
The bodye of Christe is not chaunged into the nature of God. 897
The nature of God can bee communicate to no creature. ibidem

Of the sufficiencie of God. 898.

Sufficiencie it selfe, is to be attribute vnto God onelye. ibidem.
Vniuersall sufficiencie is one, and particular sufficiencie is another. ibidem
The couetous man hath sufficient and not sufficient. 899
Sufficiencie of it selfe is to bee attribute to none but too God. ibidem
Why God vseth the ministerie of creatures. 900
He doeth it not of necessitie. ibidem.
Euill is not of God. 902
The difference of gods prouidence. 903
Gods goodnesse and care is generall and speciall. 903
All thinges bee of God, and by God. 904
All things be in God. ibidem

CCXIII.

Of the Omnipotencie of God. 905.

Howve the Hebrevves do call god mightie. 905
The Hebrevves haue no word to signifie almightie. 905

How might and power differeth. 905.

Might standeth in strength, povver in authoritie. 905

Of the difference betwixt might and might. 905.

Tvvo kindes of mightes and strength, one of god which he hath of him selfe, another vvhich all creatures receiue of god 905. and 906.
All the might of all creatures is of god. ibidem
Might received, is particular and limited. ibid.
God is vvithout passion. 907

What is the vse of Gods Omnipotencie. 697.

The generall vvorkes of gods omnipotencie. ibidem
The omnipotencie of god in creation. ibidem
The omnipotencie of god in the making of things 908
The omnipotencie of god in multiplying and in creating. 908
The omnipotencie of god is in gouernaunce and preseruing. ibidem
The might of god to preserue. 909
Why god created vs subiect to infirmities. ibid.
By the might of god we be regenerate. ibidem
The might of god to reuenge. ibidem.

CCXIIII.

The might of god to raise the dead. 910
By the might of GOD this world is ended, and a nevv heauen & earth made. 910

In what workes Gods omnipotencie is to be considered. 910.

The varietie of gods vvorkes ibidem.
What vvorkes of god vvee ought specially to consider. 911
The vvorkes of god in vs. 911
The vvorkes of god vvithout vs and naturall. ibidem
The vvonderfull vvorkes of god. 912
The might of god is also too bee considered in those things vvhich be not done. ibidem.

How necessarie the beliefe of Gods omnipotencie is. 913.

The articles of our faith doe require the omnipotencie of god. 913
The promises made to Abraham, depend vpon the omnipotencie of god. 913
We can not praye vvith any cõfidence, except vve haue a sure faith of gods omnipotencie. 915

Questions of gods omnipotencie. 915.

Whether god can doe all things that man can. 915
Whether god can bee vveary. 916.
Whether god can vvalke and talke. 916
That god can not lye is not to be taken for vnableneſſe. 916

CCXV.

VVhether god can make that vndone vvhiche is once done. 917
It is not necessarie too make vndone, that is once done. 917.
It is not lavvful so to do. 917
It is impoſſible so to do. 917
VVhether god can doe anye thing more than hee doth. 918.
VVherher he doth all that he can do. 919
It is one thing to be almightie, and another to bee all doing. 919
Like as he is not all willing, so is he not all doing. 919

Of the will of God. 919.

VVe may not ouercuriouslye search to the vvil of god 159
VVil is not in god, as in man. 920

The will of God towardes vs is to be considered two wayes. 920.

Howve the maister of the sentences speaketh of gods vvill. 920
Our opinion of the vvill of god. 920
The vvill of god towardes vs determined in himselfe from euerlasting concerning our saluation. 920
VVhat he vvould haue vs too be or not to bee, to doe or not to doe. 920
The first part of gods vvil towardes vs declared in scriptures. 920
The seconde part of gods vvil declared in Scriptures. 921
A difference is to be marked in this vvil of god towards vs. 921

CCXVI.

The will of God is the foundation of faith, godly life, and of our saluation. 921.

The foundation of our saluation is in the truth of gods vvorde. 921
The vvil of god, according to the purpose of the which he chose vs in Christ, for euermore, is the first cause thereof. 922
He vvould not haue vs to be saued bicause he chose and predestined vs, but he chose and predestined, bicause he vvould saue vs. ibidem
The truthe is referred to the vvorde of the promises, before vvhich the vvill goeth. ibidem
The Eternall vvil is the fountaine of all promises, & the foundation of faith. 922
Wee can not bee certified of our faith by knovving that God is almighty, except we be assured of his vvill. 922
The Papistes doe argue vpon Gods omnipotencie, concerning their transubstantiation. ibidem
Gods omnipotencie is minister to gods vvill. ibidem
Godlinesse of liuing leaneth to no other foundatiō nother. ibidem

VVhereby the will of God may be knowen. 923.

We must endeuour to knovv the vvill of God. 923
We must not haue a light opinion of Gods vvill, but proue and trie vvhat is the vvill of God. ibidem
Gods vvill is to bee knovven in vvordes and signes, and doings. ibidem

CCXVII.

In this vvord be preceptes & forbidding, promises and threatnings, comfortes and iudgements. 924
The Signes bee the Sacramentes, ibidem
The doings of God be innumerable vvhich doe declare his vvill tovvardes vs. 924
To knovve Gods vvill vvee haue neede to haue oure mindes renued. 925

VVhat it is to doe the will of God. 925.

It is one thing to vvorke the vvill in God, and an other to perfourme the vvill of God. ibidem
To vvorke the vvill in God, is to cause God to vvill. 925
It appeareth by Scriptures, that vpon our disobedience is bredde a vvill in God to reuenge, and by our obedience a vvill to doe good. 926
The vvyll of GOD is not chaungeable, but is stable to doe good to the obedient, and to punish the disobedient. ibidem
The occasion to do good and to punish, both be founde in all one persone. ibidem
The alteration is in the persone vvhich forsaketh his holy intent, & not in God ibidem.
To do the vvill of God, is to do those things that GOD hath charged vs to do. 926
Who do truely performe the precepts of God. 926
The vvorde consisteth not in the dead letter, but in the meaning of Gods vvyll. ibidem.
The vvorde and the meaning of Gods vvill ought not to be separate. 926

CCXVIII.

This vvorde doing, consisteth in outvvarde facte, and in the purpose of a godlye mynde. 927
Howve Iudas, the Priestes, and Pylate did the vvil of God. 927
They perfourmed Gods vvill vnknovven and vnavvares to them. 927
They did it not of purpose to perfourme Gods vvil, but for a further fetche. 927
Some do perfome Gods vvil, not vvith an intent to doe Gods vvill but theyr ovvne affaires. 927

VVhether the will of God be the cause of all. 927.

There must needes bee some first and chiefe cause of all things. 927
Gods vvill is the chiefe cause of all things. 928
The Scripture sayth not, God doth all that he knevve or can, but all that hee vvill. 928.
The vvill of God is the true cause of our vvyll, vnderstanding, purposes and affections. 928
The vvill of God is the chiefe cause of all things vvhich be done by the creatures. 928
There is nothing done vvhich is not commaūded or suffered of God. 929
Some aske, vvhether euyll things bee done by Gods vvyll. 929
Gods vvill neither doeth any euill, neither is occasion of euill to any body. 929
God vvylleth not in all respectes no euill should bee done. ibidem

CCXIX.

VVhether we may seeke the cause of Gods will. 929.

We maye not aske the cause of gods vvill. 930
It is otte thing to searche the causes of gods vvill, and an other that there be no causes of gods vvill. 930
The vvill of God is not vvithout reason and some assured causes, as appeare plainly in Scriptures. ibidem
When God vvoulde destroye the vvhole Earth, he declared the causes vvhy. ibid.
When he destroyed Sodome, he told the cause vvhy. 931
Paul declareth the cause, vvhy God dyd shut vp all vnder sinne. ibidem
Bycause he might haue mercy of all. ibidem
Scriptures declare the cause vvhy God deliuered his Sonne to be crucified. 931
Euerye man vvilleth those thinges vvhich be agreable to his disposition. ibidem
To be good, goeth before to vvill good. ibidem

VVhether the will of God may be hindered or letted. 932.

Gods vvyll can not bee letted. ibidem
Occams diuision of gods vvil, after the schole fasshion. ibidem.
The Maister of the Sentences doeth reason, that Christe could not gather together the chyldren of Ierusalem. ibidem.
Christ sayeth not, and I could not, or thou diddest let me, but thou vvouldest not. ibidem.
The Maister of the Sentences

CCXX.

doeth falsly expounde the saying of Paul, god would haue all men to be saued. &c. 932
It is asmuch to saye, God excludeth none from the entrie to saluation, so that they refuse not the knovvledge of the truthe. 933
God vvilleth all men to bee saued, but vnder this condition, that they refuse not the truthe. ibidem
This saying, God vvilleth not the death of a Sinner, &c. doth duminith nothing the almightinesse of gods vvil. 934.
God sayeth not that he vvill not haue the impenitent to die, but that he taketh no pleasure in his death. 934

Of the Truth of God. 935.

Truth is the foundation of al things that be. 935

VVhat is the difference of the truthe of God, and of the truth of Creatures. 935.

The truthe in GOD and in things created, is not all one. ibidem
Some saye, all truthes doe agree. ibidem
That agreement taketh not avvaye the difference of truthe. ibidem
Howve the truthe of God differeth from the truthe of Creatures. ibidem
The truthe of God is of it self without beginning, but the truth of creatures cōmeth of God. ibidem
The truthe of God is the highest God, and the truthe

CCXXI.

of Creatures depe[n]deth there vpon. ibidem
The truthe of God is euerlasting and vnchangeable, but the truth of creatures is temporarie & chaungeable. 936
The consideration of Gods truthe is to bee had aboue all. 936
Except vvee cleaue to Gods truth, vvee can not bee sauued. ibid.
The truth of vvedlock or any other truth, is rather to be forsaken then the truthe of gods vvorde. ibidem
The promise due to mē must be forsaken rather then the promise due to god should be broken. ibidem

How many kindes of truthe there be in God. 936.

Of one selfe same Truthes in God, there be foure kindes. 936
Truthe of essence, vvhereby he is true god. ibidem
Truth of qualitie, vvhereby all things vvritten of hym in Scriptures be true. 937
Truthe of operation, as vvell of creation as other vvoorking of god, ibid.
The truthe of gods vvoorkes consisteth in that none of them bee vayne and false. ibidem.
The vvorkes of the Deuill be false, and haue in them no truthe. ibidem Gods vvoorkes bee vvithout any counterfayting, suche as he hym self is of nature. ibidem.
The truthe of Gods vvoorde. 938
God is true in his vvordes, & and euery man a lyer. 938
The truth of the vvoorde in-

CCXXII.

carnate. 938

That it is verie hard, and for few, to come vnto the knowledge of Gods Truth. 938.

Gods truthe is a moſt cleere light of it ſelfe. 938
The blindneſſe of mennes mindes, is much like vnto the bliadneſſe that is borne blinde. 939
Carnall mens hearts are blind in matters of religion 939
The truth of Chriſte, is faith and religion. ibidem.
There bee fewe vvhich doe knovv the truth of Chriſte. 939

Howe men may come to the knowledge of Gods Truth. 939.

There muſt bee a deſire too knovv the truth. ibidem
The wiſdome of God admitteth no deſpiſers, and doth loathe them that boaſt thē ſelues to perfect in ỹ knowledge of the truth. 940
Such vvere the Phariſies. 940
Such be the Seraphicall Doctors now a dayes. 940
There muſt bee a ſtudie too knovv the truth. ibidem
There bee tvvo thynges that hinder the finding of the truth. ibidem
That men doe deſpaire of the finding thereof. 940
That men be perſuaded that they haue found it already ibidem.
It is requiſite that vvee become Chriſtes Schoilers, & beleue his vvord. 941
We muſt firſt beleue, & then vnderſtande. 941
We muſt abide in the vvorde of Chriſt. 941
Wee haue neede of a pure minde 941

CCXXIII.

The truth is to bee ſought in charitie. 942

VVhat is the efficacie of the Truth. 942.

To diſcuſſe vvhat the truth is able to do, paſſeth all mens reaſons. 942
By the efficacie of the light, a man may ſee the efficacie of the truth. ibidem
As light putteth avvay darkeneſſe, ſo doth the truth ignorance. 942
The Sunne riſing dravveth all mens eyes vnto it, ſo doth the truth reuealed, dravve mens mindes vnto it. 942
The light of the Sunne diſcouereth that vvas hidden, ſo doth the truth open things hidden & vnknovven. 943
The light declareth the faultes of the darkeneſſe, ſo doth the truthe reproue the vvorld of many ſinnes. 943
The light deliuereth from the kingdome of darkeneſſe, truth deliuereth vs frō the bondage of ſinne. ibidem
The light cauſeth vs to teſtifie truly of things that vvee doe ſee, ſo doth the truthe make a faithfull man faſte and ſure in confeſſing his faith. 944
The Apoſtles had their conſtancie thereby. 944

VVhat is the hap and lot of the truth of God in this world. 944.

There is nothing leſſe regarded in the vvoild, than the truth of Chriſt. 944
The truth is charged with the greateſt reproch of lyes. 945
It is the let of the truth to bee compted for Hereſie. 945
The truth is condemned before it be heard. 946

CCXXIIII.

All thinges are to be ſuffered for the Truth. 946.

Seeing the truth of god is alvvayes oppreſſed in this vvorld, all that depende vpon the truth muſt nedes be ſubiect to the ſame. 946
The vvicked can not practiſe their wickedneſſe vpon the truth it ſelfe, therefore thei practiſe it vpon the ſcholiers of the truth. 946

VVhether the truth may be ouercome. 947.

The truth ſeemeth to bee ouercome. 947
The truth may be cloked and darkened, but it can not be changed into falſhood. 947
Preſcription of time, doth not ouercome truth. 947

Of the goodneſſe of God. 948.

That god is good. 948
Martion imagined tvvo gods, one good, another euill. 948
Argumēts of gods goodneſſe. 949
That all things being created good at the firſt, doe vvitneſſe the goodneſſe of god. 949
The things daily beſtowed by god bothe vpon good and badde, doe declare gods goodneſſe vnto vs. 949
The Scriptures doe declare gods goodneſſe vnto vs. 949

VVhat it is to be good. 949.

In good concurreth profitable, comely, and pleaſaunt. 950
What it is to be good. 950

CCXXV.

VVhether that God onely be good. 950.

None is good but god onely. 950
Some obiecte, that the Scriptures doe call ſome menne good, and ſome euill. 950
We muſt make a compariſon betvvixt god and his creatures. 950
In god is an originall goodneſſe vvithout beginning, geuing vnto others the beginning of goodneſſe. 951
In creatures there is goodneſſe naturally put into thē by God. 951
The commendation of abſolute perfect goodneſſe doth onely agree to the creator. ibidem.
God is onely good euen as he is onely exiſtent. ibidem
In manne bee foure thinges to bee conſidered, Nature, Corruption, Grace, Inſtitution. ibidem
In reſpecte of nature man is good in his degree. ibidem
In reſpect of the generall corruption, al mankinde is depraued. 951
In reſpect of the grace of god in man there is a repairement of the corrupt nature 952
In reſpect of inſtitution, teaching, and bringing vp, a man may be called a good artificer. 952
It is one thing to bee a good artificer and another to be a good man. ibidem.

That the goodneſſe of God is immutable and euerlaſting. 952.

Wherefore the vvill of man is not ſtable. ibid.

CCXXVI.

Bicauſe it is not naturally grafted in vs but bredde by occaſion and changeable cauſes. ibidem
God is good naturally of him ſelfe. ibidem
When God is angry hee doth it not naturally, but vpon occaſion to correcte the euill. 953
When God doth vs good it is his naturall doing. 953
Gods goodneſſe can not be ouercome. ibidem

There be two conſiderations of Gods goodneſſe. 953.

The goodneſſe of God is generall. ibidem
The ſpeciall goodneſſe of god tovvardes the electes and faithfull. 953

Howe many wayes we doe offende againſt the goodneſſe of God. 954.

It is a grieuous offence to ſinne againſt the goodneſſe of God. 954
Men ſinne againſt the goodneſſe of God by deſpiſing and contemning God. 954
Men do offende againſt gods goodneſſe in miſtrutting. 955
It is the moſt grieuous offence to miſtruſte God. 955
Men do offende againſt gods goodneſſe in preſuming vpon gods goodneſſe. 955
They conſider nothing of God but thathee is goodneſſe it ſelfe. 956
They conſider not that true goodneſſe is not vvithout iuſtice, neither that iuſtice is not contrarie too goodneſſe. 956

CCXXVII.

Goodneſſe in god, is not vvith out reaſon. 956
Gods generall prouidence for all things commeth of an aboundance of goodneſſe. 956
God occupieth bothe his handes a lyke, the one too beſtovve his benefites, and the other to puniſhe the abuſers of his goodneſſe. 956

Of the louingneſſe of God tovvards Man. 957.

Goodneſſe can not be vvithout loue. 957

VVhether loue do agree vnto God. 957.

No vyle thing is to be attributed vnto God. 957
No thing doth better agree vvith goodneſſe than loue. 958
Nothing doeth better agree vvith the goodneſſe and Maieſtie of God than loue. ibidem.
The affections of loue in men be not to be attributed too God. ibidem

VVhich be the kindes of Gods loue. 959.

God loueth as Father, as creatour, and Sauiour of mankinde. 959
The loue of God is deuided. ibidem.
Fiue ſortes of loue in god. 959

The firſt ſort or kinde of Gods loue. 959.

The loue of the Sonne of God. 960

CCXXVIII.

The seconde sort of Gods loue. 960.

The loue of creatoures in God. 960
The loue of god is not changed into lothesomnesse. 960
It hindereth not the loue of god that the creatures bee subiecte vnto vanitie in hope. ibidem

The thirde sorte of the loue of God. 961.

The loue of God towardes all mankinde, aboue all other creatures. 961
It pleased God better to bee called the louer of men, than of Angels. ibidem
The firste argument of gods loue towardes man is the glorie of the firste creation. ibidem.
The seconde argument of gods loue towardes man is that he forsooke vs not after the fall. 962
The thirde argument of gods loue towardes man, is in the dispensation of the vvorde incarnate. ibidem
The fourth argument of gods loue towardes man, is in the death of the onely begotten. 962
The fifte argumen of Gods loue towardes man, is the dispensatiō of our redemption. 963

The fourth sorte or kinde of Gods loue. 963.

The loue of God to the elect. ibidem.

The fifth kinde of Gods loue. 964.

The loue of god towards the good. 964
Whether that the cause come of vs, for the vvhich GOD doth loue vs. 964
The loue of god vvherby vve be saued, hath no cause of vs, but onely of his goodnesse. 964
God loueth them whom hee maketh good by his Spirite. ibidem
The loue of god is to be considered two vvayes of vs. 964
In respect that he loueth vs of meere goodnesse. ibidem
The faith of this loue of god doth take away all doubte of our saluation. 965
This first consideration of gods loue maketh vs inseparable from the loue of God. 965
It maketh vs to loue god. 965
The loue of god is to be considered the seconde vvay in respect that hee loueth the good, iuste, faythfull, obedient. 965
This shall cause vs to employ the grace of Gods loue once receiued. 965

Of that the Scholemen say, man knoweth not whether he be worthy of loue, or of hate. 965.

The Scholemen gather of the ix. chaptet of Eccle. that no man can be assured of the grace and loue of God but by some special reuelation. 966
The whole Scripture doeth testifie that God requireth of vs to haue a good truste in hym. 966
Arguments thereof out of the old Testament. 966
Argumentes out of the newe Testament that vve be beloued of God. 967
A Christian man is a man regenerate. 967
How can vve loue God if vve doubt of his loue towards vs. 967
If vvee can not be assured of gods grace, to vvhat ende did he ordeine Sacraments? 968
True Christian men be so assured of gods grace, that they be vvell contented to suffer all kinde of persecutions for the same. 968
They say, the Churche in generall is assured, but not eche man seuerall. 968
We say the Church is the body of the faithfull. 668
If euerie member of the body doubte of gods grace towardes it, the vvhole must needes doubt. 968
Paule declareth him selfe particularly to bee assured of gods grace. 969
The place of Ecclesiastes. 8, 9. expounded. ibid.
The Hebrevves texte is, The iust mans loue and hatered also, be in the lords hands. 970
The Greeke text is. The iuste and the vvyse and theyr vvorkes be in gods handes, yea, and their loue and hate also. 970
The true and proper sense of this place doth establish the certeintie of the grace and loue of God. 970
This doctrine of doubte is most vvicked, and doth exceadingly displease God. 971

The causes of this doubt. 971.

That this doubt cōmeth not of God. 971
God sayeth most iustly vnto vs, vvhat shoulde I doe vnto you that I haue not done. 972.
This doubt must needs come of vs & not of God. 972
This doubt commeth of the ignoraūce of Gods vvord. ibid.
This doubt commeth of incredulitie. ibi.
This doubt commeth of to much consideration of our vveakenesse. 974
The counsel of Trydent concluded this doubtfull doctrine. ibid.
No man can expresse the pernitiousnesse of this doctrin. 975.
It confirmeth our ovvn righteousnesse. 975
It serueth to torment mens conseiences. ibid.
It bredeth desperation. ibi.
It decaieth the syncerite of Fayth and loue. ibi.
It maketh a man vveake in bearing of afflictions. ibi.
The consideration of our ovvne vveakenesse, decayeth not the certaynty of the loue of God. 976

Of the false perswasion of the loue & grace of God, which agreeth not to the faithful in Christ. 976

Of vvhence the false perswasion of the grace of God commeth. ibi.
Worldly vvealth causeth men to thinke thē selues to bee Gods dearlyngs. ibi.
An opinion of righteousnes conceiued by hearing gods vvorde, preached vvithout faith. ibidem
The opinion of our ovvne righteousnesse. 977

Of the mercy of god. 977

Mercy is one of those things which bee naturally in god. 977

VVhat Mercy is. 978

The definition of Mercy. 978

That God is Mercifull 978

The Testimonie of Moses, Dauid, the Prophetes, and Apostles, that he is mercifull. 979.
God doth testifie of himselfe that he is mercyfull. ibid.

Howe mercy agreeth vnto God. 980.

The Stoikes do esteeme mercy nota vertue but a fault 980.
The Stoikes define mercy to be an heauinesse and griefe of harte, conceyued of other mens miserie. ibid
The right definition of mercy is to haue regarde, and to succour the miserie of others, not to bee greeued thereat. 981
The mercifull man maye bee both manlike & vvise. ibi.
No vvordes that can be spoken do properly agree to the nature of god. 982

Of whence mercy is in God. 982.

Vpon vvhat causes the hartes of men bee moued vnto mercy. ibi.
Some be mercifull of nature. ibid.
Some haue pitie on the afflicted, bycause they haue bene themselues afflicted. ibid.
Some be moued to mercy by aliaunce of bloude. ibid.
Wherefore the causes of gods mercy do aryse. 983
Gods incōparable goodnesse of nature, is the cause of mercy in god. 983

VVhat is the operation of Gods mercy. 983.

By the nature of mans mercy, it is easye to iudge of the mercy of God. ibi.
The vvorkes of gods mercy, passeth all number. 984
Of vvhat manner the vvorking gods mercy is easie to be vnderstand. ibi.

Vpon whom God hath mercy 985.

Testimonie of Scriptures, declaring vpō vvhom god hath mercy. 985
Whether God hath mercye vpon all. 985
As he is not vvorthy to be called good, vvhich is not of nature good towardes all, so is he also not vvorthye to be called mercyfull, that is not of nature mercyfull towardes all. 986
God is of nature louing towardes all mankinde. 986
God enclosed all vnder sinne, to the intent to haue mercye of all. 986
God hath not mercy on all vvithout any difference in all respectes. 986
The difference of Gods mercy. 986
The generall mercy of God extended to all Creatures. 986.
The special mercy extendeth to the iuste and innocent that crye to him. 986
The temporarye mercye of God sparing offenders for a time that they maye amende. 987
Euerlasting mercy of GOD in chosing, regenerating iustifiing & glorifiyng. ibi.

CCXXXIIII.

VVe may not confound the difference of gods mercye. 987.

The tyme of mercy is one and the tyme of iudgement is an other. 987.

This preſent lyfe is for mercy, and the lyfe to come for iudgement. ibi.
God beſtovveth mercy to all men in calling of men. ibi.
Except mercy vvent before iudgement, none ſhoulde be ſaued. 988
The mercy that goeth before ſhall auaunce the iuſtice that folovveth. ibi.

Of the power and gouernaunce of God. 989.

It is to a great purpoſe, to know what power he hath ouer vs, vvhoſe mercy tovvardes vs the ſcripture doth commende. 989
Man nor Angel can do vs no good, except god haue mercy vpon vs. ibi.

Of the dominion of God. 989,

The Lord is before the Lordſhippe, and the dominion before the auctoritie. ibi.
Men be ſundry vvayes made Lordes & maſters. 990
No man is of himſelfe a lord. ibi.
The glory of god paſſeth all other in glory of propri etie. ibi.
God is not Lorde borne, for god is not borne. 991
Chriſt is a borne Lorde. ibi.
God is Lorde of himſelfe & not through any other. ibi.
There is but one chiefe dominion, the reſt be but ſubſtitute ibi
Of them vvhich ſay, a miniſter is a boue all. 992
There be tvvo reſpectes of dominion, one of ryght, an other of might. ibi.
Dominiō of right pertayneth to god, Dominion of might pertayneth to the Diuell. ibi.
Sathan gouerneth none, but vvith their vvill and conſente. ibi.
Sathan is not a lorde but a Seruaunt. ibi.
There be not two lords, but onely one Lorde. 993

Of the power of God. 993

Authority is ioyned vnto dominion. ibi.
Ther is no auctoritie but vpon ſubiectes. ibi.
Lavvfull povver conſiſteth in tvvo pointes. ibi.
The povver of god vpon all. 994
God doth of his ovvne, what he vvill. 994
God hath full povver to cōmaude. 995
God may vſe his auctority either by himſelfe or by others. ibi.
Fulneſſe of power belongeth to no creature. ibi.
What povver vvas graunted to the Apoſtles. 996
God may vſe or not vſe his auctoritie. ibi.

Of the Iuſtice of God 997.

That gods is iuſte. 998
Teſtimonies of Scriptures of the iuſtice of God. ibi.
VVithout the iuſtice of God the vvorlde coulde not ſtande. ibi.

VVhat it is to be iuſt. 998.

The definition of iuſtice. 998
To be iuſte, is to bee cleere, ſounde and vpright. 998
Eche degree and perſon hath his order, and iuſtice perteyneth therevnto. 999
What it is for God to be iuſt. ibi.
Iuſtice conteyneth all vertues. ibi.
VVhat the iuſtice of God is. ibi.

Howe manifolde the iuſtice of God is. 1000.

The iuſtice of God in Chriſt. 1000.
God is iuſt as Lord and maiſter. 1001
Where is no vvronge there is no vniuſtice. ibi.
God is a iuſt iudge. ibi.
All partes of a iuſt iudge bee in god. 1002
The maners of iuſtice in god. 1003.

VVhat difference ther is betwixt the iuſtice of God and of Man. 1003.

The iuſtice of mā is none at all. ibi.
The iuſtice of god differeth from the iuſtice of man. ibid.
What manner of iuſtice is required of vs appeareth in the preceptes. ibi
The iuſtice of god is not to be compared vnto the conditions of mans iuſtice. 1004.
That the maieſtie of god is not ſubiecte to the ſame lavve that man is 1004
The diſcretion that a chriſtian man ought to haue in diſcerning the iuſtice either of God or of man. ibi.

Of the prouidence of God. 1005.

God prouideth for all the vvhole. 1005
God both can and vvill prouide for all. ibi.
Of vvhat neceſſity god diſpoſeth all thinges. ibi.
Not of anye neceſſitie that god hath of the creatures, but of the neceſſitie that the creatures haue to bee conſerued and kept. 1006

Sundry iudgementes of the prouidence of God. 1006

Some do deny the prouidēce of god. ibi.
Some ſaye that god hath no care of mens matters. 1007
If god rule the vvoride, of vvhence commeth ſo many euils. 1008
Of them which vve acknowledge the prouidence of God. ibi

VVhat prouidence is. 1009

Hovv prouidence is attributed vnto god. ibi.
Of preſcience and foreknowledge. 1009
The ſophiſticall queſtions, hovv knovvledge is in god be of none effecte. 1010
The ſcripture doth attribute care vnto God. ibi.
Prouidence is ſomtimes foreknovvledge, ſometymes ablenes to foreſeeal thinges neceſſarie for others. ibid.
Diſpoſition ordereth and employeth all thynges. ibi.
VVhat the prouidence of God is. ibi.

VVhich be the kindes of prouidence. 1011.

Gods prouidence being all one, is deuided into three kindes. 1011
The vvorkes of gods prouidence. ibi.

Of conſeruation 1012.

The conſeruation of thinges created by god. ibi.
The conſeruing prouidēce of god is to be conſidered two vvayes. 1013
Of prouidēce of ſmal beaſtes ibi.
Ieroms ſayings doth decaye the fulneſſe of gods prouidence. 1014

The prouidence of gouernaunce and rule. 1015.

The gouerning prouidence of god deuided in three parres. ibi.
Heauenly, vvhereby hee gouerneth Angels. ibi
The gouerning of the firmament, Skye, Sunne, Moone &c. 1016
The earthly diſpoſition of all thinges vnder the firmament. ibi.
Whether mā be gouerned by the prouidence of god. ibi.
Man is made in part heauenly, in parte earthly. 1017
The ſoule of man is all togyther in gods povver. ibi.
The minde of man, his habilitie and vnderſtanding of his maker. ibi.
All vvorldely matters and purpoſes are don, either by man or for man. 1018
Man purpoſeth but god diſpoſeth. ibi.
The harte of man is able to leeſe the lyfe of man, but not to rule it. 1019
The fleſhe and body of man doth rule no more than the brute beaſtes do. 1019

VVe muſt not abuſe the doctrine of Gods prouidence. 1020.

Two kindes of men abuſing the prouidence of god. ibi.
The preſumers vpon gods prouidence. ibi.
They ſaye god ſhal prouide ibi.
They alleadge, caſt thy care vpon god, and he ſhall nurryſhe thee vp. ibi.
They alleadge, Except god builde the houſe. &c. ibi.
VVe may not leaue that to gods prouidēce, to be done therby that vve both may and ought to doe. ibi.
Other ſay, if gods prouidence diſpoſe all thinges, then it commeth of gods prouidence that vve ſinne. ibi.
The Apoſtle putteth the fault in the ſinne that dvvelleth in the fleſhe, and in the cōcupiſcence of the fleſhe vvhich bringeth foorth ſinne. 1021
The godly decaye nothyng of gods prouidence. ibi.
God gouerneth and ordereth al our purſpoſes and doings according to the vvill, eyther of his grace or of anger. ibi.
God vvorketh in vs, both the vvill and the deede in all goodneſſe ibi.
The vvyll and deede in euyll is vvrought by the malice of our harte and through inſtigation of the dyuell not vvithout gods prouidence. 1022
Our naughtyneſſe doth not deliuer vs from the dominion of god. ibi.

CCXL.

In the historye of Iob, the malice of sinners, and the prouidence of God doe go togither. 1022
Sathan and the vvicked Caldes, sinned of their owvne nature, but the things that they performed was by the prouidence of god. 1021
God being displeased vvith Israell for their sinnes caused Sathan to entice Dauid to number hys people. 1023.
God ordered and directed the minds of Iosephs brethren that they should not doe othervvyse to Ioseph thān god had prouided. 1024.
God vvas neither the author of the euil, nor they vvithout faulte that sinned. ibi.
The euill of the facte, that is to say the hate of theyr hartes vvas not of god, but the deede that vvas done, vvas done by the prouidence of god. ibi.
Whether the brethren of Ioseph did sell him of necessitie. 1025
There must bee a differēce made betvvixt the counsel of god and the counsell of of the Diuell. 1025
Neither the Diuell nor the vvicked man do vvillingly obey the necessitie of gods determinate counsell. ibi.
The Diuels purpose was that hee shoulde bee vvickedly slain. 1025.
Gods purpose vvas he should be soulde into Egipt. ibi.

Howe the prouidence of God doth agree with happe and chaunce. 1026.

The prouidence of god doth

CCXLI.

exclude chaunce and fortune. 1026
Of chaunce and fortune out of the scriptures. ibi
The scriptures speaketh in vvordes accustomed. 1027
The vvorde of god is an immutable destenie vvhereby all thinges bee ruled. ibi.

Of the presence of God. 1028.

Some doe euill vnderstand of gods being in heauen. 1028

That God is present euery where. 1028.

God filleth heauen & earth. 1029.
With vvhat vehemence the vvord of filling is vsed. ibi.
God is so present that he filleth all vvhere hee is present. ibi.
The necessitie of the presence of god. ibi.

Howe God is present euery where. 1029

To be present is asmuch as to be before our sences. ibi.
Presence is manifolde. 1030
There is bodily presence. ibi.
Howe Tertullian doth saye that god hath a body. ibi.
The Spirituall prefence. ibi.
The Vertuall presence. ibi.
Contemplatiue and immaginarie presence. 1031
What manner of presence of god vve make. ibi.
Gods essentiall presence is euery vvhere. 1031
God is greater thē his vvhole vvorke is. 1032

CCXLII.

God is not euery vvhere by peece meale. ibi.
God is not moued, albeit all thinges be moued in him. 1032.

Howe it is sayde that God is specially any where, and to be in some men to be present to dwel in thē and to be ioyned vnto them. 1033.

Howe god is sayde to be in heauen, where as he is euery vvhere. ibi.
God is present generally euery vvhere, specially by maiestie in heauen, by grace in the electe and faithfull. ibi.
God is present vvith hys chosen tvvo vvayes. 1034
Howe the places of Scripture bee to bee vnderstanded which say god shall come, ibi.
God dwelleth in heauen, not as shutte vp in heauen, but by cause from thence al our thinges be gouerned. ibi.

The vse of this place is Gods presence. 1034.

That vvhich pertayneth vnto gods nature is not to bee attribute vnto any creature. 1035
The presence of god ought to be euery vvhere in our eyes. ibi.
VVe haue god euery where present in afflictions. ibi.

Of the anger of God. 1035.

The Epicures do holde that there

CCXLIII.

there is neither anger nor fauour in God. 1035
The Stoyckes do holde that there is fauour in god but not anger. 1036
The Stoyckes saye that God vvoulde ouerthrovve all if he be angry. ibid.
They consider nothing els in anger but that vvhich is faultie. ibid.
He hath no vnderstanding vvhich hath no anger. ibi.
Testimonies of Scripture declare that God vvas angrie vvith his people. 1037

Howe anger is attributed vnto God. 1037.

God is not angry as man is. ibid.
God is angry vvithout trouble of minde. ibid.
Lactantius doth attribute cōmotion of mind vnto god. 1038.
Cicero defineth anger to bee a desire to reuenge. 1038
No man knovveth vvhat the motion of anger in God is but the spirite of GOD. ibid.

The anger of God is of three sortes. 1039.

The generall anger vvherevnto all Adams posteritie is subiect through originall sinne. ibid.
VVe vvere all of nature the children of anger. ibid.
From this anger no man is deliuered but onely by the mediation of Iesus Christ. ibid.
The temporarie anger of God punishing sinnes in this vvorlde. ibid.
The euerlasting anger which is to come. 1040

CCXLIIII.

That God is slowe to Anger. 1040.

The inclination to anger is very faultie. ibid.
The scripture calleth God in many places slovve to anger. ibid.

How greeuous the Anger of God is. 1043.

As great as is his grace, so greeuous is the anger. ibidem
The strength of fire is horible vvherevnto the anger is compared. 1044
The perseuerance of Gods anger is tirrible. ibidem.

By what sinnes God is most stirred to anger. 1045

By Idolatrye. 1045
By mistrustfull tempting of God. ibid.
By murmuring against hys prouidence. ibid.
By stubborne religion. ibid.
By shedding of innocente bloude. 1046
By oppressing of vvidovves. ibid.
By impenitence. ibid.
The thorovve prouoking of God is done by contempt. ibid.
The manifest enemies that vvittingly and vvillingly striue against god are worst of all. ibid.

VVhat bee the tokens of Gods Anger. 1046.

The tokens of Gods anger be of tvvo sortes. 1047
Manifest tokens. ibid.
The secrete tokens. ibid.
Sygnes and vvounders in the Sunne, Moone, and CCXLV.

Starres. 1047
When Hipocrates beare rule ouer the people. 1048
VVhen the vvorthy persons be taken avvaye. ibid.
When false Prophetes doe aryse. ibidem
The reprobate are giuen after all kinde of chastenings into a reprobate sence. ibid.
When the reprobate do liue in vvealth in this vvorlde. ibid.

VVhether the Anger of God maye be appeased and howe may it bee appeased. 1050

Scriptures do testifie of gods appeasing, as it doth that he is angry. ibid.
It is diuelysh to chaunge anger into hate. ibid.
The Generall anger of God is appeased, onely by the bloude of Iesus Christe. ibidem.
The temporary anger of God is appeased, by certayne meanes. ibid.
Gods ovvne goodnesse doth naturally mittigate his anger. 1051
VVithout amendemēt humblenesse, and lovvly praier, Gods anger is not appeased. ibid.
Howe the anger of God is appeased by the mediation of iust folke. ibid.
The euerlastinge anger of God, can haue no appeasing thereof. ibid.

Of the iudgements of God. 1051.

The Scriptures doe testifie

CCXLVI.

that God is Iudge. 1051

VVhat Iudgement is. 1052

Hovv iudgement may be attributed to God, may easily be vnderstanded. ibid.

That the iudgements of God, be of two sortes. 1053

The perticular iudgemēts of God, bee of tvvo sortes. ibid.
Some perticular iudgement, goeth vpon manye folkes at once. ibid.
Some perticular iudgement, goeth vpon some seuerall man. ibid.
The vniuersall iudgement of GOD, is of three sorts. 1054.
Death came into the vvorlde for originall sinne. ibid.
When God destroyed the vvorlde vvith the floud. ibid.
The finall iudgement vvhich vvee looke for to come, ibid.
God iudgeth all, many, and fevve. 1055

The causes of Gods iudgements, ought not to be searched. 1055.

The scripture doth declare the causes and reasons of manye of gods iudgementes. ibid.
Examples of Gods vvonderfull iudgement. ibid.
God hath concluded all vnder vnbeleise. 1036
That God choose some, & refused other some. ibid.
That god loued Iacob, and hated Esau. ibidem.

CCXLVII

That god doth harden vvhō he vvill. 1056
That the euill doers do prosper in this vvorlde, and the vvell doers not. ibid.
That the infantes be taken out of this lyfe, for the fathers faultes. 1057
That many be punished for the sinne of one. ibi.
That the aftercommers bee punyshed for the sinne of the forefathers. ibid.
That manye haue done the lyke sinne, and yet some of them and not all, bee punished. 1058

VVhat is the vse of Gods iudgement in the worlde. 1058.

VVhy god doth iudge in the vvorlde. ibid.
Hovve manifould the iustice of gods iudgement is in this worlde. ibid.
God iudgeth and reuengeth euill. ibid.
God doth partly recompence the vvicked, as vvell as the good, in thys vvorlde. ibidem.
God scourgeth and chastēneth not only the reprobate, but also the godly, not to destroye them, but that they shoulde not bee condempned vvith thys vvorlde. 1059

Of the extreeme and last iudgement. 1059.

Scriptures doe declare that there is a iudgement to come. 1060
Some saye that the reprobate are iudged already, & the beleeuers shall not come into iudgement, and so they deny the latter iudgement. ibid.

CCXLVIII.

Not to come into iudgement is not to come into condempnation. ibid.
That they that beleeue not bee already condempned is not spoken of the iudgement to come, but of gods euerlastinge iudgemente, wherby is determined that the beleeuers shoulde bee saued, and the vnbeleeuers condempned. ibid.
We may not seeke vvhen the daye of the laste iudgement shalbe. ibid.
The Ebrevves say, that Elias declared the tyme of the vvorlde to bee 6000. yeares. 1061
The lorde himselfe declareth hovv the iudgement shall bee. ibid.
All nations, both the quicke and deade, shall be presented before the iudgement of Christ. 1063

Of tokens going before the latter iudgement. 1063

God vvould haue vs to know the tyme vvhich goeth before the day of iudgement. ibid.
The tokens going before the daye of iudgement bee of tvvo sortes. ibid.
Sygnes going long before. 1064.
Sygnes going harde at hand before the comming of the Lorde. 1066
The Sunne shalbe darkened, the Mone shall not gyue hir lyght. &c. ibid.
The conuersion of the Iewes. ibid.
VVhat manner of estate the vvorlde shal be of after the iudgement. 1067
The saying of Lactantius cōcerning the same. 1068

CCXLIX.

The saying of Augustine cōcerning the same. 1068

Of the knowledge of God. 1068.

The Ievves knovv not God. 1069.
The same vvhich happened vnto the Ievves, may happen vnto vs. ibid.

VVhat thinges be requisite to the true knowledge of God. 1069.

The first degre to knovv that ther is a God. ibi.
The seconde degree, vvho is the true god. ibi.
The thirde degree vvhat is the true God. 1069
The fourth is, to knovve god to be one in essence, and three in person. ibi.
The fifte is to knovve, vvhat god is of nature. ibi.
That god is the father of our Lorde Iesu Christ. ibid.
That he is also our god and Father, ibi.
VVe must not onely knovve god, but serue and loue him also. ibi.

Howe men may come to the knowledge of God. 1069.

Tvvo pointes necessary to the knovvledge of god. ibi.
There is generally giuen to al men povver of reasoning vvhereby god may be knovven of his vvorkes. ibi.
God doth not hide himselfe from men. 1072
The blindenesse of Idolaters hath no excuse, ibi.
The seconde meane to come to the knovvledge of god

CCL.

is his vvorde. 1073
The thirde meane to come to the knovvledge of god, is the reuelation of the holy spirite. 1074

VVhat the knoweledge of God worketh in man. 1074.

Of vvhat nature knovvledge is. ibi.
By ignoraunce vvee do erre, both in iudgement, vvill, and vvorkes, ibi.
By knovvledge vve do iudge vvyll, and vvorke a ryght. 1075.
What ignoraunce doth and vvhat on the contrarye part, the knowledge of god doth vvorke. ibi.
Hovve it commeth to passe, that many vvhich knovve god doe not serue god. 1076.
The knovvledge of god, according to the nature therof maketh men to serue god. ibid.
In respect of the effect therof it vvorketh not the same thing in all men, through the fault of the vsers therof. ibi.
What the ignoraunce and knovvledge of Christe doe vary. ibi.

The knowledge of God is vnperfecte in this lyfe. 1077.

By vvhat reasons the knovvledge of god is imperfecte in this lyfe. ibi.
The condition of this preset lyfe, is able to receyue perfection. ibi.
The religion of this presente lyfe, is grouded vpon faith of thinges not apparant. 1077.

CCLI.

This present lyfe is by gods speciall purpose so disposed, that it should be an exercise of godly lyfe. ibi.
Paule vvitnesseth that the knovvledge of god is imperfect. 1078

Of Hope. 1078.

The knowledge of god can doe vs no good except vve vvholy depende vpon him in perfect Fayth, Hope, and charitie. 1079

VVhat Hope is. 1079

Hope is generally defined to bee an expectation of thinges to come. ibi.
The hope of a Christian man is an assured expectation of those thinges vvhich be promised in Christ. ibi.

From whence the hope of Christian men cometh. 1080.

Mens reasōs attributed hope vnto Merites. ibi.
Christian hope commeth of Fayth and knovvledge. ibi.
The Apostle sayth, proofe bringeth hope. 1081
The Apostle speaketh that, of the increase and confirmation of hope, not of the beginning thereof. ibi.

VVhereof hope is nurrished and confirmed. 1082.

VVhich vvayes the Christian hope is assaulted. ibi.
The long tarying of thinges hopped for, is troublesome and loathsome. 1082
The vvhole course of worldly

CCLII.

matters doth assaulte the christian hope. 1082
The children of the vvorlde say, giue me to daye, and take you to morovve. ibid.
The vniuersall contradition of the vvicked vvhich impugneth, prosecuteth, and condempueth christians of vngodlines, assaulteth the christian hope. 1082
The Christian hope is nurryshed and confirmed from God. 1083
He that hopeth vvhen he feleth temptation he flyeth to prayer. ibid.
The sufferaunce of afflictions maketh hope lustye and stronge. 1084
The example of godly persons vvhich haue holden the hope fast, doth cherish and establishe hope. ibid.

VVhat the vertue of hope is. 1084.

The hope of vvicked Hipocrites and of men, is in vayne. ibid.
Hope breedeth vvill. 1085
Hope, allureth to vvorke. ibidem.
Hope stayeth the vvorkmen in their vvorkes. ibid.
Hope maketh loue effectuall confirmeth patience, maketh the minde ioyefull, and safe from confusion. ibidem.
It maketh the minde quiet in the mideſt of troubles. ibidem.
It maketh safe from confusion. ibid.
It bringeth at length perfect ioye and felicitie. ibid.
In vvhome the efficacie of hope is founde. 1086
VVhat true hope is able to doe with God in this lyfe. 1086.
They vvhich hope vpon the CCLIII.

Lorde are called blessed. 1086.
The blessednesse of them vvhich bee in hope is of God. 1087

Of Desperation. 1088

Hovv many sortes of desperations there be. ibidem.
Foure sortes of desperations. ibidem.
When men despaire of god. ibid.
When men dispaire of their neighboure. 1089
When vve dispaire of our selues. ibid.
When vvee dispaire of things to haue done. ibid.

VVhich be the causes of desperation. 1089.

Desperations of god be final and temporarie. 1090
The finall causes of desperation. ibid.
Wee must euer hope the best of men. ibid.
The causes of temporary desperation. ibid.
The first is the ignorannce of god. ibid.
The conscience of sinne. ibid.
The old custome in sinning. 1091
The sluggyshe refusing of the study of godlinesse. ibi.
Shame is the cause of desperation. ibidem
The doctryne of satisfaction vvhen the sinner findeth that hee is neuer able to satisfie for sinne. ibid.
The enormitie of sinne. ibid.
To depe cõsideration of our ovvne vnvvorthynesse. ibi.
The abiuring of knovvledge. ibid.

CCLIIII.

Howe noysome and pernitious desperation is. 1092

All desperation is not euyll. 1092.
Desperation in electes ibid.
Desperation in the reprobates. ibid.
Desperation putteth Fayth quite avvay. ibid.
It breedeth all impatience in troubles. 1093
It maketh men vvillingly & vvittingly euyll vvithout remorse. ibid.
It dryueth miserable men to madnesse, and to murder themselues. ibid.
Of the desperation of Fraunces Spiera. 1094

Of the Loue of God. 1094.

The loue that is required of vs is to bee considered. 1094.

VVhat Loue is. 1095

Loue is rather felte by them that doe loue, than vnderstanded by them that doe not loue. ibid.
Loue canne not bee defined ibid.

Howe Loue is giuen vs in charge. 1096.

There is loue naturally in all thinges. 1096
VVhat loue is commaunded. ibid.
Ther is commaunded a right direction of loue that is naturally in vs. ibid.
VVe be commaunded to loue not to be beloued. ibid.

VVhome wee be commaunded to Loue. 1097.

Ther be three Loues, to loue

CCLV.

God to loue our neighbours, and to loue our brethren. 1097

Of the loue of God. 1098.

That vvhich is commaunded vnto Israel, is commaunded vnto vs also. 1098
Christ himselfe doth alleage this precept. 1098
I must not sequester the loue of Christe, from the loue of God. ibid.

Of the loue of our neighbour. 1099.

Augustine holdeth that euery man is our neighbour. ibi.
Not onely our friendes, but our enemies also bee oure neighbours. ibidem.
Some obiect the vvoordes of Dauid. Do I not hate them O Lorde that hate thee? 1101
It is one thing to hate Gods enemies, and an other to hate our enemies. 1101
The matter is vvherevpon the causes of hate come. ibid.

Of the loue of our brethren. 1102.

The cõmandement of Christe for brotherly loue. 1102
Whether that the generall loue be taken avvay. ibid.
The speciall loue taketh not avvaye the more generall. ibidem.
Why Christ gaue this precept. 1103
Christ as louing, gaue the cõmaundement to loue one another. ibidem
Loue maketh atonemẽt. ibid.
Mutual loue is mete for them that be made one. 1104

CCLVI.

The efficacie of loue is suche that it may vvell bee commaunded by Christ. 1104
Euery man maye perceiue, hovve necessary the obseruation of the vnitie of loue in Christes kingdome is. 1105
Loue hath no ende, but shall cõtinue in the life to come. ibidem.

How farre forth we ought to loue our brethren. 1106.

Christ sayeth, as I loued you. &c. ibidem
Christ loued vs first. 1106
Christ loueth the lovvest, and them that bee vvicked and sinnefull. 1107 Christ loueth vs not for his, but for our profite. ibid.
He loueth vs feruentlye and continually. ibid.
Some demaunde, hovve this precept can be performed. 1108
This vvord, As, doth not signifie to be like in all points vnto Christes loue. 1108
Though vvee bee not able to counterfeite once Christes loue, yet vvee muste endeuour our selues to call for grace, and craue forgiuenesse. 1108
The loue of Christ is not conformed vnto our loue. 1109
The loue of Christ is as a mirrour set before vs to folovv. ibidem.

Of the order of loue. 1109.

A double errour out of Augustine, touching the order of loue. 1109
Christ giueth not the seconde place too the loue of oure selues, but to the loue of CCLVII.

our neighbour. 1110
One errour of Augustine is, in reckoning the loue of our selues, to bee a commaundement giuen from God. 1110
There is no condition of vertue added, vvhy vve should loue God, our neighbour, and brother. 1110
The special loue of gods folke is not excluded. ibid.

The Feare of God. 1111.

It is conuenient, that the loue and feare of God shoulde be ioyned togither in vs ibidem.

VVhat Feare is. 1111.

Feare vvhich is giuen to all naturally, is profitable and necessarie. 1112

There be sundrie sortes of Feare. 1112.

Foure kyndes of feare. 1112
The feare of the povver of tyrauntes. 1113

VVhy the feare of God is commaunded in Scriptures. 1113.

Precepts of the feare of God. 1113
We should not neede the cõmaundements of the lavv, vnlesse vve vvere corrupted. ibidem.
Of the fearing of the parents. ibidem.

How many kindes there be of the feare of God. 1114.

They be called happie that do feare God. ibid.
There be three feares of God. ibidem.

CCLVIII.

The feare of them which say, There is no God. ibid.
The feare of punishment is seruile. 1115
The feare to offende, is the feare of the children or Sonnes. 1116
Howe feare is not in charitie. ibidem.
Th feare of the vvorlde is not in the loue of Christ and of thy brethren. 1117

Of whence the feare of God commeth. 1117.

That the feare of God commeth of the gift & Spirit of God. ibidem
The hearte hath the gifte too feare the Lorde, not by the strength of the flesh, but by Gods speciall gift. 1118
The seruile feare is stiken into menne by some carnall meanes. ibid.

Howe the feare of God is addressed from God. 1119.

The first degree of oure turning, is in the feare of God ibidem.
The feare of God is likened to a shomakers ende. 1120
The beginnings of the newe Testament had some feare. ibidem.
It is the counsell of God, that feare should go before loue 1121

VVhat the efficacie of the feare of God is. 1121.

A similitude of the feare of the scholler towarde the master. ibidem
Feare excludeth the contempt of God. 112:

CCLIX.

It maketh a man meete too learne the vvyll of GOD. ibidem.
It bringeth desire to flye that vvhich is euill. ibid.
It breedeth the studie of godly life. 1123
It maketh a man studious of iustice. ibidem
It maketh the Gospell of God acceptable. ibid.
It prepareth the mindes to loue God. ibid.
It hath a great aduauntage before God. ibid.

The abuse of Feare. 1124

To feare the knovvledge of men more than the knowledge of God, is an abuse of feare. ibid.
To feare the might of men more than the mighte of God, is an abuse of feare. ibidem.
To estieme the precepts of mē more than the preceptes of God, is an abuse of feare. 1125
To keepe gods commaundement for feare of men only and not for gods cause, is an abuse of feare. ibid.
To do things for feare of god vvhich be against gods wil, is an abuse of feare. ibid.
To feare dead Sainctes more than God, is an abuse of feare. ibid.

Of Obedience. 1126.

Lavvfull obedience, is the ornament of feare. ibid.
That it is needefull to vse discretion in the matter of obedience. ibidem
Wee muste make a difference betvvixt true and false obedience. ibid.

CCLX.

VVhat obedience is. 1127.

The definition of obedience. ibidem.
Obedience is a faithfull submission of the mind, wherby the vvorde and vvill of the commander is obeied. ibidem.

Howe many kindes of obedience there be. 1127.

What is true obedience. ibid.
Whome vvee muste obeye. ibidem.
All obedience is due vnto God. 1128
We must circumspectly marke vvhether we doe obey gods will in deede, or no. ibid.
True obedience consisteth in obeying GOD, not onely in facte, but vvith a vvylling heart, and in all things and euer. ibid.
True obedience is the seruice of God. 1129
The perfecte patrone of obedience, is Christ. ibid.
We obey God, in obeying them, to vvhome hee hath made vs subiect. ibid.
Concerning obedience, the vvorlde is compared to an housholder. 1130
Wee muste obeye none but those, to vvhom God hath made vs subiect. ibidem
We be aboue all subiect vnto Christ. ibid.
We must obey the Ministers of Christe. 1131
Obedience is due vnto Magistrates, Kings, Princes, and iudges. 1132
The vvoman must be subiect vnto her husband. ibidem
Children are bound to bee obedient, and subiect to theyr Parentes. 1132
Seruauntes must be subiect to their Masters. 1133
In obeying the superiours, vve obey the Lorde. ibid.

Of false obedience. 1133.

Which is false obedience. ibi.
That is false obedience, which vvanteth the markes of true obedience, or which hath contrarie markes. ibidem.
It is false obedience to obeye creatures, and not God. ibidem.
The obedience of Friers and Monkes is such. 1134
It is false obedience to obeye in things contrarie to gods vvill. ibidem
It is false obedience to obeye God not syncerely, nor according to the meaning of God. ibidem
It is false obedience, vvhen men doe not obeye God heartely, and vvith a good vvill. ibidem
It is a false obedience, vvhen thinges that oughte to bee done, bee done to halues. 1135.
It is false obedience to obeye but for a season, and not to continue to the ende. ibi.
The fountayne of false obedience, spryngeth partly of blyndnesse of heart, part of corruption of our first Parentes. 1136

Howe necessarie obedience is, and what is the efficacie thereof and howe great a good it is. 1136.

By the vertue of obedience all is saued. ibidem

CCLXI.

Howe obedience is requisite vnto our saluation. 1136
True obedience maketh the vvill of the commaunder, and of him that doth obey all one. ibidem
The disobedience of our first parentes, sequestred vs frō God. 1137
By obedience must be repayred that vvas lost by disobedience. ibidem
We be saued by the obedience of Christe. ibidem
Tvvo benefites of obedience be recommended vnto vs in Christ. 1138
That he vvas obedient vntill death to redeme vs. ibid.
That vve be kepte in the same redemption by obedience. ibidem.
It is the best vvaye to haue concorde and vnitie kepte vpon earth, if all doe obey gods commaundementes. ibidem.
Why God requireth obedience of vs. ibi.
God requireth of vs for oure profite, that vvee may bee happy and safe. ibid.
God requireth obedience of vs, onely bicause he vvould haue vs reconciled vnto him. ibidem Obedience conceiued contrary to the order of gods wil, is harmefull and auaileth nothing at all. ibid.
Christ taught vs to praye, Thy vvill be done in earth as it is in heauen, bicause vvee shoulde applye our selues vnto Gods vvill. 1139

Of Prayer. 1139.

Prayer is one of the chiefest partes of our religion. ibi
For vvhat causes vve ought to praye. ibid.

CCLXII.

We must pray, bycause Christ commaunded. 1140
We must praye bicause of our necessities. ibidem
Wee must praye, to exercise our faith. ibid.
Wee must praye to nourishe the loue of God in vs. ibi.
We must pray, bicause vve be commaunded to pray, and bicause it is a point of gods seruice. 1141

VVhat prayer is. 1141.

Howe the Scholemen do take this vvord prayer. ibi.
The definition of prayer. ibi.
Prayer, is the lifting vp of the minde vnto God. ibid.

VVho is to be prayed and called vnto. 1141.

VVee must vvorshippe God onely. 1142
For vvhat causes God onely is to be prayed vnto, ibid.
Reasons that none but God, ought to bee called vpon. ibidem.
No inuocation can bee made vvithout faith. 1143
Bicause God loueth vs, his vvil is that vve shall onely flee vnto him. ibid.
God chasteneth vs, that vve should praye for his grace and ayde. ibid.
It is not possible but that vve should serue them, whome vvee call vpon in our troubles. ibid.
The Scholemen make tvvo kyndes of prayer to God and to Sainctes. ibi.
If the Scholemens distinction vvere good concernyng prayer to sainctes, it myght bee good also concerning

CCLXIIII.

vvorshipping of Saincts. 1144
We must loue God and our neighbour, and feare God & our Prince, but we must praye vnto and vvorship God onely. 1144
Whether that the heauenlye spirites & Saincts, do pray for vs. 1144
The Papistes alleage the place of Zachar. 1. and Apoc. 5. 8. ibidem.
That of Zacharie vvas a vision and a thing done in deede. 1145
Those vvoordes vvere spoken to the Prophete, to encourage hym to praye for the restitution of Hierusalem. ibidem.
The vvords of the Apocalips, are not the vvordes of dead men, but of holy men that be aliue. 1145
Although the dead Saincts did praye for vs, yet they ought not to be called vpon. 1146
The maister of the sentences sayeth, If the Angels doe learne our petitions at gods vvordes, vvy should not the soules of the Saincts doe the same. 1146
Angels doe learne our petitions at the vvoorde of God, but the soules of the saincts do not so. ibid.
The condition of Angels, and of the soules of Saincts, is not all one. 1146
The reasons of such as maintaine the inuocation of Saincts. 1147

VVhen we must praye. 1148.

The true prayer is tyed to no certaine tyme. 1148
Prayer is in season, vvhen it is

CCLXV.

not voyde of reasonable cause & regarde of minde. 1148
We must praye vvithout ceasing. 1149
Holy men doe appointe certaine houres of their prayers. ibidem
The faithfull man may praye also at his labour. ibid.

VVhere we must praye. 1149.

It skilleth not vvhere vve doe praye. 1150
Christ bad men praye in their closets, to auoyde fond holinesse, not to restraine cõmon prayer. 1150

For what things, and for whom, we ought to praye. 1151.

For vvhat things vve ought to praye. 1151
Two thinges to be considered in prayer. ibid.
It is meete that in euery prayer, be either necessitie, or comlinesse. ibidem
Two kindes of necessities, either spirituall, or corporall. 1151
It is comely to God to giue, not vvhatsoeuer is asked, but those things that maye vprightly bee giuen of the true God. 1152
The comelinesse of them that doe praye, is to haue a speciall regarde to aske nothing, but that doeth concerne gods glorie. 1152
The holy men sometimes can not tell vvhat to aske. 1152
For vvhat persone vvee ought to praye. 1153
We must pray for them which do svvarue from the truth. ibidem.

CCLXVI.

VVee must praye for Princes. ibidem.
VVe must praye for the Ministers of the vvorde. ibid.
VVe must praye for al Saincts and for all men. 1154
VVhether vve ought to praye for sinners. ibidem
It is out of all doubt, that vve ought to praye for sinners that doe amend their life. 1154
VVe ought also to praye sinners that sinne not vnto death. ibidem
VVe may lavvfully praye also for sinners that doe sinne vnto death, for the Apostle forbiddeth it not. ibid.
Some obiecte the saying of Ieremie, See thou pray not for this people. ibid.
God visited ꝑ frovvard people two vvayes, by the vvorde and by the scourge. 1155
The Prophetes haue two peculiar studies and endeuours, preaching and prayer. 1155
The Prophet may as lavvfully praye for all, as preache to all. ibidem
VVhether vve ought to praye for the dead. ibidem
The Papistes for their ovvne lucre, do mainteine prayer for the dead. ibidem
They alleage principally the facte of Iudas Machabeus. ibidem.
The facte of Iudas Machabeus expounded, 1156
Iudas shewed himself to haue a good opinion of the resurrection of them bicause they dyed in a good quarel. ibidem.
Therefore Iudas offered sacrifice of the Pelser, vvhich els ought to haue bene consumed vvith fire, ibid.
Iudas offered sacrifice thereof,

CCLXVII.

that the sinnes of them that vvere slaine should not be further auenged, on thẽ that vvere aliue. 1156
Of the faith and fact of them vvhich be baptised for the dead. 1157
Paule alovved their faith concerning the resurrection of the dead, but he liked not the ceremonie. ibid.
Touching the doing of Iudas vve must make a difference betvvixt the facte, and the cause of the facte. ibidem
The fathers haue sundry vvise spoken, of the estate of the dead. 1158
Eche man doth sleepe vvith his ovvne cause, and shall arise agayne in his ovvne cause. 1159
Augustines vvritings be contrary one to another in this matter. ibidem.
The cause of this contrarietie is bicause the fathers dyd sometimes folovve the rule of holy Scriptures, sometimes they folovved the custome of their time. ibi.
Sacrifices and prayers for the dead, vvere not vsed in the Apostles times. ibid.
Hovv the Fathers did sacrifice for the dead. 1160
They sacrificed so, that they prayed not for them at all. ibidem.
There is great difference betvvixt a memorie, and prayer for the dead. ibidem
The soules of the dead be either in heauen or in hell. ibidem.
What wee must doe for the dead. 1161
We must quiet our myndes in hope, concerning the saluation of the deade. ibidem.

CCLXVIII.

VVith whom we ought to praye. 1162.

Whether that all sortes of mẽ ought too bee receyued to the common prayer. ibid.
Whether vvee may generally pray vvithin euery church. ibidem.
It skilleth much vvhat faith, religion, and seruice the Church is off, vvith vvhich vve do praye. ibid.
We sequester our selues from them, bicause they haue alreadye sequestred them selues from the true fayth and religion, not bicause they be sinfull and vve iust. ibidem.

VVhether it be lawfull to pray against man. 1163.

We praye tvvo vvayes against a man ibidem
When men doe praye against the euill purpose of vvicked doers. ibidem
It is doubtfull vvhether vvee may pray that a mã should be destroyed vvith the iust iudgement of God. ibid.
Christ and his Martyrs prayed for their persecutours. ibi.
Dauid and Ieremie praied for the destructiõ of their persecutours. 1164
The speciall zeale of saincts is not to be folovved of all men. 1165
VVee may not praye against men bicause they trouble vs, but bicause they resiste God. ibidem.

Howe we ought to praye. 1165.

A thing good of it self, ought to be done aright, least it do more harme than good. ibidem.

CCLXIX.

The condition and manner of the prayer. ibid.
A prayer must bee necessarie, comely, briefe, and short. ibidem.
The condition and estate of him that prayeth. 1165
He must be voyde of all speciall sinnes, vvhich GOD most abhorreth, though he can not bee voyde of all sinne. ibid.
He must be mercifull and pitifull to the poore. ibi.
Hee must bee cleane in conscience, vvithout anger or strife. ibidem
He must be lovvly and humble of heart. ibidem
He must aske in fayth and not stagger. ibid.
The behauiours of praying. ibidem.
VVe must praye humbly and lovvly, cõfessing our sinnes and callyng for grace. 1167
Scriptures declare certayne outvvarde gestures vsed of holy men. ibidem
The second manner of praying is to be feruent & hote in prayer. ibid.
The thirde manner of praying is, to be cõtinually praying vvithout ceasing. ibid.
The fourth manner of prayer is, to ioyne prayer vvith almes deedes. ibid.
The fifte manner of prayer is, to praye in Christes name, and desyre to be heard for Christes sake. 1168

Of what importaunce our prayers be before God. 1168.

By vvhat argument it appeareth that vvee be hearde of God. ibid.
God commaũdeth vs to pray. ibidem.

CCLXX.

God promiseth that he vvill heare and deliuer vs. 1168
Examples bee set foorth in Scriptures, to prouoke vs to praye. 1168. 1169. & 1170

The causes why prayer is effectuall. 1170.

What good the examples of the righteous do seeing vve be not like to them. 1170
God heareth asvvell the prayer of the penitēt publicane and thiefe, as he doth the prayer of the godly liuing persones. ibidem
Wee must not so attribute righteousnesse vnto God, that vvee take avvaye from him the regarde of our necessitie. ibidem
Gods infinite goodnesse, loue to man, fauour and mercy, be the true causes why god doth heare them that pray vnto him. 1171

Whether God do alwayes heare vs when we crie to him. 1171

God doth heare vs euer, and not euer. ibidem
Gods goodnesse hath more cōsideration of our necessitie than vvee can perceyue, though he perfourme not our requeſt at all. ibidem
Wee doe ostentimes desire things, neither good nor profitable for vs. 1172
When vve be not heard, vve must put the fault in oure naughtinesse, not in gods goodnesse. 1172
It is a manifest token of gods anger, vvhen he graunteth the noysome thinges that vve desire, as hee did in giuing the Iewes quailes. ibi
God denieth some things of fauour, vvhich hee doth graunt in anger. ibidem

CCLXXI.

Of Vowes. 1173.

The vse of vovves hath bene alvvaies in great estimatiō, till it became corrupt. ibi.

VVhat a Vowe is. 1173.

There bee tvvo significations of a vovve. ibidem.
A vovve is sometimes a promise made to God, sometime a desire. ibidem.
The vvord doth properly signifie a promise, deuoutly made to God. ibidem Promises made to Creatures be no vovves, but promises ibidem.
The definition of a vovve, by the master of the sentences. ibidem.
The definition of a vovve, by the Scholemen. ibidem

How many manner of vowes there be. 1174.

The maister of the sentences saith, some vovves be common, some singular. ibid.
The Schoole men adde tvvo more, one vvith condition, an other vvithout. ibid.
The Scriptures make three kindes of of vovves. ibid.
The firste, of them which bee made in afflictions necessities, and daungers. ibidem
It is a kinde of vovves vsed of all people and nations, too call vpon their counterfeit gods in aduersitie & trouble. 1175
Such be the vovves of the Papistes also. ibidem
The seconde, vvhen a thing is vovved of purpose, to gratifie. ibidem
The thirde, is vovving of fastings vnder the lavv. 1176
Of these vovves some be temporarie, and some continuall. 1176

CCLXXII.

Of the circumstance of Vowes. 1176.

It maketh much matter vvho he be that vovveth. ibidem
He that vovveth, must not bee vnder the iurisdiction of an other. 1176. &c. 1177
Some do obiecte, that then it should not be lavvfull for inferiours to serue god, vnlesse their superiours vvi. suffer them. 1177
The seruice of God is not tied to vowes. ibidem
God is better pleased with obedience and subiection of inferiours to their superiours, then vvith any manner of vowe. ibidem.
We must consider to vvhome vve ought to vovve. 1178
We must consider vvhat manner of vovves oure vovves ought to be. ibidem
Those bee vnlawfull vovves, vvhich can not lavvefully be perfourmed. ibid.
Vovves which auaile nothing to true godlinesse, be vnprofitable. ibid.
To vovve things that bee out of the povver of any man to perfourme, is a daungerous and vnpleasant vovve in the sight of God. 1178
It skilleth much to vvhat purpose men do vovve. ibid.

That Vowes ought to be performed. 1179.

Testimonies of Scripture, that vovves made to god, ought to be kept. ibidem

How Vowes ought to be performed. 1179.

It is a matter howe a vovve be perfourmed. 1180
A vovve must be vvholy perfourmed. ibidem.
A vowe must be perfourmed vvithout staye. ibid.
We must perfourme a vovve vvith heart & minde. 1181
Some vovves must be openlye performed. ibid.
Examples out of Scriptures of vovves, secretly made to God, & openly performed. ibidem.
Publike prayers for the sicke, should haue publike thākes giuing of the same sicke folkes, beeing restored to health. 1182

Of Cloister Vowes. 1182.

The vovve of the solitarie mā in time paste, is not like to the vovves of cloyster men in our dayes. ibid.
Cloyster men haue three māner of substantiall vovves, obedience, chastitie, & pouertie. 1183
If they meane of obedience to gods commaundements, it is godly, els it is vngodly. 1183
Constancie is good if it be in good things, els it is euill. 1183
Those things vvhich the cloyster men professe, belong to the Christians. ibid
Why do not the cloyster men acknovvledge all them that liue godly to bee religious, though thei haue no coules nor shauen crovvnes. ibi.
The cloyster men make solemne vovves hereof, as though all christiās did not professe the same at theyr Baptisme. ibidem
If Saincte Benets vovves and others bee ment of the true obedience of God, they bee necessarie for all godlye folkes, els they be Monkish superstition. 1184
The cloister men haue diuers common and superstitious obseruations. ibidem
Of the causes and opinions of the cloyster life. ibid.
Some thinke, they serue God aboue all other Christians, in the cloyster life. 1185
They make a seruice of God of mens constitutions. ibi.
They flatter them selues too haue some deseruing, by mens traditions, & by their ovvne vvorkes. ibid.

Of the ioyning of the Vowe. 1185.

The cloister vovve is against Christian libertie. ibid.
The continuance of the cloyster vovve vnto death, vvas not in Chrisostomes time. 1186
The adding of a vovve is reprouable for tvvo causes. ibidem.
For restraining of christian libertie, & binding the consciences of the faythfull. ibidem
It causeth men to forsake the true obedience to God, and to the superiours. ibidem

Of the Vowe of wilful pouertie 1187.

The cloister men doe refuse proprietie, as though it vver not lavvfull for Christian men. ibidem
Wilfull pouertie is of tvvo sortes, one spirituall an other bodilie. ibidem
To haue nothyng proper, is neyther good nor euill of it selfe, els it vvere to bee blamed, or to bee praysed, in children, seruauntes, and fooles. 1188

CCLXXV.

No man doeth much regarde it in children, seruantes and fooles, therefore it is not muche to bee regarded in cloister men. 1189
The prayer of cloysterers is much to bee misliked, bicause thereby they pretende a countenaunce of pouertie, vvhere as they inioy all the vvelth of the vvorld. ibidem.

Of the apparell of religious persons. 1189.

The vse of clothes is to couer our naked bodies, and defende vs from colde. ibid.
There be foure abuses of garmentes. 1190
To vse a fineneſse and dainteneſse, to pamper the bodye vvith. ibidem
To vse them for pride and gaines. ibidem.
To vse them vainly vvith cuttings and iaggings. ibi.
To vse garmentes for hipocrisie, to deceiue the vnskilful in colour of holinesse. 1190
Let the cloistermen declare hovv they can defend their coules from hipocrisie and superstition. ibid.

Of the closeneſſe of Monasteresse and cloysters. 1190.

The Monkish enclosure is against charitie. ibid.

Of Virginitie. 1191.

The vovv of virginitie is daūgerous. ibidem
True virginitie, is pure and maidenly abstinence, kepte both in body & minde. ibi.
Virginitie vvhich is Idle,

CCLXXVI.

not doing other good workes deserueth no commendation. 1191
The goodnesse of obedience is greater than of continencie. 1192
Wee reiecte not true virginitie, but admonishe vowemakers that they deceyue not them selues through their sole life. ibidem
Why the Apostle did counsel mẽ to virginitie, that some men doe gelde them selues for the kingdome of God. 1193.
Paul and Christ made this the marke and ende of virginitie, that the kyngdome of heauen might frankely go forvvarde by the ministerie of the Gospell. 1193
It can not be alowed that any man shoulde presume too vovve virginitie, during his vvhole life. ibidem
Virginitie is not due vnto God by commaundement, for God did not cõmaunde it to men, neither haue men auethoritie to commaunde it. ibid.

Of the losing of a Vowe. 1193.

VVhether all Vowes doe bynde. 1194
It is sometimes requisite that Vowes be broken. ibid
The promise is vvicked, which is accomplished by a vvicked deede. ibidem.
They obiect that a Nunne is betrouthed to Christ, ergo, she may not marry any other. 1195
If to vovve bee asmuche as to marrie, then the Nunnes do marrie vvith Dominick, Benet, and Fraunces. 1195
If vvhen thei become Nunnes they do marry with Christ, vvhat did they in their baptisme. 1195
Paule sayeth to all Christians, I haue betrouthed you to one husbande, to yelde a chaste Virgine vnto Christ. ibidem.
If spirituall vvedlocke vvith Christ, doe hynder Fryers and Nunnes from mariage, vvhy doeth it not hynder all Christians? ibid.

CCLXXVII.

Of afflictions. 1196.

It skilleth much hovv vve doe beare, vnderstande, vndertake, and ouercome the aduersities vvhich can not be auoyded. ibid.
There be tvvo kindes of afflictions, one vvorldly, another for religions sake. 1197
VVorldlye afflictions come three manner of vvayes ibi.
To be weake of nature, poore and base in degree, vvicked and naughtie of life. ibid.
Affliction for religions sake. 1198.
They are displeased at the vngodlye, because they can not like their studies and deuises. ibid
A deadlye hatred followeth this displeasure. ibid
Of this hatred is bredde all euils, vvherevvith the godly be afflicted. ibidem.
There followeth sequestration and abhorring. 1199
Vnto this abhorring is ioyned slaunders, tauntes, and rebukes. 1199
The godly bee afflicted in minde, vvith the sinne that is in their members. ibid.
The troubles of the iust in this life, are not onely many, but innumerable. 1200

CCLXXVIII.

Of whence afflictions do come. 1200.

It belongeth too a Christian mã to knovv from vvhence euill doth come, either to al or to some. ibid.
Afflictions be sent from God. ibidem.
The causes of afflictiõs come some from our first parents some from our selues, some from God. ibi.
The causes of euils vvherevvith vvee bee afflicted for our sinnes, come from our selues. ibid.
The causes of some afflictions is in them that doe afflicte vs. vvithout a cause. 1201
The causes of some afflictions come immediatlye from God, as in him that vvas borne blynde, that Gods vvorkes might be reuealed in him. ibidem.

Of what purpose of God afflictions be. 1201.

God hath no delite neither in the affliction nor destruction of the sonnes. ibi.
VVhen GOD punisheth hee vvorketh a straũge vvorke, to attain to his ovvn worke ibidem.
VVhy the iust bee afflicted. 1202
To exercise and traine them vp in faith, hope, prayer and prayse of his name. ibid.
To make them an example of faith and patience, and too set forth the glorie of Gods name by them. 1203
VVhy God doeth afflicte the vngodly vvhome he knoweth to bee paste all repentaunce. 1203

CCLXXIX.

Howe many manner of wayes afflictions be sent. 1203.

Synners be scourged by sundry afflictions. ibi.
There is a generall louingnesse and care of our saluation in God, but the meanes and vvayes to saue doe vary. 1204
The iust be tryed by sundry afflictions. ibi.

What is the profit of affliction. 1204.

Afflictions breede patience. ibid.
Afflictions gyue vnderstanding, ibi.
Affliction abaseth. 1205
Affliction bredeth amendement of lyfe. ibi.
Affliction dothe restraine naughty cõcupiscence. ibi.
Afflictions breede a feruency of prayer. ibi.
By afflictions vve bee assured that god taketh care for vs. ibi.
Of affliction commeth sacrifice of prayse 1206
By afflictions vve bee taught to comfort other. ibi.
God maketh many famous in the vvorlde, by afflictions. ibi.

Howe afflictions ought to bee suffered, borne, and ouercome. 1206.

It skilleth much vpon what man afflictions bee layde. ibi.
Howe afflictions ought to be taken. ibi.
We ought not vvilfully to prouoke afflictions vpon vs. ibi.
Whether it be lavvful to flee afflictions. 1207

CCLXXX.

The opinions of the fathers is diuerse in this behalfe. 1208.
It is lavvfull to auoyde afflictions by testimonies of the scripture. ibi.
Howv the afflictions ought to be borne. ibi.
The afflicted muste haue faith to beleeue that god doth chasten, try, reforme, and saue them from destructiõ by afflictions. 1209
They must haue hope that God vvill once deliuer vs from the crosse. ibi.
They muste haue patience. ibi.
They must haue reioycement of the spirite. ibi.
Whether that the afflicted may not sorovv, lament and vvayle, and call vpon god. 1210
The godly afflicted lament and sorovv in the flesh, but they reioyce and suffer patiently in the spirite. ibi.
Hovve affliction is to be ouercome. ibi.
It is ouercome, if a man behaue himselfe so, that it cease and leaue off. ibi.
Affliction is ouercome when the partie doth abide out all the affliction, and is not ouercome therby. ibi.

Howe men muste deale with the afflicted folke. 1211

We must not onely suffer the crosse our selues, but also haue pitie on other that be afflicted. ibi.
VVe ought not to adde more miserie to the miserie of the afflicted. 1212
We ought not to despise nor contempne the afflicted. ibi.
It is a great offence to reioyce at the misery of others, 1212
The afflicted muste bee holpen. 1213
Wee must shevve our selues to the afflicted, that vvee haue compassion on them, though vve can not helpe them. ibi.
We muste comfort thẽ vvith vvordes, and pray for their relefe. ibi.
When vve succour the afflicted vve must not enquire vpon their lyfe. 1214
VVee ought to succoure all men that be afflicted, but chiefly the faithfull creature. 1215

How God vseth himselfe with the afflicted. 1215.

Hovve god dealeth vvith the afflicted. ibi.
God vvorketh all meanes to our saluation. ibi.
God is present vvith the afflicted, as a phisition with the sicke. ibi.
God is present vvith the afflicted, as a vvorkman with his vvorke. ibi.
Why god doth not immediatly delyuer the afflicted. ibi.
Bicause he knovveth it to bee most meet for our saluation. ibi.

Of Persecution. 1215

VVhat it is to persecute, 1216
To persecute, is to folovve and pursue a man without ceasing, to be reuenged of hym and to do him harme ibi.

Howe many sortes of persecutions there be. 1216.

Outvvarde persecution and

CCLXXXII.

inuvarde perſecution. 1216
That is outvvard, that is done by them that be ſtraungers from the profeſſion of the chriſtian faith. ibi.
Invvarde perſecution is practiſed, by the chiefe preſidentes and paſtors, for relygions ſake. 1217
Invvard perſecution, ſome is vvrght, ſome vvrongfull. ibi.

VVhether auctharitie to perſecute be meet and conueniēt for the Church. 1218.

The Church maye perſecute for iuſt cauſes, ſo that it do not exceede in perſecuting. ibi.
VVe muſt haue reſpect what becommeth the Church, rather than the perſon offending. ibi.
Perſecution vvhere vvorthye reuenge is ſought, pertayneth to the Magiſtrate. 1219.
Perſecution is more conuenient to the magiſtrate, thā to the Church. ibi.
The church of God hath the ſvvorde of gods vvord, not of Iron. 1220
VVhat the Church muſt doe to the obſtinate heretykes ibi.
Charitie moueth the Church to ſigh, lament, and call vpon god for ſuch. ibi.
The Church ought to vſe ſuch, as a naturall mother vſeth hir child that is frantyke. ibi.
Such moderation the primitiue Churche vſed, till the Church vvas corrupted thrvughe theyr fecular povver. ibi.
VVe may thanke our ſinnes,

CCL XXXIII.

that the Church novve a dayes hath fevve fathers, but manye luſty Lordes, Prelates, maſters, Byſhops, &c. 1221
It came by the ſpecial prouidence of god, that the Romiſh Antichriſte vvas not able to opreſſe the poore fryer Martine Luther. ibi.

VVhat kinde of perſecutsion is the ſorer. 1221.

The trouble to flee perſecution is endles, vnleſſe a man vvill fall in the perſecutors handes. ibi.
The domeſtieall perſecution breedeth an exceedinge griefe. ibi.
Publike perſecution that is done by a common vvealth is ſorer. ibi.
Church perſecutions is foreſt of all, and paſſeth all the other. 1222
It is a moſt greuous thing for a chryſtian, to ſuſtaine ſo horrible opinion, and perſecution of the Church of Chriſt. ibi.
It is no wonder to ſee a Hauke pray vpon a doue, but it is a great vvounder to ſee one Doue pray vpon an other. ibi.
Though the Teſtimonie of conſcience do comforte the afflicted Chriſtian, yet it is a moſt greeuous thyng to him, byeauſe the Church doth perſecute him. 1223

VVhat kinde of men be ſubiecte vnto the perſecution of the Church. 1223.

None doe deſerue to be perſecuted, but the reprobate ibi.

CCLXXXIIII.

If vve demaund vpon vvhom thys perſecution is vvonte to fall vve can not ſay they be reprobates. 1223
The ſpirituall be ſubiect vnto perſecutions. ibi.
Who be carnall, and vvho be ſpirituall. 1224

Of Patience. 1225.

VVhat patyence is. 1225
Patyence is a vvylling and long ſufferaunce of harde and paynfull thynges, for honeſties ſake and profite. 1226.
Vpon patyence is required, a vvyllyng and long ſufferaunce of aduerſities. ibi.

VVhich be the partes of patience. 1227.

He that is ſtirred vp vnto anger, is voyde of patience. ibi
Patience can haue no place in our hartes without expectation of better thynges to come. ibi.
The thyrde parte of patience is the patience abidyng in ryghtuouſneſſe, for vvhich vve be afflicted. ibi.
The fourth parte of patience is the vertue of ſufferinge. ibi.

Howe many ſortes of patiences there be. 1228.

The patience of God and the patyence of man be dyuers. ibi.
In vvhat reſpect patyence is attributed vnto God. ibi.
Hovv Tertulian calleth Ood patience. ibi.
The patyence of man, is no perfecter

CCLXXXV.

perfecter than the patiēce of god, though hee hath no paſſyons as man hathe, 1229.

How many ſortes ther be of the Patience of Man. 1229.

The patience of mē is ſome true, ſome counterfaite. ibi.
Auguſtine alleageth Cateline for an example of counterfayte patyence. 1230
The Lacedemonians ſcourgyngs. ibi.
The pacience of the Prophetes of Baal. ibi.
True patyence, vvhich, and hovv many folde. ibi.
The ſtrength of the bodye, is not required in true patyeēce. ibi.
The patyence of the virgine called Potamiana. 1231
Places of Scripturs commendyng patyence vnto vs. ibi.
Examples of patience. 1232

The Church is furniſhed with godly examples of patience. 1232.

The patyence of God hymſelfe. ibi.
The patyence of Chryſte. 1233.
The patyence of Noe. ibi.
Thy patyence of Abraham, ibi.
The patyence of Iſaack. 1234.
The patyence of Iacob. ibi.
The patyence of Ioſeph. ibi.
The patyence of Moyſes, ibi.
The patyence of Prophetes, Apoſtles and Martires. 1235.

CCLXXXVI.

Howe farre foorth patience ought to be kept. 1235.

Patyence not alvvayes to bee kepte. 1236
Difference betvvixt, euill and euill. ibi.
VVe ought to ſuffer vvronge but to doe no euill. ibi.
It skyleth to vvhome euill is done. 1237
If a man ſhoulde ſlaunder the name of God, no man ought patiently to heare and abyde it. ibi.
A man in office ought not to ſuffer one man to hurte an other. 1238

VVhat is the vſe of patience. 1238.

Three manner of vſe of patyence. ibi.
VVithout patyence to heare the doctrine of the fayth, men come not vnto fayth. 1239.
Hope requireth to haue patyence. ibi.
Patyence is needefull for the bearyng of troubles, and confeſſyon of the fayth. ibi.
Proofe requireth patyence. 1240.
By patience vvee ſaue our ovvne ſoules. ibi.
Without patyence vvee ſhall not do the vvyll of God. ibi.
The ſeconde vſe of patyence is concerning the cōmon lyfe of men. ibi.
The thyrde vſe of patyence is to mortyfie the fleſhe. 1241

Of Impatience. 1241.

Impatience is a vice vvherby there is no aduerſitie ſuffered for godlyneſſe. ibi.

CCLXXXVII.

The partes of impatiencie 1241.
The dinell is author of impatience. ibi
VVhat impatience vvorketh. ibi.
Tertullian aſcribeth al kinde of ſinne to impatience. ibi.
Examples of impatiēce. 1243

Of Hereſie. 1243.

Hereſie is the greateſt ſlaunder vvhervvith godly folke be charged. ibi

VVhat hereſie is. 1243.

Hereſie ſignifieth choyſe. ibi.
Hereſie ſignifiing choiſe, condemneth no man. 1244
VVhat hereſie is after Tertulyan. ibi.
The Apoſtle vſeth this word Hereſie. ibi.
An Heretycke after the minde of Auguſtine, is he that begynneth to folovve anye falſe opinions for lucre. ibi.
What it is to be an Heretike with the Greekes and Scholemen. ibid.
Heretyckes three wayes. 1245
After the proper ſenſe of the vvorde, the Churche and Fayth of Chriſt is Hereticall. ibi.
He is an Heretycke, that by errour doth chooſe that vvhich is falſe, for a truth. ibi.
He is an Heretyke vvhich not of errour but of purpoſe of ſingularitie ſtandeth to a nevv and falſe doctrine. ibi.

How many ſundry ſortes of Hereſies there be. 1245.

The Iewes, the Phelоſophers

CCLXXXVIII.

and the false Christians Heresies. 1245
VVhich be those Heretyckes that do ouerthrowe the foundation of Fayth. 1246
VVhat heretykes haue erred in secondary matters. ibi.
Heresie, some priuate, some publike. 1247
Heresie, some newe, some old some renewed. ibi.
Some make Schismes and no Churches. ibi.
Some refuse some of ỹ scriptures, which they perceyue contrary to their opinions. 1248.

VVhereof Heresie commeth. 1248.

The good Heresies is of god 1248.
The beginning of euill Heresie is of the diuell. ibi.
Why the Apostle doeth recken Heresie amõg the vvorkes of the flesshe. ibi.
Heretyckes fal into grieuous offences, bycause of the alyannce betvvixt heresie and the vvorkes of the flesshe. 1249.
How Heresie came in men. 1249.
The speciall beginning of Heresies, commeth of fine and sharpe vvitted men in Sophistrie. ibi.
The pride of the cleargie of Rome caused Tertullian to fall to Montanus. 1249
The flesshe maketh Heretyckes not the Scriptures. 1249

VVhat kinde of Men are moste seduced by Heretyckes. 1249.

They that be not of ỹ tryed

CCLXXXIX.

men, doe easely fall into Heresies. 1250
Ignorance is the mother of errour. 1250
The vvauering of the minde foloyeth ignorance. 1250
Slauery to our owne lustes and desires, maketh vs to giue eare and minde to such doctrine as pleaseth our lustes. 1251
That appeareth in Dauid George, a most cursed Hereticke. 1251
Negligence in Religion bringeth Heresies. 1251
Ouer great estimatiõ of persons bringeth heresie. 1252
Consciences burdened vvith sinne, be soone intangled vvith Heresie. 1252
Vntryed, ignorant, vvauering, negligent, disdayneful men, slaues to their own lustes, estemers of persons, do soneste become heretyckes. 1253

Howe Heresies be culpable 1253.

All Heresies bee generally blame vvorthye, saue onely that vvhich true Christians do professe. 1253
The matter and stuffe of the Heresie is culpable. 1253
The seconde blame, is in the Diuell the beginner thereof. 1254
The third blame is in the Heretickes themselues. ibi.

Howe hurtefull heresies be. 1254.

Heresies doe leade men out of the high vvaye. ibi,
It maketh them enemies of the truthe, ibi.
It doth exclude them out of the kingedome of God. ibid.

CCXC.

It maketh them corrupt in minde. 1255
They doe them vvith the diuell. ibi.
They trouble the Church. ibi.
They decay the Scriptures. 1255.

VVhat is to be done with Heresyckes. 1255.

Heretyckes must be reformed 1256
Howe and by vvhome Heretickes ought to be reformed. ibi.
Two parts of reformation. ibi.
To bring him frõ hys errour, and to leade him to embrace the Truth. ibi.
One Hereticke can not be reformed, by an other. 1257.
It belongeth to Christian men to reforme Heretickes ibi.
The Christian reformeth the Heretycke by the vvord of Truth. ibi.
The Christian reformeth the Hereticke by the spirite of Christ. ibi.
A mans harte is gentle and manlyke, it is rather ledde than driuen. 1258
The Christian man cõmendeth the good things that be in an Heretycke. ibi.
Whether heretyckes ought to be compelled. 1258
Argumentes of them that say that heretickes ought not to be compelled. 1259
They alleadge mans fre will that it ought no more to be compelled, than god compelled our father Adam to kepe the cõmaundementes ibi.

CCXCI.

They say, God doth not alowe them that be enforced againste theyr vvill. 1259
They alleage thys scripture, Iohn.6. vvill ye bee gone also. ibi.
They alleadge the saying of Tertulliã to Scapula. Ther is no peece of scripture to enforce Religion. &c. ibi.
We must make difference betvvixt tvvo kindes of reformation and of tvvo states of the Church. ibi.
It belongeth neither to the people nor to the Minysters of Christ, to compell any man to obey whether he vvyll or no, but onely to the Magistrates. 1260
The condition of the ministers of the Church is such that they ought not to cõpell men. ibi.
The degrees of Bysshops and Magistrates, bee not all one in the Church. ibi.
The Byshoppe ought not to compell any man agaynste his vvill. 1261
The magistrate ought to suffer no man to styrre at hys libertie in the Church, eyther in doctrine or ceremonies. ibi.
The Argument of free vvyll now after the fall of Adam, can not be maintained againste the Magistrate ibi.
Adams free vvill before hys fall vvas set in vvith a law and vvyth threatening of death. ibi.
There be tvvo vses of compulsions. 1262
One to haue the vvorke absolutely done vvhether the deare vvill or no. ibi.
The other to compell a man

CCXCII.

to doe that, that is good, so long tyll he doe it of hys owne accorde. ibi.
Whether the husbande may compell his vvife, the father the children, &c. to the confessyon of the fayth. ibi.
Howe this saying Eschue an Heretycke after once or tvvyse vvarning, ought to be vnderstanded. ibi.

VVhen, howe, and to what ende Heretyckes might be compelled to amendement by the Magistrate. 1263.

Ministers of the vvord ought to vse puritie of lyfe and doctrine of the reformation of Heretickes. 1263
How heresies doe arise throughe the fault of the ministers of the Churche. ibi.
The Magistrate ought not to heare them that seeke rather the destruction, than the reformation of an Hetycke. ibi.
The minister ought not to drawe out the secret person into the open sight of the vvorlde. 1264
A secret errour is soner reformed than an open. ibi.
No certaine vvaye of compulsion of Heretyckes may be apoynted. ibi.
The errour shoulde be slaiue and the men kept alyue ibi.
The firste Christian Emperours sought not the bloud of Heretickes. 1265
The christian Magistrates do punishe Heretickes so moderatly, that they maye amende. ibi

CCXCIII.

He that sleyeth an hereticke, doeth either not beleeue that hee erreth damnably, or els hee careth nothing for hys saluation. 1265. & 1266.
If they be such Heretickes as doe blaspheme God, the lavv of God doth not suffer them to lyue. ibi.
VVhen punishement began. ibi.
VVhat is to bee done, if the multytude and Magistrate be in heresie. ibi.
Ther is nothing left to good folke to doe in such a cate but sorovving and vvayling. ibi.
Augustines sentence for the burning of heretikes. 1267

VVhat difference there is betwixt the Heretyckes which do seduce and them that be seduced. 1268

Tvvo thinges bee disalovved in the Hereticke seducer. ibi.
Of seducers vvhich do not seduce of errour but of know ledge. ibi.
Of the which be seduced wittyngly or ignorauntly. ibi.
Their faulte is great vvhich being in a vvell ordered Church doe suffer themselues to be deceiued. 1269
They offende more that folovve an heresie at the first beginning thereof, than they vvhich at length fall to it. ibi.
Hee that is deceiued by bare vvordes hath the lesse excuse. ibi.

How Heretyckes ought to be receyued. 1270.

There bee three kyndes of

CCXCIIII.

Heretickes. 1270
The Fathers vvoulde not receiue some heretickes except they vvere baptised a newe. ibi.
Howe it is conuenient to receyue heretickes that doe amende. ibi.

VVhat is to be done with Heretickes bookes. 1271

The Papistes do burne Heretickes bookes. ibi.
They alleadge that the curious bookes of witchrafts vvere burnt by the Apostles. ibi.
There is an other consideration to be hadde of Heretickes bookes. ibi.
The good thinges that be in heretickes bookes, doe many tymes confute the euill thinges. ibi.
The Apostles did not burne the curyous bookes, but the ovvners of the bookes did burne them. 1272
VVho maye reade hereticke bookes. ibi.
Hierome, of the reading of Origines bookes. ibi.

VVhether the appeachement of Heretickes ought patiently to be suffered or no. 1272.

The saying of Hierome, not suffering the suspition of heresie. ibi.
Hieroms meaning is not that vve shoulde by impatient, but that vvee shoulde not dissemble and holde our peace at it. ibi.
VVe ought not to holde our peace, vvhen the Papystes call vs heretickes. ibi.

CCXCV.

It is a matter vvho do call vs heretycks. 1274
I am not moued vvhen the Papistes doe call me heretycke. ibi.
If my brethren call me heretycke, I will impute it to their errour and zeale. ibi.

Of Scisme. 1275.

The greatest sores that the Church of God bee subiect vnto, be heresie & schisme ibi.

VVhat Schisme is. 1275.

Schisme is a cutting of, a diuision or breache. ibi.

VVhat difference is betwixt Heresie and Schisme. 1275.

Heresie is false doctrine in matters of faith. 1276
Heresie maye bee vvithout schisme, & schisme vvithout heresie. ibi.

Howe many kindes of Schismes there bee, 1276.

Schisme good and euill. ibi.
The Schisme of the Corinthians vvas rebuked of Paule. ibi.
Some schisme breedeth christian foundentesse, some not. 1277
Some Schisme consisteth in iudgement and opinion, some of the ecclesiasticall communion, some of the discipline. ibi.

VVhether we be rightly called Schismatickes of the Papistes. 1278

To be called a Schismaticke

CCXCVI.

is one thing, and to bee in fault of a Schisme is an other. ibi.
The Schisme of our tyme is like to the schisme of christ and his Apostles fro the communion of the Ievves. ibi.
Gods truth hath compelled vs to dissent from the Papistes. ibi.

VVhereof Schismes do come. 1279.

There can be no Schimse, but amonge such as be ioyned togither. ibi.
The diuersity of the qualities that be ioyned togither be the first cause of Schisme. 1279.
VVhich euill persons be specially occasiõs of Schismes. 1280.
Hierome sayth, they that haue bene placed by God to be preistes and Prophetes. ibi.
Of the cutting of Christes coate. ibi.

Howe greeuous the sinne of Schisme is. 1280

The Schismaticke destroyeth himselfe. 1281
Christ can not bee deuided. ibi.
The Schismatike doth cutte the vvhole body of Christ. ibi.
The Schismatike contemneth the Church. ibi.
The Schismatick dorh condemne the Church of god. ibi.
The Schismatick doth breake the lincke of peace. ibi.
Of the Schismatickes, whose CCXCVII.

Dathan, and Abyron. 1284.

Of Magistrates & what a Magistrate is. 1283.

This vvorde Magistrate, cõmeth of Maister. ibi.
This vvorde maister, cõmeth magis. ibi.
This vvorde minister cõmeth of Minus. ibi.
Why the magistrate vseth ministers. ibi.

Of whence the Magistrate is 1284.

The magistrate is of GOD. ibi.
They that consider nothyng els but the ambition of the that desire to raigne, doe suppose that the magistrat is of God. 1284. & 1285
The abuse of povver is not of God, but of Sathan. ibi.
The tyrannye commeth by God, but the tyrannye it self is not ordened frõ god as thel avvful power is. ibi.
There is no povver but of God. ibi.
Ther povvers in this vvorld be not onely of Gods permission but of his ordeynaunce. 1286
Three kindes of Gods ordynaunce, of vvhich magistrate commeth. 1287
Some be borne to the Auctoritie of gouernance. ibi.
The povver of regiment is estabIished, vpõ the grõud of gods vvorde. ibi.
God stirreth some vp vnloked for, and furnisheth them vvith his spirite. ibi.

CCXCVIII.

VVhat maner of men they ought to be that doe beare office, and be magistrates. 1288.

It is the ministers dutye, to admonysshe the Christian migistrate of his dutye. 1289.
Why the Apostle did not prescribe to the magistrats vvhat they ought to bee. ibid.
Of common vvealthes, which haue povver to chose magistrates. 1290
The difference betvvixt the Ethnicke and Christian Magistrate. 1290
What the Christian magistrate ought to be. ibi.
Those thinges that be vvritten touching the dutye of magystrates, doe concerne Policie & Religion. ibi.

VVhat is the office of a Magistrate. 1291.

The office of a magistrate in generall, is to bee the minister and seruant of god. ibi.
VVhich be the kindes of that ministerie, vvherein the magistrate doeth seeke God. 1292
The ministerie of grace, and the disposition of Gods misteries. ibi.
The ministerie of Iustice, gouernaunce, reuenge, defence, &c. ibi.
There be tvvo sortes of reuenge, one of punishment of subiectes offending, an other of repressing the enemies. ibi.
The magistrate is the minister of God, to our profit. 1293.

CCXCIX.

That vve may lyue commodiously in a quiet and peaceable lyfe. ibi.
The magistrate must defend the publike honestye. ibi.
The magistrate ought to oppresse the vncleanneese of Church men. 1296
The magistrate must see, that euery estate keepe a comlinesse. ibi.
The magistrate must see, that the people do lyue godly and religiously. ibi.
The Magistrate not perswaded of Religion himselfe may doe that, if he compell no man to any Religion but to keepe obedience in other thinges. ibi.
So it commeth to passe, that the Christians lyue amongst the Ievves and Turkes, being not compelled to forsake their countrey Religion. 1297
The godly magistrate doth it in not suffering euery man to svvarue from the true Relygion of god. ibi.
Some magistrates doe thys of vaine glory. ibi.
Some doe it in consideratron of their offyce and dutie. 1298.
Vnder all these sortes of magystrates, the true Religyon may stande in daunger. ibi.

VVhether the Magistrate haue authoritie to take order in Religion or no. 1298.

The controuersie of the power of the magistrate in Religion. ibi.
The chiefe care of Religion belongeth to CCC.

strate. 1299
Religiō is a peece of the law of all nations. ibi.
It belongeth to the charge and powver of the father, to bring vp his children in true religion. ibi.
The powver of the father, is not so great ouer his children as the magistrate ouer his subiectes. 2300
The charge of religion is more vnto the magistrates than to the prieſtes ibi.
God gaue the charge of religion to Moises and not to Aaron. ibi.
The charge of Religion descended not of Eleaſer, but vnto Iehoſua the Magyſtrate. ibi.
Both the Magiſtrate & prieſthode, vvere ioyned togither in Samuell. 1301
Kinge Dauid ordered religion. 1302
Salomon, Aſa and Ioſaphath tooke charge of Religion. 1302.
Ezechias did vvith ſpeciall care order Religion, as Ioſias did. ibi.
Examples of euill Kinges do not derogate the lavvfull powver, vvhich the good haue vſed. 1303
VVho hath the charge of religion when the Magiſtrate is vngodly, & enemie vnto it. ibi.
It vvas the dutye of the Babylonians, and Aſſirians, both to vnderſtand and ſerue God, through vvhom they preuailed and raigned ouer the Iſraelites. ibi.
VVhen the kinges be vvicked and aduerſaries to godlyneſſe, the charge of religion cōmeth of the Prieſtes and Elders. 1304.
The care of religion came to CCCI.

Eſdras and Nehemias, &c. 1304.
The care of religion vvas put to the Apoſtles and Miniſters by Chriſte, tyll the Princes began to vnderſtande the Truth. ibi.
The care of religion cōmeth to euery houſholde, if the Prince and Elders, do neglecte their care. ibi.

Howe far foorth the auctoritye of the Magiſtrate ſerueth in Religion. 1304.

The Popes men ſuffer the Magiſtrate to haue no powver in religion, but to be their vvarder and champion. ibi.
They ſay ꝑ no Magiſtrat hath powver to make eccleſiaſticall lavves. ibi.
They alcadge the example of Ieroboam and Achab kings ibi
If Ieroboam and Achab had made vovves to the vſe of the Church to haue godlyneſſe taught and vvickedneſſe reſtrayned, they had not fallen from the charge of their auctoritie. 1305
It is in the magiſtrate both to take charge of relygion and to make lavves eccleſiaſticall. 1305
The Papiſtes ſay vvherſoeuer is maioritie, there is auctoritie to commaunde. ibi.
They colour ꝑ matter by the church, vvhoſe power they ſay they haue. 1307
VVhether the counſel of the Church be vvell appoynted by the auctoritie of the Church. ibi.
Moyſes alone had more powver and auctoritie than the vvhole Church of Iſraell. ibi.

CCCII.

Of that that Paule vvryteth of making Iudges betvvixt brother and brother. 1308
The caſe of Chriſtian men, is other thē of heathē. ibi.
Whether that becauſe of the prophane, their ought any prophane lavves to be ſuffered amongſt Chriſtyans. ibi.
VVhat it is to bee eccleſiaſticall. 1310
The Eccleſiaſticall degrees of Emperours. ibi.
Of vvhat matter of religion the magiſtrate oughte to take order. ibi.
It belongeth to the magiſtrate to make the minyſters of the Church. 1310
The Magiſtrate ought to apoynte the orders of Miniſters to exclude the reprobate and to put the contentious to ſilence. 1311
He muſt take heede that the vvorde of lyfe be vprightly ſet foorth. 1311
Hee muſt ſee that the ſacramentes be miniſtred aryght. 1312.
He muſte loke the Ceremonies of the Church. ibi.
Hee muſt keepe both the miniſters and people in order. ibi.
Hee muſt ſee that the ſcholes be vvell ordered. ibi.
Hee muſt punyſhe the dyſorders of hys ſubiectes. ibi.
He muſt looke for the church goodes. ibi
Hovve the Magyſtrate maye take charge of the Churche and of the Magiſtrate both. ibi.
The Miniſteries of the Churche be of God, though the Magiſtrate doe appoynte them. 1313

of CCCIII.

Of the magiſtrates of the Romaine Empire ſworne to the Emperour. 1314

The powver of the Emperour doth not derogate the powver of the vnder magyſtrate. ibi.

VVhether that Chriſtian men neede to haue a magiſtrate 1316.

The Magiſtrate is neceſſarye for Chriſtian folke ibi.
Where the good be mingled vvith euill, and they that bee good bee imperfectly good, there the Magiſtrate muſte needes take place. 1317.
This ſaying, Reſiſt not euill, taketh not avvaye the vſe of the magiſtrate. ibi.

VVhether a Chriſtian man may be a Magiſtrate. 1317.

The Chriſtian man maye be mercifull and yet vſe hys office againſte the reprobate. 1318
Paulus Sergius, the Centurion, the Eunuche, and the ſouldiers that vvere baptiſed of Iohn, vvere not forbidden to exerciſe their office. 1319
It is to bee vviſhed that all kingdoms had Chriſtian Magiſtrates. 1320
No man canne better vſe the office of a magiſtrate than a Chriſtian. ibi.

VVhat is due to the Magiſtrate from his ſubiectes. 1320.

Honour is due to the Magy-

CCCIIII.

ſtrates from the ſubiectes, 1321.
Feare is due to the Magyſtrates. 1321
Trybutes and cuſtomes are to be paide to the Magyſtrates. ibi.
Wee muſt obey the magiſtrate. 1322
Whether eccleſiaſticall perſons, and vvhat eccleſiaſticall perſons, be reputed for ſubiectes. ibi.
There be that do diſdaine to be vnder ſubiection. ibi.
No liuing man is exempted from obedience due to the Magiſtrate. 1323
Deade folkes onely bee free from the obedience of the Magiſtrate. ibi.
VVhether the cleargie be diſcharged from obedience to the Magiſtrate. ibi.
Euery ſoule, is as muche to ſay, as euery man. 1324
The miſtery of iniquitie is, in the lybertie of the cleargie. 1325
They attribute vnto the Pope, all fulneſſe of powver due to Chriſt. ibi.
The blindeneſſe of the times paſt is very great. 1328
They alleadge the vvords of Conſtantine the great out of Ruffinus. ibi.
The ſame Conſtantine, vſed his auctoritie tovvardes the Biſhops. ibi.
Emperours called Biſhops to counſels. ibi.
They alleadge the liberties graunted to them by Emperours. 1329
A priuilege is loſt bycauſe of the abuſe. 1330
The priueleges of Churchmen do proue, that they ought to be ſubiect to the Magiſtrates. 1331

CCCV.

Howe farre foorth men ought to obey Magiſtrates. 1332.

It is one thing to obey God immediately & by meanes 1332.
Hovve Peter ſaith, bee ſubiect vnto euery creature of man. ibi.
VVe muſt obey all ſuperiour powver for the Lords ſake. ibi.
Violence vvrongfully done by the Magiſtrate, is rather to be ſuffered, thā to abide to bee driuen to offende. 1333.
There is much difference betvvixt them that doe patiently abyde a vvronge, and them that yelde to the vvorke of vniuſtice. ibi.
Hell gates can not compell a Chriſtian man to euill, much leſſe a Magiſtrate. 1334.
The three Childrē in the burning ouen be an example there of. ibi.
The princes of the empire are not to bee excuſed, for ſufferinge the interim. 1336.
No man hath more powver than hee hath of GOD. 1337.
It belongeth not to the Magiſtrate to order any thing in religion, vvithout Gods vvorde. 1338
The Lawes of the Magiſtrats doe binde the conſciences of the faithfull. 1340
The Magiſtrate is bounde no further to the lavve, which God executed, but in that they doe apoynte vvhat offeces are to be punyſhed by death and what not. 1340

Of

CCCVI.

Of Othes. * 1

What an Othe is. *1
It is an othe when God is taken to vvitnesse by the vse of his name. * ibid.

VVhether it be lawfull for Christian men to vse Othes. 2.*

The Anabaptistes trauaile to take away all othes. * ibi.
An othe is not of it selfe euill, therefore not vnlavvful except it be made euill by circumstances. * ibidem
An othe is not against the glorie of Gods name. * ibid.
An oth is not against the loue of our neighbour. * 3
An othe is commaunded by God. *4
An othe is commaunded by examples of most godly fathers. * 4
An othe is a peece of the seruice of God. *5
An othe made in the faith of God, in truthe and iudgement, is the badge or cognisaunce of the nevve Testament. *6
God, Christ his sonne, and the Apostles, vsed othes. * 7
We may not expound Christs vvordes Math 5. to make him to be both against his father and him selfe. * 8
The sense of the vvordes of Christ, I say vnto you swore not at all. * 9

*Of the abuse of Othes. * 13.*

Anabaptistes condemne that they neyther vnderstande nor vvyll bee instructed off. *13
Worldly and carnall men do

CCCVII.

abuse that they do not cõdemne. * 13

How they do offende that do require an Othe. 13*

When they put light persons and of no credit to othes. * 13
When the iudge doeth minister an othe in light matters of no vvaight. * 14
When the iudge doth minister an othe in a matter vvhich hee knovveth is impossible to bee performed. * 14
They offende in the forme of an othe, in coupling of Sainctes names, vnto the name of God. * 14

*How they doe offende which do sweare. * 15.*

By a cõmon vse and custome of swearing. * 15
When men fall to svvearing, bicause the company he is in doth vse to sweare. * 15
They that vse svvearing vndo them selues, though they hurt no body els. * 15
By svvearing by Gods creatures, though they svveare not by his name. * 16
It excuseth not the offence, though it bee truthe that they svveare. * 16
Hovv they offend that be put to othes in iudgement. * 16
If they vvill rather svveare for a small matter than lose it. * 16
If they vvillingly & vvittingly svveare falsely. * 16
If they doe not perfourme the thing that they svveare * 16
If thei svveare in a matter that can not be performed vvith out sinne. * 17
If in svvearing, they ioyne

CCCVIII.

Saincts names to the name of God. * 17

*Of the discharge of othes. * 17.*

We must consider vvherefore an othe may be voyde. * 17
If the othe be vnlavvfull both to be svvorne & performed, it ought to be broken. * 17
If there bee occasion of sinne ministred, if a man ... pe the othe. * 18
If by ... othe office is wrought against the loue of thy neighbour. * 18
If hee that svveareth can not performe his othe, bicause he is subiect to others. * 19
The othe made of a thing impossible, doeth not binde. * 20

Of Vsurie. * 21.

Vsurie is novv a daies become like the disease of the Canker. * 21

*VVhat Vsurie is. * 21.*

Vsurie is vvhatsoeuer men do receiue againe, more than they gaue out. * 22

*VVhether Vsurie be lawfull or no. * 23.*

The vsurie vvhich God giueth through the increase of the land, is commendable. * 23
Our forefathers applied this vsurie diligently, but novve it must giue place too the damnable vsury of money. * 23
There is another vsurie lavvfull and heauenly, that receiueth a hundreth for one to them that forsake anye thing for Christes sake. * 23

CCCIX.

Wee must consider vvhether the Vsurie that is vsed novv adayes, and the vsury of the lande and of heauen, be all one or no. *23. & 24
The mainteiners of the accustomed vsurie, alleage the ciuill lavve of the Code. * 24
The maker of that ciuill lavv vvas constrained to permit some vsurie, to staye theyr inordinate couetousnes.

*How men ought to lende according to the doctrine of Christ. * 26.*

Christ chargeth them that be able to lende, not to denye him that vvill borovve. * 26
By keeping of this charge, the children of the vvorlde are knovven from the children of the kingdome of heauē. * 27
Christ teacheth them that folovve him to lende, trusting vpon nothing to come of it. * 27. & 28
They that be of Christs flock must lende, too them that haue not so much vvealth to paye them agayne. * 28
To them that neuer lent vs, nor yet be able to lende vs againe. *28
Not only to friendes, but also to enemies, to straungers as to kinsfolkes. * 28
Wee must lende vvhere vvee looke for no recompence, thankes, nor fauour againe. * 28
Let vs consider hovve farre they that lende vpon vsurie be from this square & rule of Christian righteousnesse *28
All men maye vvell perceiue

CCCX.

the great vvickednesse of vsurie, saue they vvhich haue a svvete sauour in the lucre and gaine. *29
All men see hovve vvicked a thing it is to seeke a gayne vpon the pinching & paine of others. *29
It is out of all reason for the Vsurer to receiue a gayne, vvithout daunger or losse of his money. * 29
Though the detter pay neuer so great vsurie a great many of yeares, yet hee must render the principall stocke vvhole. * 29

*The obiection of the Vsurers. * 30.*

The Vsurer saieth, they vvere vvilling and glad so to take it, and therefore he doeth no vvrong. * 30
Necessitie is an harde and sore thing, and the Vsurer maketh a gaine of other mens miserie. * 30. & . 31
Some Vsurers saye, they do as they vvould be done to, so that thei breake not the cõmaundementes by the vsurie. * 31
The Vsurer doeth abuse the vvordes of Christe in this matter. * 31
If it vvere true that charitie moued the Vsurer so to do, he must imagine him selfe to be poore and nedy, and then consider vvhether hee vvould rather giue interest, than no interest. * 31
When the Vsurers can not mainteine their Vsurie too be godly, they say they vvil not lende at all. * 32
Bicause of such couetousnesse, the ciuill lavves vvere faine too permitte some vsurie. * 32

CCCXI.

If thou refuse to lende, thou art vvorse than an Heathen if thou lende vpon Vsurie, thou art vvorse .he a number of Heathen men. *32
The Vsurer saith, if he should lende vvithout Vsurie, the poore man that borovved vvere neuer able to pay his principal stocke againe. * 32
If ye knovv his pouertie, vvhy doe yee not hearken too Christes vvordes. * 32
The Vsurer saith, it is not reason that he should bestovv that litle that he hath gotten vvith trauaile, vpon others for nought. * 33
It vvas a chargeable matter for Christ to redeeme thee vvith his bloud, and to become poore too make thee riche. * 33
The Vsurer saith, hovv shall I liue and mainteyne my familie, if I do not lende vpõ vsurie. * 33
Seeke the kingdome of God first, sayth Christe, and the righteousnesse thereof, and all this geare shall be ministred vnto you. * 33

*Of the Vsurie of them which deliuer their money to interest, to Marchantes or Princes. * 35.*

This vsurie is not so great an offence, as Vsurie taken of the poore. * 35
Both in the giuer out, and the receiuer, there is respecte of proper gaines. * 35
Seeing the seeking of proper gaines is the roote of vsury, Christi in folkes can not vse it vvithout offece or blame. * 36
Hee that taketh vsurie muste take heede, that hee feede

CCCXII.

not his owne vnbelyefe thereby. *36
They pleadge that the their principall, will not serue them to liue by. *36
Those imagynations come not of fayth but of diffydence. *39
They obiect that men ought not to tempt God. *36
Then did the godly me both of the old & newe Testament tempt God, abiding rather penurye than the commoditie of Vsurie. *36
The Vsurer sayth, he taketh vsurie for the aduentures of his principal, which peraduenture the Merchant by some myssortune shall not bee able to repaye. *37.
In excusing himselfe that he will not offend God, hee offendeth in aduenturing his money vnto vncertein

CCCXIII.

chaunces & daungers. *37
The vserer is also to bee blamed in lending his mony, to them that will misuse it to their vnsaciable lustes, *37.
This kinde of vsurie hindereth the vvorks of charitie, *38.
The vsurer will not diminishe the stocke vvhich he hath appoynted to vsurye, for no necessitie of his neighboures. *38

The Vsurie of widowes and Pupilles. *38.

In tyme past all vsurie vvas abhorred, saue that of widowes & Pupiles goodes. *39. & 40.
Now mens substaunces be so vvasted vvith vsurie, that men can leaue nothing for vvines and children. *40.

CCCXIIII.

It had bene much better to haue obserued the apostles ordinaunces for vvidowes, then to prouide for them by suffering vsurie. *40
Yet that vsurie of vvydovves and Pupiles might easely be borne, if all other vsurye vvere ryd out of the vvay. *41
The Canonistes appoynted punishement for this vsurie besides Gods reuen[illegible]. *41.
Those punishementes remaine in paper, but are not put in vre. *41
It is now become vncurable like an olde govvte. *42

Finis Tabule.

¶IMPRINTED AT LONdon by Henry Bynneman.
Anno, 1578.