

Common Places of Chriſtian Religion,

Gathered by Wolfgangus Muſculus, for the vſe of ſuch as deſire the knowledge of Godly Truth, Tranſlated out of Latine into Engliſh, by Iohn Man of Merton Colledge in Oxforde.

Herevnto are added tvvo other treatiſes, made by the ſame Author, one of Othes, and an other of Vſury.

VVith a maſt perfect and plentifull Table.

Seene and allowed according to the order appoynted in the Queenes Maieſties Iniunctions.

AT LONDON
Imprinted by Henry Bynneman.
Anno [illegible] 1578.

¶ The Preface of Wolfgang Muſculus vnto the Chriſtian Reader.

IT IS MORE THAN TEN YEARES paſt (vvelbeloued in the Lorde) ſince I firſt began to vvrite theſe Places, and therefore no manne can haue occaſion to thinke that I haue raſhly and vvithout good deliberation let anye thing eſcape me. And I doe vviſhe to God, that the ſlovvneſſe in the ſetting forth thereof maye throughly helpe, that there be founde nothing therein diſſonant from the rule or purpoſe of the holy Scriptures. For I vvoulde not vvillingly in any thing that I vvrite, be the Author or maintainer of any kinde of error, though it vvere neuer ſo ſmall. And the cauſe of my ſlovve proceeding in this vvork, vvas, that by the order of our ſchole I coulde not take in hande but one place in a weeke to expounde to my hearers: but I perceiue that there commeth no harme at all by the long tarying in the ſetting forth hereof: for ſurely it ſhall ſeeme ſoone inough done, in caſe it be vvell inough done.

I doe vnderſtande right vvell, that many learned men haue heretofore vvritten and ſet forth Common Places touching Religion, vvherevppon it may ſeeme perhaps a matter both vaine and ſuperfluous to trauaile any further therein, foraſmuch as it is beyonde all hope, that any of my doings can be comparable, much leſſe better, than that vvhich is alredy done by others. But like as I thinke their trauaile and labour vvell beſtovved, vvhich haue vvritten herein before me, ſo I ſhall not miſlike vvith them neither, vvhich ſhall enterpriſe to doe any thing in the like caſe after me. For notvvithſtanding that there be ſome lacke novve and then in their vvritings, vvhich doe occupie themſelues in the vvorke of the Lorde, yet the verye endeuour it ſelfe being good, is alvvayes to bee borne vvithall, and not to be miſliked. Such is my iudgement of the vvritings of others, and therefore I take it not to be much out of the vvay to ſtand in this hope, that others alſo may iudge the like of mee. For as Auguſtine dothe allovve ſundrie tranſlations of holy Scriptures, bicauſe they may all turne the diligent Reader vnto ſome profit, ſo vvhat is the let, but that the like trauayle employed by ſundry perſons to the handling of Common places in the Churche of God, ſo that it be reuerently vſed, may much profite all faithfull folke tovvardes the better vnderſtanding of holy Scriptures and godly lyfe? For it may ſo fall out, that thoſe pointes vvhich be to ſeeke in this vvorke of mine, may be founde in others: and againe, it is poſsible, that ſome pointes vvhich other vvriters haue not once touched may be founde expreſly noted by me. And it is the part of a vviſe and diſcrete man, not to embrace all that I, or others may happe to vvrite, vvithout a good diſcretion and iudgement: for albeit that the inuention herein be good and commendable, yet forasmuch as vve be all men, and do neither eche one of vs ſee all, no nor any thing perfectly, but ſome fevve things, and that dimly, as it vvere vnder a cloude, it is not onely poſſible, but alſo certaine and ſure, that generally all the vvriters that euer haue bene (except onely the Canonicall) haue bene ſometimes deceyued, and haue oftentimes ſet forth in vvriting things likely more than true, and that vvhich they haue ſuppoſed rather, than certainly knovvne to be ſo, vvhich ſome raſhe head vvill immediatly maintaine and ſtiffely vpholde as moſte true. VVherefore notvvithſtanding this my opinion, that the trauayle and paynes of no good vvriter ought to be contemned, yet vvithall my minde and iudgement is, that they muſt examine and trie them all vnto the touchſtone and rule of holy Scriptures, and ſtande onely vnto thoſe vvhich they finde conſonant, and agreeable vnto them: and vvhatſoeuer eyther is, or ſeemeth to be contrarie therevnto, they may doe vvell to paſſe it ouer quietly, vvithout any quarrelling or offenſiue vvordes. And I entred into the trauaile of this matter not of mine ovvne drift, but at the commaundement of others, vvhō I vvas the better contented to obey in this caſe, bicauſe I knovv right vvell, vvhat a lacke it is to the Church that many Preachers doe verie ſelde apply themſelues to open and expounde to the people any one Common place of doctrine in Religion, but take it to be ſufficient for thē, if they handle ſome text or peece of Scripture to declare it piſtellike, as they terme it. Yea, and eſpecially bicauſe that vvhen they fall either of purpoſe, eyther by happe into ſome Common places, they do handle it ſo coldly, confuſely, out of order, and ſo farre from the purpoſe, that it vvere better for them not to meddle vvith it at all, than ſo euilfauouredly to entangle and darken ſuch points as ought to be moſt ſimply and plainly expounded, and ſet foorth to the fruite of the faithfull. Learned men haue through their ovvne diligence gathered them Common places, by the meanes of their much reading, and be able alſo to vſe a very good order in their teaching, by reaſon of their long vſe and often exerciſes. And as for them, they haue no neede to vſe this my trauaile, and therfore in caſe they chaunce to finde anye lacke therein, they muſt remember that theſe Places be not vvritten for them, and ſo they may holde themſelues contented, for that they neede not to be troubled vvithall, but may leaue them to the vnlearned ſort, for vvhom they vvere firſt vvritten. And novv touching the order of the Places, ſome haue vſed one vvay, and ſome another. The thing of it ſelfe is ſimple and playne, and of nature in it ſelfe vvell appointed: but as the contentions of eche age hath novve and then ſhifted in nevve opinions and doctrines into our Religion, and hath entangled ſo ſimple and plaine a matter as it is, vvith manifolde queſtions and doubtes, and left it ſtill more doubtfull and cumberſome than it vvas at the beginning, ſo they haue alſo bredde great variance about the very order of the places, vvhich no vviſe mā in the courſe of Religiō cā vtterly neglect. notvvithſtanding my purpoſe and intent is to proceede therein according to mine ovvne vvill and libertie, and not to be reſtrained therein by any preiudice of ſuch vvriters as haue paſſed heretofore, but as neare as I can, I vvil haue a regarde vnto that order, vvhiche the verie matter it ſelfe ſeemeth to yeelde, and as the controuerſies alſo of our times doe require. And I vvill make my beginning at him, vvho notvvithſtanding that he is incomprehenſible, and vvithout all place himſelfe, yet is in a ſorte the verye place in vvhom all things doe reſt and repoſe, I meane from vvhom all things be, in vvhom all things be moued and contained, and vpon vvhome all things doe ende. VVhome I doe moſt humbly and hartily beſeech, that vvhat trauaile ſoeuer I haue determined to beſtovve herein to the behoofe of his Church, it may pleaſe him to employ it to the profite and commoditie of the faithfull and godly. For vnto this marke vve ought to leuell and direct all our doings, as many of vs as doe vvorke in the Lordes Vineyarde, either in preaching, either in vvritings. I cannot denie, but that theſe places might haue bene much more finely and eloquentlye vvritten, and ſo haue better liked fine and delicate heades, but I thought the beſt vvaie for me to content my ſelfe vvith my meane habilitie, and to ſet forth to the ſimpler ſorte thoſe things vvhich be cleare and true, in a plaine and eaſie kinde of ſtile and ſpeach, deuiſing more hovve to diſpatch theſe Common Places to ſome profit, than hovv to make a fine tale of them.

A Table of the principall places entreated of in this Booke, The firste number signifying the Leafe of the Booke, the second the Columne of the generall Table.

Abrogation of Moses lawe. 278. 74
Anger of God.1035. 243
Afflictions.1196. 277
Baptisme.671. 161
Catholike Churche.618. 141
The ten Commaundements.85. 20
Couenant of God.263. 75
Churche.608. 136
Churche of Christe.614. 139
Creation.21. 4
Creation of Angels.23. 5
Of the seruice of Aungels,849. 302
Creation of Man.25. 6
Decalogus.80. 19
Difference of the Old and Newe Testament.233. 76
Dispensation of the grace of God 331. 83
Desperation.1088. 253
Election.501. 110
Fall of Angels.24. 6
Fall of Man.30. 7
Free will.42. 10
Fayth.470. 104
Forgiuenesse of Sinnes.573. 124
Feare of God.111. 357
God.1. 1
Godhead of Christe.14. 3
Gospell of Iesu Christe.336. 84
Godhead of the holy Ghoste.16. 3
Good workes.558. 120
Goodnesse of God.948. 224
Grace of God.205. 77
Holy Scriptures.349. 86
Hope.1078. 251
Heresie.1243. 287
Judiciall Precepts.262. 72
Justification.634. 116
Justice of God.997. 335
Judgements of God.1051. 245
Incarnation of the Worde 315. 82
Knowledge of God.1068. 249
Lawes.65. 17
Lawe of nature.68. 18
Louingnesse of God towards Man.957. 227
Lone of God.1004. 237
Magistrates.1153 271
Merites towards God 563. 131
Mercie of God.977. 232
Morall Precepts.260. 72
Addition or enlargemẽt of the moral precepts.250. 72
Newnesse of doctrine, Faith, Religion, and seruice of God &c.857. 203
Name of God.875. 207
Nature of God.886. 209
Othes. * 1. 213
Omnipotencie of God.905. 269
Obedience 1126. 284
Patience.1225. 287
Popishe Masse.710. 249
Power of the Church.634. 235
Power and gouernaunce of God.993. 281
Perfections.1145. 262
Prayer.1250. 241
Presence of God.1029. 130
Priesthoode of the newe Testament.594. 236
Prouidence of God.1005. 70
Redemption of Mankinde.304. 118
Repentaunce.517. 32
Sinne.48. 157
Sacramentall Signes.648. 295
Schisme.1275. 201
Seruice of God.844. 212
Sufficiencie of God.898. 161
Supper of the Lorde.704. 305
Traditions.863. 220
Truth of God.935. 308
Vsurie. * 21. 271
Vowes.1173. 200
Worshipping of God truely.838. 4
Workes of God.18. 215
Will of God.710.

Common Places of Christian Religion.

¶ Of GOD.

I DO ASSVREDLY know that the naturall and fleshly man accordingto the Iudgement of S. Paule, vnderstandeth not the things that bee of God, muche lesse he vnderstandeth or knoweth GOD himself: Yea I doe boldly protest, that neither the spirituall man doeth in the playn and perfect sort of knowledge comprehende those things, which concerne the Maiestie of God, which is so clothed and couered with inaccessible brightnesse, that the eyneste part of our minde or vnderstandyng, can by no meanes possible reache vnto the same. And yet such is our estate who be men, that there is nothing whiche with greater daunger we may be ignorant of, than of oure GOD, by whome we be made, and by his heauenly grace called to thys entent & purpose, that we shuld knowe him, obey him, and serue him, vnlesse we wil willingly run into euerlasting damnation. So stand we in a maruellous streight of the most mightie and insearcheable Maiestie of God on the one syde, and the necessitie of our saluation on the other syde. We muste therefore euer, and by all meanes endeuour, that (seing wee are created to this purpose, that we shuld know and glorifie God, we be not slacke or negligent in any poynt therof, whiche is our only health and saluation, but let vs call vpon hym for helpe that made vs, and desire of hym, that hee wyll worke the same in vs by his spirite, whiche through our selfe can not bee done: and that he will vouchsafe so to lighten our heartes, that we may perceyue those things of hym, whiche his will is shoulde bee knowne and perceyued of vs, though not perfectly, yet as through a glasse, and by a figure, vntill wee maye come to the tyme of more perfection and glorie.

1. Corinth. 3.

VVe be of nothing ignorant with greater peryl, than of God.

VVe must neuer thinke of God, without a deuout reuerence.

There bee an infynite number of things that may be easlier sought and called into question, touching GOD, than founde out and expounded. And the nicenesse of man is suche, that he will sooner searche too farre, than sufficiently of God: thinges vncertaine, rather than certaine: things vnprofytable rather than necessary. Therfore I admonishe all young men, studious to knowe God, that they neuer take vpon them to thinke, much lesse to dispute or cõtend of God without great reuerence and feare. Let them haue euer in mynde how great and vnsearcheable the Maiestie of Almyghtie GOD is, what reuerence and feare we ought to beare vnto it, and therewithall howe bare and vile our estate is: how weake and slippery is all our vnder-vnderstanding: and to say truly, how corrupt and peruers our whole iudgement is, specially of things godly and heauenlye. So that the brute beaste lacking reason, maye see further into the doings of man, than man may into heauenly and godly things with all his power and strength, beyng earthly and carnall.

It is needful our minde be fearfull and circūspect.

Wherfore it behoueth vs, specially in this matter aboue all other, to bee fearefull and circumspect. Fearefull, that we step not out rashly & vngodly with an vncleansed heart to the consideration of Gods Maiestie: Circumspecte, that we leane not to our owne or any other mennes imaginations, but that we searche for GOD out of Gods owne worde, not seeking out of our bounded matters more curious than godly and necessary to our saluation, but that only, which without dāger of our selues we may not be ignorant of. That only let vs searche out with all godlie and diligent endeuour of trembling hart: and when we shall haue found it, hold it faste, and vertuously employ it altogither to the glorie and honour of God.

I. Whether there be a GOD.

The cause of this question.

THe first question of all that maye be moued of God, is whether ther be a God: whiche we should not haue cause to speake of, vnlesse the heart of man were sometymes assaulted with this kynde of impietie and led to denye God. Wherof we may haue testimony aswel in writings of the Gentils, as also out of the holy scriptures.

Cicero of the nature of Goddes.

The place of Cicero is wel known of Protagoras, Diagoras Melius, and Theodorus Cyrenaicus: of which the firste doubted whether there were a God or no, the other two vtterly denyed that there was any. Where hee speaketh also of them which reported, that the whole opinion of men had of Gods immortall, was deuised by wise men, only for a common wealth, that the feare of God might trayne them to doe that whiche they ought to doe, whome reason coulde not bring thereunto. And in holie Scripture the Prophet Dauid crieth, and noteth this impietie, saying: The vnwise said in his heart, there is no God. But who seeth not, that all the mysteries of our religion be altogither vaine, and lyke old wiues tales, onlesse we be firste ascertained that there is a God? Who can with a stedfast and firme hearte serue him, whom he denieth or doubteth to be? Therfore the Apostle saith ful aduisedly to the Hebrues: Whosoeuer cōmeth to God, he muste beleeue that God is, and that hee rewardeth them that seeke hym: wherein hee did wel firste to set forth the necessitie of this faith, to beleeue that God is. And after that ioyned to it, what manner of God we muste beleeue him to be.

Psal.14.

Ebr.11.

For this cause and the authoritie of the Apostle, wee haue firste proposed this question, whether ther be a God, to admonishe all them that bee studious of Diuinitie, what not only they themselues shall firmely holde for the principall pointe of our Religion, but also what they shall as moste assured instructe and beate into other mennes heades, without whiche, they can proceede no one steppe onward to godlynesse, whiche is, that there is a God. And in this poynte I can not Iudge hym assured and fyrme enough, which

Why this question is set first.

How men come to the knowledge that there is a God.

supposeth this point of our faith to be so grafted in the harts of al liuing men, that no man may doubte in his heart, but there is a God, for that hee may yet by the crafte of Sathan bee brought to this doubt.

Now if any mā shal aske me howe our senses being so maruellously corrupt and blinded, may attaine to this knowlege of God, that we may assure our selues, there is a God, I iudge it it not amisse, a little to helpe his rudenesse. Although it seemeth more reasonable to demaunde, howe it maye bee that a man created like to the Image of God and indewed with the light of reason, & ledde as it wer with a bright shining beame from heauen, shoulde not knowe him of whome he is onlye created, but more of whose linage he is, and whom he hath dwelling within him, in whom he liueth and moueth who is not farre frō euery one of vs, so ỳ he may be not only easily knowē, but as the Apostle sayth, he maye be almost felt of vs: but as I sayde let vs see also for the helpe of the ignoraunt, by what reasons it may be found that there is a God.

Act.17.

Three meanes to knowe that there is a God.

And touching this matter, ther are three wayes whereby Goddoeth open himself to the knowledge of mā. The first & most generalis that which is had of his workes. The seconde is more especiall, declared by his owne speach. The thirde is moste speciall of al, which is by his secret inspiration. The first way I say, consisteth in hys working, where the maiestie of God setteth himselfe to be seene in all his workes throughout the compasse of al the world, in heauen, aswell as in the earth. I cal this waymost general, because it is so set forth to all people of al nations, ỳ no man can excuse himselfe for not knowing God. It cā not be denied, but there is in vs a certaine quicknesse of vnderstāding & strength of reason, as might be the eyes of our mindes, whereby we maye knowe in Gods workes, God himselfe the worker therof: but vnlesse the brightnes of the workes of God were so great, ỳ they did set forth the maiestie of the worker to be seene throughout all the earth, our reason shoulde haue had no means to haue knowen ỳ there had bin a God. Therfore the first cause of our knowledge of God is attributed to ỳ light & brightnesse of ỳ workes of God, wherby eue ỳ Philosophers did knowledge the maiestie of the inuisible God as ỳ Apostle witnesseth. For first they did obserue in the workes of God an exceeding great maiestie, an infinit multitude, a wonderful variety, a most cōstant order, a seemely agreement, an endlesse continuance, a pleasaunt vicissitude or intercourse of things cōming & going, briefly, so abashful wisdom in creating & bestowing of things & in conseruing of them such power & might, that they could ascribe ỳ whole workmanship of al things, heauenly & earthly, to no other nature, but to the nature of God. Held this, they talked in deede of the goodnesse of God by the infinit nūber of commodities growing vnto them, partly from heauen, & partly from earth, which the Apostle in the 14. of the Actes rehearseth, saying: And yeuly he left not himselfe without witnesse, doing good, & helping them frō heauen, giuing raine & fruitful seasons, filling their harts ỳ foode & gladnesse. Thirdly they felt a maruellous terror of lightning, erthquakes, pestilences, gapings of the grounde, straunge sightes from heauen, in the sunne, the mone, starres, & comets ý forshowers of greate mischieues and slaughters. Take this withal, that the prophesies of things to come, suche as were Sybilles and of the prophets, were so certaine and true, that they plainely passe the limits of mans foreknowledge, and proued the power of the godhead to gouerne al things in the worlde.

Rom.1. How ỳ Philosophers knewe God by his wworke

Act.14.

Of them vvhich do thinke that there is no thing more than they doe see vvith their eyes.

They that be so grosse and so vnfaithful, that they can not apply theyr vnderstanding and credite to things inuisible, bee so affected for the most part, that they beleue nothing neither of ý life, felicity, & glory of heauen, neither of ý Angels, spirites, & Diuels of hell, bycause they suppose there is nothing farther, and besides that which is seene with our eyes: and so they acknowledge not God in their hart, for ý he is not seen. They cõsider not that there be also some other things inuisible, which for al that they see thẽ not, yet they cã not deny them to be. Who euer sawe a voyce? who hath seene the winde? who sawe any sauour? These things in deede are inuisible, but yet notwithstanding no man of anye perseuerance will denye them to bee. And wherby are they iudged to be, but by the perseuerance of their efficacie and workings? The voyce is not seen, yet it is heard. The winde is not seen, but for all that it is perceyued by feeling, and his working and violence is in that which it bringeth to passe. A sauour is not seene, but by smelling is perceiued most effectually. Who sawe at anye tyme, hys soule? And yet no man is so vnwise to denye that hys soule is in hym, by whome hee perceiueth hee hath life, sighte, hearing, smelling, feeling, and talking, and power to moue frõ place to place. Who seeth hys owne minde? And is there any man so voide of reason that will say he hath none, bicause he seth none, and yet therby conceiueth, vnderstandeth and iudgeth? No man euer sawe the power of his will and heart, and yet there is no man but perceyueth he hath such a power whereby hee loueth, hateth, desireth, and enuieth, mourneth & reioyceth, yea becõmeth good or euil. Why iudge we not likewise of God? Hee is in deede inuisible of himselfe, but through his working, vertue, & goodnesse he declareth hymselfe, so that the minde of man, except it be altogither blinded, maye easilye iudge by the godly workes, that there is a God, by whom al is made, and by whome all is gouerned. So that take me any man of vnderstanding, and he must needs graunt that he doth not vnderstande God in his minde by his workes only, but also that he seeth him with his eyes, hee heareth hym with his eares, he perceyueth hym in hys smell and feeling. Loke me the faythfull man: surely hee maketh triall of God, euen in his taste. So the Prophete sayeth: Taste and see howe sweete the Lorde is. Unlesse Hanny bee tasted, yee can not knowe howe sweete it is. Euen so, vnlesse yee tast of God, yee shall not knowe howe sweete hee is. The taste of his sweetenesse is the vnderstanding of his goodnesse, perceiued by faith. And let thys serue for the firste waye, whereby it may be knowen that there is a God. There be also manye other thynges by which the wise men of this worlde haue wel wayed, and acknowledged that there is a God, but let this serue that

The inuisible offence of god is declared by his vvorking.

God is knowen also by his vvorde.

that we haue touched by the way.

Hebre.1.

2 I saydde that the second way whereby God is knowen to men, consisteth in the worde, for so God hath opened himselfe to our fathers by worde and speaking, euẽ from the beginning of ý world, vntill the dayes of the Newe testamẽt, whereof the Apostle speaketh saying: Diuers and many waies hath God spoken to oure fathers by the Prophets, but last of al he hath spoken to vs by his sonne. This is a speciall way, for it happened not so to euerye nation, as it did by a speciall grace happen to the Israelites. Ye that declareth his word to Jacob, his righteousnes and his iudgementes vnto Israell, hee did not so to all nations, &c. Psal. 147. Psal. 147. And yet this worde, and Christ also the only son of God, with the general gift of saluation to al mẽ, in the latter times by ý meane of the mercy of god, came vnto the Gentiles that the world might haue no cause to complaine that they were bereaft of this grace.

God is opened to the elect by inspiring.

3 The thirde way by inspiration, is by secret reuelation of the holy spirit. And this way I called moste speciall, for a difference from the other two that be indifferent to god and euil, and to restraine this way to the only elect, who beside the lighte of workes and the declaration by words, getteth a moste certaine knowledge of God, yet rather a feeling and a taste of hym, by the liuely & effectuall inspiration and reuelation of the holy spirite of God. The first two reasons serue to this purpose, that mans reason be vtterlye voide of excuse. But that the harts of men may be effectually turned vnto ý true seruice of God, whom they know that appertayneth onlye to this third way, appointed only for the elect. Yet for al that none of the electe is in that respect so vnwise, as to refuse to consider, and heare the workes & wordes of God, as not appertayning vnto him. God forbydde. No man in the worlde doth with more feruency consider the workes of God, none more readyly lifte vp their eares to heare God speake, than euen they which haue the inwarde reuelation of the holy spirite: whereof is most open testimonie in Dauid. This I thought good to giue a taste of briefly, for the ruder sort, giuing them occasion by reading of the holy scriptures diligẽtlye to obserue howe by these three wayes, working, speaking, and inspiring, God is knowen to all people in the worlde.

The elect be not reffe the cõsideration of Goddes workes.

2. Who is God.

The cause of this question.

Secondarily it seemeth that thys question hath troubled mens minds also, Who it is that is ý God, certainely knowen by so manifest testimonies of Godly workes. For therin is great daunger, least in place of the true God be set a fayned God, and so the honour due vnto hym, may bee conueyed ouer vnto another. Like as in euery Realme we must first acknowledge that there is a king, and yet that withal it behoueth the subiectes of the Realme to knowe who is their true and lawful king, least they happen on a straunger, and withdraw the iust honour from their very king in deede: euen so we maye perceiue it is not inough to knowe wee haue a God, vnles we know also who hee is: wherin our fathers in the olde times were much abused. For in their curious seeking who was the God, they became exceding vaine in their deuises: some supposing ỹ sunne to be God, some the moone, some other the Starres, some the fyer, some the fleeting ayer, some the huge masse of water. Finally, we finde some that gaue the honour of godlynesse to men, not yet lyuing, but after they were dead. Of which all ye may reade Sap. 13. But to this question it is best to aunswere briefly, that it cannot be wel called into question who is God, for bicause that question is not well placed but to them, and of them which be many: and so nere one to the other in nature, condition, and shape, that there is daunger, least by ouersight the one may be mistaken for the other: In our true God it cannot be so, who is one alone, and hath none like to him in nature and condition besyde himself: so saith Esa. 45. I am the Lord: & there is none els: Beside me there is no other God. But where as the Ethnikes fell into such errour, that they embraced false gods in stede of theyr true God, it was not for that they were deceiued by ỹ similitude or likenesse or shape, or that they were hindered from the certein knowledge of the true God through any obscuritie of darkenesse was in him, but bicause the harte and vnderstanding of man was so blynded, that lyke as nyghte battes in the clerenes of the Sunne, so they became starke blinde in the moste open light of the true knowledge of God. Whereof in my opinion we muste diligently marke in this case, that we maye easyer determine who is not God, than who is GOD: or to speake more fully: there is no readyer way for vs to knowe who is God, than to be very wary that we take nothing that hath been created, either in Earth, either in Heauen, corporall or spirituall, for God: and so let vs with a godly imagination and fearefull hart passe ouer all thinges created, as wel visible as inuisible, and procede to the contemplation of him, hauing moste certain triall that he is, and yet of that sort, that it may by no meanes be brought within the compasse of anye creature, whether it be corruptible or incorruptible. Neither can wee yet this waye throughly attaine to the certaine knowledge who is God, and to call him by any propre name. For his name is right maruellouse and vnspeakeable.

We reade of Iacob, Genesis. 32. that after he had wrestled with ỹ Angel in the night, and heard him say: Thy name shal not be Iacob, but Israel: For seing thou hast wrought strongly with God, thou shalt preuaile also againste men. Perceyuing he had wrestled with God, and desirous to know who he was, asked him saying: What is thy name? But it was answered him againe: Why askest thou my name? where is also in the old translation, Which is maruellouse, but it is not in the Hebrew. A like matter is in the. 13. of Iudges. Wherby I pray you, what is ment els, but ỹ we may not aske his name, which is as much to say, as who he is.

And Moses in the. 3. of Exodus, being sent by God into Egypt to the children of Israel to bring them from thence, when he heard him saye: I am the God of thy fathers, the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob, bycause he knewe that the same description of name was not proper, nor containing the very substance of him, willing to knowe from whome he was sent, asked him and sayd: Loe I go to ỹ children of Israel, and say to them: The God of your fathers sent me vnto you. But if they aske me, what is his name? what shall I say to them? In that question Moses asked God without doubte, who he was, and by what peculiar name he was distincted from the rest of the Goddes whiche were mistaken and worshipped of the Gentiles. But for all that, it was not shewed to him, who God was: nor was there anye propre name appointed him, sauing that he was the existent, or beeing. So God answered him: I am he that I am. Or as some doe say: I wil be, who I wil be. Thus thou shalt saye to the children of Israel: He that is, sent me to you. Therby was signified to him, that the being of God was of such sort, that he can not nor ought not be called by his proper name. Besides that, that in the times passed, by good experience and proofe, the true God was sufficiently knowē to the fathers Abraham, Isaac and Iacob: wherefore it was ynough to saye to the children of Israel: The God of your fathers, the God of Abraham, Isaac, & Iacob, sent me vnto you. &c. God declareth himselfe who he is, true and liuing, not by any propre name, but by such liuely strength and working, as cannot be ascribed vnto any, but vnto the true God. And therefore it is altogether vnnecessarie, to demande who God is.

Sap. 13.

It is not wel done to aske who God is.

Esay. 45.

Whereof it cam that the Ethnykes worshipped false gods in stede of the true God.

We may easyer determine who is not God, than who is God.

God can not be called by any proper name.

It was not declared vnto Moses who God is.

Exod. 3.

How God declareth who he is.

III. What God is.

In this point also the scrupulosity of man is driuen into a narowe straight, thinking it is necessarie to knowe what God is. For like as ther is some doubte, leaste in seeking of God, he may rest vppon a false and fained God, so he surmiseth it daungerous, onlesse we know what God is, least we should not worshipe that true God as we ought to do. Therefore I thinke good somewhat also to loke into this question.

The cause of this question.

1. And it may be three wayes considered: First, for asmuch as belongeth to the word, God, in latine Deus, which word as it is manifest, the Latines haue taken out of the Greke worde θεὸς, which signifieth pearcing & running through: deriued out of a verbe θεῖν, which signifieth to do the same. The reason of it is, bycause God by his presence and power doeth neuer cease to passe through, moue and gouerne this whole masse of the worlde, and all that is in it.

This question may be three wayes considered. Of the worde GOD.

2. The second consideration of this question is touching the essence or being of God: and when we seeke of the essence or being of God for the vnderstanding what God is, all writers neere hande both of our owne, and also of the Gentils which haue written of God, do agree that it cā by no meanes be conceiued in minde, much lesse expressed what God is. The iudgemēt of Plato is, that the definition of God is not to be sought. The Thomistes do say that God hathe no definition. And Cicero in his first booke of the nature of Goddes writeth in this sort: Wilt thou aske, what, or of what Essence.

The definitiō of God is not to be sought.

quali-

quisitiō? Of this I will take Simonides for mine author, who being demaunded the verye same question of Hiero the tiranne, desired one dayes respite to thinke vpon it. And when he demaunded the same againe two dayes after, he desired two dayes respite more: and after he had diuers and sundry times doubled his dayes of respite, at length Hiero wondred at it, and asked him, why he did so: because sir (said he) the longer that I doe waye the matter, the harder it semeth vnto me. Wherof Simonides hadde great reason. For how is it possible for the streightnes of a restrained mans imagination, to comprehende the infinite and incomprehensible essence or being of the infinite God? A definition might serue, if we spake of a thing finite or that might haue an ende: But God being infinite, it is not possible to define him by any manner way or reason. Wherfore we must well aduise our selues, in this matter chiefly, to breake of that part of curiousnesse grafted in the hartes of men, since the first corruption of them: nor we maye not trauaile to searche for that, which by no meanes possible can bee founde out nor brought to light. Wee reade that Christ sayde, John. 4: God is a spirite: Yet it was not Christes minde to expresse what God is, but he did rather admonish the lely woman that she should not like the corporall worshippers of God, but the spirituall, for as much as he is not corporal. And in so saying, he expressed more what God is not, than what God is. For so the word of Spirite, is taken in that sese, for that nature of thinges whiche bee not earthly and grosse, as our nature & the nature of beastes, birdes, fishes, and plants is, so that for a difference things not corporal, as angels, windes, and the soules aswell of man as of beaste, are commonly called spirites. A like opinion had they which thought the minde and vnderstanding to bee God: as Pythagoras, Cato and Aristile.

That creature is mere, and for comprehending infinite.

God is a spirite. Iohan. 4.

3 Now for ỹ third parte: if we will in this questiō (What God is) leaue to enquire of hys essence, and loke vnto the doings and workes of God: it must needs be reputed that so the inquisition is very godlye and nothyng curious, not hard to be answered vnto, for in this sorte it auayleth muche vnto the true knowledge of God and the study of godlynesse, to knowe what God is. Euen as towarde the obedience of a prince it profiteth much if in this sorte you knowe what the king is, I meane if yee knowe what the kings doings, purpose, duety, and office is. The office and worke of God is to be the maker and preserue of al things, such a one as without him nothing can be, nothing continue. This is reported of God in holye scripture. And in our beliefe we cal him maker of heauen and earth. And the Apostle. 1. Tim. 4. calleth him the sauiour of al, chiefly of the faythfull. And God doth reporte both these thynges of hymselfe Esay. 46. saying: I made, I beare, I sustayne and preserue all. In that hee sayde, I made, he declareth himselfe to be creatour. In that he addeth, I sustayne, I beare and keepe, he letteth vs to weete that he saueth al. And when it is sayde of God ỹ he saueth al, it is included ỹ hee gouerneth al: so that w judgement and iustice he moderateth and ruleth all things, punisheth the wicked, and rewardeth the godly.

Of the office of God.

Who do sufficiently vnderstand what God is.

What office of God is.

Ierem. 9.

1. Timoth.

Esay. 46.

Psa. 11.

They that denye the prouidence of God, do denye God.

And whosoeuer denyeth this prouidence of God, which conserueth & gouerneth all, may wel be thought to deny God himselfe: whiche impietye Cicero in his first booke of the nature of Gods attributeth to Epicure: for in words he did professe the being of Gods, & in deed vtterly denied ỹ same, in that he denied the prouidēce of God. Like iudgement we maye haue of all thē which in their hart say, God neither seeth, neither vnderstādeth, whose madnes the prophet Dauid in the. 94. Psal. doth very earnestly rebuke.

Whosoeuer therfore knoweth thus much of god, that he is maker, keper, & gouernor of al things (by which name the Philosophers call him the Soule of the world, the vnderstanding of the whole, the spirite whiche knoweth al, ruleth and disposeth al) he hath the definition of God, expressing sufficiently what he is, as much as shall serue to aduaunce vs to procede in godlinesse. And this knowledge of him, he himselfe requireth of vs where hee saith, Jerem. 9. Whosoeuer glorieth, lette him glorie in this point, that he vnderstandeth and knoweth mee that I am the Lord, working mercy, iudgement, & ryghteousnes in the earth. He requireth not we should know what his essence or being is, & such other things that bee in hym vnserchable. And the Apostle where he saith to the Ebrues: It behoueth him which crieth to God to beleeue that there is a God, and rewarder of all them that seeke him, he doth plainely require two things, one ỹ we should beleue ỹ there is a God: the other is, that we should vnderstād his office and doings. Whosoeuer lacketh this knowledge, is vtterly ignorant what God is, although he taketh knowledge of his essence or being, whiche is altogether vnsearchable, so that hee is not able to vse the knowledge vnto those things that be necessarie and giuen only of God. For it is moste true that S. Augustine in the fourth booke De ciuitate Dei the 22. cha. alleggeth out of Varro: Like as it helpeth no man to knowe the name and shape of a Physition, if he be ignorant that he is a Physitiō: so it auaileth ther nothing, if thou knowe that there is a God, his name, and his being: if thou knowe not that he is the maker, sauiour, and gouernour of all things, and so knowe not the same, wherfore thou oughtest to praye vnto him. Thus in few words I thought meete to note, concerning this question, What God is, for the simpler sorts sake, to the intent they may vnderstande how farre forth the vse therof may do them good, that bee desirous to applye the knowledge and vnderstanding of God to ỹ studie of true godlynesse, and not vnto curiositie.

All thinges haue some qualitie.

4. Of vvhat qualitie God is.

THer is nothing in the world, heauenly or erthly, but hath som thing either by nature, eyther by some other occasion annexed vnto it, or by diligēce and exercise procured, wherby it maye be called to haue some qualitie. And as for such qualities as groweth with the body, or else happeneth vnto it by occasion, as that they be shaped in certaine figures, fashioned and deuided into members, and that they are colde or warme, black or white, or grey, and such like, they haue no place in God, who is not of body, but a spirite: wherfore the errour of the Anthropomorphi- tes,is to be condemned,which attributeth vnto God a body framed and disposed into members,according vnto ỹ fashion of man:Yet is it manifest,that there be some things in God,in respect of the which it may be knowē,though not perfectly, yet some deale,of what maner sort he is.As of what maner essence or being, what substāce and nature he is of.In very dēd,these things of themselues are vnsearcheable in God, but yet some part there is of thē necessarie to know,and is expressed in scriptures by the spirite of reuelation, the consideration wherof, as I iudge, pertaineth to this place.

In vvhat poinres the qualitie of God is.

Of vvhat maner sort God is in the consideration of his Essence.

VVhat is saide of the Essence of God. Of the vnitie of the essence of God. Deu.6.

GIf the Essence or being of God, besīde ỹ it is the fountain and beginning of all things that be, firste it may be sayde that it is onlye one, hauing none like neither in heauen neither in the earth:and therfore maketh only one God,excluding altogither the nūber of Goddes,wherby the Gentils were deceiued. To this place belongeth that which is read in holy scriptures of the vnitie of God,as in the.6. of Deuteronomie:Heare Israell, the Lord thy God is one God. And in the 44.and45.of Esay:Besides me, hee sayth, there is no other God. And

1.Corinth.8. in the eight of the fyrste to the Corinthians: We know that there is no Idole in the worlde,and that there is no other God but one.And in the 4.to the Ephesians.4 Ephe. One God & father of al, which is ouer al and by all.

This vnitie of God ỹ philosophers of the Gentils did acknowledge.Plato doth manifestly defēd ỹ Monarchie or sole gouernāce of God. Aristotle witnesseth ỹ one minde & vnderstanding gouerneth ỹ worlde.And Cicero folowing Plato, in many places confesseth one God. Of the Poets Virgill spake in this sort of God.

For God doth passe through al the landes,
The waues of sea and through the sandes,
The deapth of heauen both hote and colde, Geor.4.
From him come beast both yong and olde:
Both wilde and tame,and man also Hath strength and life,both frend and foe.

The reason of vvise.

And Ouide in the first booke of his tranformatiō doth clerely attribute ỹ workmanship of the whole worlde to one God alone. Wise men saw that ỹ worlde could neyther haue bin made, neither after that it was made coulde haue bene gouerned by many,bicause of that vnspeakable and most constāt agreēment of all things (whiche doth most certainly proue the vnitie of the true God) and that could not be without danger, if many Gods had the gouernāce therof:So that ỹ strife & battels of the gods of the gentiles are not without purpose set forth by Homere. Wherfore it is a mockery to talke wt them,which bicause, of the hugenesse of things created, suppose this worlde can not be gouerned of one,as though one were not able to sustaine so great a waight of things: but that it nēded many.

The solitudenesse of the Sunne vvhich maketh many goddes.

1 First they sayle in this, that they consider the hugenesse of ỹ workmāship either alone,either more thā they do the maiesty and power of the worker,so that they thinke the worke passeth the strength of the worker , as though the maker were not greater and more puissaunt than the worke which he hath made.

The creator is greater than the vvorke vvhich is created.

2 Againe they be fond in this point, that they suppose ỹ world may be better gouerned of many gods thāof one, like as it is in mens cases, that two are able to sée farther than one alone, & many may do greater feates thā one alone. But they consider not what God is,and how great his diuine maiestie is, which is not diuine in dēde, if it be vnperfect , and yet it shoulde be vnperfect,if he might be greter thorough the aide of manye , or the weaker bycause hée is one alone. They perceiue not that ther commeth more hindrance of many Gods vnperfect, than is lacke in the vnitie of hym whiche is perfect: therfore there must be not many vnperfect, but one God true and perfect, to whom all things be possible: which through his infinit power & wisedome can pearce & passe throughout al ỹ whole,conserue , vphold,& rule it as it were but one body.

vvord God cā neuer be augmented nor diminished.

Pallitude the sun. Similitude the Soule

No man is so folish to say,that one Sunne is not ynough to giue light, & to cherish the whole world, but that we haue nēd of moe like sunnes. We finde by experience, that one soule is so sufficient to gouerne & kepe in life one body,that there shuld grow more empeachment of many,than lacke by one alone. Is the sunne then able to giue light to the whole world alone,& the soule able to gouerne the whole body:of which nether the sunne made the worlde, neyther the soule the body: and can not GOD bée sufficient alone , to rule and conserue hys worke,which with so great wisedome and power he made alone? Some of the Gentiles knewe wel ynough,that the multitude of rulers was not good, and therfore sayd,it was nēdful there shoulde bée one Prince and King alone.

Yet for al that, the vniuersall custome of error was such,and the opinió of many gods so alowed,that they durst not folow & stand to that which they wisely vnderstoode.

VVhat els is said of the essence of God.

Firste therfore of the essence of God it is most truelye sayde, that it is one alone setting before vs one God:now let us loke what else may bée conueniently saide thereof.Surely there is many other things , but for thys present we thinke god to rehearse but a few,as, that it is not made of anye other thing but simple and pure.With simplicitie it agréeth that hée is a spirite:with the purenesse,that he is called a light in whiche is no darknesse. It is also without body,occupying no place , incomprehensible , immutable, indpuisible, impassyble , incorruptible, immortal,vnspeakeable perfect & euerlasting:which al appertayneth to ỹ consideration of the qualitie of gods essence or being. I meane not presently to expound euery one of them particularly,and (to confesse the truth) it passeth the compasse of my smal ability.

5. In vvhat sort God is concerning his substance or person.

The diffe-rence be-twixt these two wordes Vsia and Hipostasis.

THese two words οὐσία & ὑπόστασις were muche vsed of the Greeke diuines,of whiche the firste signifieth Essence, the seconde the person or substance. Of Essence we haue somewhat passed ouer, nowe remaineth wée speake of the substaunce or person. First(least some body by errour shoulde vse both wordes in one sense, & think there is no difference betwixt them:& therfore as we say that there is but one essence in God, so he wil affirme that there is but one person or subsistance: or els as we affirme, ỹ there is thrée persons in one godhead, so hée wil set thrée offices) I thought my trauaile wel bestowed to shew briefly in this place, what difference is betwixte these two words οὐσία & ὑπόστασις, essence and subsistance: and how the olde writers vsed the both. By this worde Essence, they signified that which was common to all persons in the holy Trinitie. By thys worde Hypostasis, or substance, they signified that which is proper to euery person in the Trinitie. They called that common in God, which appertained not only to the father, but also to the sonne, and the holy spirite. They called that proper: that so appertained to one person, that it could not be attributed vnto the other two persons. As for example, thys word Man, is common, and maye bée like applyed to euery man, and expresseth the common nature and essence of all men: yet doth it note no any one particular person or man, whiche is so called as by his proper name. But Peter, Andrew, Iames, and such like, bée proper names. For none of these names is vsed to set forth the commō essence and nature of men, but their vse is to signifie some seuerall person among mē, as subiect vnto the whole, hauing a determinate substaunce or person by it selfe. And for that cause men haue called that which is proper in any thing, the substance, and that whiche is common with many other different in number, the essence. So ỹ whatsoeuer things in God is commō to the thrée persons of the holy Trinitie, they did attribute them to the communion of the essence, bycause they might bee said of euery one, as those things be which we rehearsed a little before of the qualitie of Gods essence. But those thinges which be not common but proper and peculiar to eche person, them they did referre to to their proper substances or persons: as to be father, cānot be attributed to the other two persons, but vnto the father only: to be the sonne, it agreeth not with the father nor to the holye spirite, but only to the word, the onlye begotten sonne of God. To be vngotten, is not applyed vnto the sonne, but to the father & the holy spirit. To proceede forth, is not sayde of the father, nor of the sonne, but only of the holye spirite, who proceedeth from the father and the sonne. So the substaunce or propertie of the father is, that he is the father and vnbegotten: the substaunce of the sonne, that he is the only begotten sonne: the substaunce of the holye spirite is contayned vnder this voyce Spirite, and is expressed by his proceeding forth).

Things cō mon to the persons of the holy Trinitie.

Proper to the p son.

The reuelation of the holy ri itie by hrist. Luth. 28.

The writings of the old testament doe comprehende these thrée substances in these wordes, רוּחַ דְּבָר יְהוָה That is to say, the ordinent, the word, and the spirite: as in the. 33. Psalm. By the worde of God the heauens were setteled, and by the spirit of his mouth al the powers of them. And in the second booke of Sam. 23. The spirite of God hath spoken by me, and his word by my tong hath sayde. The latter writers of the Greekes expressed the propertie of the substances in God by this worde πρόσωπα, that is, a countenance or face, the Latines by the worde person, by which words euery substance might be set forth to be knowen and vnderstand.

Of the nes of th three su stances.

Psalm 3

1. Reg.

πρόσω πα, ὑπο λογος, πνεῦμ

So

So that God in essence is one, as in nature and godhead, in substaunce or person, thrée, which Trinitie not only the holy scriptures doe set forth, but also some of the Bookes of the Philosophers, and the Sybilles verses. The schole of Plato also acknowledged to be in God νοῦν λόγον, καὶ πνεῦμα: that is to say, The vnderstanding, the word, and the spirite.

But this knowledge of the holy trinitie was somwhat hidden, till the reuelation of the worde that toke flesh, when the holy spirite began more specially to worke. Then this misterie of the Trinitie in God was openly set forth by Christe, when he saide: Goe, teach al people, baptising thē in ỹ name of ỹ father, & the sonne, and of the holy spirit. He might haue said, Baptisyng thē in ỹ name of God: but forbicause ỹ vnitie of God was wel knowen to the people, and ỹ hel ỹ Trinitie not so wel, he would ỹ the grace which he thē bestowed vpon them, whereby the mysterie of the holye Trinitie began to be opened vnto the worlde, shoulde be a manifest witnesse to the people, that whosoeuer should be receyued into that grace, should in the Sacramēt of their first admission, confesse themselues to be sanctified in the name, of ỹ father, the son, & the holy Spirit: and as they wer baptised in his name, so they should most stedfastly euer stick vnto him, as to ỹ only & true god. That perceiued Basile, and therfore he wrote in this sort. Δεῖ γὰρ ἡμᾶς βαπτίζεσθαι ὡς παρελάβομεν, πιστεύειν δὲ ὡς βαπτιζόμεθα, δοξάζειν δὲ, ὡς πεπιστεύκαμεν. That is to say. We must be baptysed as we haue receiued, beléeue, as wée are baptised, glorifye, as we haue beleeued the father and the sonne and the holy spirite.

The reuelation of the holy Trinitie was somwhat hidden, till the reuelation of the worde that toke flesh, when the holy spirite began more specially to worke. Then this misterie of the Trinitie in God was openly set forth by Christe, when he saide: Goe, teach al people, baptising thē in ỹ name of ỹ father, & the sonne, and of the holy spirit. He might haue said, Baptisyng thē in ỹ name of God: but forbicause ỹ vnitie of God was wel knowen to the people, and ỹ hel ỹ Trinitie not so wel, he would ỹ the grace which he thē bestowed vpon them, whereby the mysterie of the holye Trinitie began to be opened vnto the worlde, shoulde be a manifest witnesse to the people, that whosoeuer should be receyued into that grace, should in the Sacramēt of their first admission, confesse themselues to be sanctified in the name, of ỹ father, the son, & the holy Spirit: and as they wer baptised in his name, so they should most stedfastly euer stick vnto him, as to ỹ only & true god. That perceiued Basile, and therfore he wrote in this sort. Δεῖ γὰρ ἡμᾶς βαπτίζεσθαι ὡς παρελάβομεν, πιστεύειν δὲ ὡς βαπτιζόμεθα, δοξάζειν δὲ, ὡς πεπιστεύκαμεν. That is to say. We must be baptysed as we haue receiued, beléeue, as wée are baptised, glorifye, as we 1 These things be manifest and must with a simple and cleare fayth bée beléeued, that God is one in essence, nature, godheade, will, mouing and working, thrée in thrée persons, of which euery one hath seueral substāce and propertie, which for all that be so in God, that the essence, nature, godhead, Maiestie, working, will, power, honour, and continuaunce for euer, is common to them all, all coessential, al coeternall.

That God s one in trinitie.

Go dis one and tryne.

2 Secondly, wée see that these thrée persons are called in holy scriptures God, the worde, the spirite: but more plainely by Christ, the father, the son, and the holy spirite.

The appellations of the persons

3 Thirdly, we see that by the fayth of this holy Trinitie is not meant to be thrée goddes, but thrée vnsearchable substances or persons in one true God set forth for the knowledge of Christ, his only begotten sonne, and for the encrease of his glorie, according to the measure of hys reuelation. For if two diuerse and sundry natures ioyned together in one man, doe not make two men, but both doe still conserue the vnitie of one person, so that it remayneth one man, made of soule and body: why shoulde it not sincke into oure heades, that thrée substaunces in God neyther in being, neither in nature diuerse, but altogether equall and euen, doe not let but that the vnitie of God remaineth still one, & ỹ we are not cōpelled thereby to beleue that there bée thrée goddes?

There is not made thre Gods.

A similitude.

Who is so folishe, to beleeue that there are thrée sunnes (being in déede but one) bycause there is in the sunne these thrée qualities or effects: first as it were

A similitude of the sunne.

The similitudes of mi.

such things as be secret in the holy trinitie, are not to be sought.

it were a fountain of light neuer ceasing: secondly ỳ cleare shining brightnesse which commeth therof: thirdly ye heate breathing out and proceeding from them both: Who is so mad to determine that a man hath three spirites, bicause there are founde to be in him three (as it were) diuers substãces, the soule, the minde, and the wil: the soule, wherby man lyueth and mooueth: the minde, wherby he vnderstãdeth, iudgeth, and discerneth: the heart or will, wherby he willeth or willeth not, hateth or loueth, is sory or glad, becometh good or euill? These things are found in our owne selues, wherby we may be led as by hande, to knowe in one and true God, this holy Trinitie of persons, and in this Trinitie a perfect Vnitie of Godhead.

Now how the father from euer and euermore begat the sonne, and the holy spirit from them both not begotten, but proceeding, doeth as wee may say, breath forth, so that he may particularly be called the Spirite, notwithstanding that Chryst called God comonly a Spirit; it is too obscure for any mans vnderstanding to conceyue, much lesse may it be plainly expounded. Neither is it meete that we shoulde search this secrete of our Lorde God. For if we take him for a presumptuous seruant that wil search his maisters natiuity, with what reuerence ought we to forbeare the like curiousnesse in Goddes matters? I cannot vnderstand howe the soule breedeth the minde, and how the wil cometh of them both: by what way then can I vnderstand the diuine birth of the word of God, and the proceeding of the holy Spirit; specially seing that the same knowledge is neither necessary to our saluation, neither sette forth by Gods worde.

Testimonies of holy Scripture necessary.

But this is also necessary, that forasmuch as according to the sacrament of our baptisme we beleue not only in the father, but also in the sonne and the holy spirit, we must serch out ỳ ground of this our fayth out of the holy scriptures, and kepe it stedfastly, and beware, least we beleue not in God only, but also in his creatures.

Wherfore we must haue testimonies of Scripture, of the Godhead, of the Worde, and the holy Spirit alwayes at hand and ready, least we fal into the snares of the Heretiks, which denie the Godhead of them both, and so he ledde away from that puritie of the fayth which we ought to haue of Chryst.

Of the Godhead of Chryst, Testimonies.

Christe is very God. Iohn. 1.

FIrst the holy Scriptures do report of Chryst that he is that euerlasting word of God, by whom all things were made.

1. In the first of John: In the beginning was the worde, and the word was with God, & God was the word. All things were made by it, and without it was made nothing, &c. By these wordes the Euangelist doth playnely attribe Godhead to Chryste, as to the word of God, wheras he saith of him, not that he was made, but that he was in the beginning: nor he sayeth not simply that he was, but that he was with God, that is to say, in Godhead: and that he was God, and that by by him all things were made. The Apostle agreeth with this, writing to the Colossians of the Godhead of Chryst, in this sorte: Colloss. 1. Who is the image of God inuisible, the first begotten of al creatures. For in him all thinges haue ben made in the heauens and in earth, visible and inuisible, angels &c. All thinges were made in him and by him, and he is before all, and all thinges consisteth in him. These things can not be attributed to any creature: therefore they must needes conclude that he is God.

2. Secondly, the scriptures doe testifie of Chryst that he is the sonne of God: as in the 2. Psal. The lord sayd to me: Thou art my sonne, this day I begot thee. and Hath. 3. and 17. This is my welbeloued sonne, in whome I am well pleased. Hath. 16. Thou art Chryst the sonne of the liuing God. The same is in the first of John. Ther is also many testimonies, in which Chryst him selfe doth testifie that he is the sonne of God: as appeareth in the Euangelist John. But to put vs from the opinion that he was an adopted sonne, as all we be, as many as be elect, John the Euangelist, declareth him to be the onely begotten sonne, in the first chap. saying: we haue seen hys glorie, as the onely begotten comming from the father. And God no man euer sawe, but the onely begotte which is in the bosome of the father, he hath shewed him vnto vs. And in the third Chapter: So God loued the worlde, that he gaue his only begotten sonne. Wheras he is called the onely begotten of God, he is separated from adoptiues as a naturall sonne. So meaneth the Apostle Ro. 8. when he sayth: Who spared not his owne sonne, gyuing vs to wit, that Chryst was not the adoptiue, but the naturall sonne of God. And as the naturall sonne is naturally a man, and of like substaunce with his father: so is the naturall son of God naturally God, and of one essence with his father.

Psal. 2. Luc. 3.17. Mat. 16. Iohn. 6. 1. Iohn. 4. Rom. 8.

3 Thirdly the Scriptures do expressly call Chryst God: as in the first of John: And the worde was God. And Thomas sayth vnto Chryst, Joh. 20. My Lorde & my God. And in the. 9. to the Romaines: Who is God, blessed aboue all things. In the. 20. of the Actes: In which the holy Spirit hath set you to rule the Church of God, whom he hath purchased with his bloud. Act. 22. The God of oure fathers prepared thee. &c. that thou shouldest heare the voyce out of his mouth. He meaneth that he heard Chryst: then it followeth that Chryst is the God of the fathers of the Israelites. 1. John. 5. We be in the truth, in his sonne Iesu Chryst. He is very God & lyfe euerlasting. There may be also many testimonies cyted out of the olde testament: as of Hieremie. 23. And this is his name that they shal call him, our iuste Lorde. In the Ebrue it is יהוה, which word agreeth to God alone. And Esay. 7. His name shall be called עמנואל, that is to say: God is with vs. And in the 9. chap. His name shalbe called wonderful, the counsellour, the strong God. And in the. 45. Psal. And the king shal be desirous of thy beautie, for he is thy God. These prophecies do giue Godhead vnto Chryst.

Christ God.

4 Fourthly, it makes to this purpose, that Chryst himselfe doth chalege vnto him certain thinges which agreeth onely with the nature of God, as that is which he saith in the. 5. of John Christ doth ascribe to him selfe the workes of Godhead.

As the father rayseth the dead, so doeth the sonne also quicken whom he will. And whatsoeuer he doeth, the same likewise the sonne doeth. And Iohn. 6. He that beleeueth in me, hath lyfe euerlasting. And in the 10. I giue life euerlasting. And in the 14. Whatsoeuer you aske in my name, that I will do. And in the 16. The holy spirit shall take of mine. And in ỹ 15. Without me you can do nothing. And in the 8. Before Abraham was, I am. And in the 17. Glorifie me father with thée, with that glorie which I had, before the worlde, with thée. There be also many other testimonies, which a diligent reader may in reading obserue by him selfe, to confirme and establishe not only his owne faith, but also the faith of other, in Christ, against the vnbeliefe of the Arrians, Turkes, and Iewes.

Of the Godhead of the holy Spirite, Testimonies out of holy Scriptures.

FIrst this were euen ynough to proue the godhead of the holy spirit, that Christ himselfe, the onely begotten of God, in the Sacrament of baptisme wherin we be first receiued and consigned to him, ioyneth him to the father and himselfe, saying: Baptising them in the name of the father, and the sonne, and of the holy spirite. For it were not méete we shoulde by these thrée names vnderstand thrée gods: by which is expressed onely one true God: and it can not be, that that only most pure God shoulde be made of diuers natures. And so he should be, if the holy spirite were not of the same essence, and of the same nature of godhead, with the father and the sonne. Matth. 28.

This confirmeth the Prophete Dauid, saying. Through the worde of the Lorde the heauens be settled, & by the spirite of his mouth all the strength of them. By these words the spirit of God is plainly therin ioyned into God and to his word, concerning the godhead. For it is ascribed vnto him, that he is the strength of God, conteining all things. And the Apostle saith: All these thinges one self same spirite worketh. And Iohn sayth: There are thrée that geue testimonie in heauen: the father, the word, and the spirite: and all these be one. And Christ sayth: he shal teach you al things. But that appertaineth only to God. And the fathers, byeause the Apostle calleth the beléeuers the temple of the Holy spirite, vsed the same to proue his godhead. For a Temple is méete for none, but for God. It is right therefore that we be baptised not only to the father and the sonne, but also to the holy Spirit: and as we be baptised, we beléeue, as we beléeue we do honour, call vppon, worshippe, & serue the trinitie in the vnity of godhead, and the vnitie in the trinitie, to whom be glory for euer. Psalm. 33. 1. Cor. 12. 1. Ioan. 5. Ioan. 14.

In what sorte God is, in consideration of Nature.

HItherto with a christian modesty and lowlinesse we haue examined of what maner essence and subsistence God is, now it followeth to sée of what maner nature he is. And here we doe vse this word Nature, after the frute, and encreased the fault which she had done.

How we doe vse the word Nature in God.

6 Sirtly, Adam also himself, who ought to haue bin more ware, and whose hart should haue bene better settled in the faith and obedience of Gods worde, induced by his wiues wordes, and forgetting Gods commaundement, toke and did eate it.

This description of the sinne of our firste parents and consideration of the circumstances alowed, what colour or excuse I beseke you can it haue, whereby the transgression of Gods commaundement may in any parte be made lesse? Who seeth not our case to be suche, that we be compelled euery way to commende the iustice of God, and to condemne the sinne of our first parents?

2. What is the strēgth, vvorking and paine of the sin of our first parents.

IF that transgression of Gods commaundement wherein our first parents, euen in the beginning, sinned against God, had passed away euen with the facte, we shoulde not néed to speake but of that paine which we read was giuen for it by God. But forasmuch as it did not so passe with the fact, without detriment and emparing of mans nature, it appeareth plaine, that the working and strength of this mischiefe muste be discouered from the paine, whiche we sée also seuerally set forth in the scripture. And yet I will not much striue against them whiche cal those thyngs to be the paine of thys sinne, whiche the strength of this mischief worketh in the nature of man. Notwithstanding, in my iudgement it is better for vs to obserue ỹ difference of those euils, which for that transgression mankinde purchased to it selfe in our first parents.

VVe must make a difference betwixt the efficacie & pain of original sinne.

And let no man v thinke that the malice of this sinne is so slender and small in strength and working, that it maye bée comprehended by our thoughts, for surely the wholepole of this malice is botomlesse and vtterly vnsearcheable. Wherfore wée will not speake but of that whiche is most manifest. And we wil sée what good the sinne of Adam hath taken from vs, and what euil it hath brought vnto vs.

v What hurt this sin of Adā did

1 First, the state of Adams innocencie was such, that before his sin he was not ashamed of his nakednesse, for that it was not subiect to any filthynesse, as we sée in children. He lost that good immediatly after he had eaten of the fruit of Science, forbidden him. So the scripture saith Who did eate, and the eyes of them both were opened. And when they knewe that they were naked, they sowed together leaues of figtrées & made them couerings. And Adam answered vnto God, saying: I heard thy voice, and feared, byeause I was naked, and hid mée. This shame hys sinne brought him, and made that to séeme foule, which before had no filthinesse in it. So was that great goodnesse of innocencie defyled, and the foundations layde of innumerable wretchednesse and miseries: the example whereof we sée dayly in children, whiche be neuer so happye as when they be as it were in Paradise, without al care, not ashamed of their nakednes: but after they begin

The goodnesse of innocency lost.

to

for pa. 17 See after p. 48 = forw —

to grow to reaſo, immediately their eyes be opened to ſhame, as though they had eaten of the forbiddē apple. All kinde of trouble commeth on by heape, that the ſaying of Salomon is verified therein. He that addeth knowlege, addeth alſo trauaile. Now who is able to way wel what Adam loſte?

The goodneſſe of cleare conſcience loſt and feare ſtroken in before God.

2 Secondely, Adam before his ſinne, dwelt in the ſight of God with a pure and cleane cōſcience, and feared not the voyce of God, wherevnto he was accuſtomed without anye feārting or trembling. This clearenesſe of conſcience and vſage of the voice of God without feare, the trāſgreſſion of the commaundement bereaft him of, and draue into him alſo a gnawing of conſcience, a terror and trembling before the countinācе of God. Therefore when he hearde the voyce of God walking in Paradiſe, he hidde him ſelfe in the middes of the trées that were in Paradiſe, and when the Lorde called him, and ſaide: Where art thou Adam? he anſwered: I hearde thy voyce Lord in Paradiſe, and feared. Now how great the benefit of cleare conſcience and the vnbaſhful familiarity with God is, wouldе God we might proue in deede. How much anguiſh and trouble the remorſe and trembling of a naughtie conſcience bringeth, no mā knoweth that hath not proued it by experience.

The foundneſſe of minde corrupt.

3 Thirdly, the heart and will of Adam before his ſinne was vpright and ſounde, louing god, right and equitie, but after ſinne, he loſt that vprightneſſe of minde, and became an hypocrite and a diſſembler, and declared it immediately euen towardes God. For what did he elſe but an hypocrite, when he ſaide: I hearde thy voyce in Paradiſe and feared, becauſe I was naked? Wherfore ſaide he not: Becauſe I haue tranſgreſſed thy commaundement, and eaten of the forbidden apple? Again when ỹ lord accuſed him of his tranſgreſſion, he put ouer the faulte from himſelfe to his wife, and ſaide: The woman which thou haſt giuen me for a companion, gaue me of the trée, & I haue eaten it, there he played the hypocrite, and ſwerued from the rightneſſe and equitie of a cleare hart and iudgement. Wherfore ſaid he not rather: Lorde I haue ſinned, forgiue me? Likewiſe Eue laide ouer hir ſinne to the Serpent, ſtrange alſo from the ſimplicitie and rightneſſe of hyr wonted diſpoſition.

Free vvil loſt.

4 Fourthly, Adā before he had ſinned, had Frée wil, not ſubiect to any violence of Satan or of ſin: he might haue ſtaide him from any bleamiſhe of ſinne, and haue kept the vprightneſſe of his minde vnſpoyled, and the righteouſneſſe which naturallye he had in him, he might haue kept ſtill vnſpotted, if he wouldе haue had regarde of it. But after he had ſinned, he loſt the libertie of his right and ordinate will, and according vnto the ſaying of our ſauiour, he was made ſlaue to ſinne, and ſubiect to all kinde of euil and vnlawful deſires, wherof Saint Auguſtine ſayth very aptlye in his Enchiridion to Laurence, That man abuſing his frée libertye, loſt both himſelfe, & his frée libertye.

Auguſtinus in Enchiridion ad Laurentium: capite 30.

Of the paine of ſin that vvas layde vpon Adam for his tranſgreſſion.

The curſe of the earth in mans vvorke.

Hitherto we haue briefly ſpoken ſomwhat touching the working and ſtrength of the ſinne of Adam, and nowe we muſt ſée what is ſette forth in the ſcripture Geneſis. 3. touching the penalty therof, expreſſy giuen of God.

1 Firſt, he ſayth: Curſed be the earth in thy worke, thou ſhalte eate thereof in trauailes and labours al the dayes of thy life, it ſhall bring thée forth thornes and brambles, and thou ſhalt fede of the herbes of the earth. In the ſweate of thy face thou ſhalt eate thy breade. So that before his ſinne Adam might haue liued without any labour and trauaile, & the earth would haue brought forth things committed vnto it, according vnto the bleſſing giuen it of God: but after his ſinne, the earth is ſubiect vnto the curſe: ſo that though it haue neuer ſo much tilth and labour, yet it will bring forth brambles and bryers, to continue out Adams life in ſweate and labours.

The vvorthineſſe of the firſt mā loſt.

2 Secondly, his authoritie & worthineſſe wherein he was aduaunced aboue all that was in the earth and in the ſea, was vtterly loſt after his ſinne: for as he became diſobedient vnto Gods will, ſo by the iuſt iudgement of God came it to paſſe, that he loſte alſo the obedience of them which before were ſubiect vnto him & therwith al was turned out alſo of his place of reputation, which was Paradiſe, and as for that obediance whiche is yet remayning in theſe inferior creatures, either it is forced by cōpulſion, either wrought by policie and arte.

Corruptiō and death laide vpon vs.

3 Thirdly, before ſinne the waye was open vnto the trée of life, and Adams body was not ſubiect to any diſeaſe, infection, or death: but after ſinne, it was brought into danger of corruptiō, diſeaſe & death. Vntil thou returne ſaith God, into the earth, out of which thou were taken. For thou art duſt, and ſhalt returne into duſt. That returning into earth and duſt is done by corruption & death. And the waye to the trée of life is ſo ſhut vp, that after his ſinne he muſt néds yelde vnto death.

Nature it ſelfe infected and perished.

All theſe things fel vpon our firſt parents, firſte through the working and violence of ſinne: ſecondly by the penaltye which GOD layde vpon them: beſydes thys, theſe euils did not onlye fall vppon them that ſinned, but did alſo ſo infect theyr nature, that they be conueyed as it were, out of an infected rote, and ſpreade into all their ſucceſſours, euen vntil the very end of the world. So that as all fleſhe comming of Adam is naturally infected with the contagion of ſinne, ſo is it alſo ſubiect vnto the ſentence of death and corruption, ſubiecte vnto all kinde of miſeries and troubles, the babe of one day olde is wrapped vp in the ſwadling cloutes of ſinne, and ſubiect vnto death.

Of this naturall infectiō and corruption of our nature, the ſcriptures beareth witneſſe. Geneſis. 8. The whole thought of mans harte, euen from hys childehoode, leaneth only vnto ſinne. And the Apoſtle: The carnal man perceiueth not ẏ things of God,nor can not. Again:The vnderstanding of the flesh is enemie towards God,and is not subiect vnto his lawe. And: I fele a law in my members, striuing against ẏ law of my minde. And Hierom: The harte of man is croked,and vnsearchable. And Dauid sayth: Lo, I am conceyued in wickednesse, and in sinne my mother conceiued me. Vnto this corruption which infecteth the flesh of our nature, cleaueth fast also the sentence of death and wrath of God. Hierem.17. Psal.51. Thereof the Apostle witnesseth, saying: By one mans sinne, all men died. And death is gone ouer vnto all, for all haue sinned. And to the Ephesians. We were all by nature the children of wrath, euen as the reste. This infection and corruption of nature, hath shutte vs of from the grace and the felowshippe of God. Therefore Christ sayth: Except a man be newe borne from aboue, he can not see the kingdome of God: by which words he declareth sufficiently, that our first birth, whiche commeth of Adam, is so corrupt and depraued, that vnlesse a man be newe borne from heauen, he can not be partaker of the kingdome of God. Rom.5. Eph.2. Ioan.3.

So great therfore is the mischief, strength, and working of sinne, that it hath bereaft all mankinde, in the very beginning and firste entrie of our nature, from the puritie of good conscience, trust in God, straightnes of iustice, liberty of will to good, quietnesse of life, the honour of being the image of God, of our gouernance, & frō the incorruptnes also of nature, & im mortalitie, & hath infected it with wicked hypocrisie, & brought it into danger of al euil, made it slaue of sin, subiect vnto ẏ wrath of god, vnto corruptiō, to innumerable calamities, & vnto death, not only of body, but also euerlasting. So that the scholer of Plato, Apuleius, when he described man, it seemeth he marked wel ẏ corruptiō of our nature, thoughhe knew not the beginning therof. We, (saith he,) dwelle vpon the earth glad of reason, able to talke, hauing soules immortall, members subiect vnto death, of light and carefull mindes, brutishe and scruile bodies, not like in conditions, but like in errours, of peuish boldnesse, stiffe in hope, vayne in labor, brickle of fortune, euery one mortall, and yet togither continuing euer their whole kind, by mutual succession of their braue chaungeable, their time euer fleeing away, lōg ere they be wise, some deade, in their life neuer content: This saith Apuleius. The sum of this place.

4. To vvhō the fal of Mankinde is imputed.

MAn may thinke that the cōsideration hereof is superfluous and curious. For it is necessarie to make it appeare from whence the very beginning of our euill sprang out. And it is needefull also for some places of Scripture that thys question be required.

1 Let vs examine therfore suche thyngs as pertayneth to this purpose. The hystorie of this fall maketh mention of the Serpente, of Eue, and of Adam. The Serpent intised, Eue being deceiued by the entisemente of the Serpent, sinned firste, and after gaue occasion also vnto Adam hyr husbande, to synne. The question is therfore, to whome The Serpent. Adam. Euah.

whom of these three, the corruption and losse of mankind ought to be imputed. There is a place in the boke of wisedome, whiche seemeth to impute this euill vnto Satan, whose instrument the Serpent was. For there wee reade thus. Through the enuy of the Deuil, death entred into the worlde. And there folowe th hym such as be of his sede. And bycause we shall not say for excuse, that this boke hath not the authoritie of the cannon, there is a place in the firste epistle of John, in the thirde chapter where we reade: He that doth sin, is of the Diuel, for from the beginning the Diuel sinneth. To that entēt appeared the Sonne of God, to vndoe the workes of the Deuill. By these two places it seemeth the Diuell is made author of sinne and of death, & also of the losse of our nature. 1.

2 Secondly, In Ecclesiasticus we read thus: From a woman is the beginning of sinne, and by hir al mē dieth. Wherefore Tertullian also in his boke De habitu mulieris, calleth woman the firste forsaker of Gods lawe, the discloser of the forbidden trée, and ẏ gate of the Deuil. And the Apostle sayth, Adam was not seduced, but the woman being seduced, was in the blame. These two places of scripture doe impute the beginnings of our losse vnto the woman. Eccl.25. 1.Timoth.2.

3 Thirdly, Where the Apostle saith: As in Adam al dyeth &c. and in an other place: Death raigned from Adam vntil Moyses &c. he seemeth to mean that the beginning, spring, and cause of this euil came of Adā. Therfore we must see what may be certainely grounded vpon these places 1.Corin.15. Rom.5.

of holy Scripture, and howe they be to be vnderstanded, that ther be found no contrariety betwixt them.

The beginning of sin is of the Deuil.

Where be two things to be considered in this matter, the beginning of sinne, and the ouer spreading of it abrode. If we aske generally of the beginning of whence sinne beganne, that is to saye, what creature firste of all sinned, and gaue others occasion also to sinne, Saint John saith aright, that sinne is of the Diuel, and that he sinned from the beginning. For both he sinned before man, and was therefore cast out from God, & he afterward by meanes of the Serpent gaue occasion also of sinne vnto man. But if it be demaunded what man firste sinned, there can none be noted but Eue. For she was seduced by the Serpēt, & was first in blame, as the Apostle mentioneth: so that the Wiseman saith righte: that the beginning of sinne was wrought by the woman, and that through hyr wee dye all. Not only forbicause shee firste sinned, but bicause she persuaded Adam also to sin. And thus much for the beginning of sinne. Ioan.3.

VVhat man firste sinned.

The spreading abrod of sinne frō Adam.

Nowe if any man aske me of the ouerspreading of sinne, wherby thys mischief passed through, infected, corrupted and made subiect vnto death all mankinde, we must herken vnto the Apostle, who appointeth thys ouerspreading neither to the Deuill, neither to the woman, but vnto Adam. For the Diuel did not conuey ouer sinne vnto Eue, nor Eue vnto Adam by propagation or increase of kynde, but onlye by entisement. For the Serpent corrupted the woman, and the womā the man, by entisement. But the mā being corrupt with sinne, did by encrease of nature shead out his poyson into all the posteritie discending from him. Therfore, although the beginning of sinne came of the Diuel, and Eue, seduced by him, sinned before Adam, yet the nature of mankinde had not bin so infected with sinne, that ỳ euil should haue corrupted all the posteritie with the encrease of all fleshe, and made it subiect vnto sinne and death, if Adam had not sinned. For the increase and succession pertaineth not to the woman, but vnto the man, which cause Origene did note also in this question. And the circumcision of the foreskin confirmeth plainly this opinion, declaring that the corruption and depravation of mankinde, which by succession and byrth is increased vnto all that cõmeth after, is of the sæde of the man. Therefor it was nedeful that Christ shold not be conceiued & borne in ỳ womb of ỳ Virgin of the sæde of man, least he shuld be borne partaker of sin, but by the working of the holy Spirite.

In this sort, I suppose, it is manifest ynough, that although the fault of ỳ fal of Adam be cõmon vnto ỳ Serpẽt Eue, & Adam, yet for asmuch as pertaineth to the encrease, & that ouerspreading of sin, and death, it can not be iustly imputed to the Serpẽt, nor vnto Eue, but vnto Adam, to whom also the Lord said: Bicause thou hast hearkened to the voyce of thy wife, & hast eaten of the trẽ, &c. thou shalt returne vnto the earth. Whiche sentence of death he woulde not haue pronounced, vnlesse Adam ashead of his wife, had perfected the sin begon of the woman. And whereas ỳ Apostle sayth: Adam was not deceiued, but the woman was deceiued &c. it is not so to be vnderstãded, ỳ Adam sinned not, but that he was not deceiued by the words of the Serpent, as the woman was. But for al ỳ, though he were not deceiued by ỳ Serpent, yet bicause he did harken to the voyce of ỳ woman, & ate it, he became a transgressor of Gods commaundement, ỳ accomplisher of the sin begã the woman, & spreader abroade of the whole mischiefe, wherof there was a mosse manifest argumẽt declared in Caun his first begotten sonne.

How A vvas no deceiue

4. To vvhat purpose of God mankinde fel in Adam.

The wayes of God be not like ỳ wayes of men, to make vs to thinke that it happened vnto him as it doth dayly to vs, whose purposes & doings oftentimes fall out farre other wayes than we appointed. He made man to his likenesse, right and whole. And what should happen vnto him through the Serpents intícement, who is so witlesse, to saye that he did not forsee it: Therfore al men do very wel agree therin, that the sin of Adam was frõ euer foreseene and foreknowen to God. So ỳ this fal of Adã chanced not so, as shold be without the knowlege & determination of his maker, and as though he shoulde be deceiued in his worke, as if it had otherwise than he appointed: as whẽ a potmaker should meane to make a larger potte, and by course of hys moulde there do fal out but a small ones: or when a great enterprise takẽ in hand, commeth to nothing, like as it chanceth to vs men for the ignoraunce of things to come, so that the father knowing not what shall become of his sonne, though he hope well, & with great diligence instructeth him wel, yet oft it chanceth that he findeth in him things much contrarie to honestie & goodnesse, & contrary also vnto his expectation. But we muste thinke before all thinges, that no such matter can hapen vnto God.

he fore-ovvlege God vas not vithout me cer-ine pur-ose.

God vvil before the man shou fall.

od could ave letten he fall of an.

He letted im not, bi-ause hee vvold not.

2 And to go farther, I thinke and without any doubte doe pronounce, that the foreknowledge of God of the fal of man to come, was not but to great purpose. For this being certaine, that he did foresee what should become of mankinde, it must nedes folow, next to appoint with our selues, whether he coulde haue let thys fall or no. There is no man will say that he could not. He could haue dashed the purpose and endeuour of Satã, that he should not haue tempted man. He coulde haue so made the minde of man, that he shoulde not haue bin able to haue sinned, according vnto that grace, that the rest of the holy spirits were cõfirmed withall, so that after the fall of the Angels, they coulde not sinne, and so as we shal be in heauen after this lyfe. He could (I saye) but he did none of this. He suffred Satan to tempt, and gaue man the libertie to doe, whether he would, eyther to obeye hym, or the Serpent.

3 Nowe consequently, bicause hee did not let him whẽ he might, I suppose it is not to be doubted, that therfore he did not lette him, bycause hee woulde not let him. For if he hadde wold, seyng he was able, what cause had there bin, but that he hadde letten him?

4 But if this be manifest, that whẽ he might he would not, it followeth in any wise, that it was not without cause that he would not. For in God to will, or to will not, it is not without purpose, but ioyned wyth mosse highe wisedome, and mosse iuste cause.

It vvas not vvithout cause that hee vvould not.

5 If there were any cause, it must nedes be good. Therfore in respect of some good, he would not let the fal of mankinde.

He vvould not vppon a good cause.

6 Now it is demaunded farther, whether this good were appointed and sought before by any purpose or predestination, or that without anye purpose or deuice of any, it shold befall as by happe and circumstance of things, & yet foreseene of God, that it shoulde so befall. I suppose no mã of vnderstanding wyll say, that it should be by happe, without ỳ counsel or purpose of any.

VVhether that good in respect vvhereof he permitted man to sinne, came vppon any purpose or by chaũce.

7 Then whose Counsel, purpose, and appointmente was this? It was not the Serpents, nor Satans, by whome the Serpent was sette on. And we can not saye, that it was Eues or Adams, who vnderstode nothyng at all of it. Therefore it was the purpose of God.

To vvhat purpose God suffered man to fall.

8 Now riseth a question, why God, being mosse iuste, did not with so determined counsell and purpose order the beginning of mans nature that he shoulde not be subiecte vnto sinne and deathe. To that I thinke we must make thys aunswere: The beginning of our nature was so wel & perfectly made of God, that there was no euil or thing amisse therin. He made mã right: He gaue him frée wil to do good & eschue euil, if he had woulde: He set him in a place mosse pleasāt: he made him lord of al things in the earth and in the Sea: He gaue him also a commaundement. It was not amisse, that the Creator shoulde commaunde his creature, and appoint him what he shoulde eschue: Moreouer, the commaundement was not harde nor vnpossible, but possible to kepe, yea and also verye easie. He tolde him plainely what shoulde become of it, if he did transgresse the law of his commaundement. Therfore seeing that mā so perfectly made and adorned with so singular worthinesse, at so light a motion transgressed the commaundement giuen of God, which he might most easilye haue kepte, surely there is no cause why he should put any fault in God, but rather condemne the lightnesse & vanity of man. And farder, wheras by the sinne committed, mākinde perished and fell into so great corruption, depravation, and death, it is not such that it ought to be imputed vnto GOD, but rather suche as the iustice of GOD maye appeare therein.

It vvas vvithout Goddes fault that man sinned and lost mankinde.

Nowe wheras he ordered al these things in this sort, without any fault of his, but to come to some good end: who is so madde to laye any blame vnto the Creator whyche is moste wise and iuste? God forbydde therfore that we shoulde saye, that these things happened without the foreknowledge and counsell of GOD. God forbyd we shoulde say, that it is not lawfull for hym to doe in hys worke, that whiche the Potmaker may worke in his.

VVhat vvas the good his respect vvher of God did not let the fal of man.

Yet hytherto the consideration of this matter is easie and playne. But in this resteth a very hard and obscure question, what good that was in respect whereof God, when he might, would not lette the fall of mankinde. Thus we doe wel perceyue, that it was not done without cause, that the two chiefe and moste hyghe kindes of creatures, that is, of Aungels and of men, fell from theyr state of their rightnesse, seeing that all the creatures of lower sorte did abide in their estate: and farthermore it was not done without cause, that the sinne of the Aungels reste onlye in imitation, and did not infecte the whole order of the nature of Aungels by propagation, whiche was not gyuen to Aungels, but did ouerthrowe only a parte thereof: but mans sinne dyd not corrupt and infect by imitation some parte onely of mankinde, but by propagation also corrupted the whole nature of manne. Surely the iudgementes of GOD be vnsearchable to al them to whom they be not opened by some reuelation: but yet they that bee in Chriſte, and be illuminate by the holy Spirite, they, though they can not see all, yet may they perceyue some things according vnto the knowledge of Chriſte, wherewyth they be indewed: of which sorte is the Apostle, that chosē interpreter of the secrets of God. His saying in the Epistle to the Romanes is thus: God concluded al vnder vnbeliefe, that he might haue mercy vppon all. And to the Galathians he sayth: The scripture hath concluded al vnder sinne, that ỳ promisse by ỳ fayth of Jesu Christ may be giuen to all beléeuers. And to the Ephesians, he saith: We be chosen of God in Chriſt Jesu, before the

There vvas imitation of sin in the Angels, and propagation in man.

Ephe. 3.

The Salvation of man vvas appointed at according vnto his firste estate, but to a restorecent.

Rom. 11.

Gal. 3.

Ephes. 1.

the constitution of the worlde, and that according vnto the purpose of his wil, to the prayse of the glorie of his grace. And in that thirde chapter of the same Epistle he doeth attribute vnto Chriſt the dispensation of the mysterie hidden before the worlde, in God, which created al. By this and other like places, I thinke it open ynough, what was the entent and purpose of God from euer. First to chose whome he would, by grace, out of all mankinde, and to appoint them to be saued vnto the true blessed, heauenly, and euerlasting lyfe in his sonne by faith. And also that at certaine times appointed by him, he would sende his Sonne into this worlde, and to open vnto the worlde the misterie of this his purpose and entent, and to performe all other things agreeing with the dispensatiō of Chriſt. Therefore, seeing this entent and purpose which was opened these latter times in Chriſte, by the preachyng of the Gospell and working of the holy spirite, is not now newe breéden in God after the fal of man, but before man sinned, yea before he was made, before ỳ beginning of the worlde: yea it was from euer hidden in him. I thinke the matter is playne, that God would not that mans felicitie and saluation should be setteled vnto his firste condition and estate what so euer it was, but to the repayring and amēding therof predestinate in Chriſt his sonne, & so to order it, that neyther by his owne knowledge (for which cause he was forbidden in that he shoulde not eate of the tree of good and euill) neither by the worthynesse and desertes of his owne righteousnesse, but by the only grace and mercye of his free election, otherwise sure to perish, he shoulde be redemed and saued by the meanes of his sonne. And to the aduancement of this grace of election, serued this vniuersal fall of mankinde, whereby Adam, before he had any issue, fell into sinne: and so it came to passe, that no man coulde be saued but by the mercye of God. Also the miserie, corruption, and decay which followed the fall of our first parentes, and inuaded al mankinde, doeth set forthe the power and vertue of Gods prouidence to be muche greater, for that we were repaired by Chriſte after our fall to a more blessed estate than we were created in before we fell, lyke as in the day of resurrection when we shall be all raised vp out of the dust of the earth, and the corruptible put on incorruption, and the mortall immortalitie, the vertue of the power of God shal be declared much better, than if we had still lyued in this lyfe without corruption and death.

These things I haue plainely and briefly set forthe, reiecting al vnprofitable questions, which are wonte to be moued in this case, bicause they séeme very certain, and furthering to the auancement of Chriſt his glorie, our redeemer & sauiour. And if any man desireth to wade farther and deper herein, let him séeke in others. But who so euer will followe my counsell, shal remember to kepe a meane in searching of thinges touching God, and stay the curiousnesse of his lasuih appetite, that he passe not the limites of Godlinesse and edifying. As for godly disposed men, I thinke it sufficient in this matter for for their edifying, if they do reuerently weigh those things which we haue briefly noted, touching the fall of mankinde.

Of Free wil.

There is in man affection, loue & hate, and vvil also.

Though it be manifest ynough to the quiet reader, by this that we haue already spoken of the fall of mankind, what he ought to iudge of Free wil, and of same, yet least we should seeme of purpose to passe ouer these places, & because we must enioyne them which be studious of holy scriptures, what sobrietie they ought to vse when they do apply themselues to consider the same: First of all, I suppose no man will denie, that man was so made of God, & in that sort, not only before, but also after his fal, that he had in him affections to hate and to loue, to will and to will not. This constitution man hath commō with brute beasts vnder him, & with the Angels aboue him, that some things he loueth and willeth, other things he hateth and willeth not. Of this there is no doubt..

VVhether mans vvill be free or bonde.

Now we must farther procede to the consideration of libertie, and see what mans wil is, free or bounde. For hereupon hath risen matter of disputation amongst learned men, some affirming that the will of man is free, some denying it. But first I must geue you warning, not to runne out in this matter, to things touching mans life and conuersation, but to stande in termes of obedience, which we ought all to haue to the cōmandements of God. For to what purpose should we striue hereupon, whether a man hath free will thus far, that he may either speake, either hold his peace, curse, or bleesse, go forth a dores, or tary within dores, eate, or not eate, & other like matters, either to doe them, either to leaue them vndone? Surely euen these things be such, that some way they auaile vnto the knowledge of man, and also to the consideratiō of the prouidence of God, if we consider them with sobriety, & without a cōtentious minde: but the godly man searcheth things that be more earnest and weightie: whose minde is allwayes intent to conforme himself vnto the commandements of God. And so far shall it profit him, if he search this case with sobrietie and godlinesse, that he may vnderstand how he is ready and wel prouided to obey the wil of God.

And we must vnderstand that this libertie of wil, whereof man striueth, is to be considered three wayes.

Free vvil to be considered three vvayes.

1 The first kinde of libertie is, whē a man is so free, that of duetie he is bonde to no man, but as we say, is his own mā, and may freely chose at his owne will what he will do, or what he wil not do, and offendeth no man whatsoeuer he doeth.

2 The seconde kinde of libertie is, whereby that will is made free, that a man may at his own libertie, will that which God willeth, and not wil those things which displeseth him: or cōtrarywise, not to wil those things that do please him, and to will those things which displease him.

3 The thirde kinde is that wherby to Free wil is added also free power to do those things which God commandeth, so that man may freely and readyly readily either do them or leaue them vndone, so that the power and habilitie to doe, is correspondent vnto the Free wil.

Now let vs goe to the first kinde of libertie, which I may call the libertie of power, and see whether any man or Angel haue such a kinde of free libertie, that he is subiect to the commandement of none. I suppose ther shal be none such found, nor Angel, nor man, no not Adam when he was in Paradise before his fall: but this libertie belongeth only to God, who is so free of power and wil, that he is subiect vnto the commandemēt of none. But al, as well Angels as men, in this respect be not free, but bonde, bonde vnto him that made them. Wherefore when Goddes commandementes be layd vnto thē, this libertie hath no place in them, which if he had bene in Adam, it should haue cleared him of all blame of breache of the commaundement. For how shuld he haue sinned in not obeying Goddes commandementes, if he had had this free will and free iurisdiction? For no man sinneth, in not obeying him whome he is in nothing bounde to obey. But not onlye man, but also all other creatures are bonde and subiect vnto God. Therfore when that place in the 15. of Ecclesiasticus is read: God from the beginning appointed man, and left him in the hande of his owne counsell, he gaue him commandementes and preceptes, he set him fyre and water, stretch thy hand vnto what thou wilt, &c. is not so to be vnderstāded, that he made man so farre forth free, that he should not be bounde to obey his commandements, but without blame he might freely either obey them, either not obey them. God saue vs from this wicked minde. But of the vnderstanding of this place we wil speake hereafter. And we neede not to stande any longer in expounding of this kinde of libertie. For there is no man that will so attribute free wil vnto any man, that he should not be subiect vnto the seruice of God.

Of the second kinde of libertie.

Now let vs go on & see the second and thirde kinde of libertie. In the seconde kinde they be free, whose wil is so free, that they may freely will: that libertie is double, so that a man may with free will desire bothe the good and the euil. I say with free wil, to exclude bothe the slayes of compulsion and of lette. Of compulsion, wherein violence is vsed, that compelled thou shouldest wil that which is good. Of lette, when a man is violently drawen backe, that he shal not couet that which is euil. This double libertie can not be geuen to any mā, but vnto our firste parentes before they sinned. They were made in that sorte, that they might wil good, and refuse euil: and againe refuse good, and chose the euil.

Of the third kinde of libertie.

The thirde kinde of libertie they haue, which haue not only free will, but also free power to do, and I call free power to doe, which is nether compelled vnto it, which is far from free libertie, neither is violently letten from that which free wil desireth, so that he which hath it, may freely do what he wil, good or euil. And this libertie of power is giuen to no creatures, but only vnto our first parentes before they fall, and to the Angels before they fell.

And

Eccles. 15.

And that place which I alleged before out of Ecclesiasticus, is to be referred vnto this sense: which S. Augustin expounseth of the firste man Adam. God lefte him in the hande of his counsell, he made him free bothe of will and of power. Of wil, that he might at his libertie as wel chose god and refuse euill, as refuse god, and chose the euill. That he might chose euill, and refuse good, is manifest, by that that he did both, when he sinned. That he might haue chosen good and haue refused euil, if he had would, it is proued by that, that for the transgression of the holy commandement, he was condemned of God as a misdoer and a sinner, which coulde not haue bene done by any iuste iudgement of God, vnlesse he had bin endued with free will and power. Therefore S. Augustin in his booke of correption and grace. 11. chapter saith wel, and in this sorte: He might haue stode fast if he had would, and that he would not, it came of free will, which then was so free, that he was hable to wil well or euil.

Augustinus.

But after the fall of the first man, whereby he was made bounde vnto sinne, bothe the libertie of will and of power was losse, not so, but that we might yet will & do euill, wherevnto we be left ouer free, but that we could neither will freely, neither performe that good that is commanded of God. So that it can not be denied, but that there is in man free will, notwithstanding that he is subiecte vnto the bondage of sinne and Satan. For he is of so corrupte and peruerse a disposition, that the euill which he committeth in his bondage,

Libertie of the first mā losse after his fall.

Liberty to do euill.

he doeth it not as compelled and restrayned, but with moste free wil and desire. And this I speake of manne, not yet newe borne by the grace of Christ, and restored vnto true libertie, but yet subiect vnto the generall corruption. The saying of the Apostle hath no place here: The good that I will, I doe not, and the euil which I hate, I do. For the Apostle speaketh there as a man newe borne, and not as still the very seruant of sinne. And this is the godly libertie of our will, which some men boaste of so muche to proue, that a man is not a very block or a stone, but endued with vnderstanding and free will. They bring Scriptures to proue the matters already well knowen. As in Ecclesiasticus, the 31. chap. He that might transgresse and would not, might doe euill and did not. To be hable to transgresse and doe euil, belongeth to all the children of Adam. Not to transgresse when a man maye, is the worke of Gods grace, not in the corruption of manne. And in Jeremias the 3. chapter: Loe thou haste spoken and hast done euil, and thou couldest doe it. And Math. 23. Jerusalem, Jerusalem, how oft woulde I gather together thy children, &c. and thou woldst not. By these and other like places of Scripture, there can no other thing be proued, but that in deed after the originall corruption, there is lefte yet in manne libertie of will and power, but only vnto euil: the experience whereof is so great, that we nede no places of Scripture to proue it. No euill man doeth that that is euil, forced and against his will. The whoremonger doeth of his

Rom. 7.

he bondage of Satan doeth not extinguish the free vvil in euil.

No man perfourmeth that good vvhich he doeth against vvil.

his owne will leaue harlottes: he that kylleth, kylleth folowing his owne will: he that betrayeth, doeth it of purpose: Judas betrayed Christ of free and prepensed wil and purpose, not constrained, though he were entised to that mischief by the Deuil. No euill man is angrye, none is proude, none enuieth, none hateth or curseth his neighbour, enforced and against his wil.

That bondage whereby the euil menne be subiect vnto sinne and Satan, doeth not extinguish this free wil to euil, but doeth rather encrease it and strengthen it. For they be subiect in those things which doth exceedingly please the corrupte flesshe. Therefore that whiche the Apostle saith of the vnbeleuing. 2. Timoth. 2. that they be kept captiue in the snares of the Deuil at his wil, is not so to be vnderstode, that they leese the Deuil, against their wil, but that partly by ignorance and lacke of wisdome, partly blinded by the malice of corrupt vnderstanding, they be detayned in errour and bondage of sinne, and that not against their wil, but willingly and with pleasure. Therefore he addeth there: Whether peraduenture God giue them repentance to knowe the truthe, that they maye recouer out of the snares of the Deuil. When he saith, Whether God will peraduenture geue them repentance to recouer, he doeth sufficiently declare, that they doe serue not constrayned but willingly. For repentance and recouery, conteineth change of minde, iudgement, purpose and wil, so that the same is displeasant that pleased before, which chaunge taketh not place in them, which against their will are compelled, and whether they will or not, doe that which is euill.

2. Timot. 2.

So that the Deuils fetters and lockes, whereby wee be kept captiue at his will, is the blindenesse of minde, whereof the Apostle maketh mention, where he sayth: The God of this worlde hath blinded the hearte of the vnfaithfull, and the malice of corrupte disposition, originally drawen from Adam. So we reade in the booke of Wisdome: Malice hath blinded them. But there be many kindes of malice. Some be caught and captiue in anger, some in enuie, some in pryde, some in naughtie wantonnelle, &c. By these fetters and lockes euil and wicked men be kept captiue, so that neither they know, neither desire that that is good, but do delite in the bondage of Sinne.

The Diuels snares.

2. Corint. 4.

Sap. 2.

So that the olde Adam is so planted in euery man that is destitute of the grace of God, that he hath bothe free will and bond, but that is only in euil. Bonde, for bicause he is sold ouer to the desires of the corrupt flesshe, and to the will of Satan for to sinne. Free, for that he doeth not sinne against his wil, but freely and willingly he doth sinne, and in the deuise of euil and bondage of sinne he deliteth. For how can it be sayd that he hathe not free will in euil, which doeth couet and diligently seeke, and with delite accomplishe that which is euill and contrary to the will of God? Surely wil is not constrayned, when the appetite goeth before, the endeuour followeth, and in the ende the worke is made vp and accomplished with delite. Wherefore

In them vvhich be not yet regenerate ther is both free and seruil vvil.

I thinke

I thinke it is manifeſt, for aſmuch as concerneth the wil and power of an euil man to ſinne, that both are ouer frée and wilful, and that none of them is condemned without deſert, but that the iudgement of God is iuſte againſt all euil, wicked, and reprobate, VVhether the carnall man haue Free vvill to doo good.

Now is left to conſider, whether that as ther is in the fleſhly and carnall man, and yet the ſonne of Adam, Frée wil to ſinne: ſo there be in him frée will and power alſo to doe well and vprightly, that is, to obeye and kepe the commandementes of God. I ſaye expreſſly, the fleſhly and carnall man, and yet the ſonne of Adam. For I meane of euery ſuche man which is not lead and directed by ſome ſpeciall grace and worcking of the holy ſpirite, but liueth altogether ſubiect vnto the blindeneſſe of the minde and corruptiõ of the hart, gotten of Adam. If the queſtion be, whether he can with Frée wil deſire, and with frée power accompliſh that which is good and commaunded of God, we cã not anſwer more aptly, than according vnto ỹ ſaying of our Sauiour Chriſt, where he ſaith, that it can not be that an euill trée, ſhould bryng forthe good fruite. And againe: Howe can you ſpeake good thinges, when you be euill? And the Apoſtle ſayth: The carnall manne vnderſtandeth not the things of God. For it is folliſhneſſe vnto him, and he canne not vnderſtande it. And Chriſt in the thirde chapter of Iohn ſayeth: Vnleſſe a manne be newe borne from aboue, he can not ſée the kingdome of God. By theſe and other lyke teſtimanies it is proued ſufficientlye, that the olde man, the fleſhely and carnall man, is as blinde in minde, as corrupt in heart, towardes thoſe thinges, whiche God commaundeth, lyke as he hath Frée will towardes thoſe thinges, which the fleſhe, ſinne, and Satan requireth. Therefore wée muſt determine for a certaintie, that man, not yet borne by the grace of God, hath not that libertie of will and power, that he freely will, and performe that which God commaundeth. He may in déede be dryuen or moued ſome other waye to ſpeake with his tong, or to worke with his hande in ſome ſorte, that which is good. But to ſay it, or doe it ſo of iudgemẽt and Frée will as he doeth and ſpeaketh that is euil, it can not be, onleſſe he be firſt chaunged by the grace of God to a good trée.

And we may not herken vnto thé, which graunte, that the ayde of the grace of God ſo required to this matter, that whatſoeuer a man otherwiſe by the ſtrength of nature ſhoulde hardly doe that he may more eaſily bring to paſſe, beyng holpen with the grace of God. Whoſe opinion is euen in the Decrées reprooued in this ſorte. It is our pleaſure, that wholoeuer ſay, that the grace of iuſtification is ſo geuen vs, that we may eaſlier fulfill ỹ by grace, which we are commanded to doe by Frée wil, as though that if grace were not gyuen, we coulde not do it eaſly, yet without grace we might fulfill the commandements of God: our pleaſure, I ſay, is that he be accurſed.

Now ſome man wil ſay: Haue we then no libertie of will vnto good? I anſwere: Put difference, brother, betwixt man and man, betwixt the good and the euill, betwixt the fleſhly and the ſpirituall, the corrupt and the regenerate, the Chriſtian & the Ethnik, the elect and the reprobate, the faythfull and the vnfaithfull: if thou aſke me of the euil, the fleſhly, the corrupt, the reprobate, and of the vnfaithfull, which can not be ſayed to be of God: there can be no other anſwere for thée, but that that kinde of men which is not of God, heareth not the worde of God: according to the ſaying of Chriſt in the Goſpell, and other places before rehearſed. But if you demande of the faithfull, good, regenerate, & iuſtified by fayth: God forbyd we ſhould ſay that they be not frée to good, foraſmuche as Chriſt ſayth: If the ſonne make you frée, you be frée in déede. And the Apoſtle: It is God whiche worketh in vs to wil, and to performe, according to his good wil. And againe: I can doe all thyngs through him which comforteth me.

Therefore we muſt diligently mark that which S. Auguſtin wrote in this wiſe: What maner of libertie I beſeke you, can the bonde ſeruant haue, but when he taketh pleaſure to ſinne? For he ſerueth frankly, which willingly doeth the will of his maſter. And thereby he is frée to ſinne, which is the ſeruant of ſinne: therefore he ſhall not be frée to liue iuſtely, vnleſſe he be deliuered from ſinne, and become the ſeruant of righteouſneſſe. That is the true liberty, for the ioye which we conceiue of our well doyng: and alſo godly bondage, for the obedience of ỹ cõmandement. But this liberty to doo well, from whence ſhoulde it come to the manne which is put ouer and ſolde to ſerue in bondage, vnleſſe he doe redeme him whoſe voyce that is: If the ſonne make you frée, then you ſhalbe frée in déede? And before that beginne to frame in man, how ſhall any man glorie of his Frée wil in any good worke, whiche is not yet frée to do well, vnleſſe he do puffe vp and auance himſelfe with a vaine pryde, whiche the Apoſtle doeth reſtrayne, ſaying: You are ſaued through grace by faith? This ſaith S. Auguſtine.

Iohn. 8.

Tvvo diſtinctions neceſſary in this caſe.

Therefore, in my opinion we ſhould never talke of Frée wil without a diſtinction. And in this matter we muſt néedes make a double diſtinction. One is, whereby we maye put difference betwixt man after his fal, and man before his fal: the other, betwixt good & euil, men regenerate, and men yet corrupt: the children of this worlde, and the children of the kingdome of God: the ſeruantes of ſinne, and the ſeruants of righteouſneſſe. For a man can not directly ſpeake of both, ſo much different betwixt themſelues, without diſtinction. Keping the diſtinctiõ, we may wel affirme euerye man to be frée and bonde. If he be euil, bonde vnto ſin: and frée of wil, and ready to ſinne: If he be good, bonde vnto righteouſneſſe, frée of wil, & of himſelfe yelding to doe wel. So that we take not awaye frée wil neither from the euil, neither from the good, which neither the prouidence of God it ſelfe taketh away: although after the minde of the Apoſtle, he doe worke all in all. In the euil he taketh not away that libertie of wil, wherby they do freely and by their own accorde that which is euill, and doe ſerue ſinne. Vnto

Euery man is both free and bonde.

1 Corinth. 12.

The Apostle speketh of the faith full in vvhome the spirite of God vvorketh.

the god, that is to saye, to them whome he maketh god, doth regenerate and iustifie, he doeth restore free will to doe well by his holy Spirite. And he doth not so gouerne them and leade them by his holy spirite, that they doe god compelled, and whether they wil or no, (for so might the euil and nat regenerate do) but he doth lighten their minds to know the truth, he doth change and cleanse the hart to loue the truth and wil of God, when it is knowen: he giueth them strength to fulfill also in deede that which they loue, according vnto the measure of grace which euery man hath receiued. But the place shalbe meeter to speake of this matter when we shal speake of the reparation of mankinde by Christ.

An Epilogue

In this sorte I suppose, the matter of Free will, although it be very troublesome, maye be quietly and profitably handled of godlye menne, according vnto the proportion of faith and simplicity of the holy Scriptures, in which ther haue ben many things mingled, by men giuen to muche talke, to the darkening of the truth, and trouble of mens conscience, such as those things be, which are disputed of the necessitie of the prescience and prouidence of God, of destinie and of happe: whose labyrinthe let him that is wise, diligently eschue in this matter. Faithful men doe not dispute of the secrete Counsels of God, by which all thinges of al men be gouerned, nor yet they do not searche the causes, strength, and working of them, nor they reason not of thinges happening, but they looke vnto this only marke in this case, that they may know the reprobation of mankinde in Adam, and the restorement which is by Christ, to their profite and to the glorie of the grace of God.

Of Sinne.

Sinne is manifold and cõtrouersi uil.

NOw let vs nexte see what is to be sayd of sinne. And like as we may saye of lying, that it is of diuers and sundry sortes, so we maye say of Sinne, that it is an euill very diuers and cõtrouersie. Wherefore we do not purpose, nor yet is it possible to declare all the kindes and partes therof. I could rather wishe this, that euery man might haue the grace of the holy spirit, wherwith, as with an axe, he might hewe downe, pull vp, and hurle a way the rotes of sin out of the inward corners and secretes of his hart. There be long disputations of learned mẽ, wherein they labour to set forthe the nature, the beginning, proceding, the plentuousnesse, the diuers and manifold malice, the hart of this euil, and suche other thinges. But we wil simplie recite those thinges onely, which we shal iudge sufficient vnto Godly consciences in this present matter. As

1. What sinne is.
2. What the beginning of sinne was, and the proceding.
3. What it is to do sinne.
4. Whether one sin be greuouser than an other.
5. Of the difference of venial sin, and mortall sinne.
6. Of the sinne against the holy Spirite.

for Pa. 49. see after Pa. 32. lines 1. What the cõmon maner of speaking: for otherwise we cannot expresse which in this place is to be conceiued of God: taking nature for that which cleaueth to euery thing from birth, leauing in the thing som natural affection, motion and strength, or some singular & proper disposition, and maketh ẏ thing good or euil, reasonable or vnreasonable, gentle or fierce. Which all things be sequestred by ẏ name of Nature, from those thinges that be wrought by studie, labor, exercise, vse, & learning. And although such things, as be proper & peculiar in God, cõmeth not of birth, bicause he is vngotten, & also if we shal speak properly, whatsoeuer is had of nature, is had of some other, that is to say, of him that made al things, and hath bestowed a diuersitie of natures vnto his creatures: Yet we may for al that, cõueniently vse the worde of Nature in speking of God, as of such thinges as be in him not gotten by trauel, studie, diligence, vse, exercise, or learning, but as naturally in him: as that which in euery place in holy scripture is said of him, ẏ he is good. 1 Christ saith: None is good but only God. Mar. 10. And the Prophet, The earth is ful of ẏ goodnesse of the Lord. 2 Secondarily, ẏ he is louing to mã, and easy to please. The Apostle repeteth thẽ both of him, wher he saith: When the kindnesse and louingnesse towards man of God our sauiour appered, &c. 3 Thirdly that he is fauourable & merciful, so that he forgiueth our sinnes, wickednes, and outrages. See Exod. 34. 4 Fourthly, that he is faithful. So the Apostle saith, & John. 5 Fiftly, ẏ he is true. Who lyeth not, saith the Apostle. Item, God is true & euery man a lyer. And in Num. 23. God is not like mã, that he can lye. 6 Sixtly, that he is indifferent, not an accepter of persons. Act. 10. 7 Seuenthly, that he is iust, hating wickednesse, and louing righteousnes. Psalm. 10. 33. 119. 144. 8 Eyghtlye, that hee abhorreth the proude, & embraceth the humble. 1. Pet. 5. 9 Nynthly, that he is pacient, and slowe to anger. Psalm. 144. 10 Tenthly, ẏ he is wise, & foreseing. So saith the Apostle. To God the only wise. O the depenes of ẏ riches of ẏ wisdome & knowledge of God.

Psalm. 115.

Rom. 16.

These and many other things attributed to God in scriptures, teache vs of what maner his nature is: that is to say, good, louing, kinde, merciful, faithful, true, vpright, iuste, liking the humble, and abhorring the proude, slowe to auenge, wise and foreseeing.

The things of nature in God be euerlasting

And being so not by other helpe nor by chaunce, but naturally and of himselfe, it followeth that the lyke nature must for euer and vnchangeably kepe in him: which thing bringeth vnto the faithful an incredible comforte. But in case we finde any other in him than this, we must vnderstand that it is by some special sufferance, & only for a time, and yet for al that, the qualitie of his nature in no point altered. Ye seme to some time peruerse, as in the 18. Psal. but that is with the peruerse, & to the destruction of the peruerse: but the good mẽ finde him always such as his nature is. The fier at Babylõ seemed to haue loste his nature, when it saued harmelesse ẏ three children hurled into ẏ ouen: but yet it vsed the strength of his nature towards thẽ which made the Fier. Euen so we must think of God, & alwaies marke what he doth by sufferance to punish the malice of the wicked, & what also is don according to the qualitie of his nature.

When God seme to be contrary to himselfe.

A similitude.

Hovv great God is.

Hovv the question is of Goddes quantity. VVhat manner of thing the quantity of God is.

OUr question here is not of anye bodily quantity, but of the Maiestie of God. For he is great, not in bodie which he hath not, but in godly Maiestie, which appeareth in his goodnesse, wisdome, power, glory, and eternitie. The quantity of Gods maiestie is suche, that it can not bee expressed, though a man would say, his goodnesse, his power, his wisedome & glory is the greatest of al. For these words Superlatiue, bicause they do include a certaine coparison of other that be good, wise, and strong, do agree better with men than with God, vnto whom they can not be attributed, but so that they shal seem to diminish his diuine Maiestie and excellencie, chiefly bicause he is alone good, alone wise, & alone strong. Therfore, when we shall consider of the quantitie of the goodnesse, wisdome, strength, glory, and continuance of God, we must forbeare all comparisons, & acknowledge that his goodnesse, wisedome, greatnesse, maiestie, power, and glory, is incomparable, passing great, & his continuance infinite. And this infinite excellency of Gods goodnesse we must obserue and honour in his creation, disposition & prouidence, wherwith he hath made, disposed, and gouerned al things passing wel: chiefly in his louing kindenesse, that he sent his sonne into this world for our saluation. The excellency of his strength and power appeareth in his worde, wherby he made heauen, earth, & all things, of nothing. His infinite wisdome is to be seen, aswel in his creation, as in his maruellous ordering of al things. Let this be sufficient, to haue touched somewhat pertayning to this matter, that they which reade holy Scriptures, may vse some such orderlie way, to marke those things which be therein taught of God.

VVherein the excellency of Gods goodnes is to be considered.

Of the works of God.

AFter those thinges, that we haue briefly noted of the Essence, persons, and nature of God, the nexte is to loke vnto his workes. For it is best knowen by his workes both that he is, what he is, of what qualitie he is, and how great he is. Wherfore euery godly hart will geue all his endeuour to loke continually into the workes of God with the eyes of faith, that he may be perfectly instructed by thē, what he ought to iudge of him. And these two things doe much helpe a man to the assured knowledge of God. The one is, that God can not be idle: the other is, that he can not worke but according to the qualitie of his nature. He can not be idle, bycause he is a liuing God, & the verie working it selfe, to whome nothing can worse agree, than idelnesse. For as one saith: Whatsoeuer he worketh not, is not at all. Idlenesse is conuenient for the deade, and not for the liuing: or if it be in the liuing, it declareth a retchlesnesse, or else vnablenesse: of which none is in God.

There-

Therefore he worketh continually and without ceasling. Christ saith: My father worketh euen till now.

But he can not worke, but according to ỹ qualitie of his nature. For as eche man is, (as one said) such is his saying & doing: which though it be verified of men, yet it may be better applyed to God than to men. For mans witte is so peruerse, that by counterfayting and dissembling one may easely abuse another, hauing one thing secretly hyd in his heart, when outwardly he saith, and doeth the contrarie. Upon that is grounded the saying of the Prophet Hieremie. The hart of mā is ouerthwart, and who shall knowe it? Such peruersitie and dissimulation can not be ascribed to God. But when he worketh, he declareth the qualitie of his nature in his working: so that hys workes may be most assured testimonies, by which the hartes of the faithful may be persuaded of his goodnesse and will. And although he seeme to worke sometimes contrary to his custome, yet that is done to the intent that it shall come to that which he hath appointed. Esay. 28. This is to worke truely. Merely according to the qualitie of nature, and to declare openly to the world the testimonie of his good or euil will, by words or deedes, as by a kind of fruit.

I can vvork accor- to the itie of ature.

r. 17.

God not kinds vror-

1 Now there are fiue kinds of working. One is, whē things be wrought according to the strength of their nature, without any gouernance of vnderstanding or wil, as is ỹ working of fyer, water, medicinal herbes, precious stones, and such other thinges: whose working, if it be guided by any reason or will, it is not by their owne, but by some outward, either Gods or mans directions.

2 The second kind is of those things which foloweth the drift of nature in their working: but not without their own wil, though the maistery of reason do lack. Yet such is their working, ỹ somtimes it is forced against their wil. And so worke the brute beastes.

3 The thirde kinde is of men which doe also work according to the qualitie of their nature: and ioyne thercunto the gouernance of reason or wil, but wrong and corrupt: and also subiect and vnder a greater power, either of man either of God: and vnder this is also comprised the working of euil spirites.

4 The fourthe is of good Spirites, which we cal Angels. They worke also according to their nature, & that with vnderstanding & wil, but without any deprauation thereof, wherin they differ frō men & frō euil spirits: but in this nothing differēt, that they be also subiect to a superior power, by whome their doings be directed.

5 The fift and last kind of working is also according to the nature of the worker, with vnderstanding & will, and that pure and incorrupt: but it is not subiect vnto the wisdome or wil of any superior, but is most frée, wise, mightie, good, and infinite, vpon whō all other things dependeth. This is the working of one very God, the beginning, encrease, keping, repairing: the rule and end of all: most good, most frée, willing, infinite, euerlasting, perfect, nēding no other help, necessarie and profitable, not to the worker, but to the works: whose incomprehensible wayes, infinite multitude, and vnsearcheable consideration no mā may seke to know, whose godnesse, wisdome, power, maiestie, and glorie, all Angels and men must haue in admiration and worshipp.

The kindes of the vvorkes of God.

THough the multitude, varietie, maiestie, and excellencie of the workes of God be infinite & incomprehensible, that neither the reason, nor numbre of them can be comprehended by any mannes imagination or industrie, euen as the Ecclesiasticus saide: I vnderstode that man coulde finde no reason of any of the workes of God that be done vnder the Sunne, (how much lesse of them that be done in heauen aboue the sunne:) And the more he traueleth to finde, the lesse he shal finde. And although ỳ Wiseman say, he knoweth it, yet he can not come by it: yet notwithstanding the Godly man may haue some cōsideration of these matters, wherby, though he vnderstande not the causes of al, yet he may partly obserue what is done, and make some difference of them. And withal enter vnto a contemplation of suche thinges, as he may in some degree with admiration consider, and applye according to the measure of the gifte of God. God willeth vs to be lokers on, wonderers and praisers of his workes and glorie. Wherfore he doth also geue so muche vnderstanding herin to his electes, as may be requisite to the establishement in them of the fauth, of the prouidence, godnesse, and might of God.

And that the studies of yong men, occupied in holy Scriptures, may be also in this matter directed with some briefe & orderly diuisiō, let vs set forth some certain kindes of the workes of God, wherby his workes may be cōprehēded, as farre forth as they may by our vnderstanding be perceiued: As 1. Of Creation. 2. Of the encrease. 3. Of the conseruation. 4. Of the restitution. 5. Of the gouernāce. 6. Of the workes of perfection.

Eccle. 8.

Howe far-forth man may consider the vvorkes of God.

1 The workes of creation be they, which we doe reade of in the first chap. of Genesis, wrought in the six dayes.

2 The worke of increase is that, whereby the things created of God, by adding more & more, are encreased and multiplied.

3 The workes of conseruation be those which helpe to preserue suche things as be created and encreased, that they doe not straight way decay and perishe.

4 The workes of restorement be they, whereby those things that be corrupted, (as all things be corruptible) are repaired.

5 The workes of gouernance and order be they, whereby all things, as wel in heauen as in earth, are disposed and ruled according to the righteousnes, wisdome, equitie, and godnesse of God.

6 Last of all, vnder the kinde of perfection, is comprehended that vniuersall and final iudgement, by which al thinges are brought to the ende appointed from the beginning, and so be perfected. And these kinds of workinges be so diuine, that they be possible onely to God. For it is no creatures part, either to create, either to encrease, conserue, repaire, or rule that which is created, or to bring it to the appointed ende and perfection.

Of the Creation.

AMong all the workes of God, those ought to haue the first place, whichdoe cōcerne the glorie of the creation. And herin we must leaue the consideration of those workes that are of the father towards the sonne, of the sonne towards the father, of both of them towards the holy Spyrite, of the holy Spirit towards both them, which are vnsercheable and not necessarye to knowe. But it is euen ynough, if the creature doe acknowledge, honour and glorifie the worke of his creator, in that, that he is the creator, encreaser, conseruer, repayrer, gouerner, and perfecter of all.

And here these thinges are to be considered. First, what he created: next, of what: thirdly, how: fourthly, when: fiftly, to what ende.

1 And first of al we can not more briefly comprise what he created, thā to saye, that al is created, excepting only the creator and worker himself alone, namely heauen, earth, the sea, and all that is in it. So said the Apostles: Thou Lorde that madest heauen and earth, the sea, & all that is in them. And in the 14. chap. Denouncing vnto you, say they, to turne from these vaine thinges vnto the liuing God, which made heauen, earth, & the sea, & al things that be in them. Now when we say that God only the worker is excepted and not to be numbred among the creatures, we must not be so taken, that we except the person of the father: only including and reckening with the creatures the Sonne and the holy Spirit, as the Arrians did, saying, the worde of God was made of God: and as the Macedonians, which reckened the holy Spirite among the creatures. For the workes of the holy trinitie be vnseparable. When we say the father created all thinges: the word may not be excluded neither the holy spirit, bicause that by the worde, and with the spirit, all things were created. When we say, that the Sunne nourisheth and giueth light vnto the earth, we exclude not his heate nor his brightnes, without which he doth not accomplish his worke. Againe whē we say, all things are created of God, we doe not include those things that be euil, in respecte they be euil. For they be not of God but of Satā, the father of all euil. Cursed is that error of ỳ Manichées, who wil nēds haue al euil to be of God, whom the blessed man Augustin doth strongly ouerthrowe. And though the euil spirits be of God in respect they be spirites, yet in respect they be euil spirites, they be not of him. For God saw al things that he had made, and they were verie good. But that which we reade in Esai: I am the Lord, & ther is no other, fashioning the light, and making darkenes, making peace, and creating euil, is not be vnderstanded of the euil of wickednes & mischief, but of the euil, of aduersity & trouble. As in the prophet Amos: Ther is no euil in the citie, but I doe it. So the dayes be called euil, in which we be oppressed with anye aduersitie and trouble: which maner of speache is cōmon & vulgarly vsed also of christ, saying: to euerye daye suffiseth his owne malice.

Howe we saye that all thinges be created by God.

Gen. 1.

Esay 45.

Amos 3.

Mat. 6.

VVhereof God created.

2 Secondly, if it be demanded wherof God made all things: we must answer, that he made some things of nothing, some of earth, some of water, some of flesh. Of nothing he created the heauen, the earth, & the sea. Therunto I suppose we may ioine the heauenly spirits: but vnder the correctiō of others. For in a matter so vncertain and darke, I wil contend with no man. Of earth he shaped the first man our father. Also of the earth he made beastes, and al kinde of plantes and herbs. Of the waters, he created fishe and foule. Of flesche, he created Eue, the first mother of our kinde.

How he created.

3 Thirdly we must consider how he made all things. For thereby the glorie of God the maker is maruellously renowned. He created al things not with hard labour, as men are wont to doe, nor taking aide of any other to helpe him, but by the only word. He said (as saith the Prophet) and it was done: he commanded, & it was created. And in an other place: By the worde of the Lorde, the heauens were established. &c. And the history of the creation setteth forthe no other maner of creation, but this same. And therfore it is, that the Apostle geueth this glorie of creation vnto Christ. For he is that word, by whom al things were made. John. 1.

Psalm. 148.

Psalm. 32.

Coloss. 1.

VVhen he created.

4 Fourthly, if a mā should demande when God created all things, there can be no other answer made, but in the beginning of ỳ times. For so Moses beginneth the history of the creatiō: In ỳ beginning God created heauen and earth, and how can the question of tyme, haue place there, when as yet ther was no time? Ther was yet no tyme, when nothing was yet created, wherunto the spaces of time should serue. Yet there is noted also certaine distincted times in the scriptures, in the which the worlde was created, and all that is in it, as in degrees. So we do reade of the six days & of the workes in Genesis, whereof yong men may note these four verses to help their memorie with al.

Gen. 1.

The first day light, the second heauen,
the third, the earth and fielde:
The fourthe the starres, the fift all fishe, and therwith foule did yelde.
The sixt, all beastes and man, our God by worde of moulde did make:
And in the seuenth, he did his rest for our example take.

5 Fiftly, it may be asked, to what end God created al things. The chief end is, that ther shuld be some which knowing in deed the goodnes of God, should vse it, & glorifie the maiestie of God for euer. Vnto this ende were the Angels & mankinde created also. Another ende is, that the rest of the creatures shuld also set forth the glorie of God, and serue to the vse of mē. In the consideration of these endes, is no danger, and it auaileth much to encrease our faith of the goodnes and prouidence of God. And in very deede it is a great matter, that all things were made for man: but the greatest of al and m ſt maruelous is, that the same word, by which all things were made, became incarnate, and so God himself was made man, to the entent man might be brought to that ende, wherunto he was created: and enioy ỳ folowship of Gods nature, togither with euerlasting felicitie. And that place in the Prouerbes, where Salomon saith, God worketh all thinges for himselfe, and the wicked also to and euil day, is not to be referred to the working of this creatiō. For Salomon speaketh not there of the creation, (although God, who is himselfe the beginning and end of all, made al things for himself) but of his prouidence & gouernance, wherby he doth so gouern al, yea euē the harts of the wicked, that they serue to his glory. Therfore we must beware, least of ỳ words of Salomō euil vnderstanded and euil applied, some man may gather that God made the wicked, as wicked. For surely the wicked man as wicked, is not of God, but of hys father the Deuil.

Gen. 1.

Of the creation of Angels.

Of the creation of the Angels.

IT becommeth a christian man to vse such modestie and circumspection and warinesse, neither to vphold nor allow any thing vpholden by others, vnlesse it maybe proued by some certain testimonie of truth, taken out of the holy scriptures. And the holy scriptures teache vs nothing of Angels, but that which is necessarie to be knowen. It speaketh nothing of them sounding more to curiositie than godlinesse 1 First, it declareth that there be Angels. And ther be so many testimonies therof in euery place, that it needeth not to alleage thē at this time. Wherby the Saduces are iustly condēned, which said, that there were no Angels, nor spirits. Act. 23. 2 Secondly, the scriptures declare of them that they be by nature spirites, by office Angels, that is to say, messengers. Augustin for. Psal. The spirits be Angels: and when they be spirits, they be not Angels. When they be sent, they be Angels. For Angels is the name of the office, & not of nature. Respecting that wherof he is, he is a spirit: and in respect of ỳ which he doth, he is an Angel. Who maketh (saith the prophet) Angels his spirits: that is to saye, he maketh messegers of his spirits. And Ebrues. 1. They be all seruisable spirites, sent to the helth of the elect.

Hebr. 1.

3 Thirdly, scripture teacheth vs that they be not gotte of God, as Christ ỳ only begotte of God, but that they be created of God, & made in like sort as the rest of ỳ creatures. That they be not gotten of God as Christ was, the Apostle witnesseth, where he saith: To which of ỳ Angels did he say at any time: I haue begotten thee this day? And againe: I wil be to him a father, & he to me a sone? But whereas in Job ỳ Angels be called the sonnes of God, it is not to be vnderstād ỳ they be ỳ natural sonnes of God as Christ was, who only is the natural sone, & therfore also the only begotte: but bicause they be ỳ sonnes of grace & of adoption, as all the electes be.

That Angels be not borne but created of God.

Heb. 1.

Iob. 1. & 2.

That they be created & made, the prophete Dauid witnesseth saying: Praise you him al his Angels, praise him al you his powers. Praise him Sunne & Mone, praise him Starres and light. Praise him the heauens of heauens, & the waters that be aboue the heauens, praise the name of the Lord. For he spake the worde, and they were made: he commanded, and they were created. In this later part he sheweth a cause why those things ỳ he rehearsed before, ought to praise God, which is, bicause they were created and made by him: which doeth sufficiently declare, that the Angels were also created and made of God

Psalm. 148.

VVhen they vvere created.

But when and at what time they were made, there is no mention in any place of Scripture. Austin may gather that they were made at that time when the foundation of the world was set, by that which we doe read in Job the 38. chap. in this wise: Where were you when I laide the foundation of the earth? Tell me if thou hast understanding. Who set forthe the measures thereof, if thou canst tell? Or who stretched forthe the corde whereupon his grounsels were settoled? Or who did let down his corner stone, then when the morning starres praised me, & al the children of God song and reioyced? But it appeareth not of this place plainly and determinately, when they were created: as it is not in any place declared, whereof and how they were made. And ther is no cause why any man should busily search of these things, but it is enē ynough touching this matter, to know that they be heuēly & inuisible creatures, by nature spirites, by office Angels, created of God to be ministers of the elect: & to reioyce of our saluatiō, & also to cary vp the soules of the blessed. Luk. 16. & to gather togither the elects in ẏ day of iudgemēt, & to deliuer the wicked to the fier. Mat. 28. 13. Athanasius in his questiōs to Antiochus saith, that Moises did of purpose leaue to speak any thing of the creation of ẏ angels in the booke of Gen. bicause of ẏ disposition of the people bent to ydols, & bicause of the multitude of Gods, specially among the Iewes.

Luk. 15. Luk. 16.

Mat. 28. & 13.

Of the fall of the Angels.

That some of the degree of he Angels fell.

THer is no man that may doubt, but that some of ẏ angels fel frō their estate, & of good spirites became euill. For besides that it is openly knowen to be true by the experience of these many ages, Christ doeth also witnesse of their head the Deuil, that he did not stand fast in the truth. Joh. 8. Secondly, that this their fall came of some sin of theirs, appeareth plainly of the wordes of the Apostle. 2. Pet. 2. wheras he saith: If God spared not his angels that sinned: Now their sinne did not passe on originally from one to an other, of them which with their head fel from God, but euery one of thē that were left of that order, lost and cast away himselfe through his owne malice and sin. But what their sin was, it is not expressed, cōmonly their pride is blamed, that they did set vp themselues against God. The maner of it is not declared. And that place of the Apostle, where he saith: Least he be puft vp into pride, and fall into the iudgement of the Deuil: seemeth to meane, that the iudgement of the Deuill, whereby he was cast from heauen, was for his pride. The place of Esay, where it is read: Thy pride is drawen downe to hell. &c. how fellest thou Lucifer from heauen, which didst ryse in the morning, and saydest: I will goe vp into heauen, I will aduance my seat aboue ẏ starres of GOD: I wil sitte in the mounte of witnesse, in the sydes of ẏ North: I will goe vp aboue the heygt hof the cloudes, I wil be lyke the hyghest: but for al that thou shalt be thrust down to the hel. &c. without al nay, it containeth the prophecie of the proude king of Babylon, which was then to come: although it be by som expounded for the fal of Satan.

That angels for sin

VVhy sinne gels

vvic- Angels neuer ued.

Esay. Lucifer drave hell.

And

And there is great reason, why ẏ holy scripture doth not plainely and openly set forth the sinne of Satan and the rest of the euil spirites, wherin they forsoke God, as they do the sin and fal of man. For as much as there was no recouery, no turning, no hope of any saluatiō for these wicked and trayterous angels, there was also no cause why their sinne should be set forth and declared, as was the sinne of man, which had not only a punishment layed on him immediately, but also a promise made of relief and remedy. In that respect the Apostle said, that Christ toke not vpon him the nature of Angels, but the sede of Abraham. For hē came not to saue the Angels that had fallē, but mēre rather to destroy the euil angels: & therefore they cry Mark. 1. What haue we to do with thē Iesu of Nazareth: art thou come before the time to destroy vs: And that they shall neuer be saued, it is plaine ynough by the wordes of Christ, Mat. 25. Go you accursed to the euerlasting fier, whiche is prepared for the deuil and his angels.

Of the vvlege of God, the vvorth the vvlege man.

Of the Creation of Man.

NOw our right way is to procēde on to consider the work of God in the creation of mā: which matter oughte not only be nert after that which we haue noted of God the maker of all things, but doth also most peculiarly belong vnto man. For what agreeth more properly vnto man, than nerte vnto God his creator, to knowe himselfe? To this knowledge ẏ same doth not allure vs alone which Lactance sayth in one place: Greate is the might of mā, his reason is great, his mysterie great, ẏ not for nought Plato gaue thankes to nature that he was borne a man: yea after God there is nothing higher than man, nothing created more excellent. But it is also a gret pēce of our saluation, to know our selues, wherin some gaue also to vnderstande, that the greatest parcell of wisdome is contained, whych did continually put into mens heades the common Prouerb: Know thy self, as sent vs down from heauen. For who is it that knoweth not ẏ it is principallye required to the knowledge of man, not to be ignorant of the beginning and estate of mankinde: And the holy spirite seemeth in the holy scriptures to expresse the creation of man more carefully and diligently, than of any other creature, to this intent (no doubt,) that we shoulde vnderstande from the beginning of our nature, that God in the making of mā wold set forth a singular pēce of worke, which should be far passing al other creatures, and should come muche nearer than any other, to the glorye of his Godhead: and also bycause the knowledge of our owne beginning, shoulde much auaile towardes the consideration of the wysedome, goodnesse, and power of God, contayning therin certayne (as it were) Principles of hys heauenlye Philosophie.

ΓνῶΘι σεαυτόν To the knowvlege of man ther is chiefly requisite the knowvledge of his beginning.

And I suppose verily there muste be some meane in thys knowledge, that

There must be a meane that we reach not farther than may profit to christian godlynesse. What a Godly man ought to iudge of the creation of man, it can not be better appointed, than by the teching of the holy spirite, which the holy scripture doth yelde vnto vs. For the hart of mā is so blinded, that he cānot iudge rightly neyther of his creatour neither of himselfe. Therfore we muste endeuour to searche all thynges which man ought to knowe and hope assuredly, touching God his creator of himselfe out of the holy scriptures, rather, than out of the opinions of men.

Frō whēce we must determine of the creation of Man.

And those things that be taught vs in holy Scriptures, be of that nature, and so voyde of al curiousnesse, that they be easie for vs to vnderstād and to take profit of. They be fewe, but ful of pith, sure, profitable, necessarie and agreeing to the purpose. Of the creation of Man, this is in fewe words taught in the first and seconde chap. of Genesis. First that man is a creature as well as other creatures. He was made also within the cōpasse of time, not before time. Yea if we make the time of our beginning, whiche the holye scripture doth also shewe, euerye creature is more auntient thā man. Now whatsoeuer is made, is not made of it selfe, but of some other: so that whatsoeuer it hath, it hath not of it selfe, but of him of whom it was made, & when it was made it could not cause it selfe to be made other than it is, nor better nor worse, but according to ỹ wil of the maker. Yea it helped nothing to be ỹ that it was made. Euen so we muste thinke also of mā, for he was created in like sort as ỹ rest of the creatures, whatsoeuer he is or hath in him, is in the will, wisedome, and the power of his maker.

Mans creatyō God.

Also for as much as the very consideration of the workmanship doth train vs on to the knowledge of the worker, the nert question is of the creatour and maker of man: whom the holye scriptures appointe to be ỹ same, of whō also al other thinges wer made. God saith Moses, created mā. The boks of ỹ Gentiles do talk of one Prometheus of Deucalion, that he first made man. He made not man, but the image of man of plaster or clay: & therefore is the first Authoure of plaster worke. We knowe that only iand true God for our maker, that made heauen and earth, & al things in the same visible and inuisible, and so doe confesse it to be of him whatsoeuer we be or haue: and therfore that it is duely to be required of vs, that in all things we depende vppon him, as the creature vpon the creator. It is sayde in rebuke to Israel in the bokes of Moses and of the Prophets, that he forsoke his creator. And God himselfe cryeth, saying: I made you. Wherin it is sufficientlye declared howe peruerse the hart of man is, in somuche that he forsaketh God his creator. Wee bee also admonished by thys knowledge, that seeing we haue all one creator, and maker, that no man blame his worke, neyther in himself neither in others, saying: Why dyd he make it after this fashion: In Esay we read in this sort: Wo to him, that speaketh against his creator, a potherde of ỹ shynds of Earth. Shal the clay say to the potter, why doest therof is he &c.

Deuca. made man bu image man.

Esa. 45. Prou. 16. VVo faith crea doth in ou thou so? And in the Prouerbes: He that blameth the poze, reuileth the maker of him. So that this faithe, whereby we doe beleeue that we be created of God, shall worke these three things in our harts. First that with all our harts we depende in all things vpon God our creator. The second, that euery man be contented with his estate, and embrace the same with thankes giuing, whervnto he is made of God his creator. The third, that no man cōtemne the estate of his neighbour as vile and miserable, least therin he finde fault with him which is the creator of the both.

Thirdly, the holy scriptures doe not hide wherof man is made. Genes. in the. 2. chapter we read in this sort: And the lord God formed man, dust of the earth, or moulde: In Ebrew עפר מן האדמה. Lo this is the matter wherof man is made. And what is more vile, what lighter and more vnstable than the dust of the earth, wherof can not handsomely be made a bricke or a tyle, at the leaste he might haue bin of sounde earthe. Nay this beginning of vs doth warn vs that in consideration thereof wee vse all modestie, leaste it bee sayde vnto vs: Why art thou proud, thou earth and ashes? For what other account is there to be made of ỹ whiche is made of dust? The holy spirite might haue saide: The Lorde God formed mā of earth, or of dust. But to remember of the vilenesse of our beginning, he calleth manne, made of dust, The dust of the earth. And God saide to Adam: Thou arte dust, and shalt returne into dust. He said not simply, Thou art of dust, but thou art dust. And leaste flesh shoulde say: what then, though I be of dust, wherof so euer I am, nowe I am a man, I am no dust. The sentence of God our maker meeteth vs, saying: Thou art both of dust, & art also dust and shalt returne into dust, like as a mā might say to a faire pece of yse: Thou waste water, and arte water, and shalte be resolued into water.

Man is dust of the earth.

Fourthlye, the manner is read in holy scriptures howe the firste man was made. So we read in Genesis: The Lord God therfore formed mā, dust of Earth, and breathed into his nostrels the breath of life, and man was made into a liuing soule. By the worde, Forming, the holye spirit expresseth a singular diligence in making of man. Secondlye, to expresse what matter God formed when he made man, he addeth Dust of earthe. Thirdely he addeth, And he inspired into his nostrels ỹ breth of life: by whiche he teacheth vs, how the shape of mans bodye being first framed out of dusse, & yet without life, was made quick and liuely. His maker did put in vnto hym spirite and breath (for it is in ỹ Ebrew עפר מן האדמה) wherby he shold liue, and so was made into a liuing soule, that is, beganne to liue, a man now lyuing whiche was before dust without life. And thys of Adam the first man.

Howw man vvas made. Gen. 2.

Heuah. Gen. 2.

Nowe how Eua was made, it is readde following in this sorte in the same Chapter: The Lorde GOD sente a sleepe into Adam: And when hee was faste asleepe, hee toke out one of hys rybbes, and closed vppe the place agayne wyth flesh. And the Lord GOD framed the ribbe which he toke from Adam into a woman, and brought hir to Adam. And Adam saide: This is now a bone of my bones, and flesh of my flesh. She shall be called Woman, because she is taken out of man. And this is said ther. Here in both places it is sufficiently declared, what intent and purpose God had in making man. And yet with all a man maye see how the holy spirite expressed in these wordes the wonderfull sort in making of man, wherein the bodye wyth his mẽbers aswel outwardas inward, bones, vaines, snowes, grisles, &c. wer most handsomely fashioned, ioyned togither and dressed, & by putting in the soule made liuing, wheras he sayth, he formed, he made and he inspired: and so he restraineth our curiousnesse whiche desireth to know euery part, how, by what industry, by what vertue, and in what space of time all these things were done, warning vs, reuerently to remember & kẽpe in minde those matters, which in fewe wordes be sette forth vnto vs, and therin to acknowledge and honoure GOD our maker.

He formed made and inspired.

VVhat mã vvas made.

Fiftly, it is also taught in holye scripture, of what quality man was made. For as muche as appertaineth to the fashion of the bodie of both man and woman, stature, and making of body and soule, it is of it selfe manifest of what qualitie they were made.

No man can knovv vvhat the nature and vvorthines of man vvas at the beginning.

But for as muche as concerneth the nature and worthynesse of man, because both are corrupt and bereaft of their firste qualitie, we can not vnderstande of what sort both of thẽ were in the first man, vnlesse the holy spirite teache vs and make vs to vnderstande it.

Eccle. 7.

And I do not meane in this place by the qualitie of nature, the bodilie necessities and affections whervnto we be yet subiect, but the qualitie of originall righteousnesse, whiche we do read that God did put vnto the firste man. Ecclesiasti. 7. Onely this I founde, sayth he, that GOD made man right. Whiche is not to be vnderstanded of the body, but of the rightnesse of the minde, whiche men cal the original righteousnesse, which doth comprise in it the knowledge of God the creator: obedience, faith, and loue, both of God and of the neighboure: and the libertie of an vpright will: and the reste of the like kindes of ornaments, wherwith he was adorned.

Tertullian vnder ed by the ge of ,the vvil of Mans in vvill.

Now when the firste man of nature was made such: that is to saye, right, not only of bodye, but also of minde, he had Frewil in such sorte, that he might obey God if he would: and again if he would not, he might sinne. For although he were made right and at libertie to good, yet hee differed herein from Aungels, that he mighte be tempted by inordinate affections to sinne, and consent vnto the same, and stray from the rightnesse of his originall iustice, whiche hath not place in Aungels, who after the fall of the wicked spirites, abode still in the truth of God.

Of the vvorkes of the first man,

The holy scriptures doe testifye also of the worthynesse of the firste man, where they teach that he was made to the similitude and image of God. Let vs make man, sayth God, to our owne imag & likenesse, & let him be ouer the fish of the sea, and ỹ birdes of heauen, and the beastes of all the earth, and ouer all that creepeth and moueth in the earth. And God created man to his own image and likenesse, to the image of God he created him, and that whiche followeth there, in Genesis, in the firste chapter.

In Genes. cõtra. Manich. li.1. cap.17

1. Corin. 11.

This worthinesse of man some of the olde and also of the new writers do expounde for rightnesse of nature which we spake of, so that the image of God in man, shoulde be in the separation of him from beastes, by reason, and the nearnesse to the nature, wisedome and iustice of God, by the vprightnesse of the inwarde man. But although this exposition be not vtterly to be refused, yet notwithstanding it is manifest by the wordes of the holy Scripture, that mã is so made to the image of God, that he shold be as God in the earth and haue al things subiect vnder his fete. For what els is ỹ that he saith: And God created man to his owne image and likenesse, than that which followeth: To the image of God hee created him? To be created to the image of God, is to be made and appointed as it were a God. Wherfore Magistrates and Princes are called in Scriptures Gods, and of greate power. And this image of God giuen vnto manne, excludeth not the rightnesse of the inward man, which is so necessarie to the keping therof: that without this rightnesse a man though he be a Prince, differeth nothing from a cruel beast, sauing that peraduenture he bringeth with him more suttelty and craft to performe the malice of his tyranny. This exposition of the worthinesse of man, according to which he is made to the image of God, Chrisostom did manifestly set forth vpõ the. 11. chap. of Genesis, and Augustine disputing in diuers places against the Maniches.

And the Apostle wheras he saith: The man ought not to couer hys heade: bycause he is the image and glorie of God, and the woman is the glorie of hir husband: He doth make a manifest distinctiõ betwirt the mã and the woman, saying that man is made to the image of God, and the woman to the glorie of the man, which cannot be ment of the ryghtnesse and iustice of the inwarde man alone, wherof the woman is knowen to be partaker also with the man in the lord: but it is to be vnderstanded of ỹ worthinesse of gouernance, whiche appeareth to be granted to the man, euen from the beginning, and taken from the woman.

To this worthinesse of the image of God pertayned also that, that Adam after he was created, we reade that he was set in Paradise of pleasure, a place aboue all other dwellings in the earth most pleasant and excellent, and that he gaue names to all liuing things, byrdes, and beasts of the earth. For what else doth this argue of him, but to be the Prince & lord of al the earth?

There be many other things disputed pertayning to the estate which our firste parents had in paradise, & which they should haue had if they had not sinned: but for yong beginners this is most certaine doctrine & profitable, briefly to obserue that mã was firste made: secondlye, that he was made of GOD: thirdely, that hee was made of the Duste of the erth: fourthly, by a special care of God: fiftly, that he was made and auanced to the likeneſſe of God, paſſing all other creatures in nature, and worthineſſe: and theſe things if they be wel waied, contayne a large diſcourſe of our chriſtian Philoſophie, verye profitable to abaſe our pride, when we conſider our beginning: and when we loke towards the vprightneſſe and worthyneſſe of our firſt parents, we ſhal throughly perceiue what we haue loſt in them, and what we haue recouered and gayned ouer in Chriſte our ſeconde Adam, and Authour of our regeneration.

The recapitulation.

Of the Soul

IT may ſeeme that the very order of our treatie ſhould leade vs to talke alſo ſomewhat of the ſoule of man. But in my opinion it is better to abſtaine from medling therein, bicauſe the matter is ſo obſcure and darke, that an infinite number of queſtions may riſe therupon.

1 As what the ſoule of man is. Whether it be a ſubſtance, or a certaine Hermonia and conſent, or temperature of the iiij. humours, or elſe a number made vp of Atomes, or a perfect habite according vnto Ariſtotle. And if it be a ſubſtance, whether it be a ſubſtãce of body, or without bodye, a Spirite, or a kinde of bloud.

2 Secondly, from whence it commeth. Eyther by creation, infuſion, of the ſubſtaunce of GOD, of nothing, or elſe of ſome ſpirituall ſubſtance.

3 When it was created, whether al were made togither at firſte, or when they preſently were put into the bodies.

4 Whether there be many ſoules in one body, or one alone.

5 Whether it be ſimple or compounde. What partes it hath, what ſtrength, and what degrées of working.

6 Where it is placed in the bodye, and howe it is contayned in no one part of the body, and yet is in al.

7 Howe it is vnited to the body: Whether it taketh any ſoyle of the bodye, or the body of the ſoule.

8 Whether it dyeth with the death of the body or not.

9 What the ſoules be after death, and what they doe, and whether they go into Heauen or into Paradiſe, or whether they be changed into Deuils, or paſſe into other bodies, and whether they vnderſtande what the liuing do, whether they can aide them and helpe them: and ſuch other things, wherein ſome folkes do reaſon the matter exceeding finely, and ſo darkely, that they themſelues cã not cleare it, and ſo doubtfullye, that the hearers are ỹ more confounded. But yet it is meete for vs to knowe no more hereof than is ſet forth in ỹ holy canonical ſcriptures. Wherfore let vs leaue that, and proceed to conſideration of the fal of man.

Of the fall of Man.

The exemption of our nature doth declare the mankinde fell.

LIke as we did after our treaty of the creation of Angels, ſpeake next of the fall of the euil ſpirites: ſo hauing ſpoken ſomewhat of the creation of Man, it foloweth to ſpeake alſo of his fal. And that he fell and was bereſte of his original righteouſneſſe and worthineſſe, and caſt into an infinit number of calamities, the very malice of mans nature, corruption, and deprauatiõ doth moſt manifeſtly ſhew it ſelf. For no wiſe man will ſay that God created man ſuche as euery one findeth and knoweth himſelf to be, vnleſſe of hypocriſie he liſt to diſſemble and make a lye. And bicauſe this corruption toucheth not ſome men alone, but cõmonly al, & is ſo vniuerſal that we find the nature of our kinde to be infecte, the beginning thereof muſt nedes come from the firſt man, from whence all the reſt of the alyance of nature by continuall ſucceſſion doeth ſpring out. Wherefore it is a moſt cleare caſe, that our firſt parents by ſome fal of theirs, loſt their puritie, vprightnes, righteouſnes, ſtedfaſtneſſe, and worthineſſe of mans nature, and that al their after cõmers gat the ſame blemiſhe and corruption which we are ſtil ſubiect vnto.

lity & of man to be cõfered.

Now for as muchas it appeareth certainely, that nature of man fell cũ in his very beginning, & that the reſtorement of it (which is by Chriſt) can not bee well vnderſtanded and eſteemed as it ought to be, vnles the fall whiche wente before it bee well knowen, it were not out of the way ſomewhat to conſider the ſame. Wherein we will proceede in order to ſee firſt

1. What the fal was. 2. Next what the ſtrength, working and penaltye therof was. 3. Thirdly, vpon whome the fault is charged. 4. Fourthly, by what determination of God mã did ſo fal.

What the fal of the firſt man was.

THe holy ſcripture doth plainely and openly rehearſe the fall, to the entent the glory of the grace of God might the more appeare in his reſtorement again. We rede the hiſtorie thereof in Geneſ. in the ſeconde and thirde chap. in this ſorte: Therefore the Lord God toke man and ſet him in paradiſe of pleaſure, to worke and kepe it. And commaunded him, ſaying: Of all the trées of Paradiſe eate, but of the trée of knowledge of good and euil eate not. For what day ſoeuer thou eate thereof, thou ſhalte dye the death. And in the third chap. after the beginning ſtreighte it foloweth: But the ſerpent was ſuttelier than all the beaſtes of the Earth which the Lord GOD had made: Which ſaid vnto the woman: Why did God commaund you that thou ſhouldeſt not eate of the trées of paradiſe? To whome the woman anſwered: Of the fruit of the trées that be in paradiſe we do eate, but of the fruite of the trée that is in the middle of paradiſe, God cõmaunded vs that we ſhoulde not eate, nor touch that, leaſt peraduenture we ſhoulde dye the death. And the ſerpent ſaide vnto the woman: You ſhall not dye the death at al. For God knoweth, that what daye ſo euer you eate thereof, your eyes ſhall be opened, and you ſhall be as Gods, knowing good and euill. And the woman ſawe that the trée was good to eate, and fayre to the eye, and pleaſaunt to ſee, ſhe toke of the

The hiſtorie of the Original ſinne.

Gen. 2.

Gen. 3.

of the fruite therof, and ate of it, and gaue to hir husbande, who ate of it also. &c.

Two parts of this historie.

This is the history of the fall of mankinde, wherof there be two partes. The one containeth the cõmaundement of God: the other the breaking of the commaundemente: whereby it appeareth, that the fal of ỳ first mã was the breach of Gods commaundement. Wherein the easier that Gods commaundemente was, the lesse is the excuse. For who seeth not that it had bene most easy in so great aboundance of fruites of al Paradise, to haue abstained from one tree: For the vse of all the other fruites was expressly graunted vnto them by the Lord, saying: Eate of euery tree of Paradise. The place where they dwelt, was a Garden of pleasure, so that there coulde lacke nothing to sufficiencie of nature. And the very tree of life was not forbidden. No doubt there was a great fauoure of God, and also a great easinesse to haue kept the commaundement, specially when man was not yet bond to concupiscẽce, but whole and free. Nowe go further and examine the maner of his transgression, which doth also aggrauate the fault of his disobedience.

The easynes and fauour of Goddes commande ment.

The maner of the trãsgression.

1 First, the woman granted that it was lawfull for them to eate of euery tree of Paradyse, sauing onely of that whiche was forbidden: We do eate (sayth she) of the fruite of the trees that bée in Paradyse. See the maruellous fauour of their creator.

2 Secondly, she knoweth the cõmandement of God, and rehearseth it, and sayth: Of the fruit of the tree which groweth in the middle of Paradyse, God commanded vs we should not eate.

3 Thirdly, she is not ignorant of the cõminations, the great and terrible paine which nature it selfe abhorreth, she hydeth it not, but dothe plainely confesse it and publishe it, saying: Least peraduenture we die. Where the word Peraduenture is to be noted, which declared hir mind somwhat doubting of the certaintie of Gods threatning, whiche doubte opened the way of temptation to the Serpente, and gaue hym the more boldenesse to speake againste Gods worde, and accuse God as not worthie to be trusted, whereupon the serpent did boldly enforce: Ye shal not die the death at all. For God knoweth, that what daye soeuer you eate therof, your eyes shal be opened, and you shall bee as Goddes, knowyng good and euill.

4 Fourthly, it is to be noted, that the woke sayth: The woman sawe that the tree was good to eat, delectable to loke on, and pleasaunt to the eye, and she toke of the fruite of it, and dyd eate. There is no mention here of hunger or neede. I can not say the delite of the taste and allurement of the eyes, driue hir inconstant wauering minde in the obedience of God, and crediting more the Serpentes wordes than the threatnings of God, to the breaking of Gods commandement, but that it entised hir vnto it as halfe leaning vnto it before.

5 Fiftly, after the sinne was committed, she did neither retire hir selfe to hir conscience, to acknowledge and to be sorie for it, but gaue also to Adam hir husbande the forbidden fruite, for Pa. 33. Sir back to Pa. 16.

I. What Sinne is.

Truly this is confessed of al men, not only Christians, but also Iewes & Turkes, that sin is such a thing which displeaseth God, prouoketh his wrath, & deserueth vengeance from heauen, and that it is to be eschued of al them that desire to please God, and kepe themselues from vtter destruction, but what sin is, it is not so out of doubte, nor so manifest vnto al men, that there is no varietie of iudgements in the matter, and yet for all that it were méete it should be most knowen, and most certaine to all men.

1 Many mens consciences be burdened & sometimes driuen to desperation, by the only opinion of sinne: in thole thinges wherin is no sinne: which thing the teachers of mens traditions did neuer cease most wickedly to do, by whose peruersenes ỳ soules be slaine which the Lord slew not, and the innocentes are condemned: whereof the example appeared in the Pharisées in the 12. chapter of Math. and 15. and this day also is to manifest in them, which so burden the consciences of the faithfull with seruile burdens & humane presumptions, that the case of the Christiannẽ is more miserable, than the case of the Iewes, as Augustin doth also complaine in the 119. Epistle: which thing should not be, if it were as well knowen of all men what is sinne, and what is not, as sinne is cõmonly vsed of all men.

2 Againe, it happeneth also, that some men do not acknowledge that to be sinne, which is sinne in déede, as they doe which thinke it is no sinne, vnlesse it be done contrarie to the expresse worde and commandement of God. They surmise that all the specialities of sinne are expressed, whereas they be innumerable. And this errour coulde haue no place if it were clearely vnderstoode what sinne is. Therefore as mens consciences bée without cause troubled with the opinion of sinne, so they be seduced with false persuasion of rightuousnesse, and are made careleste, thinking that they sinne not when they do sinne very enormiously against the Lord. Wherefore it is most necessarie to know what sinne is, least we stray from the truthe, and either be burdened with false opinion of sinne, or els beyng seduced with a vayne carelesnesse, goe still on in sin without the sense or féeling of sinne.

Certaine definitions of sinne.

1 Some doe define sinne thus. Sin is an acte straying from the order of the ende which it ought to be directed vnto, contrary to the rule either of nature, eyther of reason, eyther of the euerlasting lawe. This definition seemeth to be insufficient, bicause it doth not vniuersally expresse what sinne is, but what actual sinne is, as they call it. Besides that that it yeldeth matter of question, in that that it measureth sinne according vnto the rule of reason: If it be spoken of mans reason, it is an errour: if of Gods reason, it is too darke for a definition, wherein lighte and plainenesse is requisite to be.

Ambrose.

2 Ambrose defineth it this waye: Sinne is the breache of Gods lawe, and disobedience of the heauenly cõmandementes. This definition conteineth no vntruth: and yet it is not sufficient, for that it ministreth some matter vnto them which doe thinke that there is no sinne, but that same which is committed against the expresse lawe of God, as it is comprised in writing.

3 For yet that definition is not playne and clere, which sayeth that sinne is an euil affection and volúntarie. For there is more and greater controuersie and dout what euil affection is, than what synne is. For wee be decepued by the coloure of goodnesse, so wee be also put in vayne feare with a forged coloure of euill.

4 For that definition is not plaine nother, wherein they define syn to be a will to haue or obteine that which iustice doeth forbyd, and to forsake that which it commandeth. For in the word iustice, there riseth a doubt what is iust, and what is not: and so one doubte muste be cleared by an other doubte.

5 There is an other syke whiche sayth, that synne is the will turned from God. Suche kyndes of definitions though they conteyne nothing that is false, yet they doe not so profyte the consciences of symple and good men, that they may thereby certainely vnderstande what synne is. And the flesshe is so corrupte and frowarde, that though it know that the will whiche turneth himselfe from God is vniuste, yet it wil neuer abide to vnderstande rightly what it is in deede to haue any ofwarde will and turned from God.

6 The syke iudgement we may haue of that which S. Augustine sayth, that sin is the turning backe from the vnchangeable good. And therefore I wil now declare what my opinion is of sin.

Augustin.

Sinne, which of the Ebrewes is called חטאה of the Grekes ἁμαρτία or ἁμάρτημα, is the missing, declyning, or straying, as I maye so call it, from a certaine appoynted marke which we shoulde constantly and directely goe and reache vnto. The Ebrewes calleth חטאה if a man in slinging or casting misse the marke set vp before him. For we do reade in the booke of the Judges, of the seuen hundred chosen of the Beniamytes: which euerye one coulde slyng stones at an heares breadth, and not mysse. Wherefore when wee muste define synne, we must looke vnto the marke, which is prefixed and set vp by God vnto all men. He that doth misse and fayle in shoting, is iudged to misse and fayle, in respect of the marke which he should haue hitte, and not in respect of any other thing which is not set before him for a marke.

Nowe the consideration of the scope or ende in the definition of sin, is of two sortes, that is to say, generall, and speciall. The generall consideration is touchyng God, as the chief and only good. So that in this sense, Sinne is whatsoeuer doth swarue and decline from the communion of him, whether it be in the vnderstanding and thought of man, eyther in will, talke or deede. And I call the the communion of the chief good the agreement and vnitie with his trueth and will, so that in thys poynte it is synne not to thinke the same, not to wil the same, not to doe the same, which the hyghest and chief good willeth, &c. of whom and in whome be all thinges, in whome also we do liue, moue, and be: as if a man woulde say, it is sinne in the Kinges court, whatsoeuer is wide and discrepant from the Kings wil & minde, which ought to be as a marke indifferently set vp vnto all courtiers to pricke vnto. The special direction is according vnto the diuersitie of the persons and degrées of men. Whatsoeuer doeth misse or swarue from that that is good, honest, iuste, due, right, lawful, comely and méete, it is sinne. But in respect of the diuersitie of persons, some one thing is good, honest, due, right, iuste, lawfull, comely and méete to magistrates, and not so vnto the subiects: other to maried, other to single persons: other to maisters, and other to seruantes: other vnto parentes, and other vnto children: and thereof it commeth, that the same which is a faulte in the magistrates, is none in the subiectes: and againe the same that is a faulte in the subiectes, is none in the magistrates: and likewise in other estates and degrées. Yet for all that, al these do depende vpon the will of God alone, which ought to be the only ende and conclusion of all thinges, that be to be desired or to be done.

And forbycause this wil of God coulde not of it selfe be knowen vnto men, there was giuen vnto them the law, not only of nature, as it is called, which shoulde be within the minde of man, but thereunto was added the benefite of the answers, speakinges, and preceptes of God, first vnto the parents of our nature, after that also to their aftercommers before the floude, euen vntill Noe, who was appointed a preacher of iustice: and after the floude vnto Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob, at length to Moyses also, and by him to all Israel, after Moses to the reste of the Prophetes: whiche had al a singular loue of God and of their neighbour, wherein the whole Scripture, as wel of the lawe as of the Prophetes (witnesse Christe himselfe) is comprehended. Matth. 22.

Whatsoeuer therefore is either desired or vnderstanded, spoken or done, contrarie vnto the loue of God or of our neighbour, is sinne, as a missing and straying from the will, nature, and agreément of the true and chief good, whether it be expressly set forthe in holy Scriptures or not. VVhat sin is.

And this definition of sinne S. Augustine doeth expresse in some places in this wise: Sinne is that which is eyther spoken, committed, either coueted contrarie vnto the euerlasting lawe. And as I suppose, he meaneth by the euerlasting law, nothing els, but the vnchangeable will of Gods maiestie, whercunto as to a lawe, al thinges must be directed. And yet we must holde fast the distinctions of this same wil of God. First that we do not referre those thinges to the secret and incomprehensible will of God, according vnto whiche he doth gouerne al thinges both in heauen and in earth by most vpright iudgements, but yet withall most secret, but vnto the same wil, whereby he doth require vs to be obedient vnto him. Secondly, that euery man must consider & way with himselfe, what Gods will doeth require of him, first generally, as of all others, and afterwardes what specially also according vnto the condition of his person and estate. Augustine. VVe must haue a discretion of Gods vvil.

2. What is the beginning of Sinne, and what the encreaſe.

A double conſideration of this place.

THis matter is to be conſidered two wayes. The firſt is, how ſinne began at the firſt in mankinde, and being once begon, went on vnto all the poſteritie. This conſideratiõ of ſinne is opened before, where we ſpake of the fall of man. And to that pertaineth all thoſe thinges which are read of originall ſinne, either in the writing of the Apoſtles, either in any other of the old writers of right iudgement. This kinde of ſinne, the Apoſtle calleth, The ſinne dwelling & reigning in the fleſh, the law of ſin, the law of the members, fighting againſt the law of the minde, and the ſinne which compaſſeth vs, &c. The ſtrength and malice of this ſinne, is ouerſpred into al mankinde, by the traine of our fleſh, euen frõ our firſt parents: & it is wel called ſin, for two cauſes. Firſt, bicauſe it is the fruit of the firſt & original ſin. Secondly, bicauſe it is the fountain & rote of al the ſinnes which be committed by vs in willing, ſpeaking, or doyng. Yea it is not only the fountaine & rote of them, but it is a certain law ruling and reigning in the fleſh. But of this kinde of ſinne, my minde is not now to ſay any more after that which we haue before noted of the fall of man, of the ſtrength and malice thereof, & wherevnto it ought to be imputed.

How that ſin is committed by our ſelfs.

The ſeconde conſideration of this matter is, how the ſinne beginneth in vs which is properly committed by vs. In the firſt chapter of James we read this: Euery man is tempted, drawen and enticed of his owne concupiſcence. Afterwardes when concupiſcence hathe conceyued, it bringeth forth ſinne: then the ſinne being perfected, bringeth forth death. This ſayth Saint James. By theſe wordes, it is very plainly declared, howe ſinne beginneth in vs, encreaſeth and is perfected. There is in vs a corrupt and poyſoned ſtrength of concupiſcence, redyly giuen vnto al kinde of euill: Whereof is bredde all kinde of ſinne, and it is bredde in this ſorte.

Iacob. 1

1 Firſt, there crepeth into our harts temptation. Whereof is an innumerable ſorte of kindes. One man is tempted to pride, another to wrath, another to ỹ luſt of the fleſh, an other to gluttony and ſurfet, an other to enuie, & ſo forthe. Now the temptation crépeth into vs by ſuggeſtion either of Satan, as it chanced to Iudas and Ananias: either of our remembrance, either of ỹ ſenſes of the bodie, which is by ſyght, or hearing, or ſmelling, or talking, or touching.

Admiſſiõ.

Suggeſtiõ.

man is to auoide the ſuggeſtiõ of Math. 26. Act. 5.

2 After that, the temptation is infected with a certain delite, as it were a ſauce, to feede & drawe vnto it the minde of man. So Eue was allured with the beautie and delite of the forbidden Apple, the children of ỹ ſtrong were allured with the beautie of the daughters of men, Iudas with the ſweteneſſe of gaine. And ſo forth.

Delectatiõ.

3 There foloweth this delite, a conſent to ſinne. Loe here is the conceiuing of ſinne, done as it were in the wombe of concupiſcence: which vpon euery light occaſion, concupiſcence that vnhappy mother of ſinne, bringeth forth.

Conſenſus.

4 Whiles that the ſame which is conceiued with in by conſenting to tem-temptation, is in worke perfected a brode: But although the worke come not on, yet neuertheleſſe the ſinne is perfected before God, which by cõſent is conceiued in the hart: whereof we may ſée in Matthew: He that ſeeth a woman to deſire hir, hath already cõmitted adultery with hir in his hart.

Matth. 5.

Therfore ſeing the beginning of ſinne & the proceding is of this ſort, a vertuous man, and he that feareth God, muſt haue ſpeciall regarde to marke diligently al the thoughtes of his hart, and ſuggeſtions of ſinne, eyther bredde within him, or ſlyly ſlipping in from without, & as he findeth them, ſo to ouerthrow them and caſt thẽ awai. For there we ought chiefly to watch to quenche the ſinne, where it firſt bredeth, or rather where it is firſt conceyued.

No man is able ſo to ſhut from him the ſuggeſtions and firſt tentations, but that they wil as the Serpent did by his own ſlippernes wind themſelues into vs by thoſe things, which we dayly ſée & heare. And albeit we ſhoulde grant that there may be ſome ſo careful and perfect a warder & reſtrainer of his ſenſes, that he would neither ſée nor heare, nor ſmell nor taſte, nor touche any thing wherby he might be tempted to ſin: yet the very concupiſcence lurking in our hart in the inward ſecret corners of our affectiõs, is by ỹ thoughts in the hart gotten as it were with childe, and by conceyuing of ſinne, made great, if conſent of will agrée withal: So that the firſt motions to ſinne can not be altogether voyded and ſhifted off from any man.

No, neither the declaration of the temptation tied to the ſenſes, can not be put off, by the only remedie of not conſenting, but by the meane of withſtanding it. He that conſenteth not but ſtriueth with temptation, and puffeth and braideth out, and as with ſpitting at it, deſieth the delite thereof, is not infected with the vncleanneſſe of ſinne, but ſaueth his conſcience pure and cleane by the grace of God. I ſpeake of that ſinne wherevnto we be tempted by euil ſuggeſtion, not of originall ſinne, which is ſpred out into all fleſhe by the infection of nature, yea without any conſent of ours.

So that ſinne riſeth and is made vp by theſe three degrées or ſteppes: ſuggeſtion, delyte, and conſent. I call conſent, not euery bowing and inclination of the wil, but that whereby the minde doth fully & abſolutely aſſent vnto temptatiõ, and now ſeketh no more, but howe he maye enioye that delyte, wherwith he is decepued and ouercome: altogether propenſe and ſtriuing to the accomplishement of the déede. The lighte inclination of the wil, and as it were of a momẽtes ſpace, which is immediatly chaſtened with the ſpirite of the feare of God, although it doth argue a weakeneſſe of minde, yet it can not be taken for a full & perfect conſent. And of this point I do admoniſhe you, leaſt ſome ſcruple may entangle the weake conſciences without cauſe. Of the bowing and wauering minde we may not gyue ſentence, vnleſſe he doe yelde as confirmed with a full conſent vnto the one part or the other: that is, vnleſſe he do either perfectly conſent vnto ſinne, or elſe refuſyng it, dw abyde in the keping of rightuouſneſſe. Thus my minde was in fewe wordes to giue a taste of the beginning and proceding of Synne, not for their pleasure which without all feare violently runneth or rageth to fulfill their wanton lusse in synne, but for vertuous yong men and such as feare God, that they may by the grace of the Lord vnderstande with what feare, & as it were watch and warde, they ought to loke bothe vnto their outwarde kinde of life, and also principally into the inward seate of their affections, and without delay resyst and suppresse the suggestions of Sinne.

We maye not pronoſnce of a vvauering minde.

3. What it is to doe Sinne.

NOw the third place is to consyder, what it is to doe sinne. And the waying of this shall profit much to the vnderstanding of some places of Scripture. To synne symply, is to thinke, speake, or doe any thing that is vnlawfull and vniuste. Al menne doe sinne (for who is he that doeth good and synneth not? in the firste booke of the Kinges in the 8. chapter) but not alike. Some doe synne by the infirmitie of the flesshe, contrary vnto their minde and purpose, and they doe exceedingly sygh and sorowe for their sinne. In them sinne is not sought for of purpose, but met withall by chaunce. Some others synne of malice and of wickednesse with minde, not striuyng withall, but gapyng and gaspyng after it. They doe not happe vpon synne by chaunce, but doo with trauaile seeke for it. The former way of synning is of the faithful & elect, the latter, of the vnfaithful & reprobate. The elect do not committe synne, though they do yet sometimes synne: The wicked do not only syn, but do also commit sin, that is to say, are trained on with purpose of syn: so that to committe sin, is day & night carefully to minde and muse to do synne. As to do good, is not simply to doe any thing which of it selfe is good, but to apply a man self continually with all endeuour to the doyng of good. And to do, in this sense signifieth not the simple acte howsoeuer it be done, but although the worke of synne be not perfected, or not yet in the very act, it signifieth the very deuise, counsell, imaginatiō, and purpose, the malice also of our depraued nature, so that now and then wicked persons do sinne, euen as we say the euil trées, byring forth euil fruit. Judas the traytour heard the Lorde say euen at supper, That which thou doest, doo quickly. What did that vnhappy mā at that present? As touching his acte, he did suppe, but for his thought, imagination, & deuise of his harte, he betrayed his Master. The Lord spake not of that which he did in acte, in the syght of the rest of the Disciples, but of that which he did bréede by deuise & purpose of hart, and did in deede in his vnfaithful mynde: & yet he sayd not: That whiche thou wilt, but that which thou doest, doe quickly. It is manifest, that this worde Doe, in that place is set for the purpose of doing, and signifieth the doing of the minde rather than the doyng of the bodie. Euen so to do the law & commandements, is taken sometimes in scriptures for the purpose to doe the law and commandements. We read of king Josia, that he did that which was right in the syght of the Lord, and

All men do sinne, but sundrye wayes, some by ignorance, and some of malice. 1. Reg. 8.

How yworde doing taken.

Reg. 18.

Reg. 20.

m. 119.

That, thou do do qui

r. 1.

n. 119.

To con- on vp- the fore places cripture.

2. Reg. Of

and that he returned vnto the Lord in all his heart, all his soule, and all his power, according vnto al the law of Moses. And yet for al that, he did many things which agreed not with the lawe of God. Of Ezechias we reade also the like: of whome for all that it is written that he did that which displeased ỹ eyes of the Lord, shewing his treasures for a bragge vnto the king of Babylons ambassadors. And Dauid singeth: I haue done iudgement and iustice. And, I haue kept my féete from euerie euill way. And againe: I haue not declined from thy iudgementes. And againe: I haue kepte thy commandements and testimonies. If any man will referre these sayinges vnto the outward doyngs, and not to the purpose and endeuour of a godly minde, Dauid must néedes be taken with a lye, except the synne committed against Urias, was not against the commaundementes, testimonies, and iudgementes of God. Therfore what is it els to saye, I haue kepte my féete from euery euil way, but, I haue carefully applyed my selfe that I would commit no euill? I haue done iudgement and iustice, asmuch to say, as I haue bene studiously giuen to do iudgement and iustice? For he would not say, that he synned not. For to what purpose then shoulde he haue so often lamented in the Psalmes for his sinnes?

Hereby I suppose, it is not only manifest that to do sin, is not simply to sinne, but to haue a desyre to sinne, although there be no synne yet done in acte: as to doe good, is not simply in act to do good things, but to haue a desyre to do a wel, though he doe not euer in acte accomplish a good worke. But that this is manifest also, that though the elect and the reprobate also doe synne, yet the elect committeth no synne, but the reprobate doeth. For they that be of God, as they haue in them the séede of God, so they do with al their hart abhorre synne, and that which they doe abhorre, they can not endeuour and séeke to doe.

And thereof it is that John in his Canonicall epistle in the. 3. chapter writeth in this sorte: Children, let no man seduce you. He that doeth iustice, is iuste, as God is iuste. He that doeth synne, is of the Deuil: for from the begining the Deuil sinneth. In this appeared the sonne of God, to lose the workes of the Deuil. Euery man that is borne of God, doth no synne, bycause his séede dwelleth in him, and can not synne, bycause he is borne of God. In this the children of God and the children of the Deuil are manifest. And thus farre there. So that John putteth a difference betwixt the elect & the reprobate, which he calleth the children of God, and the children of the Deuill, in that he sayth, the elect can do no synne, bicause they haue the séede of God in them: and that the reprobate doe syn, doubtlesse for that that there is in them the séede of the Deuill: So that in this matter he leaueth a marke, whereby bothe maye be knowen, the one from the other. So that we must beware, least wher he sayeth: Euery manne whiche dwelleth in him, sinneth not, be not vnderstanded of the firste kynde of synning whiche wee spake of, in which the elect also doe sinne, but of

1. Ioan. 3.

He that is borne of God doeth no sinne.

the seconde, after whiche sorte the wicked, reprobate, and children of the Deuil doe earnestly applie themselues to sinne.

The error of some of the Anabaptistes which say that they be without sinne.

And thereby it is manifest also, how far out of the way some of the Anabaptistes be, which go about by these wordes of Iohn, to conuince plainely that a Christian man can not sinne, and come thereunto, that forasmuch as they wil be reputed alone to be true Christian men, & care for no others, they do affirme that they do not sinne at all, but that they be altogether without sinne: which thing Satan most wililye worketh by them, to the entente to driue to vtter desperation and destruction the weake soules of the godly disposed men, which feele in themselues now and then the strength of sinne, and fall therevnto by the infirmitie of the flesshe. And the wretched men mark not how earnestly the sayde Iohn in the same canonicall Epistle in the firste chapter speaketh: If we say that we haue no sinne, we seduce our selues, and there is no truth in vs. If we confesse our sinnes, God is faithfull and iuste to forgiue vs our sinnes, and wil cleuse vs from al our wickednesse. If we say that we sinne not, we make him a lyer, & his worde is not in vs. So that they seduce themselues, & ther is no truth in thē: yea they make God a lyar, who euē in that that he ordeined the blonde of his sonne to be to vs a continuall meditation and pledge of forgiuenesse, to the ende, that by the benefite therof, we might be still deliuered from our sinnes, doeth sufficiently testifie that the moste faithfull and Christian of vs all, be yet subiect vnto sinne:

1. Iohn. 1.

and therefore that it is requisite, of necessitie, that we confesse our sinnes alwayes, and moste gladly embrace the grace of this propiciation with thankes giuing.

4. Whether one sinne be greater than an other.

That the Stoykes dist.

Of the opinion of Stoykes which say that sinnes be equal.

IT was the Stoiks opinion, that al sinnes be equall, for they sayd that sinnes were not to be measured by the falling out of the things, and greatnes of the fault, but by the euilnes of men. They confessed that the matter wherein a man sinneth, may one be greater than the other, but the sinne it selfe not so: for example, If the master drown the shippe, it is no matter to the qualitie of the sinne, whether the shippe were freighted with golde or with chaffe. For though in ỹ thing there be some difference, yet touching ỹ vnskilfulnesse of the master, they sayde, there was no difference. In this sorte they argued: No sinne, is to passe the boundes, and after that is once done, it skilleth not to ỹ encrease of the fault how farre a man go out. Sinne is, whatsoeuer is not lawful: and not to be lawfull, is in euery kinde of him equall. Ergo, such faultes as growe therof, must nedes be equal. It is not lawful to take awaye any mās life. He sinneth whosoeuer sleeth a man wrongfully. So it skilleth not who he be that is slaine, a mans father or his seruant. In both is committed that which is not lawfull, saving that in slaying of the seruant is but one sinne, in the father concurreth many sinnes. For first there is slaine an innocent man, further he

The opinion of the Stoykes is vntrue.

which

which begat thée, fed thée, & brought thée vp, settled thée in house & home &c. and so by multitude of trespasses, the mischief is made greater and worthye to haue more punishment: but the faulte it selfe, in it selfe, is equal.

This the Stoykes disputed, and iudged that there was no greater strength to restraine men from any wickednesse, than if they perceyued that ther was no differēce in sinnes, but that he sinned equally that beate a magistrate, and he that beate a priuate man: and in what house so euer he commit adultery, the filthinesse of the wantonnesse was al one. And by the same reason, me thinke, they wil say, It skilleth not whether one blaspheme man or God himselfe.

1 These mens opinion I meane not at this present to refell, whiche was in their owne dayes wel ynough ouerthrowen, and declared that neither the vices were equall, whereof the sinnes doe rise, neyther yet that it maketh no matter to the increase of the sinne, that the things wherein the sinne is committed, be vnlike or vnequall, so that the more or lesse waight that the thynges be of, so muche also greater or lesser the sinnes bée, whiche bée committed in them.

2 Now it is so farre wide, that this their opinion may restraine the leudenesse of euil doers, that it doth set it forwarde and increase it more. For what man is he that can be so ware and loke so well to his owne doings, that he shall neuer passe the lists of rightuousnesse? Now he that hath made a light escape, and might easely leaue and goe backe from the error of his sin, if he were stayed with the feare of a greater fault, when he thinketh that he hath so sinned, that he can commit no greater, and perceiueth that it maketh no matter to the grieuousnesse of the sinne howe farre he runne on in sinning, after he hath once broken out of the listes of rightuousnesse, I beseke you what wyll hée doe else, but as the very leudenesse of sinne shall entice him vnto: Surely he shall run on obstinately in a certayne kynde of desperation as long as he can, and he shall encrease a great heape of sin vppon that whiche in the beginning might easely haue bene amended: & that is worse, he shall thinke his sin is not more outragious at the ende, than the first light offence was.

But leauing them, let vs returne vnto our selues: for we do wel know that one sinne is esteemed greater than another in the sight of God, for that that the very commaūdements of God do not set forth the obseruatiō of godlinesse and iustice al alike, nor threatneth not like punishment to ỹ transgressors, but to some lighter, to some greuouser, besides that, that Christ saide vnto Pilate: Therfore they whiche deliuered me vnto thée, haue the greater sinne.

Ioan. 19.

The inequalitie of sinne to be considered two wayes.

1 So that the inequalitie of sin in my iudgement, is to be considered two wayes. First, that if sundry offences be compared togither, the one may be lesse or greater than the other: as the sinne is greater wherin wée doe offende immediately against God, than against man: and that greuouser, which is against the parentes, than that which is cōmitted against other men. It is lighter offence when a man stealeth, compelled by necessitie of hunger to stay his greedy hungry belly, than to giue the aduenture to rauishe his neighbours wife, only to satisfy his wanton lust. He doth sinne more grieuously that lyeth in watche for his neighbours life, than he that lyeth in watch for his goods. And yet anye of these cõmitteth lighter sin, than hee which ouerthroweth the saluation of anye mannes Soule, and ministreth occasion of euerlasting damnation.

D. v. offeceu

Prouerb. 8.

Degrees of sinnes.

2 Secondly, that eche sin considered alone, riseth vp either by hys owne degrées, eyther considering ẏ circũstaunces, semeth lighter or greuouser. So the inordinate affection of anger containeth sinne in it selfe: but yet it groweth greater, and the more outragiously it breaketh out, the greater the sin becommeth. So sayth Chriſte: Euery one that is angry wyth his brother, shal be guilty of iudgement. But he that saith to his brother, Racha, shal be guiltie of counsell. But he that sayeth Fole, shal be guiltie of the pit of fire. Likewise we must iudge of other sinnes. It is sinne to desire thy neyghbours wife, and it is iudged adultrie in the sight of God. Yet this sinne hath his degrées, whereby it groweth & becõmeth greater: as if thou do not only desire wt thy hart, but do also declare this thy desire to the woman by countenaunce, beckes, or words, and not content with that thou do prouoke hir to wantonnesse with giftes, and apply hir with talke, and at length wickedly commit the dede. So groweth the sinne by degrées. Now touching the circũstances of sin, doubtlesse he sinneth more grieuously that sinneth of knowledge, than he ẏ doth it ignorantly. In dede that seruant is not excused, which offendeth, not knowing the wil of his Maister, nor escapeth not the punishment, vnlesse it be by the benefit of grace: but hee sinneth more haynously, and shall be sorer beaten, which knowing the wil of his Maister, doth witting & willingly transgresse it. Let vs imagine what may be loked for of them, whiche be still conuersant in the light of Gods word, and can pretende no ignorance of Gods wil, yet neuertheless they giue themselues to the delights of the flesh, & to al kinde of sin. Farthermore, ẏ sin is greater which is done by malice of wit and imagination, than that whiche is done through the infirmitie of the flesh: & that greater, which is done of purpose and appointment, thã that whiche is done by chaunce. He sinneth more enormiously, that continueth in sin, than hee ẏ sinneth once or twice alone. He sinneth more which sinneth to the offence of others, than he by whose faulte there is no offence giuen to anye other: and hys sins also are more that sinneth with more offence, than his is whiche sinneth with lesse offece. He that sinneth vpon light occasion is more to be blamed, than he which is not driuen to sin, but by great temptation. And their sin is also greater which haue had more occasion to amend & yet amende not, than they which haue had no suche occasion. So the impenitencie of the Capernaites doth exceede the impenitencie of the Sodomites in greuousnesse. To be shorte, if we loke vppon the circumstances

Math. 5.

The circũstances of sinnes.

stances of the persons, the places, the times, the matters, the meanes, &c. and consider, who, against whom, where, whẽ, how, in what matter, of what purpose of mind, for what causes a man sinneth, I suppose it shall be manifest ynough, that there is muche difference betweene those things whiche we committe daylye, so that there is not greater varietye and difference in diseases, than there is of sinnes.

vvarning

But we must beware that we abuse not this consideration of the circumstances, as they do, whiche are wont to examine these matters thoroughly, whẽ they presume to iudge of other mens sinnes, and be blinde in their owne: who if they had brotherly charitie, wold not inforce and exaggerate their brothers sinnes, but shoulde either dissemble thẽ or make the leaste of them, and in the meane whiles should diligently condemne their owne faultes.

This I thought good by the waye to admonish you of the inequalitie of sinnes, against the Stoykes opinion, specially for yong men whiche giue themselues to good letters, that they fall not into the Paradoris of the Stoykes, and so taste of their pernicious errour, before they bee ware.

5. Of the difference of Venial and Mortal sinne.

The scholemens opiniõ of mortal & venial sinne.

THe Scholemen brought in this difference betwixt Venial and Mortal sinne, & that after their owne fashion, very entangled, and nothing agreeable to the holye Scriptures. They made mortal sin to be that whiche is committed againste the commaundementes of the lawe of God, nature and mã, vnlesse it be excused, by reasõ of the sodain cõming, or the smalnes, or som other cause touching mans commaundementes, or some higher dispensatiõ. They called Venial sin, that which was not contrarie, but besides any lawe, not keeping the way which the holy law intendeth. And they taught, that thys kinde of sin was called venial thzee maner ways. First, bicause it had alredy obtained forgiuenesse, as when mortall sinne by confession is made venial. Secondly, for that it hath in it some cause of forgiuenesse, for whiche it ought to be lesse punished: as suche thinges whiche be done of weaknesse or of ignorance. Thirdly, bycause of it selfe it doth not exclude the determination and ending of the punishment, as mortall sin, which of it selfe deserueth paine euerlasting, and so excludeth forgiuenesse.

The persõs of the that sinneth, are more to be considered than the qualitie of the sinne.

But leauing their opinions, let vs loke into the matter it selfe, according to the truth of the holy Scriptures, and the propoztion of Christian faith. Therefore we must vnderstande, that in this matter the persons of them which sinne, are more to be considered than the sinnes themselues. There is no sin of it self so small, but it is worthy of death, if it be iudged, setting mercye a parte. For if it be true that he sayde: Wo vnto all our iustice, if it be iudged without mercy: how shall we not pronoũce so of al our sins whatsoeuer they be? Wherefore their very inward affections & thoughts contrary vnto Gods law, be of that nature of them-

themselues,that they make vs guiltie of death,vnlesse they be forgiuen for the bloud of Christ. And that sin lurking in our members, which we drewe from Adam, bringeth death: & yet I speake nothing of his frutes. For what be al those sinnes whiche we do against ẏ wil of God, in thinking, speaking, or working, but certaine fruites of that sinne which we cal Original?

The persons of the elect and faithful.

We muste first therfore determine of the persons of them that sinneth. For if they be elect and faythfull in Christ, it followeth also that theyr sinnes be not mortal,but venial. For they come not into iudgement, but passe from death into life. And as the Apostle sayth, There is no condemnation vnto them, whiche be in Christ Iesu. And according vnto the Epistle of Iohn: If any of the number of the faithful sinne, he hath an aduocate in heauen, Christ Iesus, whiche is the propiciation for our sinnes, and sitteth at the right hande of the Father,to be a meane for vs. Therefore neyther the disease and corruption of nature, nor the vnruly motiõs which they fele in themselues, when the fleshe coueteth against the spirite: nor the bondage wherby against their wil they serue in flesh the lawe of sinne, and the good which they woulde they do not, but the euil which they hate they do, doth purchase them death, bycause they be vnder grace,and be saued by the righteousnesse of Christ.

Rom.8.

1.Ioan.2.

The vnfaithfull and reprobate.

But if they that sinne be vnfaithful and reprobate, all their sins though they seeme light,be mortall, bicause they be not partakers of the grace of GOD, nor they can not obtayne forgiuenesse of theyr sinnes, whiche is not gotten but by faithe in the bloode of Christe. In them the affection of the flesh is death. They be wise according vnto the flesh, and they liue according vnto the flesh. If you liue according vnto the flesh, the Apostle sayth: you shal dye. Their minde is vncleane,and so is their consciences. Vnto them the corruption of nature whiche is in the flesh, and the vicious affections (I wil not speak of vicious acts) are nothing els but deadly sins. Thus death cõmeth on them for that they be not partakers of the life whiche is in Christe, and they be vtterly straungers from the grace of GOD, they be subiecte vnto his anger. In thys wise (I suppose) it is manifest inough, that there can be no better determinatiõ of mortal sinne & venial, than according to the diuersitie of the persons of them that doe sinne. In déde we sinne both elect and reprobate, faithfull and vnfaithfull: yea and the sinnes of the elect, if they were iudged according vnto their qualitie, shoulde not escape death and condemnation. But therefore they be venial, bycause by grace of redemption and propitiation they be pardoned and forgiuen: and that cannot be said of any ẏ sinnes of the wicked and vnfaithful.

But some man wil say: Is there then no sinne, nor crime mortall, or deadly, vnto the faithful men? Then the faithfull may without any danger of saluation,liue according vnto the flesh,and giue themselues wholy ouer to the affections of the flesh: they maye committe whoredome, and adultery without care,they may be wanton,men louers,theeues, deceyuers, drunkerdes, brawlers,violent stealers, couetous, idolaters, witches,extortioners,spiteful, enuious,banketters,quarellers,blasphemers,and so forth. For if al their sins be venial, these shall be venial also, & not subiect vnto death. I answere. This waye be they deceiued, which be perswaded, that they which dwell in the catholicke Church, can not be damned, although they sinne neuer so enormiously. And they vnderstand by the catholicke Church the seate of Rome,ẏ gay quéne. But we answer to the question. Either make the tree good,and his fruite good: or else euill, and his fruite euill. Suche kinde of sins be the works not of the faithful, but of the carnall man. The same Paul calleth the workes of the flesh, and doth denounce that they that do suche, can not possesse the kingdome of God. And in the Epistle to the Ephesians,he doth attribute them not to the faithful, but to the disobediẽt, vnrulye,and vnfaithful: and sayth, that they doe prouoke the wrath of God against them, which doe so sin. It can not be that they whiche haue true faith,should sin so enormiously, wickedly,mischeuously,& desperatly. For although they fall sometimes into some great sinne, yet that is of minde,purpose,and way, farre different from the carnal men. They doe not giue themselues to mischiefe whiche they doe hartyly detest: and if they doe committe anye mischief or acte, it commeth on them contrary to the purpose of theyr minde, and they remayne in their mischief, nor delite not in their euill doyng, but doe by the grace of the Lorde, immediatelye starte backe, accuse theyr selfe,bewaile their euill doings, crane forgyuenesse, and by the grace of the Lord they doe finde it. And so such grieuous sins as Dauids was, the theeues,the sinfull woman, & the Publicane, were made vntothem by the grace of the propitiatiõ, veniall.

Rom.8. abuse Cases.

Of sinne. Pa. 61

VVhether veniall sin may becom mortall.

They dispute of this, whether it maye be that the same whiche was veniall sinne, may by certaine circũstaunces become mortall: as if drũkennesse be muche vsed, and drawe vnto a custome, and anger long kept wareth stiffe. Our iudgement is, that the qualytie of the offender is also to be considered in this. But if he which was made partaker of the heauenly grace,fal from that grace, and of a godly and faithfull man and fearing GOD, he bée made an vniust,wicked,vnfaithful and cõtemner of GOD: euen as his conscience hauing lost the puritie of faith,was made subiecte vnto death, so al his sins also which were venial when he was in grace, are turned into mortall sinnes. So we reade in Ezechiel, When the iuste manne departeth from his righteousnesse,and committeth wickednesse, hée shall die in them. And also: All hys righteousnesse shall bée forgotten. And what other thing can followe, if the good tree be turned into an euil tree, but that the fruites muste turne from good to euill? They whiche from the beginning of a faith and of a good spirite doe degenerate to vnfaithfulnesse, make all theyr life wherein they were partakers of forgiuenesse, mortall and deadlye, as they be whiche in déde

Ezech.33.

beginne

beginneth in the spirite as the Galathians did, but at length do ende in the fleth. They be subiect vnto condemnation, and their sinnes be no more venial but mortal, vnlesse they amende and returne vnto the grace of the bloude of Christ, from whence they are fallen, if they be yet so fallē, that there may be time of amendement, and of returning vnto grace. I knowe that there be some that be of an other opinion herein, but I wyll saye my minde, and offer them no wrong.

6. Of the Sinne against the the holie Spirite.

The opinion of the Scholemē.

THe Scholemen say, that the sin against the holy Spirit is, when a man striueth to put awaye that which might let his purpose to sin. As if a man be intised to sinne, and there commeth into his minde the seueritie of Gods iudgement, which he thinketh wil once punish him for his sinne: if he of purpose reiect that suggestion, and flatter himselfe that he shal not be punished for his sinne, or else plainely determineth to abide the punishment to come, rather than he will forsake his purpose to sinne, he (they say) committeth then sinne against the holie spirite. And they do appoint fiue kindes therof: that is to say, presumption, whereby men presume of the mercie of God without deserte: desperation of the grace of God: the striuing against the truth once knowne: enuie for the grace in his brother: obstinatenesse and impenitence. This is the scholemens opinion of the sinne against the holy Spirite.

The kinds of sinne against the holy spirit, after the opiniō of the Scholemen

But it is expedient to bring forth the wordes of Christe of this sinne, whiche are read in the twelfth Chapiter of S. Mathew. Therfore I say vnto you, euerie sinne and blasphemie shall be forgiuen to men, but the sinne against the Spirite shall not be forgiuen to mē. And he that speaketh a worde against the son of man it shall bee forgiuen him. But he that speaketh against ỹ holye spirite it shall not be forgiuen him, neyther in this present worlde, neither in the worlde to come.

The wordes of Christ. Math. 12.

We see that the sinne against the holie spirite in this place, which shal not be forgiuen in this world, nor in the worlde to come, that is to saye, neuer, is called of Christe, Blasphemie, that is a slaunderous rebuke, whiche, is when there is such shamefull slaunder obiected to any, wherein we be wonte to detestе and note suche matter, as we iudge to be most slaunderous and most abhominable. And this blasphemie is not a simple sinne. Neither euery sin is not blasphemy, but euery blasphemie is sin. Syn is, when we trespasse against the vprightnesse of Iustice. Blasphemie is not only when the limites of that that is right, is passed, but also the same, against which the fault is committed, is skorned and taunted vp with the rebukes. It is sinne, what trespas so euer is done against the doctrine of the truthe. And therein manye doe amisse. Yet he is not strayghtwaye a blasphemer, that doth sinne against the doctrine of the truth, vnlesse he do iniury against it with slaunderous tauntes and reproches, and call it heretical, erroneous neous and Diuelishe. He that disobeyeth the magistrate, sinneth, but he that rateth the magistrate wyth rebukes and slaunders, he is a blasphemer. The sinne whiche obeyeth not his father, trespasseth: but he can not be reported to be a blasphemer of him, vnlesse he ioine to his disobedience wordes of reproche. So that blasphemie, though it be a sin, yet it containeth somewhat in it, whereby it exceedeth the simple sin. Therfore Christ when he had saide, Euerye sinne (as lesse) he ioyned also reproch (as greater sin) shal be forgiuen mē: but the reproch against the holy spirite shal not be forgiuē men. And he saith not, he ỹ sinneth against the holy spirite: but he ỹ speaketh against the holy spirit. This I meante to touche, that we maye vnderstande that the sinne against the holy spirit is such a maner of matter, that it is done and wrought by reproches, slaunders, and spitefull raylings. Wherefore in my iudgemente the same kinde of sinnes whiche we rehearsed of before ỹ Scholemen, be to little purpose attributed vnto this, except it be the striuing against the truth knowen, if it be ioyned with slaunderous rayling, as it is wont to be. For it is possible, that he whiche presumeth of the mercies of GOD, may do it so, that it be to the glorie of the mercie of God, and to his own saluation. Yea and though a man do this daye naughtily presume vppon the grace of God, or dispaire: be obstinate or impenitente, or enuie the grace of his brother, it maye be, that to morow he shall correct these pointes, and so not sin to death at al. And if such a misdoer continue vnto the ende, he sinneth in deede to death: yet I see not, how such sins can contayne blasphemie against the holy spirite. But let vs see then what is the blasphemie against the holy spirite, whiche Christe speaketh of.

The sinne against the holy spirite (omitte) slanders & taunts.

VVhat is the blasphemie against the holy spirite.

In Marke the 3. chapter we read in this sort: But whosoeuer speketh blasphemie against the holy spirite hath not forgeuenesse for euer, but is subiecte vnto euerlasting iudgement. For they sayd: He hath an vncleane spirite: So that the blasphemie against the holy spirite, was not any qualitie of an impenitent harte, obstinate, or dispairing, or presumptuously trusting: but the slanderous reproche in lying vppon Christ, that he had an vncleane spirite: that is, that they reported the holy spirite, by whom and in whom Christ caste out diuels, to be the spirit of Satan, being the spirite, which is, that vertue of God, which in Luke is called the finger of God. So that it appeareth well ynough, that euery sinne against the holy spirit, is not so condēned of Christ, that it is vtterly irremissible (for they doe sinne also against the holy spirit, whiche resiste the preaching of the Grace of GOD, although it bee ingnorantlye: to whiche for al that, repentance is not denied, as we may see plainely in the Actes, where when Stephan saide: You stiffe necked and of vncircumcised hartes, you do euer resiste the holye spirite, yet when he was stoned, in his praier for the he said, Lord impute not vnto them thys sin, (because they can not tel what they do) but ỹ blasphemy spoken against the truth knowē wherby they spake against their con-

Marc. 3.

Luc. 11.

Act. 7.

science,

pronoked of enuie, that is irremissible: whiche is called blasphemie against the holy spirit, for this cause, bycause his truth is so clearely knowen to the myndes of men by hys doing, or miracle, or talk of wisdome, or some other way, that it cannot be denied: nowe if this truth being so manifestly set forth by his power & strengthe, bee by any man against his conscience touched with blasphemie, we may well say, that the holye spirite is blasphemed.

There be two kindes of blasphemers.

But there be two kindes of blasphemers. One whiche doe slaunderously raple against the truth of god through ignorance. They be like vnto them whiche rayled against the sonne of man, by errour, for the baseneſſe of his estate. Such a one was Paule. They haue yet some waye to amendmente, and to forgiuenesse of their sinne: and therefore we muste pray for them. For they sinne not to death. So the Apostle saith of hymselfe, whiche was before a blasphemer, and persecuter, and reuiler, but sayth he, I haue obtayned Gods mercy, bycause I did it ignorantly. The other sorte is of them, whiche blaspheme the truth, neither of ignorance, nor before they knowe it, but after they knowe it, witting and willingly against their owne consciences, for enuie and obstinate malice: for whom we may not pray, bycause they sinne to death. 1. John. 5. Some of them neuer acknowledged the truth of God, though they knew it: suche were the Scribes and the Phariseis, they said: In Beelzebub he casteth out Diuels: other there were that rayled against the truth, which they did not only knowe, but also professe, such as Iulian, Porphirie, and Alexander the Copper smith were, and other more. Of them these two places in the Epistle to the Ebrues are to be vnderstand. And vnto those we may liken them, whiche in these dayes changing theyr coppe doe most spitefully reuile and blaspheme the truth of the doctrine of the Gospel, which they did sometime acknowledge, and with greate zeale embrace and professe.

1. Tim. 1.

1. John. 5.

Heb. 6. 10.

Why the blasphemie against the holy spirite is not remitted.

Hebr. 6.

Mat. 12.

There be that blaspheme holy ſpirit can not forgiue, canſed do not pent.

SOme men thinke, that there is neuer any forgiuenesse at al of the blasphemie against the holy spirite, bycause it is done wittingly against the truth knowne, not ignorātly as it was vsed against the son of man. But it is a harde pointe so to determine. For euen they that sin sometimes willingly, do obteyn forgiuenesse if they amende. Therfore the surer waye is to fetche the meaning heereof from the wordes of the apostle, where it is allotted vnto the which sinne against the holy spirite, that they can not be renewed by amendement. Wherby we are giuen to vnderstande, that therefore forgiuenesse is denyed vnto them, bycause they can not amende. And wheras S. Augustine saith, that the final impenitence and froward striuing against the grace of God, is the sinne against the holy spirit: it is rather ye cause why the blasphemye against ye holy spirit, is neuer forgiuen. For sinne is not forgiuen vnto sinners that lacke repentance. And they they ye be such, can not amende, bycause they be the vessels of ye wrath of God, prouided vnto destruction, reprobate men, and slaues vnto Satan: which thing is manifest by that, whereas they be lightened with the knowledge of the truth, yet in theyr hart they be not altered: euen like as if the ground which is well washed with raine, and wel tilled, beareth no good fruit, but bryars and brambles, wherby it is knowen to be accursed.

Of the Lawes.

IN Dasmuch as the Apostle witnesseth, ye ye law is the strength of sin, me thinketh it is meete ye after sin, we take our tyme to treate of the law, whereunto besides those things which be written by the fathers, there is also in our time by the studie and trauaile of lerned me growne much light, and that to good purpose. For the knowlege therof is necessary, chiefly bicause of him who is ye end of the law, I meane Christ, that the grace which he brought vnto mankind, may the better be knowen. Therefore lette vs consider of these things, in degree and order, as,

1 What the lawe is.
2 By who and to whom the law is to be giuen.
3 How many lawes there be.
4 What is the strength and working of the lawe.
5 What is to fulfill the lawe.
6 Of the lawe of the Spirite.
7 Of the abrogation of the law.

1. What the Lavv is.

VVord: vvherby the lavv is signified.

IN Dasmuche as concerneth the signification of the words, wherby that is termed which we call the Lawe, we muste vnderstande that in Ebrew the lawe is, תורה, whiche word properly signifieth Doctrine. For it is meete that the principall purpose of the lawe be to teache the myndes of men, what is right, equal, godly, honest, and in deede profitable: and againe what is vniust, vnequal, vngodly, vnhonest, & hurtful. Therefore whatsoeuer things be so commaunded, that they lacke the perspicuitie of doctrine, they seeme to sauer of wicked tiranny rather than a doctrine and nature of an vpright lawe. Therefore S. Jerome saide: I will that he or she shall commaunde me, which may ouerwhelme me, but can not instructe me.

Lavv vvithout doctrine.

And the Grekes calleth the lawe νόμος of νέμειν, whiche signifyeth to diuide and to distribute. So the lawe is called νόμος, bycause it doth distribute to euery man that, whiche is cōuenient & meet for him. And this is that equity, without which no law can be iust and stable. For the right distribution of things to be done and kepte, belongeth to the equitie of the lawe. And there be two kindes hereof. The one is generall, the other is speciall. Generall, whereby that is commonlye and generallye appointed vnto al men, which commōly and generally concerneth al men. Speciall is, that, whereby those thynges are speciallye appointed to eche man, whiche speciallye concer-νόμος Equitie to be vvayed in lavve.

Two kinds of lavve.

neth him accoꝛding vnto the diuerſitie of perſons and eſtates, of which there is no time now to ſpeak. Therfoꝛe it appeareth, that ſuch lawes be vnequal, which without difference and right diſtribution, commaunde one thing to al men, not apertaining vnto all men, ſingularly to eche man ſuch things as be founde contrarye vnto eche mannes condition and degrée.

Lex. Thirdly, the law is called in Latin, Lex, à legendo, vel diligendo, whiche ſignifieth Reading oꝛ choſing: foꝛ choyſe belongeth properlye vnto the wiſdome and equitie of the law. And yet there be ſome whiche bring this woꝛd Lex à ligando, which ſignifieth binding, bicauſe that by the authoꝛitie of the law, iuſtice and equitie, as by certaine kinde of bandes, mens myndes be bounde & reſtrained from that whiche is vniuſt and vnlawfull. So peraduenture he mente that ſayde: Noꝛ yet the threatning woꝛdes were bounde in firme and hardened ſteéle. Some mã ſuppoſeth that the lawe is called Lex à legendo, which is a reading, bycauſe it is openly read, ſo that no man may cõplayne of ignoꝛaunce, oꝛ pretende any excuſe of his faulte. And without doubt, to vſe to reade the law opẽly, is a thing moſt neceſſarie foꝛ them whiche muſte obſerue the law: but yet in my opinion the lawe called Lex, is as cuil fauouredly deriued frõ the woꝛde which ſignifieth reading in Latine, bicauſe it is openly and publikely reade, as a king called Rex, bycauſe he is commonlye and much ruled.

Fourthly, we engliſh men cal our actes of Parlament, ſtatutes and oꝛdinances, Lawes, declaring thereby that it is conuenient that the law be firme, as appointed and oꝛdayned not only by wiſe counſell, & vpright iudgement, but alſo by authoꝛitie not to bée contrarped. So the Grécks to putte the woꝛde θεσμὸς foꝛ κυρῶσαι, whiche ſignifyeth, to eſtabliſhe and make authenticall. And thus I haue briefly ſpoke of the nature & meaning of the woꝛd, nowe let vs ſée what is the definition of Lawe.

Some do define law to be ỹ charge of that which is right, and the embarryng of that whiche is wꝛong. Some other thus: Lawe is the rule and meaſure of all actes which ought to be done oꝛ be admitted. Oꝛ this way: Law is the ſaying oꝛ appointment of reaſon in practiſe. Cicero in ſome place calleth it the ſtrength and ſentence of the ſeruyng, and ſtaye of iuſtice and right. And it is briefly and very handſomely ſpoken. Foꝛ whereas ſome menne ſay, that lawe is the hygh reaſon grafted in nature, whiche commaundeth thoſe things that are to be done, and foꝛbiddeth the contrarie, it agréeth moꝛe with the lawe of nature, than with the generall definition of lawe generally. Therfoꝛe let law be, reaſon, rule, and ſentence, which is ſtrengthened with authoꝛitie and iuſtice, whereby are commaunded ſuch thinges as are to bée kepte and perfoꝛmed, and ſuche things as are to be auoyded, are foꝛbidden.

To

2. To vvhom, and by vvhõ the Law is to be giuen.

Yoꝛ as muche as in lawe there be two pointes, firſt doctrine to teach, and nexte authoꝛitie to commande and compell, it is conuenient that the vſe and reaſon of the lawe take no place in them, which of thẽſelues haue knowledge ynough of things, and of their will are ledde vnto thoſe things which be good and right, and do deteſt and eſchue the contrarie. Therefoꝛe the Apoſtle ſayth, that the law is not ſet foꝛ the iuſt man. The reaſon is, bycauſe he is without it, and of himſelfe giuen to doe that which the lawe cõmaundeth, and is not only ſo giuẽ in mind, but doth alſo moſt carefully leane to the doyng of it. Therefoꝛe it remaineth, that the lawe pertayneth vnto them, whiche vnderſtande not what things are to be done, and what to be eſchued: oꝛ if they do vnderſtand it, be not ſo affected that they doe take delite therein, and with al their hart indeuour to perfourme it. Now the law was giuen vnto men. And therfoꝛe, vnleſſe we ſhal ſay that it is giuen in vaine, the nature of vs muſte néedes be ſuche, that of it ſelfe it neither vnderſtandeth, neither loueth true iuſtice, and therfoꝛe hath néede of lawes, whereby it maye be enfoꝛced and pꝛickt foꝛwarde. We muſte alſo thinke, that the very oꝛdinaunce of the lawes, whereunto mãs nature is ſubiect, declareth our baſeneſſe. Foꝛ it can by no meanes be denied, but that he is a ſubiecte vnto his Lawmaker, to whome by Authoꝛitie and ſuperiour power, it is preſcribed in law, what he ought to do, & what to eſchue. No inferioꝛ can ſet a law vpon his ſuperioꝛ, therfoꝛe we be cõuinced of the baſeneſſe of our ſubiection, in ſo muche as we bée ſubiecte to the poſition and oꝛdinance of ỹ law. This is our goodly godlineſſe, to the toppe whereof, our fleſh climed, by the enticemente of the Serpent. So we were made Gods, hauing authoꝛitie and knowledge of good and euill, that we muſt be taught like childꝛen, and reſtrained by lawes. Let the waying hereof ſuppreſſe the pride of our hart, and condemne vs in affection of humbleneſſe, and ſtudy of due obedience, as men ſubiect vnto erroꝛs and malice. Thus muche touching this pointe, vnto whom the law is giuen. Now let vs ſée whoſe Authoꝛitie it is, to giue the law.

By vvhom the lavv ought to be giuen. The ſaying of a Biſhop of Rome.

A certaine Biſhop of Rome ſaid, Wherſoeuer is maioꝛitie, there is power to commaunde: and where is minoꝛitie there is neceſſitie to obey. By this ſentẽce the ſée of Rome got the Authoꝛity of making lawes, after the Pope had gotten himſelfe maioꝛitie aboue all, in the Churche. In dede the ſentence is true, that ỹ power to make law pertaineth to ỹ greater, and humbleneſſe to obey belongeth vnto the leſſer. But withall we muſt conſider, that euery kynde of ſuperioꝛitye gotten amongſt men only by title, ſuffiſeth not to the authoꝛitie to make lawes whereof we now ſpeake, but that the very nature of it requireth, ỹ ther ought to cõcur in him which ſhold be ỹ true & cõmon lawmaker vnto al others, a true maieſty, power, wiſdome, iuſtice, goodnes and truth, and ỹ not foꝛ the time alone, but euerlastinglye, not measured and vnperfect, but full & perfit, so that he which is indued therwith, may be a liuely and euerlasting law, and that his will may be as it were a fountaine of al that law, by which not onely mankinde, but also all things which be in heauen & in earth may be gouerned and conserued. For the course, reason and estate of all things requireth this, ỳ those things which be inferior, imperfect, mutable, variable, & for the time should be gouerned of some superiour, perfect, immutable, certaine, constant & eternal mind, whose wisdome, goodnes, equitie, truth, iustice, and power, should be tied to no measure, no time, no place, but extende it selfe into all fulnesse, al ages of all times, and into al that compasse of the whole vniuersitie of things and times, immediately and without ende. Suche a mynde cánot be ascribed vnto any creature. For euery creature is for his vnperfectnesse subiecte vnto thys euerlasting lawe. So that of necessitie wée muste appoint God alone to be the true, and only lawmaker alone. Vnto him al things are bounde, partlye for the authoritie of his infinite maiestie, and partlye for his perfecte wisedome, iustice, equitie, and goodnesse, lastly for thenecessarie conseruation of their beyng receiued of him. For there is nothing can continue discouered from this euerlasting and liuing lawe. Therefore whatsoeuer there is, wherein is vpright reason, equitie and authoritie, it sprang out of this fountaine, from whence all wisedome, iustice, equitie and authoritie commeth. Therefore they that be rightly wise, do vppon good reason determyne, that the law is neither the deuise of mens wittes, neither the agréement of the people, but an eternal matter which sprong out from Gods wisedome vnto the vses of men. We speak here nothing of the Authoritie of Princes, Magistrates, and people. But those things that concerneth that matter, we reserue vnto that place where we shal speake of Magistrates.

God only is the perfect lawgiuer.

3. Hovv manie kindes of Lavves there bee.

I Suppose that it appeareth by thys, whiche we haue alreadye spoken of the eternall Law, that is to saye, of the minde and of the hye lawmaker, of the estate of mankinde, that it can not bée, but out of that fountaine of all equitie and iustice, ther should spring forth certain lawes vnto the vse of men, and therof let vs make this diuision.

1 The Law of nature.
2 The Law expressed by worde without writing.
3 The Law written.
4 The Law of the Spirite.

Of the Lavve of Nature.

WE bée contented wyth thys whorte deuision, and as for them that séke a busyer, lette them goe to others for it. Before wé define what the Lawe of Nature is, wé muste firste admonishe the reader that the Lawe of Nature is is not called such a thing, which either besides or aboue ỳ eternal law which is in god, is prescribed by our nature it selfe, but that whiche is by God himselfe naturally fastened and established in al mẽ, and very agréable vnto his eternall law. The law of any thing may take the name of it two wayes. Firste, it may be called his, by whom it is ordayned. So that, that which we cal here the law of nature, is not of our nature, but it is the law of God. Secondly, it may be called his, to whō it is ordained. In this sense this lawe is called the law of nature.

Nowe the lawe of nature is that light and iudgement of reaso, wherby we doe discerne betwixt good and euill. Thomas Aquinas saith, that ỳ law of nature is nothing else, but the participatiō of the eternal law, in a reasonable creature. That definitiō in déede doth expresse vnto vs, of whence this iudgement, and light of reason commeth vnto vs, that is to say, from the eternal law: but what it is, it declareth not. And that parte in a reasonable creature, may cōprise also Angels, of whose nature here is nothing in question. Others decline this law more largely in this sorte: The law of nature is the cōmon sētence of iudgement, whervnto al mẽ togither do assent, & further whyche God graued in euerye mans minde, appointed to frame mens manners withal.

But we muste beware, that we thinke not that all things be comprehẽded in this law, which are sene to be in our nature. For firste it must be vnderstanded only of those things which are put into vs by God, so ỳ al those things be excluded which be not of God, but of Satan the author of our corruption. Secondly, not yet generally all those things be cōprehended vnder this lawe, whiche are cōmonly fastened in our nature by God, to exclude those things which we haue naturally common with bruite beastes, and that those things only be retayned, which as men indued with reason, we haue specially aboue beastes receiued of the participation of the eternal law of God. And that those things may be vnder stanãed, it is needefull to vse some handsome distinctiō for thē whose sēses be not exercised in these maters.

VVe muste put a difference betvvixt naturall affections, and the iudgementes of reason.

Let vs therfore make a distinctiō betwixt the affections grafted in our nature, which wé call the affections made with vs and thē iudgements of our reason. Some affections be yet whole and sounde, some corrupt and defiled. The sound affectiōs we haue of God, the corrupt, of the poyson of sin. The whole be they, by the which we do naturally desire suche things as be necessarie for our life: as when one that is hungry desireth meate, he that is drie desireth drinke, the colde coueteth warmth, the hote colde, the prisoner libertie, and he that feareth or feeleth death at hand desireth life, and doth abhorre death. Hereunto also belongeth the affections of loue, hate, anger, sorow, gladnesse, feare, & such other like: of which some haue in them no sinne, and were also in Christ as very man, yea and be cōmon vnto vs also with beastes, and the vse of them al is to serue the necessitie of our life, to which end they be planted in vs by God.

Affections, some sound and some corrupte.

The corrupte affections be selfe-loue, desire of vaine glory, the studye of priuate gains and couetousnesse, ỹ desire of reuẽgement, ỹ hate of truth, the loue of lying and dissembling, the disposition to wantonnesse at large, and al those things which be contrary vnto the euerlasting law, and be condemned for vnlawful, and contrarie vnto true iustice.

Judgemẽts of reason. Judgemẽts of religion.

None of ỹ kinds of the seaffectiõs ar to be referred vnto the law of nature as I made mention before. Wherfore we must loke into ỹ iudgemẽts of reason, whereof this lawe is. And thei be of two kinds. For so it is mẽt to deuide them in this preſẽt matter. The first kinde concerneth religion: the other, the liuing togither of men. As concerning religion, we finde by experience that this is general vnto vs all, that we doe perceiue there is a certaine God aboue vs al that be men, which is also heauenly and aboue the Angels, by whom the world is ruled, and al things therein ordered & conserued. Secondly, that thys God is to be worshipped, feared, and that to him we must be gratefull in al things. And therfore euen from the beginning of the world, ther hath alwaies bene among men some religion, wherby men haue had a beliefe in Goddes, and appointed some worship vnto them. And therefore is it also, that commonly all men iudge thẽ to be wicked, that hath no feare and obseruatiõ of this God, and that they can not escape vnpunished, but are subiecte vnto the vengeance of God. This light and iudgement naturally giuen vnto vs (wherof in all times hath appeared most manifest declaratiõ) is so obscured by the malice of Satan, that neither the true and only God, creator and conseruer of all things, is cõmonly knowen of al men, nor worshipped in true and sincere religion: but what soeuer is left in mans hart, of God, is turned to many false gods, and to the worship not mẽte to be giuen to the true God. Therof commeth that opinion of many Gods and seruice of Idols, vsed in al times. The place of the Apostle is knowen wel ynough, so that I nede not to alledge it, and expresse it word by worde. Surely there had neuer bene any opiniõ of false gods, nor anye superstition of their worshipping, vnlesse these things, which I haue made mention of, had bene commonly grafted in our reason.

Of vvhẽce cõmeth the religion of Gods.

Rom. 1.

Nowe touching the common life of man, and the equitie and honestie also pertaynyng therunto no, man cãdenye but it is grafted in our reason, that thou oughtest not to doe that to others, whiche thou wouldest not haue done to thy selfe: and againe as thou wouldest haue done to thy self, so to do to others. In this pointe, by the testimonie of Christ, are comprehended both the law & the Prophets. This lawe as it is grafted in oure nature, cõtaineth these points. First all men do generally determine by the iudgement of our reason, that the same which is vniuſt, is culpable and vnlawfull, and that which is right, to be commended and kept. Secondly, that it is right, that ỹ same which euery man would haue done to him from others, the very same if he can, he muste performe towards others, and with the like truſt and good will, as he requireth it of others. Againe that it is vniuſt and a wrong, to do that to others, which thou wouldest

The iudgements of equitie & manlylife.

Mat. 7. Luke 6.

not haue done to thy selfe. Furthermore, we are drawen by the same iudgement of reason, to profeſſe the obseruing of honestie, and the detestation of dishonestie. And thereof it riseth, that we commende modestie, humblenesse, chastitie, thankfulnesse, humanitie, and Gentlenesse, vprightnesse, truth, fayth, godnesse, patience in aduersitie, temperance in prosperitie, and al such things, as are commended of the Gentiles. And on the other side, we do condemne rashnesse, pride, and arrogancie, vncleannesse, ingratitude, vnkindeneſſe, subtelties, fallhode, vnfaythfulnesse, malice, impatience and intemperancie, with other vices, whyche are also condemned by the iudgementes of the Gentiles. And this persuerance and iudgement we haue not only of others, but also of our selues. For what is it else that the (Apostle saith to the Romains: For when the Gẽtiles hauing no lawe, (whyche we must vnderstande of the written law of Moyses) by nature do that which pertayneth vnto the lawe: they hauing no Lawe, are a Lawe vnto themselues, whiche sheweth the worke of the lawe written in their hartes, with their owne conscience also witnessing, & their own thoughts accusing one an other. &c. You heare here of the Gentiles, that is to saye, all them which lacke the lawe written, that they be a lawe vnto themselues: whiche is all one thing as to saye, they haue the lawe of nature grafted in thẽ, and that they declare openly, when they shewe that the workes of the lawe, that is to saye, that whiche the written lawe commaundeth, is written in their

Rom. 2.

Of the Lavves of the Gentils

Out of this lawe of nature came all those things, whiche we reade of so noblye sette forth in the lawes and constitutions of the Gentiles. For wise men and men of great experience, by diligent consideration, did out of the same generall and cõmon sentences writtẽ in mens harts by the light of reason, conclude particularly and specially those things, whiche might kẽpe men to liue togither in quietnesse, and equitie: and so they did ordaine dyuerse ciuill lawes according vnto the circumstances of the tymes, cases, places and persons.

The cõmon & vulgare equitie in mẽs harter.

It procedeth also out of this law of nature, that rude men, brought vp in the countrie, vtterlye ignorannt of al kind of learning and letters, giue sometimes most vpright iudgement of mens matters, so that Plato himself was not able to iudge more vprightly. And commonly all olde men children, & of middle estate, men, women, learned and vnlearned, we do al declare without nay, that this law is written within vs, that when any wrong is done vnto vs by any man, we start out immediately to condemne that which is wrongful done, and crie out on it, as a thing vnmete, and wrongfully done: and whiles we so iudge of other mens euil dedes, we declare manifestly ynough, ỹ though there were no lawe written, yet there is in our mindes a certaine iudicial sense of law, wherby we are able to iudge betwixt the good things and the euil, and alowe that which is good, and condemn the euil. And therfore it was, that Adam and Eua when they had sinned, they went about to put ouer the faulte of their transgression, he to the woma, and she to the Serpent. Which was a manifest argument, that they vnderstode, that there was some haynous matter committed, in that they had transgressed the commaundemēt of God. And therefore it was also, that Caim knewe that in killing of his brother he had no smal fault, but he vnderstode also the enormitie of his sin, saying: My iniquitie is greater, than that I may deserue my forgiuenes. Wherby were these things vnderstanded, but by the law of nature, and iudgement of their owne conscience? For there was yet no law extant, whiche coulde informe them that the lawes of God ought not to be transgressed, and that none shoulde shed the bloud of man, much lesse the bloude of his brother. Thereof it came also, that the two sons of Noe, Sem and Japhet, moued with the law of honesty, did reuerently couer and hide the priuities of their father.

Adam and Eua.

Caim.

Sem and Iaphet.

How it appeareth that the lavv of nature is gyuē vs from God.

Now that this law of our nature is giuen vs of God the maker of al, it appeareth by three argumentes. First, by that that it alloweth suche things as be good, and condemneth the euil, and therby it is tryed to be good. But in case there come withal any errour and blindnesse, by reason of the corruption of our minde, that is euil, so it is not of God, but of Satan. Secondly, bycause it is not gotten by any arte, discipline, or learning, but is naturally bred in vs. In deede learning and mens instructiōs helpe muche to polishe and encrease that which is giuen of nature: but it can not giue this light and rule it selfe of this lawe and reason. But that which we haue naturally, wee haue from no other but from God himselfe, whiche is the Authoure of our nature. Thirdly, by that that the iudgementes of this lawe agree maruelous wel with the law of God written, as shal wel appeare if we cōsider the chapters which we haue before spoken of. So that it appeareth that there is one authour and giuer of them both. Thus it is proued by these three arguments, that the law of nature is giuen vs naturally frō God, that is to say, bicause it is good, and bicause also it is grafted in our nature, and also bycause it agreeth with the written law of God.

Hitherto of the lawe of nature, nowe let vs see the lawes whiche be giuen of God by wordes, and not by writing.

Of the lavves giuē by God, not by writing, but by woorde.

Euery co maundē hath na the strēg of a law

IT pleased GOD of a singular purpose to sette in mennes mindes not onely a naturall lawe, but to ioyne thereunto also certaine lawes expressed by worde. And I meane not of euery worde of God spoken to man, either before or after the floud, nor of euery cōmandemēt, which was priuatly to be accōplished & once alone, but of such as cōmaunded somewhat: and were generally spoken to al, & required also a continuance. For euery commandement hath not the condition of a Lawe, albeit irste geuen n of plica- nd do n.

firste hath e parts.

albeit euerye lawe hathe in it the strength of a commandement. But let vs see what these lawes be.

1 Firste, when God had made man, as we reade in the 1. chapter of Genesis, he did not only blesse him, but he prescribed him a law also, saying: Encrease and multiplie, and fill the earth, and haue it in subiection, and beare rule ouer the fishes of the sea, and the birdes of the ayre, and ouer all the beastes whiche moue vpon earth. And God sayde: Loe I haue giuen you euery herbe that beareth seede vpon the earth, and all the trées which haue fruite in them of their owne kinde, to be to you for meate, and to all the liuing beastes vpon the earth, and to euery birde of the skie, and to al which moueth in the earth, and in which is a liuing soule, that they may haue to eat. This is the firste law giuen vnto man before he fell into sin. And it hath three membres. For firste it prescribeth of the encrease and multiplication of mankinde, saying: Encrease and multiplie, and fill the earth. Secondly, of the authoritie of gouernance, and sayth: Subdue it vnto you, and gouerne the fishes of the sea, and the byrdes of the heauen, and all the lyuing things which moueth vpon the earth. Thirdly, of their foode, when he sayth: Loe I haue giuen you euery herbe, &c. that they may be to you for foode, and to all the lyuing things vpon the earth. Thus God established the matter for the encreasing and multiplying of mankinde, and for an order to be kepte betwixt man and other beastes, and for the foode also & lyuing. Of all which things, see my commentaries vpon Genesis.

Some man wil say, these thinges are not to bee brought forthe for lawes, bicause they seeme not to haue the condition of a law, for that he is taken for an offender which performeth not that, that is commanded in lawe. For he seemeth not to offende that doeth nothing of himselfe towarde the encreasing and multiplying of mankinde, as they do that be barren, and such as of purpose do embrace a single lyfe. Also it appeareth, that the Lorde spake the same vnto the fishes of the sea, which be not méete to receiue the wordes of the lawe: so that these wordes séeme rather to containe the vertue of the wordes of Gods blessing, giuen to the bodies, as well of beastes as of men, to multiplie, than any strength and condition of lawe. Likewise may be sayd of the other two membres of this lawe, concerning the power of dominion, and of foode. For he appeareth not to be an offender, which restrayned by Spirite of humblenesse, doth not embrace the dignitie of gouernance, nor he neyther which forbeareth the herbes & fruits of trées, and feedeth vpon more vile things, or if it may be, feedeth nothing at all.

An obiection.

The answer.

We answere, That it must néeds be, that these thinges doe contayne Gods ordinance and order of things most necessarie for mankinde, so that they can not be included in the blessing of God alone. For although the vertue of Gods blessing is ioyned withall, whereby it may fall that mankinde may be multiplied, conserued, and fedde, yet there be commanded withall certaine thinges to be done of men, so farre forthe necessarie, as they do concerne the minde and wil of God, and also the estate of our kinde. The minde and will of God is, that by the lawful communication of man and woman, mankinde should be multiplied. So he created man and woman, so he ioyned them, Christe is witnesse when he sayd: Whom God ioyned together, &c. So he blessed them, so he ioyned the law of multiplication and encreasing the kinde. And who is so mad to say, that these things be not necessarie for the encrease of mankinde? Therefore seyng that these wordes haue the ordinances of God, and the necessitie of the conseruation and multiplying of our kinde, & a commandement withal, what is the let, but that we should ascribe vnto them the strength of a law? I am not of this opinion alone. For so Basile also expounedeth this place: And let the beare, saith he, rule ouer the fishes of the sea, & the birdes of the ayer, and of the beastes of the earth. This is therefore a blessing, this is an ordinance of law. Thus much saith Basile. Nowe for that which is obiected of the barren, & of them which embrace a single lyfe, the answer is ready: let the barren & impotēt be exempted from this law, whome nature it self hath exempted. Let him be exempted, whome God his selfe by his singular grace hath made exempte vnto hygher affayres of his kingdome. Let him haue this libertie, that can attayne it by the grace of God. But all haue it not, bicause it is not giuē to al. But who perceyueth not that they which are not exempted, neither by defect of nature, neither by the singular grace of God, and can not vse this libertie, but are subiect vnto naturall lustes, be not in deede exempted from this law giuen of God, but that they be bonde vnto it, so that they do not only offende in that they do not submit themselues vnto it, but also that they range out into their lustes at large, contemning the ordinance of God. The priuiledge of few, doth not take away the common law in the which be without priuilege. He that of necessitie did charge this law vpon mākinde, maye at his libertie exempt whom he wil. But for others, if they do endeuour to withdrawe themselfs frō the yoke of this law, they do most worthily fall into the bondage of the law of Satan, and into all kinde of filthynesse, of which thing there be in these dayes horrible examples to see in the Church of Christ. Therefore the olde Israelites were not vnwise in this matter, to whom these wordes of God stode for a law, which they called, The commandemēt of fructifying and multiplying. And therby it came to passe, that barrennesse among the people of God, suffered such rebuke. Peraduenture they passed measure in calling vpō this law, and layde it without difference vpon al men. In contrary wise our men haue sinned much more enormiously, in weaking and vtterly pycking this law of God, not only in libertie of single life, but also in forbidding of lawful mariage, & libertie of whoredome, to the exceding shame and rebuke of Christian men.

Matth. 19.

Basilius Magnus.

And whereas we reade that it is sayd also to beastes: Encrease and multiplie, and fill the waters of the seas, it taketh not away the strength of the law, set vnto mankinde. Vnto beastes is giuen only by nature this law of getting and multiplying, duryng in them vntil the ende of the worlde, but vnto man it is giuen both naturally and by prescript of Gods lawe also: and maketh vs to vse wedlock, not only for course of nature, but also for faith and obedience vnto God our maker, folowing the minde and will of our lawgiuer and Creator.

Vnto those things which be obiected against the law of gouernance and fode, I will aunswere in fewe wordes. First, that we must not lok only vnto the dignitie of the gouernance granted vnto man, but as I sayd before, of the law of multiplication, we must loke to the minde of God, and to the necessitie of our publique liuing among beastes. So it pleased God, that man should haue the gouernance of all beastes, and be as a Lord of the earth. If any man thinke that this power giuen to man is not necessarie, & that he may freely reiect it, let him for me turne the cat into the pan, and serue beastes himselfe, and put ouer his honor giuen to him by God his maker, vnto the baseste and mast vile beastes.

And touching the law of fode, although it be true that no man is so bonde to eate herbes and fruites of trées, that vnlesse he fede on them he sinneth: yet that letteth nothing, but that those thinges which be here prescribed of fode, maye haue the strength of a lawe. For it belongeth vnto lawe, not only to commaunde some thinges to bée done vnder a payne for not doyng it: but also that it muste permitte some thinges by name to mans vse, whereby they may vnderstande, that the reste of thinges be restrayned from them. This law permitted herbes & fruits of trées, declaring by that specialtie, that the vse of flesh was restrained from them, which for all that was graunted them after the floude by an other lawe. So Basile also sayth: The first law giuing, permitted the eating of fruit. These things considered, I suppose it is manifest ynough, that this law was giuen vnto mankind by Gods worde, immediatly after he was made.

Basilius Magnus.

The lavve of Paradise

2 The seconde law is read of in the 2. chapter of Genesis, in this wise: Therfore the Lord God toke man and put him into Paradise of pleasure, to worke and kepe it, & he commanded him, saying: Of euery trée of Paradise eate, but eate not of the trée of knowledge of good and euill. At what day so euer thou eate of it, thou shalt dye the death.

This was the law of Paradise, wherof the first parte contayneth a permission, the seconde an exception, the thirde a threatenyng. For he permitteth Adam to eate of euery trée of Paradise. For we can not say that he did so commande him ỳ, that vnlesse he did eat of all the fruytes of Paradise, he shoulde sinne. Secondly, he addeth an exception, to the intent the permission should not be altogether generall and frée, but restrayned vnto the obedience of Gods commandemēt. Of the trée (he saith) of knowledge of good and euill, eate not. In the first parte was set forth the liberality of the maker towards man; in the seconde the authoritie of Goddes maiestie: which two were very conueniently ioyned together, to the intent, that man should not vse the liberalitie of God without acknowledging his authoritie in his obedience and seruice, but bothe accept so great a benefite, and honor also the authority of the benefactour. Thirdly, he ioyneth a penaltie for the transgression by threatening, and saying: For what day so euer thou eate thereof, thou shalt dye the death: and reason. For he is not worthye to liue, that honoreth not the giuer of his life, but transgresseth his commandementes, not compelled of necessitie, beyng so easy to haue bene kept. Imagine that the Lord had sayd: Loe, to the entent that thou mayest liue, I haue giuen thée libertie to eate, and I haue giuen thée also abundantly to eate. Let all the fruites of Paradise be in thy power, one tree only except, whiche see you touche not, for that I kepe it to my owne authoritie. The same is the tree of knowledge of good and euill. If thou touche it, the meate of it shal not bringe thée lyfe, but death. For thou shalt not haue life by that which I forbidde thée, but all that meate which I haue made free and lawfull for thée, that meate shal be conuenient and profitable for thée, and serue thée for the sustentation of thy lyfe as long as thou forbeare from the forbidden meate. If thou abstreyne not from that, thou shalt haue afterwarde no other meate of all that choise of meates, which thou art permitted to haue, that can preserue thée in thy life. For the meate of the tree of lyfe shal be also shutte from thée, bycause thou shalt not be able to come at it, and preserue thy lyfe. It appeareth that this is the meaning of this lawe: the transgression wherof, hath made not only our first parentes, but also all their successors subiect vnto sinne and death, wherof is spoken before in that we noted of the fall of man.

3 The third lawe is that, whiche is also read in this sort, in the thirde chapter of Genesis: Wherfore man shall forsake father and mother, and cleaue vnto his wife, and they shall be two in one flesshe. This is the law of wedlocke, prescribed not only to Adam and Eua, but also vnto all their aftercommers: and confirmed by the testimonie and authoritie of Christ himselfe the sonne of God, as we may read in the Gospel of Path. And it maketh no matter that these wordes seemeth not to be the wordes of God, but of Adam, and that therfore they shoulde signifie rather a prophecie of somewhat to come, than a law. For first the very hanging of it togither in Genesis, proueth that they be not the wordes of Adam. For as it soundeth (and as Erasmus noted) they may be as wel ascribed vnto God, or to him that wrote the historie, as to Adam. Secondely, although they were pronounced by Adam, yet they shoulde haue the strengthe of a lawe as well as those thinges which are giuen by Moses, if you consider in Adam the person & dignitie receyued of God, the authoritie vpon his aftercommers, which he hadde as their head and Prince. Thirdlye, to make the matter more certaine, wée haue also the testimony of Christ, which in the place before named, alleageth these wordes for the first law of wedlocke, and as a law giuen by God, wherevnto all wedded folke ought to conforme themselues, saying: Haue you not read, that he that made man in the beginning, made them man and woman, and sayd: Therefore shall man forsake father and mother, and stick to his wife, and there shalbe two in one flesshe. Thus farre he rehearsed the wordes of this law, whereof he doth consequently inferre, And now they be not two but one flesh. Therfore what God hathe ioyned, let no man separate. So Chrysostome doth also take it, vpon Matthew, where he doeth somewhat larger expresse the wordes of Christe in this sorte. Therfore this lawe, though it séeme to be set forth now by me, it was for all that ordeyned most diligently frō the beginning of tymes. Ye sée also by this, that the woman is not simply appointed to the man, but that they be commanded to leaue father and mother: and the man not simply to come to the woman, but to be as glued vnto hir by the strength of the worde, shewing that they mought not be separate. He not contented with that onlye, declareth a greater coniunction, when he sayth: And there shal be two in one flesshe. After that hauing read the olde law, which standeth yet firme in wordes and dédes, and is grounded vpon the authoritie of the maker, hée doth also him selfe with great power interpretate and establish the law, saying: Therefore they be not two, but one flesh. And as it is a heynous offence, to diuide one flesshe into two, so it is also most vniust to separate the woman from the man: this is Chrysostome. And I thoughte good to note for them which come newe to scriptures, that they take not these for mans wordes, but for the lawe of wedlocke giuen by God.

wedded

4 We reade that the fourthe lawe was giuen after the fall of our parentes in the thirde chapter of Genesis, in this wise: God sayd to the woman, I wil multiplie thy troubles & trauailes in conceyuing: thou shalt bring forthe thy chyldren in paine, and shalt be vnder him, and he shalbe master ouer thée. And he sayd also to Adam: Bicause thou hast heard the voyce of thy wyfe, & eaten of the tree whereof I commaunded thée thou shouldest not eat, cursed be the earth in thy worke. In labour thou shalt eate therof all the dayes of thy lyfe. It shall bring thée forthe brambles and thistles, and thou shalt eat of the herbes of the earth. Thou shalt eat thy bread in the sweate of thy face, vntill thou returne vnto the earth from whence thou art taken. For thou art dust, and shalt returne into dust. A great part of this matter containeth the deserued paine appointed for the transgression, rather than a law commanding any thing: but that which he saith to Eua: Thou shalt be vnder the power of thy husband, and he shal rule thée, hath strength of a law, whereby the woman is commanded to be subiect and obedient vnto hir husband: as that also which he sayd to Adam: Thou shalt eat thy bread in the sweat of thy face, it containeth a lawful commaundement, whereby the man is enioyned to feed himselfe and his family with his labour and trauel. The lawe of the woman is to obey hir husband: the mans lawe, that by honest trauel he prouide necessaries for his wyfe, his children,

The lavve of man and vvoman after their sinne.

childzen, and his familye. Herevnto agreeth also the writinges of the Apostles.

The lavve of first birth.

5 The fyrst lawe is written in the fourthe chapter of Genesis in this wise: The Lord sayd vnto Cayn: Why art thou angry? and why is thy countenance fallen? shalt not thou receiue if thou doest wel? but if thou doest euill, is not thy sinne streight at the dores? By these wordes he commandeth nothing, but doeth admonish him of the law of nature, and confirmeth the same which speaketh in euery mans conscience, that it is right that he that doth wel, shold receyue, and he that doth euil, should be punished. He addeth: And if thal be for thee, if he couet any thing, and thou shalt be maister ouer him. So by ordeyneth the lawe of the byrthright. Cayn was the first begotten, and ther belonged vnto him the more worship of power and gouernance by right of his first byrth. And this right he confirmeth vnto him by this present law: so that if thou do well, what needest thou to be sory and angry with thy brother? Thou art the first borne, and therefore thou shalt be also maister of thy brother. If he purpose to haue any thing, it shal not be in his own power, but in thine, whether he shal do it or not: and so thou shalt be maister ouer him. So that by this lawe was confirmed the autoritie of the first byrth, euen in the beginning, wherof the wicked hath very seldom made any good accompt, as appeareth in the examples of Cayn, and Esau, and other lyke.

The lavve of restoreing geuen after the floude.

6 The first lawe was giuen in the tenth chapter of Genesis, after the floud, where we read thus: God blessed Noe and his sonnes, and sayd vnto them: Encrease and multiplie, and fill the earth. And the feare of you, and trembling, thalbe vpon al liuing beastes on the earth, and vpon all byrds of the ayre, with all that moueth vpon the earth. All the fishe of ỳ sea are delinered into your hands, & all that moueth and liueth shall be meat for you. I haue deliuered you all, as grene herbes, except that flesh with the bloud you shal not eat. For the bloud of your soules I wil require at the hands of all beasts, and at the hands of man. At the man and his brother I wil requyre the soule of man. Who so euer sheddeth mans bloud, his bloud shalbe shed. For vnto ỳ image of God, man is made. &c.

This law was with diligent aduise giuen to Noe and his posteritie: as necessary for mankinde, in which God doth first rehearse and amplifie his firste law giuen in Paradise before sin. Unto the repetition belongeth these things which be appointed for the multiplication of mankinde, and his power vpon beastes: to the amplifying, that which toucheth the permission of fode. For before the floude, herbes and fruites of trées were only permitted to man to féede vpon. But here is added also libertie to eat flesh: which is yet limited with the exception of bloud, & a threatening of punishment, if any shed mans bloud. And this punishment is decréed according to the equitie of the Talion lawe, which is lyke for lyke: So that his bloud shal be shed also, whosoeuer sheddeth más bloud, for as much as man is made to the lykenesse of God. So the Lord by by this lawe prouided for mankinde to be multiplied agayne after the floude, and restrayned also the malice of mans heart from raging to what he list, in that he forbad that no flesh with bloud shoulde be eaten: And he ordeyned also punishmentes for them, which shoulde shedde mans bloud after the example of Cain, and the lyke.

We might recken also amongst these lawes the Circumcision which was geuen to Abraham, and the institution of the Passeouer in Egypt by Moses: but bicause they come nerer vnto couenantes & Sacraments than to the rule of the law, and be also put into the written law, I thinke I may here omit them. And hitherto of the lawes expressed only by the worde of God without wryting.

Of the lavve vvritten.

We cal that ỳ law written, which God gaue vnto Israel by Moses, and which Moses comprehended in his bookes of Exodus and Leuiticus, Numeri, and Deuteronomie: This was deliuered vnto Moses by Angels, as Stephan witnesseth, saying: Ye haue receyued the law by the order of the Angels. And the Apostle sayth: The law is giuen by Angels in the hand of the mediator.

The same they doe commonly diuide, & wel ynough for the purpose, into the morall precepts, iudicial, and ceremonial: or into preceptes, statutes, and iudgementes. By statutes, they vnderstande all that which pertaineth vnto rites and ceremonies: by Morall preceptes, the tables: by Judicials, all those lawes which they vse in the matters and controuersies of the policie, and for punishmentes of the offendours.

Of the Morall preceptes.

VVhat Moral preceptes be.

Morall preceptes be they, whereby mens mindes be instructed vnto godly and vpright affections and manners. I say affections, least some man bycause they be called Moral, shulde vnskilfully vnderstande it of the manners of our outwarde workes, whereas the lawe is spirituall, and the rule also of our inward affections. I say godly and vpright, that ye may vnderstand that there is not prescribed in these commandementes those thinges alone, which toucheth the common life of man to be had in iustice and equitie, but also those thinges which concerne the true seruice of God, which is mente and expressed by the word, godly.

The summe of the Moral preceptes.

The most compendious summe of al these, is: Loue thy Lord God with all thy heart, and thy neighbour as thy selfe. The same is somewhat more playnely set forthe in the table, and expounded afterwarde more at large by Moses himselfe, by speciall declaration of some particularities, as by certain commentes or expositions, and after Moses by the Prophetes, so that it was not for naught that Christ sayd, that in these two commandements, of the loue of God and thy neighbour, the whole lawe and Prophetes is comprehended. Of which matter if any man luste, let him loke vpon our Commentaries vpon the Gospell of Matthew, in the 5. and 22. chapter. Matth. 22.

Of the

Of the Decalogus.

Of the word Decalogus.

IN the fourth and the tenth of Deuteronomie, the preceptes of the Decalogus be called, The ten words, which in my iudgement ought to be more carefully beaten into Chriſtian yong mens heades, than the ten predicamentes were wonte to be in the Scholes: although the knowledge of them alſo, moderately vſed, be not vnprofitable. The ten words, be tenne lawe ſentences, wherin the whole effecte of this lawe is contained: and therefore men vſe to call it by this name. Decalogus, is a law comprehended in ten ſentences. And I thinke it is to no purpoſe to be curious in diſputation what reaſon or myſterie this number of ten repreſenteth, and whether the Prophete did allude thereunto by the Pſalter of ten ſtrings: or whether the ten preceptes be as the tenne moneths which a woman goeth with childe, as S. Chryſoſtome fained in his expoſition vpõ Matthew. Let vs leaue ſuch imaginations to vdle men that haue nothing elſe to doe. It appeareth rather that the Lord woulde haue his people (yet vntaught and ſmally exerciſed in holy thinges,) ſo inſtructed at the firſt beginning, that they might haue in a redineſſe a certain briefe of thoſe commandements, which ſhould ſerue to frame their mindes: and that they ſhould neither be ſo many in number, neyther ſo confuſe in heape, but ſo ſhorte and ſo diſtincte, that they might be eaſely carried away, ſo that the number of the commandementes might of euery man as readely be had and reherſed, as theyr owne fingers and toes: and he gaue ſuch order to his people, that the tenne ſummarie ſentences ſhould be moſt perfectly knowen to the common people, and that the larger expoſitiõ of them ſhould be committed to the miniſterie of ỹ Prieſts. And therevnto agreeth that of Malachie: The lips of the Prieſt kepeth knowledge, and men doe loke for the lawe out of his mouth.

Of the number of ten.

In Matthew hom. 72.

Malach.

How Levit. Deuteron. vvas set forth.

It is good alſo to marke diligently, howe theſe ten commandementes were ſet forthe in no light and common ſorte, but after a moſt earneſt and terrible way, as things in themſelues moſt mightie. They may be ſo ſlightly and vncarefully ſet forth, that they may finde more contempt than eſtimation. For nothing doeth ſo much hinder true Godlineſſe, as if men haue not a religious and deuoute opinion of the commandementes of God. Wherfore, when God had appoynted to gyue his people this lawe, he commaunded that they ſhould be ſanctified three dayes before, and to prepare their mindes to heare his commandementes. After that he did principally demaunde of them, whether they would heare his voyce, that is to ſaye, obey his commaundementes, and kepe his couenantes. And then when they had conſented to this obedience, he commanded they ſhould be put in readines againſt the third day, & to be brought towardes the hill, to the intent they ſhoulde hearken vnto it, and that with ſuch a feare, that the multitude ſhould tary at the foote of the hil, and no man vnder payn of death to come from thence vp to the hil. So ye may ſee, there was required to this aſſembly appointed to vnderſtand the law of God, a godlie minde, obedient vnto Goddes will, ſanctified, and cleare from all lightneſſe of curioſitie, and trembling at the voice of the Lorde their God. And the very maner of the giuing of the law was alſo maruellous ſtrange. God appeared in a terrible maieſtie, by thunders, lightnings, fier, a darke cloude, the ſmoke of the burning hill, by the noyſe of a trumpet enforcing vp his noyſe little and little. So the authoritie and terror of the maieſtie of God was ſtryken into the heartes of the rude people. And all to this purpoſe, that the lawe ſet forth, ſhould be vnderſtanded and perceiued with the feare and terrible knowledge of God. They which without ỹ feare of God come to hear his word, preſent themſelues in theſe holy aſſemblies, not onely to no profite, but alſo to their great damage.

Howe when the people was thus prepared, ſanctified, and had vndertaken the obedience of Gods voice, and aſſembled themſelues with fear to heare it, at length the thirde daye theſe tenne commaundements were propounded, the Lorde ſpeaking and opening them in this ſort in the hearing of them all.

Exodi. XX.

1 I am the Lorde thy GOD, which haue brought thee out of the lande of Egipt, out of the houſe of bondage. Thou ſhalt haue no other Gods in my ſight.

2 Thou ſhalt make thee no grauen image, neyther any ſimilitude that is in heauen aboue, eyther in the earth beneath, or in the waters vnder the earth. Thou ſhalte not worſhip them, nor ſerue them. For I the Lorde thy GOD am a gealous God, and viſit the ſinnes of the fathers vpon the children, vnto the third and fourth generation of them that hate me, & ſhew mercie vnto thouſandes of them that loue me, and kepe my commaundementes.

3 Thou ſhalte not take the name of the Lorde thy God in vaine, for the Lorde will not holde them guiltleſſe, that do take his name in vaine.

4 Remember that thou kepe holy the Saboth day. Six dayes ſhalt thou labour and do all that thou haſt to do, but the ſeuenth day is the Sabboth of the Lorde, in it thou ſhalt do no maner of worke, thou and thy ſonne and thy daughter, thy manſeruant and thy maydeſeruant, thy cattell, and the ſtranger that is within thy gates. For in ſix dayes the Lorde made heauen and earthe, the ſea, and all that in them is, and reſted the ſeuenth day: wherefore the Lord bleſſed the Sabboth day and halowed it.

5 Honor thy father and thy mother, that thy dayes may be long in the land which the Lorde thy God giueth thee.

6 Thou ſhalt not kill.

7 Thou ſhalt not breake wedlocke.

8 Thou ſhalt not ſteale.

9 Thou ſhalte not beare falſe witneſſe againſt thy neighbour.

10 Thou ſhalte not couet thy neighbours houſe, neither ſhalt thou couet thy neighbours wife, or his manſeruant or his mayd, or his oxe or his aſſe, or any thing that is his.

The diuision of the Decalogus.

A double diuision of the Decalogus.

THis is the proceſſe of the Decalogus. And it is deuided two wayes. Firſte into two tables, in which it was writte by the finger of God. For it had not bin ſufficient for the to haue hearde the voice of God, vnleſſe there had bin extant a monument in writing, written by the finger of God, whereby they? poſteritie ſhoulde be holpen, and the ſtony conſcience of the hard people be conuinced. Therefore they were tables of ſtone, that were occupied, and not of Paper. And all was not written in one table confuſely, but accoꝛding vnto the diuerſitie of the matter, deuided into two: ſo that the firſt conteyned ſeuerally ſuch thinges as perteyned vnto the lawe of God, the other ſeparatly thoſe thinges which touched the loue of our neighbour. And thoſe thinges which properly do concerne the loue towards God, as moſt woꝛthy, are woꝛthily put in the firſt place, and by good reaſon are ſequeſtred from thoſe things which doe belong vnto men.

Two tables of Stone.

How the ſecond cõmandemẽt is like vnto the firſt. Matth. 22.

And whereas Chriſt ſayth, that the ſecond commandement, which is of the loue of the neighbour, is lyke vnto the firſt, which commandeth the loue of God, it is not ſo to be vnderſtanded, that the dignitie and excellencie of bothe is equall: vnleſſe we will ſay, that God is not to be loued aboue man: but we muſt make this diſtinction, that the firſt commandement in degree, dignitie, and excellencie, is higher than the other: and that the other is not euen and equall with the firſt, but like, and that in his qualitie and condition. In qualitie, for in bothe is commanded pure and ſincere loue: euen as if you wold ſay, that one man were like an other in nature and qualitie, although the one exceede the other in greatneſſe, degree, and dignitie, &c. In condition, for that as the loue of God is the head & chiefe point of all the reſt of the commandements which concerne GOD, ſo touching men, the loue of our neighbour is the head & chief poynt of all.

It is wel therefore, that this Decalogus is deſcribed in two tables, for the differẽce of the things which be commanded, ſo that the loue of God hath the firſt place and table, and the loue of the neighbour, the nexte. So that we be taught nothing elſe by this diuiſion, but that we muſt vtter and declare our loue to our neybour, beginning at the loue of God, & that we muſt loue God aboue all, and our neighbour alſo for Gods ſake, ſo that God muſt haue in vs the chiefe parte in al thinges, and be the ſpring and fountaine of all godneſſe, iuſtice, and equitie, to be declared towardes our neyghbour.

Therefore, whereas men ſay, that ordinate charitie beginneth of it ſelf: if it be meante of the charitie of God, it is true. For that can haue no beginning but of it ſelfe. But if it be ſpoken of our charitie, be it neuer ſo vpright and ordinate, I ſee not how it can be truly ſpoken. For it neither beginneth of it ſelf, but taketh his beginning from the ſpirite of the loue of God, by whome it is powred into our hartes: neyther the godly man in degree loueth not himſelf firſt, but doth ſanctifie the firſt of his loue vnto his lord God: and after him & for him, he doth louingly embrace his neighbour, reiecting & refuſing himſelfe withall, and altogether liuing vnto God and his neyghbour, accoꝛding to the diſpoſition of true loue.

to his

Secondly, the Decalogus is deuided into ten woꝛds, which ſome men doe ſo handle, that they doe deuide the preceptes of the firſt table into three, and the preceptes of the ſecond into ſeuen. And in ſo doyng, they thruſt me quite out the commaundements of graue Images, and deuide the laſte, which is of concupiſcence, into two: following S. Auguſtine, who maketh three preceptes of the firſt table, to agree with the miſterie of the holy trinitie, and ſo leaueth ſeuen for the ſecond table. But as far as I can vnderſtande, none of the auncient fathers made this diuiſion: but all of them diſtributed foure into the firſt table, and the other fiue into the ſecond.

Of the Grekes, Athanaſius in his booke called Synopſis Scripturarum, appointeth them in this ſoꝛte. The firſte commaundement: I am the Lord thy God: The ſecond, Thou ſhalt not make to thy ſelf any image, noꝛ the likeneſſe of any thing. The third, Thou ſhalt not take the name of thy God in vayne. The fourth, Remember the Sabboth daye. The fifte, Honoꝛ thy father and thy mother. The ſixte, Thou ſhalt not kill. The ſeuẽth, Thou ſhalt not commit adulterie. The eight, Thou ſhalt not ſteale. The nynth, Thou ſhalt not beare falſe witneſſe againſt thy neybour. The tenth, Thou ſhalt not couet thy neighbours wife, noꝛ anye thing of thy neighbours. Thus Athanaſius deuided them.

And Origen maketh the firſt commaundement, Thou ſhalt haue no other Goddes but me: and the ſecond, Thou ſhalt make thy ſelf no grauen image, noꝛ likenes: and ſo foꝛth: and vpholdeth that the number of the commandementes oꝛ the truth of the Decalogus can not ſtande, if it be otherwiſe deuided, oꝛ if of the two firſt commaundementes, men ſhould make but one.

Origenes ſuper Exodum

Chryſoſtome in his ſecond expoſition vpon Matthewe ſayeth thus. Our chief and healthfull iuſtice of the law hath ten commandementes, as it were tenne moneths. The firſt, to know one God: the ſecond, to abſtayne from idols: The third, not to foꝛſweare: The fourth, to kepe the ſpirituall Sabboth: The fifte, to honoꝛ Father and mother: The ſixte, not to kill: The ſeuenth, to committe no adultery: The eight, not to ſteale: The nynth, to beare no falſe witnes: The tenth, to couet nothing of thy neyghbours. Thus ſayth he. And Gregorie Nazianzene doeth deuide the commandementes of the Decalogus in this ſoꝛte.

Chryſoſt. ſuper Matth. hom. 49.

Tenne lawes God wrote in tables of Stone,
Write thou them vp into thy harte:
See that one God thou know alone.
Make thee no image lyke as thou arte.
Take not the name of God in vayne.
See thou obſerue the Sabboth daye.
Honor thy parentes without diſdayne.
Beware thou kill not anye waye.
Adulterie flee, & witneſſe falſe to beare.
To couet that which is not thine, ſee that thou euer feare.

And this deſcription of the Decalogus is ſo ſet foꝛth, that vnleſſe the precept of images haue þ ſeconde place,

Not only the Latines, but the Grekes alſo did thus deuide it.

and that which is briefely in summe comprehended of the coueting of other mens things, bée referred vnto the tenth, there cannot be appointed ten in number. And least some man should say, that all these fathers bée of the Gréeke Church, and therefore they haue no authoritie in ỹ Church of Rome: let vs sée also the Latines.

Hieronimus in Epistol. ad Ephelios capite. 6.

Hierome doth plainely deuide the Decalogus thus, that the first cómandement is, Thou shalt haue no other Goddes but me: the seconde, Thou shalt make to thy selfe no image, nor any similitude. &c. And the fifte, Honour thy Father and Mother.

Ambrose.

And Ambrose wryting vpon the same Epistle and the same place, sayth thus: It is certayne, that the first commaundemente is conteyned in this: Thou shalte haue no other Goddes but me. The second: Thou shalt not make thy self any likeneße of any thing that is in heauen. &c. The third: Thou shalt not take the name of thy Lord GOD in vaine. The fourth: Thou shalte obserue my Sabboth dayes. The fifte: Honour thy Father. &c. But bycause these first foure preceptes pertayne vnto God, they must bée vnderstanded to be conteyned in the first table. The reste pertayneth to men, as to honour thy parentes, not to kill, not to commit fornication, not to steale, to beare no false witnesse, to couete nothing of thy neighbours. These sir commaundements séeme to be written in the seconde table, whereof the first is: Honor thy Father. &c. Thus much Ambrose.

So that I thinke it was very vnaduisedly done of some men, and peraduenture to euil purpose, to take vterly away this olde diuision of the Decalogus, which both the Grékes and Latin Church vsed, and to bring in a newe, wherein the seconde precepte against Images and grauen things, to the great hurt of ỹ church of Christ, was taken away, and the last deuided into two. Thomas and suche like, doe pretende the authoritie of Augustine. As thoughe one place of Augustine ought to bée preiudiciall vnto all the rest of the Fathers, and them of most antiquitie: albeit hée had meant and wrytten in earneste, that the Decalogus shoulde haue bene so deuided. But what shal we say, when Augustine is manifestly contrary vnto himself, and in his Booke of Questions vpon the newe and olde Testament, in the seuenth Chapter, he followeth and setteth out the diuision of the other Fathers, which he refused in the place before recyted? I pray you, how is it reason that the authoritie of one man whiche agréeth not with him selfe, should be preferred aboue al others? And againe, if men dolike the authoritie of Augustine, why shoulde not he be liked rather in that wherein he agreeth with the rest of the auncient fathers, than in that which he wrote contrary to others, and also to himselfe? But that diuision wherby the second precept against Images was stryken out of the number of ỹ ten, agréed better with the time in which grauen Images were brought into the Church, than the other, in which that precept was kepte in. Wherefore it is conueniente, that leauing this mangled and corrupte diuision, crept in these later times for the Catholike vse, to so great a bondage of Thom. quæs.

Augu. contra vnto selfe.

Chriſtes

Chriſts Church, we folow the same which both the very order of the Decalogus requireth, and the olde writers also, so agreeably, both the Grekes and the Latines also, vsed moste Catholikely.

This we thought méet to note of the diuision of the Decalogus, which matter might séeme not to be of so great moment, as to cause so long a treatye, vnleße we were in those times, in which we are compelled either to admit a very noysome lawe and manifeſt errours, or els if we reprehende them, to be called heretikes, schismatikes, seditious men, enemies of the Church, forsakers of the truth, which be wordes very Catholike and méete for Church men. And yet I know, it auayleth little to the desire of Godly lyfe, to haue the righte number of the commaundementes of GOD obserued, and to kepe them euil. And there were no matter in it, though they were set forthe to the people, without any diuision at all, so that they were set forth wholy without any mägling, euen as they were giuen of God, and as they be comprised in the holye Scriptures: for the mangling of them, may serue for theyr purpose, which do wickedly defende the worshipping of Images.

The first commandement.

I am the Lord thy God, which brought thee out of the land of Egipt, out of the house of bondage, Thou shalt haue no other Gods in my sight.

This first peccept is not by order only the first, but also such, as without the obseruing of it, all the rest be to no purpose: For therin is comprehended the head of true religion, of true godlineße, and of all iuſtice.

The propoſition.

The propoſition of it is this: Israel thou shalt haue me alone for thy Lord God, and serue and worshippe me only. In this be two partes. One, that he calleth himself the God of Israel: the other, that he requireth of him that he embrace, obserue, worshippe, and honor him only for his God alone, with a sincere and faithfull hart. And this is the first member of that he sayth: I am the Lord thy God: the other member is that which he adioyneth, Thou shalt haue no other Gods in my sight.

The meaning of this precept.

The meaning of these wordes is I wil be thy God alone, and thy onely God. Thou shalt worshipp me alone and only, thou shalt depende only of me, thou shalt sticke only to me. For if ye enforce the wordes, it may be, that no man can accuse you that you haue any other God in the sight of this true and only God, and yet for all that, that you do not obserue and worshipp the true and only God, euen as you maye finde a woman which doth not obey and sticke faithfully to hir lawfull husbande, and yet can not bée proued of any adultery committed with others. Wherfore the mynde of this precept doeth not requyre this only of Israel, that hée shoulde abstaine from straunge Goddes, but that he shoulde also accomplish it in cleauing to his onely and true Lord and God. But let vs search the particularities of this precept.

VVhy this is the first precept.

I am the Existent.

I am the Lord thy God. Let vs obserue first that he sayth, I am the Lord. It is in the Ebrewe יהוה אורכי, that is: I am EXISTENT, that is: I am that Essence, by which and in which all things doe stande and be conserued. I liue, abide, and can doe all, containe and conserue all thinges, and by none other, nor of any other, nor in any other but by my selfe, of my selfe, and in my self. So in one worde is comprehended that diuine and omnipotent Essence, the vertue and efficacie of the true & only God, the beginning, conseruation and ende of all.

He can not be true God, which is not Iehouah.

Secondly, we muste marke that he doth adde, God: I am the Lord God, sayth he. We are admonished, that he can not be true God, which is not Iehouah. The worde Elohim wayed in it selfe, hathe the signification of power. But it is vsed for him, which as he is omnipotent, so he can also by his power conserue and deliuer all men from all euils, and defende and kepe them agaynst all that is against them. That power agréeth to no creature, but only vnto him, which is able to saye truely of hymselfe, that he is Iehouah. And therefore after he had sayde, I am Iehouah, he dyd well adde, Thy God.

How these thinges do serue to the mysterie of the holy Trinitie.

Thirdly, it is not to be passed ouer, that the plurall voyce אלהיך, that is, if you saye it properly, Thy Goddes, is ioyned with a pronoune singular, Ego, I: in déede this worde in forme of the plurall nombre, is vsed for the singular, and it is read, I am the Lord thy God. But with all, this speache doeth trimly agree to the misteric as wel of vnitie, as of the Trinitie in true Godhead. For as touching the Essence, there is only one Lord and true God Iehouah. He sayth not, We are the Lords: but, I am the Lord. Now bicause there be three persons of the true Godhead, he did omitte to say, I am Iehouah אלך, that is to saye, Thy God or thy Strog one: but I am Iehouah אלהיך that is, Thy Gods, or thy Strong ones. And that no man may say, that so there is made many Goddes, it is stayed by that which he sayth in the singular nombre, I Iehouah. Againe, that no man may so appoint the one Essence of God, that he should denie the Trinitie of persons, this point helpeth that he sayth in the plurall nombre, Elohim אלהיך.

This cle ad- for can.

That doeth simply I am the lord but I the thy God

Fourthly, we muste obserue, that he sayth not simply, I the Lorde God: but, I the Lord thy God. So the lawgiuer setteth out his authoritie and iurisdiction before his law, and not only this general authoritie whiche he hath ouer all nations of the Earth, but that speciall and singular iurisdiction also, whereunto he had the people of Israell, peculiarly elected and chosen, peculiarly also bonde vnto hym. We are admonished by this place, what is requisite to the power and authoritie of lawe making: and that is, that he which will make lawe to anye people, muste before al thinges declare that he is the Lord in déede to that people, to whome by lawefull authoritie he will prescribe what is to be done, and what to be auoyded. When that is so manifest that it can not be denyed, then there is lefte to the subiectes no excuse of disobedience. For these can not be put asunder,

der, the authoritie of Maiestie and iurisdiction in him that is Lord and master, and the dutie of obedience in them which be vnderlinges and subiectes. Wherefore as oft as we confesse him to be our Lord God, we do also testifie that we are subiect vnto his power & iurisdiction, and bonde to obey his commandementes without excuse.

VVhich haue brought thee out of the lande of Egypt, out of the house of bondage. It might séeme that there was authoritie ynoughe in that, that when he would giue them the lawe, he sayd: I am the Lord thy God. But for two very great causes he addeth this péece.

The one is, to shew them that it was declared by most plaine experience, that he was ỹ Lord their God, in that he brought them out from a most greuous and tyrannous bondage, for so he sayth: I am the Lord thy God, which brought thée out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondage: as though he had sayd, Which haue declared by most manifest argument, that I am thy God, for that with strong arme I haue deliuered and brought thée forth out of the house of Pharao, vnder whome you were subiect in most cruel bondage so many yeares. He might haue put him in remembrance of a clearer argument of his Godhead, and haue sayd: I am the Lord thy God, which made heauen, earth, sea, & all thinges which be in it. But he ment not that alone, to declare generally that he was God, but specially to proue that he was their God. And therfore he brought suche an argument of his Godhead, as did concerne the Israelites, to whom he shold giue preceptes. Nor he sayth not, Which made thée: for that was generall to them with al other creatures: but he ment to put them in remembrance of such a matter, whereby it should appeare by a speciall pointe and neuer heard of before, that he was their God, specially. So that to be any mans God, is to be his creator, redemer, deliuerer, and sauiour, so that God muste be knowen in strength & power of redeming. Thus we reade in Esay: And now this sayth the Lorde, which createth thée Jacob, and formeth thée Israel: Feare not, for I haue redemed thée. I haue called thy name, thou art mine. When thou passest by water, I wil be with thée, and the floudes shal not ouerwhelme thée: when thou walkest by fyre, thou shalt not be burned: For I am the Lord thy God, the holy one of Israel, thy sauiour, &c. See, that where he telleth he is the God of Israel, by and by he addeth, Thy sauiour. Yea and I redemed thée. And, I wil be with thée in waters, with thée in fyre, that thou be neyther ouerwhelmed with waters, neither consumed with fire.

VVhat it is to be any bodies God.

Esay. 43.

Israel was to be admonished of his olde bondage.

The other cause was, that the Israelites shuld be admonished of their olde bondage in Egypt, from whence they were deliuered: and that hauing in remembrance so great a benefite, they should faithfully stick vnto the Lord God their sauiour, and serue him: For what can be more right, than that being deliuered from tirannical bondage, they shuld serue, & with al their hart cleaue vnto their deliuerer and sauiour? So that God wold haue the remembrance of this deliuerie sticke in their mindes, that they should be grateful, and well bekow the benefite which they had receyued. Therfore he set in this particle into the Decalogue, yea and placed it in the very beginning of that whiche he woulde haue continually beaten into their heades. For lyke cause he ordeined vnto them the ceremonie of the Passeouer, that euery yeare by ỹ publik vse of it, they might be put in remembrance from whence & by whom they were deliuered. And it is not without good cause, that not only by this place and by the ceremonie of the Passeouer, this was beaten into their heads, but it was by Moses also told thē & bythe other prophetes, that they were deliuered frō this most greuous bondage, and as Moses calleth it, The yron furnace, to the intent they should neither forget their olde calamitie and wretchednes, neyther the benefite which they had receyued. For we are of that nature, that we do immediatly forget as well the miserie after it is once past, as also our deliuerie which we haue receyued. Therefore both are here wel thrust in. He sayth not only, Which brought thée out of Egypt: but he added, From the house of bondage. What manner of bondage that was, we may see in Exodus. And how sone they had forgotten it, we read in Numeri, when they sayd, Would to God we had dyed in Egypt. And, Why broughtest thou vs out of the land of Egypt? And in the Psalmes, They forgate his benefites. They forgate his workes.

Exod. 12.

Deut. 4.

Exod. 5.

Num 14. Numer. 21

Psalm. 78. Psalm. 106. He sayth not: which succoured thee when thou seruedst in Egypt.

Against we must note that he sayd not only, which succored thée when thou seruedst in Egypt: but which brought thée out of Egypt. It is some relief to them which are in bondage vnder a tyrant, that they may be more gentlye handled, and not vterly worne out and spente. He did that also (as we may reade in Exodus) in so muche, that the more they were oppressed, the more they grew and were multiplied. The like matter was that, that he did restrayne the harts of the midwiues with the affection of pitie, that they should not fede and serue the crueltie of Pharao, and slay the man children in the very byrth, but rather to saue them. So he succored them beyng yet in bondage. Yet he maketh no mention of this, but he putteth them in remembrance of that which was greater, saying: Which haue brought thée out of Egypt, out of the house of bondage. That is, which deliuered thée altogether, and toke thée out, not only from the bondage of Pharao, but also brought thée & all thyne out for euer, from the wicked and spiteful country, so that thou shalte neuer by any meanes be subiect againe to the bondage thereof, but be deliuered from it for euer.

We be admonished by this place, how much we ought to regarde, that we bee deliuered out of the house of bondage, first of Satan, and next of Antichrist. We are not yet entred into the dwelling of heauen, as neither the Israelites were brought into the land of Canaan, although they were brought out of Egypt: yet neuertheleste as ỹ noble benefit of God was layde before them in the beginnyng of this Decalogus, so this our deliuerance from the kingdome of Satan & of Antichrist, is exceedingly to be to be regarded and to be kept in remembrance. Consider how great a matter it is to be deliuered out of bondage. And also that he oftētimes charged them that they shoulde not returne againe vnto Egipt, lyke in Deuteronomie, Esay, and Jeremie. For what greater wrong can befall vnto the deliuerer, and lesse to be borne, than not only that men forget their deliuerie, but also returne vnto the house of bondage, from whence they were deliuered and brought away for altogither, & setting at light and contēning so great a benefit, not enforced by violence, but willingly of themselues, to the great rebuke & ignominie of the deliuerer? Wherfore it came to passe by moste iuste iudgement, that they were throwen out of the land of Canaan, & brought to Babylon, and so was this present monumēt blotted out, which brought thée out of Egipt: and turned into an other, that is, The lord liueth which brought out the children of Israell out of the land of ỹ North. &c. Wher of lyke in the Prophet Esay.

1. Sam. 8.

The fashiō of the bondage to kings.

Thirdly, we must also by the way examine, that he sayth not out of bōdage, but out of the house of bōdage. He calleth ỹ house of bondage. Pharaos house, the kings house. A verye conuenient speach to call the kings house, the house of bondage. Kings houses ought to be houses of protection, freedome and safegarde: but cōmonly they are growen vnto suche insolency, that they are become houses of bondage, tirannie, and of oppression. The Israelites when they desired to haue a king among them, according to the custome of all the Gentils, were warned of this matter by Samuel. This (saide he) shall be the priuilege of the king whyche shal be ruler ouer you: he shall take your and sons put them to his charets, and make him horsemen of thē, and diuers of his charettes, and shal make of them Captaines ouer thousands and hundreds, and to plow his grounde and reape his corne, and to make instruments of warre, and apparel for his charettes. And youre daughters he shall make deuisers of oyntments, cookes and bakers. And he shall take from you the beste of your fieldes, of your vyneyardes and Olines, & giue them to his seruants. And he shall take the tenth of your corne and of your wines for a rent, to giue his seruantes and his gelded men. And he shal take away the best of your men seruants and maide seruaunts, and yong men, and your asses, and put them to his worke. He shal take also the tēth of your shēp, and you shal be his seruāts. In these wordes of Samuel we see painted ỹ image of bondage to a king, as it were in a table. This bondage felte not only the Iewes, but the Romaines also oftentimes. And although they had thrust out the Tarquines, yet for al that they were neuer able, not vntil thys day, to shifte off the yoke of a kings bondage altogither. And the Iewes also after they had bene wel kepte downe in seruitude vnder the empire of the Romaines so many yeares, haue felte how mas they were, when they woulde none of the yoke of Christ, and cried out: We haue no king, but only Cesar.

Fourthly, there riseth a question, why God staied not his people in the lande of Canaan, that it might haue bene multiplied there, and not haue gone downe into Egypt, and be subiect to the house of bondage. Abraham was in the lande of Canaan, and after Abraham, Isaac also, and after him Iacob with his sonnes, before they went downe into Egypte. So that he might haue multiplied them there as well in Egypt, and thrust out the kings of Canaan, as he did afterwards, and so haue auoided the bondage of Egypt, and not haue néded to haue brought out his people with the distruction of so noble a kingdome.

Genesis. The cause of this is declared in these wordes of Genesis: Know thou sayth God to Abraham, that thy séd shall be a straunger in a lande that pertaineth not to them, and they shal kepe them in bondage, and entreate them euil foure hundred years. But the nation whom they shall serue, I will iudge, and after that they shall come away with greate substaunce. And thou shalt go to thy fathers and be buried in peace at good yeres. But in the fourth generation, they shall returne hither againe. Thus is the Prophecie of the bondage in Egypt to come. Nowe heare the cause. For the wickednes of the Amorites saith he, is not yet ful at this present time. Therfore God would not at ỳ tyme expell the Amorites and the other people of the lande of Canaan, and therin multiply the Israelites, for ỳ that, the wickednesse of the Cananæs was not yet ripe to distructiō. Therfore it behoued ỳ Israel shold go into Egypt a lande not their owne, vntil the malice of the lande of Canaan were full accomplished, and so yéld vnto their expulsion.

Againe, some man wil say: Could not he haue brought to passe, that the Israelities shoulde not haue bene in no bondage in Egipt, & bene brought awaye not againste the Egyptians willes, but with their consente and good will? I answere. Both might haue bene, but none of them both liked. For firste there was matter and occasion gotté to glorifie his name. I will be (sayd he) glorified in Pharao. Secondly, Israel wastried with veration and trouble in a strange lande, to make him crie more hotly to the Lorde his God, and that he shoulde more gredely embrace the deliuerie that was to come: and trie also in déede by experience, that he had a God for his deliuerer and sauiour. For we be of that nature, that in welth we runne at large, and that we make light of his continuall benefits, when there is no trouble sent before, or entermingled.

Fiftly, bycause this parcel wherein he saith, Whiche brought thée out of Egipt, out of the house of bōdage, pertaineth not vnto vs Gentiles whiche beléue in Christe: let vs sée what we may thinke of this place, and searche whether we be not also deliuered from some kinde of bondage, wherof the figure passed before in the captiuitie of Egypte. I finde here two sortes of bondages, one vnto sinne, another to Satan. And surely ech of them doth for many causes exceede that of Egypt in wayghtye greuousnesse. Of the bondage of sin, there is the testimony of Christ: He that doth sinne, is the bondeman of sinne. Of this bondage sée in our cōmentaries vpon John. Of the bondage to Satan, Paul maketh mention, when he saith: If that God at any time wil giue them repentance to know the truth, and that they maye come to themselues againe out of the snares of the Diuell, by whom they be holden captiue at his wyll. And in the seconde chapter to the Ephesians. From both kinde of bondages we be deliuered of God by his sonne Christ Iesu our Lorde and sauiour. Of the deliuerie from sin, the Aungel spake vnto Ioseph: He shall deliuer his people from their sinnes. And Christ himselfe saith, if the son deliuer you, ye be frée in déed. Of the deliuery from the kingdome of Satan Christ spake: When a strong man armed: watcheth his house, the things which he possesseth are in rest & peace. But whē a stronger than he commeth vppon him, and ouercommeth him, he taketh from him al his armure and deuideth his goods. And the Apostle to the Colossians: He that deliuered vs from the power of darknesse, and hath translated vs into the kingdome of his wel beloued son. Wherfore we must not thinke, but that it hath bene by as plaine experiment declared vnto vs, that God is our Lord and redemer, as it was vnto the Iewes. For how much greter that the bondage of sin and Satan is, than was the bondage of Egypt, by so much clearer argument we be assured, that God is our redemer and sauiour. Wherfore ỳ monuments of our deliuerie are set forth vnto vs, not only in the word of the Gospel, but also in the publike ceremonie of ỳ Lords supper. First, least we shuld forget so great a god turn: Secondly, to the entent we shoulde giue our selues alwayes to the will and seruice of our deliuerer: Thirdly, that we neuer return into Egypt, that is to say, that we despise not the benefit of so great a deliuerie, & slip backe vnto the kingdome of sin and Satan, to the contumely of our sauiour, and of his bloud shedde for vs. For if we slip back againe and distaine the heauenly grace with so detestable contumely and shamefull rebuke, such as can not be clensed away, it can not be with vs as it was with the Iewes, that can not saye, The lord liueth, which hath brought vs out of hel fyre, the fire that can neuer be quenched, as the Iewes coulde say: The Lord liueth, whiche brought vs out of the lande of the north. Loke vpon the firth and tenth chapter to the Hebrues, but we shal be kepte in perpetuall bondage and captiuitie of Satan, without al hope of a seconde redemption.

Our care is other than the Egiptians vvas.

Thou shalte not haue other Goddes in my sight. We must obserue here, that he saieth not alone, Thou shalt haue no strange Gods: but he addeth, In my sight. A man may sin in the worshipping of God thrée manner of wayes.

Three vvaies man may sin in vvorship. ping of God.

1 The first is, when they whiche be no Gods, be worshipped in stéde of the true and only God. That way the Ethnickes did commonly sinne, of whose errours loke in the booke of Wisdome.

Sapi. 13.

2 Secondlye, when the true and onely GOD in déede is worshipped, but not rightlye according vnto hys wyll, but by superstition, and some kynde of worshippyng inkituted by men: whiche Christ warneth vs to bée euill, reciting the sayings of the Prophete in Mathew 15.

Mathew, saying: In vaine they worship me, teaching the doctrines and commaundements of men. For to serue God is none other thing, but to obey his will, whiche he setteth forth vnto vs not to be aimed at, but expressed and certainly to be knowē by his worde. This worship is acceptable vnto him. In my iudgemēt it were farre wide, if a seruant wold serue his maister as he list himselfe, & not according to his maisters will. Let my maisters of the Popery loke to it, which measure the worship of God by ceremonies instituted of mē whilest they had rather stande in the fotesteps of their fathers, than follow the word of God.

The common fault of Papistes.

3 Thirdly, when the true God in deede is worshipped, but not alone and only, as they do which togither with ỹ true God worship also others. This kinde of sinne he doth nowe enuey in the beginning forbid, saying: Thou shalt haue none other Gods in my sight. And see howe he speaketh: He sayth not Thou shalte haue no counterfayte Gods before me, least if any be supposed to be true Gods they should not seeme to be misliked by this law, as though he did forbid that false Gods shoulde be worshipped in his sight, being the only God, and refused not the true God. Therfore he sayde expressely: Thou shalt haue none other Goddes, or strange Goddes in my sight. As though he had said: Whatsoeuer they be, whether they seeme true Gods or false, they shall haue none other Gods in my sight: So he hath cut of the whole disputation that might rise of the true or counterfayte Godheade of our Gods. If any be a counterfeit God, euen therefore he is not to be worshipped nor to be matched with the true God, bicause he is counterfeyte. If any seeme to be the true God, yet we may not worshippe him whiche profesſe one true God, and that one alone. Euen as a mā might say vnto his wife, of one that is not a very man, for as muche as he is not a man, he is not meete for marriage, and therefore not to be matched with thée as thy husbande. And if he be a very mā in dēed, yet thou maiest not ioyne him with me, for I am thy husbande only. Now take this with all to, that he sayde not, Thou oughtest not to haue, but thou shalte not haue other Gods in my sight. As though he sayde: Eyther I wil not be thy God, or else thou shalte haue none other Gods in my sight. Thou shalt haue me alone, or others without me. With others thou canst not haue me. If any man meruaile of the Romaines, which vsed to receiue and serue al the Goddes of the Prouinces, which they subdued vnto their dominion, why that when they had ouercome Iurie, they did not also worship this the true God of Israel: The cause is ready. They could not worship him, vnlesse they would set at nought all other Gods. For they vnderstode, that euery God is so to be worshipped, as he liketh himselfe. They knew ỹ the God of Israel was gelous, and would not be worshipped with others. And they wold not refuse so many gods for one, for they did loke to haue more helpe at many Gods, than at one. They thought that if all the rest should be miscontēt for their refusal, one could not be able to withstande them al. Therefore fore they left the one, and fell still to the worshipping of the rest.

That he doth not say Thou shalt haue no counterfayte Gods, but Thou shalt haue no other Gods before me.

Secondly, it is to be considered also, what is the cause, that God will not be worshipped with other Gods: and therefore requireth his people to refuse al others, and to worship him alone and only.

1 The first cause is, bicause it were a wrongful matter, that a falsehod shoulde be coupled with a truth. In the true God, there is a truth of godhead, & there is a falshod in the counterfayte. So that it is a very greate contempte of the truth, to worship it togither with a falsehod.

2 The second cause is, the reason of the vnitie, whereunto to adde any thing in Godhead, is not to adde but to withdrawe from it. For it is not encreased with multiplying, but minished: nor worshipped by adding vnto it, but dishonored. God as he is true, so he is only, hauing none equal: as by the fellowship of the false, his truth is blemished, so by the associating of any other whatsoeuer he bée, his vnitie is decayed. The nature of multiplication of an vnitie in erthly things, is far different in this point, for it may by multiplication be encreased, enriched and strengthened. Adam appeared but one, and was alone. He might by doubling be multiplied, & by multiplying increased. Therfore it was sayd: It is not good for man to be alone. But of God we must iudge quite contrarye. He encreaseth not by multiplication, but minisheth.

3 The thirde cause is, the omnipotencie of the Godhead, or if ye wil, ỹ full sufficiencie of all things in him, for which he is called אל שדי. By this he is only sufficient in al things, he hath not nede of helping Gods, by whose fellowshippe he shoulde be ayded to giue sufficiently to his people such things as be necessarie. He alone hath all power, all sufficiencie, all knowledge to doe all thinges. For as the sunne hath no nede to be holpen of the company of any other lightes, to giue lighte to the world: and as one soule is ynough to kepe life and to gouerne the bodye, so is one God alone sufficiente to his people, yea to all the worlde, for all things abundantly, without the help of any other. Therefore there can be no other God ioined with him, without great ignominie and slaunder.

4 The fourth cause is, his faith, godnesse and loue towardes man, wherby he is alwaies at hand with his people, & giueth them more than they dare aske.

5 The fyft is the loue and zeale whereby hée is so affectioned vnto his people, that he can not abide if they ioine any other louer vnto him, and part the faith due only vnto him, with others. For these causes I thinke it manifest, that it is moste right that he require this faith of his people, that they worshippe hym alone, and associate none other God vnto him.

Thirdlye, it is to be demaunded, why euen in the beginning of the Decalogus he setteth this law in the tables of the couenaunt. This is not without some certaine cause. The first is, bycause the principall point of the couenaunt, standeth in the vprightnesse of thys fayth, whiche being broken, all is broken. For there is like reason in a couenaunt, as in wedlocke.

Why he did set this lavv euen in the beginning of the commandemēts.

wedlock. For as it is ỹ chief & principal part in the law of wedlock, & before al required of the wife that she kepe this fayth to hir husband, that she admit no other man in his sight, vnlesse she will be refused as an aduoutresse: so this is the chief point in the couenant of God, that we sticke vnto him onely and alone, or else to be vtterly put out from the couenãt. And as the aduoutresse woman hath no more to do with hir husband, nor wyth anye thing of his, for bycause of the transgression of this principal law and couenant, and the breach of the faith of wedlock: so they haue no more to doe in the couenant of God, whiche by worshippe of other Gods haue broken the chiefe pointe thereof, and losed the fayth dewe vnto one God alone. Wherfore the tables of this couenaynt pertayne not vnto them, as prescribed to that people onely which with a pure and sincere fayth cleaueth stedfastlye to one only God.

2 The second cause concerneth the disposition of this people, which was maruellously giuen to the worshipping of other Gods, as they dyd oftentimes afterward declare in deed.

3 The third cause, is to be referred to ỹ custome, whereby the Israelites were vsed before in Egypte to the worshipping of other Gods, so that it was an easy matter, to that which they wer vsed and accustomed vnto. Wherfore me thinketh, God did in this matter, like as if a man wouldе take to his wife a common woman out of ỹ stewes, and wouldе first of all prescribe vnto hir in this sorte: If thou wilte abide in this felowshippe of our wedlocke, firste it is necessarie, that thou abstain from al other men, and kepe the fayth of wedlocke whole and vnbroken only to me, els thou canst not be my wife, nor I thy husbande, if thou do with me take others, and returne vnto thy accustomed filthinesse of whordom. And that Israell serued straunge Gods in Egypt, we may se in the lasse of Iosue, where we reade in this sorte. Take awaye the Gods whiche your fathers serued in Mesopotamia and in Egypte, and serue the Lorde. So that for these causes, this lawe was not for noughte sette in the beginnyng of the Decalogus, whiche would God that they which be the heades in Churches Churche, woulde thoroughly loke into, and wouldе well compare therewithall, not onely that outwarde worshippings which they vse nowe a dayes, but also that whiche they call their catholike faith.

Against the vvorshippe of dead Saints.

NO man can denay, vnlesse he be shameleſſe, but that the multitude of Patrones and defensiue Saintes, as we may call them, is in like reputation and honour nowe in the Church, as ỹ multitude of Gods was among the Gentiles.

And that it is proued firste by the very inuocation of deade Saintes, when sicke men, prisoners, menne in shippewrackes, and all other necessities, desire ayde of them. And GOD crieth in the meane season: Call vpon me in the day of thy trouble, and I will deliuer thee. But he crieth in vaine.

Secondlye, it is proued also by theyr worshipping of Saintes, framed much like to the fashion of that worshipping, wherwithall the Gods of the Gentiles were worshipped. Of whiche thyng if any man liste, let him se our commentaries vppon the .16. Psalm. Here no man careth that Christ saide: Thou shalte worship the Lord thy GOD, and serue him alone. But the Sainte seruers haue excuses in siune, whereby they do horryblye defende so manifest a transgression of this lawe. For this sinful fleshe of ours, hath euer somewhat wherewithall as it were with an aparne patched togither of figge leaues to couer hir filthinesse.

1 Firste, they saye wee doe not worshippe Saintes as Goddes. We knowe they be not Gods. Whiche is al one, as if the aduoutresse should say: I take not my louer for my husbande. I knowe he is not my lawful husbande. And yet though she say so, yet she doth the same things vnto hir louer, whiche are due onely vnto hyr husbande. So they doe worshippe Saintes, giuing them the worshippe whiche agreeth onely to God: and whiles they confesse that the Saintes be not Goddes, they doe manifestlye accuse themselues, that they worshippe them whyche be not onely straunge, but also false Goddes.

2 Secondly they saye, they worshippe God in his Saintes. For it is written: Praise God in his Saints. So saide also the learned men of the Ethnikes, that they worshipped but one God of the furnished Gods. But God will not be so worshipped in any of his creatures. And it is two things to say, Prayse GOD in hys saintes, That is, for his saintes. And to worship and cal vpon saints. But touching the place of the Prophete in the .150. Psalm. Firste it is not spoken in the plural number. In his saints, but in the singular, that is in his holy or in his sanctuarie. Secõdlye, the worshipping of Saintes can not be proued thereby, vnlesse wee will say also that the firmament is to be worshipped, bycause it followeth immediatly, Prayse him in the firmament of his strength.

Psalm.150.

3 Thyrdly, they say, The saintes haue receiued power of God to help vs, witnesse their signes and miracles which they do. Yet it followeth not, that though the Saintes in deed did miracles after their death, that therefore they should be worshipped. Loke in the .14. of the Actes, how the Apostles of God reiected this worship offred vnto them, after they had done a miracle. Besides that, what can we say vnto the Ethnikes, which do pretende the same excuse for the worshipping of their Saintes, and are able to colour the worshipping of them with miracles?

Of signes & miracles done for the inuocation of Saynctes.

4 Fourthlye, there is no reason in that they say, that the Goddes of the Gentiles were Diuels, euil and wicked men, but we worship the holy. For we may wel charge them againe: Yet ye worshippe menne not to be worshipped, though they be Saintes. Loke vppon Augustine in the .49. Epistle to one called Dei Gratias.

The Gods of the Gentils vvere Diuels: vve vvorship God in saints.

5 Fiftly, they say, we worshippe them not as Goddes, but call vpon them as intercessors. I answere:

VVe vvorship them not as Gods but cal vpõ them as intercessors.

Where-

Wherefore then doe you builde them temples? why do you set vp their Images and Aultes? why do you appoint them feast dayes? why do you make vowes before their images? you offer them rewardes, you hang vp your presents, you light candels, and do all things else which the Gētiles did before in the worshippe of their Gods. And what nede haue they of any intercessours, which are reconciled with God by the bloud of his Christ? Be you sinners? Then returne to God by Christ & amende, that the saying of Iohn maye take place in you: If anye man sinne, we haue an aduocate with the father, Iesus Christ, he is the propitiation for our sinnes, and not for our sinnes alone, but for the sinnes of the whole worlde. And what can be said of them which doe boast of their state of perfection, as Monkes, Friers and other cloister creepers, & such as are perswaded as the simple sorte be, that they purchase full forgiuenesse of sinnes, when they confesse themselues to the Priest? Do not they then call vppon Saints? Yes, for they say, that if they repent not, the Saints wil not heare them neither. Besides that, howe doe the Saintes heare them, whiche doe crie vnto them and worshippe them? But for these excuses of the Papistes, lette the reader sée what is noted in my commentaries vppon Matthew.6.

1. Ioan.

Finally, some men doe giue vs to vnderstand, that not onlye the worshipping of Saints is contrarie vnto this lawe, but also what so euer is more loued than God, what so euer is more worshipped thā God, what so euer is more feared than God, what so euer is more painefully serued than God, is in verye déede in steede of a straunge God, when it is afwel, I wil not say more, loued thā God. Therefore the Apostle calleth auarice, Idolatrie. And so the bellie is also called some mens God of the Apostle. So may worldly power and friendes be placed for Goddes, when men truste more vnto them, than to God.

VVhat so euer is loued or worshipped aboue God, is a counterfait God. Colos.3. Phil.3.

Wherefore to say briefly, as God in this lawe doth appointe himselfe wholly vnto vs, and doth promisse vs al that pertaineth to the true and one only God, when he saith, I am the lord thy God, thou shalt haue no other Gods in my sight: so doth hée on the other side require of vs to depende only vpon him with a sincere and full truste, with firme and perfect obedience, and not to deuide the faith & loue of our hart, but to consecrate our selues altogither vnto him: and to declare it not onlye in beléeuing and confessing with the mouth, but also in calling vpon him in our troubles, and in seruing of him and worshipping him through out al our life.

The second commandement.

Thou shalt make thee no grauen image neither anie similitude of anie thing that is in heauen aboue, either in the earth beneath, or in the waters vnder the earth.

The second precepte commeth to good purpose to be added to serue to the other before. For the first precept forbiddeth that whordome with straunge straunge Goddes, whereunto all the Gentils were giuen: and the Israelites likewise when they were in Egypt. This whoredome was vsed, encreased, and continued by their deuice of making, decking, setting vp, and worshippyng of images. This was the common custome of all nations. That the Israelites perceyued in Egypt, and did not onely perceiue it, but did apply themselues also vnto it. And in outwarde apparance it séemed reason not to varie in the worship of God, frō the vniuersal custome of al nations. So the wisdome of the flesh, ready vnto idolatrie, doth prompte vs. Therfore seing the daūger was great, as wel in consideratiō of their old custome, as also of the iudgement of the blinde flesh, least they should go aboute to worshippe straūge Gods, or els ỳ Lord their owne God, after the fashion of the Gētils, with worship of images, as appeared after in the caulf which they set vp: This precept was added, wherein is commaunded, they shal in no case of religion make any image grauen or molten.

So that this precept is knit vp in three members. The first member is, in that ỳ he saith: Thou shalt make thée no grauē image. The second in that, Thou shalt not worship them, nor serue them. The thirde, in those words, whiche he added to perswade them, or rather to behoote thē, which is, I am the Lorde thy God, strong and ielouse.

Deut.4.

First therefore the verye making of images is forbidden: where he saith, Thou shalt not make thée any grauen Image, & for bycause it shall not be meante of grauen images alone, there is added, nor any similitude, that is anye likenesse, whether it be painted, or grauen, or made of fusible and molte stuffe. And least there might by the general speache be any corner founde for the fleshlie man to imagine some exception against it, he putteth also the specialties, wherein are vniuersallye comprehended all creatures of al sortes, when he sayth: Nor any similitude of those things whiche be in heauen aboue, or in the earth beneath, or in the waters vnder the earth. &c. So he comprehended all things. For what soeuer is in any place, it is eyther in heauen, either in earth, either in the water. By heauen is vnderstanded the ayre and cloudes. And Moyses doth himselfe in the. 4. of Deuter. by specialitie set forth that which is in this place comprised, in foure wordes, after the order of a lawe, and sayth there therefore, loke carefully vnto your soules. That day when the Lorde spake vnto you in Oreb out of the middes of ỳ fire, you sawe no likenesse of any thyng, least you might be deceiued, & make your self a grauē image, or an image of a man or of a womā, the likenesse of any beast which is vpon the earth, or of any birde whiche flieth in the ayre, or of any creeping thing whiche moueth in the erth, or of fishes whiche abideth in the waters vnder the earth: & least peraduenture you lifte vp your eies to heauen & sée the Sun & the Mone, and all the Starres of heauen, and maye mistake the matter, & worship & serue those things, which God created to ỳ seruice of al people that be vnder heauē. So that by those things which are in heauē, is vnderstanded the sunne, the mone and the starres, and by those things that be vnder heauen, the birdes: by earthly things, men, cattel, beasts, & things that creepe: and by that that is in the sea, fishe and any thing else which liueth in the waters, by what name so euer it be called. So Moses doeth refute the making of images by an exposition agreeing vnto Gods lawe, when he sayth: Least peraduenture you be deceyued, and make you some grauen likenesse: & he teacheth withall by specialties, that all kynde of images are forbidden.

The secõd member that images ought not to be vvorshipped.

In the seconde membre is forbidden the seruice and worship of Images: wherby a man may vnderstand, that it is not only forbidden that we shal not make our selues images, but also that we ought not to serue and worship such as be made by others, because the flesh which hath euer an excuse redie, should not say: I made not these images, I dos but worship thē which were made by others. And he hath two wordes, wherin he comprehendeth al idolatrie. Wheras we read, Thou shalt not worship it, is in Ebrue, Thou shalt not bow thee vnto thē. And where it foloweth, Thou shalt not serue thēit is, לא תעבדם. And that worde עבר signifieth to serue any thing in working as men were wonte to worke the fieldes and the Gardens. By the word of bowing, is vnderstanded that humble adoration and inuocation, whiche is done eyther by bowing of the whole bodye, or by bowing the knée, or by inclining the heade. The worde of Seruice, is taken for all that seruice of images, which is done vnto them when they be decked with Golde or Siluer, set vp in holy and hie places, honored religiously, carefully serued, with vows, tapers, presēts, offrings, temples, aulters, titles, feast dayes, rites, and ceremonies. And bycause all idolatrie doth consysse in humble worshipping and ceremonious seruice of Images, therefore was placed these two wordes of Worshipping and Seruing, in which al kinde of impiety is comprehended and forbidden. Origen doth refer worshipping to the outwarde manner of honor, and seruing vnto the affection of religion: and sayth, that we are forbidden, that neither wée must worshyppe them in outwarde kynde, nor serue them in affection.

The vvorship of images.

Thirdly, the cause is also added, which might moue the people of god with all diligence to beware of idolatrie. I am sayth he, the Lorde thy God, strong, and ielous God: (for it is in the Ebrew אל קנא which we may reade either the strong ielous, or the ielous God) visiting the wickednesse of the fathers vpon the children, vnto the third and fourth generation, of them that hate me: and doing mercy vnto thousandes of them that loue me, and kepe my commandemēts. This reason added to moue and perswade, is two handed, cōtayning both greuous threatnings of auengement, and promise of his singular and perpetuall goodnesse. In respect of his threatnings of auengemēt, he saith that he is strong, ielous, and can not abide that the people of Israel shall turne the faith due vnto him vnto creatures, but wil reuenge that whoredome in the thirde and fourth generation, of them that hate him. And whereas he sayth, And doing mercy vnto thousandes of them which loue me, & kepe my commaundements: it is to be referred vnto the promise of his speciall goodnesse. For like as to visite the wickednesse vnto the thirde and fourth generatiō, declareth a vehemencie of feruente zeale and displeasure against ỹ trāsgressors and breakers of couenaunt: so to do mercie vnto thousandes, expresseth an infinite good will of Fatherly fauoure towardes the obediēt and Godly. Some of the Hebrewes expounde this parcell, Vnto thousandes, after many times, and not streyght way in this life, but referre it vnto the felicitie of the worlde to come. But this exposition is farther fette, than is méete for the simplicitie of the wordes. For euerye man knoweth, that to visit the wickednes is nothing else, but to punishe the wicked, according vnto their deserts: and to doe mercy according vnto the meaning and vse of the Scripture, is plainely to doe good, specially in this place, where it is in the Ebrew ישעיה חסר, ỹ is to saye, and doing Gentlenesse & goodnesse. Hitherto we haue expounded the text of this precepte. After this let vs sée what is particularly to be obserued therein.

Thou shalte make thy selfe no grauen Image. Herevpon riseth a question, of what kinde of grauing this precepte is to be vnderstanded: whither a mannay in no wise make neither in painting, nor in grauing, nor in fusible metal, no image at a': bycause the cōmaundement to the people of God runneth thus, Thou shalt not make thy selfe any grauen image, or any likenesse, &c.

Three opinions of images.

1 There be of this matter three opinions. Some do holde, that there is no manner of image to be made, not only in religion, but for no prophane vse neither. In that sorte they say, the Turkes do vse no Images. Which appeareth by their money, in which we sée nothing but Arabike letters: and likewise in their carpets is founde no imagerie of anye beast or of man. This opinion is ouer superfitiōs to be alowed. Neyther did Salomon vnderstande it so, for if he had, he would not so haue decked hys throne with the images of olde and yong Lions.

2 Others do not millike the vse & arte of making images in prophane matters: but millike to haue them brought into churches and into religion. And so farre forth they meane that the vse of images is forbidden to Gods people.

3 Againe, ther be some which do not disalowe ỹ Images be brought into the Churches, so that they be not honored and worshipped. And they take this place, Thou shalt not make thy selfe any grauen Image or likenesse &c. to be meant of those images whiche be set forth to do honor and seruice vnto, bycause in the firste commaundement there is mention made of straunge Gods, and he addeth straight waies: Thou shalt not worship them, nor serue them. Therfore they iudge ỹ it is not vnlawful altogither to haue images in the church: and that they doe not amisse whiche make them.

4 With thē I cānot agrée in iuggement: for they marke not wel the intent and meaning of God in this sorōd precept: nor thei he not meued, a:

they ought to be with this inexcusable abuse of images and so manifest an idolatrie: whiche had neuer crept into Christs Church, if ỹ whole vse of images had bene kepte out of it. They talke of many things that be lawfull: but by ỹ way, they do not earnestly examine that place of S. Paul, All things be lawfull to me, but all things be not expediēt. They alleage also, I wote not what, of the profite whiche the simpler sort taketh of Images, beyng to them in steade of bookes. And they be so blinde, that they see not that it is so farre wide that the vse of Images maye profitte the symple and vnlearned in the Churches, that none be more vehemently hurt by them than they.

The last opinion is reproued.

1. Corinth. 5

VVhat harme cōmeth to the vnlearned of the vse of images. Sap. 14.

1 Firste, the verie sighte of them doth allure the simple to worshippe them, whereunto our fleshe through the corruption of it is halfe giuen of it selfe. So we reade in the booke of Wisedome, that ỹ creatures of God, through the vse of Images, be made temptations to the soules of men, and a trappe to the fēte of the vnwise, for as much as the seeking out of Images, is the beginning of whoredome, and the finding of thē is ỹ corruption of life. And in ỹ 15. chapter it is ascribed to images, that they leade into errour, and that their worke is without fruite, and that by their sighte alone they sturre a desire in the foolishe.

Augustinus epistola ad Deo Gracias

A like matter is it also that Augustine writeth: And who is it (saith he) that doubteth that images haue no sense? Yet for all that, when they be placed in the high seates of an honorable heygth, so as they may be marked of them whiche pray and do sacrifice, though they haue nor sense nor soule, yet by the verye similitude of liuely members and senses, they do so moue the weake harts of men, that they seeme to liue and breath, especially whē the multitude doth worship them, and that there is therewith so greate and godly seruice, as of God, yelded vnto them. Thus farre Augustine. Wherin we see manifestlye, that it is attributed vnto images to moue exceedinglye the weake harts by the likenesse of liuely members: and therefore they can not be without daunger set before them, whose bookes they suppose them to be, specially if they be set in high places and of honour, where prayers and exercise of religion is wonte to be. Euen so there be set vp in the Temples of the Papistes not only painted images, in ỹ windowes and walles, but also grauen and cast of mettal, and that with maruelous deuice set forth to the quicke, decked in colours, Gold, and siluer, euen vpō the very Aulters. And of this what is become, we haue experience therof to our great hurt and shame: that it is not for nought that ỹ images be vtterly taken awaye out of al our Churches, and that Godly men nēd not to be ashamed, that of them whiche worshippe Images, they bē called Image breakers: but they ought rather to be ashamed, whō we may cal, Image makers, and idolaters. There is no scripture that blameth idoll breakers, but in euerye place it blameth idol makers.

2 Secōdly, these prostitute images openly set vp in the churches do this harme, that they do withdraw mens mindes hanging vpō them from the consideration consideration of Gods Maiestie shewed in his liuely Creatures: whiche be yet alwayes readye to be seene, wheras ỹ things are not the workes of God, but of men, not to be had in euery place, but in corners, and hidde within walles. The liuely worke of Gods handes and made vnto Gods glorie, doth not moue the myndes of them: whiche gape and be fonde after images: but the deade worke of mans handes: wherin is also shewed great art, cōmending the vaine and vnprofitable cūning of the artificer, doth moue them much. They can see a liuing mā without the consideratiō of the maker, without any affection to praise Gods maiestie. They can not see the dead image of a dead mā, but immediatly their minde is stirred, I can not tel with what religiō. Suche manner of things are these bookes of images set vp to lay men. And whiles we do so, we be without the Churche, deafe, blinde and vnsensible to all the workes of God. The Prophet sayth: the heauens declare the glory of God, & the firmament telleth the worke of his handes. But where be the eares of these image worshippers, with which they might heare the voyce of the workes of God, telling ỹ glorie of their maker? Where finde ye one that thinketh vpon this matter? Whereof cōmeth this stockishnesse? Surely of this, ỹ they be so persuaded (poze mē) and so accustomed, ỹ they can not be deuoutly disposed but before aulters & images. For they haue shut vp al godly deuotiō into their tēples, & tied their worshipping vnto aulters and images, and the worshipping therof.

They spend those thinges, which ought to be giuen to the liuely images of Christ.

3 Thirdly, they bestow vpon dead and idle images those things which ought to be employed vpon the poze & nedy, ỹ liuely images of god. Some one wil waste a hundred crownes to dresse & trim vp images, and scarsly giue one halfpeny to hungry Christ. And in this doing the hartes are so possessed with such blinde perswasiō, that they thinke they doe God exceeding high seruice, if they bestowe a great deale vpon the furnishment of images: and are not of like minde when they shoulde succour the necessities of the poze. And there is no cause of hope that this madnesse can be sequestred from the Church, vnlesse togither with the abuse, the grounde and nourishment of this errour may be taken away.

The place of Clemēt.

Let thē yet read ỹ which is supposed that Clemēt in his. 5. book wrote to James the brother of the lord: If ye wil truly (sayth he) honor ỹ image of God, we opento you that which is true, to do good, to exhibite honor & reuerence to the man whiche is made like to the image of God, minister vnto him meate when he is hungry, drinke when he is drie, clothing to ỹ naked, aide the sick, herbor ỹ strāger, and helpe the prisoner with his necessities. And it foloweth: What honor is that to God, to runne about to these images of stockes and stones, & to worshippe the deade and vnliuely shapes as Gods, & to despise man, in whom is the image of God in deed? Knowe ye therefore, that this cometh of the perswasion of the inwarde Serpente, lurkyng within you, whiche maketh you beleue, that you may serue Godly, when you worshippe these things vnsensible: and that you be not wicked when you hurt men which haue lese and vnderstanding. Hereto Clemēt. This I thought mete to note, against them which pretende in this matter that it is good and lawfull to vse images in the Church: yea and that it is also profitable for ỹ instruction of the vnlearned: so that we maye see what an inconuenience it is to reaso of the lawfulnesse, in a matter so daungerous, and to pretende a certain blind profitte to come of it, whereas we haue proued it (the moze pitie) quite contrary, by the pernicious and long experimente of a greate sozte of ages. So that if we had no commaundement foz it, yet we oughte to be admonyshed by the greate harme thereof, that it is not expedient that any Images and poztraytures shold be set fozth in the church to the sight of ỹ vnlearned, although the thing were lawfull and indifferent. But nowe seeing it is by manifest precept of God fozbidden, not onlye that we shall not honoz and wozshyp, but also that we shall not make any image oz similitude foz religions sake: Howe shall our Bishops and these great disputers and takkers excuse so foule & detestable idolatrie, before Christ our sauiour: which by their trifles broght in ỹ vse of images into the Church: Why do they not beleue Athanasius, whyche writeth in this sozte of Images, against the Gentiles. The deuise oz inuention of Images came not of good, but of euil, & whatsoeuer hath an euil beginning, cā be deemed in no thing good, being altogither nought.

Now that it is fozbidden to haue images in the Church of God, it is not our opinion alone, noz first begō in our time, but in others, and that is declared by the testimonie of auntient fathers. Jerome translated the Greeke epistle of Epiphanius into Latine, which he wzote vnto Johan the Bysshop of Jerusalem: wherein is wzytten thus: When we went together to the holy place, which is called Bethel, to make the gatheryng there with thē, accozding to the custome of the Churche: & came to the village which is called Anablatha, & saw there, as I passed by, a candell burning, & asked, what place it was, and vnderstood that it was a church, and went in to pzay, I founde there hanging at the same Church doze, a vayle stained oz painted, hauing the image as it were of Christe oz of some holy one. Foz I remember not wel, whose image it was. But whē I sawe this, that thē image of man honge in the Churche of Christ, contrary vnto the authozitie of Scripture, I tare it, & gaue aduisemēt rather to the kepers of that place to wzap in it and to cary to earth some pooze dead carkas. And a litle after. I pzay you charge your Pzistes of ỹ place to receiue ỹ vayle of this bzinger, which we haue sent: & cōmaunde them that from hence fozth no such vayles be hanged vp as be contrary to our religiō. Foz it becōmeth your wozship rather to haue suche a care how to rid away al scrupulositie, not māte foz the Church of Christ & the people cōmited to your charge. This is wzitten there, and therein these points are manifestly compzised:

1 First, that we ought to giue these things no place in Christs Church, which be againste the authozitie of holy Scripture.

2 Secondly, that it is against the authozitie of the holye Scriptures, namely of this lawe whiche saith, Thou shalt make to thee no grauē image, noz ỹ likenesse of any thing: to giue place to images in the Church of Christ.

3 Thirdly, ỹ not only these images & poztraitures grauē oz cast of mettal: set vp in high places, oz vppon Aulters, are vnlawfull in the Church of Christ, but generally all painted, as the same was whiche he saieth was painted in the vayle. Thē what shal we thinke of the great huge poztraitures & images set fozth with so great costes & honoz in the Churches, after the fashion of the Gentiles?

4 Fourthly, ỹ the image of Christ also is not lawfull to be had in the Church of Christ. Foz there is none other that bzingeth moze daunger withal of honoring & wozshipping.

5 Fiftly, that all images are to be rid out of the Church of Christe, not only by diligēt teaching, but also by doing out of hande.

6 Sixtly, that they ought to be pulled down and hurled away, not negligently and coldly but with an ernest zele of true religiō, not whole that they may be laide vp to serue againe, as it hath bene done in our time very vngodly, by some Euāgelical churches, not by the churches, but by the heades of them: but tozne and brokē to pieces, as this holy mā of God Epiphanius, when he had gotten the vaile with the image of Christ painted in it, he was skyzed with the zeale of God, and rent it, and caried it away.

7 Seuenthly, it behoueth the Bishops to beware, that no images be set vp in the Church of Christ. But now a dayes they do defende that with hande and fote, whiche their dutie were to take away.

8 Eightly, that the vse of images in the Churche of Christe, is a certaine scrupulositie (oz I suppose rather it should haue bene termed superstition) not māte foz the Church and faithfull people. Se how farre wide the iudgement of this Bishop was from them, whiche do iudge it profitable foz faithful people, to haue images of saintes, in the Churche. Let them wey wel this, which crieth still, The fathers, the fathers, let them loke whether it be not an honester matter to be image breakers, than image makers; and whether we come not nearer to the example of the olde Churche, than they, albeit that they boast themselues neuer so muche to be Catholicke and Apostolicall. Let them tell vs, I beseech you, what they thinke lacked in these Churches whiche Epiphanius was Bishop of, necessarie to the true building of true godlynesse. He was a Christiā bishop, he preched Christ the sauioure of the worlde, he beschowed ỹ misteries of his kingdome among his faithfull people, and builded vp the Churche of God without any Images of stocke oz stone, of brasse, Siluer, oz Golde, paynted, molte, oz grauen. Foz he followed the footesteps of the Prophetes and Patriarkes, of Christe and the Apostles, whiche all planted the true religion and wozshippe of GOD without images. And Augustine, although he did beare and suffered in other things somewhat with the errours of hys tyme, yet he well commended this in Marcus Varro, that he iudged the religion of God should be more purely obserued without images. For so he writeth of him in his fourth booke De ciuitate Dei cap.31. Wherefore (saith he) whereas they that iudge they only vnderstood what God was, which beleued that he was that liuing thing which gouerned the world: and that the religion of God is more purely obserued without images, who sees not how nie he came to the truth? This said Augustin. If Varro, a Heathen man, drewe nie to the truth, in that he thought the religion was then more purely obserued without images, good God, how farre be they from the truth, which iudge the contrarie? If they like not Varro, let them answere Lactance, who in his second booke of Godly institutions, in the nineteenth chapter hath thus: Ther is, saith he, no doubt but that there is no religion at all, wheresouer is an image. Againe. Whatsoeuer is counterfeyte, muste nedes be false: and that can neuer beate away the name of truth, whiche doth pretende a truth in coloure and imitation. So that if euery imitation be not the very thing in earneste, but as it were a ieste and a mocherie: there is no religion in images but only a play of religion. Thus saith he. Yea and Burgensis driue into it by the very plainnesse of ý words, doth confesse, that the Iewes were in the right, for that they perceyued there was forbidden by this precept not only to honor and worship, but also to make any image, although there were no intention ioined withal to honor and worship it. He saith, it appeareth by that, that is sayde:

Religion obserued moche chastly vvithout imahes.

Lactance. There can be no religion vvher is an image

Burgensis.

Thou shalt make thy selfe no grauen image, nor any likenesse, &c. and that it agreeth wel with the letter: and he doth reproue that in the Iewes, that they blame the Christian men for breaking this precepte in the vse of images, and euen streight he is contrarie vnto himselfe, and affirmeth ý it is not forbidde by this precept, that there shal be no images of creatures, vnlesse there be giuen vnto them the honor due to God. And to proue this opinion, he ioyneth this to ý firste precept, where is saide: Thou shalt haue no other gods in my sight and saith, that al these acts, although they be contrarie in themselues, yet they come to an ende, that is, to put away idolatrie. For else if the graung of one image without intention of worshipping it, were forbidden, it shoulde folowe that these wordes pertayne not to the firste precepte, but peraduenture ceremonially, to put away the occasion of idolatrie. And he addeth. And so suche a forbidding should be ceremoniall, and not binde in ý time of grace. I beseech you, how deserueth such a Comentor to be beleued, which in no long treatie, least his memory might seme to fail him, but in so short a note, doth immediatly ouerthrow ý which he graunteth and confesseth to be true, & goth about to confirme the contrarie, least hee should seeme to thinke or write any thing cõtrary to ý Catholike error. And whereas he goeth about to confirm his cõtradiction, by ý that these words, Thou shalt make thee no grauen image, &c. belongeth vnto ý firste precept, & that they doe make one cõmandement, how false a lye it is, it may be wel knowne of ý which we haue haue before noted of the diuision of this Decalogus. Unto that, that he sayth, These wordes haue a ceremonial prohibition, and so binde not in ý time of grace, if they pertayne not to the firste commandement. We aunswere: that hereby it is manifest ynough, that God wil not haue images to be vsed in his Church, least by the vse of them, though it be ceremoniall, the people may by little and little be brought to the honor & worshipping of them. And for that that he sayth of the time of grace: how vayne this difference is in the matter & vse of Images, alas, the thing it selfe hathe declared more clearer than the sunne, and doeth yet declare to our eyes euen this day.

Nor any likenesse of these things which be aboue in the heauen, or in the earth beneath, or in the waters vnder the earth. Here it is to be noted, how corrupt, wicked, and readye to all kinde of Idolatrie the heart of man is. He that made man, is not ignorant of his heart: and therefore is aptly called Cardiognostes, that is, the hart conner. So that when he perceyued that the harte of man was so vaine, foolish, blinde, and wicked, that there were nothing in heauen, nothing in the earth, nothing in the water, which he would refuse to worshippe, if it were religiously set forth: he iudged it necessarie to ioyne these specialties. And this might seeme to be our owne imagination, vnlesse the fondnesse and impietie of the Ethnikes, specially of the Egyptiãs, were manifest, which the Apostle did touch to the Romaines, saying: And they chaunged the glorie of the incorruptible God, into the likenesse of the image of a corruptible man, and of birdes, and of beastes, and of Serpẽtes. And againe: Because they changed the truth of God into lies, & worshipped and serued the creature rather than the creatour. So the olde Serpent mocked mankinde, that he gaue him affection of religiõ, not only to the images of heauenly things, but also of earthly things, and things of the water, of Serpentes, Dragons, Crocodils, and Fishes, as we reade of Dagon the idoll of the Philistians. Wherfore, whereas the people of Israel is here commanded by God, not to make him the image of any thing, not only of heauen, but also of the earth and water: nie thinketh it is a lyke matter, as if a husband doe charge his wife, that she stande not in the likyng of any forme or shape other than his, whether it be of men or beastes, and playe not the harlot with them. If a man shoulde giue his wife such a charge, it must nedes signifie a special and detestable disposition of whoredome to be in the woman, that she would not abstayne not from beastes. Who wold not abhorre so filthy a beastlinesse? Yet if we doe well consider, what that wãtonnesse of whoredom and idolatrie is, wherein the figures not only of men, but also of beastes, yea and that cruel, filthye, and poysonfull are set vpon holy altars to be worshipped: it shall appeare that the madde runnyng to idolatrie in our hartes is more detestable than the cõmon & vnbrideled whoredome of the woman, which fleeneth not only vpon men, but vpon beastes, that as we say in our prouerbe, she wil not driue away a dogge from hir. At that time whan the Israelites were slayne in the desert by the venemouse Serpentes, and God woulde set vp a remedie, by loking whereupon they that were bitten shoulde be made whole: to auoyde idolatrie, he commaunded there should be set vp the figure not of a man, but of a Serpent. And yet it came not so to pas, but that it was occasion of idolatrie. For as the Hystorie of king Ezechias doeth witnesse, the Israelites did after that sacrifice vnto that figure of the Serpēt.

The illusiõ of the olde Serpent.

A similitude.

4. Reg.

And there haue bene Christian men, which haue deuoutely worshipped a Serpent in stede of Christ, & were therefore called Ophites of our forefathers.

Ophites.

Therefore, seyng that the disposition of mans hart is so prone and proclyue to hoyng after images, they doe exceedingly offende agaynst the Church of Christ, which be the patrones and factours of images, in ministryng still so muche occasion, and feeding to this cuill so stiff sticking vnto vs, and condemneth them for Heretikes, which doe earnestly resiste the doarine in taking awaye of images. But if they did fyrste thoroughlye loke into the meaning and purpose of God in this seconde precept, and diligentlye marke the reason of this specialtie, where he sayth: Neither of the things in heauē aboue, neyther of that that is in the earth beneath, neyther of that which is in the waters vnder the earth, and if they woulde regarde not only the Hystories of all the Gentils, but also of the Christians, as a moste certain experience of the corruption of man, I suppose they woulde be not onlye more indifferent to the image breakers, but they themselues also should be stirred with the zeale of God to put away and vtterly discharge all ỳ vse of images out of Churches of Christ. Now whyles they doe altogether contrary, killing and colling the dead images of the dead, spetting and cruelly persecutyng the liuelye ones, made according to the image of God, by God himselfe: what wyse man seth not how this kinde of mā, blinde of bothe eyes, and in heart vterlye vnsensible, regardeth neyther God neither man?

The maynteyners of images be mutke to blame.

And if any man thinke the exposition of Origen to be allowed vpon Exodus, the 8. Homelie, he hathe founde somewhat whereby we may be admonished of the corruption of mans nature. It is another thing (sayth he) to make an idoll, and an other to make a likenesse. If any mā make the figure of anye kinde of beast, and set it vp to be worshipped, he maketh not an idoll, but a lykenesse. But he maketh an idol, which according vnto the Apostle, saying that an idoll is nothing, maketh that that is not. And what is that that is not? a figure whiche no mans eye hath sene, but whiche the verye minde of man himselfe deuiseth. As if any body would set a dogges head to the membres of a manne, &c. He maketh not a likenes, but an idoll. For he maketh that which is not, nor hath anye thing lyke vnto it. For ther is no figure taken of that which is present, but that whiche the idle and curiouse minde findeth out. But the lykenesse is when anye thing is fashioned, the whiche eyther is in heauen, or in earth, or in the waters. This is Origen: which saying although it make a distinction of an idoll doll and a likenesse, beside the meaning of the terte of the Hebrewe here aleaged, where it is not an idoll and a likenesse, but a grauen Image and likenesse: yet we be admonished therby that the disposition of our flesh is so corrupt and ready to idolatrie, that it wil sette vp not only the lykenesse of any things that be, but will also deuise, set vp, and worshippe the formes of thinges that be not, and shapes of thinges in no place euer sene. The shape of God the father, in which he is paynted lyke an olde mā, with a hore beard, is in no place. There is no such thing in dede lyke to the shape set forthe in the Church of God, when the image of the blessed Virgin is so paynted, that she couereth all persons, & defendeth them vnder hir cloke, such as there is many by the spirite of Superstition brought into the Church of God.

Thou shalt not honor them, nor worship them. This part is so to be obserued, that we must vnderstande by these two wordes, Thou shalt not bowe thy selfe vnto them, nor worship them, that al maner of worshipping and seruice of images what so euer it be in it self, and whereunto so euer it be referred, is vtterly forbidē. Wherfore we may not admit the expositions of the idolaters, whereby they thinke the seruice of images is properly defended. Who is so foolish (say they) ỳ he can abide to giue Godly honor vnto a stocke or a stone, and to the worke of mens handes? We do not worshyp the images in respect of the stuffe wherof they be made, or for the fashiō which the artificer deuiseth, but we worshyp them as images for them in whose name they be seth forthe, not referring this worshyp simplye to the images themselues, but vnto them whose images they be. Therefore we be not idolaters, that is to saye, worshippers of portraitures & images, but of them whome we worshyp and serue in the images. This is the answer commenly of all idolaters, not only of false Christians, but of the Gentils and Iewes also, whereby they goe about to cloke and defende their vngodlinesse againste the accusation of idolatrie, although the intention of their worshyp be of sondry of them diuers wayes referred. The Gentils do referre it vnto their Gods, which in degree after the chiefe maker of heaue & earth, they beleued as secondarie & seruiseable Gods: the Iewes referred it into their only God. Christian men applied it partly to Saintes and Angels, and partly to God the Father & Christ his Sonne.

co.

The worship of the Gentils.

As concerning the worshipping of the Gentils, peraduenture it is no nede to speake agaynst it. For as Augustine writeth in his Epistle vnto Deogratias, The vngodlye dyd not thereby excuse theyr wicked holy sacrilegious sacrifices and idolatrie: for that they dyd properly interprete what euery thing did signifie. For al the interpretation therof was referred to the creatures, and not to the Creatour, to whome alone all seruice of religion is dewe, that which in one worde in Greke is called Latria. For I meane not at this present to examine the idolatrie of ỳ Iewes, which as we reade, is earnestly and playnly enough rebuked in the writings of the Prophetes. The idolatry of the Christians is an euill which eleaueth

cleaueth fast, and can not be thorowly holpen, vntil the some of perdition sitte in the holye place, where he ought not: and is anaunced not only aboue the Church and the people of God, but aboue God himself, whom the Lord Jesus destroye and take away at length, with the spirite of his mouth, and with the brightnesse of his comming.

The excuses of them which doe worshippe the images of saynctes.

Here we heare them say, which deuoutlye worshippe the images of sainctes, We worshippe not the images, but the very sainctes, whose images we worshyp, when we fal downe before the images of sainctes, when we beholde the countenances of the images in doyng honor and sacrifice vnto them, when we holde vp our handes vnto them, when we make our prayers and inuocation, when we light Candels, whē we offer presentes, we doe with a stedfast harte apply all these thinges not vnto the deafe, dumme, blinde, and insensible images, but to the sainctes the frendes of God, which be with God in Heauen: wherfore we be accused of idolatrye to our great wrong, as though we did contrarie to the precept of God, which sayth, Thou shalt not adore nor worshippe them, meaning images, worshyp and serue the blocky and stony images. What answer shal we make to this?

Kneeling to Images.

Two thinges these men do which can not be excused. The one is, that they fall prostrate full deuoutly before the images. The other is, that they doe referre that worshippe vnto the Sainctes. The firste point Gods lawe doth simplye forbidde, that no man shal fall downe to worshyp before any image, nor to giue him any manner of seruice: and he addeth no exception or difference of intention. Wherfore they offende against this precept of God without any lawfull excuse, which bowe before images, and doe performe any seruice of religion to them, how so euer they do excuse their doyng.

Their cōscience ought to tremble at the authoritie & maiestie of Gods worde, as though it were stricken with a certain thunder, when they fall vpon theyr knées before images, when they doe transgresse so manifest a precept of God, which sayth expressely: Bowe thy selfe not vnto them, nor worshyp them, not only in their thought alone, but also in all their body framed of purpose to that vnlawfull worshipping, if they beare any true obedience to the Lorde God their Creator. Now when they doe openly committe that which is playnelye forbidden of God with so great threatening, and stande so in theyr owne concepte, that euen in the very acte of idolatrye, they fele no sense of their sinne, what godlye manne seeth not, that this kinde of men haue cast away all true and sincere feare, and therwithal the right seruice of God? For what is it els to serue God truely, but with true faith and obedience, to depende vpon his will and worde? So Moyses sayth, And now Israel what doth the Lord thy God require of thée, sauing only that thou feare the Lorde thy God, and walke in his wayes? &c. And thereof it is that the holy Scripture doeth oftentimes vse, The feare of the Lord, for the seruice and worshyp of God.

Secondly, concerning the intention of the minde, whereby they saye they referre all thinges in the worshippe of the images, vnto the Saincts themselues which be in heauen, we haue an answer ready at hand: truely, that all this interpretation and relation of idolatrye, euen for this cause is damnable, bycause the creatures be worshipped contrarye vnto the expresse commandement of God, which sayth, Thou shalt feare thy Lord God, and serue him only. And they can not say that the saincts which they worshyp be not creatures of God.

But here they haue somwhat also to obiect. They say, they worshyp not the Saincts as Goddes, but as the Saincts of God. And we worshyp God in his Saincts. Besides that the Saincts receyued power of God, whereby they can helpe, witnesse the miracles which they doe. And the Gentils did worshippe Deuils, but wée Saincts. And we cal vpon them not as Goddes, but as intercessours. What is to be answered vnto this, I noted before in ỳ end of those things which we did set forthe to be considered in the firste precept.

Others, which wil not séeme to be worshippers of Saincts, and therfore vse no images of Saincts, but doe conuerte all this worshippe of images vnto the images of God the Father and Christe his sonne, specially hanging vpon the Crosse, do say that they worshippe and serue the only God the Father, and Christ his sonne, and that therefore they can not be charged that they doe adore & worshippe creatures. We answere these men, that they doe sinne in that they set forth to the inuisible and vnfashionable God an image of an olde man with an hore bearde. For it is forbidde̅ that no image be made for God. Deuteronomie 4. You saw no likenesse in that daye when the Lord God spake to you in Oreb. &c. And Esayas saith: To whome therfore shal we make God like? or what image shall we set to him? It is a very wicked matter to chaunge the glorie and maiestie of the inuisible and vncorruptible God, into the likenesse of a corruptible man, as we maye sée in the Epistle to the Romaines.

Deut. 4.

Esay. 40.

Rom. 1.

And bycause they shal not say, that the blame which the Apostle founde, was to be vnderstanded only of the Gentils, they shall be yet stopped with the writyng of S. Augustine, who wryteth thus. We beleue also ỳ he sitteth at the right hande of God the Father, and yet not so, that we must thinke that God the Father is circumscribed as with the forme of man, that in thinking of him we cal to minde his right or lefte side, or for that that it is sayde, the Father sitteth, we maye thinke it done with bowing his knées, least we fall into that faulte of vngodlinesse, whereby the Apostle curseth them whiche chaunged the glorye of the incorruptible God into the likenesse of a corruptible manne. For it is not lawfull for a Christian man to set such an image of God in the Temple, muche more wicked it is to conceiue it in his harte, where the Temple of God is in déede. Thus sayth he. And what can be spoken more manifestly, than that he wryteth, it is vnlawfull for a Christian man, to set suche an image of God in the Temple?

Augustinus De fide & Symbolo cap. 7.

The images of God in the Papistes Churches.

Now let the Temples of Papists be loked in to, that we may see whether there be not founde in all them almost, suche an image of God the Father, vnder the forme of an olde man, with a hoze beарde, and sitting in a hygh throne. So that the same is now taken for Catholike religion among them, which in Augustines time was iudged wicked & vnlawful for the Christian men to doe. And in this doyng, they crye, The fathers, the fathers: and doe most fally glory of the antiquitie of theyr worshipping, and the tradition of the Apostles, to seduce the vnlearned.

That God ought to be vvorshipped in spirite.

And farther, seyng that God is a spirite, and wil be worshipped in spirite (as Christ himselfe witnesseth) saying: But the houre is come and now it is, when the true worshippers shall worshippe the Father in Spirite and veritie. For the Father also seketh suche to worshippe him. God is a Spirite, and they that worship him, muste worship him in Spirite and truth. It followeth, that the vse of the outwarde, visible, and palpable images, can haue no place in the seruice and worshippe of God. Therefore seyng it is both wicked & vnlawfull to set an image to God in the temple, and that God can not away to be worshipped in images of Siluer, timber or stone, &c. but will be worshipped in Spirite, beyng a spirit himselfe: I suppose these men haue nothing wherby they may well defende their errour.

Of the image of Christe.

Now are they leste whiche doe worshippe the image of Christe. They say: After that the Word became flesshe, that is to saye, God was made man, it is not vnlawfull to set vp in the Churche an image of the shape of man to Christ, & in the same to consider, worshyp, and serue Christ. We answere, that it is vnlawful also to set vp in the Churches of Christian men any image or portraiture yea not of Christ, as I haue declared before in the consideratiō of that saying (Thou shalt make no grauen image) out of the Epistle of Epiphanius, translated by Jerome. Besides that good men knoweth well ynough, that honor and worshyp is to be giuen to Christ, not simply as the sonne of man (whose shape it is possible may some wayes be set forth in image) but as the sonne and worde of God, so farre as he was of one substance with God the Father, the image and pvritie of his diuine essence and glorie. Wherfore he is also to be worshipped as true God, to gether with the Father, and the holy spirite, not in externe images, quicke or dead, but in spirite & truth, least of true worship of Christ, it become idolatrie, and so be made a difference betwene the honoring of Christ and the honoring of God the Father and the holy spirite: which muste needes come to passe, when Christe is so honored and worshipped in anye outwarde image, as neither the Father, neyther the holy spirite can be worshipped and honored.

Touching that which I spake of quicke and dead images, take it in this sorte. The quicke manne is the image of God, the Christian man beareth the image of his Christ. If the images of God & Christe, are to be honoured and worshipped at all, no doubte, the quicke are more to be honoured and worshipped than the dead dead which be made of Golde, Siluer, stones, or Stockes, by the hands of men, and be called in Scripture, the workes of mens handes. There is no man of that iudgement, that God the Father ought to be honored and worshipped in a liuely man, or Christ his Sonne in a lyuing Christian man, or the holy Spirite in a quicke pigeon. Therfore it is much lesse conuenient to honor or worship God the Father, & Christ his worde, & the holy spirite, in dead, vnsensible, dumme and blinde images. I am compelled by the very worthinesse of the matter, to set forthe before mens eyes ỹ absurditie of this kinde of worshippe which we reprehende, for the vnlearned, to be seene in a similitude, somewhat grosse, I graunt, but withall exceding meete for the purpose. Wherefore I beseche them that be of a sincere iudgement, that they wil thinke that the same is to be done in this place, which is necessarie to be done in the writynges of the Prophets, where the vnciuilnesse of idolatrie is reprehended, and made to be abhorred by the similitude of whoredome and adulterie.

They that be trauayled in holye Scriptures, knowe that there is a great conformitie betwirt the coniunction in wedlocke, fayth, loue, and stedfaste cleauing together of man and wyfe, and the coniunction wherby the faythfull people is betrouthed and knitte vnto the Lorde his God and Christ his Sonne. The wyfe oweth vnto hir husband such fayth, that she muste clerely sticke vnto him alone, both harte and body, ye when he is absent and awaye: and that she muste haue nothing to doe, nor that she muste practise any point of that which pertayneth to the case of matrimonie with any other, than with hir husbande alone. The lyke fayth we owe vnto the Lorde God our Father, the Sonne, and holy spirite. We sawe this same was required of vs before in the first precept, when he saythe: I am the Lord thy God, thou shalt haue no other Gods before me. From whence the Prophetes toke those thinges whiche they spake, to reprehende the Idolatrouse wickednesse of Israel, vnder the similitude of an adulterouse woman. Now if a wife in the absence of hir husband, chose hir self a yong man, as like as she can for the shape of his face, vnto hir husbande, and kepe him with hir at home in hir secrete chamber, to the intent to exercise with him the loue and custome dewe to hir husband, she loueth him, she embraceth him, & doth all things which ought to be done to hir husband alone, and say, that she doth appointe all these thinges in hir minde, not to the yong manne, but vnto hir husbande which is out of the waye, but that she loueth and embraceth hir husbande in this yong man, because they be lyke of countenaunce: I praye you, who is so folishly minded, to thinke that these thyngs shal please hir husbande? out of doubte no manne. For it is manifest that this kinde of lyfe and loue is not of wedlocke, but of adulterie. What should we els do, if we should so worship any liuely man as the image of God, that we should adore him, call vpon him, deuoutly honor him, because that in him as the image of God we iudge, we do worship, adore, cal vpō, and honor God himſelfe? Although in this doyng we might pretende, I wote nere what intention of the minde, directed not to man, but to God himſelfe, yet for all that we coulde not be excuſed from impietie, nor anye man is ſo folliſh to beleue that ſuche kinde of worſhippe can pleaſe God.

and

Dotyng in images.

But what if a maried woman ſhould haue at home with hir not a yong manne aliue, but an image of wood made like hir huſbande, and trimly dreſſed, and woulde take pleaſure of it bothe night and daye, embrace it, laye it in hir bedde, and practiſe al wayes that ſhe can the affections of the loue of wedlocke towardes it, and yet ſaye that ſhe doth none of al theſe things to the image, as to the image, but that ſhe directeth all to hir huſband abſente: is it likely that theſe thinges may pleaſe the huſbande if he be wyſe? or maye it be that an honeſt woman wil ſeeke to gratifie hir huſbande with ſuche a kinde of ſeruice or mockerye, ſpecially if he forbidde, that ſhe make him no image, nor ſerue him in no image? I thinke no. Nowe loke what els we ſée them doe, which deuiſe to worſhippe God the Father, the Sonne and the holy Spirite, in images, as beyng abſente, to whom we are betrouthed by faith, exhibyting that reuerence and religion which we owe vnto God, not in ſpirite & truth, but in portraitures and images: and when they are blamed therefore, they doe pretende the intention of their harte, whereby they referre all that worſhippe vnto God himſelfe the Father, Chriſt his ſon, and the holy ſpirite. Be we ſo folliſh, that we will thinke that God will allowe that in his people, which we be aſſured the huſbande will exceedingly miſlyke in his wife? A wyſe huſbande can not lyke in his wife, if ſhe wil loue, embrace, and ſerue him, in anye image quicke or dead, that ſhe hath choſen vnto hir, but requireth of hir this ſinceritie of faith, and chaſtitie of loue, that ſhe reſerue all affection, loue, & ductie of wedlocke, pure and immediatlye onlye to him. And ſhal we ſurmyſe that Gods maieſtie is ſuche, that it can ſuffer to be worſhipped in images and portraitures beſide himſelfe? but theſe things ſhall be more clearely opened in the parcell following.

I am the Lord thy God, ſtrong, ielouſe.

We muſt marke heere, that firſte he ſayth: I am the Lord thy God, and be admoniſhed, that no worſhip and adoration in religion is to be giuen but onlye to him which is the Lord our God. For after that he had ſayd of images, Thou ſhalt not worſhip them, nor ſerue them: he did adde this, or rather repeate it, and in ſtede of a reaſon beate it in, ſaying, I am the Lord thy God. That ther ſhould be a greter vehemencie in the word, I, as though he ſayde, To mée the Lord thy God is dewe all worſhippe and ſeruice, and elſe to none. And therfore that was ſayd, Thou ſhalt worſhip the Lord thy God, and ſerue him alone. This parcell can not be to much driuen into our heads, ſpecially in thoſe thinges that do touch the religion and ſeruice of God. For the diſputation of our fleſh is ſo corrupt, that it enclineth alwayes to idolatry and ſtrange Gods, and therfore with much a doe is kept in the fayth and ſeruice of our true and only Lord God. Albeit our whole lyfe and health conſiſteth in this, that we doe not only ſincerelye and alone acknowledge our Lord God, but alſo, ſerue him.

2 Secondly, it is to be conſidered, that in ſetting forthe his preceptes and law of couenant to his people, he ſheweth what maner of God he is, and as I might ſay, how affected and diſpoſed, when he ſayth: I am the Lord thy God, ſtrong, ielouſe, or the ielouſe God. We are admoniſhed that it is to great purpoſe, that they which are choſen to be the people of God, and will ſticke vnto him, muſt firſt aſſuredly know and vnderſtande of what diſpoſition he is. For otherwiſe it cã not be, that they ſhal wel apply themſelfe vnto him. And for this the holye Scriptures ſerue vs, when they declare the nature and diſpoſition of God by his own words and dedes, to the intent that no man ſhould be able to excuſe himſelfe by colour of ignorance.

3 Thirdly, let vs way what maner of God he ſayth that he is. I am (ſayth he) ſtrong, ielouſe. The Ebrewe worde ſignifieth, To haue a zeale, emulation, and enuie, and the beginning of this, is exceding and feruent loue, whoſe nature is, to haue a ielouſe care of him whome he loueth, & with a certain compariſon to enuie vnto al others the vſe of the thing which is loued. Of this word, the wicked renegate Iulane doeth reproue Moſes: He ſpeaketh (ſayth he) blaſphemie againſt God. A ielouſe & an enuiouſe man ſéemeth to be worthye of blame. Who will therfore commende it, if God be called ielouſe? And then if he be ielouſe: then all other Gods are worſhipped againſt his will, and all other people worſhippe Goddes contrarye to his will. And why doeth he not put them downe, ſeyng he is ielouſe and willing to haue no other Gods but himſelfe? Is it becauſe he was not able? But it is wicked to ſay ſo of God. Or, becauſe ſo he woulde firſt haue other Gods worſhipped? But this agreeth not with our doynges. In this wiſe the wicked and blaſphemouſe might ſpue out his moſte filthye ſtinke againſt the oracles of Gods maieſtie. And although he be not worthy to haue any anſwer, yet for the ſimple and vnlearned ſake, we muſte admoniſhe you, that the ſcriptures do ſpeake of God, after the maner of man, when they attribute vnto him anger, zeale, emulation, hatred, repentance, and ſuche other things concerning mens affections. For they can not by other faſhion of ſpeache open ſuch thinges, as bée to be obſerued in God. As in this place God is brought in, ſpeaking to his people: I am the Lorde thy God, ſtrong, ielouſe, carefull, reuéging the wickednelle of the fathers, &c. Wher we muſt not thinke that God is ſubiect to the vnruly affectiõs of ielouſie and emulation: God forbidde: But that his loue is ſo exceding and feruent towardes his people, that he can not beare it, if they forſake him and go to other Gods, but alſo will greuouſly reuenge the reproche. And ſo farre off it is, that this loue ſhould not become God, that for this cauſe chiefly we maye perceyue that the Goddes of the Gentils be no true Gods, nor loue mankinde, but ſeruc their owne peruerse lusse and ambition, in that they suffer suche as worshippe them, without any displeasure to worship & serue other with them: which thing they doe according to the example of the adulterers. An honest husbande is not to be blamed in that, that he can not away with all to haue his wyfe common with others: but if it be so, he doeth with feruent zeale reuenge it. The honestie of Christian men doeth much differ from the lightnesse of Socrates the Grecke, and Cato the Romain, which made their wiues which they hadde maried common vnto their friendes, and so became the Philosopher and the Censor baudes to their own women. Let Iulian and such as be like him, who became a renegate from the fayth of Christe, kepe this patience to themselues, not meete for honest men: we that be Christian men, can not commende it. And therefore the same Nicolas, which was one of the seuen firste Deacons, as they say, was not without cause condemned, who when he was blamed that he was in iealousie of his wyfe that was very fayre, to cleare himselfe, he permitted any man that wolde haue to doe with hir. Of that spring that moste filthy secte of them, which alloweth the indifferent vse of women. Therefore it is to no purpose that Iulian saith: A ielous & an enuious man is iudged to be worthy of blame. And who wil commend it, if God be called iealous? But let vs rather say thus: That a man in wedlocke deserueth commendation, if he doe vpon the zeale of mariage, defende the chastitie of his wife, and reuenge adulterous wantonnesse: how muche more then is it meete to commende that syncerittie of loue in God? And whereas in the meane while the false Gods are honored of the blinde and corrupt, it is not so to be construed, as though God coulde not, or wolde not let that wickednesse: but because he woulde of his most secret purpose, suffer sedition to take place in the vessels of wrath, that they might haue no iuste excuse, and that as Paul saith, in the meane whiles he did declare the maiestie of his Godhede towardes mankinde, throughout al the world, giuing life, inspiration, and all thinges vnto all: being not far off from euery one, so that they might seke God, and finde him. He could compell euery man, yea against his will: but that kinde of constrainte is both vnmeete for the loue of God, and not agreeing with the incomparable gifte of this felicity, which is euen from the beginning of the world appointed vnto the true worshippers of God: vnto the obtaining of which, there is required not constrained and forced will, but free and yelding of it selfe.

Nicolaites.

Therefore in this parte let vs obserue, ỹ we haue suche a God, which exceedingly and feruently loueth his people, euen as the good husbande is affected toward his wife. And who can sufficiently waye how great the strength of this loue is? But therof we be admonished in the parte following. In the meane while, touching the worshipping of images in this worde zelous, we be plainly admonished, that the same is as intollerable to God in his people, as whoredome and adulterie can not be borne of a good husband in his wife.

Againe

Againe it is to be woundered at, frō whēce this loue in God towards wretched men & sinners proceedeth: what he findeth any waye in vs worthy of so great loue, as the Prophet also hauing the lyke wonder brake out, saying: What is man that thou art mindefull of him, or the sonne of man that thou doest visite him? If we be wel loked into, ther is no hādsomnesse, no propernesse, no fairnesse in vs, in respecte whereof we can any thing lyke, or please the beauenly spouse. But rather al our things be so foule, so dyshonest, and so deformed, that they be no better worth than to be loathed and abhorred. Therefore it remaineth, that the causes of this loue be in God which loueth, and not in the wretches and sinners that be loued. The cause of zeale is loue: and what other cause can we appoynt of loue in God, than his vnspeakeable goodnesse? And for bicause it musse nēdes be, that those things which naturally be in God, must be most excellent, it is necessarie that according vnto the excellency of his Godly goodnesse, so his loue musse be excellent, and that the excellent zeale be correspondent to the exceding loue.

Visiting the wickednesse of the fathers in the children, to the thirde and fourthe generation. Here is to be noted the nature of zeale and emulation. Loue once offended, doeth more bitterly punishe the loued, than them that were not loued. When loue is not regarded, it is offended: and loke how muche he meante to doe good in louing, so much he is wonte to hurt when he is offended and stirred to anger. And therefore it is that Moses warning the people hereof, saith: And knowe you that the Lord God is a mightye and faythfull GOD, kéeping his couenaunte, and shewing mercye to them that loue him, and kéepe his commaundementes, into thousande generations: and paying home straighte wayes them that hate him: so that he destroyeth them. &c. Therefore kéepe his commaundementes. &c. When Israell promysed to sticke vnto God, Iosue warned the himselfe of the same, saying: You can not serue the Lord. For God is holy and strong, and gelous, and will not forgiue youre wickednesse and your sinnes. If you forsake God, and serue other Gods, he will turne away and plague you, & after he hath giue you good things, he will ouerthrowe them.

Deut. 7.

Iosue. 24.

We are warned that our God is not lyke straunge Gods, whiche can doe neyther euill, neither good, but it musse fall out that eyther if he loue vs, we shall be loden with innumerable benefites, or if he bee angred, we shall fele condigne punishment: The one or the other we musse nēdes proue, if we will be reckened of his people.

Our God is not like other Gods.

Now let euery man thinke howe exceedingly vnhappye all they musse be, which whereas they might haue GOD to loue them, to doe them good, yea to make them blessed, they hadde rather fele him angrye, punishing and destroying them. Therefore if we be wyse, eyther lette vs loue him agayne, whiche loued vs, styche faythfullye vnto hym which doeth vs good, and enioye his vnspeakable goodnesse: or if we be otherwise minded, let vs be sequestred frō him, from his testament and his people. For although they doe in any wise perishe, as many as be sequestred from him, yet they are made subiect vnto a much greater condemnation: which beyng of his people, yet are conuersante before him, with an vncleane and an vnfaithful hart, and peruerteth his excellent loue into a most greuouse anger.

Let vs stick vnto God, or els forsake him.

That he calleth the worship of images wickednesse.

Secondly, it is to be marked, that he calleth the worshiping of images Wickednesse, and that such as deserueth the speciall anger and reuenge of the zeale, when it is turned into a bitter displeasure, visiting sayth he, the iniquitie of the fathers in ỳ children. For he speaketh not of euerye kinde of iniquitie and sin, but of the wickednesse that God is worshipped in dumme & deafe images, or rather not worshipped, but turned to anger: not honoured, but dishonested. Therfore the Greeke interpreter doeth negligently turne this peece, when he maketh it thus: Paying home ỳ sinnes of the fathers. In ỳ Ebrewe it is not Sinnes, but iniquitie. And wher is one of all the worshippers of images, that wil not maruellously chafe, if he vnderstande that the religion wherein he surmiseth that he doeth wonderfully worship God, is called wickednesse, deseruing speciall reuengement? So the Kings & Princes of Israell did chafe with ỳ Prophets, when they condemned their worshipyng for wickednesse & vngodlinesse. And our times haue giuen sufficient proofe of this matter.

Thirdly, let vs consider that also, that he sayth not simply, Visiting the wickednes in the worshipping of images, but visiting the wickednesse of the fathers in the children. There ryseth a question, howe it maye be iudged an equall matter, that the wickednesse of the fathers should be visited in the childrē, saying we read that the Lorde sayth playnelye in Ezechiell: The soule which sinneth, the same shall dye. The sonne shall not beare the wickednesse of the father, and the father shal not beare the wickednesse of the sonne. The righteousnesse of the iuste man, shall be vpon him, and the wickednesse of the wicked shall be vpon him. If the son be not bounde to beare the wickednesse of the father, but that eche man shal be punished for his own wickednesse, it seemeth then not onlye vnequall, but also plaine contrarye vnto that which we reade in the place of Ezechiel now cited.

How he reconciles apparent contradictions.

We must answere, that the Lord speketh not in both the places of childrē that be voide of the wickednesse of their fathers, but of them whiche treading in the same steppes of their fathers, followe their wickednesse. But these .ij. places would haue an handsome diffinction. The fathers of this people serued and worshipped the images of the Egyptians superstition, before the lawe, when they were in Egypt. This wickednesse of them God had not reuēged in thē, but bore withal, until the time of his visitation, deliuerance, & renewing of his couenant, in which they should receyue the lawe, and be brought to the true worshipping. So that if the Israelites hadde stande faste in the wayes of the commaundementes of God, there had bin no cause to visite the wickednesse of their fathers in them. Now bicause they woulde transgresse these lawes, and runne to the worshippinge of straunge Gods, who seth not that this threatening of God, wherein he threateneth that he wil visite the sinnes of the fathers in the children, was most iuste and right? There was great difference betwyxt the fathers and those which came after. The fathers hadde no teachers, no instructions, no lawe, no renewing of couenaunte, no declaration of Gos maiestie, but were trauailed in a wicked nation, in the middest of the darkenesse of ignorance. The aftercommers whiche were directed by this Decalogus, had Gods visitation, guides and Prophetes, moste open & wonderful proues of Gods maiestie, the leading out of Egypt, and this lawe, whereby they were instructed of the true worshipping of God. Therefore it was not meete that he shoulde spare the children for falling backe againe after all this, to the worshipping of images, as he did spare their fathers, but very equitie it selfe did require, that the wickednesse of the fathers, which God had spared before, should be visited in them.

Against this wickednes doeth not repugne that place of Ezechiel. For there the wicked Iewes are striken home, which beyng punished in deede of the Lord for their owne vngodlinesse, they iudged that it was not for their own sins, but for their fathers sinnes, as though they had ben themselues without faulte. And therfore it was spokē among them for a prouerbe: Our fathers did eat the sower grape, & our teethe are an edge. That is to say: Our fathers sinned, and we abide the punishment of their sinnes. That parable is rightely refelled, & not vnworthylye. For the children were no lesse sinners & vngodly, than their fathers. Therfore it is beaten into their heades, that this is no iustice in God, that the giltlesse son is punished for the sinnes of his father, or ỳ iuste father for the vnrighteousnesse of his son, but that euerye iuste man is preserued by his iustice, & euery vngodly mā abideth the punishment of his vngodlinesse. This doth set forth the generall iustice of God, wherby there is not taken away the equitie of this threatning, as though it were vniuste, if God do forgiue his people their faultes committed in times of ignorance, and will not for those faultes punish them or their aftercōmers, so that after they receyue the light, they wil amende and persist in true faith. But when the aftercommers cōtemning ỳ light of truth, and despising the grace of the couenant, do fal backe againe to their fathers wickednesse, contrary vnto the lawe receyued, now in such he doeth not only visite their owne, but also their fathers wickednesse: that is to say, iudgeth such aftercōmers worthy double punishment. Therefore for the agreemēt of these two places, it is necessary ỳ there be a difference made of the times of Gods dispensations, and that we consider the circumstances of them. Ther be times of ignorance and blindnesse: and ther be times of light and knowledge of God. There is a great difference betwixt those thinges which are euill done in times of ignorance, and those things which be euil done in ỳ times of the knowledge of God. In Egypt God might spare the errours of the

The times of Gods disposition are to be distincted.

Israelites, but he could not with like patience beare their wickednesse which (after they were by marueilouse miracles deliuered out of Egypt) had receyued the law as an instruction of the knowledge of God, & a manifest commandement against the worshipping of images. There the wickednesse of the wicked was not vpon the wicked, because of the vniuersall darkenesse wherin the Israelites were wrapte. But here the wickednesse of the fathers not punished vnder the darknesse, is punished in the children: & the fathers after liuing vnder the light of ỹ knowledge of God, suffeine the punishemente of their own wickednesse, and the sons likewise. See the like also of the Gētiles in the Actes of the Apostles. Act. 17.

Let vs call vnto remembrance the times of our forefathers, and our times also. Our forefathers without any nay, liuing manye hundred yeares, not vnder the worde of God, but vnder the teaching of mans presumption, were ouerwhelmed with most grosse darkenesse of errours & superstition, in which they did also serue and worship images. This wickednesse of theirs, was not punished in them, according to the worthines of it, bycause of the vniuersall ignorance of the truth, and corruption of religion. Of our owne times

Nowe at the length the light of Gods worde is giuen vs, which is able mosse clerely to reproue the errours and superstitions of all false religion. The same is spredde diuers and sundry open wayes through the whole compasse of Christendome. And in euery place, though not vniuersally in all, yet it is knowen and receiued of the most parte of al. Now what shal we thinke may be else, but that both the fathers and the childrē must in like sorte euery man beare his own wickednesse, if they fal back in so cleare a light vnto the workes of darknesse, & that there, nor the father is punished for the sonne, nor the sonne for the father, if there be no chāge or returne to wickednesse. And yet if the men of this time had rather with like wickednesse followed the steps of their fathers, which sinned before in darknesse, than to liue in ỹ light of the word of God, as some do, saying: Let vs beleue as our forefathers beleued: shall not we beleue I say, that they shal not onely be punished for their own wickednesse, but also for the wickednesse of their fathers? God speaketh in Ezechiel of the fathers & childrē, liuing after thei had receiued the law: in this Decalogue, he speaketh of the fathers which liued in Egypt, and the children, that is to say, their aftercommers, which followed after the deliuery out of Egypt. This way I suppose it is manifest, if this distinction be vsed, that there is at least no disagreement in these two places, which seemeth to be very contrarye one to another, if we neglect the distinction. If any man lisse, let him loke vpon Jerome in the. 19. chapter vpon Ezechiel.

It is also to be considered, that he threateneth, he will extende his reuenge into some generations of the wicked people, for the worshipping of images. This may not be so take, as though God doth always precisely punishe in so many generations, & that it can not be that so long an extent of such reuēge can not be brake off, off, either in that that God through mercy do relent his anger, which he is alwayes at libertie to doe: eyther by meanes of amendemente of lyfe of the aftercommers, which for example was done in the dayes of king Josias, whome God spared for his singular godly life, and granted him to dye in quyet, and not to see the mischief of the tymes to come, whiche shoulde fall vpon Juda and Jerusalem, for the wickednesse of his grādfather Manasses: but when he was dead, the reuenge of God returned to be extended vpō the generations following, so that it spared not the sons of Josia, though he ware iust & godly, bicause they went on in the foote steps of Manasses their great grandfather. So then the vengeance of God, which he threteneth here to take vpon the children of the wicked, into the third and fourth generation, may be broken off, by the godlinesse and amendement of some, but not vtterly put away, vnlesse the zeale of God be altogether appeased by the continual rightuousnesse and godly life of the generations following. . 12. examining

Of them which hate me. Ye shal note here, that the worship of images is reputed to the hate of God, so that as many as serue and honour images, muste be counted the haters of God. And who doe more earnestly pretende and counterfait the loue and worshippe of God, than euen they which are dayly giuen to worshippe images? Therefore their religion and seruice are not iudged according vnto their intentiō and pretence, but according vnto the worde of God. It is an horrible matter to ascribe vnto any man that vngodlynesse that he shal be sayd to hate his lord God, whom he pretendeth for all that to honour & serue dayly. Be it neuer so horrible, & albeit they wil not seme to be worshippers of images, yet we can not nor we ought not otherwise to pronounce of their seruice than God himself, who can not lye, doth so plainely pronounce. Wherefore we be admonished by this place, that it is iudged the hate of God, not only if any man wittingly and warely hath cōceyued hatred against God, whom he denieth to be true God, as the Turkes & Jewes be affected against Christ our Lord and Sauiour: but also if any man doe those thinges to his Lorde, which he reputeth execrable, although he doe it of minde not to anger him, but to please him. This maner of speache, we Englishmenne vse also, when we say of him that vndooth himselfe by the corruption of his owne lyfe: He is his own foe. The accustomed English speache. Noe manne wittingly hurteth him selfe, nor as the Apostle sayth, hateth his owne flesh. Ephe. 5. And yet that is reported of them which vndoe themselues, although that there be no men in the worlde that loue themselues more earnestly, than they which giue themselues altogether to pleasures. Therefore as that loue of the flesh whereby the carnall man in al poynts loueth himselfe, if wee loke to the effecte of it, is not loue, but hatred. So this loue of carnal men, whiche they surmyse they doe gaylie practyse towardes God in the worshipping of Images, is not in the sight of God loue, but hatred. Therfore the intent of these seruices are not to be considered before God, but the effect.

Speaches of holy Scripture.

There be lyke sayings also in other places of Scriptures, or rather iudgements, of the corrupt affections of men. Salomon sayth in his Prouerbes: Wysedome sayth: All they which hate me, loue death. And who is so madde, that wittingly and warely will loue death, whiche all flesh by instincte of nature, doth abhorre? But for as muche as this is the effect of the contempt of the wisdome of God, that it procureth death, the holy spirit spake so. And in the same booke of Salomon is read, He that spareth the rodde, hateth his sonne. And yet they that be of that disposition, do spare the roddes for the ouermuch loue that they haue to their children. How then do they hate their children, which they loue so exceedingly? They haue a respect, I will not say to fonde affecte, but rather to the pestilent effect of corrupt loue, wherby the sonne by ouermuch cockeringe is marred. And to marre the sonne, is not to loue him in dede, but rather to hate him. And in the same booke: He that is partener with a theefe, (sayth he) hateth his soule. No man hateth his soule, and he that is partener with theeues, doeth it for the succour of his life. But if things be iudged by the ende and effecte, he loueth not his soule in dede, that maketh himself a partener of theefte, but hateth it, for he bringeth it into daunger of deathe. In this sense I suppose, it is manifest ynough, that they be not worshippers and louers of God, but rather they hate him, as many as fall downe before images, and contrarye vnto his precept serue and worshippe him (which is a spirite) in images. For they be so farre wide from pleasing of him with this sorte of worshippe, that for asmuche as they doe that which doeth sore offende him, they doe rather stirre him and prouoke him to anger, and commirte rather the worke of hatred, than of true loue.

Prouerb. 3.

Prouerb. 13.

Prouerb. 29.

If there were besides this nothing els in al the scriptures against images, yet this one pece of Gods threatning, wise men ought to haue suche regarde of in theyr hartes, that it should be able to make vs lothe and abhorre al maner of deuotion of portraitures and images. For what can the man which loueth God, worse away withal, than to be counted by the very mouth & iudgement of his own Lord God, one of them that hateth him? But the hartes of idolaters, be so exceedinglye blinded, that though they should heare a hundred times, euen by ỹ very mouth of God, Your seruice liketh me not: I will not be serued and worshipped in images, you declare no obediēce towards me, but hatred: I can not beare it: I will be auenged vpon you into the thirde and fourth generation: yet wil they followe rather their iudgement and determination, than the denouncement of God, though it be neuer so plaine and behement. Therfore they must be giuen ouer to the iudgement of God, to fele the truth and waight of this threatening.

And doing mercy vnto thousandes. Let vs way here what distance is betwirt the thousande generation & the second and third, and thereby we may consider in what heaps the mercies & goodnesse of God doth excede his iustice. His anger when it is set a fier with zeale & emulation, is very sore: yet his goodnesse kindeled with the zeale of loue towardes the godly, doth passe it infinitely. He is angrie vnto the thirde & fourth generation, and that not slenderly, but kindled with the fire of zeale. But he dothe mercy, not into the third and fourth generation, but into the thousandth generation, ỹ is, into infinite. What are we else taught hereby, but that God is readier to loue, than to hate, (for he is loue) and to good, than to auenge? He is iust, he is good, but more exceeding good than iust. He is iuste perfectlye, he is good for euermore. We do not compare the iustnesse and goodnesse of God, according to the degrees of perfection and imperfection, as though he were imperfectly iust, and perfectlye good: God forbid. But we do wey, how greately the infinite goodnesse of God exceedeth his perfect iustice. For asmuch as he is perfectly iust, no mā cā worthilye finde himselfe greeued of his workes of iustice, either towardes himselfe, either towards any others. And for as much as he is infinitely good, all flesthe hath good occasion to acknowledge his innumerable benefits without all desert, and with a thankeful hart prayse them, and say: It is ỹ mercie of the lord, that I am not walked away. The great goodnesse of God ouercommeth his absolute iustice, but it doth not quench it out, it ouerthroweth it not, nor weakeneth it not. It doth ouercome it, to the entente that the wretched and corrupt flesthe should not be lost by the iudgementes of iustice, vnles we wil despise his goodnesse. It doth not so ouercome, that ether ỹ wicked may sin at large, ether any mā be lost wrongfully.

The vse of this place.

The vse of this place is not to contemne thy biddings and denouncements of God, bicause he is infinitely good, but to raise vp by his goodnesse the wretched and sorowfull mindes and consciences ouerwhelmed with feare of the anger and iudgement of God: and to be out of doubt, that all our corruption and imperfection is but the least droppe that may be, in comparison of the infinit plentie of Gods goodnesse. And that euery man endeuour, according vnto the measure of the Giuyng of Christ, to drawe as neare as he can, vnto this example of Goddes iustice and goodnesse, so that we may in like sort become, though not equally so iust (which is impossible) yet in some proportion and degree, that we maye be a thousand times more readier to goodnesse and mercie.

Of true & fals iustice.

By this example we may alwais see, which is true iustice and whiche false. For true iustice is in all places like it selfe. And it is perfectly declared in God what maner a thing it is, and it declareth also his very nature in man, after that he is iustified by God, not perfectly ynough, yet plainly, and so, that it may be tried euen like gold. And what that iustice is, it is expressed by him, which to distinct falle iustice from true by a most sure marke, said very properly, that true iustice hath withal compassion, and ỹ false hath a disdaine withal: To haue cōpassion is to be merciful and good in dede: to disdain and dispise, is to be proude.

Therefore they ỹ be so seuerely iust, that they be affected with no cōpassion towards the afflicted, nor with no mercie towardes offenders (as the Scribes and Pharisies were, & the Iusticiaries and Hypocrites of our time be) they be as farre wyde from true iustice, as they be a great waye distant from this disposition and example of Gods iustice: and the moze they be puft vp with a counterfaite kynde of Iustice, and be wondered at of the folish wozld, so much the moze vniust they be.

God is not like vnto tyrantes.

In them that loue me and keepe my cõmaundements. First let vs marke that God is not like vnto those tiraunts which punishe the euill and disobedient, and reward nothing at all them that be honest, and do faithfully obey them. After that he said, Visiting the wickednesse of the fathers in the childze: He added, And shewing mercy and fauoure to them whiche loue me, and kéepe my commaundemẽts: meaning that he dothe not only punishe the wicked, but dothe also rewarde the good and obediente. You may finde a number of mẽ far from this disposition of God, whome yée may easily styze to anger, hatred, enimitie, mischiefe, and desire of reuengement: but vnto fauoure, loue, friendlinesse, and doing good, ye cannot so easily entreate them, though you séeke a thousande wayes. Thys kinde of men is very frowarde, and of spirit playne contrarie to the childzen of God, which following the disposition of God, are slowe to anger, and readie to shew fauour, and to do good.

Easy to anger, and harde to do good.

1 Therefoze, let vs consider here the nature of loue, in God, and nexte in godly menne, truely louing God. There appeareth to be this disposition of loue in God, that foz asmuch as he loueth vs, he desireth on the other side to be loued of vs. Foz if hée did not loue, he would not so louingly embrace them which loue him. He that hateth oz despiseth, oz setteth at lighte and lotheth, is quite voide of this affectiõ. He seketh nothing lesse, than to be loued of him, whom he hateth: oz suppose he hateth him not, yet he vouchsaueth not to haue hym in any estimation. But God declareth how wel he loueth his people, in that he promiseth his infinite godnesse to them that loue him. Insomuch that in the very threatening of his reuẽging zeale, he cãnot dissemble the dispositiõ of his louingnes. So in Deuterono. he chargeth also thẽ to loue him. Loue (saith he) the Lozde thy God, with all thy heart. &c. If there might come vnto him any commoditie of our loue, there might be some suspition, that in commanding vs to loue him, he shoulde séeke his owne gaine: but fozasmuch as no cõmoditie cõmeth vnto him of our loue, but vnto vs commeth infinite, there can be deuised no other cause, why we be required to loue him, but only this alone, that he first loueth vs before we deserued it.

The nature of loue in God, and in godly men.

2 Secondly, it is also the nature of true loue, to do good vnto thẽ whõ a man loueth, and to thẽ also which he perceiueth doth loue one another. So God doth promise here infinite good doing vnto thẽ which loue him. So that this is also the nature of louingnesse, to beslow his good wil vpõ his beloued. But we muste in any case beware, that we iudge not that God doth so benefite them that loue him & kepe his cõmandements, that he doth rather reward thẽ which loue him, than that he doth good to his beloued. Foz when we loue God, we doe not so much prouoke him to the doing of good, as that we do not hinder his disposition of loue. Foz this is certaine, that he first loueth vs, & first doth vs good, yea before we deserue it. This louingnesse of hys, and good doing, we doe as it were cõserue, in louyng him againe, and be careful, that it be not broken off with our hatred and disobedience. But the nature of oure loue is declared in that, that with the loving of God, we kéepe his cõmandements. So he saith here: To them that loue me, and kéepe my cõmaundements. So the Lozd saith also: If any man loue me, he wyll kéepe my commandemẽts. Foz this is the nature of loue, that we do applie oure selues to the loue of him, whome we loue. Now way togither, and sée the difference of that loue whiche God beareth to vs, & of that loue whiche we beare vnto God. He in that hée loueth hys creatures, declareth hys disposition of loue towards them, by this vnspeakeable care that he hathe to doe them good: but touching oure loving of God, we cannot expresse our disposition of loue towards him in any purpose of good doing, but rather in the purpose and care to obey and kéepe his commaundements.

And this difference which proceedeth not of the nature of loue, but of the diuersitie of the louing, & them ỳ loued, is also in godly folkes. The father loueth the sonne, & the sonne the father. The father declareth the nature of his loue, not in keping the cõmandemẽts of his son, but rather in cõmanding, and doing such things to his son which be foz his profite. The son sheweth the nature of his loue, not in commanding and doing good to his father (vnlesse it be at some chaunce of necessitie) but rather in keping his commaundements, & reuerently doing his duetie vnto hym.

Loue and the kepyng of Gods commandements ioyned togeather.

3 Thirdly, Let vs marke also, how loue and keping of Gods cõmandements are ioyned togither. He sayth not, Them which kéepe my cõmandements: But he setteth before, Thẽ which loue me. And saith not alone, Them whiche loue me, but addeth: And kéepe my commandemẽts. We are admonished whiche is the true loue, & also which is the true keping of Gods cõmandementes. The true loue is that whiche is not ydle, but wozking to serue him whome he loueth. Ther is no true keping of gods cõmandements, but that which of it selfe fréely floweth out of frõ the inwarde affectiõs of loue. Therfoze let no mã thinke ỳ these can be asunder, the one from the other. Whosoeuer loueth God, cannot set at light hys commandements. And he whiche loueth him not, shall neuer kéepe them in his heart.

Agaynste vvilvvorshippers.

4 Fourthly, wey that also, that he saith not, They ỳ loue me and serue me, oz else, And wozship me: but, And kéepe my commaundements. Thys place maketh welfauozedly agaynst that Wilwozship, whiche hath growen vp in the Popery, as it hathe done also otherwhere amongst the Gẽtiles, whẽ they serue God not accozding vnto his will, but accozding vnto their owne arbitremẽt & will. The will of God is set fozth in hys commaundementes. The true wozship of God is that, which is in ỳ endeuoure to accomplishe hys wyll.

For to serue God is nothing else, but to do that which is acceptable vnto him: not as we like, but as he liketh. So we do vse this speach also, when we say: I like not thy doings: that is to say, This that thou doest pleaseth me not: I allowe it not; it agreeth not with my will. Besides that, he saith not, Which loue me, and applieth my will, but, And kepeth my cõmaundements. Superstitious folkes and obseruers of mens traditions, suppose that they do serue God, with the best, and shew, I wote not what loue towards him, in keping the accustomed seruice & precepts of their forefathers. And they haue this in their mouth: Whatsoeuer thou doe of purpose to serue God, it pleaseth him. If this trade of the seruice of God were sound, I beseech you what need had it bin, ỹ God should haue prescribed any cõmandement vnto mẽ? But he wil not haue vs to guesse of his wil, & to deame out euery thing according to the vanitie of our hart. And to the intent there should be no occasion of doubting or gessyng, he did expresse his will in certaine precептes as playne as could be. Let vs shewe here howe well we loue God, not in wil worshipping and obseruing of mens traditions, but in the keping of his commaundementes. But the Papistes are so wood, that they will rather neglect al the precepts of god, than eate flesh in the days forbidden.

Whether euery thing do please God vvhiche is vvel ment to his seruice.

5 Fiftly, let vs consider this also, that he saith not, And fulfill my commaundements, but, And kepe my cõmaundementes. To kepe the commaundements of God, is not only in worke to fulfill them after a sorte, but hartyly to loue them, and when he doth so loue them, to lay thẽ vp in hys mynde, to thinke vpon them day and night, iorneying, lying or sitting styl, and in al determinations of our life to thinke vpon the obseruing of them: in summe, to esteme them so precious, that we make of them as of a treasure, and that with true affection of true loue. And we read of this képing of the cõmaundements of God, set forth in Deuteronomie in this wise: Heare Israel, the Lord your God is one God. Thou shalte loue the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soule, & with all thy strength, and these wordes which I commaunde thée this daye, shall be in thy heart, and thou shalte declare them to thy children, and thou shalte be occupied in them, sitting in thy house, and walking in thy iorney, and when thou art going to slepe, and rising, &c. This care to kepe the precepts of God, is founde in the harts of them which be godly disposed, and that loue God, but not the perfecte fulfilling of thẽ. And yet I wote not how it commeth to passe, that a man which loueth and kepeth the commandements, though he haue many lackes, pleaseth God more than the angel, though he lack in nothing, but fulfil all the commãdements, if he haue not this keping. I do not ascribe vnto the angels that they be destitute of the keping of Gods commaundements, but I doe expresse the estimation of this keping by his comparison such as it is. But withall wee muste beware, least we think that by this reason of keping of Gods commaundements, the fulfilling of them is excluded, seing that they be neuer better perfor-

That he saith not, fulfil, but kepe my cõmandemẽts med,

med, thã if they be first kept in hart. Again, they cannot be truely kepte with heart, and be despised in déede. For no man kepeth them with hart, vnlesse he loue them: and he that loueth them, doth according vnto the nature of loue, to the vttermoste of his power performe them. Therfore this keping of the commandements of God, as daughter vnto loue, maketh vp the perfectiõ of them. So we read in Leuiticus: Kepe my commandements, and do them. And of this sort of keping, Christ speaketh: Blessed be they which heare the word of God and kepe it.

6 Sirtlye, it is to be obserued against ỹ techers of deseruing: that he saith not, And yelding al det and due: but and doing mercie in thousandes of them which loue me and kepe my commaundements. God doth giue againe vnto them that loue him, and kepe his commandements: but he giueth not againe, as dutie or det, to counteruaile our deseruing, but he doth mercy. It is fauour, it is goodnesse, it is mercye, yea euen that which is bestowed vpon them which kepe Gods commaundements. For so we ought to iudge, and so to be affected towards ỹ good doing of God, that there bee left nothing whereof our flesh may glorie in the sight of God: but there must alwaies remain with vs, wherfore we may with full mouth set forth the mercie of God.

But I pray you, sée how froward this sort of men are. They set not a point by the keping of Gods cõmandementes, so that the authoritie of theyr owne traditions, whiche they cal and crake to be sometimes ecclesiastical, sometime catholike, sometimes Apostolical, be stedfast & sure. And yet they doe argue againste the doctrine of faith & iustification, out of this & other like places: saying: Loe, how the promise of the infinite mercie of God is knit vnto loue, and to the keping of his commandements. Ergo, faith only doth not iustifie, but loue & workes do also iustifie. They do in countenance prikke men forth to good works, as though the doctrine of iustification by faith, availed nothing to well doing & keping of Gods cõmandements, but did also hinder it, wheras they couet in déede to haue their owne commandements surely obserued, & not the precepts of God. Would to God, we might al truely loue the lord our God, with all ỹ power of our minde, & that we mighte kepe hys commaundementes without blame and without all offence, then we shoulde be happye in déede. But who is he that doth so? and we wil commende him. For must vnderstand, So disposed by the strength of nature & free wil: without doubte, no man. Therefore it is necessarie first of al, that the way of our salvation do stand vpõ the fauour of God, in fayth, by the blod of Christ Iesu, to be sure as the Apostle reciteth the matter to the Romaines, & then that beyng iustified by fayth, we may be new borne, and be made such as we may both loue god our father, which loueth vs, and applye our selfs whylye and hartyly to kepe his commandementes. We must consider that these words which commande somewhat and doe crave the képing of Goddes commaundementes, bée words of law, and to be applied vnto their owne vse, whiche is peculiar

Rom. 3.

The vvordes of the lavv do not vveaken the preceptes of grace

vnto

vnto them: and not so to be vsed, that we shall for them weaken the promises of the heauenly grace, or fauoure of the Gospell.

Loue commeth of faith, and not faith of loue. Gals.

Againe, we must thinke that the efficacie and strength of loue commeth of faith iustifying, & not faith by loue. So Paule sayth: In Christ Iesu neither circumcision auayleth any thing, nor vncircumcision, but faith whiche worketh by loue. Lo, faith (saith he) is working by loue, that is to say, worketh those thynges, which be brought to passe by ỹ loue of God. So that you may se, thys place doth rather confirme the iustification by faithe, than make anye thing against it. But of this matter in another place.

The third Commandemente.

Thou shalte not take the name of the Lorde thy God in vayne, for the Lorde will not hold him giltlesse, that taketh his name in vayne.

After that which he sayde first, euen in the beginning, I am the Lord thy God, whiche brought thee out of Egypt, out of the house of bondage, he did next giue them warning to eschewe both the multitude of gods of the Gentiles, and their Idolatrie also, to giue them to vnderstand, that it is principally required at their hãds, that they cast aside all Ethnike impietie, and sticke sincerely, and clerely to hym alone, their onely Lorde God. Now in this third Commaundemente he requireth the due reuerence, estimation, sanctifying & worshipping of his name, saying, Thou shalt not take the name of the Lorde thy God in vayne. For it standeth with good reason, that he whiche is the Lord, should be esteemed and honored of them, whose Lord he is. So he saith in the Prophete Malachie: The sonne honoreth his father, and the seruant his Lord. And therefore, if I be the father, where is mine honour: and if I be ỹ Lord, where is ỹ feare you beare to me? sayth the lord of hoastes. So that this thirde precept is by right consequence and order sette nexte vnto the other two before.

Malach.

And there be two partes thereof. The one contayneth a prohibition, the other a threatning ioyned withall. The former forbiddeth vs to cõtemne the name of God, whiche is done by the abuse of it. The abuse of it is, when it is vsed to no purpose, and in vaine, and as he declareth a reuerent minde of God which vseth it holyly, with honor and deuotion: so he bewrayeth his owne contempt of it, that vseth it irreligiously, rashly, and vainely. The latter part doth threaten Gods reuenge vpon them, whiche take the name of the Lorde their God in vaine.

Two partes in this precept.

And it is all one, to take ỹ name of God in vaine, and to take it without cause, without honor, out of a true matter, or readily and rashly, or prophanely, or to maintayne a lye.

For he sayth, The Lorde will not leaue him vnpunished, which taketh his name in vayne. It is in the Hebrewe, He will not iudge him innocente, he will not take him to be giltlesse, which is nothing else, but that he will assuredly punish him as giltye. This is by the way for the exposition sition of this precept, which hathe no point of darkenesse at all, neyther in the letter, neither in the sense. Nowe let vs se what things are to be considered in it.

VVhat is required by thys third precept.

The Obseruation.

Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vayne. Firste we must obserue, that in his commaundinge he sayth not simplye, Sanctifye the name of the Lord thy God: whereas this is in dede required in thys precepte, but after a manner of forbidding, Thou shalte not take, or Take not the name of the Lorde thy God in vayne. And thys was not done without cause. All nations generally are accustomed to sweare by the names of their Gods. The Israelits also would sweare by the name of their Lord God. And the Lawgyuer knew the corruption and vanitie of mans hart, that as the Gentiles did vainely, madnisedly, and falsely sweare by the names of their Gods, so euen the Israelites would also vainely vse the name of the Lorde their God. Therefore of grace, wisedome, and good purpose, he dyd not say, Sanctifye my name: but especially and expressly he did forbid the abuse of his name, saying: Take not the name of the Lorde thy God in vayne, as though he had said: as the Ethnykes do, which sweare vaynely and falsely by the names of false Gods. Upon like cause also before in the first precept he said not, I am the Lord thy God. &c. Thou shalte serue and worship me aboue. &c. but, Thou shalte haue no other Goddes before me. Whereas for all that he required euen this same, that he would be alone, and only serued of his people. And after in the second precepte hee doth most diligently in specialtyes, forbidde the making and worshipping of Images, euen the very same way, that he vsed both in the firste, and also in this third precept. All the Gentiles hauyng peculiarly Gods of theyr owne, worshipped also other Gods: besides that, they did worship them in deasse, dumb, blind, and vnsensible Images. Thirdly, they dyd most vainly sweare by their names. These thræ thynges were generally most vsed of all the Gentiles: whervnto the Israelites were also many yeares accustomed, when they lyued in Egypte. Therefore God dyd of a speciall foresyghte and purpose, namely forbydde these thynges in these thræ precептes, and that with threatening, to the intente that they should know, that they shuld forsake the accustomed impietie of the Gẽtiles, and sticke faithfully, sincerely, and deuoutely vnto him the God alone, if they would be his people, and in all thinges enioy his godnesse and fauoure.

By this example all godly mẽ be admonished, that where soeuer they finde suche prohibitions of the lawe set forth, they must cõsider the cause of them, whych cõmeth eyther of the corruption of oure flesshe, enclined vnto the thynges forbydden, or else of some custome of the Gentyles, so strong, that it maye trouble the neyghbours that bée of theyr Religyon, as it were wyth the corrupte ayre béeyng at hande, vnlesse it bée wyth greate diligence foreséene, and kepte awaye.

The causes of the prohibitions of the lawe is to be cõsidered.

Therefore

Therefore Moyses said vnto the Israelites: See to, serch not the ceremonies of y Gentiles that be thrust out, saying: As these people worshipped their Gods, so I will also worship. Then shalt not do so to the Lord thy God. For they did all manner of abhominations vnto their Goddes, offering their sones and daughters, which the Lord doth abhorre. Deut.12.

Secondlye, we muste marke that also, that whereas he forbiddeth the contempte and vaine vsing of his name, he chargeth vs to declare such reuerence and deuoute feare as is due vnto the same. Here is no maintenance of their superstition, which haue, I wote not what names of God, at theyr fingers ends, which they dare not speake for superstition: such is the Foure lettered name, Iehouah, which they call Adonay, & when they muste write it, they write it Iehouah: as for, Elohym, they write Elodym: as though it were a great offence, if the names of God were plainely read, written, and spoken, as their meaning is. There is no suche matter meante here. It skilleth not before GOD, with what wordes you remember him, so that they be not vnsitting and vngodly: but with what faith, what religion, what reuerence you do it withal. He that iudgeth holyly, deuoutely, and religiously of God, can not irreligiously and vainely vse his name. And alwayes it appeareth by our vsage of Gods name, howe holily and reuerently we iudge of him. We shall see many that will put off their caps, and shew some other token of reuerence, when there is anye mention made of the King, or Queene to declare howe reuerently they do iudge of their rulers. And among Christiā men you shal see many make mention of God the father, of his sonne Christ Iesu our Lorde and sauiour, and of the holy spirite, and also heare it of others, without anye token of honour and reuerence. This blockishnesse doth verily betoken a light opinion of God in hart, whatsoeuer they say in wordes. Of the reuerence and deuoute vsing of the name of God.

Thirdly, we muste consider that he saith not, Take not my name, but Take not the name of the Lord thy God in vaine: albeit God speaketh here of none other but of himselfe. And this was not done without speciall cause, for by this manner of speache he signifieth that he doth not so much seek his owne glorie, as the saftie of his people. He doth not only go about to be had himselfe in honour and reuerence, as the minde of Princes and potentates is, in thys world, but he woulde that the people should regarde and religiously and holily vse the blessed name of the Lorde their God, bycause he is their Lord and God.

So the Godly magistrate ought not to loke for this only in the subiectes, that he himselfe be feared and serued, but that the subiectes maye learne of their magistrate, as of the minister of God, to iudge as they ought, vprightly of the, least if they contemne them they offende against the ordinaunce of God.

So let parentes also accustome their children to worship and serue, not so muche the persons of them in themselues, as the very order apointed by God, that they should be their parents. And let the husband require not

Deut.6.

He sayth not Take not the name of the Lorde thy God maliciously not this only of hys wife, that she be obedyente vnto hym, but that she be subiect vnto him with a certayne reuerence and knowledge of the duetie of wedlocke. For in suche obseruance and reuerence it appeareth that the mind doth orderly, that is to saye, not constreyned, but obeying willingly, regard not his owne commoditie, but the order appointed by God. He that worshippeth the name of God, bycause he is mightie, and bycause he is able to doe both good & harme, to saue and destroy, he seketh himselfe, and not the glory of God: and would do the like to other Gods, if he beleeued that they were also such. But he dothe only rightly and orderly magnifie and reuerence the name of God, which regardeth thys onely, that he is his Lorde and God, and doth honor, loue, worshippe, and serue him for that cause. Therefore it was heere most aptly said of God: Take not the name of the Lord thy God in vaine, as though he had said, Thinke more religiously, more holily, more magnifically and nobly of the Lorde thy God, than that thou may abide vainely to vse his name.

Fourthly, it is also to be considered, that he saith not only, Take not the name of the Lorde thy God, but he addeth, Vaynely. So that he forbiddeth not the vse of hys name, whereby othes are confirmed, but he forbiddeth to doe it rashly & vainely.

Forasmuche as othes be made by the names of false Gods, he doth vterly and simply detest that. And in Exodus, he doth not say, Thou shalt not sweare vainely by the names of straunge Gods, but by the names of straunge Gods you shal not sweare: nor it shall not be hard out of thy mouth. And if he had euen so detested an othe made by his name, he would not haue sayde in thys Decalogue, Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vayne, but simplye, Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God. Yea he did command that we should sweare by his name, as we maye see in Deuteronomy, where we reade: Thou shalt feare the Lord thy God, and serue him only. Whiche is redde also likewise in the. 10. of Deuteronomy. Wherefore it is not to be borne, that the Anabaptists goe aboute to take away lawful othes. But of this matter see in oure treatie of othes in the end of this booke.

Fiftly, way this also, that he saith not: Take not the name of the Lord thy God maliciously or to blaspheme, but, Take not the name of the Lorde thy God in vayne. And yet it is much more detestable, if a man do vse the name of the Lorde eyther in doing maliciously, or in blaspheming: than if he vse it only in vaine, that is to say, vnprofitably, vnaduisedly, without truth. What is the matter then that he did rather forbidde that whiche is more grieuous and more wicked, than that whyche is lighter and may more easily bee borne withall?

Thys also is not done withoute reason. The most holy name of Gods maiestie is diuers and sundry ways defiled and dishonored, by the vnaduisednesse of man: all which wayes it had not bin meete in specialties to oppresse, least he should haue passed by meane of his Decalogue, which was tempered vnto the capacitie of the common sorte of the people. Therefore he did expresse ỳ way, of whiche the sinne is lighter to giue vs to vnderstand, that all those abuses of the name of God, whiche in their grieuousnesse and wickednesse do namely exceede this, and be more contumelious to ỳ name of God, are more forbidden and condemned, and so deserueth also greuouser punishmēts.

A similitude.

Matth.12. The lesse sinnes bee forbidden to the intent we should absteyn from the greater.

If the father say vnto his sonne: Looke thou ray not thys coate with anye spotte, though it be neuer so small: it may easily be vnderstanded, that it may be worse taken, if it bee cast into the durt and myre of the streates: but it may yet worst of all be borne, if he tumble himselfe into a most filthy sinke with ỳ coate whiche hys father can not abyde to bee spotted with neuer so little a wemb.

If we shall make an accompte for euery ydle word, how much more of euery malicious and blasphemous worde? So we must thinke also in this place, If we be forbidden ỳ we shall not take the name of God in vaine, how muche more must we beleeue, that we be forbidden to vse it maliciously and blasphemously. The holy Ghost vseth in this sorte to forbidde the lesser sinnes, that we may vnderstād that the greater be muche the more forbidden, and on the other side to commend those things which seemeth to be of small momente, to declare that the better be much commendable before God. So Christ sayeth. Who soeuer giueth drinke a cuppe of cold water to one of these little ones, onely in the name of a Disciple, yea I say vnto you, he shall not lose his reward. What can bee more easie, lesse trouble and cost, thā to giue a cuppe of colde water vnto him, ỳ is a thirst? If he shal receiue reward of God that doth this, howe much rather shall he receyue whych both fedeth and clotheth, and giueth all other necessaries whiche bee of more weight? Like is also that place of Mathew: Verely I say vnto you, what soeuer you haue done to one of these little ones, you haue done it to me. In saying Little ones, he excludeth not the greater, but so includeth them, that we may vnderstande, that we doe seruice vnto Christ, if we doe any good to the Apostles themselues, and to other like them, as Prophets, Doctors and Euangelistes.

Matth.10. Of the cup of colde water.

Mat.

Of the

Thirdly, we must see how the name of God is contemned.

1 Firste, it is contemned when it is vsed rashly, vpon light causes, and in lyes, but they also whiche doe vnaduisedly minister othes in ỳ name of God vnto such mē, of whom they can conceiue no other hope, but that they will sweare vaynely and falsely. But of all this abuse of the name of God, which is cōmitted by swearing, false swearing, forswearing, cursing, and banning. See the place of othes in the ende of this Booke.

bolis oaths.

ng

gels.

2 Secondly, they do so which doe set the holy sacred name of God before Bulles, as they call them, as though they did that which they doe in the name of God, and did not rather for gaine make merchaundise (as Peter sayth) of the Churche of God. Such be the Bulles of the Bishoppe of Rome, whiche who soeuer first began this name, did most aptly so tearme the word Bulla, whiche is as much to say, as a bubble.

The of G before Popes les.

Thirdly, they doe also abuse the name name of God, who whereas they be the verye slaues of the bellie, vayne glory, the pleasures of the flesh, and of Antichrist himselfe, yet they doe faine themselues to be the seruaunts and ministers of God, and doe colloure their doctrine with the authoritie of Gods name, as though they did not sette forthe the dreames & imaginations of mens rash heads, to the faithfull, hauing altogither the same spirit which the false prophets amōg the Iewes in times past were inspired withal, who had oftentimes in their mouth, This saith the Lord. Of whome see in Jeremy. We are compelled nowe adayes to our great griefe, to see and feare this most noysome abuse of gods name, now waxing greate agayne in the Churche. They call togither councels, and for authorities sake pretende the name of God, as though the Bishoppe of Rome in calling ỳ Coūcell, wrought not his owne affayres: and they that be called, wedded partlye vnto their owne affections, partly vnto the disposition of their superiours, but that both he and they did meane the glory of the name of God. This wayes they make al Christendome pēuish, affirming that they be gathered togither by the instinct of the holy spirit, and in all things directed by him, so that who soeuer doubteth neuer so little of their orders and determinations, and doe not simply without all ignorance subscribe in all things, they crie out he is an heretike, and to be adiudged to the fyre. This kynde of men doe not only vnaduisedly and vaynely take the name of God, but maliciously also, when they vse that for a couer vnto all their counsels, actes, commaundements, and determinations. But I lye when I saye thus, if the Bishop of Rome be the true minister of our Lorde and Sauiour Christe Iesu, if he be a true successor & folower of his Apostles, if he climbe to the heigth of this Bishoprike, lawfully and according to the order of the Church, without the fauour of men, if he do only desire to set forthe the Kingdome of Christe, which is not of this world, if he doe not offende againste that saying of Christ: The Kings of the Gentiles beareth rule ouer thē, but you may not do so: if they despise all the glory, pomp, pryde, ambition, boasting, lordlinesse and glory of the worlde, and can say truely with the Apostle Peter: Golde & siluer I haue not, but ỳ which I haue, that I giue thē, to fulfill that saying of Christe to the Apostles: Freely you haue receyued, Freely giue: if hee loue Christes Shēpe, and fede them wyth the word of Doctrine and Preaching of the Gospell of God, according vnto that saying of Christ: Peter louest thou me? fede my Shēpe: if hys seate be cleare from all symonye, the fyrste poyson of the Churches, whiche the auntient fathers called, The fyrste heresie subiect vnto curse: if it bee cleare from the bloud of innocentes, from pilling and killing the Shēpe of Christe, from surfet, ydlenesse, wantonnesse, whoredome, and aduoutrie: I lye if they whiche be called by hym to the councels, bee not bounde vnto hym, but men free of spirite and estate, if they seeke not the peace of this worlde, but the peace of Chryste, if they did not climbe to the degrees of the

The faults of the Popes and the Bishops.

Acts. 3.

Matth.10.

Iohn.21.

dignities in the Churche for temporall and carnall commodities, if they ordered not their life according vnto the fashiō of the world more carnall than spirituall, if they be not ambitious, couetous, delightyng more in the preferments than in the trauayles of the Church, if they doe not catche, and spoyle and oppresse them whome they ought to feede, if they delighte not in pride, Idlenesse, and wastfulnesse, if they set not by worldly wisedom, and if they sauour not more of Aristotle thā of Christ, and if they vse not in their councels the professors of Aristotles doctrine, Thomas, Scotus, and Bonauēture, rather than the Apostles and the Euangelistes, if they doe not esteeme gaine more than godlinesse, and thē whyche can serue their turne for worldly gayne, rather than suche as be studious of true godlinesse, if they be cleare from all auarice, from surfeting, belycare, symony, whordome and adultery, from the bloud of the poore & innocents: if they do not wickedly cōsume the goodes of the poore, and the patrimonie as they call it, of the Crucified, and turne them vnto their owne wanton wast, if they bee not combered with these mischeuous faultes, which do declare them to bee quite out from ỹ Kingdome of God. I say, I lye, if they be not suche that do now adayes pretend ỹ holy name of God to their conuenticles and determinations, so that they cannot frō their hearte, nor will not, seeke the glory of Gods name, nor truely and holsomly prouide for the Church of God, being in pitifull case and daunger. But who can sufficiently examine, howe perniciously they doe vse the name of Gods maiestie to thys purpose, that they may by coloure thereof, obteyne authoritie in the Church, to decree and establishe such things as may be commodious to their Kingdome, and to the decaye both of the glory of God, and of the saluation of man.

4 Fourthly, neither they be cleare frō the transgressiō of this commandemēt, which do graue the name and Image of God in monies, badges, and rings, whiche thing they woulde neuer do, if eyther they iudged reuerently inough, or not superstitiously of the name of God. The wise men also of the Gentils did acknowledge, that men ought to iudge more highly of God, thā to vse his name and image in euery thing, and vnaduisedly. Therof cōmeth that saying of Pythagoras, No man ought to cary about the Image of God in a ring.

5 Fiftely, that Diuelish abuse also of the name of God, is cōdemned, when it is vsed to magicall inchantments, and casting of lottes by wicked persons, men in no wise to bee suffered, as though we had suche a God, which did allow suche impietie against his owne worde.

6 Sixtly, they be also culpable in this point, whiche are wonte in all things, which they wil do or sufreine, though it be neuer so trifling and vayne, yea though it be sometymes damnable and hurtfull, without any discretion or religion, vse this worde to common: In the name of ỹ Lord, which thei haue euer in their mouth, and vse it sometymes in anger, sometymes in sporte. Thys lyghtenesse and vanitie hath taken suche place euerye where among vs Chriſtians, to vse the name of God contemptuously vnto all things, that you shall find very few that be cleere from this fault.

7 Seuenthly, they be also touched in this part, which neuer open their mouthes to pray or to sing, but for their belly and for gaines sake, and say, Lord, Lord, when in hearte they be farthest off from the Lorde. Of whome the Lord himselfe complayneth, saying: This people honoreth me with lippes, but their hearte is farre from me. Hitherto I haue briefly rehearsed as well as I could, for this presente, howe the name of God is contemned in talking of it vaynely and sinfully. Now nexte let vs see, howe it may be contemned of vs, in not vsing of it.

1 Firste, for asmuche as we be all counted the people of oure God, as many as do professe Christes Religion, and therefore his name is called vppon vs, euen as it was in the old time vppon the Iewes: it commeth to passe, that this vniuersall corruption of our life in the sight of the Gentiles, whiche be not of oure faith, bringeth muche shame to the name of oure God: so that euen as God dyd in tymes past blame the Iewes which liued wickedly amōg ỹ Gētiles, bycause his name had euil report amōg the Gentiles. Ezech. 36. So he may nowe also to truely and worthily complaine, that hys name is defiled in the sight of the Turkes and Iewes, by the malice of our deuices and purposes. So that our lyfe being so many wayes corrupt, dothe it selfe defile the name of the Lorde our God, although it be neuer vsed with our mouth. Therefore the Apostle doth warne seruāts to esteeme their maisters worthy of all honor, least the name and doctrine of God should be blaspheмed: which should be indede, if a Christian man should wickedly behaue himselfe, eyther towardes, eyther amongst the infidels.

The name of God is contemned when his worde, which is set forth in his name, is not hard deuoutely, reuerently and obediently.

2 Secondly, the name of God is contemned when his worde, which is set forth in his name, is not hard deuoutely, reuerently and obediently. For who can thinke hym to be desirous of Gods glorie, whiche sleepingly heareth, or sometimes also disdaineth to heare, and maketh reckning neuer to perform those things, which be truely, and according to the rule of Gods worde, sette forthe vnto the Church of God vnder his name, but accompteth all Religion to bee eyther in hearing or vnderstandyng of the worde? You may finde manye now adayes, which albeit they cannot denay, but that those thyngs which be preached in the Church of God, be true, and taken out of hys worde, yet they disdeyne to heare it. And on the other side, there be that doe heare but they neuer meane to follow it. Both these sorts of men be subiect vnto sorer iudgemente than they be, whiche doe receyue and studye to fulfill the doctrines of men with a religious affection. For that they suppose that they be set forthe, not by men, but by God.

The counterfeit Gospellers.

And to tell you the verye truth, I am very much afrayd of those me of our time, which knowing and confessing the trueth of the Gospell of Christ, behaue themselues more villanously and spitefully towards the power and strength thereof, thā they doe towards the fansies of Monkes and the decrées of bussenly Bysshops, whiche are still trayned in the errours of the Papistes: yea they are become so farre vnlike themselues, that whereas in Popery they were deuoute in errours and superstition, after they are come to knowe the truth, they are more prófane than the verye children of this worlde, more light, more rash, and more vayne.

The suffering of the blasphéming of Gods name is helping to the contempt of Gods name

3 Thirdly, they can not be excused neither, which do patiently heare, and do not abhorre & speake againste the vayne, yea and sometymes the blasphemous abuse of Gods name. Herein the magistrates do exceedingly amisse, for that they doe not to the vttermost of their power méete with this Diuelish custome of cursing and blasphéming, waxing in euery place greater and greater: but do sharply punishe, if anye man doe abuse theyr owne maiestie neuer so lightly. And they doe also offende in this pointe, whiche holde their peace, when they heare blasphemies powred out againste the holy worde of God, and doe not defende the glorye of Gods truth

The name of God is contemned vvhen vnvvorthy men be appoynted to holy ministeries.

4 Fourthly, what shall I saye of them, whiche doe eyther themselues vnworthily come vnto the blessed ministerie of Gods worde, or that doe appointe others vnworthy to come vnto the same? Do not these men also contemptuously take the name of Gods maiestie? Such a matter it is, whiche we reade is obiected to the Priests of the Iewes, in the Prophet Malachie, in this sort: Do you priests which do despise my name, and saye: Wherein haue we despised thy name? You offer vpon mine Aulter defyled bread, and you do saye: wherein haue we defyled thée? In that that you say, the table of the Lord is despised, If you offer a blind thing vnto sacrifice, is it not euil? and yf you offer a lame and weake thing, is it not euil? Offer it vnto thy guyde, if it please hym, or if he like thy countenaunce, sayth the Lord God of hoastes. And againe. Which is he amóg you, that will shutte the doores, and make fyre vpon my Aulter for nothing? I haue no will in you, sayeth the Lorde of hoastes, and I will not receyue a reward at your hands. I beséche you, is not the name of God euen in these dayes contemned in like sorte, when the vilest sorte of men are made ministers of the Church vnder the name of him? The roufes of the Churches (saith Jérome) glistereth with golde, the Temple shyneth with marble, but there is no choyce taken of the ministers of Christ.

Malac. 1.

And of these things we reade in this sorte. The Priestes despise the name of the Lorde, and concernyng themselues, offered defiled bread, and that they come vnworthily vnto the Aulter, and presume vnto Priesthood with giuing of giftes, and he doth also defyle the bread whiche doth euill beshowe the word of God among the people, and he that honoreth ỹ mightie, and despiseth the poore. Also hée offereth a blinde beast, that setteth an vnlearned man in the place of the learned, and maketh a Maister whiche is scarcely able to be a Scholler. And he offereth the lame and halting, which placeth hym that séeketh the riches of the Earth, as treadyng hys féete two contrary wayes: one in Godly matters, the other in carnall carnal causes. He offereth the weake and faynte, whyche in stéede of the deuoute man taketh the vicious. &c. For it is not méete to giue God, that which man disdayneth of. This is in that place.

But a man may take mée to bée almost pæuishe, that I woulde attempte to rehearse the wayes by whyche Gods name is vaynely vsed and contemned: when as if euer, surely the contempte of it is in oure time growen in euery place almost to the highest that it can, and that all the doings of oure life be full of it, whereas all our sayings and déedes ought to tende to the glory of hym, as Paule doth admonish vs when he saith: Whatsoeuer you do in worde or in déede, do all in the name of oure Lorde Iesu Christ. And, Whether you eate or drinke, or whatsoeuer other thing you do, do all vnto the glory of God.

The Obseruation.

For the Lorde will not let hym go vnpunished, that taketh hys name in vayne.

Fyrste lette vs obserue, howe well and handsomly the commaundemente and the threatening of the payne are ioyned togyther. The precepte teacheth what is to bée done, and what is not to be done. The threatenyng feareth, and maketh vs ware that we be not ouermuche careleste to offende against the precept of God, wherein we must fyrste consider how faithfull the Lorde is, not only in that, that he teacheth and instructeth vs by his preceptes of the kéeping of hys wyll, of true righteousnesse and godlynesse, but also in that, that he ioyneth to his preceptes threatning of paine, declaring that he delighteth not in the losse of the Soules of men, but that he hadde rather that he woulde in obeying his lawe, lyue quietly, abyde in hys fauoure, and gyue no manner occasion to anger and punishmente. For what other matter is soughte by the threatnings, but that we should, béeing warned and putte in feare by wordes, eschewe the paynes appoynted to the transgressors, and that we myght rather happyly finde him a gentle and fauourable God, than angrie and punishyng to oure vndoyng?

The corruption of our nature.

Herte wée must also weye, howe greate the corruption of oure nature is, whyche gaue occasion as well to thys precepte, as also to the threatnyng ioyned vnto it. If oure nature were whole and incorrupte, we coulde not abyde by any meanes to prophane and vse vaynely the blessed name of oure Lorde GOD. Familiaritie breedeth contempte.

Thys familiaritie, whereby we are annexed vnto the true GOD in league of couenaunte most vnworthy and wretched, withoute all oure deserte, shoulde not brédde in oure hearte anye contempte towardes thys goodnesse of God, but shoulde rather fasten in vs a pure loue, true and godlye obedience and seruice, a perpetuall gratefulnesse of mynde, acknowledgyng and setting forthe the benefytes of God, and to be briefe, iudging holyly, deuoutelye, and magnifically of God, and generally of al his purposes, sayings and doings. But nowe for asmuche as we be of a corrupte and peruerse nature, so it is, that this fauor of familiaritie and coniunction, breedeth in vs a mind, iudging lightly and cõtemptuously of our Lord God, and of his name, and of his word, misteries, and doings: and therefore rashly and vaynely vsing all matters touching him, so that that common and ouertrue saying is also fulfilled in thys: Ouer muche familiaritie, breedeth contempt.

Hereof we haue seene of late most manifest examples in them whyche without any token of honor and reuerence, sette and walke vp & downe proudely and disdaynefully alone, or chatting, trifling, and laughyng with others, yea and casting wanton eyes vpon women (if any be present) or if the tyme will serue, alluring them with countenaunces and beckes, euen in the Churches, before the aulters, at the celebrating of the holye misterie of Christe, as they be commonly perswaded, when their Masses be song, euen before their holye Pixe, where they are wonte, according vnto their manner, to reserue the scrappes of the Sacramente of the Lords body. And ỹ Sexton himselfe, whyles he ministreth at the seruice, and lighteth or putteth out the Candels standing vpon the Aulter, or hanging before the Pixe, and is busie in his Churche worke, he putteth not off his Cap for any deuotion. And from whence commeth this contempt, but of the dayly familiaritie, and common vse of that holye matter.

But would to God, they alone had offended this wise, what other finde we now adayes in them, whiche bee most familiarly acquainted with the hearing and reading of Gods worde and holy Scriptures: do not they also negligentlye heare the worde of God, contemptuously and negligently reade the Canonical Scriptures, if they reade it at all, negligentlye speake of God and of his worde, or rather dishonor the oracles of God with their friuolous arguing and reasoning. This is (as we may see) the peruersitie of mans hart.

If we be shut frõ the knowledge of truth, and from the coniunction of God, and partaking of his misteries, we be not only lost, but we bee made also open enimies and the backfriends of God, of his word and misteries: and we raile at ỹ whiche we know not, and from which we be farre wide both in vnderstanding and in affection, and after the fashiõ of Cain, we doe persecute and slay the Abels our brethren, which God loueth. Againe, if we be by that infinite goodnesse of God to our saluation receyued into the societie and cõmunion of true good things, by and by we doe degenerate to the lightenesse of an vngrate and vaine mind, that the more grace and benefites that we haue receyued of God, so much lesse deuoutely, holily, and reuerently we do iudge of him. Wherof it happeneth also consequentlye, that we vse all his benefites in most lightest sort and vainely. Therefore it is not without purpose, that God doth thus charge his people, whyche he had take to be his peculiar flocke, and with whome he had also made a couenaunte, saying: Take not the name of the Lorde thy GOD in vayne. And the Apostle dothe admonishe vs, that wee take not the grace of God in vayne: and that we eate not of the Lords bread vnworthylye: which maner of commandementes had bin in deede set forthe to no purpose, if we were not such, in whom the familiaritie both of God and of holy things, doth breed a vaine and contemptuous minde. Besides, that we doe also, according vnto the lightnesse of our harte, little regarde our vayne and contemptuous vsing of Gods name, his worde, his misteries and benefites: not thinking that it wyl come to passe, that euer we shal be punished for the offending of his patience by this maner of contempt. For if we were not so minded, what neede had bene for him (I pray you) to haue ioyned a threatening of payne vnto this precept?

The profite of hearing.

grace

6.

But of this that we being so exceedingly light and vaine, do beare our self in hande that we shall go free for the vayne vsing the name of God, & setting at naught God and all his sayings and doyngs, what can come els but this vniuersall contempt and abuse of Gods name, which hath gotten the vpper hand now euery wher throwout Christendome, and raygneth without blame? For as the feare of the displeasure of God, and of deserued punishment, doeth restrayne vs from euil, so this lightenesse breedeth the rashnesse & vniuersall custome of sinne.

So that agaynst this lightenesse & securitie of sin, there is set the threatening of the payne, where GOD sayth, that the Lord will not let him go giltlesse, that taketh his name in vayne. Likewise the Apostle, whereas he doeth admise vs, that we eate not the bread of the Lord vnworthyly, to knock downe this lightenesse and carelesnesse of our moste vayne hart, he addeth also a threatening of Gods iudgement, saying: Who so euer eateth vnworthyly, eateth his own iudgement. Item, He shalbe giltye of the body & blod of the Lord.

The difference of the threatenings.

Secondly, we must consider how much difference there is betwixt the threatening, which was added vnto the precept goyng before, and the threatening of this thirde precept. There he sayth very sharply: The Lorde thy God is ielous, visiting the wickednesse of the fathers in ỹ children, into the thirde and fourthe generatiõ of them which hate me. But here he saith simply, that God will not holde him gitlesse, which taketh his name in vaine. Of this difference of the threatening we may see, how that sinne of idolatrie, whereby our counterfayte Christians now a days thinke that they serue God marueilously, passeth the contempt of the name of God, which is forbidden in this third precept. In deede the wife doeth amisse, if she esteeme hir husbande lighter than she ought to doe, and vse not his name reuerentlye ynough: and she is worthy to be corrected for that lightnesse, yet she doth not with this kinde of offence so outragiously kindle the wrathe of hir husband towardes hir, as she should doe, if she beskowed hir bodye with others also in adulterye, besides hir husband. In lyke maner he may not be iudged giltlesse nor shal not scape free, who so euer vseth the name of the Lord God in vayne: But he doth most greuously of all prouoke the zeale of God against him, which in kneeling vnto images, maketh himselfe the hater of God.

That it determineth no certain payne.

Whirdin, let vs way also the qualitie of this threatening. He determineth no certayne payn, but onlye he sayth, The Lorde will not holde him giltlesse, which taketh his name in vayne. By this kinde of thretning they only be put in feare which haue fayth and feare of God, and be so affected, that they hadde rather suffer any thing, than feele the displeasure of God: wishing nothyng more, than to keepe the fauour of Goddes good wil. Therefore these threateninges be in vayne set vnto wicked menne, which be destitute of all fayethe and fauour of God, which hadde rather haue God displeased, than forsake their carnall affections, & abstayne from the contempt and abuse of the name of God. Set me this threatening before them which vse the colour of godlinesse, & cloke of the name of God to their owne gaine and cõmoditie, to fil their bellies, & proue it a thousand times what such threateninges can do with them, and you shall trye in effecte, that you doe nothing else but lose your labour. But let vs (if there be any fayth in our hartes) marke diligently, in what earnest this threatening is set forth. He sayth not simply, For God will punithe him: but to speake with a more assurednesse he sayth, For the Lord wil not holde him giltlesse, that taketh his name in vayne. What is else meant here, but to persuade vs moste certainly, that all they shal be subiecte vnto the iudgement of God, and punished, whiche take his name in vayne? And it is not conuenient that we should thinke that God wold with pithlesse wordes (as some cockering fathers doe) sleightly and for a countenaunce only feare his people, as we se the matter vsed of some Magistrats of our time, which think that their subiectes can be feared only with wordes. Farre from the terrible maiestie of God be suche lightnesse: ye farre also be it from godly mindes so to thinke of the Lorde our God. For nothyng can be deuised more ready for all kinde of mischief, than to thinke in our heartes, God wil not punish, but threatenech only in wordes, to stay them that be ouer fearefull in the keping of his cõmandements. Wherefore no man muste thinke, but that the threatnings of Gods wrath be no lesse certayne at all, than his promises of grace.

In howe great earnest this precept is set forth.

Let vs imagine heere what maye be loked for in this our age, in which the holy name of God is diuers and sundry wayes, not by some fewe, but euery where and vniuersally of the chief, of olde and young, of man and woman, vsed not only vainly & lightly, but also falsly and deceitefully, to deceyue the vnwarye, to the greadinesse of the belly, to idlenesse and wantonnesse, to the oppression of the truth and of innocentes, and also to cursing, &c. It can not be, but that some horrible punishment is at hand, which shal then fall vpon vs, when we haue accomplished vp the iuste measure, which is impietie & others like. And as he sayd: Whatsoeuer is delayed, it is not taken away: but this slacknesse of Gods patience wilbe quailed with the greuousnesse of the payne.

Nowe if they demaunde, whether this certentie of the threatninges of God be so irremouable, that there is no is no waye for them which at any time haue irreuerentlye vsed the name of God, to escape it: I answere with the Apostle. If we doe iudge our selues, we shal not be iudged of the Lord. The grace of forgiuenesse is ready for them that will acknowledge, detestle, and condemne their sin, if they be touched in hart with perfect purpose of amendement & hope, and so flee to the fauor of the mercye of God. And all these penalties set forth in holy Scriptures for the trãsgressors of Gods will, whether they be for a time, or for euer, be no otherwise to be vnderstanded, but that they haue respecte vnto the impenitent, which be vtterly voyde of faith, and without any amendement continue in sinne, without all recouery. For so we reade in Ezechiel: If the wicked repente for all his sinnes which he hath done, and doth kepe my preceptes, and doth iudgement and iustice, he shall liue the life and not dye. I wil not call to remembrance all the wickednesse which he hath done, he shall liue in the righteousnesse which he worketh. Is the death of the wicked, of my wil (saith the Lord God) and not that he shuld turne from his wayes and lyue?

The Fourth Precept.

Remember that thou kepe holy the sabboth day. Six dayes shalt thou labor, and doe all that thou hast to doe. But the seuẽth day is the Sabboth of the Lord, in it thou shalt doe no manner of worke, thou and thy sonne and thy daughter, thy man seruant and thy maide seruant, thy cattel and the stranger that is within thy gates. For in sixe daies the Lord made heauen and earth, the sea, and all that in them is, & rested the seuenth daye: Wherefore the Lord blessed the Sabboth daie and halowed it.

Howe this precept is set after the three which ara before.

This fourthe and last precept of the first table, is vpon very good reason set after the other three goyng before. This is the summe of al true godlinesse and religion, that we doe worship rightly & sincerely our Lord God, refusing all false Gods, with most deuout affection of fayth, feare & dutie, without any superstition of images or portraiture. And for this purpose the three precepts goyng before, are set forthe by way of forbidding: as wher he sayth, I am ỳ lord thy God: Thou shalt haue no other Gods in my sight: Thou shalt make thee no graue image, nor no likenesse, &c. Thou shalt not worship, nor serue them: And, thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vaine. He commãdeth nothing els, but that we serue our lord God only, without any superstition of the Gentils, and with all due estimation & halowing of his name. Now for asmuche as this true and inwarde loue, fayth, deuotion, dutie, and seruice of God, most spirituall, whereby God beyng also a spirit, is serued and worshipped in spirite and truth, hath nede of some externe (I say not) worship, but of some exercise, whereby our mindes maye with the fauourable grace and working of the holye spirite, be instructed and filled, to the vnderstanding & desire of him, setting aparte al vse of images wherwith ỳ Gentils doe enforce the religion and seruice of their Gods: he did appoint & prescribe vnto his people, a certain time

VVhy this precept vvas giuen.

time méete to frame & encrease men in godlinesse, which is the seuenth daye: and halowed him for that purpose, that they might learne and encrease wékelye theyr faith and true loue of harte towardes him, by such lawfull ceremonies as he would appointe.

The disposition of this precept. The proposition.

And this precept hath also a conuenient order. For firste he doeth set forth generally what he commaundeth: Remember(he sayth)that thou halowe the Sabboth daye. Sabboth is an Ebrewe worde, and signifieth quiet and rest. And therfore he biddeth them, to be at quiet. And lest he should seeme to speak of some prophane idlenesse, he sayth not, Remember that thou kéepe the Sabboth, but That thou halow the Sabboth day. To halow the Sabboth daye, is to make the rest of it deuoute, holy, and employed vnto Godly exercises.

The specification.

2 Secondly, he appointeth the day, so that it should not be at the peoples libertie to appoint any daye for this rest at their own arbitrement. Sixe dayes (he sayth) thou shalt worke, & do all thy workes, but the seuenth day is the Sabboth of the Lord thy God. So he doth specially note the dayes of worke, and he doth expresse that day in which the Sabboth shuld be halowed. That is one of the seuen dayes, which turning rounde in their reuersion, maketh vp bothe the monethes and the yeare. And the day which he appointeth is, not the firste nor second, &c. but the laste, that is the seuenth: which was not done without a mistérie.

The explication.

3 Thirdly, he doeth not expounde the fulnesse of the sanctifying, but yet he doth open the firste & grosser parte thereof, when he sayth: Thou shalt not do any worke therein, thou and thy sonne, &c. For the holy halowing of the Sabboth, cõsisteth not in this, if we abstayn from working, and vse a bodyly rest, but the firste parte of this halowing consisteth in this rest, that there may be place had for the other, which is the exercise of religion. Now he requireth the rest of the bodye and ceasing from worke, not as euery mã liste and to halues, but a perfect, full, and entire rest: That is to say, suche as is méete for the purpose, that when the whole house is at rest, and all the abiders, as wel straunger as others, with the cattel also, do cease from work, they may with frée and quiet mindes practise things touching religion. So he sayth not simply, Thou shalt not doe no worke therein, but he addeth, Thou and thy sonne, and thy daughter, thy seruant and thy handmayde, thy cattel, and the straunger that is within thy gates.

4 Fourthlye, he giueth a cause of this precept. For sixe dayes, he sayth, God made heauen and earth, the sea and all thinges that be therein: therfore God blessed the Sabboth day, & halowed it. This reason is grounded vpon the authoritie and conformitie of the example, not of euerye man, but of God himselfe: and of no newe example of him, but on moste auncient, of which we reade Genes. 2. in this sorte: Therefore when the heauen and the earth were perfect, and all the beauty of them, and God accomplished the seuenth daye the worke that he had done, and rested the seuenth day from all the worke which he had done, and he blessed the seuenth seuenth daye and sanctified it. This example of the resting of God, halowing the seuenth daye to reste, is brought for a reason to moue the people to obey it, & to iudge the more religiouslye of the halowinge of the Sabboth, as though he sayd, The Lord thy God also him self wrought sixe dayes, and did his workes, when he made heauen and earth in the beginning: after that, he rested the seuenth daye, from the workes that he had done, and halowed that daye to rest. Wherfore thou art also commanded, not to be alwayes idle, nor to worke continually, but to do thy workes sixe dayes, according vnto the example of thy Lord God, and to rest the seuenth, and to halowe that day not vnto thy self, but vnto the Lord. Sixe dayes are appointed thée, in which thou mayst worke al things, touching thy selfe and thy owne affayres, but the seuenth day is not so, for that day is a great while a gone determined and halowed by God him self vnto rest: and therfore that day shall not serue for thy workes, but thou shalt halowe him to the Lord thy God.

The Lawyshe Sabboth.

Our faith is to be exercised in the Sabboth day.

The consideration of this precept of the Sabboth.

Hitherto we haue briefly declared the order, howe this precept is ioyned to them which goeth before, the disposition of it & the sense. Now nert let vs sée what thinges be to be considered in this matter of the Sabboth. The Sabboth is thrée wayes to be considered: the one is as it is grounded vpon law, the other is spiritual, the thirde heauenly. The legall Sabboth is that which is prescribed in this fourth precept of the Decalogus, of which we may reade in Exodus. 16. Leuit. 19. & 26. Deuteronomie. 5. Hieremye. 17. Ezechiel. 20. And of that be two vses: The one in serning fayth, the other charitie. To the vse of faith it belongeth that the halowing of the Sabboth was commaunded, not all an vngodlye, but a religious rest, whereby the minde may be instructed, exercised & grounded in thinges concerning the fayth and knowledge of God, and the séeking of true godlinesse. Whervnto is also ioyned an other matter of the workes of God, perfected in sixe dayes, and of the rest, and blessing, & halowing of the seuenth day.

Hebr. 11.

For firste they were admonished by euery Sabboth day, of the works of God, that he made Heauen and Earth, and al thinges therein he perfected in sixe dayes: & after that was done, he rested the seuenth day. This knowledge commeth not of reason, but of faith, as ỹ Apostle witnesseth.

Secondly, by the halowing of this day they were ledde to this, that they did attribute and name all their workes done in the sixe dayes before, not to their own industrye & power, but vnto the will, power, and glorie of God, séeking and loking for the fruyte therof from the goodnesse and glorye of God.

Act. 15.

Thirdly, they were exercised in the ceremonies of the lawe, in prayers, sacrifices, and reading of the law and the Prophetes, whose writings were read in euery Sabboth. And the minde drawen by such exercises from the care of worldly matters, auaunced in spiritual profite, and was nourished

Charitie exercised in the Sabboth.

norished in fayth, hope, loue, and affection of gratefulnesse. This was the ordinance of the Sabboth, although the effect thereof falleth not out so with all men. Therfore they which doe in the holy dayes rest only from the workes of the body, they doe take like rest as the beastes do, and not as the faythfull. It had some vse of charitie, in that that the trouble of working continued out fyre dayes, was slaked by the rest of the seuenth daye, & the strength of ỳ bodye refreshed. And therefore it is, that the rest frō workes in the Sabboth daye, is not only commaunded to the Maister of the familye, but also to the Sonnes, daughters, seruants, handmaydes, strangers, and the beastes, as clearer appeareth in Deuteronomie, That thy seruant (sayth he) and thy handmayd maye rest euen as thou thy selfe. Remember that thou also diddest serue in Egypt, and that the Lorde thy God brought thee out by strong hand and extended arme. Therefore he commaunded thee to kepe the daye of the Sabboth. It is manifestly commaunded by these wordes, that in the rest of the Sabboth, there is a cōsideration to be had of the seruantes and handmaydes, whereby euery manne might be admonished to embrace the affection of charitie towardes them of his household, and breake that insatiable way of auarice, in sparing neither children, nor seruants, nor cattel. This is ynough that I haue briefly touched of the meaning of the Legal Sabboth: nert let vs see what matters are to be cōsidered in the letter.

Deut. 5.

Things to be obserued in the Letter of this precept.

The precepte moral remaineth euer.

FIrst it is to be wayed, that God did not only prescribe vnto his people, rites and ceremonies, wherby they might be ledde to fayth, charitie, thankesgiuing, and seruice of GOD: but certaine times also, in which they shoulde exercise the ceremonies prescribed by the strength of the lawe. He left it not to their libertie to poynte and disapointe, change, take awaye, multiplye or diminishe holy dayes, what dayes and when they woulde at their owne arbitrement. &c. but as it was conuenient for a people rawlye beginning, he gaue them by law certain holydayes to be kept, among the which, the halowing of ỳ Sabboth is one. And that he did determinatly name to the seuenth day, saying: In the seuenth day is the Sabboth of the Lorde thy God. In suche a people so carnall & changeable, there can not log stande any exercises of religion, vnlesse the times and orders be fastened by expresse lawes. Such is (we may se) not only the inconstancy, but also the rashnesse of our flesh, either to chāge, or vtterly to refuse, or through some prepostorous superstitiō to encrease, or through some negligence & lightnesse growing in our flesshe, to diminishe such matters as we ought alwayes stedfastly to holde. Therfore it was foresēne by this lawe, that the Israelites shoulde not kepe theyr Sabbathes what daye they woulde, not for that, that there is so great a cure or difference of dayes before God, but for that there was none among the seuen, for the historie of the creation creation passing before, and the mistery of the kingdome of Christ, mēter for this purpose. And also that it was so expedient for the people that were vnder the lawe, to kepe a daye not chosen by themselues, but giuen and commanded by Gods law.

2 Secondly, we must obserue that he sayth not onlye, Thou shalt halow the sabboth day, but Remember that thou kepe holye the Sabboth day. This kinde of commanding is not light & common, but very graue and serious. It is meant, that the matter is serious that is commaunded, & in no meanes to be neglected, but to be kept with speciall care and diligence. So parentes are wonte to enforce vnto their children, and Masters vnto their seruants, the obseruance of those thinges, which they wold in no case haue forgotten. We be admonished by this worde Remēber, and be mindefull, that to the obseruance of Gods commandements is requyred a mindefull harte, which ought to thinke day and night of the keping of them, and neuer to forget, what and by whome men haue receyued the commādement. And certes there can nothing happen more pernicious, than the forgetfulnesse of Gods precepts, which is as it were, a certain welspring of all transgressions and sinnes, sauoring of a manifest contempt and despysing of Gods maiestie. For he that feareth God, & esteemeth his maiesty from his hart, cā not forget the precept that he receiued, but alwayes thinke vpon the obseruancie of it.

Consider also, That whereas the worde, Remember, signifieth rather the affect of the minde, than any outwarde worde, it is meante thereby that it is principally required of Gods people, ỳ they doe in minde remember, & deuise to halow the Sabboth, that is to say, to haue suche a minde of their owne, as he be religiously, holyly, and obediently affected and disposed vnto Gods commandementes. And this is the chief peece of true godlinesse, and of true obedience vnto God, without which, nothing done in outward worke, is acceptable in Gods sight.

That you halowe.

3 Thirdly, ye must consider that he sayth, Remember that thou halow the Sabboth day. He commandeth Israel to sanctifie the Sabboth day, which he had before first blessed as the Sabboth day, and Halowed, as he doth witnesse, saying: Therefore the Lord blessed the Sabboth day, and halowed it. And ther is two sortes of halowing the Sabboth: the one is the halowing of God, the other which was commaunded vnto Israell. The halowing of God was that, when after fyre dayes worke, ỳ seuenth day was euē in the beginning of all appointed and halowed vnto rest & quiet. This kinde of sanctifying is not commanded vnto Israel. But the halowing or sanctifying of the Israelites, is to repute & kepe holy the seuenth daye, whiche was before by God sanctified vnto quiet, and in that day to leane from labour, after the trauayle of the fyre dayes, and diligently to apply the exercises of Religion and fayth: and so in no wayes to prophane the sanctifying of God, but to kepe it cleane & vndefiled. God is he which doth sanctifie, that is to say, dispophane & vnholy maketh holy: our parte is with

Two sortes of sanctifying the Sabboth.

It belōgeth vnto God to sanctifie. Halowe.

deuout

deuout obedience, according vnto his worde, to kepe and haue in honor the thinges by him sanctified. It is not in our power to sanctifie as we lyke, things that be not sanctified of God. And who so euer attempteth that, is superstitious, and not religious: and it can not be excused, but that of a proude rashnesse he taketh vpon him that which belongeth only vnto God. The baptisme in the holy Trinitye is both by example and institution sanctified by our Lord himselfe. If any Bishop would first haue instituted and sanctified thesame, he hadde bin worthy to haue bin reproued as vayne and superstitious. But now that it is sanctified by God, and not by man, it is wel done that we be required to sanctifie it also. For if ther had bin no matter from whence the sanctifying of such rites came, then had Christ to no purpose asked of the baptisme of John, whether it were from heauen or from menne. Likewise we ought to iudge of the supper of the Lorde, which was not first sanctified of man, but of God by the sonne of God, bothe by example and ordinance. And it were a better matter for our Bishops, deuoutlye to obserue this sanctifying of our Lorde God, than to prophane and defile it to their gayne in trifles and folishnesse.

The hallowing of baptisme and of the lords Supper.

The day of the Sabboth.

Fourthly, we muste not leape ouer, that he saythe not only, Remember that thou sanctifie the Sabboth, but Remember that thou sanctify the day of the Sabboth. And he sayd not, Therfore the Lord blessed the Sabboth and sanctified it, but, Therefore he blessed the day of the Sabboth, & sanctified it. He might haue commaunded only the actes and doynges of that day should be sanctified: but to set the matter forth more pithyly, he sayd: Remember that thou sanctifie the day of the Sabboth. He chargeth that the day it self shalbe reputed holye, not bycause he hath anye great care of the dayes, but bycause it followeth by euery mans vnderstanding, that the holy day requireth holy conuersation. But the reputation of dayes is not to be taken of their owne qualitye, but of that which they be appoynted vnto by God. As the seuenth day was not for the number of seuen, or for any other quality of it self appointed vnto Israell to be hallowed and sanctified vnto holy workes and meditations, but bicause it was by the Lord consecrated vnto rest, and therefore named, the day of Sabboth. Which is to say, the day of rest.

Fiftly, he sayth, Sixe days thou shalt worke, and do all thy workes. We muste ponder with our self, ỹ he maketh not only mention of ỹ Sabboth, appointed to the seuenth day, but of the sixe dayes goyng before the Sabboth, in which they ought to do al their workes, whereas the mention of them maketh nothing to the purpose of the setting forth of the precept of the sabboth. For it is euen ynough for the determination of the sabboth, that he nameth it vnto the seuenth daye: & therfore it followeth of it self, that the sixe dayes goyng before, pertayneth nothing to the obseruance therof. But in this matter of sixe dayes worke, there is a double meaning, either to take that it was sayd, Sixe dayes thou shalt worke, by waye of permission, that it should be lawfull for his people to do their workes any day they would, sauing only the seuenth, for that he was halowed to rest: either to take that this parcell is not set there permissiuely, but that it hath the vertue of a commandement: so that it shoulde be as wel commanded to worke sixe dayes, as to sanctifie the seuenth daye vnto rest, which opinion me thinketh is the better. First bicause it is agreable with the primitiue law: when it was said to man immediatly after his fall: In the sweate of thy face, thou shalt eat thy bread. Item, Cursed is the earth in thy worke. In labors thou shalt fede of it, al the days of thy lyfe. I suppose that it is not permitted vnto manne, that besides the time sanctified vnto the sabbath, he should be idle and playe at his libertie. It is not the will of God, that man shoulde, specially after the corruption of our nature, be lefte vnto his own libertie, that he may be idle and vnprofitable without blame: seing that chiefly of Idelnesse doeth ensewe all kinde of vice & mischief. And the grounde of this opinion is yelded vnto vs of the reason ioyned vnto this precept, wherin is mentiõ not only that God rested the seuenth day, and blessed it, & sanctified it: but also that he wroght sixe days, and that he made & perfected all his workes, heauen, earth, the sea and all things that is in them: so ỹ it may appeare, that vnto the two parts of the precept agreeth ỹ two reasons annexed. Therefore like as to the precept for the rest of the seuenth day is ioyned the authoritie of the example of God, which rested the seuenth day: so likewise the example of his worcking sixe dayes, wherein he perfected heauen, earth and all, serueth for the precept of working sixe dayes. If the example of Gods resting the seuenth day do enforce: then likewise must his example in perfecting his workes in sixe dayes enforce also. It is not to be thought of God, that he hath a care how his people may wel be idle, and that he careth not how they may be well occupied in their worke. My iudgement is, he would not onlye by his worde consecrate and make holy his rest and quiet, but also his working and doings, so that whether they rested the seuenth daye, or whether they wrought the sixe dayes before, they should do al things by faith and obedience of his worde. It was said vnto this people, Be you holy, for I am holy. Then it were not conuenient, that the people sanctified vnto the Lord: should liue sixe days prophanely, according vnto the spirite of the flesh and of the worlde, and the seuenth day only in idelnesse to attende religion. Of this my opinon the godly be iudges.

Leuit. 19.

That sixe days were employed to worke, and one to reste.

Sirtely, consider that also, that there were sixe dayes employed vnto worke, and but one vnto rest. A man would thinke that there should haue bene rather one giuen vnto these workes of the earth, and other sixe vnto the holye rest. For it standeth more with reason, that forasmuch as it is a more godly matter & more profitable to applye the spiritual exercises of faith and religion, than the workes of the earth: so we should also consecrate the better and greater peece of our life to this holy rest of the holy Sabboth, rather than to any earthly occupatiõ. But the wil-dome of God did regarde in this mater not what was of it selfe more to be alowed, but what was more conuenient for this grosse & law bounde people. If he had iudged it to haue hadde bin more profitable that they should haue giuen themselues more vnto rest than vnto labors, no doubt he woulde haue attempted this law of holy rest vnto their commoditie. But it appeareth manifestlye, not onlye by the iudgement of this law, but also by very experience it selfe, that it aduaunceth nothing true religion, to encrease the rest of the common sorte of people, what pretence so euer it be coloured withall: but that one day in the weeke appointed vnto the exercises of fayth and religion, that the ignorant people by holy doynges and meditations, may be instructed in the true knowledge and seruice of God, is euē fully sufficient ynough. Experience it self teacheth vs, that the nūber of holydays which the superstitiō of Bishops, Monkes & Friers, and not the authority of God hath ordeyned, helpe more to the vter extinguishment of the true rest of the Sabboth, than to any encrease thereof, and ministred occasions of infinite number of vices. Therfore the tranayle of them is to be cōmended, which to the intent they would take awaye superstition out of the Church, & cut off the occasion of corruption and vice, hath thrust out all superfluous & vaine holy dayes, and kept them only that be set for the by the authoritie of holy scripture, & the example of the primitive Church.

The multitude of holy dayes is hurtfull.

That vve doe our owvn vvorkes and not other mens

Seuenthly, we must think also vpon that, that he sayth not only, Six dayes thou shalt worke, but that he addeth, And thou shalt doe all thy workes. He requireth not of vs that euery man shall doe what he listeth, but that setting all curiositie aparte, euerye man doe his owne workes, and abstayne from that which pertayneth not vnto him. Some works belong vnto GOD, and some vnto vs. God doeth his owne workes, let vs doe ours. It is a confusion and no order, if manne attempte to doe those things which appertayneth vnto God. In a well ordered house, some kinde of doynges belongeth vnto the good manne of the house, some other to the man seruant, some other to the houswyfe, some other to the mayde seruant. And that is a goodly harmonie and agreement, when eche man doeth that which belongeth vnto him. But wee be of nature so ouerthwart, that we doe loath things that appertayne vnto vs, and desire to haue to do with other mens maters. Therfore euery man ought to regarde, that by the authoritie of this precept he muste conteyne and kepe himself in an order, & apply his minde to his owne doynges, and not other mens.

Eightly, he sayth, For the seuenth daye is the Sabboth of the Lorde. Way that he sayth not, the seuenth day is thy Sabboth, but it is the sabboth of the lord thy God. This Sabboth might by some reason haue bin called the Sabboth of the Israelites, for that they rested that day: and also because that the halowing of this Sabboth was ordeined to their commoditie, as Christ saith also: Not the man for the Sabboths sake, but the Sabboth for the mans sake. Yet he had rather say, It is the Sabboth of the of the Lord thy God, than, It is thy Sabboth: declaring that the whole purpose of that daye is to be directed vnto the sanctifying, faith and knowledge of his name.

And it seemeth, that wher he saith, The seuenth daye is the Sabboth of the Lord thy God, it maye be two wayes vnderstanded, Either to be al one with that as we haue before expounded it, that the Sabboth of the seuenth day is consecrated vnto the lord thy God, to the intent thou shuldest serue him: either to take it spoken in this meaning, The seuēth day is the Sabboth of the lord thy God, that is to say, the memorial of that Sabboth, when the Lord thy God, after sixe dayes worke rested the seuenth day, and sanctified it with his blessing. And this sense agreeth with that which foloweth. And this kinde of speche varieth not from the phrase of holy Scriptures, in which the names of the thinges be attributed vnto the remembrance and the misteries of them.

In what sense so euer you take it to be spoken, we are giuen to vnderstand, that the rest of the Sabboth is not to be sanctified to our affections & vses, but to the name and glorye of God. And that agreeth with the saying of Esay: If thou turne thy foote from the Sabboth, to the intent thou wilt not do thy will in my holy daye, thou shalt be called the Pleasant sabboth, & the glorious halowed of the Lord: and thou shalt glorifie him, in that thou doest not thine own ways, and thy will is not found, &c.

Therefore it is a most manifest prophanation of the holy rest, that in the Sabboth day, as well among the Iewes, as in the Sundayes in our churches, men doe without all dissimulation most largelye applye the pleasures of the flesh. As the Iewes in the Sabboth day do not rest vnto God, but serue their own lustes: euen so do we also rest in the Sunday, not vnto Christ our Lord, but vnto our owne delites & pleasures, in so much, that ther is no season more prophane and corrupt, than our holy dayes be: which haue names and pretences of religion, but are in deede employed vnto the actes & deuises of the pleasures of ỹ flesh, vnto the Gods Bacchus and Venus, to fowle and filthy rest, to manifest pryde and braggery, without any restraunte. How much better were it (saith Augustin) if their women (meaning the Iewes) did spinne, rather than dance? It is writen: Iudge you iust iudgement, & not according vnto the persons. What may we say of our holy day else, but that it were better men gaue themselues vnto necessarie workes, than to serue Bacchus & Venus, and all kindes of pleasures, not seruing Christ our lord, but satan: mē regard not their saluatiō, but purchase their destruction: they do not appease, but prouoke ỹ wrath of God: mens maners be not corrected, but corrupted.

No holy dayes are to be appointed vnto the names or memories of Saincles.

It is not to be passed ouer, that he doth not say, For the seuenth daye is the Sabboth of Abraham thy Father, or of Isaac, or of Iacob: but it is the Sabboth of the Lord thy God. If it had bene the pleasure of Gods maiestie, that there should haue bin holy days dedicate vnto the memory and names of saincts or holy men, I see no vrgent or necessary cause, why he shulde not as well haue alowed it in the Iewes as in vs. He might haue had appointed vnto the Iewes foꝛ holy dayes, the entrie of Noe into the Arke, and after that his comming foꝛth of the Arke: Againe the Natiuitye of Abꝛaham, and his foꝛsaking of his countrie where he was boꝛne: yea and the sacrifice which he intended to haue made of his sonne, when he was commaunded by him to offer him vp. The natiuitie also of Isaac, and the peregrination and wandering of Jacob into a straunge country, and the going down into Egypt, and such other like matters: by remembꝛance whereof they myght be admonished of the fayth and godlinesse of their Fathers. But he did set foꝛthe none of these matters vnto the Israelites, foꝛ that he knewe that the nature of the flesh was moꝛe pꝛone vnto superstition than to true religion, and allowed not that anye manner exerrises of religion shoulde be dedicated in the names of Saintes. But wheras that in the Church of vs Chꝛistian men, there be holy dayes dedicated vnto the memoꝛies and names of Saintes, by what colour soeuer the matter is defended, I am sure it is not grounded vpon any authoꝛitie of Gods woꝛde, oꝛ institution of the Apostles: but sauoreth of Gentilitye, and not of true Chꝛistianitie.

The lettes of the sanctifying are forbidden.

Mynthly, he sayth, Thou shalt do no manner woꝛke in it: thou and thy sonne, and thy daughter, thy manseruant and thy woman seruant, thy cattel, and the straunger that is within thy gates. We must marke here, that when he commandeth the sanctifying of the Sabboth, he doth foꝛbidde that which may let the sanctifying. Wherin we be in generaltie admonished, that all maner of stayes & lets are to be cut off, wherby might come any manner of let vnto ỳ matter, which ought vpꝛightly & perfectly to be don. It is a pẽce of wisdome to cut away all lettes, which might hinder the doyng of honest things & pꝛofitable. And it belongeth vnto integrity and vpꝛightnesse, to do that which aboue al other maters is to be done. Not with a patched purpose, but with all our endeuour, ful & hole. Of that soꝛt is the poynt which is here commanded of the sanctifying of the sabbath. This sanctifying passeth all mens endeuours, and requireth not a patched, but a whole mind. And therefoꝛe it was well done to foꝛbidde all matters that doe withdꝛawe the minde to other deuices & cares, and maketh him in that case, that he is scarcely in any parts at al intent vnto holy meditations and exerrises. Let vs consider in this place, with how cleare & vpꝛight a minde we ought to come vnto the reading of the holy scripturs, vnto the blessed sermons, vnto the hearing of Gods woꝛd, vnto pꝛayers, as well pꝛiuate, as them that be of the holy Church, vnto the celebꝛating and communiõ of Gods misteries, & such other lyke, which requireth not so much the pꝛesence of ỳ body, as the cleare and vpꝛight attention of ỳ minde. Foꝛ matters of religion be of that soꝛte, that as they be spiritual, so of their owne nature they would haue the spirit of man to woꝛke vpon, to fashion, to change, to instruct, and to fede: and in case he be somewhat to hygh and loftye, they wil bꝛing him downe: if he be to much vnder foote, they will set

set him vp & comfoꝛte him: in some, thei wil frame him altogether to the image of God, and regenerate him. I beseke you, what shal a man doe here, whose minde is either altogether in an other place, so that ther is nothing pꝛesent at the holy thinges, but the outwarde body, destitute of minde and spirite, noꝛ vnderstanding noꝛ hearing those things, which be spoken & done: eyther is so pꝛesent, that he wandereth and runneth vp & downe without any stayе, distracte with diuers and sundꝛy imaginatiõs and thoughtes? And wheras the doctrine of the Gospell hath euen lyke hearers, why do we wõder of whẽce it is, that the fruite of it is so scarce and syelde: The byꝛde must nedes cleare hir wings when she wil flye, to be without all lettes. And thinke we that it maketh no matter with how frée and cleare affections of the minde we pꝛesent our selues at the holy misteries, where the spirit must be caried hygher than anye byꝛde is able to reache vnto in flying?

Now let vs consider what maner lettes of the sanctifying of the Sabbots are foꝛbidden. Thou shalt (saith he) doe no maner of woꝛke in it, thou and thy sonne, &c. There are two kindes of woꝛkes of men. The one is of things which be lawful of themselues: the other of them that be vnlawfull. Woꝛkes lawful, be such as are necessarie, honest, & pꝛofitable to men. The vnlawfull be such, as be hurtefull, dishonest, and superfluous. Those thinges which be here foꝛbidden, be not foꝛbidden bicause they be vnlawfull of themselues. Foꝛ he sayth not, Thou shalt not do in it any euill woꝛke, but thou shalt doe no woꝛke in it, thou and thy sonne, and thy daughter, and thy man seruant, and thy woman seruant, and thy cattel, &c. So that it appeareth that the woꝛkes of the house, necessarie, honest, and pꝛofitable of themselues, concerning the outwarde sustentation and necessitie of our life, but in respect of the sanctifying of the Sabbottes, vnpꝛofitable, are foꝛbidden. And that appeareth also by that that he sayd: Six daies thou shalt do all thy woꝛke, but the seuenth day is the Sabboth of the Lord thy God: so that the woꝛkes be lawful, which a man may do in the sixe dayes, but in the Sabboth daye it is not lawfull to do them. But they be woꝛkes vnlawfull, which can not lawfullye be done, noꝛ in the sabboth, noꝛ in the other sixe woꝛkingdayes. Let vs consider therfoꝛe, how earnestly we ought to study & care, that we haue no let oꝛ impediment that maye any wise stay the liberty & courage of our spirite, whan we must fall to the holye misteries, whẽ the necessary, honest, and else pꝛofitable care, must also be cast away, which doth in déede bring our mindes into that case, that they be lesse intent to spirituall matters, & yet they make vs not the enemies of God. What can we iudge of the most ouerthwart coꝛruption of our times, that vpon the holy dayes we doe in déede refrayne necessarye and lawfull things, but we giue our selfs not only to vnlawfull and vnhonest woꝛkes, but also to daine & mischieuous deuises? The saying of Augustine is fulfilled here: The fault wherewith the multitude is made oꝛõke, loseth the trial of the truth. If any man plowe his ground vpon the Sunday, he doth breake the holy reſt: but if he leaue his husbandry and be drunke, vſe bawdry and games, he is not deemed to haue prophaned the holynesse of the Sunday. The very cattel do vſe the reſt of the Sabboth daye better than we, which though they do nothing towards the sanctifying of it, yet their reſt is so far forth to be preferred, that they do nothing whereby the holy reſt is prophaned and defyled, and the eyes of Gods maiestie offended.

Tenthly, those words be not to be passed ouer: Thou and thy son, and thy daughter, thy man seruant, & thy woman seruant, thy cattel, and the stranger that is within thy gates.

The lawe is not for ydle men.

1 First of al you must marke here, that there is no matter why this law shoulde be giuen vnto that familye, in whiche eyther the good man him self, or children be continually so idle, that vpon the working dayes they do no kinde of worke. For it is to no purpose to commaunde the idle person to reſt, which though that were not, doe neuer any thing. Therefore, the same is more to be driuen into such mens heades, that he sayd: Sixe dayes thou shalt do all thy workes, than that which he commandeth after of the keping of the reaſt of the sabboth, Thou shalt do no work in it. He that neuer tilleth his grounde, néedeth not to be tolde, Sée thou till not thy grounde vpon the Sabboth day. It becometh thé not to warne the young man that neuer gineth himself vnto exercise of reading or writing, Reade and write not in the time of the preaching in the Church. And yet some men are now a dayes so ouerwarthly disposed, that they will play all the weeke long, and vpon the Sundayes, what time they ought to giue themselues to holy reſt, and to the exercises of deuotion, they apply their workes at home, at what time the Lords people are gathered together to heare Goddes worde, to the prayers, and participation of his mysteries, and to the sacrifice of his prayers, which peruerseneſſe is detestable, and to be restrayned by the publike power.

2 Secondly, we perceiue here, that in points commenly concerning religion, there is no difference betwixt the good man of the house, and them of the familye: betwixt his sonnes, and his seruauntes. All be equallye bounde by this common lawe of the sanctifying of the Sabboth, the Master, the seruant, the Father, the children, the Man, the woman, the superiours, the inferiours. God speaketh to the good man of the house, as vnto the head, but he doeth include together all his family to the obseruance of this lawe. There be three partes of religion. The firſte is fayth and participation of grace: the second is the hope of lyfe and glorye to come: the third, is the obedience which we ought to yelde vnto Gods wil, wherein is also included the seruice of god. Of these, all persons are partakers of lyke, as many as be sealed with the mark of Baptisme, so that herein is no respect of persons. So that forasmuche as concerneth the obseruaunce of religion, it lieth not in the power of the good man of the house, nor of the Prince, to forbidde their subiectes that they shall not obey the commaundements of the Lord their God, nor be partakers of the fayth, hope, obedience and seruice of God.

3 It is also to be marked, that he saith, And thy cattel. Thy cattel hath nothing to doe with the common exercise of religion: and yet the commandement runneth that they shall do no worke in the Sabboth day, but shall reſt as well as men. What is the reason of this precept? Firſt, very necessitie of it selfe requireth such a law. For vnleſſe the cattel which be appointed for trauayle, be refreſhed with some reſt among them, they muſte nedes be tyred at length to be euer continuallye hayted on: and thereof ſileth iniury to the marring of the cattel, and a losse vnto the man: wherof none of them both, nor of the men nor of the cattel, can be well lyked of the Lord their creatour. For he loueth and conserueth those thinges that he made, as well beaſtes as men. He loueth no violence nor wrong done, no not to the cattel, much leſſe vnto men. He lyketh not deſtruction, no nor any losse that commeth not by neceſſity. Ther is also another reason of consequece. If the cattel shoulde worke in the Sabboth day, it muſt nedes be guyded, directed, and driuen by some man. For it hath no reason or vnderſtanding, whish is neceſſarie to worke well and profitablie. So that it muſt nedes haue some outwarde guide, by whose leading and driuing it may be gouerned. Therefore it is not possible that it can worke alone, but this is his waye of working, that it work with the man that worketh, and obeye his dryft. So that forasmuch as it is consequent, that if the cattel doe worke vpon the Sabboth daye, some man, whatsoeuer he be, muſt worke also: and it is not permitted that any man may worke vpon the Sabboth daye: by this reason of consequence, it was to be forbidden also, that no cattel shoulde worke vpon the Sabboth daye, and so shoulde be left no occasion of colour by the cattel, that nothing were spoken of his reſt in the Sabboth: and therefore it should be no offence, if the cattel did worke vpon the Sabboth, and some man be by him when he worketh, as a neceſſarie leader and driuer.

Of ſtrangers that they had some place in the people of God.

1 Let vs also consider that, that is added after, And the ſtranger which is within thy gates. Marke firſt that ſtraungers were also placed with Gods people: and that not only wayfaring me, but remaining also within the gates of the cities, and at lawfull times working. So that the vngentleneſſe of our times can not be alowed, that some men suppose, that ſtrangers ought to be excluded forth of all company: as though it were possible, that euery man coulde abide in his native lande, and that there were not beyond al number of them that are compelled to departe into ſtraunge countries from their owne dwellings, either for powertie, either for the tyrannye of princes, or by the violence of warre, or by the perſuasion of their conſcience tyed vnto Gods worde. There haue bin many good and holy men ſtraungers and pylgrimes vpon the earth, whom the worlde was not worthye to haue. Such were Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob, the people of Israell in Egypt, Moses among the Madianites: and therefore he calleth his sonne also Gerson, that is to say, a ſtranger, Chriſt alſo was not bredde wher he was borne, nor yet he continued not much in ỹ place wher he was bredde after that he began once to preache. Strangers are not to be borne with all, in caſe they be euill, No nor the landes men neither can well be ſuffered, if they be euill.

Strangers muſt frame themſelues to the lawes of the countries wher they dwel

2 Secondly, we perceiue that it is well requyred in this place of ſtrangers, and commers and goers, that they frame themſelues vnto the lawes of the landes men. Albeit no ſtraunger was compelled that he ſhuld be circumciſed, nor was admitted vnto the communion of the Paſſeouer before he was circumciſed: Yet in all other pointes it was required, that they ſhould ſubmit themſelues vnto Gods law, as well as the lands men. They might not at the time of Paſſeouer occupy leauened bread. They were brought with the landes men, to the hearing of Gods lawe, as we may ſee in the booke of Joſue. And in the dayes of the Sabbathes, and of other ſolemnities, they were bounde by the ſelf ſame lawe of God, as the landes menne were, to obſerue the holy reſt. Wherupon theſe two things followe: One, that it is not to be permitted, that ſtraungers ſhoulde be excepted from the lawes and maners of the landes men. And therefore thoſe wayward and frowarde ſtrangers are not to be ſuffered, which do withſtand publik lawes and manners.

Ioſue. 8.

That ſtrangers ought not to be compelled vnto the religion of the place vvhere they come.

An other is, that ſtrangers of a contrary religion are neyther to be compelled to the following of Chriſtian religion, nor to be admitted, vnleſſe they be Baptiſed vnto the participation of our miſteries. But if any Chriſtian ſtranger, I meane, any admitted to the faith and religion of Chriſt, and to the profeſſion of the name of a Chriſtian, by the token of holy baptiſme, if he doe refuſe the communion of the common religion, fayth, doctrine, miſteries, and holy vſages, I ſuppoſe he may well be excluded alſo from the ciuile fellowſhippe and companye, leaſt he ſlaunder the Church of GOD: and alſo for that he is not worthy to enioye the ciuile fellowſhippe, that is not afrayde to refuſe the communion of the religion whereunto he was admitted. I ſpeake not of thoſe ſtrangers which liue among people that be ſeduced and out of the right way, but of thē which dwelling amongſt true Chriſtian menne, doe flee from the communion of the true fayth, doctrine, and religion. It is not ſo, if a ſtraunger of a good beleefe and iudgement, liue among them that be ſeduced and out of the waye. For if he refuſe the communion of falſe religion, he doth as it becommeth him: if he be thruſt away therefore, he is thruſt away not for his own faulte, by theſe which were not onlye ſeduced, but do alſo either bannithe from them ſuch as be of good iudgement, or els goe about to bring them vnto their errour.

Laſtlye, let vs conſider that he ſaith, For in ſix dayes God made heauen and earth, the ſea and all that therin is, and reſted the ſeuenth day: wherefore the Lord God bleſſed the ſeuēth daye, and halowed it. He ſaith not ſimplye, Sire dayes God made heauen & earth, &c. But, For in ſixe dayes God made, &c. to admoniſh vs, that herevpon ſtandeth the reaſon of this of this precepte, bycauſe that in the beginning of the creation, in ſyxe dayes he made Heauen and earthe, and reſted the ſeuenth day, and halowed it by hys reſt. Therefore he vſeth not onely his authoritie to commaunde his people, but he bringeth alſo an example of his owne doyng, for them to looke vpon and followe it. It is of ſufficient authoritie vnto a godlye man, whatſoeuer is commaunded by Gods worde: but when the doyng of God is ioyned with it alſo, it bindeth vs with a double knot, to obey it. He that obeyeth not the worde of God, ſheweth himſelfe to be diſobedient and a tranſgreſſor: but hee ỹ is not moued nother with the doyng of God to followe hys example, declareth himſelfe to be not only diſobedient, but alſo vnnatural, and voyde of his ſpirite. Therefore, Chriſt when he proued himſelfe to be the ſonne of God, ſayd: My father worketh euen now, and I do worke. Item: The ſonne can do nothing of hymſelfe, but that he ſeeth hys father doe. For what ſo euer he doethe, the ſame likewiſe the ſonne doth. It is the parte of a naturall ſonne, not only to obaye hys fathers preceptes, which ſeruants do, but alſo to frame himſelfe as nere as he can, and with all his power, to his deuices and doings. So Chriſte ſayth: That you may be the ſonnes of youre father, which bringeth forth the Sunne vpon the good and the euill, and rayneth vpon the gratefull and the vngratefull. He declareth there indeede the commaundemente of true loue, and expoundeth the true meaning therof, againſte the wreſting of the Iewes: but he dothe withall admoniſh vs, that we be not only bounde by the authoritie of the precepte of God to loue our enimies, and to doe good vnto them that doe vs harme, but the argumente alſo ſtandeth vpon this point, to proue what we be, eyther baſtarde, eyther rightē borne ſonnes of our father which is in heauen. Likewiſe in thys place is alſo ioyned together the doyng of God, whereby his nature is expreſſed: and the precept, wherewith Gods maieſtie and authoritie is defended. The doyng, for aſmuch as it is ſet forth in ſtede of an example, requireth to be followed: the precept, for that it hathe authoritie of Iuriſdiction, requireth obediēce due vnto the Maieſtie of God. By imitation, we be conformed vnto the purpoſe of our father: by obediēce, we be ſubiect vnto the preceptes of our Lorde and God. So by thys precept that we haue in hande, it is required, that our workes and reſtings be halowed, for that they be grounded vpon the imitation of the example, and the obedience of the precept of God. Wherefore they muſt needes be moſt prophane of all, that be ſtirred neyther by the doyngs of God to followe them, nor by his preceptes to obey him. Such good Chriſtians we be, when we cannot bee brought to loue one an other, nor by the example, nor by the commaundement of Chriſt. He ſaith, This is my commaundement, that you loue one another, as I loue you. Item. I gaue you an example, that like as I dyd, ſo you do alſo. Theſe matters we do exceedingly lye contemne, and in the meane whiles, moſt bitterly & ſpitefully ſtriue and contend of certayne ſignes and faſhions of ſpeche.

Iohn. 5.

Howe we shal conforme our selues vnto the example of God.

But now some man wil say: How can I be conformed by imitation, vnto the example of God, that made all? For although I worke sixe dayes and rest the seuenth, yet the earthe is not so farre distant from Heauen, as my doyng is distant from the example of God. He made in sixe dayes Heauen and Earth, the Sea, and all things in them, and when all was done, rested the seuenth day. Maye my doings bee compared wyth hys workes, whiche with all my workes can scarcely and hardly compasse so muche as maye serue to feede thys litle carcas? I answer. The imitation of the example of God standeth not in thys, that in sixe dayes we make Heauen and Earthe, and rest from so great a worke in the seuenth day: but that in the same sixe dayes, in whiche God wrought all hys workes, we worke ours: and in the seuenth (when he rested from hys, we doe rest also) according to his example) from our workes. So Christ dothe not require vs to declare that we be the sonnes of God our father, that we should, euen as he dyd, bring forth the sunne vpon the good and the euill, and rayne vppon the gratefull and the vngratefull: but that doyng good according vnto the measure of our estate, as well vnto our enimies as to our friends, we shoulde shewe by some imitation the nature of our father, like vnto hym at the least, in that, that like as he according vnto the greatenesse and goodnesse of hys diuine Maiestie, doth good, not onely vnto the good and gratefull, but also to the euill and vnthankefull: so we according to the portion of oure estate and habilitie, should doe good, not only to oure frends, but also to our enimies.

And that is to be considered also, that when he commaundeth to sanctifye the rest of the Sabboth, he receyueth not all the workes of God frō which he rested, but only them which he made in the space of sixe dayes: the Heauen, the Earth, the Sea, and all that therein is, and that after the doyng of them, he resteth the seuenth day. Therefore he appoynted the sanctifying of the Sabboth, chiefly for thys purpose, that the people should aboue all things be fedde and strengthned in the faith of the creation. For although that Heauen and Earthe, the Sea, and all that is in them, be workes that may be seene, yet those things which are reported of them in this place, be not visible, no nor be not conceyued by eyye of our reason, but by faith only, as that they were made by any, and that in any time. So that first their errour is most playne, that say, that ỹ world was euer. Secondly, they be not made by euery power, but by the very true God himselfe, by whome these precepts were giuen. Thirdly, that they were done and perfected in sixe daps, so that the maker of them rested the seuenth day, when all was perfected. Mans reason is blinde to knowe thys. For they be not taught but by Gods worde: and therefore they bee not conceyued but by faith.

Nowe this sayth of the creation, whereby we doe beleeue, that thys worlde was made of God in sixe dayes, was not without cause sette forth to be so diligently taught vnto the people of God. For it conteineth the beginning of all things, whyche are to be beleeued of the true and only God, without whiche, the rest can take no place. For vnlesse we doe beleeue that Heauen, Earthe, the Sea, and all that is conteyned therein, were made in the beginning by the true and only God, it cannot be possible for vs to attayne vnto the faith of this conseruation, gouerning and prouidence of God, wherby all things are kept and ruled. I speake not of the faith of oure restorement, wherby mankinde is restored vnto true felicitie by the incarnation of the Worde of God. And for that cause the Apostle sayeth in the Epistle to the Hebrewes, when he would sette forth faith, he said euen at the beginning: By faith we doe vnderstande that the world was framed by Gods worde, that of things inuisible they shoulde become visible. So in the knowledge of oure Créde, we saye first of all: I beleeue in God the father almightie, maker of Heauen and Earth. From this faith the passage is easie to the faith of the prouidence of God, whereby we beleeue that all things which be in Heauen and in Earth, doe stande by hys power, and bee gouerned after his wil, by whome they were made of nothing.

Nowe lette the Godly man way what things followeth vppon thys faith, that we beleeue that God made in sixe dayes Heauen, Earthe, the Sea, and all that therein is.

1 First, he that beleeueth that God is the maker of Heauen and Earth, &c. must needes beleeue also, that he alone is the true and onely God: and that all the rest that bee worshipped in the worlde, be false Goddes, and may say with the Prophete: Lette the Gods whiche made not Heauen and Earth, perish from the Earthe, and from those thynges which be vnder the Heauen. Therefore we giue vnto God the glory of true Godhead, when we confesse that hee is the maker of Heauen and Earthe, and of all that in them is.

Hierem.10.

That all things be his, by whome they were made.

2 Secondely, he that beleeueth thys, must needes graunte also and say with the Prophet: The earth is the Lordes, and the fulnesse of it: the compasse of the landes, and all that in them is. For all things are properly hys, by whome they bee made. God made all thynges by hys wisedome and power, vsing the counsell, worke or helpe of none. Therefore all thynges bee hys, and wee wyth all things. For we are also of hys workemanshippe. Therefore hee cannot bee called to accompte by any, though hee determine of hys owne what he list at hys most free arbitrement. They that doe vnderstande this, they giue vnto God the free gouernaunce of all things, nor they aske not in anye matter, why it was not otherwise appoynted by him.

Psalme.5.

Sapi.4.

That we dwell not in oure owne, but in that belongeth to another.

3 Thirdly, it followeth also, that wee dwell not in oure owne, but in that whyche belongeth vnto an other, and that we lyue not of oure owne goodes, but vppon others. Therefore though all things be deliuered vnto vs by the goodnesse of GOD, yet wee maye not so take them, as though they were not yet still by most righte in the power of God, but that we doe vse them always, as granted vs for a time, that VVherevnto the vse of proprietie ought to be referred.

no man flatter him selfe ouermuche with the title of proprietie. The vse of proprietie is not to be referred to the respect of God, but to the respect of other men with whome we doe liue, that those things which I haue receyued of God, be so proper vnto me, that it is not lawfull for anye others to take them out of my iurisdiction. In the meane while, all things be so in the power of God, that he may by most right take them away from vs, or vtterlye destroy them, or to putte them ouer vnto others: which thing he could not lawfully do, if those things, which be deliuered vnto vs by him, were in full and most perfect right turned to our proprietie.

That we must liue in the faith, and seruice of oure creatoure. Deut. 32.

4 Fourthely, it is inferred most directly of all this, that we must liue in the faith and seruice of him, whose worke we be, and who is the owner of all things wherin we dwell, and whereof we liue: that it be not sayde vnto vs with most foule reproche: Thou hast forsake God, which hath begotten thee, and hast forgotten the Lord thy creator, &c. He that dwelleth in another mans soyle, must acknowledge the Lord of the soyle: he that liueth vpon the charge of an other man, knoweth that his seruice is some ways due vnto him of whom he is fedde. I beseche you, how wrongful a matter were it, not to acknowledge our maker, whose worke we be, and the Lorde of Heauen and Earth, in whose soyle we dwell: our feeder and keeper by whose goodnesse and liberalitie we are fedde and sustayned: but so to liue vnto oure selues, and to measure all things at our owne arbitremente, as though we were borne of oure selues, and were lordes of the lande whiche we dwell in, and liued not by the goodes of an other, but by our owne?

It foloweth, And he rested the seauenth day: therefore the Lorde blessed the seauenth day, and halowed it.

1 First marke that here is sayde, that God rested the seauenth daye, in whiche after the ende of sixe dayes, when all the workes of the creation were nowe perfect, he ceassed. It is not simply attributed vnto him that he stayed or paused, but that after the workes of sixe dayes, he lefte quite off, and ceased. So we reade in Genesis: God had accomplished the seauenth daye all his worke that he had done, and rested the seuenth day from all the worke that he had done, and blessed the seauenth day and halowed it, for in it he ceassed from all his worke which he was aboute to doe. It is one thing simply to stay and to rest, and an other to ceasse off from all the workes now perfected. That daye is worthely blessed, in whiche ẏ due perfecting of al things is made. That rest, when workes be broken off halfe done for slouth, and hindered from their perfection, deserueth no commendation. Therefore as I noted also before, this Sabbath is not for yole persons that do no manner of worke: of whome it can not be sayd, that in the Sabbath daye they rest, leauing off from their workes.

2 Secondly, that is to be considered also, that God did not onely rest the seauenth daye from his workes, but halowed also that daye, to take oure rest therein from laboures. Whereby the time that is to come was was signifyed: in whiche when the workes of these present times, as it were of sixe dayes, are ended, the common rest of all shall be had, and that euerlasting and without interruption. For like as the sixe dayes of worke, doe shadowe the sixe ages of this present life full of trauailes and troubles, so the seuēth day doth signifie the world that is to come, halowed vnto euerlasting rest, when we shal be quite from al the workes of this present life. But of this matter, we will say some what hereafter.

Hitherto we haue spoken of the lawfull Sabbath, that is to saye, the bodily, grosse, and shadowing Sabbath, whyche perteyned to the teaching of the people of Israell: nowe we must consequently speake of the spirituall and heauenly Sabbath.

The spirituall Sabbath is that, whē our olde man, the man of sinne, with all his doings, is as it were buryed to rest: so that the newe man which is made accordyng vnto God, maye aduaunce his strength, and accomplish his workes. The doings of the old man, be the workes of the flesshe, of which the Apostle writeth in this wise: The workes of the flesh be manifest, whiche is fornicatiō, vncleanesse, vnshamefastnesse, wātonnesse, worshipping of Idolles, witchcraft, enimitie, strife, contention, anger, brawling, dissention, sectes, enuye, manslaughter, drunkennesse, banketting, and suche like, &c. The workes and the endeuoures of the olde man, may be also thus deuided, that parte of them belongeth vnto hys vnderstanding and mind, and part vnto the affections of the hearte. The vnderstanding of the olde man is the wisedome of the flesh, which is altogither carnall, blinde, and folishe in godlye matters, whiche we must bring vnder and abolishe, else it will iudge most fondly of godly matters. For it will not submitte it selfe vnto the truth, whiche is not conceyued by fierceneselle of reason, but by faythe. Of thys wisedome of the flesshe, is bredde ydolatrie, heresies, sectes, false teachings, strifes and contentions: which vnlesse they be quenched, doe altogither hinder the spirituall Sabbath. For it can not be, that the true godly fruites of the newe man, as faith and religion, shall haue the vpper hand, as long as the working of carnall wisedome enioyeth, whiche reputeth all true godlynesse to be folishnesse.

The vnderstanding of the olde man.

The affections of the olde man, be the corrupte desires of the wicked flesh, whiche are fierce bredde in the fleshly heart, and afterwards breaketh out into deadly workes: such is whoredome, adultery, incest, and all manner of vncleannesse: stealing and theft, lying, forswearing, blasphemie, surfet, drunkennesse, slaunders, treasons, violence, and manslaughters, and such others. And we must kill, or rather kill this parte of the olde man, that his workes maye ende and ceasse, and that the newe man may consecrate himselfe wholly to bring forthe the fruites of the spirit. And the fruites of the spirit be loue, ioy, peace, patience, gentlenesse, goodnesse, long suffering, meekenesse, faith, modestie, cōtinēcie, chastitie, &c.

1. Cor. 2. The affections of the olde man.

Gal. 5.

And this spirituall Sabbath belongeth vnto none, but to the iust and to the regenerate. They that liue still after the flesh, that is to say, doe

The spirituall Sabbath belongeth not to the carnall men.

doe follow the wisedome and affections of it, can not sanctifie this Sabbath, bycause they bee occupyed in the workes of the olde man. For albeit they doe outwardly professe to obserue the lawfull Sabbath, yet they be farre wide from the spirite and meaning of the Sabbath, for that they doe not mortifie the olde man with all his doings, and put on the newe, but do giue themselues altogither vnto dead workes. Wherefore it is necessary, that man in anye wise be regenerate, that is, that in killing the olde, he become a newe man: which thing cannot be brought to passe by any deuice or purpose of ours alone, but must haue the power and working of the spirite of God, who dothe only regenerate the heartes of men, and mortifyeth the olde flesh.

This spirituall Sabbath is not tyed vnto any certayne tyme.

And thys spirituall Sabbath is not tyed vnto any certayne tyme, as the legall Sabbath is, but it is continuall and at all seasons. There be not in this case allowed fiue dayes, in which the old man may apply his matters as he list: the olde man being once mortified, al the rest of our lyfe is appointed vnto the new man, to doe his workes continually, euer to beleeue, alwayes to hope, alwayes to loue, alwayes to bring forthe the rest of the fruites of the spirit. Such is the nature of the spirituall Sabbath.

The Heauenly Sabboth.

The heauenly Sabbath is that, wherein we do rest from the labors and trauayles of thys presente life, with both body and minde. In thys life we must worke in bodye, notwithstanding that the minde after it is regenerate, dothe keepe Sabbath and rest in the Lord. For the spirituall Sabbath dothe not let the elect, but that they may trauell in body, to get somewhat whereby they may liue, and giue vnto them whiche are in necessitie. Besides that, the bodyes of holy menne be afflicted also with manye trauayles, miseries, calamities, and at last with death. Yea and the mind of the Godly mã, although it is repoled in the Lorde his God, yet it is also afflicted, sometymes with erroures, sometymes with tẽptations, sometimes with troubles and anguishes, yea and oftentymes also with a certaine gricfe and pitie which the miseries of others do strik into hym. These be the troubles of this present worlde, whiche the spirituall Sabbath doth not ridde vs of, but the heauẽly Sabbaths shal take them quite away, when in the life to come, our bodyes shall be deliuered from all manner of labours and trauayle of worke: and oure mindes also shal rest togyther with the bodies. For then there shall be no tyme or place of labours, trauayles, passions, sorrowes, troubles, errours, and temptations.

I call this Sabbath the heauenly Sabbath, for that it can not be kepte in this life, but only in figures: but the truth of it taketh place onely in heauen, and requireth a very heauenly life. It may be also called perfect, for that it is not the Sabbath of the body alone, or of the minde only, but it is of them both togither. That same whiche is in the legall Sabbath shadowed, is in the spirituall Sabbath begunne and fashioned: & in this heauenly Sabbath in ỹ life to come, it is perfected and made vp.

Thys

Thys Sabboth is also euerlasting, as all true good things bee that are come to their perfection. For it shall not be ended and mette withall and made perfect with any other Sabbath, but it shall endure for euer. Those things that bee shadowyng and vnperfect, be not, nor deserue to be euerlasting: but be subiecte vnto chaunges, by which eyther they may be ended, or brought to perfection. The legall Sabbath was not of his nature suche, that it shoulde be euerlasting. For it was not a true, but shadowing: not perfect, but sette for younglings and to teache, verye vnperfect and meete to be gyuen to an vntaught people. Therefore at the time of the newe Testamente it did worthyly ceasse, to gyue place to the libertie of the Spirite. Christe is the hodye, at whose comming, shadowes by good reason dyd ceasse. See what the Apostle writeth of thys matter. The verye spirituall Sabbath, though it belong to the newe Testament, yet it is also imperfecte: and shall then be perfecte, when that shall come whiche is perfecte and whole, and that cease, whiche is but in part. For the Apostle witnesseth that some things be vnperfecte, whiche hee calleth In parte, and that some things be perfect. Also of that it shall come to passe, that the perfecte thyngs shall come, and those things that be vnperfect and in part be ridde away. Seeyng that the spirituall Sabbath is, fyrste to haue no sinne, whych is called the worke of bondage: secondly to lyue altogyther according vnto the righteousnesse and holynesse of the new man: it is manifest, that thys Sabbath is not perfected in holye men whyles they liue in thys world. Wherefore it is necessary, that at length there must come a heauenly Sabbath, perfecte, and euerlasting, whiche is that rest of the heauenly dwellyng, that is the Sabbath of Sabbathes, that same high quiet, which men cal the Jubilæ.

Like reason of the Sacramentes, as of the Sabboth.

Hitherto we haue spoken of the diuision of three manner of Sabbathes, & haue declared such thyngs as we thoughte meete to teache, namely howe that the Sabbath is Legal, Literal, bodyly and shadowing: secondly that it is spirituall: thirdely that it shall bee heauenly, perfecte and euerlasting. The lyke matter is of the Sacramentes, both of the newe and of the olde Testamente.

The circumcision of the flesh was lawfull, and giuen to the Israelites, when the foreskin of the flesh is cutte off with a stony knife: the spirituall circumcision is, when the foreskin of the heart is taken away by the working of the holye spirite. The one belonged to the olde, the other to the newe Testamente. But the heauenly circumcisiõ is to come, when we shall be circumcided bothe in body and in minde, and shal dwell for euer with the heauenly spirites, as the angels of God.

Likewyse there is a Baptisme of the body, whith we may wel cal sacramentall: there is also a baptisme of the spirite, that is the inwarde regeneration, renewing and washing: There is a heauenly baptisme, that is the euerlasting and perfecte puritie, whiche we shall obteyne aboue in Heauen after this life.

And

And in the Lords supper there is the outward and sacramentall celebratiō, as it were the outward rine: and the wary also, whiche is the feding and comforte of the soule: yea, and there is also a heauenly perfection in it, whereof Christ maketh mētion, saying: And I appoynte vnto you a Kingdome, as my father appointed to me, that you may eate and drynke vppon my table in my Kingdome. Luke.22.

Therefore there be degrées both of the Sabbath and of the Sacraments. Three degrees of the Sacrament of the Sabbath.

1 The first is grosse, outward and elementary, wherein both good and euill do communicate, touching the outward celebration thereof.

2 The seconde is inward and spirituall, whiche you may well tearme to be of them that doe profite, whereof the elect and faithfull onely doe participate.

3 The thirde is of perfection and consummation, which onely shall abide for euer, to which we do goe vp by the seconde, and to the felicitie whereof the elect do dayly sigh, and with most deepe desires and wishes doe striue vnto it. For they knowe that in it only consisteth the consummation of al true iustice, knowledge of God, loue, quiet and felicitie.

Of the abrogation of the lawish Sabbath.

The errour of the Sabbatharies is refuted. Gene. 2.

SOme men maketh a doubt of the obseruancye of the Lawish sabbath, and defend that it ought as well to be kept of the Christian men, as of the Iewes.

They bring reasons to proue their opinion, and do grounde their argumente vppon that, that the Sabbath was ordeyned by God euen straight at the beginning of the creation, to be the seauenth daye after the syre worcking dayes, and that before the lawe, as we cited before out of Genesis. Here they say: Forasmuche as vniuersally all men are bounde to kéepe the memorie of the creation, it followeth, that the Israelites are not only bound to keepe and sanctifie the Sabbath, but generally all nations of the whole worlde. For the Sabbath of the seauenth daye was sanctifyed by God to that purpose, that it shoulde nourishe and encrease the faith and memorie of the creation of al things in the heartes of all men. Thus the Sabbatharies doe reason the matter.

We cannot denye, that the case of the Sabbath, that is of the rest of the seuenth day, as it is set forth in this Decalogus, and in Genesis, is not such that it doth pertaine onely to the Israelites: as those things were which hapned in their bringing forth from Egypt, which is oftentimes put into their head by God, saying: I am the Lorde thy God, which brought thee out of Egypt, out of the house of bondage. And yet it followeth not, that the obseruance of the lawithe Sabbath is of like charged vppon other nations, as it is vpon the Israelites. For there appeareth no commaundement of God to bind the Gentiles to this obseruaunce of the seauenth day, as the Israelites were by an open lawe. Wherefore it cannot be proued, that the Sabbath of the seuenth day was kept before this law, eyther after Adam tyll Noe before the the flood, eyther from Noe till Moses after the flood, eyther by Abraham and his after-commers. So that some of the Hebrewes do graunte, that it is not written of Abraham that he obserued the Sabbath, but albeit the case were certayne and cleare, that the fathers whiche liued before the lawe, kepte the order of this Sabbath, yet no man could bée bounde by their example to the lyke obseruance, vnlesse they will saye, that we muste also make sacrifices of beastes, bycause we reade, that the fathers did make sacrifice of beastes, both before and after the flood.

The Sabbatharies doe replye, that the kéeping of the Decalogus perteyneth to the lawe of nature, and bindeth not only the Iewes, but the Christians also, and as many as doe profesle the religion of the one and true God. We answere: That this Decalogus, forasmuche as perteyneth vnto the lawe, giuen of God to Israel by Moyses in the mount Syna, that it perteyneth to the Israelites only. For as the Apostle sayth: The lawe speaketh vnto them whiche be vnder the lawe. And the very words of the Decalogus do not onely expresse what it is, but also to whom it is cōmaunded, when God sayeth: I am the Lorde thy God, which brought thée out of the lande of Egypte, and out of the house of bondage, wherby it appeareth manyfestely, that those thynges that be commaunded in the lawe, were commaunded to the people whiche was brought out of the house of the bondage of Egypt. But if any man do thynke, that Christian men also be bounde to this lawe: lette hym yet thynke of the Sacrament of our initiation, whereby we be accompted Christians. If we and the Iewes be admitted and taken in by all one Sacrament, then we must nedes kéepe one religion of the law of Moyses. He that is circumcised, must know that he is debtour to fulfill all the lawe. But he that is baptised in Christ our sauiour, and hath receyued the spirite of grace, surely he dothe seruilely submit hymselfe to the yoke of the lawe, to the great wrong of the grace of Christ, in case he thinke hymselfe bounde to kéepe the lawish Sabbath. The obiection of the Sabbatharies.

They reioyne, Then doth not the Decalogus perteyne vnto Christian men, but vnto the Iewes only? If it be so, it is lawfull ynough for Christian men to haue many Gods, to worshippe Images, to take the name of God in vayne, to attende no holy day, to set their parents at naughte, to kill, to committe adultery, to steale, to beare false witnesse, and to couet his neighbours goodes. I answere: My saying is not, that the obseruance of thys Decalogus dothe absolutely perteyne to the Israelites alone, but in respect that it is the lawe giuen by Moyses, and conteyneth the table of the couenaunte made by God with the Israelites. In that respecte it byndeth neyther the Gentiles, neyther the Christians, but the Israelites only, whome the gyuing of thys lawe doth peculiarly and namely concerne. And yet withall we muste knowe, that the obseruance of those thynges, whiche be conteyned in thys Decalogus, as farre forthe as they bée good, iuste, vpright and godly, and agréeyng wyth the lawe of nature, so they doe perteyn-teyne vnto all men. Imagine that a Prince hauing diuers prouinces vnder him, giue vnto them sundry statutes and lawes, all vprighte and iuste, and yet to the sundry prouinces the lawes are sundrye, according to the diuersitie of time, and for some certayne respectes. In thys case, the lawes that be seuerally giuen to Italy, doe not bynde Germany, in respect that they be made for Italye: and yet in respect that they are to bée lyked for their vprightnesse, the Germaynes can not contemne them, if they do well. The case of thys Decalogue is euen lyke. For in respect that it was deliuered for a lawe by Moses to the Israelites, it doth as a lawe bynde onely the Israelites: but in respect that it agréeth with the lawe of nature, with iustice and equitie, not onely the Israelites, but all men are bounde to the obseruaunce of it. The knowledge, religion and seruice of one true God: and forasmuch as toucheth oure neyghboure, that we doe to no mã that we would not haue done to our selues, perteyneth to the lawe of nature. But of the lawe of nature, loke vppon the Chapter whyche we haue before peculiarly noted of it. For thys matter touching the lawfull Sabbath, it standeth with the lawe of nature, that we shoulde some day giue oure selues vnto holy occupations and exercises. In thys respecte we muste not shake off the sanctifying of the Sabbath or rest, whiche is so farre forth deliuered vnto vs by the lawe of nature, that al people also vniuersally haue their standing holydayes common for all the people, and consecrated to the doyng of holy things.

In vvhat respect vve ought not to refuse the Sabbath.

But that is to be referred vnto the lawe of Moyses, that neyther the firste, nor the seconde, nor the thirde day, &c. but the seauenth day was expressely, and by lawe appoynted for the holy rest. This lawfull appoyntment and halowing of the seauenth day, byndeth no kinde of men but the Iewes. And that was but for a tyme, vntyll the comming of the newe Testamente, when both the lawe of Moyses and the priesthode also gaue place vnto Christe our sauiour. Wherefore it is not without good cause, that the Apostle doth so earnestly reiect the obseruation of the lawe and of the ceremoniall Sabbath, and that we Christian men, leauing the Iewish Sabbath, doe kéepe oure holy rest vppon that day, wherein oure Sauioure deliuered not only the Israelites, but vniuersally all kinde of men, not out of the house of the bondage of Egypte, but from the power and kyngdome of Satan, and rysing from deathe, dyd triumph of all thée, Deathe, Sinne, and Satan. Thys day is called the day of the Lord, to the intent the memorie of the resurrection of our Lorde shoulde be celebrated vntill the ende of the worlde.

The Sabbatharies goe about to obscure thys grace of oure redemption, deliuery, and frédome, and the glorye also of Christe our sauioure, when they forsake the obseruing of the Lordes day, and wyll bryng Christian men backe agayne, as néere as they can, to the yoke of Moyses lawe. Therefore wé muste diligently stoppe theyr endeuoure, as most pestilente. Thys muche of the Sabbath. Nowe lette vs proceéde Dies nicus.

Apoc.

ceéde to the Seconde table of the Decalogus.

The seconde table of the Decalogus.

WE noted before of the diuision of the Decalogus, and shewed you that there is two diuisions, one where as it is deuided into two tables, a nother where it is deuided into Ten wordes, so that we néede not to repeate anye more of that matter héere. Nowe that wée haue made an ende of the fyrste table, wée muste proceéde to the seconde, wherein the other fyue preceptes be comprised, by whyche those thyngs are prescribed, that doe belong vnto the kéepyng of the rule of Iustice and Equitie to wardes our neyghbours. And that is sette fyrste, wherein they be commaunded to honoure their parents, and these be the wordes of it.

The fifte Precept.

Onoure thy Father and thy Mother, that thy dayes may bee long in the land, which the Lord thy GOD shall gyue thee.

There is nothyng in thys precepte that is obscure: and therefore it boteth not to make muche adoe in expoundyng it. And the deuision of it also is not obscure. For euerye man that readeth it, maye perceyue straighte, that there is two partes of it. The one, wherein is commaunded what is to bée done: The other, whereby we bée admonished of the profyte of the obedience vnto it. To the fyrste parte belongeth that that he sayeth: Honoure thy father and thy mother; to the other, that whyche hée addeth: That thou mayest lyue long, or as it is in the Hebrew, That thy dayes maye bée prolonged, or if thou wyll, that thy dayes maye prolong, last long vppon the Earthe, whyche the Lorde thy God shall gyue thee. Hée promiseth large and long lyfe to them, whyche behaue themselues godly towardes their parentes.

VVhiche the Lorde thy God shall giue thee.

Whereas hée sayeth not symplye, That thy lyfe maye be long vpon the lande: but hée addeth, whyche the Lorde thy God shall gyue thée: it is an applying vnto the presente cause. For they were brought forth from the house of the bondage of Egypte, to the intente they shoulde be ledde into the lande of Canaan, whyche was promised vnto theyr fathers Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob; and to theyr seede, and they were nowe euen in theyr iourney to enter into that lande. Wherefore it is not redde in the Hebrewe in the future tence, Whyche the Lorde thy God shall gyue thée, but, Which the Lorde thy GOD gyueth thée. For the verye bringing of them out of Egypte, and the passyng thorough the Deserte, was nothyng else but the fulfylling of Gods promisse made vnto the Fathers. Hée beganne to giue them the land that hée promysed, when hée brought them oute of Egypte, and ordeyned their iourney and passage vnder thgouernaunce of Moyses and Aaron: yea, and was also present with thē, directing and dispatching all things in that iourney.

So that he addeth thys parcell, to admonishe the Israelites, that they shoulde in déede enter into the lande that was promised: but that it could not be, that they should liue long and dwell in it, if they did neglect and despise their parentes. But let vs sée what things are to be considered in this precept.

Things to bee obserued in that that he sayth: Honor thy Father and Mother.

True religion doth not so worship, that it doeth neglect men.

FIrste, let vs consider that point, that he is not contente onely to set forth those precepte wherein we are taught of the faith, reuerence, and seruice due vnto him: but he addeth also those, wherein is commanded that that is to be obserued towardes our neighboure. By thys consideration we bée admonished, that the same is no full nor true religion and godlinesse, whiche so serueth the image of God, that it vtterly neglecteth those thynges that concerne our neyghbours. For they that bée so mynded, haue an euill opinion of God. Tyrauntes bée of that disposition, that they doe chiefly and onely couet to bée honoured and feared of theyr subiectes, hauyng no respecte what befall to theyr neyghboures. This spirite is farre wyde from God, who is not satisfyed that thou do honour, feare, and serue hym, vnlesse thou be also well mynded towardes thy neyghbours. Wherefore he did not onely sette forthe the Firste table of the Decalogus, but the Seconde also, in whyche hée placed the precepte of righteousenesse to bée obserued towards oure neyghbours. And thys Seconde table, though it doe not in the chiefest degrée helpe to the obseruing of the couenaunt, yet it is in the seconde degrée. For they be not true and sound worshippers of God, that couet to please God, and in anye wise to procure his fauoure by, I wote not what outwarde, rytes and ceremonies in the Churches, hauyng no care at all to loue theyr neyghboure, as though that péece of righteousenesse dyd not belong vnto the true worshippe of God, and that it were possible that he whyche dothe hys neyghboure anye wrong, coulde by anye manner of worship make hymselfe to bée well lyked of Goddes Maiestie. A lyke matter, as if anye man thynke that hée is able to please hys father by some certayne kynde of seruices touching hymselfe, and yet wyll dayly offende hys bréethren: as though that the fathers woulde haue their children to regarde them alone, and require not also that they should beare a mutuall loue one of them to another.

Secondely lette vs wey, towardes what kynde of menne hée dothe alotte the seconde charge to obserue righteousenesse vnto, nexte after hymselfe. There bée two kyndes of men, or if you wyll, estates of mankynde: the one is of the dead, the other of the liuing. Of the dead hée commaundeth nothyng, whether they be holy or vnholy. The fyrste table is manifestly appoynted vnto God, the seconde vnto men that be aliue, with whom we doe accompany as with our neyghboures. There is no mention of the dead. Neyther yet is oure condition such, that we can haue anye thing to doe with thē that be dead, whose life is changed into an estate muche differente from that whiche is in thys worlde. But if the purpose of our religion should haue bin applyed vnto the dead, the consideration thereof shoulde not haue bin passed ouer in this Decalogus. Nowe the firste table setteth not forth Angels, nor the seconde dead Saintes: but the fyrste our Lord God only, and this seconde nothing else, but that we ought to honoure our parentes, and not to hurte oure neighboures with anye wrong, meaning them that be aliue, and able to receyue suche matters. So that theyr religion is very preposterous, that will séeme to be religious in worshipping the dead, and neglect them that be aliue, and theyr neyghbours. They doe set at light al care of righteousnesse, vprighte dealing, gwdnesse, and loue to bée vsed towards their neighbours aliue, and yet do séeme very officious towardes the dead: in whose memories (same they will sooner bestowe ...ece of golde, than a fewe vile ...ppes to their liuing bréethren.

Thirdly, marke whome he dothe appoynte to be honoured. He sayth, Honoure thy father and thy mother. It nédeth no declaration, who bée meante by father and mother. It is knowen to all men, that they bée our parents, of whome we be borne and bred. Men do include in them commonly the Magistrates, the pastors of Churches, teachers of good manner and of artes, tutours, kinsmen, and all that be elder in yeares. This meaning and diligence is commendable. For all these are to be estéemed. But for all that, in this place there is nothyng commaunded of them. There be other places of Scripture, in whiche we be admonished to honoure the Magistrates, the presidentes of the congregation, teachers, and olde men. We knowe that it is no lesse matter to frame the mind, than to produce and beget the body: and that the defence which we haue thorough the Magistrate, stándeth in stéede of the fatherly care. Yet for all that, we must stande to the simplicitie of the words set forth to the rude people, and kéepe the difference of the states of mankynde. And we must not giue like honoure vnto all. The prerogatiue of the father chalengeth to hymselfe a certayne peculiar affection, whych the righte and incorrupt perseueraunce of nature dothe prescribe more than any teaching. Therefore it is not without reason, that hée gyueth the fyrste place in thys Seconde table to the honoring of the parentes: manifestly declaring, that we ought to repute in nexte place after God, those men of whome we be borne and broughte vppe. We must haue recourse vnto the causes of our life. The fyrste is in God, by whome we bée made, but after that there is none other, but that whyche is in our parentes, of whose flesh we bée borne, by whose care and diligence wée be nourished, brought vppe and encreased, not without incomparable loue and trauell. These instruments of our birth and life, doe iustly chalenge the nexte obseruaunce and reuerẽce after God. So that of most right order, the precept of honoring our parentes, is set next after the religion due vnto God.

Parentes to be honored nexte after God.

Vnto parents is appointed not the chiefe but the second honor

Fourthly, it is not to be ouerpassed, that he appoynteth not the first, but the second honoure vnto the parents. The very order of the Tables and of the preceptes dothe sufficiently tell vs, that we must first of al honoure God, and next after God oure parentes. Therefore no sonne is so bound to honor hys parents, that he shall in respect of them leese regarde the religion and seruice of G O D. That obseruance of Gods precepte is preposterous, which repugneth against God hymselfe, from whome procedeth the whole authoritie of the parentes, and the subiection of the children. As that loue is preposterous when the children are more derely loued, than hee by whome both wee and oure children bee, by whose benefyte wee be both men and fathers. Abraham dyd in a most noble and cleere example declare, that no children, though only and most deere, ought to bee loued aboue God, when at Gods commaundement he appoynted to sacrifice hys onely sonne Isaac, whome he loued exceedingly. Therefore, by lyke reason it is required also of the parẽts, that they loue theyr children lesse than God. And of the children, that they honor theyr parentes vnder God. Christe the sonne of God, requireth both these of vs, when hee sayth: He that loueth his father or mother more than me, is not meete for me. And he that loueth hys sonne or his daughter more than me, is not meete for me. And in this saying, hee requireth earnestly that whiche appertayneth vnto God: and doth admonishe vs, that it is not true loue, when the children are preferred before the creatoure and sauioure of all: nor true honoure, when the parentes are honoured more than God.

Abraham.

Gene. 22.

Matth. 10.

Fiftely, let vs wey also this word of honoring. He sayth, Honoure thy father and thy mother, he sayth not, Feare thy father and thy mother, nor he saith not, Loue: nor he sayeth not, Obey thy father and mother: but Honoure. We must also loue oure parentes and feare them, and we must reuerently obey them: but in steade of all these there is required honor, not excluding all these, but including and tempering them together. The seruaunt feareth his maister, and the inferioure his greater, but he loueth hym not, he esteemeth hym not. The naturall sonne dothe also feare his parentes and loueth them: but he dothe adde somewhat, which is not found in the seruaunte. The seruaunt obeyeth his maister, but against his will: but the sonne obeyeth also his parents but with no seruile affection, but such as becommeth a sonne. The brother loueth the brother, the friend the friend, the fellow the fellowe: and the naturall sonne also his father and mother, but not all one like another. Loue is wont to bréede a certaine familiaritie, and of the familiaritie riseth by little and little a certaine neglecte and contempt, specially if they lyue togyther dayly in one house, as the parents and children doe. Therefore such suche loue shoulde not serue the purpose of the law giuer. Yea and sometimes the affection of loue maye growe in children towards their parentes, as it were by hys owne accord, by disposition of nature, or the perseuerance of the fathers benefytes, so that there may be no necessitie to commaund it.

But this honour which the lawegiuer requireth, saying: Honoure thy father and thy mother, consisteth neyther in the affection of corrupte nature, neyther is bredde of the fathers benefites, or liuing togither in house, but springeth out of the loue towards God, as out of a rote. For to honoure the parentes is briefly nothing else, but to iudge discretely, reuerently, and honorably of the parents, and to make much of all theyr thyngs: not only as elders, but principally as parentes, whome God hath vsed as instruments, to this intẽt, that we be borne into this light and life, and be nourished after we be borne. The Ebrewe word hathe the signification of Grauitie, excluding all lightnesse, negligence and contempt: and requiring such an affection, as shall iudge hys parents to be men not of lyghte momente, but graue: not to be loued as equals, but as the authors of our birthe and lyfe: not to be feared as maisters and lordes, but to bée reuerenced louingly and honorably, as the guides of oure lyfe, ministers and fellowworkers of God: in whome we doe honoure both the vertue and goodnesse of God, whereby we are made and borne men of the blond of man. If thou doe muche esteeme and regarde thy lyfe, thy birth and natiuitie, and the education whyche followed thy nativitie, without whiche it hadde nothyng auayled thée to haue bene borne: then it followeth, that thou must iudge with greate reputation, hyghly, holyly, and honourably, of those men, by whome these things came to passe: of whose fleshe thou hast receyued that thou art made a man. The very fleshe of thyne, thy bloud, yea and thy verye lyfe, if they be asked of theyr byrth, will poynte thée out thy father and mother, as the beginners of them: and will say the same that thys law commaundeth, saying, Honoure thy father and thy mother.

Thys honor as it excludeth all neglect and contempte, so it includeth all reuerence, obseruaunce, obedience, loue, benevolence, and such lyke. For hée that so dothe honor, can not denye that due reuerence vnto hys parentes, whereby he is carefull, least hée doe anye thyng, wherewyth they may bée offended: hée can not chose, but obey theyr commaundementes: he can not but loue them and sette forthe their honoure, and ayde their necessities, if anye suche occasion be. Wherefore the lawgiuer, to comprise all these things as it were in one bundell, vsed ŷ word of honoring, saying, Honor thy father and thy mother.

This commandement is to honor not onely the father, but the mother also.

Sirtly, obserue ŷ also, that the cõmandement runneth not only of the father, but of ŷ honoring of the mother also. He sayth not simply, Honoure thy father, but he addeth, And thy mother. In déede the mother is inferioure vnto the father, as concerning the lawe of the subiection of wedlocke: and beesides that, weaker also in nature and kinde, so that thée is not vnworthily called, the weaker vessell, of the Apostle Peter: but they must not take thereof anye argumente to haue the lighter iudgemente of hir. For the difference that is in wedlocke betwixt the husbande and the wife, perteyneth nothing vnto him, but he must loke vnto the relation which is betwirte the mother and the sonne. Whatsoeuer she is in respect of hir husbande, she is as mother to thée, and equally to be honored with thy father: for she did equally worke with him to thy birth, yea, and also muche more. For who can sufficiently wey, how great a heape of trauailes the great belly draweth on withall, how great their paynes be towards their deliuerance, howe many and how thicke their throwes be, that it was not for naught sayde, In payne thou shalt bring forth thy children: what a trouble haue they in giuing them milke, what a care all the while their children bée in their swadling clothes? Therefore they doe exceedingly amisse, that doe take the honor whiche is due commonly vnto both the parentes, and giue it to the fathers alone, & thinke that it skilleth not, how they vse their mothers, so that they please their fathers.

1. Pet. 3.

Genes. 3.

Seuenthly, Let vs consider also, that there is no condition added vnto it, but whatsoeuer the parentes bée, forasmuch as they be thy parentes, they must be honored. There is no other respect hérein, but the prerogatiue of parents: whiche is no whit more to be accounted vpon, whether they be noble, gentlemen, famous, riche, in authoritie, than if they be of the common sorte, base, obscure, and poore. He that doth reuerence and honor his parentes, bycause they bée of greate estimation and riche, out of doubt he will contemne them, if they should be obscure and poore, and doth reuerence in them not the prerogatiue of parents, nor the beginning of his life, but their outwarde fortune: and the same that he beareth vnto thē, he woulde giue by the same reason to them that hée neuer sawe, so that there were anye hope of some great honour and ryches. I haue my selfe séene diuers yong men fallen to that wickednesse, that they haue takē vp their own mother with taunts and rebukes, bycause that she hadde presumed to marrie to their father, and was made their mother, béeyng poore, and farre inferioure to hym in goodes, for that they estéemed it to be a vile matter, to be borne of so base a stocke. But God suffered not so great an impietie to scape vnpunished. Therefore the godly and good sonne must thinke, that it is not done without the purpose of God, if hée be borne of base parents: & he must endeuoure to make their basenesse more séemely with hys reuerence, and to bring them to more reputation by the fame of his goodnesse and honestie.

That there vvas no condition of the parents added.

Eightly, it is not to be passed ouer, that séeyng nature it selfe dothe declare, that the parents ought to be honored, in so muche that Valerius Maximus sayeth, that it is the fyrste lawe of nature, that we must loue our parēts. It may be demaunded, what néede it was to commaund mé by a written lawe, that euerye man shoulde honoure hys Parentes?

But

But if we consider what the corruption of our nature is, it shall appeare that it is not done without reason. In déede all men do grant, that it is right and méete that the sonne do honour the father and mother: and yet we be so far out of the way, that we do wrong sometimes, not only vnto straungers, but also to our kinsemen and to our very parentes: so that we wil giue them euil wordes, yea, and sometimes stripes. Therefore it is prouided by law, that he shal be punished with death, whosoeuer vseth cursed words to his father and mother, or giueth thē any stripe. These lawes giuen by God, do reproue the crokednesse of our nature, and there were no cause why they shoulde be giuen, vnlesse we would do the worst when we knowe the best, and that we can not refraine the nature of our malice, no not towards our own parentes.

Mynthly, we must also consider of the transgression of this precept. There be two sortes of them that may be blamed for the transgression of this precept. The one is of them, which be the authors and causers that children giue not due honour to their parents: the other is of them, which do not giue the lawfull honor to their parentes. To the firste sort may be referred not onlye they which do seduce yong men, and depraue their maners, and make them disobedient to their parents, and impacient of all good discipline, by naughty and corrupt company, in eating and drinking, playing and hoaring: but they also which vnder colour of religion doe bring that to passe, that the parentes are defrauded of the due honour that their children shoulde do to them, and so by their traditions doe breake the precept of God. Such the Scribes and the Pharisées were among the Iewes, in Christes time, of whome we reade in this sorte. Why doe you transgresse the commaundement of God for your traditions? For God said, honour thy father and thy mother. And whosoeuer curseth his father and his mother, shall dye the death. And ye say, Whosoeuer saith to his father or mother: whatsoeuer rewarde is of me, shalbe beneficiall vnto them: and honoreth not his father or mother. And you haue made the precept of God broken for your traditions. Thus much is there. Yet none of them taught this, Honour not thy father and thy mother, but they did diligently teache the Decalogus. And they doe also at this daye, mosse superstitiously laye it vp in a chest, and bring it forth and shew it solemnly in the Sabbothes and feast dayes. For they iudge it not lawful to read the words of it openly, which Iosephus dissembleth not. But forasmuche as they did hinder the obseruance of this precept by their tradition, vpō colour of a better teaching, that it was better to giue to the Temple, that which should be giuen to the parentes: specially for that the same rewarde profyted not only the giuer, but also the parentes before God: they were worthylye blamed of Christ, bycause they brake this precept of God for their tradition.

Matth. 15.

Exod. 20.

What shall we say here of our Pharisées and Hypocrites?

Of our Pharisies and Hypocrits.

1 Doe not they breake this precept of God, which do so extoll the super-

Critis of monkery, that they do teach that men muste runne into Abbeys againſt their parentes will, yea and treade vpon them in the entrie?

2 Are not they to be blamed of this tranſgreſſion, that teache, that it is not lawfull for Monkes, Friers and Nonnes, to go to relieue the neceſſities of their parentes, no not when they be ſicke and ready to dye?

3 Be not they alſo to be reputed with theſe, that do teache and ſtande to it, ỹ the matrimony is god which is contracted without the knowlege of the parents, yea though they ſpeke againſt it, and it be againſt their wil: which teaching doth not only manifeſtly diminiſhe the power and honor of the parentes, but is alſo very hurtfull to them that do wedde, and is a ſhame to publike honeſtie, and contrary vnto the cuſtome of the godly, and of our forefathers.

4 Vpon this alſo dependeth that that they teach, that the children may profite their parẽts after their death, if they buye Dirigies and Maſſes for money or yerely rentes. For ſo it cõmeth to paſſe, that they regarde them the leſſe, whiles they be a liue. Theſe thinges they do ſo manifeſtly and vniuerſally, that the ſame which Chriſt obiected to the Scribes and Phariſées of ỹ Iewes, may be more worthyly obiected vnto them.

How this precept is made broken of the parentes themſelues.

And the parentes themſelues doe aſmuch as lieth in them, make this precept of God broken, whẽ by their owne fault they doe hinder this honor due vnto them of their children, that is, when they doe behaue themſelues ſo, that it is impoſſible or very harde for the children, to iudge honorably and reuerently of them. This happeneth diuers wayes.

Firſt, if they be to the face of the world naughty liuers, as they be dyſcardes, adulterers, vain and light in wordes and dedes: of which number they be, that do prate of the fondneſſe of their youth, before their children.

Secondly: if they do not reſtraine the malice which is in the hartes of their children, but doe of a prepoſterous fauoring of them, winke at all their faultes.

Thirdly, if they do not bring them vp in the feare and diſcipline of God, out of which floweth as it were a riuer of an obedient harte, and keping the wil of the parentes.

Fourthly, if beſides all this, they be either authors or els abbettors vnto them in their naughtineſſe.

Fiftly, if they be ouer lowe and ſharpe vnto them: which is when they do with ouermuch ſeueritie, vſe rather a Lordlineſſe ouer them, than a fatherly care and diſcipline: and ſometimes when they doe amiſſe, do raile vpon them with tauntes and rebukes, yea and ſometime ſlaunder them when they be innocent. It can not be tolde, howe muche this raſhneſſe, hardneſſe and cruelneſſe doeth turne away and ſturre the hartes of the children againſt their parentes, that it was not for naught ſayd by the Apoſtle, And you fathers, prouoke not your children to anger, but bring them vp in diſcipline and correction of the Lord.

Sixtly, if they openly fall out among themſelues with often diſcord, brawling and chyding, and ſo extinguiſh the quiet and diſcipline of the familye. All theſe thinges and ſuch lyke, if they be once ſetteled to the ſight & knowledge of children, what can follow, but though not manifeſt, yet priuy contempt of the parentes. For we be altogether ſo diſpoſed, ỹ we can not reuerẽtly iudge of them, whome we finde by the teſtimony of our conſcience to be bayne, light and naught, though thei be neuer ſo neere vnto vs. We may loue ſuch carnally, as farre forthe as they do pleaſe our carnall affections, but honor or reuerence them, we can not. This is a large fielde, but let it ſuffiſe to haue touched it briefly.

Let wiſe men thinke vpon the neceſſitie of this conſideratiõ, to whom it belongeth faithfully and diſcreetly to inſtruct the Church of God, and wiſely to admoniſh thẽ of all things nedefull. Theſe admonitions of mine ſhould here be giuen to the parentes a parte, leaſt their children do peruerſly vſe that to the pretext of their malice, which is well and neceſſarily ſpoken. But here is a queſtiõ, whether it be lawful for the children to denaye the honor due vnto their parentes, if they finde that they be bayne, light, naught, not agreeing one with an other, cruell alſo vnto them, ſlanderous and wrongful? I anſwer: None of theſe matters muſt be of ſo great moment, that it may giue cauſe to breake Gods commandementes, but ſuch as do hinder the obſeruing of a greter righteouſneſſe and godlineſſe: as that is, which is due vnto the preceptes of the firſt table. But there is no impediment, but that children maye alſo ſpecially loue, honor and ſerue God, and alſo beare dewe reuerence vnto ſuch parentes: who if they were not their parentes, might worthyly be leſſe regarded, becauſe they be light, bayne, and naught. For there is no condition in any precept of God, that the ſon ſhal not honor his parentes, although they be not in all points vpright, and without fault.

Counſel in this matter for good children.

Therefore, if the children be godly, firſt they wil be very ſory for their parents faultes: Secondly, they wil not ceaſe to pray vnto the Lord for them, that by his grace they may be amended, and returne into the way. Thirdly, they will with all modeſtie, lowlineſſe, and reuerence admoniſhe them of their dutie, godlineſſe, & honeſtie: Fourthly, they wil not blowe abrode ſuch faultes of theirs, as be done at home, but will rather hide it as carefully as they can. Fiftely, if there be any diſcorde riſen betwixt them, they wil be marueloous ware, that they do not cheriſh and encreaſe it, cleauing vnto any parte, but to bring their hartes that be in ſuch diſcord among themſelues, to agreement, and to make them as one.

If they feele that they be ouerhard vnto them, ſo that it doe braſt out ſometimes vnto reproches and manifeſt wrong, firſte they muſt thinke that it may be, that they themſelfs vnware haue miniſtred occaſion of it, and therefore let them make a diligent accompt of their demeanor and behauiour: & if they find any thing amiſſe in themſelfs, let them amend it. Furthermore, the harder and vnkinder that they be, the more gentle and lowly let them ſhew themſelues in all points, that they may by little & little relent their hardneſſe through their redineſſe, to ſhew obedience and kindneſſe, to ſaue it withall.

In caſe they do no good this ways, let them thinke that the lightenesse of their youth is punished by this sharpnesse at home, not without the pleasure of God, to the intent they should be euen from their childhod instructed in patience to beare wrong, which they should be afterward better able to vse all the dayes of their lyfe, in their conuersation in the worlde. Thus a naturall and godly sonne shal be affected towardes his parentes, if they chaunce to be light, vayne, offenders, disagreing, harde, and cruell towardes him: whereby though he do not winne his parents, yet he shal be well stayed in his own duetye, that he offende nothing against this precept of God, which he shal be most obedient vnto.

Basilius Magnus.

And whereas Basile in a certain Epistle writeth, saying: It belongeth him whiche goeth aboute to breake his brotherlye charitie, to haue great cares, to passe many nights without slepe, and with many teares to seke of God what is true. The godly and naturall childe ought to vse no lesse care towardes his parentes, that he breake not the honor due vnto them, by any rashnesse or lightnesse.

Of them which honor not their parentes.

Hitherto we haue admonished you of the firste sort of transgressors of this precept, which do minister cause vnto their children, whereby they be letten that they do not giue due honor vnto their parentes. Now let vs consequently speake of the other sort, which comprehendeth them which do not vouchsafe to giue lawful honor vnto their parentes: and so either of themselues, or through the motion of some other thinges, doe transgresse this precept of God.

Of these there be three kindes.

1 The first is of them, which doe outwardly faine a certain reuerence and duetie towardes their parentes, specially in the presence of others: but inwardly and in their hartes do contemne them, and do rashly and without reuerence iudge of their sayings and doynges: and sometimes also do slaunder them, though not before euery man, yet before them that they know to be of the same affection and iudgement that they be.

2 The second kinde, toucheth them, which neither in heart be honestly affected towards their parentes, nor outwardelye declare due obedience and reuerence towardes them, but such as they be in heart, such they shewe themselues bothe in worde and in deede. Their offence is double: For first, they doe not honor in obeying, in obseruing, in well doyng. Though they be not ignorant, which waye they might and ought to gratifie them, yet for all that, they will not meddle with the matter. Againe, which is yet worse, they do dishonest the both in wordes and in deedes: and in case they be able to doe them anye harme, they be so wicked, that they dare doe it contrarie vnto all reason, aswell of godlinesse as of honestie. Such a one was Ruben, which was not afraide to clime vp vnto his father Iacobs lodging, and to defile his bed. Suche a one was Absolon, which layd waite to get both his father Dauids kingdome and life. Such there be many amongst the children of Tyrannes, which eyther put out their fathers eyes when they be olde, or else commit them to prison, to the intent that when they be out of the waye, they may may without offence enioy al things as they liste.

We must put them in the thirde kinde, which be not in deede irreuerentlye affected towardes their parentes: but sometimes vpon some occasion falling out of square with themselues, they handle them not very reuerently. Such be somtimes the smatterers of learning, which do ouer intemperately chastē the ouersightes and ignorances of their parentes: and they also, that be ouer greedy of the world, and can not find in their hartes to ayde the necessitie of their parentes. Yea and they also which stande in their own conceite, and suppose that they ought to beare all thinges with them, and therefore take it scornefully, if they be corrected by them in any matter, or if they haue any thing denied them.

But it were an infinite trauayle, and also a matter not necessarie, if I should purpose to rehearse al sorts of inobedient children, and transgressors of this precept. For this worlde of oures doth daylye set before our eyes (if a man marke it) ynough of all sortes of disobedient and vnnaturall children.

Thinges to be obserued in that that he saith, That thou mayest long liue vpon the lande, which the Lorde thy God shall giue thee.

FIrst we must way, that there is added vnto the precept a promisse, alluring them to the obseruance of that that is commanded. By this promysse it is declared, how gentle a lawegiuer God is, who might haue absolutely commanded, and haue requyred obedience of his people without anye promisse, for this cause only, that it is most mete both that we should obey God, and honour our parents, which equitie the lawe of nature it selfe doth teach vs. But of his abundant goodnesse he doeth adde a promisse. They are not wonte to doe so which vse a lordlynesse towarde their subiectes, but such as haue a fatherly affection, & doe rather trauayle to haue things go well with their subiectes, than to rule without interruption or trouble to themselues. And let vs be admonished of this fatherly & godly goodnesse, as oft as ther be promisses added vnto the preceptes and doctrines of God, that vnderstāding the swetnesse thereof, we may become the more encoraged and the redier to followe and obey the same.

The qualitie of the promysse.

2 Secondly, marke the qualitie of this promysse, how conuenient it is for this carnall and lawish people, whether you loke to the good which is promised, or to the threateninges which be included. He sayth not, That thou mayest please the Lord God, and purchace the life to come: but, That thou mayst liue long vpon the lande, &c. This is naturally giuen vnto all men, that they do loue the life of the flesh, & do couet to liue long, or rather euer, if it were possible) and when they must dye, do exceedingly abhorre death. This promisse of long life he doeth well set forthe to the carnall people, that at the least way, by the desire therof, he might procure them to obedience. Ther be also many other such earthly promisses set forth to this people.

There

There were many of them chosen and godly menne, appoynted to heauenly godnesse, but yet now and the suche earthly promisses were giuen them for a certain lawfull teaching. But vnto the people of the newe testament, are promised no carnal and earthly thinges, but heauenlye godnesse, as we may see in the writings of the Euangelistes, and of the Apostles.

That the Apostle doth also set forth this earthly promisse vnto Christian men.

You will say: For all that, the Apostle doeth set forth also vnto Christian menne this earthly promisse of longe life. I answere: He doeth in deede set it forth, but he saith before, Children obeye your parentes in the Lord: for that is right. And againe, Children (he saith) obeye your parentes in all thinges: for that hath pleased the Lord. The Apostle therfore doth so call Christian yong men to the obedience of this precept, that children may doe their duety toward their parentes, not only for hope of long life, but also in respect that it is right, and the pleasure of God. And by this temperance he doeth neither rashly reiecte Gods promisse, nor condemne the naturall affection of longer life, but in respect of Christian godlinesse he doeth induce and direct vs vnto more spirituall thinges.

Ephes. 6. Coloss. 3.

A like matter this is that he saith vnto Timothee: Exercise thy self to godlinesse. For the bodyly exercise is profitable vnto little: but godlynesse is profitable vnto all thinges, hauing promisse of this life and of the lyfe to come. Where he sayth, Hauing promisse of the life that now is, he doeth sufficiently declare, that it is not damnable, if any man according vnto the direction of nature, do couet thinges that be necessarie for this present lyfe. And where he addeth, And of the lyfe to come, he doth also admonish, that the commodities of this life be so far forth to be desyred of vs, that we neglect not the felicitie of ỹ life to come. And also that the louingnesse of God is such, that it will exceedingly well prouide for them that be godly, and feare him bothe in this presente, and in the lyfe to come. Wherefore in case the godly be in this lyfe sometymes exercised with troubles, we muste thinke, that such afflictions be by the order of Goddes prouidence brought vpon vs for some certain causes, although wee doe not immediatly vnderstande them.

1. Timoth. 5.

3 Thirdly, we must thinke of that, what the equitie of this promisse is. There is promised long life vnto the whiche doe esteeme their parentes. For it is most right, that he lacke the long liuing of this benefite, who soeuer setteth at light either the author, either the instrument of it. The instrument of our life be our parentes. Therfore long life is most rightly so promised to them, which do honour their parents. And it is also signified, that it is not to be loked for of them, which do the cõtrary. Wel des that, that they which be disobedient and troublesome vnto their parentes, for the moste parte be vnprofitable vnto mans life. For he that doeth not accõmodate his lyfe vnto them, vnto whom he is bound for his byrth and bringing into this worlde, and with great trauayles & troubles hath brought him vp, to whome can he earnestly apply himself to do any pleasure or seruice?

4 Fourthly, it may be demanded, how it can be beneficiall or good, if a man be longliued in the lande, seyng that by the iudgement of wise men, it is a miserable thing to be borne, and most miserable to liue long: and on the other side, most happy not to be borne at all, or else to dye quickly. This life is wretched, and subiect alwayes to manye calamities and stormes. The world it selfe wherin we liue, is called, The vale of misery and wretchednesse: Therefore it semeth to be a thing more happy to be sone ridde out of it, thã to leade a long life in it. I answere: These words do sauor not of Christian wisdom, but of ỹ wisdome of this world, specially in that that they say, It is moste happye not to be borne at all. For they must wishe this, who for their notable wickednesse are founde to be children of perdition, as Judas was, of whom Christ pronounced, saying: It were better for that man, if he had not ben borne. But others which be called vnto heauenly and euerlastinge life, though they be exercised in this earthly life with all kinde of afflictiõs, yet neuer the lesse they are to be accompted truely happy, for the hope of the felicitie, that is to come. For as the Apostle witnesseth, The passions of this life are not worthye to be esteemed, in comparison to the glorye to come, which shal be in his time reueled in vs.

It is good of it self to liue, it is also good to liue long.

You will say, Yet it seemeth more happy to departe sooner out of this wretched life vnto the heauenly rest, than by long lyuing to abide continuall troubles, and to lacke that wished quiet the longer. I answere: If life of it self, be the gift of God, then it is certaynelye good. If it be good, surely it is good of it self to enioye it long. And for that that sometimes in this life chaunceth to come afflictions and many troubles, it is to be referred vnto the accidentes, and not to the substance it self, of this goodnesse. Nother the gift of God is therfore to be wyshed away, wherein he graunteth vs to lyue, and to tary long in this life: and I speake not of the rest of the benefites wherewith God doth both spiritually and corporally augmente and garnish this our present life withall.

It is not therfore euill to liue here, because it is better to liue in heauen.

Neyther it followeth, that it is therfore euil to lyue, bicause it is better to lyue in heauen than in earth. This present state, and the state of our lyfe to come, be not of contraries, but of subordinate things one to an other: as earth is also, and heauen. The earth is good, heauen is better. It is in a sorte good of it self, to lyue, it is better if a man lyue honestly and vprightly: it is beste of al, if it be giuen vs to lyue in beste sorte and most happyly, as we shall lyue in the countrye of Heauen. It taketh not away that which is chiefly good, but doeth accomplishe the goodnesse of those thinges whiche be of an inferior order, and conueniently set in order by Gods ordinaunce. The condition and nature of our soule is more noble, than that of our bodye. And yet he muste be worthy to haue nor body nor soule, whosoeuer will say the body is euill, bicause the soule is better. Golde passeth Siluer, yet Siluer is good, though Golde be better. He is not worthy to haue Siluer, that in respect of Golde setteth nothing by Siluer. So likewise we muste iudge of our lyfe. Let vs acknowledge the gifte of God, not only in the life to come; but also in this present life, and in the long continuance thereof: if it come by the benefite of God. Let vs not be wayward in Gods giftes, but kinde. It is the parte of a gratefull minde so to commende the chiefe and best benefites, that withall he despise not the meaner and inferiour. It is the voyce of holy & not of carnall men that sayth, We that lyue, bleste the Lord. And the Scripture rehearseth among the benefites of God bestowed vpon Abraham the father of the beleuers, that he dyed in a good age, olde & full of dayes,

Psalm.113.

Gen.25.

VVhether that to die sone, be al vvayes a token of the anger of God.

Yet some man wil say: If it be to be imputed vnto ỹ good will of God, that men do lyue long in this flesshe, then to dye quickly, is it a token of the anger of God? I answere: Let no man erre, nor rashly iudge of the whiche aye taken by ouer timelye death out of this life: we must consider, that we must not iudge of this matter, without a conuenient difference to be made in it. The ouertimely death hath a signe of the anger of God, if it fal vpon the wicked, of whome it is written, that they reache not to the middes of their dayes. The rodde of God is also in them, which perteine vnto GOD. Whereof we may see what the Apostle sayth: Wherefore amongst you many be sicke and weake, and many sleepe. So that if we would acknowledge and iudge our selues, we should not then be iudged. But when we be iudged, we be chastened of the Lord, to the intent, we should not be damned with this worlde. Where as he sayth, A man sleepeth, he speaketh neither of the wicked, neither of the that dye for age: but of the Godly, that be chastened of the Lord, and taken away by ouertimely death, least they shoulde be damned with the worlde. Sometimes the iust also dye so, that we muste acknowledge the mercy of God. Whereof there is a place in the booke of wisdome, The beloued that pleased God, was translated alyue among sinners: he was taken away, least malice should alter his vnderstanding, or least dissembling shoulde deceiue his soule. He was dispatched quickly, yet fulfilled he muche time: For his soule pleased God, therefore he hasted to take him out of the middle of iniquitie: and that which followeth there. It is an easy matter for them that consider this, to vnderstand, how that ouertimely death is not indifferently in all men to be imputed to the Anger of God. Wherefore we must beware, that we do not rashlye vniustly condemne any man for ouertimelye death, nor that we do not without cause trouble the consciences of them which be some taken out of this life: but rather taking it moderatly, to comfort them to patience, by discrete talking of it. For it is not our parte to iudge to sore of the state of them that dye sone: for asmuche as the iudgementes of God be secrete: and no man knoweth what is in man, specially when he is at the very point of death, but the spirite of man, and God the knower of al mens hartes and spirites.

Prou.10.

1. Cor.11.

5 Fiftelye, in that that he sayth, Which the Lord God giueth the: first we be admonished, that ỹ earth is the is the Lords, so that he may giue it at his libertie to whome he will. That lande whereof the Lord speaketh, was at that time in the hand & possession of the Canaanites. They receiued it also of the Lord, but not so that they should for euer & of proper right possesse it, and neuer iustly to be bereaft of it. The earth is not so giuen vnto the childre̅ of men: but to whomsoeuer it is giuen, it is so giuen for a time, that it may be moste iustly at the wil of the giuer, whensoeuer it pleseth him, be taken away. So this same land of Canaan, as it was sometime giuen by God to the Canaanites, and afterward taken away againe, & giuen to Israel to possesse: so when his pacience was stirred by Israel vnto anger, it was taken againe from Israel, & deliuered first to the Assyrias, and afterwards to the Babylonians. Afterwarde it was taken away againe from them, and restored vnto Israel, and yet againe taken from Israell, and giuen to the Romaines, and at length tossed frō the Romains to the Turkes. This is for an example to be considered in the land of Canaan: that we may vnderstande, that they be most fonde, which thinketh that the land is so giuen of God to the childre̅ of men, that they do possesse it in full, proper, and vnmoueable right.

Farther we be also admonished, that it is required of vs, that in the lād which we haue receiued of God, we obserue his commaundementes, vnlesse we wil be some turned out of it. Else it is most right, that the contemners of God be destroyed out of the lande, which they haue receiued of him. And they be most of all subiecte vnto this iudgement of God, which be of the people of God, and dwelleth in the Holy lande, that is peculiarly cōsecrated vnto the name and people of God. God suffereth many thinges in straungers, but not so in his owne people. He suffereth not the lande of his people to be defiled with the malice of the dwellers in it, as he dothe the lande of straungers: but he hurleth the wicked out of it. This considered Dauid when he sayde: Let the wicked perish from the lande. And, you Gentils, shal perish frō his lande. And, They that doe wickedly, shal be driuen out: and they that loked for God, shall inherite the land.

Psalm. 9.

The vvicked be turned out of the lande tvvo vvayes.

And there be two wayes wherby the wicked and disobedient be taken out of the land of the people of God. One is, by ouertimely death. And that is done two wayes. First by pestilence, or some other like kinde of sodeine death. Therefore when we se̅ our youth taken away by pestilence, let vs thinke of this iudgement of the Lord. Secondly, by punishmēt done by the Magistrate. Wherof we reade in Deuteronomie. If a man begette an obstinate son, &c. See the place. It belongeth to the Magistrat to ridde the land of mischeuous and wicked men out of the middes of the people of God.

Deut. 22.

An other way is, when it is done by captiuitie, when the whole people or the most parte, are turned into other lands for their impenitencie. So was Israell caried away first into Assyria, afterward into Babylon. God vseth this way of taking sinners from the land, not for meane faultes, or the sinnes of some priuate men, but for obstinate Idolatrie, and not repenting, when they would follow no admonstions of the prophetes. Sée in Deuteronomie. If you beget sonnes and daughters, and dwell in the land, and be deceiued to make you any similitude, doyng euil in the sight of the Lorde your God, and stirre him to anger, I call this day heauen and earth to witnesse, you shall sone perish out of the land, which you shall possesse passing Iordayne, &c.

Deut. 4.

The sixte Precept.

Thou shalt not kill.

Manslaughter.

By this Sixte precept is forbidden murder, as it is in the Hebrewe, Sley not. He speaketh not of the slaughter of beastes, but of men. For as concerning beastes and cattel, it was permitted vnto man, immediatly after the floude, to eate of beastes: which you know, could not be without killing and slaughter of them. Wherfore the free gouernance ouer beastes is in man, for suche be subiect vnto none but to himselfe, so that he may either kil of them for to eate of, either kepe them to doe him worke. But he can not do so with man whō God created vnto his own likenesse. Therfore by this law it is forbidden that none kill a man. For God would not haue the life of man subiect vnto the pleasure of any liuing thing, but reserued it only to his owne power, who is the only author of it, and the very Lord of life and death.

2 He speketh not only of that murder whith is committed by hand: but simply he doth forbidde to murder, what way soeuer it be don. The Leuites wife which the Gabaites so killed with outragiousnesse of one nightes filthy abuse, is called, The killed and murdered woman, and yet was not killed by violent hand.

But let vs sée what things are to be considered in this precept. And it may be deuided into two parts.

1 For first we must sée what is to be obserued in this precept, Thou shalt not murder. 2 After that we must consider, how we do sin against this law, that is, who be guilty in the sight of God of murder, and in daunger of the iudgement and paines thereof.

Thinges to be considered in this Precept.

How this precept is ioyned vnto that that goeth before.

First we must sée, how this sixte precept is ioyned vnto that that goeth before, of the honoring of our parentes. The honor of our parents requireth a due and a reuerent reputation of them, by whom, as the instruments of our life, we be brought forth into this worlde. In this present precept it is required, that the same which is once borne and brought forth to the worlde, may be kept and preserued in this life receiued of God, without harme.

There be two estates of mans life, (I meane not of the estates and conditions of men, but of the states of our life) the one is of them which begetteth, the other of them that be begotten. In the state of them which begetteth, are the parentes: in the state of them which are begotten, are as many of them as be borne of the into into this life, according vnto their similitude and shape. Therefore it appereth, that God by these two precepts, in that he commandeth vs to honor our parentes, and forbiddeth vs to kill any man, hath a consideration of these two states of mans life: and that he doth require this of vs, that esteming much the gift of our life, we should haue in due honor the first state thereof, which concerneth our parentes of whom we be borne: and kepe the other inuiolate, wherin we be comprehended, not in our selues only, but also in all the singularities thereof. For as we be not worthy of this life, if we defraud the instruments thereof, whereof we be born, of their due honor: so it can not be, that mankinde may continue, vnlesse we kepe whole and vnharmed the other state, which is of them that be borne. Now he that killeth a mā, offendeth against this state of life of man it selfe: and as much as lyeth in him, is the open enemy & destroyer of mankinde, although he kill not al the partes thereof in singularities. This is the reasō, as I suppose, why after the honoring of our parentes, murder is forbidden.

Now we must obserue, that without any specification of persons, of maner, and number, he simply saith and absolutely: Thou shalt not kill.

1 First, he saith not, Let not the parent kill, let not the sonne kill, let not the man kill, let not the woman kil, let not the master kill, let not the seruant kill: but without any specifying of persons he saith, Kil not. Therfore he speaketh vnto all, and commandeth without difference, that no man kill. Wherefore murder is left at libertie to no person, apperteining vnto mans life. There is no free auctoritie vpon the life of man to kill, granted vnto any state of men, whether they be of great puissance, riche, olde, or parentes, muche lesse if they be any inferior degrée. Parents and Magistrates haue receiued power frō God, which the one sort may vse towardes their children, the others towards their subiects, but vnto edifying, not vnto killing and destruction. Of the power of Magistrates we wil speak in an other place alone hereafter.

2 Secondly, he saith not, Kill not thy parentes, kill not thy wife, kill not thy children, kill not thy brother, kill not thy kinsman, kil not thy landesman and the citizen, kill not the stranger, kil not the riche, kil not the poore, kil not the feble or the olde and decrepyte, kil not thy enemie, kil not thy seruant, kill not thy maister, &c. but simplye, Kill not: vnderstand to it, No man, of what condition soeuer he be. In this law is comprehended all mankinde that may be killed: and it is commaunded that we doe reuerently spare the life of man in al his singularities, without any partiality. Therfore it is not lawfull to kill seruants or bondmen, though thei be neuer so much in the power of their owners. So we reade in Exodus. If any man stryke his man seruant or his woman seruant with a rodde, and they dye vnder his handes, he shall be gilty of the faulte.

Exod. 21.

3 Furthermore, he saith not, Kill not with a sword, or with a batte, &c. but simply, Kill not. There is no specifying set forth of ỳ meane, to giue to vnderstande, that all meanes and

There is no vvay specified.

kindes of killing be forbidden. Though our flesshe be very witty to deuise sundrye kindes of killing, yet for all that it can not escape, but it is guilty of the faulte, which way soeuer it attaine to the death of a man.

This lavv is not restrained to any number.

4 Againe, this law is not restrained to any number. He saith not, Kil not many: as though it were not vnlawfull to kill one or two: but simplye: Kill not. Murder is also committed in one alone: so that he is iustly counted a murtherer, not only that putteth many, but he also that putteth one alone to death. When we consider these points, we be admonished, how far God will haue vs from murder: and what care he hath of mans lyfe, in that he giueth not libertie to kill any man, be he neuer so vile.

Hovv great the corruption of mans nature is.

5 Thirdly, we must consider also, how great the corruption and malice of mannes nature is. There were no reason to forbidde that which is euill, vnlesse our nature were giuen vnto those thinges that be euil. He that forbiddeth those thinges that be euill, knoweth not onely what man was at his firste creation, but also what he became also after his fall. For he knoweth not only howe he made him, but he vnderstandeth as well of the corruption which came vnto him by the malice of the Deuill. Wherefore he did so temper his law, that he did not only forbidde things that were euill, but he did also open the euil hidden in our flesshe. Therfore as touching this law, whē he saith, Kill not, he signifieth that the malice of our nature is so great, that vnlesse it be restrayned by some feare, we will not spare, no not the life of man, but will therby declare our selues to be enemies vnto our own nature. This malice of our nature the Apostle toucheth when he saith among other thinges: Their fēte be swifte to shedde blood. There is contention and vnhappinesse in their wayes, and the way of peace they knew not, &c. He saith not simply, They kill. But to expresse the bloody cruelnesse, he saith: They shed blood: & farther to declare a certain diuelish disposition to killing, that is in our hartes, he saith not simply, They shed blood, but he saith, Their fēte be swifte to bloodshedding. For by the swiftnesse of fēte, he noteth the hart to be exceedingly bent and greedy to kill.

2 Secondly, it is also therein to be considered, how ready the nature of man is to killing, for that he doeth not say, Be not angry: but kill not. The desire of killing riseth of anger. So that if anger only had bin forbidden, it might haue seemed that it had bin ment, that we be so corrupt, that we be subiecte vnto euill affections: but that ther is no farther proceding in vs, vnto the very acte of killing. But now when he saith expressely, Kill not: and so forbiddeth the very act of killing, it is manifestly ynough declared, that we be not of that disposition, that we can stay the affections of anger from doyng harmes: but that we be also so naughty, ỹ we do accomplish in very deede whatsoeuer we do naughtely cōceiue in our minde, vnlesse we be restrained by some superior power. It is an other mater for any man to be so disposed, that he wil be rashly angry with his neighbour, and yet is able to stay the fury of his anger by iudgement of reason: and it is an other matter, to be so depraued and giuen to kill, that we wil not only vnaduisedly be angry, but either runne vpon with a madde furie, either craftily by stealth seke to kill. Vnlesse we were of this disposition, it had bene to no purpose for this law to say, kill not.

3 It enforceth also, that he sayth without any specifying, Kil not: but it is commonly vnto all men and generally prescribed by this lawe, that no man kill. So that the nature of all men is so muche corrupt and depraued, that they haue nede to haue an open law to stay them, that they commit not murder.

4 Let vs consider that also, that those thinges which are here forbidden, do principally touch them, which were the people of God, admitted into couenāt of God, and receiued and halowed with the sacrament of his couenant. But as touching the common corruption of mans nature, thei that be maked with the sacrament of regeneration, be as euil and depraued, as they that haue nothing to do with this couenant, and sacrament of couenāt. For they were circumcided, to whom this law was giuen: and yet they were so subiect vnto this common deprauation, that it was nede to restraine them by law, least they should fal to bloody slaughters, like beastes. So that this law giuen after the Sacrament of admission and couenant doth well ynough testifie, that the Iewes neither of their own nature were better than the Gentils, neither that the sacrament of regeneration and couenant did of it selfe help them any whit to the amendement of their corrupt nature: which is done by the only working of the holy spirit.

These matters conteine not a friuolous, but a most necessarye consideration of a thing most true of al, which they marke not, that doe loke vnto nothing else in this lawe, but vnto a certayne rule of Iustice, wherunto we ought to conforme the trade of our lyfe, and by the obseruance whereof we may purchase righteousnesse and true health in the sight of God. But we must so loke into this present and other like laws, that we may not only learne out of them what is right before God, and what is not: but also that we may, as it were in the glasse of them see what we be, and by that knowledge of our selues, we may be prouoked vnto the grace of our sauiour and redemer Iesu Christ. Besides that, they also which haue not yet in acte committed murder, considering this corruption of our common nature, may thinke first that it is no thanke to their own loking vnto or vertue, but rather to the grace of God, that they haue yet killed no man: & that they may also way with themselfs, ỹ there is not much difference betwirt him that is not preserued by his own vertue, but by an others, from committing of murder: and him which when he is left alone to himself, is become giltie of this faulte.

VVe must consider vvhat vve be in the lavve of God as in a glasse.

Hovv men do sinne against this lawe.

Murder is three vvayes committed.

It perteineth vnto the seconde consideration to see, how men do sinne against this lawe. Murder is com-committed three manner of wayes: that is by acte, worde, and hearte. In acte he committeth murder, which killeth a man by hande, eyther with swoorde, or staffe, or stone, or with darte, or poyson, or any other waye. And that is also done two wayes. First with a will to murder. If that be done vnlawfully, it is damnable murder. And it is vnlawfully done, when a man is slaine without iuste cause, as he that no wayes deserued to be slaine. In ỳ sort they be slaine, which be slaine either by furye of anger, either by hatered, or vpon hope of any gaine: Or when he killeth a man, which hath no authoritie by any law to kill him.

VVho kill themselues.

In this degree are they that kill themselues. For no man hath receyued power so far vpon his own life, that he can lawfully, when he list, take it from himself, and be his own iudge. This case happeneth oftentimes thorough impacience, either of feare, when men feare some dangerous mater, which they suppose they can not beare: eyther of some great sorowe, wherewith the ouerweake hart is oppressed: or by dispayre of saluation, whiche happened to the traytor Judas.

Libr. cap. 26. de Ciuitate Dei.

Augustine assigneth foure causes, whereby this killing of men themselues chaunceth.

The impacience of Calamitie.

1 The first he saith, is the impacience of some calamitie, either receyued, either hanging ouer a mãs head. In that sorte they kill themselues, which are not able to beare ỳ sorow conceiued of the losse, either of their dere frendes, either of their goodes: & they also, that do stoutely eschew to come into bondage: such a one was Cato Uticensis, & the iolous Jewes, of whom Josephus maketh mention: and they also, which broken with long sicknesse, partly by the greatnesse, and partely by the continuance of the paine, had rather dye at once, than to striue so any longer with the disease: as we reade of one Cornelius Ruffus in Plinius Epistles. Unto which point also sometime proceded the impacience of Herode. Hitherunto we may referre also the murrers, men most worthy to be hated of all people, which when the dearth of corne was past, wherein they trusted for their most filthy gaine, they bereft themselfs of their lyfe, which they were neuer worthy to enioye, with halfe an houres hanging.

2 The seconde cause he saith, commeth of the abhorring and flying of an other mannes sinne. In that sort Lucrece, a gentlewoman of Rome, killed hir self for ye rauishmẽt done of Tarquine, committed against hir will. So Augustin writeth of diuers women that hurled themselues headlong into the riuer, bicause they wold not be subiect vnto the will of the persequutors. This wise Lucretia detested the sinne of others, and these women fled from it.

3 The thirde he saith, is the vehement repentance of a mannes owne sinne, which doth also oftentimes by the instinct of Satan, driue the wretched man to desperation, and perse to kill himselfe. This happened to Judas that false Apostle and betrayour of Christ.

4 The fourth that he rehearseth is very rare, & not to be feared in these our last times, which is of the vehement and earnest desire of the life to come.

come. It is writen of one Cleombrotus, that when he had read that which Plato disputed of the immortalitie of the soule, by and by he hurled himselfe downe from a wall, that he might quickly come to the experience of that which he hadde read. You shall very seldome finde in our time any, that will gladly for the desire of the heauenlye lyfe embrace death, howsoeuer it come, although they reade the newe Testament a hundreth times ouer.

These causes of man killing himselfe, Augustine rehearseth. And we may ioyne also vnto them the same, which riseth of excéding desire of vaine glorye, wherwithal certain of the Donatistes, called Circumcelliones were fyred, and gaue themselues willingly to death. Unto whom, we may ioyne also the same Razias, of whom mention is made in the second of the Machabées, and Augustine in his epistle to Dulcitius, and against Gaudẽtius. These be in déed weighty causes, and beare a great sway in weake hartes, but for bycause it is giuen of nature to all men, as it is also vnto beastes, that they doe abhorre and flée death, yet none of these causes shoulde be able to driue anye mã vnto his own death, vnlesse their came withal the first enemy of mankind, Satã, the author of manslaughter, and by his wickednesse did pricke on the tempted heart vnto this purpose of his owne murther. No not the swine, of which we reade in the Gospell, although they were neuer so vncleane, and not liuing to themselues but vnto others, yea and ordeined to nothing else but to be killed, yet they had not hurled themselues headlong into the sea, vnlesse they had bin possessed by the permission of Christ, with the vncleane spirits, and driuen vnto it.

Wherefore it behoueth all them that be in temptation and afflictions to haue a regarde, that the weaker they finde themselues to be in harte, so muche the more they praye vnto God, that they may not be ledde into temptation, but deliuered from the wickednesse of that euil and old Satan. And it shal helpe much to escape his wicked coũsels, if he that is troubled with temptation, do disclose the causes therof vnto some godlye and Christian brother, and deuide as it were with him the burden of his oppressed harte, that receyuing some comforte, he may beginne to take it lighter and more easyer.

Of Samson in the .xvi. of the Iudges.

Hitherto we haue spoken of them which with purpose to kil, do vnlawfully commit murder in acte, and therefore do runne in blame of manslaughter, not only before God, but also in the face of the worlde. And concerning them that kill themselfs, whereof we haue somewhat spoken, here is a question moued, what is to be thought of Sampson, of whome we do reade in the booke of the Judges, that to reuenge himself of his enemies the Philistians, he did wittingly and willingly yelde himselfe vnto death. For we can not say, that he hadde anye hope to escape, when being a blinde man, he sought the reuengement of his enemies, by shaking & ouerthrowing the house vnder which he stoode. And ỳ he knewe he shoulde dye together with them, & toke vpon him this death of his own accorde, his laste wordes do declare, in which he saide: Let my soule dye with the Philistians. Therefore he did that which was not lawfull in killing himself, and so became giltye of Murder.

Unto this question we may answere in fewe wordes, that is, that Sampsō is not to be reckened in the number of the others, which for the causes spoken of before, do kil themselues: for he was moued vnto suche kinde of reuenge by a singulare purpose of God, with the working of ỹ holy spirite, & not with the spirite of Satan: also not vpon filthy desperation, but vpon the zeale of reuenge, wherwith he was inflamed for ỹ people of God, against their most wicked enemies, being not a priuate mā, but the iudge and prince. He did first pray vnto the Lord, & desired him to giue him the accustomed strength of his body, that he might be able to take reuenge of the wicked, and doe good to the people of Israell. After that he receiued of God that which he desired: and so being holpen by the power of God, he did bring aboute his purpose. He perceiued, that it was not he only, as a poore blind mā that was mocked to scorn of them, but his Lord God also: he hearde them boast of the glory of the Gods of the Philistians: he vnderstode he could not escape & do any more good hereafter in deliuering of Israell: and he thought that the opportunity of the occasion of reuenge was not to be neglected, whereby he might not only be reuenged vpon the noble mē of the Philistians gathered together in that place, but also greatlye aduance the glory of God, and the profites and commodities of his people: and therefore when he had obteyned with his prayer the good wil and ayd of GOD, he did stoutely shake together all the house, and ouerthrowe it: and by this meanes in dede he brought himself to his owne death, but withall he slewe many mo with him dying, than he slewe while he was a liue. When we do way this, we can not appoint that Sampson is to be condemned of manslaughter: for almuch as the scripture doth not condemne his fact, but doeth rather praise it, in that that it doeth so diligently set forth the zeale of godlinesse of his minde, the strength obteined of God, and the profyt of that which ensewed.

There is also manslaughter committed in facte, and with purpose to kill lawfully without fault. And it is the same which is done by the lawfull Magistrates, to whome the swoorde is deliuered of God, to that purpose, that they should haue power to punish the giltie, and to defende the innocents, as the Apostle witnesseth. And in that doyng, they do serue to Gods vengeance, according vnto the ordinance of God: so farre it is wide, from making them giltye of manslaughter. Therfore they be not forbidden from that vse of the swoord by this present precept, Kill not. So farre forth there is no contradiction betwixt this precept, Kil not, and the swoorde of the Magistrate, wherwith wicked men be put to death, that the same which the Magistrate vseth, doeth good seruice vnto this law, and be both directed vnto one mark. The meaning and scope of this law, is to prouide for the safetye of mans lyfe, and that the same spirit of cruel-tie may tie maye be repressed, whereby our heartes depraued by the corruption of nature, be gyuen to murder. And to the selfe same meaning and scope is the vse of the lawfull swoord directed, wherewith men be stricken not as men, but as enimies of oure nature, and life: not against, but for the conseruation of our health and safetie. Wherefore, as long as the spirit of manslaughter continueth in oure fleshy, so long thys lawe continueth, commaunding and saying, Kill not. And bycause the power of oure corrupt nature is so greate, that it can not be restreyned, neyther by the direction of good reason, nor by written lawe, but hath nēde of the swoorde of reuengemente, to represse the fēte that be swifte to shedde bloud: the power of the Magistrate hathe to doe in the cases of men, so long as this lawe, Kill not, hath strength: Item, Cōmit not adultery, and Steale not. &c.

We reade in Genesis: Whosoeuer sheddeth the bloud of man, hys bloud shall be shedde. By this lawe also it is prouided, that no man shed the bloud of man. And to the intente that the shedding of mans bloud should be more earnestly eschewed, that part of the talion was put vnto it: commaunding that the bloud of the manslayer should be shed. Unto thys vse serueth the swoorde of the Magistrate, not as an enimie, but as a friende of mans bloud: sheddyng lawfully the faultie bloud, least the innocent bloud shoulde vnaduisedly and vnlawfully be shedde. For to kyll the manslayer and wicked, bycause he is a manslayer and wicked, and therefore hurtfull to mankynde, is not simply to slay a man, whiche thys lawe forbiddeth, that sayth, Kyll not, but to represse the malice of naughtie men and manslayers, and to prouide for the safetie of mankinde.

The Magistrates must loke, that they vse lawfully the swoorde of reuengement. For if they vse it vnto the seruing of their owne or of others naughtie affections, to fulfill that saying: I sawe iniquitie in the place of Iustice, they shal be so farre from excuse by the authoritie of their office, that they shall be charged withall for two causes, the one, bycause they doe murther the innocents: the other, in that they doe distaine the name of God, whose ministers they be, by the pretexte and coloure of their ordinarie office.

Against the abuse of Magistrates.

Wherefore they be most folishe of all others, whiche suppose that all the doyngs of the Magistrates must be taken to be good and without blame, bycause of the authoritie of the lawfull power. The doyngs of the Magistrate is then lawful, when they be conformable vnto vprighte lawes and iustice.

The authoritie of the Magistrate.

The streightnesse also of iustice and of the lawes, are to be iudged according vnto the authoritie of Gods will: which the lawfull Magistrate must followe in all poyntes. For he can not iustly by anye other meanes be put to deathe, whome the sentence of Gods will doth not put to death. It is solemnely vsed of some Princes, that they suffer none to be put to deathe in their territories, but according vnto the sentence of their owne writte. As often as there is any malefactor and wicked

The rightnesse of the iustice is to be iudged by the authoritie of Gods will.

A similitude.

person to be punished, they which be appoynted for to be the iudges, doe declare vnto the Prince his euil doings, and loke for a writte frō him: and that had, they doe se the paynes prescribed therein, executed vpon the malefactor. And if the Iudges doe any thing contrary vnto that, it is taken for a great offence and rebuke, done againste the authoritie and iurisdiction of ỹ Prince, and they scape not clere withall: how muche more iust a matter is it, I pray you, that no man be put to death contrary or besides the sentence of the most high Prince, who is the onely Lorde of life and death.

Of the vvritte of Gods sentence.

You will aske me, how hys writ may be gotten, whereby men maye iudge and punish the wicked. I will say nothing here of the Magistrates of the Ethnickes, whiche as they lyued in the world without knowledge of God, so they dyd also vse gouernaunce without any certaine knowledge of Gods will: but I speake of the Magistrates of Gods people, vnto whome Gods will was certaynely knowen out of the writte of hys lawes, whereby you maye knowe, (whether hee loke vpon the firste or the seconde table of the Decalogue) what malefactours and wicked persones ought to bee punished by Death.

The offences agaynst the first table punished by death.

Exod. 22.

So it is redde in Exodus. He that dothe sacrifice vnto strange Gods, let hym bee kylled. And in Leuiticus. He that declineth to sothsayers, lette hym dye the deathe. Item. Let them that haue the spirite of Pythō, dye the deathe. And in the. 24. chapter. The Prophete whyche prophecieth in the name of the Lord lyingly, lette hym dye the deathe. Also, He that blaspheneth the name of the Lorde, lette hym dye the deathe. By these and other lyke lawes, Magistrates are taught, howe they ought to punish them whiche doe wickedly against the first table.

Leuit. 20.

As touching them whyche sinne against the Seconde table, there bee hadde also writtes of Gods lawe for them, as in Leuiticus and Deuteronomy it is commaunded, that the disobediente and froward sonne againste his parentes, shoulde be ouerlayde with stones, of all the people. And in Leuiticus. He that killeth a man, lette hym dye the deathe, whether it be a man seruaunt, or a woman seruaunt that be killed. Exodus. 21. Secondly, we reade muche howe the wickednesse of horedome and vnlawfull vsing of others beds, ought to be punished in Leuiticus. Howe men must iudge of theeues, we maye reade in Exodus. And of false witnesses, in Deuteronomy.

Thys we thought briefly to touch, to admonishe men howe that Magistrates can haue none excuse, if they doe shedde the bloud of man otherwise, than by the authoritie of the chiefe lawe giuer, at their owne arbitrement. They be the seruauntes of God, at whose will they ought so to vse the swoorde whyche they haue receyued, that they put thē to death, whome he bideth to be killed: and saue and defende them, whome hee appoynteth to be saued and defended: or else they shall offende as well in not killing, as in killing. Saule offended in not killing King Amelech, whome the Lorde put into hys handes to be kilde. Agayne, he sinned in killing, when he did put to deathe xxxv. Priestes of the Lord, innocent men, with many women and childrē. Achab sinned also in killing Naboth the Israelite. And he sinned agayne in not killing the Prophets of Baal and of the woodes, whiche Elias killed. So did also diuers other Kings of Israell sinne, bothe in kyllyng the Priestes of the Idolles, as also in killing the Prophetes of the Lorde.

And woulde to God there were not suche Princes and Magistrates among Christian menne, that kyll the soules whiche the Lorde kylled not: and gyue them lyke, whiche the Lorde commaundeth to be killed. The Lorde killeth not theeues, the Magistrates beeyng the seruauntes of the Lord, do kyll them. The Lord killeth aduouterers & aduoutresses, and the Magistrates gyue them life. The Lord killeth Idolatours, sothsayers, and inchaunters, the Magistrates gyue them lyfe: and yet doe they kyll them that refuse false worshyp, and suche as desire to liue according vnto the writte of Goddes wordes, setting at naught all mens traditions. Where suche matters be done, we maye not iustifie them by the lawfull authoritie of the magistrate, but condemne them twice the more, both bycause they be vnlawfull, and also that beeyng done vnder pretence and coloure of the lawfull Magistrate, they tourne to the rebuke of God, from whome that power commeth which the Magistrate doth minister.

We haue spokē of manslaughter, whiche is sometimes lawfully committed in acte with purpose to kyll, and without sinne: and is sometimes vnlawfully cōmitted with the sinne of manslaughter. Nowe let vs see of that manslaughter which is also cōmitted in fact, but without will and purpose to kill. And lette vs suppose that that is of three sortes. The firste is that which they call Casuall: the seconde Causall: the thirde we may well call Defensorie.

Casuall murder or by chance medley.

When call it casuall murder, or by chance medley, when a man against hys wyll, by some chance and happe, kylleth a man. Suche was the same of Lamech (whyche some of the Hebrewes tell of) that kylled Cain with a darte in the woodde, taking him for a wilde beast. Such be the murders of whiche mention is made in Exodus, Numerus, Deuteronomy, and Iosue, for whiche as we reade, there were appoynted Cities of refuge, that he whyche by mischaunce, not willing, shoulde kyll any man, might haue some place to flee vnto, where he myghte trye hys innocency, and saue hymselfe. For he can not bee iudged guiltie of murther, whyche neither by his will, neither of knowledge kylleth. But for all that, it is to bee considered in suche cases, that if the acte and purpose whereuppon that murther againste a mans wyll chaunced, was in an vnlawfull matter, or else vayne and trifling, though that suche a mischaunce be not to be condemned for wilfull murther, yet for al that he is not altogither without faulte, by whose vnlawfull or else vayne deuice, his neyghboure is lost. The purpose of drunkennesse is vnlawfull. And therfore if a drunken mā falling from a stayres, bruse a child, so ỹ he dye of it, though he be no not giltie of the murther: yet he is in fault for the vnlawfull vse of drunkennesse: In case anye of them that playeth at bowles (as we see luskie yong men doe oftentimes vpon holydayes, whiche take a glory in hurling a bowle to shew the strength of their armes) vnwittingly strike a man by the way vnder the temples of his head, and ministreth the occasion of his death, although he be not giltie of murther, yet he can not bee altogyther innocent, bycause by hys vaynnesse he gaue the occasiō of the mans death. Otherwise it is, if anye man cutting wodde, through hys axe slipping out of his hande vpon hym that standeth by, without any wil to hurte or harme him: whiche case is therefore namely expressed in the lawe, that men maye iudge of the lyke, according vnto ȳ qualitie of it.

Exod. 21. Num. 35. Deut. 19. Iosu. 20.

Causall murther.

I doe iudge it to be casuall murther, when drinkes and suche sorceries be giuen to women, wherby eyther they may be lette from conceyuing: or if they doe conceyue, the childe be killde. They that be gyuen to this kinde of lyfe, doe vtterly kyll not onely themselues, but others also: of whose immoderate wakefulnesse, they be the beginners, though they doe it not of will to kyll.

Defensiue murther.

Defensiue murther, is when a man is driuen by necessitie of defending, as with weapon to defende his owne life or theirs that be hys, against wrongfull violence: and though he had rather not to kyll hys aduersary and enimie, if he coulde represse his violence without murther, yet he is compelled to kill him, vnlesse he will neglect his owne life, or theirs that be in his charge. This kinde of murther is excused by necessitie of coaction, for the will to kyll is a way: for he that so killeth his enimie, had rather not kill hym, if that he were able by some other meanes to escape the violence that is done vnto hym. If the gilt of the murther be not so muche iudged by the fact, as by the minde and occasions, the faulte of thys kynde of murther, whyche is not voluntary but defensory and of compulsion, is not imputed vnto hym that killeth, but vnto him whiche is killed. Yet it is the part of a Christian man, to be verye sory and to lamente, that hee is compelled by chance to kyll perhappes a companion of the same sayth that he is of: and not to excuse hys fact in this case in the sight of God, but rather (as iust men are wont to doe) accuse hymselfe, and humbly beseeke God of his mercy, that he be not driuen to make a reckening of hym in hys iudgement. He must say wyth Paule: Though I know nothing of my selfe, and that by no faulte of myne I came vnto this necessitie to kill my neyghboure, yet in that I am not iustifyed.

And as there is two sortes of defence, one when a man defendeth hymselfe, an other when he defendeth them that belong vnto him: so are there also two sortes of defensorie murthers. For murther is committed eyther in defeding our selues, or of ours. When we be driuen to defende our selues, the excuse riseth of necessitie: when we defende ours, our fact is excused not only by necessitie, but also by duetie of faithe and charitie, whiche both we owe vnto them that be ours. And by this difference, ference, defensiue murthers, whether they be of one or of many, priuate or publike, be separate from the kynde of vnlawfull murthers. And to thys sort belong the murthers of warres, whiche be not then vnlawfull when they be excused both by the necessitie of defence, and also by the duetie of the magistrate. And therefore hathe God giuen lawes, according to the appoyntment whereof suche warres ought to be guyded, as we may perceyue in Deuteronomie.

And to thys place seemeth to perteyne the murther done by Moses, when he slewe the Egyptian to saue the Israelite from his violence. And there be some that doe thus excuse Moses: that he toke vppon hym the defence of the Israelite, againste the violence of the Egyptiā, of brotherly charitie. It is somwhat that they say: but they do not by this consideration sufficiently discharge the fact of Moses, from the gilt of murther. For he may not be slayne straightewayes who so euer beateth a man, though it be wrongfully, seeyng it may be stayed by some other way. Wherefore though the fact of Moses were altogyther defensiue, yet it is hereby more directly excused, that he was appoynted by God to bee the deliuerer of Israell, and was then driuen with the spirit of a deliuerer, and with the zeale of hys people: whiche Steuen doth report of hym, where he sayth: And when the tyme of fortie yeares was accomplished, it came into his minde to visite hys brethren the children of Israell. And when he sawe one of them take wrong, he made his reuenge: and did the reuenge for hym that suffered wrong, striking the Egyptian. And he thought that his brethren vnderstode that God would gyue them health by his hād. So that this murther committed by Moses, must bee imputed vnto the singular spirit and zeale receiued of God, wherwith he was stirred, and shewed some likelyhod of their deliuerie, and so acquitted from the gilt of murther. Wherfore it must not be reckned simply amongst defensorie murders, nor vsed for an exāple. Before God it is not only without blame, but also praise worthie, yet in the common course of worldly iudgemente, it coulde not be iustified and defended. This Moses himselfe knewe: wherfore firste he loked aboute whether he mighte without knowledge of the Egyptians do that whiche he thought to do: and afterwards when he perceyued that his facte coulde in no wise be hidden, he saued hymselfe wyth running away.

Of them, vvhich though not in acte, yet in worde become Murtherers.

HItherto we haue touched a fewe poyntes of such murthers, as bee committed in dēde and in facte. And to rehearse all the kindes of them, it passeth the compasse of my witte, nor I intende it not. And yet I suppose, if anye man will followe thys way, he may with his diligence easily atteyne to the consideration of them, whereof heere hath bin no mētion made.

Murder committed in vvords.

Nowe it followeth that we consider also of those kyndes of murther, whereof menne become guilty wyth words.

wordes. For not he onely is gilty of murther, which with hand and deede, but he also that killeth a man with word. He that sayd: Kyll not, did forbidde to kill in any sort, whiche way soeuer it were. He that requireth of vs true innocēcie, requireth not that only which consisteth in the handes, but that also of the mouth and of the hearte. Therefore in the seconde place of this consideration, we must also consider them, whose tongue is not a medicine and preseruatiue of lyfe, but a sword of death.

Five vvays of committing murther by vvorde.

And thys maner of murther happeneth fyue wayes: as by counsell, by commaundemente, by sentence, by treason, or by false witnesse.

Herodias.

He kylleth by counsell, whyche dothe entyce anye mans mynde by perswasion and aduice, to committe murther. In thys sorte Satan is the fyrste auchor of murther, who is wonte by hys moste wicked instincte, to styre mens minds to murther: he vseth also naughty menne to thys purpose, for instrumentes of hys bloudy counsell. So Herodyas by hyr most wicked counsell, kylled John Baptist, when she perswaded the wenche to desire that hys head mighte be giuen hir in a dishe.

Caiphas.

So Caiphas also killed Christ with his counsell, saying: It is expedient that one man dye for the people, least all the people perishe. They killed John Husse by theyr counsell, whyche perswaded that generall Counsell, that the safeconducte (whereby he was called to Constance) shoulde be broken. Suche murderers they be, whyche by their counsels, cause princes to kill godly menne, bycause they doe refuse to drinke of the cuppe of the whore of Babylon.

They doe kyll by commaundement, whyche commaunde the innocent to be killed. Thys is done two wayes. Eyther by manifest, eyther by craftie and secrete commaundement. By craftie and secrete commaundemente Saul wente aboute to kyll Dauid, when he commaunded hym to mayntayne stronglye the warres of the Lorde agaynste the Philistines: for he did truste that it should so fall out, that he shoulde be slayne of the Philistians: for he said: Let not my hand be on hym, but the hands of the Philistians. They doe kill manifestly, whiche doe playnely without any dissimulatiō, giue commaundemente and charge of the deathe of any man. So Herode kylled John, Pilate Christe, Saule the Priestes of the Lord, of whiche was mention made before: The Kynges of the Israelites the Prophetes of the Lorde, and oure Kynges nowe adayes ỹ true Christians. We speake not here of the lawfull punishment of the wicked, which magistrates do vse by the authoritie of their commaundementes, whereof is spoken before: but of that kynde of commandementes, which rageth against the innocente bloud, by whiche men that feare God, and be godlye in deede, are commaunded to be kylled. And although that they whiche be the executioners of suche commaundements, do offend lesse than the authors thereof, yet both the commanders and the doers shall haue theyr iudge, vnto whome they shal be sure to giue a reckening, they of the commandements, of theyr doings.

They

They doe kill by sentence or verdict, whiche do not only counsell, but doe also vnder pretext of office, pronounce and decree that he may be killed, whiche by no faulte deserued deathe. So the congregation of the Priestes, Scribes, and Pharisies, gaue the sentence of condemnation against Christ, that he should be killed: and Pylate pronounced that he should be crucifyed.

1 In this kynde of manslaughter be culpable in the sight of God, first the iudges and fathers of the Councels: who to ridde any man out of the way, whome they iudge to be preiudiciall or hurtfull vnto their dignitie, and specially vnto the authoritie of the sea of Rome, doe pronounce hym to be an heretike, and worthy to be deliuered vnto the secular power, to be punished. So the councell of Ierusalem, by their councell killed Christ, and the councell of Constance that learned manne John Husse.

2 Secondely, the assistance of the iudges sinne thys way, when they do not pronounce according vnto the qualitie of the cause, but according vnto the princes writte. Such were the Iudges that at the commaundement of Iesabell, Achabs wife, (whiche they thought proceeded from the king) by theyr sentence iudged to deathe the innocente bloud of Naboth the Israelite. In suche Iudges is fulfylled the saying of the Prophete: The Prince demaundeth, and the Iudge is readye to performe it.

He killeth a man by treason, whiche deliuereth the innocente into the handes of the wicked and violent, or by wordes, or by iudgements. Thys commeth diuerslie. There be some, which vnwares (not vnderstanding the matter) do betray them innocēt, whome eyther they iudge to be giltie, eyther they thinke that he is not sought to death. And thē ignorance dothe excuse. Againe there bee some whiche doe betray to death wittingly, hym whome they knowe to bee innocente, eyther for hate, eyther to curry fauoure, eyther for hope of gayne. So Iudas betrayed Christe.

Traytours hated commonly.

Lyke as it agreeth with our common sense, to hide hym that is sought to dye: so they be also subiect vnto oure common and publique hatred whyche betray a man to death, and delyuer hym into hys enimies handes, that they also detest them, vnto whome they betray the innocent bloud.

Treason may like, but the traytour can not be liked.

Hereof sprong the saying of the Romaines: I lyke the treason, but I lyke not the traytoure. The wicked doyng of treason is cruell and detestable, in so muche that they whyche haue anye regarde of honoure and publique estimation, can rather abyde to be reproched with murther, than with treason. Alexander Magnus woulde rather haue slayne a man, than to betray him. This haynous faulte is most farre from a noble and gentlemans heart. Therfore if a Prince doe chance to fall into that vice, it bringeth him into that case, that all men do detest him, and be ashamed of him.

VVitnesse.

By false witnesse men become giltie of murther, not when they do it without knowledge of falshode, but when they doe warily and wittingly testifie that ỹ is false, against a mans

a mans life, of what mynde so euer they doe it. And therefore by Gods law such folkes are iudged to death. For when they haue very diligently searched (sayth the lawe) and haue found that a false witnesse hath spoken a lye againste hys brother, they shall doe vnto him as he thoughte to haue done vnto hys brother: and so thou shalte take the euill from the middes of you. So in the Hystorie of Susan, the two olde menne whiche spake false witnesse against Susan, were ridde out of the way by sentence of death.

Deut. 19.

So that in this sorte they be guiltie of murther, that doe minister occasions of murther, by counsell, commaundement, sentence, treasons, and false witnesse, although there follow no effect: for asmuche as in them lyeth, they doe kill the innocente wyth the sworde of their tong. Their tong is (sayeth the Prophete) a sharpe sworde, and the poyson of the Aspes is vnder theyr lippes. These kind of murtherers doe much differ, in that that they whiche doe shed innocente bloud by counsell, commaundement, and sentence, though they be worse than such as do kill by hand, yet they be not taken for murtherers in the face of ỹ worlde, but rather for most honorable Counsellors, Judges, and Magistrates: neyther doe they acknowledge themselues to be suche, as it appeareth in the Scribes, Pharisies, and Priests of the olde congregation: yea and in Pylate also, of whiche the former sayde, Will you bring the bloud of thys man vppon vs: and the other: when he shoulde pronounce the sentence of condemnation and deathe againste Christe, washing his hands, he sayde: I am innocent from the bloud of this iust man, loke you to it, but the traytors and false witnesses, can not so well pretend any color to their consciences: and when their malice doth appeare, they doe sustayne more shame than the others, specially if they be men of base and obscure estate, and men of small countenaunce in the world. But in the sighte of the most iust iudgement of God, both the one and the other shall be like giltye of murther. There shall be excused no Prince, no Iudge, no Counsellor, no Bysshop, be he neuer so renowned by anye gay title of office, or Bysshoprieke or Councell.

Psalm. 13. Ro. 3.

Iewishe comentacle.

Actes. 5.

Of them vvhich be Murderers in heart.

The thirde kynde of Murder is that, which is wrought not by word nor by deede, but by the heart. The cõsideration of this, perteineth vnto the malice of our corrupte nature, wherin are (as it is were) the rootes of murder, hatred, enuie, anger and delectation, conceiued of the murther. Of anger ryseth that rage or mynde of ours, to kill. For whosoeuer is angrie, is caried by the very motion of anger to reuenge himself, euen to bloudheading. Wherefore Christe maketh him that is angrye with his brother, giltie of iudgemẽt before God, saying: But I say vnto you, who so euer is vnaduisedly angry with his brother, is subiect vnto iudgemente. Of enuy and hatred, is engendred the purpose and wolue to kill. For thys is the nature of enuy and hatred, that euery man desireth the the deathe of him, whome he hateth. Wherefore John sayd: Who so euer hateth his brother, is a murtherer. And it is a sentence taken out of the nature of hatred. Of enuye and hatred riseth also the delite of the mynde, conceyued of the murther. For who so euer eyther of lowe, or purpose, wisheth hymselfe agaynste the life of hys neyghboure whome hee hateth, he is pleasauntly affected with a certayne delyte of hys deathe and murther. For it can not be, that a man may attayne hys purpose and wishe without delectation.

So that we bee giltie of murther before God, by beeyng angry, enuying, and hatyng. For Gods iudgement of man, is not only according vnto his sayings and doyngs, but also according vnto the qualitie of hys hearte and spirite: for the will is reputed for the facte. He that willeth, consenteth, purposeth and wisheth, is giltie of murther: and Gods lawe dothe condemne thys malice lurking in our hearte and flesh, saying: Kill not.

And as it requireth not onely the iustice of our hands and mouth, but chiefly of oure mynde, spirite and hearte: so it forbiddeth and condemneth the malice and iniustice, not only of pure mouthes and hands, but the same also whiche thorough the poyson of the serpent hath corrupted and infected oure nature, and lyeth lurking in the verye marow of our heart and reynes. But of this matter you may see in oure Commentaries vpon Saint Mathewes Gospell.

So that it is a very fond carelesnesse, that we doe welneere all of vs so goe on, and liue careleste in the sight of God, without any feeling of sinne, and feare of Gods iudgement: as though we were therefore most cleere from the gilte of murther, because we kil no man, neyther in acte, neyther in counsell, neyther by commandement, nor treason: as though the corrupte affections of our hearts were eyther not knowen, eyther not condemned of God. We be angry vnaduisedly, and that with our brethren, we do hate and enuy, we keepe and nourishe in our heartes (witting and ware) rancoure and displeasure without stay, and yet we sleepe on both eares quietly, without any remorse of conscience.

The murder of the hearte is more daungerous, thã that of the facte.

I suppose that this carelesnesse is a most dangerous matter. In deede it is more haynous to kill a man in fact, than in wishing: but as he that killeth in facte is sooner and more effectuously taken with the vnderstãding of his sinne, than he which doth nourishe the euill in his hearte, sinning only in anger, hate, and enuy: so he is sooner brought to amendment, and obteyneth forgiuenesse of hys sinnes. Thus it happened to the thiefe, whyche dyd both acknowledge his sinne, and obteyned grace: when the Scribes, Pharisies, Priestes, and Elders of the people, continued careleste in their euill, without any sense of sinne, and were made subiecte vnto the iudgement of Gods most grieuous vengeance. Wherefore we must beseeke God, to giue vs to perceyue and feele the euill lying hid in our heart, that we may amẽd, and be vtterlye deliuered from the malice thereof: or at the leaste way procure that we become not subiecte vnto the iudgement of God.

The seuenth Precepte.

A consideratiō had of vvedlocke.

Thou shalte not commit adultery.

In this seauenth Precepte, there is a consideration had of the honest and pure obseruing of wedlocke, where God sayeth, Thou shalt not commit adultery. And yet I do gladly agree with them that iudge, that not only adultery, but also all manner of vnlawfull wantonnesse and whoredome is forbidden by this precepte: whiche thing the Ebrewes denye. For as the word זנה which signifieth whoring, is sometimes attributed vnto adulterers: so I iudge it not vnmete, if the worde זנה be iudged to haue the signification of whoring, specially in this place. But I would not striue with any man herein, so that we graunt that not only adultery, but whoredome also and all extraordinary watonnes, is damnable and to be eschued of all godly men.

Purenes of life required by thys precepte.

There is required by this precept, the puritie of our life, that we defyle not our flesshe with vnlawfull wantonnesse. And for bycause it is chiefly to be cared, that the honestie of wedlocke be kept pure and cleane, I suppose it was for that cause, that the worde was vsed of the holy spirite, whereby it shoulde be signified, that it was chiefly required of the people of God, that they shoulde most diligently kéepe the holynesse of wedlocke. For vnlesse the integritie of the faith of wedlocke be kepte, there can nothing else ensue, but that men must in euery corner runne to all kind of wantonnesse. For how shall they goe aboute to kéepe chastitie, that liue as virgins and widdowes out of the yoke of matrimony, if that they which may by the comfort and remedie of wedlocke be stayed from vnlawfull wantonnesse, doe breake the lawes of matrimony and commit whoredome? Furthermore the state of wedlocke is as it were the fountaine and welspring of mans life, which if it be defiled wt whoredomes and adulteries, what can be deriued to the offspring borne of thē, but the examples of all kindes of naughty & corrupt wantonnesse? For this reason I suppose, it is commanded, that we do truely kéepe the chastitie and promise of matrimony, whereby the lyfe of others may be also kepte cleane and vndefyled: so farre is it, that anye man oughte of this precepte to séeke a defence for whoredome. For he that woulde haue the spring to be cleane, surely can not suffer that the streames running from it, shoulde be vncleane. He that hath a care that the rote be sounde, meaneth I suppose, that he will not suffer that the fruites be corrupt. To what purpose I pray you, should wedded folkes liue without fault, if they which come of thē, may defyle themselues with all kind of wantonnesse? Men doe séeke to haue the head whole, that the members of the body may be safe also.

But if some busy body will saye, That which is not forbidden, is not sinne: Adultery is forbidden and not whoredome. Ergo. &c. Thys mans argument is like, as if a man woulde inferre vppon the wordes of the Apostle Saint Paule, where it is commaunded that a Bysshoppe bee vnblamed, the husbande of one wife, sober, chaste, not giuen to wine, no striker, no striuer. &c. Ergo it is lawfull for them that be not Bysshops to be in blame, the husbandes of manye wiues, drunken, vnchast, giuen to wine, strikers, and striuing. &c. Such reasoners do violently straine Gods preceptes, when they doe inferre of them thyngs that be not méete therby, but be also cleane contrary. For when things that be damnable bee priuately forbidden vnto some man, they be not so forbidden vnto them, that they must be déemed vnlawfull to them only: but that it is meante, that for certaine causes they are specially to be eschued of them. It is required of Magistrates, That they be fearing God, true, and hating auarice. It must nédes be great wickednesse, if a mā should inferre therupon, Ergo they that be not in the office of Magistrate, may be vngodlye, lyers, and couetous. It is for great reason chiefely required of the Magistrate, whyche is generally required of all menne. Lykewyse we must iudge of this precepte: Committe not adultery. It is generally required of all men, that they kéepe the puritie and holynesse of their bodyes vnspotted, and eschue the lying with anye others, extraordinarily. But forasmuch as it is conuenient, that the honestie and promise of matrimony, be with singular care kepte vndefyled, that therefore whoredome is specially forbidden, whereby the holynesse of wedlocke is broken and defyled. Wherefore there is no whoredome at all permitted, when adultery is namely by thys lawe forbydden. And therefore it is, that Christ, where he rehearseth the preceptes of the seconde table, dothe immediately ioyne whoredome vnto adultery: declaring manifestlye, that not onely adulterye, but whoredome also is forbidden by thys precepte. But lette vs sée in order what things be to be considered in it.

Matth. 5.

Thyngs to be considered in this precept.

VVhat is adultery.

FIrst it is to be soughte, what is adultery. Some bée of sundrye iudgements. Rabbi Schlomoh, sayeth thus: Adultery is not but in the wyfe of some man, whereof it is sayde: Let them dye, both the adulterer and the adulteresse. A woman adulteresse is she, which besides hir owne husbande taketh others. He iudgeth hære, that adulterie is not committed by a sole woman, though a married man lye with hir: but only by a married woman. And Lyranus séemeth to followe hym, when he sayeth: Adultery, is carnall copulation with an other mans wife, whiche is reputed one flesshe with hym. And thys is the opinion also of secular lawyers: that adultery is not committed but with a lawfull wyfe, whether she be defyled of a sole man, or married: and that it is otherwise, if a married man haue to do with a sole woman.

Lyranus.

1 Thys opinion is not alowed of diuines, which do iudge it adultery, whether the husbande kéepe not the promise of wedlocke to hys wife, or the wyfe to hyr husbande: but permitteth the vse of hir body to others: which seemeth to me to agrée throughly with the definition of adultery. For what else is adultery, but the staining of the faythe and soundnesse of wedlocke, when by any meanes the vnitie of two is mingled and stayned by the flesshe of others. The husbande and the wife be one flesshe. And they shall be(saith hée) two in one flesshe. The blemishing and corruption of this vnitie, is rightly called Adultery, bycause that the same whiche was whole, is adulterated and corrupte by takyng of another body. And therfore things be called adulterine, whiche be sette forthe for true, when they be straūge and false. And who knoweth not, that the soundnesse of the vnitie of wedlocke consisteth not onely in the flesshe of the woman, but in the flesshe of the man also. Matrimony consisteth not in the woman alone, but in the lawfull coniunction of the husband and wife togither: wherefore it followeth, that the integritie of wedlocke is not broken by ỹ whoredome of the wife only, but of the husbande also. And for this the place of the Apostle serueth, whereby it is manifestly declared, that the man also hath not power of his owne bodye, but his wife. By thys reason I am induced to bée rather of their opinion, that saye, It is adultery, not onely if the wife, but also if the husbande doe communicate the vse of hys body to others, than of the opinion of the Ebrewes, and the lawyers of thys our tyme.

1 Corin. 7.

Petrus Lombardus.

The Maister of the Sentences sayth: Adultery is the defylyng of an other bodyes bedde. He myght haue sayde righter thys wyse: Adultery is the defyling of the lawfull bedde, whether it be anothers, or his owne. If the husbande haue to doe with a sole woman, hée defyleth hys owne bedde, and committeth adultery: agayne if the sole man do defyle the wife of an other, an other mans bedde is defyled with adultery. But if a married man doe corrupt an other mans wyfe, he doth in two respectes, beeyng as an adulterer, defyle both his owne, and an others bedde also.

2 Secondly, we must thinke how greate care and accompte there is before God of lawfull wedlocke, whereuppon hée dyd namelye forbydde the defyling thereof: and yet for all that dothe abhorre all kynde of vncleanenesse and vnshamefastnesse. The dignitie of mankynde is greate in the syghte of GOD. For man is made to the lykenesse of God, and there can bée no greater honoure than that, nerte vnto that whyche dothe peculiarly and chiefely belong vnto God. So that seeyng it so pleased God, that the encrease of mankynde shoulde proceede out of the estate of wedlocke, as out of a certayne welspryng, hée dyd by thys speciall precepte forbid the defiling and fylthying of it, meaning that the honestie of wedlocke should serue mankynde.

Wherefore they be vnworthy to be partakers of the nature and dignitie of man, as many as doe eyther contemne or defyle the fountayne thereof with filthye wantonnesse. They bée beastes and not menne, that bée delited rather with the filthynesse of wantonnesse at large, than than with the honestie of fayth and lawful matrimony. Unto this counsell of God serueth also the doctrine of the Apostle to the Hebrues, saying: Wedlocke is honorable wyth all men, and the vndefiled bedde: but whoremongers and adulterours the Lord shall iudge. But the Bysshops of Rome bé in the contrary, peruerse estaemers of solitary life, they sée nothing in wedlocke but vncleannesse, and for that cause they teache that it is to bée eschued. They shoulde yet thynke on thys precepte of God, whereby the defyling of wedlocke is forbidden, when adultery is forbidden. If matrimony be vncleane, to what purpose is it to forbidde the defylyng of it? why is adultery condemned, if by adultery there is no puritie of wedlocke defyled, nor any thyng is hurt in wedlocke that is alowed of God. Is it not by a manifest lesson proued, that lawfull wedlocke dothe exceedyngly please God, when the defyling of it is by thys playne lawe specially forbidden and condemned?

3 Thirdly, that commeth also to bée obserued, that hée sayth simplye without any specification: Commit not adultery. No man is heere excepted. Thys is commaunded not to wiues alone, but also to husbandes: not vnto married folkes alone, but vnto all men also that bée at libertie, whyche are wont to defyle, though not theyr owne, yet the bedde of others, wyth the fylthynesse of whoredome. The multitude of them is greate, whyche as some doe fede vpon other mens trenchers, so they doe nestle themselues in other folkes beddes, and they doe surmise that they be the lesse to be blamed, bycause they be bachylers and vnmarried. A most noysome sorte of men, laying waite day and night to other mens beddes: specially the rabble route of Massyng Priestes and holyclosster creepers, to whome it was (as they reporte) a perillous poynte to marry lawfull wiues: but they lyked well to rauish as manye as they coulde, and to defyle the bed of wedlocke (whyche they toke to bée vnlawfull for them) without any feare of the Lorde. And in so doyng, they doe pleasauntlye flatter themselues in thys poynte, that they haue no wiues: as though for the couloure thereof, they should not be accused of adultery. Wherefore wée must diligently marke, that it is cōmaunded vnto all men without any specialitie, that they committe no adultery: that is, that they defyle not the wedlocke bedde, neyther of theyr owne, neyther of any other.

The corruption of our flesshe.

4 Fourthly, the corruption of our flesshe is also to be obserued in thys place, which is so great, that it hathe néede of the law of God to restreine it. For if oure heart were chast and cleane, there had bin no cause to cōmaund that we should not committe adultery. But it is commaunded. Ergo we be suche, that we doe as it were halfe hang ouer the vncleannesse of whoredomes and adulteries. We be also so farre from the spirite of true charitie, that we be both false towardes our wiues, and vniust towards our brethren. We blame not our creator, nor we condemne not the strength of nature grafted in vs, apte to generation: but we doe acknowledge and blame ỹ corruptio of our nature: whereby it commeth to passe, that the same whyche was lawfull and naturall, dothe degenerate vnto all kinde of wanton lustes, in so much that we do defile the very fountaine of our birth. The tokens of this corruption are those, that we be not so much delited with the permitted, cleane, and lawfull vse of the body, as with that which is not permitted, but is foule and vnlawfull: and as one sayth: We followe the forbidden, and desire that whiche is denyed. The other token is, that they also which do forbeare the working of whoredome and adultery, are lesse offended with the whoredome and adultery of others, than is conuenient. He is very rare among a greate sorte, that doth honor them whyche liue purely and honestly, and dothe abhorre them that do liue wickedly and dishonestly, according vnto their worthinesse. As we may see in oure dayes specially in them, whiche bee ing magistrates and iudges, do most coldly correct whoremongers and adulterers. And howe can they bee cleare from the fault, whiche doe neuer a whit loath the fault: I nede to saye little. So that this precepte of God doth most truely witnesse of the corruptnesse of our flesshe, and dothe as it were twing euery one of vs by the eare, to obserue most attentiuely and vigilantly daye and nighte, the malice of our corruption and deprauation, least if we handle the matter vnwarely, we fall into forbidden filthinesse. Nor we doe not learne this only of the law, that adultery is sinne and forbidden of God, but wee be withall admonished, what manner of folkes we be: that is, how that like swine we be giuen to all kind of filthinesse. And this is the meaning of that, that by the law is the knowledge of sinne, which lurketh in oure flesshe, & defileth al our life. 5. Fifthly, that also is not to be passed ouer, whereof I did also admonishe in the precept that went before, that the commandemente of so shamefull sinnes and vncleannesse to be eschued, was giuen to the holy people: whose flesshe was also marked and consecrated with the holy signe of the couenant. Whereof the Apostle dothe also testifie, That theirs was the adoption and glory of children, the testament, and the lawgiuing, the worship, the promises, and the fathers, and that of them is Christ. No doubt the prerogatiues of the Israelites were great: and yet for all that, they dyd so little helpe vnto the puritie and efficacie of true iustice, that they were corrupte and infected with sinne, and giuen to all kind of vncleanenesse, as well as the rest of the Gentiles. We be admonished also by this consideration, that the corruption of our nature is not saued with any such prerogatiues of grace and calling of God, by no externe markes and sacraments, but that we haue nede of the vertue of the holy spirit, to be regenerate and clensed by. Without him, as well the circumcided as the baptized be subiect vnto the vncleannesse of al sinnes, as the very thing it selfe doth most euidently proue, the more pitie. Among the Iewes all was, and yet is full of adultery and whoredomes. How great libertie of whoredome and adultery reigneth amongst vs Christian men, it is more to be pitied, than expressed.

Of the transgressions of thys lawe.

Firste we must be admonished, that we doe not iudge of the transgression of Gods lawe, according to the reckening of oure iudgement, but rather according vnto the mind of the lawgiuer. For that indede is to be deemed the very transgression of the lawe, when we doe sinne in transgressing the will of the lawgyuer: which is principally to be loked vnto in euery lawe. And concerning the will of God in this law, we can not more exactly determine of it, thã if we say with the Apostle: This is the will of God our sanctifying, that we abstayne from whoredome, and that eache of vs knowe to possesse hys owne vessell in holinesse and honor: and not in rage of concupiscence, as the Gentiles, whych bee ignorannte of God. The Apostle by these wordes, doth admonish vs, that thys is the mynde of God, when hee forbiddeth adultery, that he willeth vs to gyue our selues to cleanenesse, and eschewe all vnlawfull lustes. Wherefore they that will speake of the transgression of this lawe, must see not only howe men do sinne in adultery, but also howe these doe offende against the will of the lawgyuer in wanton lustes, by other vnlawfull wayes.

And I suppose we must kepe the same threefolde diuision, whiche wee vsed in the precepte going before, to see how we do sinne against the will of God, fyrste in worke, nexte in wordes and signes, thirdly in hearte by concupiscence. In the transgression whiche is done by worke, wee must consider the difference of persons and circumstances: For there is great difference, with whome and how a man sinne. Firste if you haue to doe with a married woman, that is, with an other mans wife, this vncleanenesse is adultery, whereof I spake before. Secondly, if you doe meddle with your cousins of affinitie and bloud, it is incest. The persons of affinitie and kindred, wyth whome incest is committed, bee these rehearsed in Leuiticus. The mother, the daughter, the stepmother, the sister, or halfe sister naturall of both sides, or of father, or of the mother only, the neece of the son or of the daughter, the aunte by the fathers side or mothers side, the wife of the vncle by the fathers side or mothers side, the daughter in lawe, the brothers wife, the wiues neece, the wiues sister, nor the wiues mother. Hereunto are to be ioyned the granddame, the mother of the father or mother, the neece by the brother, or the neece by the sister, the wife of the nephew by the brother, the wyfe of ỹ nephew by the sister, the daughter of the brothers wife, the daughter of thy wiues sister, the sister of the sonne in lawe, the sister of the sister in lawe, the wife of the nephew by the sonne, the wife of the nephewe by the daughter, the stepmother of the father, the stepmother of the mother, the sister of ỹ vncle, the sister of the aunte, the neece of the brother, the neece of the sister, the wife of the vncles brother, the wife of the auntes brother, the wife of the nephewe of the brother, and the wife of the nephewe of the sister. With all these persons is cõmitted incest incest, wherefore we muste beware, we ioyne not matrimony with anye of them.

Men sinne in vvorke. VVith the married.

Leuit.18.

Leuit.20.

VVith a Virgine.

Thirdly, if one haue to doe with a maide, it is stupration or deflowring. And this stupration is the vnlawfull deflowring and corruption of the maidenly integritie. And there be manye of them whiche make it a speciall arte or occupation to deflour virgins neuer touched before, and do glory as muche of that wickednesse of theirs, as if they hadde gotten, I wote nere what strong hold of their enimies. A moste fylthy kynde of me, borne as it were to this, to defyle the honestie of holy wedlocke, consisting yet as it were in the floure of maidenly chastitie.

VVith violence and rauishmēt.

Fourthly, if you doe by violence deflower a virgine, or offende with a married woman, a widowe or anye other woman by violence, it is rauishment. It was such that Sichem the Henyte committed against Dyna Jacobs daughter, as it is redde in Genesis. And it was incest and rauishment when Ammon the sonne of Dauid violently oppressed his sister Thamar.

Genes. 34.
2. Samuel. 13.

The sole man vvith the sole vvoman.

Fiftly, if a sole man haue to doe with a sole woman, this fact is called whoredome. And there are three kindes of whoredome. One is of loue, another for money, another at large and aduentures. For there bee some which being caught once with the vnlawfull loue of a woman, wil so long vse whoredome with them, vntill that their lust beeyng filled, they doe change their loue into lothsomnesse. Againe there be some, that to satisfie their lust, keepe company with harlots for a vile gayne of money. And there be two sortes of harlots: the one is kept at home and secretely, as we be wonte to say, at racke and manger: the other is common and of the stewes. Yet there bee some other, whiche doe with speciall care follow the lustes of whoredome at large, which take pleasure to commit whoredome with many.

Hitherto we haue briefely rehersed, what ways men do sinne in acte, by the extraordinarie company with women. Men doe sinne also enormously, when the order of nature is altered: whiche is done, firste by the sinne of Sodomy, nexte by companye with beastes, whiche two kindes of detestable vncleanenesse are seene nowe adayes to be in some nations highly lyked of greate personages, so that there is founde in this oure age a Cardinall, whyche hathe sette forth a booke in prayse and commendation of Sodomy.

Nowe we muste see howe adulteries, incests, deflowrings and whoredomes, are committed also by wordes and sygnes. Lyke as not onely hee that killeth with the hande, but also hee that oppresseth by token or worde, the malice conceyued of hys hearte, is guiltie of murther: so in thys place not onely hee whyche committeth vncleanenesse in deede, but also that doth sollicite a woman by signes and wordes, is taken to be guiltie, eyther of adultery, or incest, or of deflowring, or of whoredome, although the worke it selfe followeth not.

Signes or tokens are suche, as be done eyther by castings of the eyes, or the handes, or by presentes, or by letters.

Wordes

Wordes work yet more expressly, that which the signes goyng before, did betoken. In wordes doth consist the declaration of concupiscence (which folkes are not wont to couer with the colour of loue) the alluring to consent to their purpose, and promisse of golden and gaye wordes. There be some which in wordes doe promisse to mary, to allure the folish beleuing wenche to consent, when they meane nothing lesse. There is no cause why any man should doubt of this opinio, that we do determine him to be guiltie of the forbidden lechery, and a transgressor of this law of God, that doth intice any woman that is not his owne, by signes, or wordes to the worke of vncleanlynesse. For if Christ beare witnesse, that who soeuer seeth a woman to couet hir, hath committed adultery with hir in his harte: how ought it not to be more truely iudged of him which doth not only see to couet, but vttereth also his concupiscence to the woman by signes and wordes? A man may see a woma with concupiscēce without hir knowlege, without any infectio of hir hart: but whē vnto the concupiscence are ioyned also manifest signes and wordes, alluring & kindling the womans hart, who seeth not but that in this case there is committed adultery, deflouring, incest, or whoredome, more fully than by the simple sight of concupiscence? It is a light matter and passeth away immediatly, to see a woman with concupiscence. This happeneth nowe and then to godly men ere they be ware, walking & not meaning the matter: and they are immediatly reclaymed with a contrary disposition. But when shamelesse signes and words come on, ther is vttered the meaning of the minde that stayeth not it selfe, but fawneth vpon the vnlawfull lustes, not only nowe in concupiscence, but also in procurement and endeuour.

Not only the acte, but the vvil and endeuor also of adultery is forbidden.

He that sayth, Commit not adultery, forbiddeth not only the verye worke of adultery, but the will and endeuor also bent vnto the vncleanesse: Who soeuer doth by signes and wordes informe a woman of his concupiscence, and doeth solicite to obtayne hir consent, doth in deede endeuour to bring it to the very acte whiche he desireth: he that so endeuoreth, is altogether giltie of the facte, though the fact follow not. He is a playn thiefe that hath a purpose to steale, though he steale neuer a halpennye: bycause he is not stayde from it by will, but eyther by feare of the punishment, either some other lettes. So he is an adulterer, which in purpose and endeuor is inclined to the worke of adultery. He can not be excused from adultery, that doeth sauour of adultery in his eyes, handes, gestes of body, and shamelesse talke. No, he that is such a one, can not of his selfe repose but that he is an adulterer: for he doeth not flee adultery, but doth earnestly applye it beyng forbidden, and if he can not compasse his vnlawfull worke, he doth most gladly embrace it, forgetting all feare of God, and all honestie. Then how should he not be giltie of sinne, which gapeth gredely to the working and consummation of sinne, not only in hart, but with most carefull endeuors bothe daye and night? And in case he obtayne not his purpose, he is exceedingly vered and woefull: so that in his own very conscience, before the very iudgement seate of God, he can not denye the gilt of adulterye.

The concupiscence of the hart.

Thirdlye, touching the concupiscence of the harte, though there be great difference betwixt it and the worke of adultery it selfe, yet the iudgement of wicked concupiscence is not thereby hindered: but that he is rightly accompted giltie of adultery before God, who soeuer desireth an other woman in hart, albeit he commit not the worke of adultery in signes and workes. And Christ himself, when he condemneth him of adultery which seeth a woman to couet hir, doth sufficiently admonish, that it is not the sight, but the concupiscence that beareth the blame of adultery.

Difference to be made betwixt the iudgement of God, and the iudgement of man.

Here we must make a difference betwixt the iudgemẽt of this world, and the iudgement of God. No law of the world doth forbidde or punish the concupiscence of the harte. In the face of the worlde he is cleare ynough, which forbeareth the studie and endeuor of vncleane working, & can restrayne the euill in his harte, that it breake not out abrode. For no man iudge, can enter into the affections of the harte, which are not subiect vnto iudgement of man, but of God alone. No man knoweth (sayth the Apostle) what is in man. And we say in our prouerb, Thoght is free. But before the seate of iudgement of the most high iudge, man is iudged not according vnto that only which he doth, but rather according vnto that that he is. And Man is more truely the same, which he is in harte, than the same which he sheweth in worke. The qualitie of the harte, is the qualitie of the man before God. The vncleane and adulterous hart, is the vncleane & adulterous man, if you loke to the iudgement of God. When the vncleanesse of the hart breaketh out, it maketh a man also vncleane before men, and subiect vnto mans iudgement.

By this consideration we be all admonished, to iudge of our selues not according vnto the reckening of mans iudgement, but according vnto the infallible censure of God. Our conscience it self doth conuince vs, & giueth testimony of the truth, vnto the iudgement of God. We can not chose but knowe that which liueth with moste liuely sense in our harte. We haue learned many thinges by sight, hearing, studye, and teaching, yea and we know also many things, of which sometimes we lacke the sense. But euil concupiscence doeth alwayes liue in our hartes, doeth alwaies solicite and striue to the effect of the worke. Wherfore it can not be that it can deceiue our conscience. Therefore there is no excuse left, no not in our cõscience it self, much lesse in the sight of God the seer and iudge of all hartes. But of this matter, God willing, we wil speake here after in the last precept.

Of the causes of adultery, & al kinde of vncleannesse.

The principall cause hereof, is the vniuersall corruption of our flesh, which is as it were, the welspring of all euils: from whence floweth murders, adulteries, theftes. spoylings, &c. The Apostle (whereas he lamenteth of this welspring of euils) calleth it, the sinne dwelling in our flesh, that is to witte, the depraued nature giuen to al euil. Which he doth rightly call sinne, partly because it is an enemye & aduersary to the law of God, and partely bicause it is the rote of all sinnes. This is ỹ originall vncleannesse of our hart, of whence procedeth signes, wordes, and workes, declaring the impuritie within. The same Dauid felt, when he was admonished by the Prophet of his sins, of adulterye and murder. Whereupon he said also crying vnto the Lord: O God, create in me a cleane hart, and renewe a right spirit in my bowels. Whereas he desireth to haue a cleane hearte made within him, he doeth manyfestlye graunt, that he is defiled in hart, and that his former sinnes procede from an vncleane hart. Holy men do daylye praye vnto God for the cleansing of this impuritie of the hart, and do watch it with all diligence that they can, and labor to restrayne it that it brast not out.

The secondarye causes are the same, wherby the euil lurking in our hart, is fedde & stirred vp. It is fedde with Ceres and Bacchus, that is, with delicate meates and drynkes. And therefore it is sayd: Without delicates, meates and wines, Venus luste waxeth colde. Dauid was fedde with ease and delicacie, when he sat ydle at home and slugged himselfe with the pleasant none slepes, and fell into adultery with Bersabe the wife of Urye. Which thing chaunced not vnto him when he was exercised with exile & trauayle of warre. Thereof the Poete sayde right:

Take ydlenesse awaye, and Cupides bowe must needes decaye. And also: The cause is sought, howe Egiste was brought into adulterye? The cause is playne and easy to finde, he was of sluggishe kinde. Where so euer therfore there are ioyned together the ful belly and easy idlenesse, what can be loked for other, but that the full belly and pampered vp with ease, must fall to the fruite of al vnlawful lustes? We nede no examples. Loke vpon ỹ liues of Bishops, Cardinals, and Prieftes, Monks, Friers, and Nunnes, with the rest of the loyterers of the cloister: of whose ydle ease and fat grosse gut, so much filthinesse hathe gushed out of late, that a mã may be in doubt, whether ther euer liued vnder the cope of heuen, a more filthy kinde of men. The place of Ezechiel is knowen, where we reade thus: Lo this was the wickendesse of thy syster Sodome, pride, fulnesse of bread, abundance, and the ydlenesse of hir and of hir daughters: and vnto the poore & needy they stretched not forth their hand, they were proude, and did abominations in my sight. In these words the Prophete doeth laye the causes of so abominable filthinesse, in pride, fulnesse, abundance, ease, and vnmercifulnesse.

Ezech. 13.

The stirring vp.

The filthinesse of the harte is stirred vp by outwarde obiectes: by sight, by hearing or feeling, or by wãton & filthye reading. The strongest poyson is sucked in at the eyes, so that the wise man said right: What is created more wicked, than the eye? Therfore they that haue a regard to kepe themselfs pure & cleane, doe restrayne their eyes from running to much at large. So Job sayd: I made a coue-

his purpose, he is exceedingly vexed and woefull: so that in his own very conscience, before the very iudgement seate of God, he can not denye the gilt of adulterye.

The concupiscence of the hart.

Thirdlye, touching the concupiscence of the harte, though there be great difference betwixt it and the worke of adultery it selfe, yet the iudgement of wicked concupiscence is not thereby hindered: but that he is rightly accompted giltie of adultery before God, who soeuer desireth an other woman in hart, albeit he commit not the worke of adultery in signes and workes. And Christ himself, when he condemneth him of adultery which saeth a woman to couet hir, doth sufficiently admonish, that it is not the sight, but the concupiscence that beareth the blame of adultery.

Difference to be made betwixt the iudgement of God, and the iudgement of man.

Here we must make a difference betwixt the iudgement of this world, and the iudgement of God. No law of the world doth forbidde or punish the concupiscence of the harte. In the face of the worlde he is cleare ynough, which forbeareth the studie and endeuor of vncleane working, & can restrayne the euill in his harte, that it breake not out abrode. For no man iudge, can enter into the affections of the harte, which are not subiect vnto iudgement of man, but of God alone. No man knoweth (sayth the Apostle) what is in man. And we say in our prouerb, Thoght is free. But before the seate of iudgement of the most high iudge, man is iudged not according vnto that only which he doth, but rather according vnto that that he is, And man is more truely the same, which he is in harte, than the same which he sheweth in worke. The qualitie of the harte, is the qualitie of the man before God. The vncleane and adulterous hart, is the vncleane & adulterous man, if you loke to the iudgement of God. When the vncleanesse of the hart breaketh out, it maketh a man also vncleane before men, and subiect vnto mans iudgement.

By this consideration we be all admonished, to iudge of our selues not according vnto the reckening of mans iudgement, but according vnto the infallible censure of God. Our conscience it self doth conuince vs, & giueth testimony of the truth, vnto the iudgement of God. We can not chose but knowe that which liueth with more liuely sense in our harte. We haue learned many thinges by sight, hearing, studye, and teaching, yea and we know also many things, of which sometimes we lacke the sense. But euil concupiscence doeth allwayes liue in our hartes, doeth alwaies solicite and striue to the effect of the worke. Wherfore it can not be that it can deceiue our conscience. Therefore there is no excuse left, no not in our cõscience it self, much lesse in the sight of God the sear and iudge of all hartes. But of this matter, God willing, we wil speake here after in the last precept.

Of the causes of adultery, & al kinde of vncleanesse.

The principall cause hereof, is the vniuersall corruption of our flesthe, which is as it were, the welspring of all euils: from whence floweth murders, adulteries, theftes. spoylings, &c. The Apostle (whereas he lamenteth of this welspring of euils) calleth it, the sinne dwelling in our flesh, that is to witte, the depraued nature giuen to al euil. Which he doth rightly call sinne, partly because it is an enemye & aduersary to the law of God, and partly bicause it is the rote of all sinnes. This is ỳ originall vncleannesse of our hart, of whence proceedeth signes, wordes, and workes, declaring the impuritie within. The same Dauid felt, when he was admonished by the Prophet of his sins, of adulterye and murder. Whereupon he said also crying vnto the Lord: O God, create in me a cleane hart, and renewe a right spirit in my bowels. Whereas he desireth to haue a cleane hearte made within him, he doeth manyfestlye graunt, that he is defiled in hart, and that his former sinnes procede from an vncleane hart. Holy men do dayly praye vnto God for the cleansing of this impuritie of the hart, and do watch it with all diligence that they can, and labor to restrayne it that it brast not out.

The secondarye causes are the same, wherby the euil lurking in our hart, is fedde & stirred vp. It is fedde with Ceres and Bacchus, that is, with delicate meates and drynkes. And therefore it is sayd: Without delicates, meates and wines, Venus luste waxeth colde. Dauid was fedde with ease and delicacie, when he sat ydle at home and slugged himselfe with the pleasant none slepes, and fell into adultery with Bersabe the wife of Urye. Which thing chaunced not vnto him when he was exercised with exile & trauayle of warre. Thereof the Poete sayde right:

Take ydlenesse awaye, and Cupides bowe must needes decaye. And also: The cause is sought, howe Egiste was brought into adulterye? The cause is playne and easy to finde, he was of sluggishe kinde. Where so euer therfore there are ioyned together the ful belly and easy idlenesse, what can be loked for other, but that the full belly and pampered vp with ease, must fall to the fruite of al vnlawful lustes? We nede no examples. Loke vpon ỳ liues of Bishops, Cardinals, and Priestes, Monks, Friers, and Nunnes, with the rest of the loyterers of the cloister: of whose ydle ease and fat grosse gut, so much filthinesse hathe gushed out of late, that a mã may be in doubt, whether ther euer liued vnder the cope of heuen, a more filthy kinde of men. The place of Ezechiel is knowen, where we reade thus: Lo this was the wickendesse of thy syster Sodome, pride, fulnesse of bread, abundance, and the ydlenesse of hir and of hir daughters: and vnto the poore & needy they stretched not forth their hand, they were proude, and did abominations in my sight. In these words the Prophete doeth laye the causes of so abominable filthinesse, in pride, fulnesse, abundance, ease, and vnmercifulnesse.

Ezech. 13.

The stirring vp.

The filthinesse of the harte is stirred vp by outwarde obiectes: by sight, by hearing or feeling, or by wãton & filthye reading. The strongest poyson is sucked in at the eyes, so that the wise man said right: What is created more wicked, than the eye? Therfore they that haue a regard to kepe themselfs pure & cleane, doe restrayne their eyes from running to much at large. So Job sayd: I made a

a couenant with mine eyes, that I woulde not as much as thinke of a mayde: The children of the mightie kept not their eyes, but sawe the daughters of menne that they were fayre, and toke to them which they would. Sychem the son of the prince of Enor, kept not his eyes when he sawe Dina the daughter of Iacob, and was inamored with hir, and vpon the sight conueyed hir awaye. The wife of Putiphar vsed hir eyes at large, in stoddy beholding of the beautye of Ioseph. For the Scripture sayth: After many dayes, the ladie caste hir eyes vpon Ioseph, and sayd: Lye with me. Dauid when he had sene Bersabe, felte the prickes of concupiscence. There be passing number of such examples.

This euill is stirred vp also by hearing. For of bawdy wordes and songs commeth great force to moue the concupiscence in the hart. The Apostle sayth: naughty talke, corrupteth good manners. Wherefore a chaste minde muste eschue also such enticementes of euill, which are drawen in at the eares, leaste he heare that in the daye, whereof he maye thinke in the night. They be detestable men, which boaste before yͤ men of their mischiefe dedes, and the filthinesse of their life paste. A yong mans chastitie is sone brought into daunger, after his eares haue once suckte in the sweetenesse of the voyce and melody out of the mouth of a wanton wenche; I praye you what poyson doeth the deyntie greting offer vnto the folish man?

That euil also lurking in the hart, is stirred vp by outward feling. It is a very daungerous matter, if he may once touch and fele. This euill rayneth at large when they mete to daunce at tabers. It is harde to handle pitche without raying a manne, as the Wise man warneth. What nede I tel you what intitcement commeth of baudy reading? The very delite which carnall men do hunte and sucke out thereof, is testimonye ynough, that a chaste man ought to flye all suche kinde of filthy writings: as wanton images also, which many men be so delited with all, that they doe sticke vp in their parlers all sortes of filthye histories and images, moste horrishlye tyed. And woulde to God suche were not founde in bishops & religious mens chambers.

There is also much mischief, by reason of not punishing yͤ licentiousnesse of men, as is now a dayes sene in great men and Priestes. For if their wantonnesse were restrained by the sharpenesse of lawes, so much slander had neuer bin brought into the Church of Christ.

Lastly, opportunitie and occasion, which (as the prouerbe saith) maketh the theefe, giueth a great deale of encrement: whether it be of company and dwelling together, or else of solitarinesse, so that they may be together alone, bodyly or by stealth, and no body se them. Thus Ammon sought, when he deuised the deflowring and incest of his sister Thamar. But it is not our purpose nowe diligentlye to treate of all the causes of this euil, which riseth sundry ways, and destroys men vnwares. Would God we woulde at the leaste waye take the feare of God to vs, and diligently eschue and flee these pointes which

Genes. 6.

Genes. 34.

Genes. 39.

2. Sam. 11.

Hearing.

1. Corint. 15.

Touching.

which points we haue rehearsed.

Of the greuousnes of vvhordome and adulterie.

The speciall griefe.

This detestable & most noysome mischiefe hath so taken place in these latter times, that the greater the whoredomes & adulteries be, the more carelesly men do sin: and iudge that there is little or no offence done in whorehunting & adultery. Which euil no man can worthilye weye. And they shall chiefely beare the blame thereof aboue all others, at the day of iudgement, which might and ought to haue mette with the mischief as it grewe, by the authoritie of their power. It is not therefore much amisse, at the leaste waye for them which haue not yet cast away all the feare of God, to touche briefye, howe great the soreneste of this sinne is, how great the malice of it is, and what be the paines and punishment therof.

Let the man which feareth God, thinke firste of the common and generall weighte, wherin al sinnes generally are so greuous, that worthily they be with all diligence to be eschued. That is, that they do not onlye repugne vnto Gods will, but they haue also an expresse contempt of Gods precepts. A godly man would not do any thing yͤ might displease God, albeit it were not forbidden by expresse commandement of his: how muche more ought we to loke that nothing be done, that is contrary vnto the manifest commaundement of Gods maiestie. It doeth easily appeare how great the contempt of Gods authoritie muste nedes be, if a man do wittingly and warely transgresse the commaundement of God, as Adam and Eue did.

To offende against the tables of the couenant. A Similitude.

Secondly, we muste thinke of that also, that this precept, Commit not adulterie: is one of them which was put into the bookes of the couenant. It is a greuous mater to transgresse any precept of Goddes: but it was more grieuous to violate them also, which be peculiarlye annexed vnto Gods couenant, and for that cause put into the bookes of the couenant, that they shoulde with so muche the more care and religion be kept of the people of the couenant. The fauour of the couenant is great. Therfore those preceptes require also a speciall obseruance & keping, which are set forthe to the people of God, as the wordes and tables of the couenant. Therfore it followeth, that they do saiuour also of a singular contempt of God, which be not afearde to sinne against the tables of the couenant. Ther be many sorts of sins, wherewith the wife doeth according to the weakenesse of a woman, offend hir husband: and they haue also their waight, and are diligently eschued of an honest wife. And they be esteemed worthilye to be more grieuous than al these, whiche be done contrary vnto the expresse wordes of betrouthement. For they do argue a minde so neglecting the husbande, that she sticketh not to breake the very betrouthement. Such be those sins also, that be committed against the tables of Gods couenāt, of which adultery is one.

The vvaight by circumstances.

Thirdly, the circumstances of this sinne are also to be considered. Of circumstances some be of the persons

sons with whom men do sinne, some be of the time, and some of the manner of wayes. Of the difference of persons is spoken before. He sinneth more greuously, that sinneth with a mayde or his kinswoman, or with a maried woman, than if he sinne with a naughty packe, or a straunge woman or a sole woman. That sin is more greuous, that is accustomed and dayly vsed, than that which is done once or twice only. It is also more greuous that an olde man sinneth than a yong man, and yet it is also more greuous which is done of deuice & set purpose, than that which happeneth by chaunce. The multitude of circumstances, whereby this sinne is aggrauated, is more in number than can be particularly rehersed: and yet they may easely be marked in euery sinne, if a mans minde be set to feare, and to haue God alwayes before his eyes.

Of the euill of vvhoredome and adulterie.

A common euil vvhich excludeth men out of the kingdome of God.

How great the euil & noisomnesse of this sinne is, no man can wel weye. And yet I will note certain peculiar poyntes. It hath one point common with all other of the great sinnes, that it doth exclude men out of the kingdome of God. For so saith the Apostle: 1. Corint. 6. Be not deceyued, neither whoremongers, neither seruers of idols, nor adulterers, nor wantons, nor vnnaturall manlouers, nor thæues, nor the couetous, nor drunkards, nor euil talkers, nor extortioners, shall possesse the kingdome of God. It must nedes be an exceeding great euill, that doth for euer subiect a man to destruction, in excluding him from the kingdom of God. Wherfore this euil must not be esteemed ye lighter in this sin, bicause it is common also to other sins: but to be counted rather most greuous, bicause it maketh man most vnhappy. But as I said, let vs loke on those euils which do peculiarly cleaue vnto this sinne.

1 First, not only he that committeth adultery, but he also that committeth whoredome, doeth defile the fountaine and rote it self, of our nature. The strength of breeding, naturally grafted in our flesh by the great counsel of Gods prouidence (wherin the encrease of our nature consisteth) is peruerted and distayned by this sinne, when it is subiect vnto corrupt and naughty affections of forbidden lust. And who can sufficiently wey, how sinful and detestable it is to defile the fountayne and originall beginning of our generation.

2 Secondly, whorehaunters and adulterous do distaine publike honestie, whereof chief accompt ought to be had. God would the birth of mankinde shoulde be lawfull and honest, least our life should be defiled in the very rote and beginning: and therefore he did forbidde all kinde of vncleannesse. And what profiteth honest birth, if the societie of our life be defiled, & publike honestie distayned? Therfore like as they be vnworthie to liue amõg mẽ, which haue no care to kepe publike honestie: so is this sinne of it selfe detestable, whereby the honestie of the liuing together of men, is set asunder.

3 Thirdly, they which do committe whoredome and adulterye, fall into this peculiar euil also, that they doe sinne against their owne bodyes. Of this poynt the Apostle doeth admonishe vs in this wise: Flee whoredome. For all sin what soeuer man doeth, is without his bodye, but he that committeth whoredome, sinneth against his owne body. To sinne against his owne bodye, is to do his owne bodye wrong. That is done two maner wayes: either in hurting the constitution therof, or prophaning and defiling the holinesse and puritie therof. The constitution of our body is hurt by surfet and drunkennesse: the puritie & holinesse is defiled with whoredome and adultery, wantonnesse, incestе, deflouring, Sodomie, & bealklinesse as I may call it. The honor of our body, is the puritie and holinesse therof. That is defiled with sinne, when the acte of sinne is such, that it maketh the body it self defiled and filthye: whiche happeneth by those wayes which we haue spoken off. In this respect speaketh the Apostle also, when he sayth: For this is the wil of God, euen your sanctifying, that you abstayne from whoredome, and euery one of you know to possesse his vessel with holynesse and honor: not with affection of concupiscence, as the Gentils, which know not God. We see by this place, how the whoremonger and adulterer sinneth against his owne body, when by whoredome and adultery he defileth the honor and sanctifying of his own bodie. For Paule meaneth by abstaining from whoredome, to possesse his vessel, that is his body, in holinesse and honor.

4 Fourthly, this is also a peculiar euill in the spirit of whoredome and adultery, that when it hathe caught a man, it so besotteth & blindeth him, that he maketh no accõpt nor of his honor, nor of his name, nor of his goodes. Hereof they meant to admonish all men, which began to paynte Cupide, Venus sonne, blind. In dede whorehunters & adulterers be blind. They see neyther the filthinesse of themselues, nor of their harlottes, wherof at length (if by Gods grace they doe amende) they be exceedingly ashamed. They thinke they dally in roses, when they tumble as it were in their myer of filthinesse.

A continuall desire of sin grafted in them.

5 Fiftly, this sinne hath this also in it, that it is not ended with one or two acts of filthinesse, but it runneth on with a certain perpetuall desire, & kepeth a man bounde, and weareth out his harte and minde entangled day and night with most vaine deuises and desiers. Yea when the body is combered, & as it were dead with age, yet the harte and minde is still infected: As a man maye see in these olde men, to whom it is most swete, when they can prate of the loues and fondnesse of their youth.

A man is made light and vnprofitable.

6 Sixtly, it maketh a man not only vaine and light, but also vnprofitable. It is not possible that he can be profitable to others or to himselfe, that is possessed with the spirite and studie of whoredome, whether he be yong and sole, or maried: whether he be a priuat person, or set in publike function. For what should the snarled, sotted, and blinded minde do?

They fall into great danger. Proverb. 6.

7 Seuẽthly, it is casteth a man into gret dangers. The worth of a harlot saith the wise mã, is scarsely one lose or cantel of bread: but the woman procureth to hir the precious soule of a man. Item: The zeale (sayth he)

he) and the furie of the husband shal not spare in the daye of vengeance, nor shall cease at any bodies entreating. He compareth also a whoremonger & an adulterer vnto an oxe, drawen to be killed: and to the birde hasting to the pit fall: bycause he knoweth not what is wrought, concerning the peril of his soule. What great daunger the deflouring of Dina brought, we may see in Genesis. What happened vnto ỳ Beniamites, the booke of Iudith teacheth. The adulterie of Dauid, together with the fruite that it bredde, is knowen. The worlde is full of dayly examples.

Prouerb 7.

Genes. 34.

Iudit. 19. & 20.

8 Eightly, it hath also this point peculiar, that he which committeth whoredome and adulterie, wrappeth not onely himself in sinne, but hir also with whome he sinneth. He that stealeth, he that killeth, he that beareth false witnesse, he that is disobedient to his parentes, he that coueteth his neighbours goodes, he that bowèth before Images, he that abuseth the name of God, &c. sinneth in deede: but he sinneth alone, and doeth not necessarily wrap any other body in his sinnes: as the whoremonger, adulterer, and Sodomite doeth. This kind of sinne is of that nature, that it comprehendeth and casteth away to destruction two together. He that sinneth otherwise, forasmuch as he sinneth alone, if he amende alone, he is restored, and is appeased in his conscience by the grace of God: but the whoremonger, adulterer and Sodomite, when they doe amende (if they doe truely amende) cannot be but exceedingly troubled in their consciences, for their behalf with whom they sinned, and to whom they were authors of sinning.

Two persons are wrapt of sinne.

9 Minthly, these and many other thinges the sinne of whoredome and adulterye drawèth with it, by whomsoeuer it be done: but these pointes that folow, concerne Christian men.

Firste, that a Christian man by whoredome and adultery, maketh of the members of Christ the members of a harlot. Wherof Paule doeth admonishe vs, saying: Knowe you not that your bodyes be the mèbers of Christe? Shall I then take the members of Christ, and make them members of a harlot? God forbidde. Know you not, that he which is ioyned to a harlot, is one body with hir? For there shal be brought (saith he) two into one flesshe.

Secondly, that it doeth prophane the Temple of the holy spirite. For as the Apostle saith in the place before alleged: The body of a Christian man is the temple of the holy spirite, whome he hath in him from God. And how greuous a matter it is to make bothe of the members of Christ the members of a harlot, and to be one body with the harlot, yea and not to prophane and defile, not some stony and shadowed Temple, but the true and liuely Temple in which the holy spirite dwelleth, the harte of a Christian man may easily conceyue.

The Apostle addeth also a thirde euill, wherby men do sin against the blood of the redemptiõ, and the right of the redemer. Ye are brought (saith he) for a great price or raunsome, and you be not your own. Therfore glorifie G D in your body, and those thinges that be of God, in your spirite.

rite. Therefore he that committeth whordom & adultery, sequestreth himself, altogither in body and spirit, frõ the right of Christ our redemer, and shameth God, whome he ought to glorifie in his body and spirit, by the cleanesse and holinesse of them both.

This my wil was briefly to touch, and to giue an occasion to godly mẽ, to thinke of the peculiare euill and hurt of this sin, that as it is singularly and specially noysome & hurtefull, so it may be also with singular hate and abhorrmente eschued. For it is worthily hateful, whatsoeuer hath a certain peculiar malice to hurte. There be many sortes of venemous beastes, which all men doe flée: but such of them as haue a certain singular and present poyson, are had also in singular hate, and more diligently eschued, as adders be, & certain such other kinde of beastes. Therfore let a godly man thinke that whoredome is a certaine most noysome adder, to be detested and eschued euen for this cause, that it is full of some certaine peculiar malice, as the Apostle also ment in the place before cited.

Of the punishment of forbidden lustes, whoredome, deflouring, incest, rauishment, adultery, Sodomy, and beastiall meddeling.

LIke as the prouidence of God did forbidde the filthinesse of vnlawfull lusts, not onely by words, but did adde also penalties to restraine the same: so I suppose we ought to endeuour, not onely to heare his wordes whereby he doeth forbidde it, but to marke also the sharpnesse of the punishment. It had neded no penalties, if Gods word had the waight & efficacie which it ought to haue in our harts, either inteaching, either in forbidding. But for as much as the corruption of our nature, vanitie, lightnesse, yea rather impiety is so great, that al doctrine, al warning, yea & all commandementes, as well charging as forbidding, are contemned, to the intent that no point should be omitted necessary to breke such malice of our nature, there were added also penalties, by ỳ sharpnesse of which, wil we nil we, we should be staide from ỳ rashnesse of sinning. Wherfore I thought good to admonish you also of this matter, to the intent you should not misse so necessarie a parte of this treatie.

Two kindes of penalties of Sinne.

1 And ther be two kindes of penalties of this sin to be considered. The first kinde is the same which is not comprended in any lawes, but is sent vpon reuenge at will. Some of such reuenges are done by the ministerie of angels, some by the ministerie of men. By the ministery of Angels Pharao was scourged, & his house also, with great plages, for Saras sake Abrahams wife. The former world for their vnstaied lustes, was destroyed by the floud. Sodoma, vñ the cities ioyning vnto it, for their abominable vncleanesse, was brent with fier frõ heauen. By the ministery of men, the citie of Sichem was put to sack and subuersion, for ỳ deflouring of Dina. Foure and twentye thousand of the Israelites perished for whordome, & the Iudges were hanged vp against the Sunne. The tribe of Beniamin was nere hand al extincted, for a woman ỳ was killed with violent lust.

Genes. 12.

Gen. 6. & 7.

Genes. 19.

Genes. 34.

Num. 25.

Iudg. 19. & 20.

2 There is another kinde of penalties also, wherwith the vncleane folkes are ouerwhelmed, corrected in lawes, not only of men, but also of God. Of adulterers we may see in Leuiticus & Deuteronomie. If any man commit adulterie with another mans wife, or else with his neighbours, let them dye the death, both the adulterer and the adultresse. Item: If the man sleepe with an other mans wife, both shall dye, the adulterer & the adultresse: and thou shalt ridde the euil out of Israel. According vnto this law, the adulterer and the adultresse were wont to be ouerwhelmed with stones in Israel: as we may see in the history of Susan, and in John, where the Pharisees saide vnto the Lord, Maister, this woman is euen now taken in adultery. And in the law, Moyses commanded vs to stone such. This sharpnesse of Gods lawe, the law of Julius amongst the Romaines, did followe: by which adulterers lost their heades. This sharpnesse, our Princes and Bishops haue mittigated with easier penalties.

Penalties of adulterours.

Leuit. 20.

Deut. 22.

Lex Iulia.

Some haue yoked the adulterer after he was well whipt, vnto monkerie, some haue punished the adultresse with the losse of hir dourie: and haue take from the adulterer all that was giuen him at his mariage. Our men do yet more gently handle the adulterers, rather than punish them. Would God they could bring to passe by their mildnesse, y ther were lesse adultery. It is a maruelous matter, that be so gentle to adulterers, and so sharpe vnto theues. There be some that do say, that Christ did abrogate y penaltie of the law against adulterers, when he said to the adultresse: Nor I do not condemne thee, go and hereafter sinne not. They be gaye men: they do not thinke that Christ came into the worlde not to iudge and punishe sinners, but to saue the: and yet for all that, hee did not disanull the penalties of the lawe, giuen by Moses from God the father. And therfore he said not simply, I doe not condemne thee: or, Thou oughtst not to be condemned of any man, but when he had asked before: Hath no man condemned the woman? and she answered, No man lord: then he added, Nother I doe condemne thee. He would haue saide another thing, if she had bene condemned according vnto the sentence of the lawe: he would not haue gone agaynst the law. Wherfore he did not by his wordes, father that licentiousnesse, wherby men do now a daies exceedingly grow into all kind of mischeuousnesse.

Christian princes haue vveakned the lavv of adulterours.

John. 8.

Of the penaltie of Incest, see in Leuiticus, they were subiect vnto y sentence of death, whosoeuer had to do either with his stepmother, or hys daughter in law, or his wifes daughter, or w his sister, or with his aunt by the father or mothers side, or with his vnckles wife, by y father or mothers side, or with his brothers wife.

Of the deflowrers of maidens, the commandemēt runneth thus. If any man finde a maydē wēche, that hath not a spouse, & take hir, and lye with hir, and the matter come to iudgemēt, he that lay with hir, shall giue the father of the wenche fiftye syeles of syluer, & shal haue hir to his wife: bicause he hath abashed hir: and can not leaue hir al the dayes of his life. This is in that place. It were exceeding necessarie to reskue this law vnto vnto his strength againe, for them which do busily lay watch for maidens chastitie, and do deceyue & corrupt wenches vpon hope of wedlock. If a wenche despoused, be defiled, both she and hir deflowrer are commaunded to be ouerwhelmed with stones, in the same chapter.

Ye that defileth a maidē or a wife by rauishement, or violence, is punished also with death by the temporal lawes.

Ye that vseth his lust against nature, either with mankinde or beast, is iudged to death. Ye that sleepeth (saith he) with a mā, as men are wōt to vse women, bothe of them hathe wrought wickednesse, let them dye the death: let their blod be vpon thē. Item he that hath to doe with beast or cattel, let him dye the deathe: and kill also the cattel. The woman that yeldeth hir self vnto any beast, let hir be slaine also with it. Their blod be vpon them.

Thus much by the way, of the penalties of filthy lusts. If it seeme to any man ouer sore to kill a man for a fault, as they say, so naturall, let him thinke of y waight therof which I made mention of: & how it is not mete for y man to enioye life, which with so great peruersitie and vncleanesse doth corrupt that which was profitablye & honestly grafted in our nature to the encrease therof. Nor godly men must not regard how this worlde doth punish such mischieuous dedes, in which they be most giuen vnto whoredome & adultery, whose part it were either for their wisedom or power, to be ringleaders in the hoping of publike honestie. Howsoeuer they do execute the penalties of the law, or according to their mildenesse doe remitte it, we must holde that in mindefull memorye, that S. Paule saith: Whoremongers & adulterers the Lord shall iudge. Again, The law was not set to the iust, but to the vniust and vnruly, to wicked persons & sinners, to the vngracious and filthinesse, to father and mother killers, to murderers and whoremongers, to mē louers, to fighters, lyers, and periured persons, and whatsoeuer is contrarye vnto the holesome doctrine, which is according vnto the Gospell of the blessed God, which was delinered vnto me. It is manifest ynough by these words of the Apostle, that whoremongers and adulterers, with other flagitious & wicked persons, whose wickednesse repugneth against the doctrine of the Gospel of God, as men vnder the reuenge of God, are not subiect vnto the grace of the new Testament, but vnto the sharpnesse of the law. Therfore they be peruerters of the grace of the new Testament, that be fauorable to wicked persons, and do persecute with so great cruelte them, which either do erre, or be supposed to erre in maters of religiō. The sea of Rome spareth whoremongers and adulterers, yea and Sodomites also, & they do betake to the fier to be burned clerkes, as they say, vsing lawful matrimony, as they call it. And can we be miscontent with them, which being no Christians, nor vnderstanding the truth of Christianity, do detest & abhorre most spitefully, & hate the whole Christian religiō of Christianity, when as they see so vnseemly and wicked matters, suffred at liberty amongst Christian men?

1. Tim. not 1.

The Eyght Precept.

IT can not be sufficiently considered, how that this Decalogus of Gods precepts is appointed in most conuenient order. For if we wey the loue of God and of our neighbour, the first table requireth the loue of God, the seconde the loue of our neybour. Wherof the Apostle doeth admonish vs, when he saith: He that loueth his neighbour, hath fulfilled the law. For these precepts, Thou shalt not commit adultery, Thou shalt not kil, Thou shalt not steale, Thou shalt not beare false witnesse, Thou shalt not couet, and such lyke commandements, are commãded in this saying, Loue thy neighbour as thy selfe. If you thinke of the keping of iustice, whereby is giuen to euery man his own, the first table prescribeth what our duty is towardes God, and the second what towardes our neybour. If we consider the vpright and lawful order of our life, first those things be set for the which be chiefest, next are added secondary matters. The chiefest are they which concerne pietie. And the same is of two sortes: one is due to God, the other to our parents. That which is the due to God, is commanded in the first four precepts, in the fifte is added next the same which is done to our parents. The secũdary things be those which concerne our neighbours, thei be set forth in some of forbidding. And we be forbiddẽ that we shal not hurt them. And forbicause that it may be done diuers & sundry wayes, there be expressed and forbidden certain generall kindes of hurting, in which are compzised an innumerable sort of things, and be forbidden. So it is first forbidden, that we doe not kill, that is to say: that we lay not watche for our neighbours lyfe. Secondly, that we defile not with any wicked kinde of lust, or by whordome or adulterye, the honestie of his state & lyfe, in wedlocke or maydenhode. Thirdlye, that we do not dammage him in any necessitie of his liuing: & so is it added vnto ỹ precept going before: Thou shalt not steale.

Rom. 13.

The worde in the Hebrewe signifieth, To goe about somewhat secretly, to conuey it and take it awaye, so that the knowledge of them which haue to do in it, may be deceyued. So we reade in Genesis. And Jacob stole Labans hart, that is, vnknowen to Laban he went away. And in the same chapter: And thou hast stolen my heart. And, Thou hast stolen mée, and not tolde mée of it. So that Jacob was accused by Laban of theft, for that he had secretely without his knowledge conueyed himselfe and his, and departed awaye. So that to robbe any mans hearte, is as much as to deceyue his knowledge, and to conueye himself or some other thing secretelye from him. So Ioseph sayde also: For I am by stealth and by theefte taken away out of the land of the Hebrewes, bicause his brethren had deceiued the conscience of his father, and solde him secretely into Egypt. We reade also: And ỹ people stole himself that daye, going into the citie. As though he had sayd: the people gat into the Citie by stealth, or, lyke théeues they forsoke the way into the Citie. And againe, And Absalon stole the harte of Israel: that is deceiued, or craftely dzewe vnto him the hartes of the Israelites. And in the same chapter whẽ the Tribe of Juda had brought Dauid home to his house, the Israelites said vnto Dauid: Why haue our brethren stolen thée? Of these & other like places it is manifest ynough, that this word גנב, which is put in this eight precept, is as much, as to worke secretely, couertly, fainingly or dissemblingly: and so doe, that that which is done, is hid from the knowledge of them that haue to doe in it, whether any thing be takẽ away or not. So the Grekes do vse this word κλέπτειν. Therfore when God saith, לא תגנב he forbiddeth not only, that no man take away by stealth the goodes of his neighbour, but also that he do not craftely and maliciously deceyue his knowledge, in any cause that toucheth him.

Hovv many kindes of stealing there be.

THe euill of theft is so manifold, that the kindes thereof can not easely be reckened. For we meane not to rehearse all, nor to treate of them: but we wil sée of some that be most common.

1 There be two kindes of theft. One is, that which is knowen and common, and is now adays punished with hanging: that is, when an other mannes good is secretely conueyed awaye without the owners knowledge, & against his will. The parts thereof be those. First there is simple theft, when a priuate mans good is by stealth taken away. The seconde is sacrilege, when holy things, & such as are appointed to Churches & seruice of God, are pilfred awaye. The third is a kind of robbery, when publike goodsare by stealth conueied away and alienated. Some doe adde an other, when a man is shifted ouer by theft, whether he be free of bonde: Which kinde of stealth is not so wel knowẽ here, as in those countries in which menne are wonte to be solde. Therefore it is prouided by a special law, that no body steale a man.

Exod. 21.

2 It is an other kinde of theft, whẽ any man is deceitfully, maliciously, and so circumuented in his businesse, that he suffereth fraude, and taketh harme not vnderstanding it. Of this kinde there be many formes, which bicause they be not perceiued, they do bring them which vse thẽ, into no infamy nor danger: but they be rather clothed with honest titles.

Bishopps are the theeues of the church goodes.

Bishopps and other prelates with their clerkes and cloyster creepers, do commit sacrilege without anye infamye, when they doe abuse the goodes of the Church vnto prophane vses. The goodes of the Church doe belong to the feeding of the poore, to the sustentation of the ministers, and to the reparing of the Churches: but they, when they do neither well minister in the Church, but spende the goodes of the Church, nor feede the poore, nor repaire the edifices of the Churche, but spende the goodes of Churches filthy vpõ their pleasurs, whore-hunting, they must needes be sacrilegers, and do robbe Christs Church of his necessary ministery, and the poore of their relefe, and the edifices of the Church of their reparation. And yet ther is no man that doeth punishe them as giltie of sacri-ledge, but they be for the most part reputed for holy men and prelats of the Churche, which be the watchers & spyders of the goods of the Church. So the Church is deceiued in matters of religion, not vnderstanding the fraude of their prelates.

The Princes are the theeues of Churche goodes.

Againe, they do also commit sacrilege, which take away the goodes of the Church from Prelates and clerkes, and conuerte them to their owne priuate vses: which thing certain princes haue done in time past, and would to God many princes did not so in these dayes, which do not withstanding exceedingly glorye of the Gospell of Christ. They doe not sin in that that they doe driue the humblebées, the ydle cattel, yea rather the wolfes from the rackes and féeding place: but they doe committe sacrilege in that that they doe euen as the false Bishops did, and doe turne the goodes of the Church vnto their owne priuate vses, and spoile the Churches.

The robbers of vvidovves houses. Matth. 23.

3 Into this ragmans rolle the Hypocrites also must be put, which vnder pretext of long prayer, doe eate vp the houses of widowes, suche as they were, to whome Christ sayde: Wo be to you Scribes, and Pharisées, Hypocrites, which do eate vp the houses of widowes. &c. For what do they else, but vnder colour of prayer, deceiue the simple sort, and by stealth lay watche for other mens goodes?

They that clime in an other vvay

To those adde also those which goe not in by the doze, but clime vp an other waye: and wheras they be wolues, they boast themselues for shepherds. In this forme we maye place all them also, which neyther be orderly chosen to the ministerie, nor did therefore couet the ministery because they woulde fede the Lordes shepe, but bicause they would fatte themselues with the milke and flesh of the shepe, and pamper themselues vdelly in ỳ Church of Christ. Those Christ himselfe calleth Robbers and theeues.

5 They be theeues also, yea sacrilegers, which vnder the pretence of the name or of the worde of God, do steale, decepue, and draw vnto them the hartes of the simple. They doe pretende the name of God almighty, that a man woulde thinke, that they receyued commandement from God from heauen, to take in hand that which they doe, when they doe set forthe their owne traditions and inuentions vnto the Church of God. They doe steale also the wordes of God, and apply them vnto their owne deuises, to make men beleue that they doe set forth not their own opinion, but the sentence of the Lord: and so they do decepue the simple folkes, which either can not iudge of the sentence of the wordes of the Lord, either are forbidden by them, which challenge to theselues the kay of knowledge in the house of God. This is a moste noysome kinde of theft and sacrilege, whereby they doe by fraudulent theft, tourne to their owne wickednesse, the name and worde of the Lorde, and do pull awaye true godlinesse, the knowledge of God, and Christ himselfe, by stealth, out of the heartes of the simple and seduced, and doe settle in place therof, the ignorance of God, & Antichrist. Such there were among the Iewes, of whome we doe reade in this wise. Therefore lo, I am against the Prophets (saith the Lord) which steale my wordes euery man from his neighbour. Lo, I am against the Prophetes saith the Lord, which teache their tongs to saye: The Lord sayde: Lo, I am against them that doe prophecye dreames of lyes, sayth the Lord, which tell the same vnto them, and seduce my people in their lye. &c.

gainst

After the sacrileges of ỳ Churchmen, we must consider of others also, which do decepue their neybours in the seconde kinde of theft.

1 Such be the merchants, which sell counterfeit & corrupt wares, in stéde of true and sound geare: and doe also lessen and diminishe measures. It is plaine theefte, whatsoeuer they get by such fraude more than is right.

2 Handy workmen also, and artificers which worke not trustyly, and yet demaunde and receyue the whole wages for their labour, are theeues.

3 Officers also which by secret falshode do pilfer away the goodes of their prince, or of ỳ common wealth, be theeues.

4 They be theeues also, which being tutors of Orphanes and Widowes, do raise a gaine, and become riche of their goodes.

5 Waiting men also and seruants, be theeues, which seruing their maisters onely vnder his nose, do falsely vse him in his absence. Ther be yet many other such kindes of theefte, but woulde to God these were mended among Christian men.

From vvhence commeth the desire of stealing.

The sinne of theft, hathe a spring, vaines, and a course. Matth. 15.

THis euill hath his fountaine or spring, his vaines, & his course. The fountaine, is the hart (Christ to witnesse) who saith thus. Out of the hart cómeth euil thoughts, murders, adulteries, whoredomes, thefts, false witnesse, &c. Here is ment that malice of the hart, which by original sin infected the nature of our kinde, and made it sinful. The same is euen the fountaine of all sinnes.

The vaines. The vaines of this sin, be incredulitie, falshode, and auarice. As faith toward ỳ prouidence of God maketh the minde intent vnto vpright worke king, quiet, content with litle, & faithful to his neighbour: so doth it also restraine all euil crafts and fraudes. Againe, as vnbeleefe doeth make the minde vnquiet, false, and couetous of much goods, yea and ỳ of other mens: so it doth yeld al kind of deceit, craft, and guile, and maketh a man wilye, craftye, false, a robber, and a théefe. Therfore the desire of stealing springeth out of ỳ euil hart as a fountain, by incredulitie, falshode, & couetousnesse, as by vaines and conduites.

The course

To the following out and course therof, helpeth first Idle slouthfulnesse, giuen to riot, & next his daughter Beggery, of which the wiseman saith: The slouthfull hand braedeth beggerye. And in an other place: Chap. 30. Beggerye and riches giue me not, but giue me only necessary thinges for my liuing, least peraduenture being ouer full, I may be allured to denaye, and say: Who is the Lord? or driuen by beggery, may steale, and forswear the name of my God.

Occasion.

Here vnto is ioyned Occasion, according to the common prouerbe: Occasion maketh the theefe: that is to say, occasion doth entice the theues minde to put his hand to steale. It cõpelleth him not, but it doth entice him: it maketh not a theefe of a good man, but it doeth stirre and prouoke him that is already halfe disposed to theft: which can not be in a good man and him that feareth God.

Admise.

Therfore we must endeuor (so farre forth as of nature we be of an euill disposition) to suppresse first the malice of our harts, praying vnto God by the crãple of the wise man: & next the course of inticemẽt of it, by doing honestly and eschewing all occasion, & restrain ỹ same shut vp (as it were in a prison) by the feare of God, who seeth all thinges. We must passe away slouth, idlenesse, and ryot, least of them come beggery, and coueting of other mennes goods: which after they haue once taken place, they wil breede not only theft, robbery, and periurie, but sacrilege also, and all kinde of falshode, as wel towardes God as towards men.

Genethliaci. Against Calkers which doe ascribe the necessitie of stealing to starres.

There be some which do shift the cause of this euil vnto, I wote not what, constellation, vnder which thei be borne into this worlde by the Fatal strength and necessity, wherof (as they say) they be so driuen to steale, that they can not stay themselfe frõ stealing. And for this impietie, we may thanke the calculators of nativities, which do attribute this vnto starres, that according vnto their qualitie & nature they make the man that is borne vnder them, a theefe or a whoremonger, an extortioner, or a miserable and a wicked person. This say they, worketh Venus, this Saturne, this Mars, & this Mercury, &c. as though the necessarie causes of our sinning came euen from heauen: which thing what is it else, but to make god the creator of heauen & of all thinges) the author of all kinde of euill, and to blame him therefore & withall to cleare the man which is flesly and blod, and a very vile worm & filthinesse it self, as giltiesse of himselfe, from all fault? The Sunne, the Mone, and Starres, be for this purpose in the firmament, to stande in steade for tokens and tunes, for days and nights, not to gouerne our dispositions and fortunes. The euils that we doe, we may thanke the peruersnesse of our nature for them, the malice wherof is spread abroade euen from our first parent Adam into all flesh, out of our originall corruption: not out of the Starres, which be the good creatures of God. Then let vs attribute the causes of our sins hereunto, which we do feede and encrease by our own sluggishnesse.

So that they are to be restrained, which when mẽ be punished for their theftes, do breake out into these clamours: I coulde not chose but steale, it was my destinie. If they speake of the procliuitie to stealing, in deede we must acknowledge that the same is in our hartes from the natiuitie of our flesh, as other vices also: but it is not of so great strength that it compelleth a man whether he will or no, to steale, but it may be restrained, specially by the meanes of Gods grace: and secondarily by discipline & conuenient correction: so far forth at the least, that they may be able to hold their hands from stealing other mens geare. And agayne, it commeth not of the strengthe of the Starres, but as we sayd, of corrupte nature.

transgression of Precepte.

Howe grieuous a sinne, Theft is.

If this sinne be considered in it selfe, it is grieuous inough, though it were but for thys, that it is the transgression of Gods Precepte, yea the breach of the table of the couenaunte: of the weightnesse wherof we noted some things in the Precept before. It is in no wise to be looked for, that he whiche maketh it a light matter to transgresse Gods precepte, and dothe rashly contemne the authoritie of Gods Maiestie, that he can by any other meanes cõteine himselfe thoroughly from the affection and desire of stealing. Wherefore we must prouide, that the reuerence and feare of the hygh lawgyuer, be clapt into mẽs hearts, euen from childhode, that they may learne to feare the Lord: and by hys feare refraine themselues, as it were with a certayne bridle, from the desire of sinne.

Secondly, if you compare ỹ kinds and spices of theft, one with another, of whiche I made mention before, you shall finde that one is greeuouser than another. It is more grieuous, if a man hurt his parents, brothers, friendes, and felowes in house, wyth stealing, than strangers. For the straighter men be alied, so much the straighter the loue ought to be. Agayne, it is a more grieuous theefte which is committed vnder pretence of rewarde, fee, or office, rule, or seruice, and so to deceyue the simple. He sinneth more grieuously whyche stealeth the goodes of the poore, than he that robbeth the rich. For though both be theftes, yet in this case is added vnto the wickednesse of theft, the cruelties also in the miserie of the poore. It is also a grieuouser faulte if a man committe a publike robberie, pilfring away secretely publike goodes, than if he take away by theft from a priuat person. For it is more grieuous to hurt many, than one alone. He that dothe an iniurie to the whole body, doth sinne more hurtfully, than he whiche hurteth but one member alone. Furthermore he that stealeth a man, doth more grieuously offende, than he whiche robbeth a publike matter. For he sinneth againste oure owne common nature, when he stealeth a man, whyche is much more grieuous than to steale earthly goodes, which al togyther be not so much of value, as one man alone. He that committeth sacriledge in taking away Churche goodes, doth sinne enormiously in annoying Gods house, and hurting the ministers of the Churche and the poore, whiche passeth all crueltie. Here we maye recken them specially, whyche by climbing vp by crooked and wrõg wayes, do robbe the dignities of the Churche and the word and name of God, to seduce the people. They bee not onely theeues, but robbers and spoylers of soules.

There be some places of Scripture, by whiche theft in respect of other sinnes is made lesse. As in the first of the Prouerbs where we reade thus: It is no greate faulte when a man stealeth. For he stealeth to fill his hungry soule. And if he be taken withall, he shall restore seuen tymes as muche, and deliuer all his goodes, and saue hymselfe. But he that is an adulterer, for lacke of hart loseth his soule. &c. And in Ecclesiasticus: Be not called a tale teller in thy life, and lay no watche to deceyue with thy tong: For vppon the theefe falleth shame, but vppon the backebiter, a wicked condemnation. Also in the same book: The theef is better thã he which cõtinually lieth. By these places theefte is so extenuated, ỹ it hath lesse blame thã adulterie, backbiting and vse of lying: but these places are to be vnderstanded of simple theefte, when a man for pure nede stealeth that which is not his, to sustaine his lyfe withall. But otherwyse, if you consider the enormitie of sacrileges, you will tell vs an other matter. Agayn, theefte is not extenuated here so muche, that it is of it selfe to be counted lighte, but it is declared to haue lesse blame & hurte in comparison of greater matters. And so is immediately added in Ecclesiasticus: But both shall inherite perdition, that is both the theefe, and the continual lyer: which is to good consideration added, leaste any man shoulde hereby take occasion to iudge ouer light of the sinne of theft. That sinne which is committed in theefte, is not therfore little, bicause there be some sinnes greater. Euery sinne is of it selfe great, to speake nothing of the circumstances, wherby they be yet more aggrauate: & this grieuousnes is not discharged frõ any sin by those ỹ be more grieuous & more enormious. Wherfore whẽ any sin is extenuated in scriptures, it is extenuated not of it selfe, but in comparison of them that be more grieuous.

Ecclesi. 5.

Eccle. 20.

Eccle. 20.

Whether euery theefte be culpable and sinne.

TO the vnderstandyng of thys place, the qualitie of those thinges which be forbidden or cõmanded in this Decalogue is to be considered. There be of them two kindes. The one is of those things whiche can in no wise be done without offence: the other of such things, as may somtymes be done without faulte and blame.

Of the firste kinde bee those three Precepts of the firste table, that is, the firste, the second, and the thirde: And of the second table, the seuenth, the ninth, and the tenth. For it can not be, that men may haue straunge Gods, serue and worship Images, take the name of Gods Maiestie in payne, committe adultery, beare false witnesse againste their neyghbour, and couet those things that bee your neighbours, without sinne. Ye that committeth any of these things, sinneth without excuse. For there can be no reason giuen, howe these things may be done lawfully & without blame.

Of the secõd kind be ỹ other four, that is, the fourth in the firste table, and the fift, first, and this the eyghte which we now treate of, in the secõd table. For that which is commanded of the obseruance of the Sabbbath, that no worke be done in the seauenth day, mought haue bin vppon certayne causes neglected in the olde Testament: and in the new Testament vtterly refused.

And

And that which is cõmaunded of the honoring of the parentes, is also such, that in some case it may lawfully be broken. As when we ought to haue regard & obseruance of greater iustice, as that is which Christ speaketh of: If any come to me, and hateth not his father and mother. &c. can not be my disciple.

Thirdly, where he sayth, Kill not, it is of that sorte, that somtymes it muste nedes be done, and maye bee done wyth good commendation and prayse.

Fourthly, the same whiche he forbiddeth here, saying: Thou shalt not steale, may be so done, that it maye haue commendation of obedience, somtymes of iustice, somtymes of diligence and industrie.

The Israelites did craftily robbe the Egyptians, when they borowed of them Gold, Siluer, and much apparell: and gate it away of purpose neuer to restore it. What was that other than theefte? And yet it is not onely excused by Gods commaundemente, whereof we reade Exod. xj. But it deserueth also cõmendation of obedience. For they did (sayeth Moyses) as the Lord commaunded, and to do that which the Lord commandeth, is the praise of true obedience. For who can beleue that God can commaunde ỹ which is not lawfull by any meanes to doe? He that forbiddeth theft, commanded Israel in this case to robbe the Egyptians, he would neuer haue commanded it, if of itselfe it had bene vtterly euill, and vnexcusable.

Againe, we reade this: And Athalia mother of Ochosias, seeyng hyr sonne was dead, arose and slewe all the issue of the king. And Iosaba the daughter of King Iozam, sister to Ochosia, stale him out of the middes of the kyngs children that were slain, and his nourse out of the halle, and hidde hym from the face of Athalia, that he might not be slayne: and he was with hir fyre yeares secretely in the house of the Lord. Hee saith, She stale him, Ergo, she committed theft. Who is so mad to say, that thys kinde of stealing is to bee blamed, and not rather worthy of cõmendation of Iustice? And would God all godly folkes were by lyke theft conueyd from tiraunts, whych be in daunger for iustice and true godlinesse: wherein Abdias the steward of Achabs house did a good turne to the liuing, when he hid and fedde a hundred Prophetes secretely from the face of Iesabell. And Toby, to his dead brethren, taking thẽ vp secretely and burying them.

2. Reg. 15.

1. Reg 18.

Tob. 2.

Theefte of industrie.

You shall find many wastfull husbands, which consume al wherewith their wiues and their children ought to be kept. If a prudent wife do conuey sometimes secretely from such a husbande, and lay vppe somewhat to serue ỹ necessitie to come, as we say, for a dere yeare, who cã blame such a stealing, & wil not rather cõmend the womã for hir industrie & diligence?

Theefte of vvarenesse.

If a man take secretly and steale away a sword from a mad and drunken person, to the intent he shall not rage against any man withal, I suppose he committed a theefte worthye to be commended for his warynesse and forseeing.

A studious yong man is not blamed of his schoolemaister, if he steale out of good authors suche thinges as he maye cunningly and handsomly place in his writtings, but is commẽded rather for his industrie and diligence. There be many suche theftes which may be done without faulte, yea and rather with commendation.

Therefore it followeth, that all kindes of theftes are not to be condemned. You shall finde some nations, whiche so well do like the industrie of stealing, that they will diligently instructe their children in the exercise of stealing, and that all kind of theft may be done among them lawfully. Suche an industrie in stealing, in whiche they doe glory themselues in, no good man can well allowe and like. For they doe sinne against the precepte of God, against iustice, against right and equitie, and brotherly charitie: and doe nourish and encrease in the study and exercise of stealing: and the malice of the hearte, whereby we do delite in stealing, and esteme stolne water to be swete and pleasaunte, accordyng vnto the Prouerbe. For these causes we must not be hastie to allowe the industrie of stealing, no not there where it semeth to be least wickednesse. Our flesh is corrupte and ouerthwart. And those things that be spoken for the comfort of weake cõsciences, our flesh draweth them to ỹ couering & feding of hir wickednes. Wherfore ỹ wise mã will diligently beware, that he do not carelesly flatter his owne flesh, in those poyntes whyche may by some coloure bee excused. For there is in nothing more daunger, nor men doe in nothing soner sinne, thã in those points whereof the wickednesse of olde Adam can pretende some manner of excuse.

Prouer. 21.

Wherefore the Lorde dyd not rather forbidde violence, robbery, and depredation, than Theste.

Some man will aske me: seeyng that it is more grieuous to robbe and spoyle by vniust violence, than to take things away by theste, why it is not rather commaunded, that we robbe not, nor spoyle not, than that we steale not: For he whiche stealeth, is carefull to doe that secretely whiche he doth, and to deceyue mens knowledge, forbearing so long from theft, whyles he is let by the care and loking vnto of the owner, from whome he goeth about to get any thing by stealth. And so he that is a wareful keper of his geare, may saue, that nothing be gotten frõ him by stealthe. But extortion and pilling and polling are of that sort, that they are not without the knowledge of him whose gwdes be taken away, whether thou wilte or not, thou art robbed by vniust violence, nor thou canst not let it, though thou kepe thy geare neuer so diligently. Wherefore for both causes, both for that that robbing and depraying is the greater sinne, and also bycause it can be lesse resisted, it semeth, it ought to haue bin forbidden rather that we should not robbe, than that we should not steale.

To thys question maye be answered, that the sinne of theste is more generally than of violence, robbing and rifling. For to robbe violently and ryfle, is not suche a matter as may be done by all persons, but but by the strong and mighty onely. They that be weaker or lyke of strength, can not practise robbery, neyther against their strongers, nor theyr equals. But stealing (forasmuche as it requireth not strength, but craft and deceit) may be as well done by the weaker, yea, and by all sorts of men, as by the stronger sort. Therefore it is better, that that whiche is more generall, and maye bee done of all men, should be forbydden by this lawe, than that whych is speciall, and such as can not be done by all men, but by the stronger alone.

And this reason may be giuen also, that the swoorde of the superioure and ordinarie power is to be feared in robberies and prayes, rather than in theste. For robbery, forasmuch as it hath an open violence, and is done manifestly, it is soner subiect vnto the iudgemente of men, than theste: which beyng secretely done, doth rather and longer skape the knowledge of the iudge. Wherfore it was more necessary that theft should bee forbidden by the lawe, and feare of God (which seeth all thyngs hidden) than robbery, whiche is subiect vnto the sight and knowledge of men.

Thirdly, robbery is subiect vnto the resistance of man. For hee that dothe or meaneth to vse violence towards his neighboure, must needes looke for violence agayne. He that taketh away any thing by stealth, is not in that case. Wherefore by thys reason also it was more conuenient that theste shoulde be forbidden by Gods lawe, than robberie.

Fourthly, whereas it is alleaged, that theft is of lesse sinne than robbery and depredation, that is the very cause why that theft was rather to be forbidden namely, than robbery. For that seemeth to be the nature of lawes, that whereas that whyche is lesse is forbidden, therein the same whiche is greater, appeareth to bee muche more forbidden. For by that that the lesse things be declared to be vnlawfull, it is immediately out of doubt knowen by the common sense of men, that the greater matters be yet more vnlawfull. He that acknowledgeth it to bee sinne if a man do commit simple whoredome, can not doubte but that it is more sinne, if a man doe commite adulterie. He that doubteth not, but that the adulterie committed wyth the consente of a woman is sinne, will acknowlege it to be yet more sinne, if a man do rauish or by violence oppresse an honest woman. Likewyse it is easie to iudge of robberie and theft: and to vnderstande that it is muche lesse lawfull to vse violence towarde our neyghboure, if to take away by stelth, be forbidde by Gods lawe.

Hovv many vvayes a man is partaker of theftes.

Forasmuch as he is not giltlesse in the sight of God, which by any meanes maketh hymselfe partaker of sinne, though he committe not the very sinnes, it were not amisse to see by the way, howe many wayes a man may bee partaker of sinne. It is not possible to recken all wayes and meanes of it: but we will reherse only the common wayes whiche other men haue gathered.

Accessory.

1 The first way is of accessorie.

For

he maye cunningly and handsomly place in his writings, but is commẽded rather for his industrie and diligence. There be many suche theftes which may be done without faulte, yea and rather with commendation.

Therefore it followeth, that all kindes of theftes are not to be condemned. You shall finde some nations, whiche so well do like the industrie of stealing, that they will diligently instructe their children in the exercise of stealing, and that all kind of theft may be done among them lawfully. Suche an industrie in stealing, in whiche they doe glory themselues in, no good man can well allowe and like. For they doe sinne against the precepte of God, against iustice, against right and equitie, and brotherly charitie: and doe nourish and encrease in the study and exercise of stealing: and the malice of the hearte, whereby we do delite in stealing, and esteme stolne water to be swéete and pleasaunte, according vnto the Prouerbe. For these causes we must not be hastie to allowe the industrie of stealing, no not there where it séemeth to be least wickednesse. Our flesshe is corrupte and ouerthwart. And those things that be spoken for the comfort of weake cõsciences, our flesh draweth them to ỹ couering & féeding of hir wickednes. Wherfore ỹ wise mã will diligently beware, that he do not carelesly flatter his owne flesshe, in those poyntes whyche may by some coloure bée excused. For there is in nothing more daunger, nor men doe in nothing sooner sinne, thã in those points whereof the wickednesse of olde Adam can pretende some manner of excuse.

Prouer. 21.

Wherefore the Lorde dyd not rather forbidde violence, robbery, and depredation, than Theft.

SOme man will aske me: séeyng that it is more grieuous to robbe and spoyle by vniust violence, than to take things away by theft, why it is not rather commaunded, that we robbe not, nor spoyle not, than that we steale not? For he whiche stealeth, is carefull to doe that secretely whiche he doth, and to deceyue mens knowledge, forbearing so long from theft, whyles he is let by the care and loking vnto of the owner, from whome he goeth about to get any thing by stealth. And so he that is a wareful keper of his geare, may saue, that nothing be gotten frõ him by stealthe. But extortion and pilling and polling are of that sort, that they are not without the knowledge of him whose goodes be taken away, whether thou wilte or not, thou art robbed by vniust violence, nor thou canst not let it, though thou kéepe thy geare neuer so diligently. Wherefore for both causes, both for that that robbing and depraying is the greater sinne, and also byeause it can be lesse resisted, it séemeth, it ought to haue bin forbidden rather that we should not robbe, than that we should not steale.

To thys question maye be answered, that the sinne of theste is more generally than of violence, robbing and rifling. For to robbe violently and ryfle, is not suche a matter as may be done by all persons, but by the strong and mighty onely. They that be weaker or lyke of strength, can not practise robbery, neyther against their strongers, nor theyr equals. But stealing (forasmuche as it requireth not strength, but craft and deceit) may be as well done by the weaker, yea, and by all sorts of men, as by the stronger sort. Therefore it is better, that that whiche is more generall, and maye bée done of all men, should be forbydden by this lawe, than that whych is speciall, and such as can not be done by all men, but by the stronger alone.

And this reason may be giuen a'so, that the swoorde of the superioure and ordinarie power is to be feared in robberies and prayes, rather than in theste. For robbery, forasmuch as it hath an open violence, and is done manifestly, it is sooner subiect vnto the iudgemente of men, than theste: which beyng secretely done, doth rather and longer shape the knowledge of the iudge. Wherefore it was more necessary that theft shoulde bée forbidden by the lawe, and feare of God (which séeth all thyngs hidden) than robbery, whiche is subiect vnto the sight and knowledge of men.

Thirdly, robbery is subiect vnto the resistance of man. For hée that dothe or meaneth to vse violence towards his neighboure, must néedes looke for violence agayne. He that taketh away any thing by stealth, is not in that case. Wherefore by thys reason also it was more conuenient that theste shoulde be forbidden by Gods lawe, than robberie.

Fourthly, whereas it is alleaged, that theft is of lesse sinne than robbery and depredation, that is the very cause why that theft was rather to be forbidden namely, than robbery. For that séemeth to be the nature of lawes, that whereas that whyche is lesse is forbidden, therein the same whiche is greater, appeareth to bée muche more forbidden. For by that that the lesse things be declared to be vnlawfull, it is immediately out of doubt knowen by the common sense of men, that the greater matters be yet more vnlawfull. He that acknowledgeth it to bée sinne if a man do commit simple whoredome, can not doubte but that it is more sinne, if a man doe commite adulterie. He that doubteth not, but that the adulterie committed wyth the consente of a woman is sinne, wyll acknowlege it to be yet more sinne, if a man do rauish or by violence oppresse an honest woman. Likewyse it is easie to iudge of robberie and theft: and to vnderstande that it is muche lesse lawfull to vse violence towarde our neyghboure, if to take away by stelth, be forbidde by Gods lawe.

Howy many vvayes a man is partaker of theftes.

FOrasmuch as he is not giltlesse in the sight of God, which by any meanes maketh hymselfe partaker of sinne, though he committe not the very sinnes, it were not amisse to sée by the way, howe many wayes a man may bée partaker of sinne. It is not possible to recken all wayes and meanes of it: but we will reherse only the common wayes whiche other men haue gathered.

1 The first way is of accessorie. Accessory.

For

For who soeuer of knowledge is by any meanes accessory to theues, or in guiding, or in watching, or in making their instrumentes that they shoulde occupie, is plainely giltie of the theft, no lesse than they whych do committe the theft.

Bidding or commanding.

2 The seconde way is by bidding or commandement. He that biddeth one to steale, is not companion of his theft, but also author of it, worse thã the theefe himselfe: specially if hee, whome he did bid steale, woulde not haue stolen, if he hadde not him bidden. A man shall finde many parents and husbandes, whyche doe teache their children and wiues to steale.

Councell.

3 The thirde way is of counsell. He that is the counseller and enticer, would do the same which he counseleth himselfe, if he were able. Therefore he is also worse than the thiefe, whõ he enduceth by his enticemente to steale. He that counseleth and enticeth to steale, eyther teacheth the meanes and wayes to steale, eyther sheweth the present occasion.

Consent.

4 The fourth way is of consent. Whosoeuer consenteth to an euill turne, is partaker of the euill turne. For the malice of the offender and the consenter, is all one. There is three kindes of consent. The firste is before the fact, the second in the fact, the third after the fact. He that consenteth before the facte to haue it done, is not simplye partaker of the fault, but is the author also, if by his consente he dyd enduce hym to the theft. He that consenteth in the fact, that is, he which liketh that the theft is in the doyng, is companion of the theft. He that consenteth after the fact, woulde not but that it were done in alowing it: and so maketh himselfe giltie of the theft, although he knew nothing in the worlde of it before it was done, or whilest it was in doyng.

5 The fift way is, when the theefte is commended and the theeues dallied withall, eyther in laughing at the matter, or in commending his witte, or in flattering hym. He that doth so, is not onely partaker of the theefte done, but an author to the same for to be committed agayne.

6 The sixte is of hiding, and keeping, when those thinges whiche bee stolen from others, are concealed and kepte. Of thys kynde of partaking it is commonly sayde: The receyuer or conueyer is worse than the theefe. They that doe this, be not onely themselues partakers of the thefts, but ayders also.

7 The seuenth is by partaking, when eyther some portion of the stolen geare or altogyther is receyued, if it be done of knowledge, whether it be in eating, or anye other wayes wsing the matter, vnlesse the case of extreame necessitie do excuse it. Tobias when his wife broughte him home a kidde, as sone as hee heard him bleate, he said, Loke least perhappes he be stolen: restore hym home to hys owners, for it is not lawfull for vs to eate any thing that is stolen. And there be four kyndes of this partaking. The first is, if you receyue part of the stolen geare, offered by the thiefe himselfe. The seconde, if you buy stolen ware, knowing that it was stolen. The thirde is, if you doe perforce take it out of the handes of the thiefe, and not to restore it to the owner, but to keepe it to it to thy selfe. The fourth is, if the iudge take a rewarde, and dispatche the thiefe. With this the Lord dothe vpbraid the iudges and Magistrates of his people, saying: If thou sawest a thiefe, thou didst runne with hym, and didst take part with adulterers. And in Esay: Thy Princes be theues fellowes, all loue rewards, they follow bribes, they iudge not the fatherlesse, and the widdowes cause commeth not in vnto them.

8 The eight way is of sufferance, in case thou let it not if thou canst, eyther wyth crying, eyther otherwyse resisting.

9 The nynth is, if thou tell not, when thou knowest where stollen geare is, or if thou tel not when ther is any thing founde, if thou knowe whose it is. By these and other like ways (wherof this world is ful) men do incurre the gilt and accessarye of theefte, and sinne against the lawe of God. But and if the circumstances of things were well tryed, it should be oftetimes found, that they which doe adiudge theues to the galowes, are worse themselues than the theues. Wherof began the vulgar saying: The greate theefe hangeth vp the little petie theefe.

Of the punishment and correction of theft.

BEsides that paines of eternall damnation, whervnto theues with other wicked persons (excluded out of the kingdom of God) are subiect, vnlesse they do amende, ther be ordeined certain temporall corrections and reformations, according vnto the circumstaunce of the faulte. We reade this: If any man steale an Oxe or a Sheepe, and kill it, or sell it, hee shall restore fyue Oxen for one Oxe, and foure Sheepe, for one Sheepe. If a Thiefe be founde breakyng vppe a house, or vnder digging it, and take a blowe and dye of it, the stryker shall not bee giltie of hys bloud: but if he doe so when the Sunne is vppe, and committe murther, hee shall dye also hymselfe. You see that there is iudgemente gyuen of the killyng of the Thiefe, according to the difference of daye and nyghte. If the Thiefe haue not wherewithall to restore for the theefte, hee shall bee solde: if that whyche hee stole be founde wyth hym alyue, whether it bee Oxe, Asse, or Sheepe, hee shall restore double. But afterwardes (whether it were ordeyned by anye lawe, or receyued by long custome) the penaltie of restitution was seauen folde, As we reade in the booke of Prouerbes, hee shall restore seauen tymes as muche, if he be take with all, and shall delyuer all the substance of hys house, and dispatche hymselfe. Zacheus sayde: If I haue deceyued anye man, I restore foure tymes as much. This was the correction of theft, when it was committed among the Israelites. There was also amongst the Ethnikes required eyther double, or quadruple. See the fourth booke of the Institutes Title. 1. When the matter was criminall, the penaltie was beating or outlawing: not killing or dismembring. But in case a mã had by armed power, spoyled any person, or in their house, or iourneying, or on the sea, or had robbed any thyng

Exod. 22.

Prouerb. 6.

Iustinian.

else

Of the hāging of theeues.

else openly, in déede he was hanged.

But nowe when a théefe is taken for a small matter, though it be secretely done, he is iudged to the gallowes: which thing many good folks supposeth doth not agrée with Gods lawe, nor with ciuill lawe. Their reason that hang them, is for that that the common peax and vncorrigible wickednesse of euill men, dothe require this sharpnesse. But it maye séeme meruaile, why adulterers bée not also for the same causes punished with deathe, as Gods lawe and the ciuile law also doth ordeyne it: séeyng the sinne of adultery is greater, and lesse hope to be had of amēdment of adulterers, than of theeues.

Chrysostome

Chrysostome was of thys iudgement, that a mans life ought not to be taken away, whereas the harme might be restored.

This by the way of penalties and amendment of theft, according vnto the ciuill lawes, whiche haue more indifferency, than the custome of our time: whereby the théeues be clapte to the galowes, and the thiefe stolen good is wonte to turne to the commoditie of the Prince or of the Sheriffe of the shire, and so the restitution whereof oure fathers had greate consideration, is stroken quite out of the booke. So not caring for equitie, the sauor of game is become swéete of euery thing. Firste the goodes taken away by stealthe, though the thiefe be hanged, are not restored to the owner: but by violence (couered with the title of Iustice) it falleth to the power of the Prince. Surely a gay iustice, whereby the euill is not taken away and mended, but is doubled. The theft is not amended, vnlesse that which is taken away by theft, be restored to the owner or his heyres, if it may be done. The faulte must be corrected, & satisfied, both before God and before men. Before God, by amēdment of life and faith: before men, by restitution of the good stolen. But by thys way the theft is neyther satisfyed before God, nor before men.

Of the Ecclesiasticall correction of theft, ther is a place in the Apostle where it is redde in this wise, Hée that stole, lette him nowe steale no more, but lette him rather laboure, worcking with his handes, that hée may haue wherof to bestowe vppon hym that is in necessitie. This correction hath thrée partes. For it conteyneth the easing from the hurtfull malice and the order of iust liuelode, and the profite in doyng good. Hée that stealeth no more, ceaseth from the hurtfull malice and wickednesse. He that laboreth worcking with hys handes that which is good and honest, doth sustaine himselfe with iust liuelode. He that gyueth to him whiche is in necessitie, is made of a man, whiche was not onely vnprofitable but also harmefull, to become good and profitable, not only to hymselfe, but also to others, muche altered from that man that he was, when he liued by theft.

Yet we must not thinke this correction of theft to be so perfect, that there is required of a théefe nothing else besides, but that he leaue stealing, and begin to liue vpon his owne labour, and doe good to the poore. For it is required in any wise, that he do restore that to the owner whiche hée toke from hym by theft. This part of full of full correction, the ecclesiasticall amendment doth not take away, whiche entendeth not this, that Christian men shoulde be more vniust than the Israelites and Gentiles, but that it shoulde so much surmount the iustice of them, that they should rather giue of their owne to the poore, than retayne that whiche is other mens, from them. And the heart of hym that truely amendeth is such, that he can not suffer to bee in hys handes that whiche he knoweth to be another mans, and not hys owne. So Zacheus béeyng truely turned to the Lorde, sayde by and by: Lorde I gyue halfe my goodes to the poore, and in case I haue deceyued anye man, I restore vnto him four tymes as much. Wherefore the correction of theft, whiche the Apostle prescribeth, dothe so farre forth not exclude the restitution of the thing stolen, that it doth rather require it, in that that it dothe require that whyche is more, which is the good doyng to the poore, which the ciuill lawes doe not require: whiche also is of suche nature, that whosoeuer is earnestly enclined vnto it, can not reteyne another mans goodes. For howe shoulde he reteine geare stolen, whiche is so farre forthe amended, that he dothe not only ceasse from theft, and maintayneth hymselfe with his owne labour, but also dothe parte with the poore of such things as he getteth by the laboure of his handes. Whereof it is manifest, that it is no true amendment, if a man do reteyne suche things as be gotten or pilled away by theft, robberie, vsuries, and other false dealings. Neyther is it to bée beleeued, that his sinne is forgiuen.

Epist. ad Macedonium. 54.

It is one of the worst kinds of men (sayth Augustine) whiche desireth to haue the penaltie of the wickednesse releassed, and yet will possesse that whereby the wickednesse was committed, whome therefore that medicine of repentance doth neuer a whit help. For if the good of another man be not restored (if it may be restored) the penance is not done, but fained: but if the matter be truely handled, the sin is not remitted, vnlesse that which was taken away, be restored. This saith Augustine.

The stolen good muste be restored to the owner.

And we must endeuoure, that the geare taken away by theft, be restored, not into the possession of anye other person, eyther holy, or poore, or to any other Church, or Minister of the Churche, but vnto the very owner from whose possession it was taken. It is not ynough for true amendment, not to kéepe another mās good, but he must restore it to the owner. Wherefore they be very seducers of mens consciences and deceyuers, which do promise forgiuenesse of sinne, if there be giuen somewhat to them out of the robberies, thefts, and vsuries, to sing Masse (as they call it) and somewhat to the poore: séeyng that God will neyther haue any stolen thing for a sacrifice, neyther any almes bestowed of another mans goodes.

This deceit and abuse hath raigned in Auricular confessions, from whence is sprong a great part of the goodes and lands of the Churche. So that if there shoulde be a restitution made, and euery mā haue his owne, good Lorde howe greate a heape of goodes and landes shoulde be taken from the Church? Surely it is a great greate wickednesse to take away a nother mans goods in pretence of holynesse: but that is moste grieuous of all, that they haue deceyued mens consciences, with the hope of false satisfaction and forgiuenesse, or rather tormented them with matter that can not be shifted off, and continuall remorse, and haue driuen them to desperation. For very naturall equitie it selfe teacheth, that these stolē goods is to be tourned to no other vse, but to the owner of it. The meanyng whereof can not be ouercome, nō not by the pardōs sealed with leade from Rome.

An example of a certayne yong man at Augsburge.

At the towne of Augusta, there came nowe and then vnto me at a certayne tyme a yong man, aboute foure and twenty yeres of age, more or lesse, seking to lighten his conscience, which was in a very desperate case. The occasion of the griefe whiche he was troubled withall, was that when he was but a boy, he conueyed a greate masse of syluer from his maister, and he hadde kept it yet whole togyther. In confession vnder the Papery, he was bid to giue parte of it to the Masse sayers, and part to the poze. Which he had not done, bycause it holp nothing to the true and stedfast ease of his troubled conscience. He had not restored it vnto hys maister, for shame.

When I vnderstoode the cause of his troubled conscience, I did pricke forthe the yong man to restore vnto hys maister that whiche he had conueyed from hym, vnlesse he wolde perishe. I shewed him the way how hee myghte conueniently doe it. He followed my aduice, he restored it openly, whereat they wept, both hee & his maister, whiche knew nothyng of the theft, and promised the yong man vpō his amendmente all ỹ pleasure he could do him. After this restitution, the troubled yong mā (which had bin kept in chains a great while for madde, and hadde sought to kyll himselfe) came not only againe into fauoure most happily with his maister, but comming also to himselfe, began to liue honestly. This historie which I am most assured to be true, I haue brought forth, to declare by some example, how great a torment of consciences the gayne gatherers and chapmen of the Synagoge of Rome, the companions of thieues, robbers and vsurers haue ordeined: and howe auaileable the studie of equitie and iustice might be to appease the consciences of them which do amend, if they bee taught to make true restitution of other mennes goodes.

But some man will say. What and if the restitution of a thing stolen can eyther in no wise be done, or not safely, or else not honestly? It is some answered. There is no man so wicked, neyther in heauen nor in earth, that wyll by force extort, that which can not be. It happeneth oftentimes that a thing stolen, is lost, by theft, by violence, by warre, by fyre, or else is wasted so that it can not be restored. In suche a case, the next way is, that some other thing of lyke valewe be restored, to recompence the hurte done. If that can not be, the thirde is, that the thiefe confesse hys faulte to the owner of that whyche was stolen, and desire forgiuenesse: or if there be anye hope that he maye restore it, to promise to make hym amendes, and to performe it to his power. For who wyll not graunte that it is righte, that a thiefe doe that, which he that hathe borowed any thing, and is not able to pay it, ought to do?

If for certayne causes it be not safe for feare of some action of theft, nor yet it be honest for feare of losing a mans good name and estimation, there may be wayes found, that concealing the theefes name, there may be satisfaction made to hym, whome the satisfaction toucheth. But if none of these wayes may be, as if the owner of the thing stolen be not knowen, or is passed out of this life by death, and hathe lefte no heyre, if the thing stolen yet remayneth, lette it not be kept, but let it be bestowed to the vse of the poze. If there be nothing of it left, let the partie with teares aske God mercy, and endeuour to practise to do good to the poze, according vnto the doctrine of the Apostle. This amendmente the Lorde can not chose but pardon, if his mercy be not letted with the incredulitie of a wicked heart. For the grace of the mercy of God, can not be perceyued without faith.

VVhat is vvitnesse and vvhat the vse of it is.

The Nynth Precepte.

Beare not false witnesse against thy neighbour. Like as by the precept goyng before, we are forbidden to alienate the goodes of our neyghbour by theft or stealthe, and so hynder him in his necessities: so by thys ninth precept it is prouided, that we hurt not oure neyghbours life, fame or goodes, with a false tong. Say not (sayth he) against thy neighbour any false witnesse. Testimony or witnesse is whatsoeuer is constantly reported and auouched of any thing, to enforce menne to beleue it, whether it be good or euill. The vse of witnessing is greate, not onely in matters of the worlde, but in godlye matters also: bycause there bee an innumerable sorte of things whiche wee be ignorante of, to the knowledge of whiche we can not atteyne, but must be allowed for true by faythe. To thys purpose serueth witnesse. Thynges that may be comprehended with sure and euidente knowledge, neede no testimonie or witnesse, for they serue onely for beliefe. Those things whiche we do see with our eyes, heare with our eares, comprehend by reason, are certaynely knowen vnto vs what they be: so that we neede no mans witnesse, but we our selues are able to beare witnesse to other men, to make them beleeue it. Therefore seeyng of worldye matters we haue very small and thinne knowledge, and of godlye none at all: for bycause that a passing number of worldly matters doe come to oure eyes, oure eares, and vnderstandyng, but all godlye and spirituall matters doe flee from them: it commeth to passe, that we haue more vse of faythe than of knowledge: yea and that faith and beliefe is so necessary, that without it we can neyther haue to doe with God, neyther with men. For he that commeth to GOD (sayeth the Apostle) must beleeue. The fleshely manne dothe not perceyue those thynges that bee of God. The whole trade of the lyfe of man, fame principally in faith and beliefe. Faith conserueth wedlocke, the parentes and the children: it stayeth the Magistrate and Citizens, euery man in his duetie, and is (to be short) the very synowe of al cõiunctions, affaires, and trades, wherevppon mans lyfe standeth. By this reason it seemeth that nothing is so necessary, as that witnesse be true, which we must beleeue in suche matters as we do neyther of our own knowlege certainely know, and yet may not be neglected. Therefore it is most rightely handled, that by this ninth precepte, wherein false testimonie is forbydden, truth is by Gods authoritie cõmaunded. But let vs see what matters are to be obserued touching this case.

VVe haue more vse of faythe than of knowledge.

I. Howe manye kindes of witnesse there be.

CIcero dothe saye in a certayne place, that there be generallye two kindes of witnesse: that is to say, of God, and of man. Of God, as prophesies, diuination, birdings, aunsweres of the Priests, of sorcerers, and southsayers, all the olde superstitious Gentiles, thought it good to giue credite and beliefe vnto such testimonies, as though they hadde certainely come from God. Of man, as writings, couenauntes, promises, othes, and interrogatories.

Now for this matter we haue in hande, wee wyll not talke of the first, but of the testimonies of man: and we do make two sortes of them. One of them whiche bee done in courte and place of iudgemente, the other of them that bee done out of court.

Witnesse that is broughte into the face of a courte, is not done but by men sworne, to the intent they shoulde haue the more waight, whether a man doe giue witnesse for hys neyghboure, or for himselfe. And for asmuche as it is presumed of them that shall beare witnesse, that they haue the feare of God, an othe is ministred vnto them vnder the name of God, or else to be taken vppon the holy Gospels, that they should plainlye and trewly declare those thynges which they do know to be true: and so menne do beleeue in bearing wytnesse, not so much for their owne vprightnesse and estimation, as for the Maiestie of Goddes name, and that not onely when they beare witnesse vpon an othe, of other things in other mens matters, but also of themselues, and in their owne causes. As we may see wher we do reade thus: If anye betake to his neyghbour an Asse, an Oxe, a Shéepe, or any other cattell to kéepe, and if it be dead or weakened, or caughte by enimies, and no man sawe thys, there shall be an othe made openly that he dyd not stretche out hys hande vnto hys neyghbours good: and the Lorde shall receyue hys othe, and he shall not be compelled to restore it. And thys wayes an othe betwyxte menne, is the ende of all controuersies.

We do testifie also, out of courte, though without othe, both of God and of our selues, and of other mens matters, as well of men also, when we doe in earnest reporte thinges of them: we doe so affirme them, as if they were most certayne knowen of vs: so that we thinke it not well done, if folkes beléeue not oure witnesse. To reporte of Christ, is to witnesse of Christ. You shal be witnesse of me, sayeth Christ to his Apostles. And Paule: We are found also false witnesses of God, in that wée haue spoken witnesse against God, that he raysed Christe agayne: whome hée raysed not, if the dead rise not agayne. The scriptures doe testifye of Christe. And the workes doe witnesse of Christ, as the holy spirite also. Yea and euery man is condemned or saued by the witnesse of hys owne conscience. And it is commonly sayd: A mans cõscience is a thousand witnesses. Wherefore it appeareth, that witnesse is not only called that, whiche is with othe made in open court: but any reporte also that is pronounced with purpose of affirmation, to make men beléeue of any matter out of the open court.

Tvvo kindes of mens testimonies.

II. That vve be not forbidden to beare witnesse.

FOrasmuch as he doth not saye: Beare not witnesse: but Beare not false witnesse, he doth sufficiently declare, that it is not vnlawfull to beare witnesse among the people of God: that is, to affirme and testifie that which we haue séene, heard, or any wise certaynely knowen, so that we may also saye: That whyche we knowe, we doe speake: and that whiche we haue séene, we doe witnesse. In déede we be men, and it is written: Euery man is a liar, and, Vanitie is euery man liuing: and it séemeth not méete for liars and vayne men, to beare witnes: and in case they do, that they be not worthy to be credited, but forasmuch as the companye of mans life is suche, whereby wée are ioyned togither in this life, that we can not misse the vse of this witnessing, teaching, and affirming: yet verye necessitie cõpelleth vs, though we be mẽ, yet neuertheless we must auouche and witnesse things that we haue séene and knowen, and must also of good reason not refuse others teaching, and auouching, and witnessing vnto vs, vnlesse we wil disorder all our felowshyp of life. Wherfore it séemed not to the prouidence of God, that it were conuenient for mans life, that al vse of teaching and testifying should be taken away: but that it were inough if no man teach and testifie falsly.

Aduyse.

But here we must vse double aduisemente: The one is, that no man doe witnesse more rashly and confidently than becommeth a man. For oure knowledge though it séeme to be certayne, yet it is of man, and may be subiect vnto errors. The other is, that no man do vnaduisedly receyue any mans doctrine and witnesse, but marke diligently whether it be agréeable with truth or no. We must set a difference betwixt the witnesse of God, and of men, of the firste wée must not doubt, but of these of man who soeuer be afrayde to be deceyued, may well doubt, vntill he be perswaded by sure arguments.

III. We be not forbidden to beare witnesse against our neighboure.

FOr asmuch as he doth not say: Beare not witnesse against thy neighbor, but, Beare not false witnesse against thy neyghbor: it is manifest inough, that we be not forbydden to witnesse againste our neyghbor, but that we do not witnesse falsly agaynst our neyghbor. Therefore we must see in this place, how it may be, that in witnessing againste oure neyghbor, we transgresse not that vniuersall and perpetuall law, whych biddeth vs to loue oure neyghbor as our selues: and that we doe not the same to others, which we would not haue done to vs. For where as euery man hadde rather, that any man shoulde witnesse on his side than against him, it appeareth that they do offend against the lawe of charitie & equitie, which in witnessing agaynst their neyghbor, doe that to others, that they woulde not haue done to themselues. Wherefore if charitie and equitie were broken in witnessing against a mans neyghbor, it seemeth that it shoulde not haue bin cõmanded, that we shoulde not falsely, but that in no wise we shoulde beare witnesse againste our neighbor, that whereas ỳ law saith: beare not false witnesse against thy neighbor, a mã might gather: Ergo it is not forbidden that I shall beare witnesse against my neighbor, so that I doe tel true and not false.

Hovv a man may vvitnesse against hys neighbor not breaking charitie.

Hovv vve must loue our neighbor.

So that we must knowe, that wee must so loue oure neighbor, that for his sake we offend neither agaynste God, nor against our self, nor against any other person whiche is also thy neyghbor. By lying, the truth is broken, God is offended, our own estate and our neighbors also is empaired: who taketh harme when in lying we do gratifie others. Wherefore it followeth, that either we must not witnesse at all of anye thing (whiche the necessitie of mens lyuing togyther can not suffer) or else it must be accompted to be no offence agaynste equitie and the law of charitie, if we do witnes truely against our neighbor: so that it be not done vnadui sedly, nor vpon affection of hatred, or of priuate gayne, but for loue and desire to aduouch the truth, and to succor the troubled and innocẽt person.

We must thinke vpon that also, that the law of equitie (whereby we be forbidden to do that to our neighbor, whiche we would not haue done to our selues) is not to be applyed vnto the corrupt affections of our flesh, but vnto the rule of iustice, equitie, and necessitie. Otherwise it shall not be lawfull for Magistrates to punish offenders, the ministers of Gods worde to reproue sinners, the good man of the house to correct them that doe amisse, Schalemaisters to chasten slouthfull Scholers, aged mẽ to blame yong menne, the brother to correct the brother: for our nature is so corrupte and naught, that it wyll hardly suffer to be corrected, chastned, reproued, and blamed. Wherefore we must determine, that nothing can bee more hurtfull to oure neighboure when he offendeth, than if no man do that to him, whiche hee would not haue done to himselfe, if he had the same disease: but shoulde all men serue and please his affections. Wherfore we do so farre forth not sinne against the rule of charitie and equitie, if we doe testifie truely and necessarily againste oure neighbor, that vnlesse we do it so, that wee do not offend against the very rule of charitie and equitie.

IIII. Hovve manye vvayes false witnesse is borne.

Falsly he beareth false witnesse, whe soeuer doth absolutely tell a lie and vntruth in any matter. So euery lye is false witnesse. And a lye is told either ignorantly, or wittingly. Ignorantly, when that whiche is tolde, is not knowen to be false, but is thought to be true. This chanceth sometimes also to godly men, when of a simple minde they do without gyle and cuill purpose, tell by ignorance, that which they suppose to bee true, when it is false. It chanceth also to the wicked, but otherwise. For they do sometimes in deede of errour tell that whiche they suppose to bee true, when it is false: but they tell it not of a clere mind and meaning, but of a malicious and craftie.

That is wittingly tolde, whyche both is false and knowen to be false: and this is done sundry ways. Sometime for feare of God. As did ỳ midwiues of Egypt. Sometime for loue and due faith. So Micol the wife of Dauid, by making a lie, deliuered hir husbande. Sometime by faythe. So did Rahab. Sometime for shame and feare. So Sara denyed that she laughed. Sometime a lye is made by the weakenesse of the flesh, and feare of daunger: whiche happened vnto the Apostle Peter, when he denyed Christ, saying: I know not the man: and to the Gabaonites, when they said they came from a far cõtrey, whereas they dwelt at hand.

Some lye to help their neighbor: so Ionathas the sonne of Saul deliuered and saued Dauid, saying that which he knew was not true. Some for their owne commoditie: such was the lye of Ananias and Saphyra. Some of glering and flattering, whyche wickednesse raigneth in Princes courts. Some of purpose to hurt. And herein raigneth backbyting, a mischiefe most common in oure times. You shall finde some that will wittingly tell that that is false, not of weakenesse of the flesh, nor for feare of daunger, nor to help or hurt anye man, nor to flatter or backbite anye man, but of a certayne lightenesse and vanitie of mind, whereunto they so much gine their tong daply, that at length they fal to a custome of lying, and lose all credite and beliefe of truth.

Act.5.

Pleasaunte lyes.

I can not tell whether we ought to iudge that they do also beare false witnesse, which do not in earnest, but with sporting & pleasant lyes, anger simple men, and make good fellowes to laugh: and do it so, that they do declare by their very lokes, that it is a pastime and a lie that they tel. Surely it can not be rightly called witnes, whiche is neither spoken of purpose to witnes, nor is taken for witnesse.

False vvitnesse in iudgement.

Againe he telleth false witnesse, which is sworne in iudgemẽt to witnes of his neighbor that whiche hee knoweth to be true, and sayeth that whiche he knoweth to be false. And this is done two wayes. First, when that is told which is playnely fained and false. Such was the witnes that was tolde by the forged witnesses against Naboth the Israelite, that is: that he had cursed God and the king: whyche was nothing true, but was all fayned. Agayne, when those thynges bee tolde whyche haue in deede some truth in wordes, but bee so altered, that they haue a newe sense. Such was that witnesse, whiche was broughte forthe againste Christ, that he had sayde: I can destroy the Temple of God, and after three dayes reedifie it. They did peruert Christes wordes, and wrested the also to an other meaning. They vsed also like malice, whiche dyd so wrest the wordes of Stephane, which he spake of the Lord Christ, againste the vnbeliefe and impenitencie of the Iewes, that they did witnesse, that he spake continually againste the holy place, and lawe of God. Hitherto we haue by the way, shewed how many wayes men vse to beare false witnesse.

1.Reg.21.

Matth.26.

Actes.6.

V. Of vvhat kynde of vvitnesse this lawe of God doth speake.

FOr almuch as there be sundrye kinde of false witnesse, we must nowe see what kynde it is whiche is forbidden by this lawe: that no false witnesse be tolde against our neighbour. It is not amisse if a man take it generally, that al false witnesse is forbidden. But if a man shall attribute any thing to the wordes whiche be redde in the Ebrewe terte, it seemeth to bee most conuenient, that we vnderstande it of those false witnesses whyche bee gyuen in iudgements, passing with an oth, for thus it is redde in the Ebrewe: Thou shalte not aunswere false witnesse against thy neyghboure. By the word of Answering, it is playnely enough declared in my iudgement, that thys kynde of false witnesse is chiefely forbidden, whyche is tolde by them in iudgement, whiche aunswere witnessing that whiche is false, not of their owne accorde, but demaunded, yea and sworne. That whiche they doe aunswere is, witnesse: but it can not now be sayde of euery witnesse, that it is an answere. For out of open courte and iudgement, the word is full of witnesse, whyche we doe pronounce not demaunded, but by oure owne accorde: but in iudgemets no man aunswereth to witnesse, but demaunded and sworne.

That he meaneth the testimony in open court.

Some do thinke, that this present precept is expounded by that whiche is redde in thys wise: Thou shalt not steale, nor lye, nor any man shall do anye thing falsely with his neyghboure. And in thys sense they suppose, that all kynde of lyes and falsehode is forbidden, by that whiche is sayde here: Beare not false witnesse againste thy neyghbour. Peraduenture they be moued of that, that straight after ỹ forbidding of theft, is added lyeing and deceyt. I will not rashly striue with their opinion. Yet I doe shewe simply without contention, what I thynke, bycause of the word of aunswering, whyche I iudge is not without some cause vsed in this present precept.

Nor it is not without cause, that the Lorde would by this reason forbidde this kynd of false witnesse by a speciall precepte. Amongst the rest of false witnesses, the same is most hurtfull, which is presented by men sworne in iudgemente, where the cause of the innocent man is in danger. For neyther the iudge nor the partie accused, can resist the sworne witnesse, vnlesse hys wickednesse be be manifest. If two witnesses agree in sayings, it is ordeined by law, that all causes shall staude or fall according vnto their witnesse. Wherefore there is none more readyer meane and instrument to do hurt, yea to destroy the most innocent person, than false witnesse, giuen by othe & order of law. Let the exãple be in Naboth the Israelite, and Susanna. Other false witnesses haue also their guiles and deceites: but they may with aduisement & loking vnto, be eschewed. For they haue no suche constrainte ioyned vnto them, whiche is tyed vnto the iudiciarie testimonies. Therfore euen as in the former precepts, murther, adulterie, and theft, are forbidden, as the greater anoyment, when there be yet many other lesse, whereby we take harme in our lyfe, honestie, and goods: so it seemeth that in this present precept, false witnesse is forbidden, where by title of iudgement and iustice, the whole estate, fame, and life of our neyghbour is brought into daunger: and yet by the meaning thereof, all lies and false witnesse of lesse hurte, are not excluded.

VI. What neede it vvas to commaunde, that no false witnesse shoulde be borne against a mans neyghbour.

SEeing that the lawe of nature (allowed by the common sense of men) doth bid vs, that we do not the same to others, whiche wee will not haue done to our selues, and that no man is ignorant therof, but thinketh it a wrong, if a man do witnesse euill and falsly of himselfe: it seemeth that lawe is superfluouse which forbiddeth that we shall beare no false witnesse. It is to be answered, that in case our nature had continued whole and sounde, then charitie and integritie in our harts had cõtinued withall, trueth in our mouth, and innocencie in our handes. But forasmuch as by sinne (as it were by the poyson of Satan) our original cleannesse is corrupted in vs, and the poyson of the Serpent hath infected our hartes, mouthes, and hands, euen at the beginnyng in Adam, the author of our kinde, that of nature wee be wicked, vniuste, lying & suttell: surely it is necessarie that the same original and naturall malice whereby we be giuen to vngodlinesse, vniustice, lying, crafte, and deceyte, be restrayned by the law of iustice. And this is the generall cause of ỹ whole Decalogus or lawe of the ten Commaundements.

The generall cause of the vvhole Decalogus.

But touching this precepte, wee must think specially, that forasmuch as the corruption of our nature began of lying, slaundering, flattering, and false witnesse, we do also specially all encline to lying, slandering, flattering, & false witnesse bearing, in so much, that holy Scripture saith generally, Euery man is a liar. I do not reade in any place: Euery man is a murderer, euery man is an adulterer, euery man is a thefe: but I do reade, Euery man is a lier. Therefore it is sayde of all and euery person of our nature, not onely that they do lie, but that they be lyers. No mã is iustly called a lyer for one or two lies. The inclination and continuall custome of lying, declareth the lyer. Therefore the speciall cause of this lawe, commaunding to speake no false witnesse, is for that that of a speciall inclination, we be commonly all geuen to lie. He which stode not in the truth, but fell to falshode, and became author of lying, procured by his lying, that all mankinde is diseuered from the spirite of truth, and subiect vnto lies, in so muche that it can not receyue the spirite of trueth: witnesse Christe himselfe.

The speciall cause, bicause euery man is a lyer.

Iohn.8.

Iohn.14.

And whereas there is allowed by the common opinion of all menne, That we shall not do that to others, whiche we wolde not haue done to our selues, it is not of so greate efficacie, that it taketh away the euill of our corrupt nature. For we be so affected, that knowyng the better, we do the worse. We be angry with them whiche deceyue or hurte vs with their lies: & yet we be so depraue, that we do the same to others. Wherefore it was necessarie, that a law sent from heauen, should ratifie the lawe of nature, & so the malice of our disposition should be cõdemned, as it were with the agreeable witnesse of two lawes.

VVee do the worse, knowyng the better.

Agaynst thy neyghbour.

¶ And it inforceth muche to the acknowledgyng and detestation of the greatnesse of our corruption, that he dothe not say: Beare not false witnesse against a straunger, a forayner and vnknowen person, or agaynst thy enimie: but, Against thy neyghbour. For vnlesse the malice of our nature were so greate, that we do not spare our neighbours, much lesse straungers and enimies, it had not bene necessary expressly to cõmaund, that we shoulde not witnesse falsly agaynst our neighbour. And who knoweth not howe muche greater wickednesse it is to spue out the poyson of our hurtfull tong, not onely agaynst straungers and persons vnknowen, but also agaynst our acquaintaunce and neighbours.

VII. Of the Euill of false vvitnesse.

FIrst we must see, what is the euill of lying generally: afterwardes we will see of flattery, slaunder, and false witnesse pronounced in order of Lawe. For amuche as the Diuell is a lyar and the Father of lyes, and God true author of truth: that euill of lying is greate ynough, in that it coupleth vs to the Diuell, as children to the Father: and diseuereth vs from God, by whom we be created in deede, not to lying, but vnto truth.

2 Secondly, as we may see in the Psalme: They haue no place in the mount of God, whiche speake lies in theyr harte, and frame guyle with theyr tongue. And who can worthily way how muche euill it is, to bee shut off from the company of God, and the dwellyng of his kingdome: and whiche is moste horrible, to be ioyned to Satan, and geuen in bondage into his power.

3 Thirdly, it dothe prophane and defile our tongue consecrated vnto the truth and prayse of God. So it commeth to passe, that the true thinges whiche we do speake, doe purchase some vncleannesse by that that they do proceede out of a lying mouthe. The holinesse and cleannesse of the mouth, standeth in truth: and the prophanation and defiling thereof, is by lying. And what cleare stuffe cã proceede ceede out of filthy lippes, but ỹ which is euen in the very speakyng of it defiled? Out of one selfe same mouth, sayth James, proceedeth blessing, and cursing. That the Apostle blameth. By like reason it is to be blamed also, that out of the same mouthe are spoken truth and lies. Who I beseke you, will loke for swæte wine out of the same vessell, from whence is dayly drawen out Wyneger? Yea euen cleane water is defiled, if it run out of a myrie spring.

4 Fourthly, by lying, faith and credite whiche wee may not lacke, is weakened, and sometimes quite taken away. He that crediteth a lie, is deceyued in crediting. Therein is an offence done vnto fayth, a thing most holy, whereof it behoued vs to haue had moste high consideration. Fayth after it hath bene deceyued and hurt with lying, it wareth to be warie. And when fayth is wary and harde, it mistrusteth not onely the lyar, but also oftentymes hym that telleth truth, and so decayeth vtterly by littell and littell. This euill is very pernicious in the cõmon life of men, whose necessitie requyreth that one do trust another in speakyng, promising, telling, expounding, and witnessing. Else all things be disordered and confounded.

5 Fiftly, thys euill is increased by circumstaunces of the matters and persons. Of persons, as of hym whiche lieth: nert of him, to whome the lie is tolde, thirdly, of whome the lie is made.

1 A Christian man that lieth, shameth the name of a Christian man. When he lieth which hath the countenaunce of an honest man, by countenaunce of honestie he doth easlier deceyue & seduce. Whē the good man of the house lieth, the whole family is corrupted by the strength of the exãple done in the house, which is wont to be to great purpose. When ỹ Magistrate lieth, the authoritie of the Magistrate & of iudgement is decayed. When the Minister of Gods worde lieth, a man will not beleeue, how muche the authoritie of Gods worde decayeth withall.

2 He that maketh a lye to God, doth his soule more harme, than if he made a lye to a manne. Ananias heard this sharpe sentence: Thou hast not lyed to men, but vnto God. He that lyeth to a Iudge and a Magistrate, offereth occasion to corrupt iudgement. He that lyeth to hys parentes, dothe sinne agaynst the honour and reuerence due vnto the Parentes. He that deceyueth a Iewe or a Turke with a lye, or elfe any other Ethnike, dothe gyue hym cause to blaspheme the name of Christe.

Act.5.

3 He that maketh a lye of God, as the false Prophets did, saying: Thus sayth the Lorde, when they brought forth theyr owne dreames, corrupteth the oracles of God, and seduceth the people exceedingly, the same the false teachers do also. He that lieth of Princes, Magistrates & Ministers of the worde, do muche hurte theyr authoritie, whiche is more to be euer whole and sounde. By suche circumstances of persons, the euill of lying is muche aggrauated. So you shall thinke also of the circũstances of the things whereof the lies are made.

But how great the euil of flattery is, I can not easily expresse. There be

Two kindes of flattery.

be two kindes of flattery, whereof we do now speake: when in a subtle harte by lying wordes and gesture, there is fayned an intent to please. One kinde of flattery there is, when a man seeketh his owne commoditie: an other, when the parties destruction is sought, that is decepued by the flatterie.

1 The first kind of flattery is vsed in euery place, specially in great mês courtes. Therevnto they be subiect, whiche haue great welth, honor, and authoritie. The hurt whiche cõmeth of it, is that the faultes of suche men be tikled and hidden, yea and sometimes praysed, and thereby it is that they continue vnto the ende in them, and be marde withal: theyr vertues, though they be but smal, are praysed euen to heauen, and theyr mindes be made to forget theyr baseneile and mortalitie, and are lifted vp to bée Goddes: specially when the flatteryng wordes be not onely pleasant, but also publike, and sounde aboute his eare not onely from one rocke, like the Syrenes, but stil from euery side: whereof there be many examples. Sée what became of Herode, to whome the flatteryng people in the false testimonie of all men, cried, saying: The wordes of a God and not of man: after whiche flattery the wretch was immediatly stroken of the Angell of God, & died eaten with wormes. What chaũced to Alexander the great, histories do witnesse. And now adayes, there be some that soundeth nothing els in the eares of kings and Christian Princes, but these swelling wordes: Most puissant, most noble, and most inuicte, &c. Of whose number was he, that wrote this in our time: The heauens thé Ioue doth hold, the lande Ø Charles is thine. Therefore what maruel is it, though Princes be so puft vp and so proude, that they séeme to be certen Goos and not mẽ: and that some of them treadeth vnder féete, not only all mennes lawes, but also Gods lawes? And of the same sorte be the Preachers and Bysshops, whiche for flattery reporteth the wicked to be blessed. Such were they of which Esay sayde: My people, they which say: Thou art blessed, do decepue thé, &c.

Act. 12.

2 The latter kinde of flattery is very Diuelish. I speake not of them, which do make men fond with their flattering, & make them to be laught at, but of theyr flattery whiche do slatter. So Saule did vnto Dauid, whé he sayde vnto him in malicious flattery: Lo here is my elder doughter Merob, I will giue hir thée to be thy wife, onely be valiant, and fight the warres of the Lorde. By this saying, he went about to bryng him into the daunger of his lyfe. For he sayde in his hart: Let the handes of the Philistians be vpon him. Such a matter alsi the Pharisées meante, when they sayde to Christ: Maister, we knowe that thou arte true, and teachest the way of God in truthe. The olde Serpent by flatteryng and fayned friendship, brought the firste mother of our kinde, with all hir after commers into vtter destruction. Cain speaking to his brother in gile, and fayning friendship, decepued and slewe him, he fearing nothing. The same did Ioab also when he slewe Abner, and Amasan. For he slew the bothe, abused with flattery. Suche a one was Iudas also, when he gaue

Fyg.

Sam. 1. Sa.

il of

The rete Mat.

The pro

Cai

Ioh. 1.

1. Pe

Christe

Christe a kisse. Wherefore it is not without cause, that the wise man sayth: Better be the stripes of him that loueth, than the deceytfull kisses of him that hateth. Counterfayting of friendship and deceptfull flattery is a most pestilente thing, whiche no man can sufficiently marke and beware of. Wherefore Dauid prayeth vnto the Lord, and sayth: Lord leade me in thy iustice bycause of my enimies, direct thy way before me: for in their mouth there is no rightuousnesse, their inward parte is wickednesse, theyr throte is an open Sepulcher, they do flatter with their tõgs. Destroy them Ø God, &c.

It were a fonde parte to go about to rehearse all the cuils of this flattery, beyng innumerable, and knowẽ well inough by dayly experience. It is meant by this prayer of the Prophete, that the mischiefe of this flattery is so suttell, craftie, so shifting, & slippery, that no man can escape the malice and wickednesse of it, vnlesse he be holpen by God.

Backbiting, is a lying euill, malicious, hypocritticall, crafty, and exceãding hurtfull. And what is to backebyte thy neyghbour, and of whence commeth the beginning of backbyting, sin ully what vice it is, and how it is enforced by circumstances, if any man lyke, let him loke vpon my Commentaries vpõ the. 15. Psalme: Hé that backbiteth not with his tongue. Now we must sée, how hurtfull and pernicious it is.

Backbyting is wont to gette to him for a felow and companion, Flattery: by the lykyng whereof, hé slydeth like poyson into his hart, vnto whome he purposeth to backbyte and discredite his neyghbour. And so it is not now a simple euil, but a double, armed one with an other to do hurte.

2 Secondly, it hath this propertie also, that it embraceth & destroyeth at the least, three persons, or els hurteth them that is to say, the backbyter, him that is backbitten, and him to whome the backbyting is made: passing flattery herein, that flatterie consisteth in two parties onely.

Backbyting marreth three persons.

3 Thirdly backbyting hath also this peculiar euill, that it hurteth a man absent: and that so couertly and craftily, that the partie is not ware of it, but vndone poore wretch before he doth know, how and wherfore he is vndone. These things be proper vnto backbyting, wherewith beyng armed and weaponed, it is able to do much harme. But what thé harmes of it be, no man is able well to consider: Yet these bée knowen and customable.

Backbyting hurteth him that is absent.

1 The first euil of it is, that eyther it hurteth charitie, or when it is otherwise empayred, it giueth it a greater wounde, and doth extinguish it altogither. It doth hurt it, when it disseuereth friendes asunder, & bringeth them into dissension and hatered. It woundeth it sorer, when it decayeth it, and (if it can) doth also vterly extinguish it, when it increaseth the fire betwirt them that be in dissension, enflaming it more and more. So backbyting doth extinguish charitie, rayseth hate and contention, disseuereth friendes and alies, and maketh them enimies: and letteth them that be at variance from agreyng againe, & inflaming their harts more & more. So backbiting doth extinguish charitie,

charitie, cayseth hate and cõtention, disseuereth frendes and alies, and maketh them enimies: and letteth them that be at variãce from agreeing agayne, and inflameth their hartes more and more. And in case that it cannot extinguish charitie altogither, for that it findeth not sufficient truste, yet it gayneth this, that the formed sincerite is troubled with some suspition (such as it is) vntill the truth springyng vp like the light of the Sunne, take away all cloudes of wicked suspition, and extinguish the worke of darknesse.

2 The other kind of backbiting is diuers. For it hurteth eyther the goods, or the name, or the life of him that is backbitten, or elle al these togither. It is most pernicious, when it cõueyeth his poyson into the eares of Princes: so that sometymes it bringeth to destruction wholy families, townechips, and nations. Loke vpon the history of Esser: how malitiously wicked Aman backbyted the nation of the Iewes, in the eares of Assuerus: and how great a destruction he entended by his backbyting. He flattered the kyng, as though he entended the destruction of the Iewes, not for any hatred of the nation, but of desire to profite his Realme. Doeg the Edomite, by his backbyting slewe the. 45. Priestes of the Lorde, and the citie of Nobe with al them that were in it, menne, women, and Children. Dauid dyd attribute all his outlawry, and all his troubles whiche he suffeyned by the persecution of Saul, vnto backbyters, saying: Lorde my kyng, why doest thou heare the wordes of the menne whiche say vnto thee: Dauid seeketh euill agaynst thee? Wherefore it is not without cause, that the Scripture dothe attribute the poyson of the Aspis vnto a backbytyng tongue, as moste strong to kill: and lykened it to a sharpe swoorde, an open Sepulcher, and the flame of fire, for the incredibile malice that the tongue hath to destroy. Therefore he that is gyuen to the vice of backbityng, is worthyly subiect vnto the common hatred of all menne: is eschued of all men as a moste pestilent plague: and at his commyng, euery mãs mouth is shut vp. Whiles he liueth, all the world curseth him, if he be in daunger or doe perishe, no manne is sory for it: and the remembraunce of them after they be dead, reigneth in cursing and banning.

And the euill of a false tongue is not onely great, but also diuers. The kindes of his malice, be mo than can be rehearsed at this present.

1 Firste there is in it excedyng muche hurte, in that he dothe abuse God himselfe with falsly swearyng by him, maketh him a defender of his wickednesse: to whome it belongeth to father the truth, not lies: the right, not the wrong: the innocent, and not the wicked and malicious.

2 Secõdly, in that also that he doth defile ỹ name of God with his lying.

3 Thirdly, that asmuch as in him lyeth, he doeth ouerthrowe the holy vse of the othe, moste necessary for the lyfe of man.

4 Fourthly, that he dothe not simply corrupt iudgements, but dothe so ouerthrowe them, that they do condemne the innocent, and iustifie the hurtfull. And who cã sufficiẽtly wa he hurteth the neyghbours good name and lyfe.

Hester. 3. Aman.

Doeg.

1. Sam. 22.

Dauid.

1. Sam. 24.

how much euill there is in abusing these foure sortes of moste holy matters, wherby God himselfe, the name of God, the vse of the othe, and the office of iudges is ouerthrowen: and thereby is brought to passe, that the cause of the innocent is indaungered by theyr authoritie, religion, reuerence, and obseruance.

5 Fiftly, another thyng is, that the false witnesse by his venomed and deadly tong, doth not onely entangle the cause of the innocent in the darknesse and wrongfull dealing thereof, but doth cast the innocent man also into extreme danger and losse of his goodes, name, and life. The examples be manifest: of Naboth the Israelite, of Susan, and of Stephan.

It is an horrible & a mischieuous case, that in some places there is so great crueltie and rigour of inquisition vsed, that you may se some innocent persons driuen by intollerable tormentes, to testifie against theselues: and so by theyr owne false testimony lose their own life, to shift them at the present from the ragyng paynes. Hereof be many examples in euery place. And in so doyng, the iudges suppose that they haue iuste matter to giue sentence, & to condẽne the partie, accordyng vnto the saying: Upon thy own mouth or tale, I do iudge thee: &, Of thy owne wordes thou shalte be iustified, and of thy owne wordes condemned. They beleeue hym not when he standeth to his innocency, and do beleeue, when he doth testifie agaynst it. They giue credite to the testimonie violently extorted by cruell paynes and tormentes, and they thinke not howe weake the flesshe is in such tormẽts: nor they be not put in feare with the innumerable examples of them, whiche beyng innocentes, were vndone by suche Inquisitions, and yelded theyr innocent bloud to be shed, witnessyng falsely of themselues. These thynges I meante to note by the way, of the euil of false witnesse: as for the other harmes that it doth, our dayly examples doe sufficiently set it forth.

VIII. Of the penaltie and reuenge of false vvitnesse.

THis is to be considered in twoo kindes. There is one reuenge merly of God, comprehended in no lawes: an other of man, appointed by Gods lawe. I call it of man, because it is executed by the ministerie of mã, through the office of the Magistrate. Otherwise, as the law appointing the penaltie whereby the false witnesse is punished, is of God: so is the penaltie it selfe also rightly attributed vnto the iudgement of God, although it be executed by mẽ, as the ministers of God.

The reuenge of God.

As concerning the reuenge which is altogither of God, we must think vpon the matter, howe speciall an euill this is, and therfore subiect vnto ỹ speciall hate of God. Wherof Salomõ is witnesse in this wise: There be sixe poyntes, which the Lorde hateth, & the seuenth his soule dothe detest. The hauty & proude lokes, the lying long, & the hande that sheddeth innocent bloud, the hart which deuiseth most wicked thoughtes, the fete that be swift to rune to euill, ỹ teller of lies, the false witnesse, & him which soweth discorde betwixte brethern.

Prouer. 6.

In dede God hateth all kinde of sin, but he dothe hate these of a speciall hate, for theyr speciall malice. And who doubteth, but that this kinde of sinne, whiche doth specially seeme euill in the eies of God, is not left vnpunished? It chanceth very seldō, that the false witnesse is punished by mans iudgement, albeit this euill doth dayly increase more and more. Wherefore the more that the man which is the minister of Gods iudgment, doth leaue to do it, so much the ofter it is credible, that God ẏ iudge himselfe doth punishe false witnesse. For they do not escape, whose false witnesse is not knowen to the iudge. It is commonly sayd: No euill is left vnpunished. Item in the thirde precept before: God will not holde him guiltlesse, that taketh his name in vayne. Salomon sayth: The lying witnesse shall perish. These allegations be true, but in consideration of the reuenge mere godly. Otherwise there be an innumerable sort of false witnesses, whiche be not punished by the iudgement of menne, wherefore they do thinke themselues happy, whereas they be therefore farre vnhappier than the other. For it is moste grieuous of all, to fall into the handes of God.

Prouer. 21.

The reuēge of the lyv. Deut. 19.

As touchyng the reuenge of the law, cōmaunded to the Magistrates, it is expressed in Deuteron. what punishyment is to be vsed agaynst false witnesses. For thus we reade there: If a false witnesse stande before a man, accusing him of wrong, they bothe whome the matter toucheth, shall stande before the Lorde in the sight of the Priests and Iudges that be in these dayes. And when vpon moste diligent searche, they haue found that the false witnesse hath reported a lye agaynst his brother, they shall giue vnto him, as he meante to do to his brother: and thou shalt ridde away the euill frō the middes of you, that others hearyng it, may bee afrayde, and dare in no wayes do the like. Thou shalt not haue mercy vpon him, but thou shalt requyre soule for soule, eye for eye, toth for toth, hande for hande, fote for fote. This lawe was diligently giuen. It hath a certayne fulnesse cōteyned in foure partes.

1 For first, it commaundeth that the matter shalbe most diligently loked vpon by the Priests and iudges, to the entent that nothyng be rashly determined without equitie and iustice.

2 Secondly, when he is playnely tried to bee a false witnesse, the penaltie of the like payne is ordeyned for it: moste right, whereby the false witnesse shal receyue and suffer that whiche he thought to do to his brother, whome he woulde haue by his witnesse brought into hazerd, vnlesse the lye had bene manifestly tryed.

3 Thirdly, there is added a specificatiō of the penalties, according vnto the law of the Talion. Thou shalt exact (sayth he) soule for soule, eye for eye, toth for toth, hande for hande, fote for fote. That is, if he that is accused, shoulde be put to death, according to the enormitie of the offence beyng conuicted of it, lette the false witnesse be put to death, if it be proued that he did falsly accuse him. If the penaltie of the party accused, rested in any mēber of his body, let ẏ false witnesse be punished in ẏ same.

4 Fourthly, there is sette also the cause and intent of this penaltie. And thou shalt (sayth he) take away the euill frō among you, that others hearing it, may be afrayd, and in no wise dare do the lyke. This is the chiefe cause why euill and mischieuous mē ought to bee punished in this lyfe, that is, that others restrayned with the feare of the penaltie, may abstayne from sinne, and the quietnesse and safetie of mans lyfe may be preserued. This is the equitie and necessitie of this lawe: the equitie in the Talion, the necessitie in the cause and scope, whereunto we muste direct our doynges.

But it seemeth to make agaynst this equitie of Talion, that which is written in Deuteronomie, of an ordinaunce of an other law, where it is written in this sorte: If a man marry a wife, & afterwardes do hate hir, and seeke occasions to leaue hyr, obiecting against hyr an euil name, and say: I toke this for my wife, and when I came to hyr, I found hyr not a mayde: Then hyr Father and hyr Mother shall take hyr, and bryng with them the tokens of hyr virginitie to the Elders of the towne, which be in the gate: & the Father shal say: I gaue my daughter for wife to this man, and bycause he hateth hyr, he giueth hyr a right euill name and reporte, so that he sayth: I founde not thy daughter a mayde: and loe, these be the tokens of the virginitie of my daughter. They shal spread the garment before the Elders of the Citie: and the Elders of the citie shall take hyr husbande, and beate him, and merce him also in a hundred Cicles of siluer, whiche he shall gyue to the Father of the wench, bicause he bruted abroade a moste naughty name vpon a mayde of Israell: and he shal take hyr to his wife, and may not leaue hyr all the dayes of his lyfe. But if it be true that he doth lay vnto hyr, and that there was not found virginitie in the wenche, they shall hurle hir out of hyr Fathers dores: and she shall die, bycause she did wickednesse in Israell, to commit fornicatiō in hyr Fathers house: and thou shalte take away the euill from the middes of you. This is in that place.

But accordyng to the lawe of the Talion, the man whiche accused his wife of suche false testimonie, should suffer the same punishment of stoning, whiche the wife shoulde haue bene made to suffer, if she had bene founde iustly accused. They shall ouerwhelme hir (saith he) with stones, and she shall die. Therefore suche a husbande should not be onely beaten and merced in a hundred sicles for false witnessyng, but be ouerwhelmed with stones, according vnto the law made agaynst false witnesse, before in the. 19. Chapter. We muste cōsider here that the lawe of Talion is a generall lawe: and this a speciall case, hauing some exception and mitigation.

Deut. 19.

Quest. 33. Augustine.

Of this Augustine in his Questions vpon Deuteronomie, made a note in this sorte. It appeareth well inough hereby, that the lawe woulde haue women subiecte vnto men, and the wiues almost seruaunts to theyr husbands, in that that a man giuing testimony agaynst his wife, wherefore she shoulde be stoned, if it were tried to be true, yet he shoulde not in likewise be stoned, if it appeared to be false, but only chastned & merced, and cõmaunded continually to sticke vnto hir, whome he would haue bene ridde of. But in al other cases he cõmaunded him to be killed, whiche by false witnesse hurted any man, if it were proued, & to sustayne the same punishment, whiche the other should haue done, if it were true. Thus much Augustine. But yet it followeth not hereof, that the law of Talion generally made against false witnesse, may be lawfully decayed and broken at the arbitrement of the iudges. For it is not lawful for thẽ to do as the lawmaker himself may do, mitigating his lawe in any case.

Lex Talionis

The Tenth precept.

Thou shalte not couet thy neyghbours house, Thou shalte not couet thy neyghbours wyfe, nor his man seruaunt, nor his woman seruãt, nor his oxe, nor his asse, nor any thing that is his.

This last precept is with greate reason added to thẽ that are gone before. It forbiddeth the coueting of other folkes goods. The numbre & varietie of the things which our desires do reache vnto, hath no meane: & the very desire of concupiscence lurking in our harte, is an euill vncompreheñsible, infinite, deepe, and vnsatiable. Wherefore we be to seeke, where to begin the declaration of this precept.

How this precept is ioyned vnto them before.

Hitherto the Lord hath forbidden in the seconde table, the mischieuous doynges of murther, adulterie, theefte and false witnesse: now at the laste cast he doth restraine the fountaine of al these, which is the cõcupiscence of all those things whiche be not ours owne, but belõging vnto the right of our neighbour. For out of it spryng murthers, adulteries, theftes, extortions, robberies, false witnesse, lies, backbityng, and such other lyke.

And he addeth vnto this lawe, a speciall reckenyng of those goods, whiche be cõmonly and euery where in vse: whiche is the dwelling house, the wyfe, the man seruaunt, and the woman seruaunt (for among that people, the man seruaunts, and the woman seruaunts, were theyr owne in proper right, as thei be yet in some places) the oxe and the asse. And by cause ther be yet many things which may be put in the same order, he addeth a summarie comprehension, saying: For all that which is thy neighbours: that is to say, nor nothing else of that whiche is thy neyghbours: by which words he doth so restraine our concupiscence, that it is not lawfull for him any manner wise to desire any thing of other mẽs good. But by the way lette vs see, what is to be considered in the matter of this forbidden concupiscence.

Speciall reckenyng.

I. What Concupiscence is.

What Concupiscence is, it is better knowen of it selfe, than that it nede any declaration. It is a desire and an affection of the minde, whiche the Greekes do rightly call ἐπιθυμίαν, by whiche we endeuour to draw vnto our vse by any means, that whiche doth like vs.

And the strength of this desire is so greate, that vnlesse we do obtayne the things whiche we doe desire, we do iudge our selfe to be here vtterly vnhappy.

The contrary of concupiscence, is the withdrawyng of the minde, whereby we do turne and flee with a certaine horrour and abhomination, from those things whiche doe mislyke vs: as the contrary of loue, is hate, and the contrary of ioye, is sorow.

The nature of it, is to extẽd it self vnto those things whiche we haue not. Else (as Paule sayth) How shall a man hope for that, whiche he hath already? so likewise is here to be sayd: Those things which a mã hath already, why shall he hope for them? Wherefore those things truly be in the reach of our concupiscẽce, which do by no right pertayne vnto vs, but be in the power of others.

The affects of concupiscence are of two sortes.

II. Howe many sortes of concupiscences there be.

Before the sinne of our firste parents, the concupiscence in our nature was simple, naturall, orderly, & necessary, like as other affections were, so that it was subiect vnto no malice: such as that whiche is in vs yet, as when we be hũgry, we desire meate: when we thirst, drinke: when we be a colde, we desire warmth: when we be too hote, we desire to be cooled: when we be in prysõn, we desire libertie: when wee be sicke, wee desire health &c. and this we do by the onely course of nature, without any matter of sinne. But after that our first parents had dronke of the poyson of the Serpent, this strength of concupiscence is depraued in our harts, & thereby it came that (passing the limites of nature and necessitie) it extendeth it selfe vnto those thinges, which it is not lawful to desire: for ỹ it is not lawful to take things away, which pertayne to others. Therfore the affections of concupiscence are of two sorts, naturall, and corrupt. The naturall be set in vs by God, and so much not vnlawfull, but that they be also necessary. Wherfore they do very vnaduisedly teach vs, which do refer the crying of infants whẽ they be hungry & desire meate, vnto the forbidden concupiscence, and do ascribe thẽ vnto original sinne. The corrupt affections of concupiscence be they, when the limites of necessitie are exceded, & men folow pleasures, curiositie, glory, ambition, & other vices: and that contrary vnto the lawe of charitie, and the puritie of holinesse.

Whereof the corruptiõ of our concupiscence is.

This corruption of our concupiscence is gotten of the old Serpẽt, not grafted in our flesh, of God. Wherefore we must beware, that we do not ascribe our whole cõcupiscence neyther to God, neyther to Satan. The strength of desiryng is giuen vs frõ God, the strength of euill desiryng from Satan: like as we do take it of God that we do liue, & that we liue euill we take it of Satan, the beginner of our malice. By this distinctiõ we do forsee, that we do not denie the worke of God in vs, for ỹ worke of Satan, nor attribute the worke of Satan vnto God.

We must marke in vs the worke of God, and the worke of Satan.

It is the parte of a wise man, to consider diligẽtly in himself ỹ worke of Satan, and the worke of God. I call it the worke of God, what soeuer is naturally giuen vs. We take of God not onely this outward body and ſoule whereby wée do lyue, and the minde whereby diſcourſing we do vnderſtand and iudge, but alſo the affections of the harte, ſuch as deſire is, the power to withſtãd, loue, hate, hope, feare, ioy, ſorow, anger, fauour, and mercy, &c. And theſe affections be to greate vſe: and there is great cauſe, why they be grafted in our nature. He made vs in ſuch ſort that we do not receyue thoſe things that be neceſſary, ſimply at his hãde, without any perſeuerance of neceſſitie going before, or affection of deſire, like ſtockes and ſtones, but moued by the perſeuerãce of our neceſſitie, we do deſire it euen as the dry grounde doth moſte gladly receyue & drinke vp the moiſture that cõmeth by the dewes powred from heauen.

The cauſe of the naturall affectiõs in vs.

The reaſon of this is, that firſte when we do couet things neceſſarie for vs, we muſte turne to our creatour, the fountayne of all goodneſſe, & the preſeruer of all things that bée made: and aſke of him ſuch things as we haue néede of. Secondly, that the giftes of God be ſo muche the more welcome vnto vs after we haue receyued them, the more that we deſired and beſought them: God grafted in vs alſo a ſenſe of reioyſing, which we féele in the vſe of his giftes: & an effect of ioy, whiche riſeth in our hartes as oft as we do obteyne our purpoſe. The cauſe of them is that reioyſing and pleaſantly vſing the giftes of God, we may be caried vp in our mindes to God the giuer of them, and giue thãkes vnto his goodneſſe with all our harte. He gaue vs alſo the ſtrength of hope. The vſe of it is, that we muſte truſte and tarry for thoſe things whiche we do deſire and aſke of God, whan they are not giuen by and by: and that we do trauayle with earneſt endeuouryng, deuiſing and working in thoſe things whiche are to be atchieued, by our owne induſtrie and labour. So theſe be trimly linked togither, To haue néede, To deſire, to aſke of God, to hope in fayth, to receyue with ioy, to vſe with liking, to giue thanks to the gyuer of all good thinges, hartely to commend his goodneſſe, and with affection of loue to be rauiſhed vnto him. All theſe thyngs would be vterly decayed, if you take away the deſire from them. Thus farforth deſire and concupiſcence is good, yea rather neceſſary, and put into our nature by God. Take away all deſire and concupiſcence, and the knotte of wedlocke ſhall decay: the deſire of iſſue, the multiplication of our kind, the commoditie of eatyng and drinking, the conſeruation of life, the ſtudie of wiſedome, iuſtice, humanitie, goodneſſe, mercy, the felowſhip and company of mans lyfe, and al things ſhalbe halfe dead in man. If it can not be, that we may lacke al things, and that nothing that we do, ſée or heare, ſhould like vs whiles we be in this fleſh, then it can not be that wée may deſire nothing. Therfore to deſire nothyng, pertayneth not to the liuyng, but to the dead.

To deſire nothing belongeth to the dead and not the liuing.

When we do cõſider theſe things, let vs way withall, howe greate the wickednes of Satan was, that he came at the beginnyng in our firſte parents with the poyſon of his malice, corrupted and depraued a thing ſo neceſſary, and ſtickyng faſte in the very bowelles of our lyfe.

III. What kinde of concupiſcence is forbidden.

The concupiſcence of the corrupt fleſh is forbidden.

For aſmuche as it is manifeſt inough, by thoſe thinges whiche be now noted, that concupiſcence of it ſelfe is not damnable, but good and neceſſarie: wée muſte conſequently ſée, what manner of concupiſcence is forbidden.

The concupiſcence of the ſpirite is commended in Scriptures: whereof Paule ſpeaketh, ſaying: The ſpirite deſireth againſt the fleſhe: that is, the inwarde and ſpirituall man, new and regenerate of God, deſireth things diuers from the ſame whiche the carnal man, according to the corruption of the fleſh deſireth. So Dauid deſired the knowledge of Gods commaũdements: the court or dwellyng place of the Lorde, & his health, and ſo the wiſedome of God crieth: Deſire my wordes. Item: Come to me all you that deſire me. Wée are bidden to couet the milke of fayth, doctrine & Chriſtian loue. This kind of concupiſcence is not forbidden.

Nor the deſire of the natural mã is not forbidden, whiche is naturally gyuen vs, whereof wée ſpake a littell before. Nor the lawmaker ſayth not ſimply: Deſire not, Nor he ſayth not onely thus: Deſire not houſe, Wyfe, ſeruaunt, handmayde, Oxe, Aſſe, or any other thyng: but, Deſire not the houſe of thy neyghbour, deſire not thy neyghbours wife, ſeruaunt, &c. Ergo, it is not vnlawfull to deſire Houſe, Wife, Seruaunt, Handmaydc, Oxe, Aſſe, or any ſuche lyke matter, that is neceſſarie for our occupying.

Then it remaineth, that the ſame concupiſcence is forbidden, which is neyther naturall neyther ſpirituall, but of the fleſh, which is corrupt and deprauate: whiche the Apoſtle toucheth, ſaying: The fleſhe deſireth againſt the ſpirite. The naturall concupiſcence is the miniſter of nature, the ſpirituall of the ſpirite of the regenerate, but the carnall concupiſcence ſeruyng ſinne, whiche lurketh hidde in our fleſh. That ſame is wicked and damnable, and forbidden by Goddes law. The naughtineſſe of it, firſt cõſiſteth in that, that of it ſelf it deſireth foule things, vniuſt, vnright ſhamefull, hurtfull, & vngodly: as be the ſeruice of Idols, whoredome, adultery, dronkenneſſe, wakefulneſſe, deceyte, pride, backbiting, murder, and ſuch like. In deſiring of theſe things it deſireth againſt the ſpirite. Secõdly, the wickedneſſe of it conſiſteth in this alſo, that it deſireth thoſe things which although they be not of themſelues euill, yet they haue occaſion otherwiſe whereby they be vnlawfull for vs to deſire them: as thoſe things which are forbidden by God, or the Magiſtrate. So hée ſinned which deſired, toke away, and hidde the Ingot of Golde, whiche he ſawe among the Jewels at Jericho. In this ſort is the Golde and Siluer alſo of the images, whereof the Lorde commaunded, ſaying: Deſire not the Gold and the Siluer of them. Item, thoſe things that belong not vnto vs. So of a niceneſſe, we do deſire the knowledge of things not belonging vnto vs, and honors alſo whiche be not méete for vs. Finally things that be other folkes, as houſe, lande, wife, ſeruaunt, mayde, Oxe, Aſſe, &c, as you doe ſée ſet forth in this law.

Ioſu. 7.

Deut. 7.

Besides those, things whiche pertayne vnto Gluttony, as the meates of the Egyptians were, whiche Israell desyred in wildernesse. Suche maner of desire of vnlawfull things, forbidden, pertaynyng not vnto vs, but to others, and of Gluttony, is forbidden by the Lord, as put in our flesh by Satan to our destructiō, and the trouble of the worlde.

IIII. Of the motions of naughty Concupiscence.

By reason of this euill of naughty Concupiscence, is with our corrupt and sinful flesh, and cleaueth so fast vnto it, that we can not, whiles we liue, with any engine or instrument expell it & keepe it off, it were expedient to knowe, by what meanes it is moued to auaūce it self, and poure out his poyson. It is not alwayes perceyued, for sometimes it is so hidden in our harte, that wee thinke there is no peece of it at al left within vs. But streyght wayes whē our senses are touched with the obiect of things that are wont to be desired of our flesh, this naughty desire is immediatly, sooner than a man is ware of, styrred vp, & desireth things not to be desired.

By what meanes the naughty concupiscence is moued.

The naturall senses.

The natural senses in vs, whereunto the obiects be most spedily cōueyed, are the inwarde and the outward. The outward commeth from the outward members, as the eyes, the eares, the palate, the nose, and the feeling. The inwarde is that liuely phātasie, wherby the same is perceiued within the mind, and with a certayne admiration is iudged worthie to be desired, whiche the outwarde sense hath receyued outwardly. At this iudgement of this sense, Concupiscence is ready at hande, the minister of sinne, and desireth the obiect, though better reason & iudgement of right minde agree nothing vnto it.

It happeneth also oftentimes, that by thought alone, without any outwarde obiect, there is rayled in our harte the desire of thinges absente. Yet suche thoughtes be bred almost all, of the obiectes goyng before. Wherefore they be most subiect vnto these euill desires, whiche do vnwarely trauaple in this worlde, and haue no care to keepe the instrumēts of their senses, that they receyue not the obiectes whiche are not to be desired, and so send them to the inward senses. It is knowen how muche a rash eye may do in thys case, whiche you may well call the windowe of death. Wherefore it is not without cause, that the Prophete prayeth, saying: Turne away mine eyes, that they see not vanitie.

Besides these motions which are styrred by outward obiectes, there is also a certayne euill within vs, of whence is bredde muche inticement to naughty Concupiscence. This euill is ỹ lothsomnesse of honest & lawfull things, and specially of our own, and suche as be in our owne power: which kinde of euill is not ouercome by any plenty and aboundance of things present, lawfull and of our owne, but wareth rather greater thereby, the more liberty and plenty there is of them. Out of this as it were the rote, are bredde all kind of Concupiscences. For the more that the things present, honest, lawfull, and of our owne be loathed, the more greedely thyngs absent, filthie, vnlawfull and of others, bee desired. Whosoeuer thinketh his owne wife fayre inough, dothe not quickly gase at, and desire other mēs wiues. But when he wareth lothsome and wery of his owne wyfe, then whensoeuer he spieth a fayrer, hee is in loue with hyr immediatly. He that is well contented with hys owne house, is not easily enticed to desire an other mans dwellyng. Therfore godly menne muste wonderfully beware, that they beginne not to loath their owne things, and wander at other mens, & so be caried away with the waues of naughty concupiscēce: in whiche they shall see no meane nor ende, nor shall be able to come to the porte of quiet. This I would by the way note of the motions of Concupiscence. Menne of perseuerance shall feele more in themselues, if they do diligētly marke this euill in their owne flesche.

V. Of the naughtinesse and malyce of inordinate Desire.

I know the malice of concupiscence is infinite and manifolde: for my minde is not busily to search al the kindes of it, but wee will onely note some of them, whiche come to our mynde, thinking vpon this matter at this present.

First, it is a great power of this euill, that it sticketh not in the outwarde partes of our bodies, so that it may be it selfe cutte off and cast away: but it is grafted most depely in vs, & occupieth the very place of our naturall affections, and is so ayded vnto them, that vnlesse it dye together with them, it can not be vtterly plucked vp and cast away: but sticketh as long in our hartes, as that power of concupiscence, which we haue naturally gyuen vs of God, indureth in our flesche: and doth not onely sticke there, but doth infect by the vncleannesse of it, this fountayne of our naturall affections and desires, that nothing can issue out of it that is sincere, whole, and cleane. Of thence it commeth, that all our whole life is subiect vnto naughty desires and cōcupiscences.

Concupiscēce is the minister of Sinne.

Secondly, the malice of this concupiscence is in this also auaunced, that it is so diligent, ready, and busie, a minister of sinne hidden in our flesche: and that not onely seruyng to one kynde, but to all alike. Of sinne there be many braunches as of an euill trée, as louing of our selues, louing of pleasure, louyng of whoredome, gluttony, loue of glory, loue of honour, loue of euill, ambition, and other such kinde of vices. Vpon all these, concupiscence wayteth as a seruaunt, in applying to eche of them the obiectes of their owne kynde. And if there be founde any thing in the goodes of our neyghbour, whiche the lose of our selues thinke méete for vs, Concupiscence commeth by and by, & desireth it without any regard of iustice and equitie. So when we be louers of our selues, we desire other mens houses, landes, seruants, handmaydens, oxen and suche lyke. Againe, if any obiects of delites and pleasures touch our outward senses, crafty Concupiscence is at hande, and desireth them for pleasures sake.

If any occasion be offered of whoredome & adulterie, the loue of whoredome hath Concupiscence for hyr seruaunt at hande, whereby it desireth the meanes to accomplishe it. The Gluttony of the people of Israelites, by the seruice of concupiscence, retourned to the pottes of the Egyptians. If there chaunce to come any spyce of vayneglozie, by and by Concupiscence seeketh the loue of vayneglozy to desire it. And the loue of honour and gouernance, vseth the ministery of cõcupiscence, as often as there is offred any hope to gouerne. If there be any occasion ministred to the neyghbours hurte, the loue of euil & wickednesse, hath concupiscence for a diligent minister, greedily gaping to ỹ worcking of euil. Also ambition hath concupiscence continually tied vnto it, attent vnto any occasion to get more.

Seing therefore that sinne hath gotten the vpper hande in our flesshe by these vices which we haue briefly reherced, who seeth not that the most puyssaunt kyngdome therof is groũded and dothe stande in the wickednesse of Concupiscence? that the Apostle dothe not in vayne admonish, saying: Let not sinne raygne in your body, to obey the concupiscences thereof. And if the strength of concupiscence be broken by resistement & not obeying, sinne is made weake and bereft of his kingdome: on the other side, if we doe obey it, we must nedes suffer the rule and gouernãce of sinne. Therefore in this respect also, the malice of concupiscence is great, and to be forsaken.

Rom. 6.

Concupiscence is in deth.

Thirdly, this euil is also in concupiscence, that it casteth a cloude ouer right iudgement, when it windeth in, and commendeth the same which it desireth by some allurement of beauty, profite, or pleasure. And it must nedes be a poynt of great continence, if it be possible for any one not to be caught with the inticemẽts of beauty, gay glozie, noz plesure, but to be restrayned with the respect of iustice, equitie, and charitie, yea and with the bzydle of the feare of God, not to consent to euill concupiscence: whiche dothe in that sorte specially deceyue carnall men, that it blindeth right iudgement in them. Men doe paynt Cupide blinde. In deede he is blind whosoeuer yeeldeth vnto it: but Cupide himselfe, is rather the blinder than the blinded.

Fourthly, The worde of God is also choaked vp by concupiscence in the hartes of carnall & fleshly men, so that it can bring forth no fruite. So sayth Christe our Lord and sauiour: And others there be, whiche sowe in thornes: they be they that heare the worde, but the troubles of the world and the deceyt of riches & concupiscences, entring among the rest, choke the worde, and it is made vnfruitful.

Fiftly, ther is also a great stregth of concupiscence, in that it bringeth into bondage the whole man with al his members, and stirreth him to endeuour to accomplish the euil worke. Therevnto are compelled all the powers as wel of the body as of the minde, to do seruice. This efficacy & strength of concupiscence, holy folks do also feele, and carnal men are turned and tossed by it altogither.

Sixtly, it is not to be ouerpassed, that concupiscence when it can not cõpasse that which it desireth, it doth torment torment, faint, and kill our hearts: it troubleth mẽs reast in the nights, it breaketh our slepes, it maketh our worcking whiche we must nedes apply in the day tyme, to be very slacke and weake.

Seuenthly, that is also most wicked, that by the lawes of iustice, equitie, and honestly, whereby it ought to be repressed and stilled, it is also more stirred and prouoked, wherein is declared a very diuelish peruersitie. The Apostle toucheth this malice of concupiscence, saying: Synne taking occasion by the commaundement, hath wrought in me all concupiscence. And the Ethnikes did obserue and touch the same. Whereof is ỹ saying of the Poet: We striue alwayes vnto that which is forbydden, and couet things denyed: So doth the sicke man desire to drynke water, when the contrarye is commaunded him. And who can haue that disease, whiche is not only not holpen by the remedy, but also made worse?

Eightly, another matter is, that this euill of concupiscence is not extinguished neyther by age, neyther by weakenesse of strength. The example of the two olde men is knowen, of whome mention is made in the history of Susanna. The naughtinesse of concupiscence is a matter that clingeth fast. It stayeth not, but goeth on, though it wrestle in vaine, and loketh for matters impossible to atteyne vnto, although it lacke strength to obteyne and compasse the same.

Ninthly, concupiscence is also vnsaciable. For it admitteth nother meane nor ende. For albeit we finde a misliking in those things whyche we did a little before most earnestlye desire, yet we be carried away immediately by concupiscence to desire other thyngs. So we reade in the Prouerbes. That the eyes of men be so vnsatiable. Item, that the eye is not filled with sighte. These poyntes we meante to touche briefely of the malice of naughty, corrupte, and forbidden concupiscence: the rest let the wise man obserue in himselfe, and either amende them or bewayle them.

In vvhat accompt this Concupiscence is before God.

Hovv concupiscence alone is sinne in the sight of God.

SOme man will say: In deede I doe acknowledge that the nature of this naughty concupiscence is wicked, and giuen to all euill: yea, and a troublesome disquietour and disturber of the spirit: but when I do not in acte those things whiche it desireth, I see not what fault I may be subiect vnto before God for it. I answere: If God did count vpon and required the iustice of our handes alone, and not of the heartes, ye might haue a quiet conscience, my brother, holding your hand from wickednes. But he that is ỹ searcher of hearts, iudgeth of man not onely accordyng vnto the facts of the outward members, but principally of his inwarde affections: that is to say, of the heart, as the fountayne of all our life: and according vnto the qualitie of it, he iudgeth him to be eyther good or euill. Therefore is that saying of our sauior Christe: You haue hearde it sayde vnto the fathers, Thou shalte not committe adultery. But I saye to you, that who soeuer seeth a woman to desire hir, hath now committed whoredome in his heart. Wherein? Surely not in the sighte of the world. Ergo, in the sight of God, vnto whome the will is in stede of the facte, as well in euill as in good. For like as he is not to be accounpted healthfull, whiche though he do appeare whole in the outward partes, yet hathe some euill disease within, eyther in his stomacke, eyther in hys lyuer, or in his lightes, or in some other thing: so he can not be taken for a iust man (if God be iudge) whyche though he doe not outwardlye vse whoredome, steale, nor kyll, yet doth in his heart desire other mēs wiues, and other mens goodes, and woulde haue hym hanged that he hateth. The cleannesse of the hands dothe so much in deede for thee, that by mēs iudgement thou canst not be condemned: but it can not iustifie a man wholly in the sighte of God, for asmuch as he is subiect vnto his iudgemente for the vncleannesse of the hearte.

Math. 5.

A similitude.

Againe, some wil say: Then what auaileth it to keepe the hāds cleane, if I be subiect vnto the iudgement of God for the concupiscence of the heart? If the desire of a strange woman be before God in stede of adultery, what doth it profite to abstreine from the facte, when there is no difference betwirt the wil and the facte? But what is to be aunswered in this matter, we haue noted in our Commentaries vpon Mathew. The very worke it selfe of adultery, being forbidden by a speciall Precepte, dothe make a man giltie of a greater sin: beside that he doth defile the temple of God, and make it one with the harlotte. Furthermore, it giueth occasion also of blaspheming the name of God amongst the enimies of Christian faith. Besides that the vnperfect concupiscence without fact, dothe no harme neyther to the bodye of his neighbour, nor to his wife, nor to his goodes: but murther, theft, and adultery indeede hath harme done in the facte. And of the fact many euils elles rise, hatred, brauling, contentiō, discord, slaughter. &c. whiche can not rise of bare concupiscence. The examples be to ready. It is knowen by Scripture, howe muche euils the defyling of Dina, and the adultery of Dauid bredde.

If the desire be before God as the fact, what auaileth it to abstcyne from the doings?

Math. 5.

Wherefore this is no wise mans thought, but his, which doth earnestly intend to fulfill in deede, that whyche he desireth in heart, not carefull of the ease of his saluation, and not looking to the grace of God, whereby we be saued through faith in Christ. It is the part of a faithful and a sensible man, to acknowledge the vncleannesse of his heart, and to bewayle it with all his heart; secondly to restrayne it by the grace of God, and humbly to flee vnto the mercy of God, and to desire hym to forgiue him and help him. Like as he is desperate of his saluation, and prouoketh the anger of God towardes hym, that sayeth: I am culpable in the sight of God for the concupiscēce of my heart, as well as though I do committe the facte, therefore I wyll adde vnto my concupiscence the fact whiche it desireth, that I maye yet carry away some pleasure of my sin, and not be damned for nothing: so a christian man which acknowledging and and bewayling the sinne of his hart, fleeth vnto the mercy of God, by fayth in Christe our sauiour, and withstandeth with all his power the naughty concupiscence, and is made partaker of the grace of God and true health and saluation.

VII. What things are to be considered in the words of this Precepte.

FIrste it is to be obserued, that among those things whereof the concupiscence is forbidden, the house of the neighboure is rehersed firste, and the wife nexte: but in the fift of Deuter. the wife is firste, and þ house after. For there it is redde thus: Coueit not thy neyghbours wife, &c. and Couet not the house of thy neyghboure, his fielde, and hys seruant, &c.

Therefore it was vnaduisedlye done of Augustine, that disputing of the diuision of the Decalogus, and distributing to the firste table thre precepte onely for the holy Trinitie, and deuiding this last of concupiscence into two, taking the argument of this deuision hereof, that in Deut. 5. it is seuerally commaunded, firste of not coueting the wife, and afterwards is commaunded of the house, and other matters togither. For thus he noted in his Questions vpon Exodus: The concupiscence of another mans wife, and the concupiscence of another mans house, doth so much differ in sinne, that vnto the which was said: Thou shalte not couet thy neyghbours house, are added also other things, the Scripture saying: Nor his house, nor his seruante, nor his handmayden, nor his Oxe, nor his cattell, nor his Sheepe, nor whatsoeuer is thy neyghbours. It seemeth he discouered the concupiscence of a nother mans wife, from the concupiscence of a nother mans goodes, when he began both in thys sorte: Thou shalt not couet thy neybours wife, and, Thou shalte not couet thy neyghbours house, and there began to adde the rest. But when he sayd, Thou shalte not desire thy neybours wife, he dyd not ioyne to that the rest, saying, Nor his house, nor his fielde, nor hys seruaunte. &c. but these seeme to be altogither ioyned togyther, whiche seeme to be conteyned in one Precepte, and discouered from that, where the wife is named. Thys sayeth Augustine: whose argumente by onely looking vpon that whyche is redde in Exodus, the diligente Reader maye see is otterlye weake and nothing worth. For the house and other thynges followyng, are not there ioyned togyther; but the concupiscence of another mans wife, is ioyned with the rest. So that it is manifest, that if both places be compared togyther, thys last Precepte can not be deuided into two. The readyng of the. 70. Interpreters deceyued Augustine; if it be theyrs that is nowe a dayes vsed. Eyther the interpreter whosoeuer it was, or some ignorant man tourned those things whyche be in the twenty of Exodus, otherwise in the Hebrewe, than in the fift of Deuteronomy, to the order of that whyche is redde in the fift of Deutero. But if he hadde looked vpon the Hebrewe, the holy mā woulde haue bin muche ashamed of his argument. But this errour is to be pardoned him for his ignorãce of the Ebrew tong. But they doe of sette purpose erre, which do so much abuse the argumente of these holye men to the defence of their erroure, when they be not ignorannte of the Ebrewe: and if they be ignorannte, they might yet be admonished at the least by the vulgare translation, that this argumente of Augustine is vterly voyde and friuolous. But of the very deuision of the Decalogue, we spake before.

Exod. 20.

of

The lawmaker applyed himselfe to the qualitie of his people.

2 Secondly, it is to be considered, howe the heauenly lawgiuer dyd in this precept also accommodate himselfe to the qualitie of his people, whē he forbiddeth the concupiscence of those things, which be commonly in the vse of menne: as the wife, house, manseruaunt, womanseruant, fielde, Oxe, Asse, &c. whiche he dothe not for that, that the euill of our naughtye concupiscence is bounde within the lystes of these things, but to applye himselfe vnto the people, to whome he doth prescribe these commaundementes. Otherwise oure concupiscence stretcheth it selfe farther, and desireth more higher matters than that it may be comprehended in those things which be here named. When we desire the glory of maiestie, of gouernance, knowledge, and power, yea and also to be frée and not subiect to the will of any mans arbitrement, truely we couet other thynges, and not our owne: and things perteining rather to God than to man. And yet he sayth not: Couet not the glory, maiestie, power, gouernance, and knowledge of the Lord thy God: but, Couet not the house, the wife, the field, &c. of thy neyghbor. So he doth temper himselfe to the qualitie of the rude and rustical people, and forbiddeth the concupiscence of commō matters: bycause they bée more in vse, as necessarye: and the common sort of people is more subiecte vnto that concupiscence of them, than of more higher and godly things. And yet let no man gather of this, that the concupiscence of those thynges whiche be of God, and not oures, is lawfull, for that the commandement runneth here namely of the thyngs of our neighbour onely, that we desire not them. For if it be vnlawfull to couet those things that bée oure neyghboures, not bycause they cannot be profitable for vs, but bycause they be other mens and not oures: who seth not that it is muche more vnlawfull to couet those things that be Gods? whiche besides that they are anothers and not oures, they bée also nor mete nor necessary for oure vses? We are heere by the way warned, that we be circumspect and carefull kepers of our affections in those matters wherein we do commonlye trauaile more than in others.

3 Thirdly, marke this also, that those things, the coueting whereof he forbiddeth by this lawe, he dothe ascribe to our neyghbours, and for this cause he dothe forbidde them: and yet they be the goodes of Gods more than of any mans. For if by the testimonie of the Prophet: The land is the Lords, and all the fulnesse of it: those things be also then the Lords, which be there named, house, wife, seruaunt, handmaide, field, Oxe, Asse, with the rest whiche we do possesse. And yet he sayeth not: Couet none of those things that be the Lord thy Gods, but Which be (sayeth hée) thy neyghbours. This is the louyng gentlenesse of God, that he is not miscontent that we shoulde vse anye of hys goodes, so that we maye come by them without the hurt or damage of our neighbour. He regardeth not his owne title, but our necessitie: and would haue all things that is gyuen to any person, so safe vnto hym, that it shoulde not be as much as deffyed away, much lesse taken away.

The Lorde of all things himselfe doth by this saying confirme euerye mans righte in his owne goodes, in that he saith, that those things be thy neighbours, whiche he forbiddeth to be coueted. Therefore let not the rash heads of the Anabaptists dispute of a common righte of all things, by coloure whereof they do robbe their brothers goodes, by title of propriete, and kéepe them to their owne vse: withal being driuen with a phãtasticall spirite, goe aboute to bryng in a cõfusion of all things. All things, say they, be Gods: we be his chyldren, Ergo they be all ours in common. In déede all things be Gods: but he dothe distribute vnto euerye man of hys goodes, as much as they shall possesse to their necessary vses. And he nameth them to bée hys to whome he hath giuen them: and hée forbiddeth that any man should take them away, yea or couet them.

4 Fourthly, nor that is to be ouerpassed, that he doth not saye: Couet not the house of any man: but, Of thy neighbour. His house also which is not oure neighboure, is none of ours. What is the matter then, that he dothe not simply forbidde to couet any mans house, or anye wise a nother mans, but our neighbours? It is not done for that, meaning that it is lawfull to couet anye mans house, wife, fielde, &c. so that it be not oure neighbours: but ỹ lawmaker would méete with the daunger of this concupiscence, whiche riseth vppon the nédinesse of men, dwelling and lyuing togither, whose goodes be daply in our eyes. For so great is the falshode of our corrupt flesh and malicious disposition, that the same whiche ought to be a cherishing of mutuall charitie, tendeth more to the hurt of it. Neighbours ought to be loued for two causes: partely bycause they bée fellowes somtime of one nature and religion, partly bycause they be also ioyned togyther in nére dwelling. And yet we doe sonest of all hurte them, we doe sonest enuie and lay in waite for their goodes, and practise the malice of our harts most against them. Such peruersitie of our nature is not onely touched by this presente Precepte and that whiche weute before, but by that generall commaundement, whereby we be commaunded to loue oure neighboure as oure selues. If the nérenesse of liuing togither did help to nourish charitie in vs, what néded these Precepts? And what is more kindly than to dwell nére togither, to be allyed, to haue to do with men, which haue this gift of nature that they bée ciuill creatures, and are very loath to leaue to haue mutuall doings one with another.

Neighbours ought to be loued for two respectes.

Againe, what is more vnkindely thã to ouerturne the propinquitie of mens liuing togither, into occasion of practising malice and falsehode?

By

By this consideration it may be easily vnderstode, why the lawmaker did namely forbidde, that we shoulde not couet oure neyghboures house, wife, field, &c.

He doth not make difference betwixte neybours.

5 Fiftly, that is also to be obserued, that he maketh not any speciall difference betwixte neyghboures. Some neyghbours be riche, some of a meane state, some powre, some iust, some vniust, and their goodes gotten some one way, some another way. Some one becommeth riche by honest and vpryghte meanes, an other dishonestly by euill craftes, by vsury, guile, theft, robbery, periury, &c. and yet he sayeth not: Couet not the house of a riche man, or his that is in authoritie. For to what purpose shoulde he couet it, when he can not come by it? Nor he sayth not: Couet not the house of a powre man, he hathe but that only: nor couet not the powre mans wife, for he hathe no moe but hir. Nor he sayth not: Couet not thy neyghbours house whiche he dothe iustly possesse, leaste in so saying, hee shoulde seeme to meane, that then such coueting were vnlawfull, when those things be desyred whyche can not be easily gotten, or when those things be coueted, whereof the powre man hath no more, or that whiche is iustly gotten: but generally and absolutely (he sayeth:) Couet not thy neyghbours house: Couet not thy neighbours wife: as though hee sayde: Whosoeuer he be, and whatsoeuer he be, riche or powre, iust or vniust, and by what meanes so euer hys goodes be gotten. So that no mā is excused in coueting riche mens goodes, though they be gotten by vnlawfull meanes. For this concupiscence is absolutely forbidden by this lawe, That we couet not the house, the wife, the fielde, the seruaunt, the handmayden, Oxe, Asse, &c. of oure neyghbores: that is to witte, no other mans goodes. For although our neyghboure hathe neuer so muche goodes, houses, wiues, menseruants, womenseruauntes, fieldes, &c. yet they be none of oures, though they be vniustly possessed, yet we haue no title or right vnto them, and therfore are not to be desired.

6 Sixtly, that is also to be obserued, that he maketh no difference of oure estates, but commaundeth commonly altogither, that we couet not oure neyghbours goodes. He sayeth not: Couet not thy neyghbours house, vnlesse peraduenture thou haue neuer a one thy selfe. Or: Couet not thy neyghbours wyfe, if thou haue a wife thy selfe: but whatsoeuer we be, whether we haue houses, wiues, seruauntes, handmaydens, fieldes, Oxen, &c. or haue none: it is sayde vnto all, and singular: Couet not thy neyghbours wife, house, seruaunte, fielde, &c. Pouertie and neede in deede in comparison of great wealth, may deserue some pardon: as Salomon doth somewhat extenuate the theefte of the hungry mā, in comparison of the adulteroure. But hee doth not so farre forthe excuse it, that he taketh away the whole blame, and make hym guilteles and without blame, which doth vnlawfully couet that whyche is not his owne. In deede hee offendeth more grieuously, whyche beyng hymselfe riche, desireth the powre mans goodes whyche he must needes occuppye, and hathe no more. As the sinne of Dauids was, when he desyred and defyled in adultery the wyfe of Vrye, whyche hadde no mo but one alone, beyng hymselfe the husbande of a great sorte of wiues, whyche matter Nathan the Prophet laid to hys charge by a parable of the takyng away of one Shepe. And yet it may not be allowed, if a powre man doe couet a riche mans goodes.

Pouerty must be holpen by honest meanes, not by coueting of other mens goodes: whereunto dothe followe at hande eyther theftes, or periuries, or robberies, and extortions, &c.

7 Seuenthly, Some bodye maye aske, whether coueting be not to bee excused, if a man knowe not whose house it is, Wife, Seruaunt, fielde, or Oxe, &c. that he desyreth. A man woulde thinke there were no offence done againste his neyghboure, by hym that knoweth not, that the same whiche he coueteth, dothe belong to him in ryght and possession. A man may pretend ignorance, whyche is wont sometimes to excuse a matter, whiche else if it were done of knowledge, coulde not be done withoute blame: but thys pretence of ignorance helpeth nothyng. For albeit thou knowest not whose it is that thou desirest, yet thou canst not bee ignorante, fyrste that it is none of thyne, secondly that it is some other bodyes. And thys lawe sayeth not: Couet not that mans house, or thys mans house whiche thou knowest, but simply: Couet not the house of thy neyghboures. They be also thy neyghboures goodes, whiche thou knowest not who is owner of it: and for that cause also thou oughtest not to couet them, bycause thou canst not be in doubt whether they be free or common, but must needes vnderstande, that they bee some mans proper goodes, and therefore another mans, and none of thyne.

Of the concupiscence of a vvoman not knovven.

8 Eyghtly, Some man may yet demaunde, whether the couetyng of a woman, be not excused by ignorāce in thys case, when a woman is coueted whiche is in deede married, but so, that she is not knowen to be maried, but thoughte vnmarried: and that he would not haue coueted hir, if he hadde knowen she had bin anye mans wife. This kinde of ignorance hath in deede somewhat to extenuate the malice of thys concupiscence, touchyng the mynde of him whyche coueteth: but as concerning the woman, lyke as if she were by vnlawfull acte defyled, it were not simple fornication, but adultery, though the defyler knewe not that she was marryed: so we must iudge also of the concupiscence when one is coueted, not as though she were maried, but as one vnmarried, and free in respect of a married woman, whosoeuer coueteth hir, coueteth his neyboures wife, whether he doe it wittingly, or ignorauntly. Secondly, it is to be considered, to what intente thou doest couet the woman, whyche thou knowest not whether she bee maried, whether it be to marry with hir to thy wife: as Pharao & Abimelech did, in taking Sara to wife, whome they knewe not to be Abrahams wyfe: or whether thou woulde abuse hir to the lust of whoredome. If it be to marrye with hyr, so thys concupiscence is also rather a disordred affection of the flesh,

flesh, and an vnlawfull luſt, when a woman not knowen is vnaduiſedly deſired, than a lawfull meaning to mariage, and for that cauſe damnable: but in caſe thou doeſt commit whoredome with hir, though you eſcape adultery, yet you can not be excuſed of the ſinne of whoredome. And I am not ſure whether ſuch a kynde of couetyng will make any differēce betwirt a married or an vnmarried woman, if the partie can come by hyr.

9 Ninthly, a carnall man maye aſke me againe: whether it be not to be borne withall, if he couet his neybours wife, not to haue hir quite away and to be at his commaundement, but to haue hir company onely for an houre. I would not (ſayth hee) haue hir in mine owne iuriſdiction, let hir huſband keepe hir at home for his owne: I do only ſo deſire hir, that I may vſe hir nowe and then, without his hinderance. The anſwere is readye. It is ſimply commaunded, Couet not thy neyghbours wife: and that generall rule of nature ſayeth: Doe not to another, that thou wouldeſt not haue done to thy ſelfe. And whatſoeuer is not lawful to be done, is not lawfull alſo to be coueted.

10 Tenthly, touching the houſe, fielde, Oxe, Aſſe, &c. Some man will ſay, If I may in no wiſe couet, I cā not buy anye thing, neyther of that which is my neyghboures. For hee that buyeth, doth ſurely couet it, elſe he would not buye it, if he did not couet it. Nowe if we may not buy thoſe things that be other mens, all neceſſary contractes be taken away: but if it be not vnlawfull to buy, ſurely it is lawfull to couet the ſame, whiche it is lawfull to buy. Then what meaneth it that he ſayth: Couet not the houſe, &c. of thy neyghboures? I anſwere. The ſame Concupiſcence is not forbidden, which kepeth whole the loue of thy neighbour, and repugneth not againſt his will: but the ſame, which is contrary agaynſt them both. He that deſyreth to buye, coueteth not vnlawfully, for that he deſireth to buy in this conſideration, that he deſireth nothing without hys neyghbours will. But if he paſſe theſe boundes, I meane of charitie, and of his neighbours will, he is not excuſed by the purpoſe of buying.

V Whether that we may buy that which we cannot couet.

The hiſtory of Achab is knowen, whiche is read in this wiſe. The vineyarde of Naboth the Iſraelite, was nēere to the palaice of Achab King of Samaria. Therefore Achab ſpake to Naboth, ſaying: Giue me thy vineyarde to make me a garden of pot hearbes, bycauſe it is at hand, and nēere my houſe: and I will gyue thēe a better vineyard for it. Or if you thinke more aduantage to take the value of it in ſiluer, I will gyue thēe as muche as it is woꝛth. You heare the Kyngs woꝛdes couetyng his neighbours vineyarde, and deſiring to buy it. Hēere nowe agayne Nabothes woꝛdes withſtanding it: Let my Lord (ſayth he) be good vnto me, ſo that I maye not giue thēe the inheritance of my fathers. What dyd Achab then? Achab came (ſayeth the booke) into his houſe, frowning and gnaſhing his teeth at the woꝛdes whiche Naboth the Iſraelite ſpake vnto him, ſaying: I will not gyue thēe the inheritance of my fathers: and caſting himſelfe vpon his bedde, he turned away his face to the wall, and and did eate no breade: and that whyche followeth. You ſee an example of concupiſcence, which though it ſeeme to haue no vnluſtice in it, in that that the King woulde buy it, or elſe gette vnto him his neighboures vineyarde whiche he coueted, by exchange of a better vineyard, yet it was ſuch, that it was not ioyned with charitie, nor attempered vnto his wil whoſe vineyard it was. Otherwiſe he woulde not haue bin vexed in his minde, nor agrieued with the owner of ỹ vineyard, for denaying him the buying of it, but woulde haue ſayd rather: God forbidde I ſhoulde couet that vineyard, whiche the owner of it doth refuſe to ſell. It is manifeſt therefore by this example, that the coueting of another mans goodes, is not excuſed by the purpoſe of buying of it, if it be not ioyned with the loue of hys neybours, and accommodate vnto hys will. It is a kinde of extoꝛtion, to wil to buy that, which thy neyghbour is not contente to ſell. Therefore thys manner of coueting is nothing elſe, but the vnlawfull coueting of another mans good.

Laſtly, we muſt alſo thynke of ỹ which he addeth in the ende: Nor any thing that is thy neighbors. He might haue ſimply ſette this forbidding of cōcupiſcēce, in this wiſe: Thou ſhalt not couet any thing of that which is thy neighbours, but he woulde firſte put ſome ſpecificatiō of thoſe things which be moſt vſed among men, and moſt neceſſary: as be the wife, houſe, fielde, ſeruaunte, handmaide, Oxe, Aſſe, to warne vs that we muſt ſpecially abſteyne from thoſe thynges whiche be neceſſarye for our neyghbours occupying. Secondly, for alſmuch as the Concupiſcence of oure fleſhe is infinite, ſo that we doe caſt our eyes vpon all things that be our neyghboures, leaſt we ſhoulde ſaye: There is no mention made in thys lawe, of golde, ſyluer, garmentes, houſeholde, ſtuffe, honoures, rightes, priuiledges, and ſuch other like matters which be our neyghbours: Ergo it is not vnlawfull to couet them. For if it had, the lawmaker woulde haue made mention of them. Leaſt (I ſay) our fleſhe ſhoulde finde theſe ſtarting holes to ſlippe away at, this ſummary and generall particle is added: Nor all that is thy neyghboures, to reſtrayne oure Concupiſcence from all the goodes of oure neyghboures, whatſoeuer they bee, greate or ſmall, ſeuerall or common, neceſſary or not neceſſary, one or manye: as if the lawmaker ſhoulde ſay: What goodes ſoeuer thy neighbours goodes be, thou mayſt in no wiſe couet anye of them: not bycauſe they be ſuch, or ſuch, but bycauſe they be thy neyghboures, whome thou oughteſt ſo to loue, that thou wilte not onely take awaye anye thyng of his, but not ſo much as couet it.

Thys diligence of the lawmaker doth admoniſhe, howe that this euil of Concupiſcence in oure fleſhe is ſo lauiſh and infinite, that there is nothing of oure neyghboures goodes, brothers and friendes (if we like it) but we couet it earneſtly: wherefore they be very vnaduiſed folkes, whyche doe raſhlye boaſt their goodes, whyche they knowe men be deſirous of, and do ſet them out to the eyes of naughty Concupiſcence, to be coueted and entred vpon.

The eyes which be the miniſter-

The eyes be ministers of concupiscence.

of the concupiscence of the hearte, what be they else, but the forerūners of deceyuinges, theftes, robberies, and extorcions? He that would haue hys geare safe, lette him beware of these vaunteurrers. It is so muche the safer from theft and robbery, which is so hidden, that it can not be coueted. If Collatine hadde not boasted out Lucrece his wife, and offered hir to the eyes of wanton and intemperate Gentlemen to bée séene, hée mighte haue kept safe ỹ chastitie of his moste honest wife. Ezechias when he dyd vndiscretely shewe the treasures of the kings house vnto the Embassadour of the Babylonians, he enkindled their desire: and those things whiche he mighte haue kept still, if they had bin hidden, he made them subiect to spoyle and pray, after they were once shewed and séene.

4. Reg. 20.

Therfore it is requisite, that they which be wealthy of these riches and gwdes, desired of the flesh, be warie and mindful of this common corruption, and they must eyther bestowe them or kéepe them wisely, least they do both giue an occasion vnadvisedly to others, to couet and lay watch for their gwdes, and putte that that they haue in hassard.

Furthermore, all men generally must loke, that they doe most vigilantly obserue, bridell, and restrayne euerye one of them this malice of their heart, giue to couet other folks gwdes: least if they doe yéelde vnto it, they sinne against God which forbyddeth vs to couet, and agaynste thy neyghboure, in couering of whiche, hée ought to loue the one more than the other as himselfe: and least he doe withall cast himselfe into such trouble as he can not be ridde of, and at the ende into the pitte of perdition, wherein both body and soule doth perishe.

Let the wise man chasten his concupiscence, withstanding all his motions. When he perceyueth that hée coueteth vnprofitable and vayne thyngs, lette hym fynde fault wyth hys owne folishnesse and lewdenesse. When he coueteth those things that be other mens, lette hym obiecte against it the rebuke of vniust dealing. When he desyreth wanton and vncleane things, lette hym charge it with filthynesse. When he coueteth superfluous thyngs, lette him checke the auarice thereof. Let him say, Ah fole: what shalte thou gayne by that which thou coueteste, séyng it is more vayne than vanitie it selfe? Thou vniust and wicked, it is not thyne that thou desyreste, but thy neyghboures. What hast thou to do wyth that that is thy neyghboures? Thou wanton and vncleane man, why delightest thou in foule and filthye thyngs? Thou niggard, why desirest thou those thyngs, whiche thou hast no néede to occupy? Lette vs haue those things at hande, to choke oure concupiscence withall: I haue no néede of it, it doth me no gwd. It is vayne, it is superfluous, it is none of myne, but my neyghboures, it is vnlawfull, it is forbidden, it is fylthy, it is hurtfull. &c. Lette the feare of God, the obseruance of Gods commaundementes, the loue of oure neyghboure, the detestation of oure corruption, the study of righteousnesse, furnish vs with suche weapōs, wherewith we maye kyll the fierce motions of oure concupiscence in vs, vs, and braise these little ones of Babylon, and throw them agaynste the rocke of Christes faith.

The second table.

The conclusion of the Decalogus.

We haue made vp by the grace of the Lorde, the exposition of this Decalogus tenderly, but as I suppose not altogyther vnprofitably, if a man will vse it godly and with the feare of the Lorde. We sée that the order of thys Tenth precepte is so appoynted and ordeyned, that it doth clérely reproue the corruption of oure nature, whē in both the Tables it commaundeth thyngs contrarye therevnto. Oure carnall man is quite blynde, ignorante and out of the way, in the thyngs of God: wide from the knowledge of the true and onely God, disposed to the worshyp of manye Goddes and madnesse of Idolatrye, not deuoutely affected to the reuerence of the name of God, and slowe, sluggish and vnwilling of hys seruice.

Wherefore in the First table, in the firste foure Precepte he bothe playnely reproue thys corruption and depravation of oures, in those thyngs that touche to the knowlege, obseruance and worshippe of the only and true God, when he pronounceth hymselfe to be oure onely true God, settyng aside all strange and false Gods: when hée bothe wyth moste sore threatenyng forbydde worshippyng of Idolles, when hée forbyddeth the abuse and prophanation of hys name, and ordeyneth the holye vse of the Seuenth dayes rest.

Furthermore we be so disposed in those thynges whyche concerne the trade of mans lyfe, that we be not louyng and obsequious to oure parentes, whome we ought to haue in estimation as the authors of our begynnyng, touchyng the flesh: Cruell towardes others, enimies of the bloud of man, and of oure common nature, hauyng fēte (accordyng vnto the saying of the Prophete) swifte to shedde bloud, filthy desires (and if it maye bée) defylers of other folkes beddes, and disparyners also of oure owne, readye to theftes and robberies, to lyes and false witnesse, to deceyte and falsehode: in briefe, almost wholly inflamed wyth insatiable, vniust, and false coueting of other folkes gwdes. Against these vices of oure corrupte nature, is the Seconde table sette: whiche in the fiue later Precepte, commaundeth vs to honour our Parentes: and forbyddeth murthers, adulteries, theftes, false witnesse, and vnlawfull concupiscence of other mens gwdes. And in commaundyng these thyngs, hée forbiddeth vs in déede from bearyng vngodlye towardes oure Parentes, murtherers, adulterers, théeues, false witnesses, and couetoures of those thyngs that be other mens: but yet withall, he bothe commoue and declare vs to bée suche, and warneth vs that there is so greate perfection of true godlinesse and iustice required at oure handes, that wée muste not be vngodlye and vniust, no not in affection and concupiscence of the hearte, muche lesse openly in acte: in that hée bothe not onely forbydde murther, adultery, theft, an[illegible] false witnesse, but he forbiddeth a[illegible] condemneth also the desire of oure heart, in coueting our neyghboures gwdes.

Therefore for the double corruption of our hearte, he comprehended in two tables whatsoeuer was to be commaunded in thys Decalogue: euen lyke as Christ did afterwardes in a double briefe, comprehend all thys lawe and the doctrine of all godlynesse, saying, Loue the Lorde thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soule, and with all thy minde. This is the greatest and the fyrste commaundemente, and the second is like vnto this: Loue thy neyghboure as thy selfe. In these two commaundementes hangeth all the lawe and Prophetes. For he that loueth the Lorde, dothe altogyther surely and thoroughly depende vppon hym in firme faith, and clere conscience: and therefore dothe nother admitte anye other Gods, nor serue Idols, nor dishonor his name, nor disdayne the Sabbathes ordeyned by hym. So he that loueth his neyghboure as well as himselfe, will neyther contemne hys parentes, nor kil hys neyghbors, nor defyle his wife with adulterye, nor steale his gwdes, nor falsely witnesse of him: and to be shorte, will not couet any iote of all that is his: but will hartily seeke his commoditie, as well as his owne.

Math. 22.

¶ Of the Addition or enlargement of the Morall Preceptes.

WE deuided the written lawe before, according to the vsed deuision, into Precepts Morall, Iudicial, and Ceremoniall. We tolde howe certayne summary Preceptes of the Morall lawe are sette forthe in the Decalogus. And after the exposition thereof, I suppose it good to ioyne thereunto those additions of the Morall Precepts which be set forth here and there by peece meale in the writings of Moses. For Moses was not contente with the bare Decalogus, but dyd adde also some things, as it were to expounde the rest, whereof he thoughte good, specially to gyue some instruction, considering the sluggishnesse and slownesse of rude people. For albeit that true loue, as it were the spirite and life of the Decalogus, dothe include those thynges, yet for all that, it commeth to passe by the malice of the flesh, that it is not perceyued.

Some of the Preceptes of thys addition or declaration concerne religion, some holynesse of lyfe, some oure neyghbours, some cattell and beastes, some also things growyng vpon the earth.

1 It toucheth religion, that whyche is commaunded that we muste not diuine nor marke dreames. Item, that wee must not turue vs to Witches and sorceroures: and that wee muste not make anye felowshippe with the vnfaithefull. And that wee muste feare the Lorde, and serue hym onely, and sweare by hys name. That wee muste not sweare by straunge and false Goddes.

2 It concerneth the holynesse of our lyfe, that whoredome is commaunded to be eschewed bothe of men and women.

3 To

3 To the louing of our neighbor, which is commaunded, these thynges are to be referred: that we must not hate straungers. That we must nother burthen our money, whych wee do lend, with vsury: nor streightly exacte it agayne: that a garment taken for a pledge, must be restored before Sunne set: that we curse not or speake euill against the princes of the people. That the hyre of a workeman is not to be kept till the morowe: that we muste not curse the deafe man: that we lay not an offence before the face of the blinde man, that we must not hate our brother in our heart, but reproue him openly: that we may not seeke reuenge: That we must aryse with reuerence before a white head: that we must diminishe nothing of our weightes, measures, rules, and bushels. Vsury is not to be taken of thy brother. If a man find any thing that his brother hath lost, it must be restored to the owner. A grinding millestone is not to be taken for a guage. That which is neglected in reaping or in the vineyard, is not to be gathered vp agayne, but to be left to the poore.

4 These things concerne cattell and beastes: Thy enimies Asse, or Ore, if it go astray or be in daunger, is to be holpen and to be brought agayne. The mouth of the Ore that treadeth out corne, ought not to bee musseled. When a man findeth a nest of birdes, the damme ought not to bee taken away with the yong ones. That the goate muste not be boyld in the dammes milke.

To things growing in the earth, that perteineth. Thou shalt not cutte downe the trees, whereof fruite may be eaten. There be many things also redde in the writtings of the Prophets, belonging to the order of these morall preceptes. For in some poyntes they were interpreters of the law of Moses, but the Prouerbs of Salomon, be by some speciall deuice, ordered to adorne and amplifie this part of godlinesse and iustice: as those things also which be redde in Iesu Syrach, and in the boke of Wisedome. And the writings also of the Apostles and the Euangelistes, haue many things in them, that may help to frame the manners of Gods people: which the diligent reader, may well marke as hee goeth, and muste vse them as ornaments of faith and true godlinesse, to beautifie the conuersation of his life, and to expresse the truth of his faith. This parte of godlinesse and iustice is not to be negligently handled: for who seeth not that it is by speciall purpose of the holy spirite, interlayed in the holy writings, as wel of the new Testament as of the olde, to this intent, that we should not onely reade those things whiche doe frame the godlinesse of oure heart and faith towardes God, but those things also, whereby is declared in what kynde of life the true godlynesse of hearte, faith, and iustice is expressed & beautified: and how farre wide and diuers our life is from the behauiour of the vngodly and wicked. I suppose that ther is no godly person that is without care of framing and furnishyng his life, seeing that the honestie of our forefathers and of the Ethnikes also did euer esteeme that diligence most of all. Their writings of Ethikes morall and offices be extante, witnessing though not of their life, yet

Of thinges growing vpon the earth. Deut. 20.

The Prouerbs of Salomon.

of the ſtudy of their life. Wherefore manye wiſe and honeſt men doe not vnworthily fynd ſo much fault with the corrupt maners of our tyme: for they do ſee that the corruption & neglect of maners, is a ſure proof of the decaying of true godlyneſſe, iuſtice, and honeſtie, and that there is no other to bee looked for, but that there will ſhortly fall vpon vs ſome great and greeuous deſtruction.

Of the Iudicial Precepts.

VVhat the iudiciall preceptes bee.

The Iudiciall precepts be they, by whiche it is preſcribed howe they oughte to iudge in cauſes, controuerſyes, and tranſgreſſyons of the people. And the cauſes, controuerſies, and tranſgreſſions of the people be of two kyndes: For ſome pertain to religion, and ſome to prophane matters. Therfore theſe preceptes might be handſomely deuided into two ſortes: ſome for to belong to the Churche, and ſome to iudgementes and iuſtice of ſome courtes. But bycauſe it is ſo prouided in the law, that for matters concerning religion, they haue for the moſte parte Ceremonies ioyned vnto them: we are determined to leaue of them to the place of the ceremonial precepts, and ſpeake only of thoſe things here, whiche maye be paſte ouer in open Courte.

The diuiſion of Iudiciall preceptes. Exod. 21. Exod. 23. Leuit. 19. Deut. 16.

After that the law of the Decalogus was giuen, ſtreight ways are added by the Lord the iudgements, of whiche he began to commaunde in Exodus, as appereth, where we do reade in this ſort: Theſe be the iudgementes, which thou ſhalt ſet forth before them. And they may bee ſo deuided, that ſome of them doe concerne the Iudges, and ſome the people. Commandement is giuen to the Iudges, that they followe not the multitude to do euill, nor agree to the ſentence of the moſt in iugement, to turne a ſide from the truth: neither payut a poore mans cauſe, nor to take no rewardes, bicauſe rewards doe blynde the wiſe, and ſubuert the wordes of the iuſte: nor they ſhall not kill the guiltleſſe, but without reſpecte of perſons, iudge with right iudgemēt, nor decline vnto the other part.

Thoſe things which concerne the people, haue rules and orders, according vnto which, they muſt iudge in cauſes, controuerſies, and tranſgreſſions, either of ỹ multitude, either of priuate perſons. And theſe Iudgementes bee ſo diſcouered, that ſome perteine to making vp of cauſes and controuerſies, ſome to the chaſtnyng of offences, ſome to penalties of death. To the firſt ſorte theſe things are to be referred, which are ordeyned of the buying of an Hebrue bōdman, of the daughter ſolde to be a handmaide, of the curſt horned Ore, of an Ore or any other cattel fallen into a well not couered. And of degrees of kinred not to be allowed to marrie. Of the reuenue of poſſeſſions, and of lande not to be ſolde for euer, and of the lawe of redeēming. Alſo of the lawe of inheritance. Of the ſpoyle to be equally deuided. Of the law of outlawes and runners away, of the lawe of marying. And of the matters of great difficultie to be brought to the hering of the Prieſtes, and of the lawe of the inſtituting of the king, and not to ſtirre the landmarks of thy neighbour: and of the the law of expedition to warres, and of the carkas of a ſlayne man found of a woman pyſoned, of the chyldren of two wynes: of the carkas of a man hanged: and of the ſeruant that is runne away: of the booke of diuorce, of the libertie of them which are newe married, and of the lawe of taking pledges, and of raiſing ſeede to the brother that is dead.

To the ſecond ſort belongeth thoſe things which be redde of him whych ſtriketh his neyghboure, his ſeruant, or mayde, in chiding, or a woman with childe. Of ſtealing of an Ore, or a Sheepe, of a thiefe taken and ſtroken, of harme done to thy neyghbours fielde, of cōueyance of a thing left in truſt, of a mayden abuſed and defyled. And of lying with a handmaiden: and of murther committed, not of purpoſe nor of hatred and enmitie, but by chaunce. And of falſe witneſſes, and of the nūber of plages wherewith the offenders ſhoulde be puniſhed.

To the thirde ſorte are appoynted thoſe things, which haue penalties of deathe, as thoſe that be ordeyned of the puniſhing of murtherers, of them whiche ſtrike their parents, or curſſe them: of him that ſtealeth a man, and ſelleth him. And of the wicked doers and medlers with beaſts, and of him that doth ſacrifice to Idols. And thoſe thinges that be decreed. And of the daughter of a Prieſt defyled. And of a falſe Prophete, and of the curſſe of the trayterous Citie. And of the puniſhmente of Idolaters, and of hym that abydeth not the iudgemente of the Prieſtes, and of them that obey not the word of the Prophet of God. And of the diſobedient ſonne. And of the woman that is not found a mayd with hir huſband, of the puniſhment of adulterers, and of hym that oppreſſeth a virgin in the field, medow, or wodde, wherein no man can ſuccoure.

These almoſt be the Preceptes Iudiciall ſette forth in Moſes lawe. It is not poſſible that there ſhoulde be ſette out for euery ſingular cauſe, ſtrife, and tranſgreſſion a ſpeciall lawe: therefore the commaundement doth runne only of thoſe things, whiche eyther be of moſt momente, or chaunce oft. The reſt is to be lefte to the foreſighte of the iudges, as that matter is, whiche chanced to Salomon, euen in the beginning of hys raigne, in the cauſe of the two harlotes. And therefore was the Precepte of the ordinaunce of Iudges, that they ſhoulde be choſen wyſe menne, whyche according to the gifte of theyr wiſedome, coulde ſee what is right, and what not: in thoſe caſes alſo of whyche can no determination bee hadde by expreſſe lawe.

1. Reg 3. Deut. 1. Exod. 18.

And theſe Preceptes bee called Miſpatim, that is to ſaye: Iudgementes, directions, rules, according vnto whyche the Iudges muſt pronounce. God woulde not leaue thys at large to the Iudges, that they ſhoulde determine of thoſe things at their owne libertie, but he did preſcribe vnto them certayne formes of ſentences & decrees, whereunto they ſhould applye themſelues. His will was, that there ſhoulde remaine certaine lawes vnto his people, whiche ſhould not be of man, but of God. Hee woulde haue them comprized in writing, and to bee left to the aftercõmers, to touch the consciences of all menne, and that there mighte be no excuse for them which sinned against right and equitie. He wouldе haue the consciences of his people to be moued in these iudgemẽts, not with that authoritie of man, but with the authoritie of God. Wherefore he so vsed the matter, that not onely there shoulde be iudges ordeyned at his commaundemente to iudge his people in his behalfe, but he wouldе the very iudgementes also to be named not theirs, but his. We be cõpelled now adayes to suffer in the Churche not onely Prelates appoynted contrarye to the sentence of God, but to receyue also the decrées inuented by men, in steede of Gods worde. They crye that the decrées of the Bysshops be of the holy spirite, and worthy to be equall with the worde of God, for the authoritie of their office. This shift is vsed of false pastors, to challenge to themselues so greate authoritie by their office, that thereby whatsoeuer they doe decrée, should be as well honored, as if it were spoken out of the very mouth of God.

The causes of the Iudicial Precepts.

A godly man must also thinke vpon the causes of the Judiciall Precepts. For the wisedome of God dyd not vnadvisedly, and to no purpose ioyne these Judicial Precepts vnto the Morall Precepts of doctrine, grace and faith.

I suppose that this is the greatest reason of all. 1. That considering the common corruption of our flesh, euen they also whiche were chosen to bée the people of God, and admitted by the tokens of grace, be not so stayed by the only doctrine and morall lessons, in the trade of godlynesse and iustice, that they can not goe out of the way.

2 Agayne, the affayres of men be suche, that ther chance many things doubtfull and darke, whereupon ryseth strife and contentiõ, which must be made vp by the most certayn authoritie of Gods iudgements.

3 Thirdly, it happeneth also dayly, that men do sinne against the rule of Gods lawe and his worde, for the matter falleth out so through ỹ corruption of our flesshe, that wheresoeuer law is and doctrine, there is also transgression, and goyng out of the right. And all transgression and goyng from the right, must be restreyned, chastned, and punished. And in case we wouldе do it our selues, wée should not néde the iudgementes of God. For as the Apostle sayeth, If we had iudged our selues, we should not haue bin iudged of the Lord. For these causes I suppose, the Judiciall preceptes were added vnto the doctrine and Morall preceptes, and the office of Judges ordeyned. For wée be so corrupted by sinne, that knowing the better, we do the worse: vnto which euill we do ioyne this also, that we do neyther make vp our debates and contentions oure selues, nor do correct and amend our sinnes by our owne iudgemente. And who séeth not how much euill is to be looked for, where neyther doubtfull cases be resolued and determined, nor strifes sette at one, nor offences and mischeuous factes amended? We meane not in this place to speake anye thing of temporall lawes, and mens ordinances, but we wil speake of them in the place of Magistrates.

Of

Of the preceptes Ceremonial of the olde Testament.

We call Ceremonies, holy rites, whether they bée vsed in the Churche, or without. Ceremoniall precepts be they, wherin commaundement is gyuen by the authoritie and worde of God, of holy rites. And the Ceremonies of the lawe be very many and diuers.

Some be Personalles, as those whiche belong to the persones of the hygh Priests, and the reste. Suche matters be read of in Exodus, of the consecration, oblation, & obseruancie of the Priestes. And of that poynt, that it was not lawful for ỹ priests, when they shoulde go in by order to the Tabernacle, to drinke Wine. And of the goyng into of the Bishop into the sanctuarie. That it is forbidden, that a Priest shewe not himselfe at the buriall of any of his Citizés. And that he shaue not his head or his beарde: that he marry with no harlot, wydow, or woman put from hyr husbande, but a mayde. Item, that he discouer not his head, nor cut his clothes, nor go vnto a dead man. And that no person minister vnto God that hath a blemish or defect in his body. And, that nothing must be offred of the hande of a straunger. And, of gelouse folkes. And of Nazarets. And of the purifying, oblatiõ, and age of Leuites. And of the order and offices of Aaron & of his sonnes. And, what is the dutie of the Bishops, and Leuites. And of the portions of the Leuites.

Other Ceremonies be of the Tabernacles, and belong to the tabernacle of God. I put to them all those things that be commaunded, of the sanctuarie, of aulters, of lightes, of fire, of the breades of proposition, of the vessels and other lyke matters. As of making of the aultare, and of the stuffe of the tabernacle, of the arke, table, and candelsticke. And of the couerings of the walles, of the vayles, fœte and pillers of the tabernacle, and of the aulter, of the entrie of the Tabernacle, of the oyle of the lampe. And of the aultare for burnte offerings, of the brasen lippe. And of the court. And of the lightes, and of the breades of proposition. And of the candelsticke: and of the siluerne trumpets: and of the aultare of stone.

Exod. 20.25. 26.27.28. Leuit. 23. Num. 8.10. Deut. 27.

Others belong vnto Sacrifices & oblations. To this place I do referre those things that be red in Exodus, Leuiticus, Numeri and Deuteronomie, of the firstlyngs, of the vse of burnt offerings: and of the oblation of sacrifices, of floure and salt, of the parchyng of the first fruytes. Of the holie of peace offrings, Of the holie for the sinne of the Priestes, for the ignorauнce of the multitude, for the sinne of the Prince, and for the sinne of one soule. Of the holie for some certaine sinnes. Of denying of that whiche was lefte to bée kepte: of the Lawe of burnte offeryng, of the lawe of euery sacrifice: of the holie for sinne, whiche is eaten, and which is burnt. And of cleane beasts and vncleane. Of not immolatyng of hostes, vnlesse they be firste brought to the entry of the tabernacle. Of not eatyng bloud, but offeryng it. And of not offering that which hath any defect or faulte. That no beast be offered before it be eyght dayes olde. Of the holie that is immola-Touchyng sacrifices and oblations. Exod. 13. Leuit. 1-3. 7. 4.5 6.9 17. 22 27.

Num. 18.

Deut. 12.14. & 26.

Num. 15.17. & 5.

ted, to be eaten the same day. Of tenths. Of drinke offerings. Of a red cowe. Of the presentes of the Lorde. Of the holte that hath a blemish.

Deut.17.

Of purifying. Levit.12. 13. 14. & 15. Num.19. Levit.16.

4 There be others of purifying, appointed for certayne vncleannesse. As of womē that beare children. Of the Lepre. And of the purifying of hym that is defiled with the flure of his sēde. Of ỳ vncleannesse of a woman in hyr motherly disease. Of the touchyng of a dead carkas: & of him that dieth in the tabernacle.

Of clensing. Num.5.15. & 19.

5 Others be expiatorie. As of the clensing of the sanctuarie. And of the feast of clensing. Of clensing of the sinne done by negligence: and those things that be read of clensing.

Of Sanctifying.

6 Others belōg to ỳ sanctifying of persons, places, vessels of the messe, of the first fruites, & first begotte, &c.

Of tymes.

7 Others be of times. That is, belong to solemne and feastes dayes: as those things which are red of the observation of the Sabboth: and of the solemnities of the yēre.

Exod.20.23. 31. 34. 35.

Of garmēts

8 Others be of garmēts. As of the garments of the high Priest, & of his sonnes. Of the skirtes of the clokes.

Of meates.

9 Others there be also that commaund of meates: As of the meate of the halowed. Of the eating in ỳ place which the Lord chose: and of bloud not to be eaten. And of vncleane, and cleane beastes to be eaten.

Sacramentall.

10 Lastly there be some Sacramētall: as circumcisiō, & the Passeouer, whiche perteyne to all the people.

VVhy god prescribed so many ceremonies vnto his people.

These Ceremonies God prescribed vnto his people of Israel, & theyr Priestes, not bycause he is delited in sacrifices, sanctifications, purifyings and outwarde seruices, whiche is denied in diuers places of Scripture, but bycause he would turne hys people from the outwarde and straunge seruices which the Gentiles vsed, as we may see in Deuteronomie, and to beware that they shold not imagine and appoynt to themselues seruices, as they lusted: but abide in the obedience of Gods worde, and so to haue plenty inough of holy Ceremonies to practise themselues in, whereby as by a certain schooling, they might be instructed vnto the spiritual meanings. He woulde also that his people practised in certayne figures and shadowes, & things to come, shoulde conceyue in theyr minde a certayne fayth, hope, and expectation of them. The people was grosse and rude, hauyng nede of outwarde and bodily exercises of holy rites. They were also beside that of nature superstitious, and gyuen to idolatrie; Also, they had lyued a certayne hundreth of yeres in Egypt, and were somewhat infected with rites of the Egyptians. And there was some daunger also, least in the land which was promised them, they would embrace the rites of the Cananites, Wherefore he did vpon great wise purpose lifte and lymite in all the partes of theyr life bothe prophane and holy, with sure & stedfast lawes, precepts, doctrines, iudgements, and ceremonies: that it shoulde in no parte breake out from the sincerite of fayth and obedience. I suppose this to be the summarie and chiefe cause why God would prescribe vnto Israell so many and so sundry rytes, by Moses the mediatour of the olde Testament.

Of

Of the vse of Moses lavv.

The vse of this law is to be seene by the diuision of the preceptes thereof. For as they do differ, so the vse also of the lawe is diuers. There is one vse of the Morals, another of the Iudicial, and an other of the Ceremoniall preceptes.

The vse of Morals is, that ỳ people of the lawe be instructed in the knowledge of gods wil & iustice. For the law conteyneth doctrine, wherof it is called, Doctrine, as we noted before in the title What the law is.

And the doctrine of the law is contayned in these, as it were, chapters: Firste it teacheth of the will of God. The knowledge of Gods will is in two sortes. One whereby we knowe what is iust, and what is to be done: the other, what is vniuste, and to be eschued. And how excellent a gift of God this is, that he vouchsafeth to teache vs by his worde what he willeth and requyreth of vs, the Prophete telleth vs, whereas he doth extoll the law of God aboue Gold and most precious stones, and sayth, that it is sweeter than hony. It is a singular gifte, for that it was not made common in tyme passe to any, but vnto Israell.

It teacheth vvhat vve ought to bee, and vvhat vve bee.

Secondly, it dothe not only teach, but it doth also take our consciences to witnesse, against the disobedience of the wicked: wherefore it is sometymes called, Witnesse. Thirdly, it chargeth and commaundeth by the authoritie of Goddes maiestie, for whiche cause it is called, A precept. And is in cōmaundyng it constrayneth vs to yelde our earnest obedience to Gods will. When these things are done by the law of Moral precepts, we do know first what we ought to be, both towardes God and towarde our neyghbour, howe muche we are bound to loue, reuerence, feare, and worship our onely Lorde God with all our haste: and nexte vnto him, howe we ought to be affected lovingly and faythfully towardes our neyghbours, as towarde our selues; secōdly what we be, how corrupt and naughty, howe farre wide and different from true godlinesse & iustice. And this it is onely to haue our eyes truely lightned by the perfect & unmaculate iustice of God: & in ỳ contrary, to acknowledge plainly our iniustice, that is the corruption and depravation of our flesshe, and to beholde it in the lawe of God (as it were in a glasse) with the eyes of our minde. Hitherto briefly haue I entreated of the vse of the lawe, touchyng the Morall precepts.

The vse of Iudiciall precepts.

The consideratiō of the vse of the Iudiciall precептes is not harde to sōg. For it is cōprehended in the godnesse of the keping of the publike peace, to the stay of brawlings, contētions, theaftes, robberies, whoredoms, adulteries, murders, &c. wherby the common peace is wonte to be troubled. The wicked ar kept vnder, ỳ the innocent & iust may be at rest. To this purpose serue all the iudgements, whereby the causes & controuersies of the people are determined, & the wicked and haynous offenders punished. And this cōmoditie of keeping the common peace, is a greater matter than may be worthily esteemed. And this vse of the lawe is a manifest testimony, that God is not pleased wt the wickednes of naughty persons, persons, with the oppression of the good, and the trouble of publique tranquilitie.

The vse of the ceremoniall precepts.

1 The vse of the Ceremoniall precepts is this. Firste it behoued that some matters should be kepte in memory amongst the Israelites. To that purpose serued certayne holy Rites, as we read: When thy sonne shal aske the to morow or hereafter, saying: What meaneth those testimonies, ceremonies, & iudgements whiche the Lorde our God commaunded vs? Thou shalt say to him: We were bondmen to Pharao in Egipt, and the Lorde brought vs forth out of Egypt in a strong hād, & wrought wonderfull signes, greate and daungerous maruels agaynst Pharao in Egypt, and al his house, in our sight, and he brought vs forth frō thence, to bring vs in, and to giue vs a land of which he swore vnto our fathers: and the Lorde commaunded vs, that we should doe all these things of the lawe, and feare the Lorde our God.

Deut. 6.

Exod. 12. & 13.

And the Passeouer is ordeyned to this entent, that there shoulde be a remembrance of the passing of the Angell, when he spared Israell and smote the Egyptians. To this purpose was also the sanctifying of the first begotten. And the feaste of the Tabernacles was ordeyned for remembrance sake, that they shoulde not forget the Tentes in which they liued in desert.

Exod. 13.

2 Secondly, this people was to be taught in the seruice of the worshipping of God. And thereto serued Sacrifices.

3 Besides that, bycause it is the greatest parte of godlynesse to acknowledge the liberalitie of Gods goodnesse, from whence al things are yelded to our vses: to this purpose serued oblations, firste fruytes, and tenthes, whereby they were trayned to declare the gratefulnesse of theyr minde towardes God.

4 Besides this, there is also required puritie & holinesse of lyfe. Whereunto they were instituted, or rather put in remembraunce by their often purifyings and sanctifyings.

5 Theyr harts were also to be exercised with the vnderstanding of sinne, & with the desire of the grace of God. Hereunto we ordeyned sacrifices for sinnes and the Rites of cleansing.

6 Charitie also from one to another, was to be nourished in that people. Hereto serues the bākets of the holes & offrings. And bycause they were very grosse, and not very handsome to handle spirituall matters spiritually, to the entent they should not esteeme of the whole religion contemptiously, but deuoutly and honorably, there was vsed also the sanctifyings of persons, tabernacles, and vessels, &c. Besides that, there was also gyuen a certayne beautie vnto the function of the Priests, to the tabernacle, to the holy vessell of golde, siluer, precious stones, & silke. This I meant briefly to touch of the ceremoniall preceptes appoynted vnto Israel by Moses. I would not search the mysteries of them all. Some of the olde Fathers ranne out in this race, specially Origene, whom some that came after, folowed in Allegories. I suppose that the knowledge and light of the newe Testament is euen inough at large for Christian mē, not so that I do blame the studie of of olde writers, but for that I thinke it not mete for them whiche are in lighte, to trauayle so muche in shadowes. Of the Ceremonies of the newe Testament wee will speake, when tyme is.

Of the Strength and efficacie of the lavve.

It is one thing to be good, and an other thing to make a mā good. Psalm. 19.

For asmuch as the Apostle toke out of his place the arguments of his disputation, when he stroue against the trust that men had in lawe workes, it were not amisse briefly to touch the same. Wee do not speake of the efficacie of the lawe, whiche is expressed in the hartes of the beleeuing and holy men, whereof we wil speake in the place of the law of the spirite: but of the same whiche worketh in the hartes of carnall men, & is called the lawe of the letter.

A Similitude.

And before that we do speake of the strength & efficacie of the Lawe, I weene it were good to be admonished of the weakenesse and vnablenesse of it. For it is of that nature, that bothe may be talked of it, firste that it is weake and able to do litle, and also that it is strōg and of great efficacie, but in diuerse respects. The Iewes that be infected with the false persuasiō of the law of iustice, make the lawe bothe able and perfect to make a man iust and happy. And to this purpose they do cite places out of the Psalmes. They consider not that the lawe is spirituall, and that it requireth not onely the hands and the mouthe to do and to say, but the harts also, to beleeue and loue, which muste be also perfectly and alwayes affected with true iustice & heauenly holinesse. They do not consider the corruption of our flesche, whereby it is, that we be no more able to performe true iustice in our hartes, than we be in body to reach and touch the toppe of the skies. The lawe is in deede good, iust, holy, and perfect also, but it is two things to be good, iuste, holy, and perfect, and to make a man good, iuste, holy and perfect. If you do consider those thinges that be in the lawe, surely they be good: & there lacketh nothing that may be requisite to true godlinesse and iustice. But if you loke what it dothe in carnall men and voyde of the spirite of God, you shall finde most infirmitie and vnableneste: so that it dothe nothing lesse than make men good, iuste, holy, and perfect. Imagine that the law of the letter is a mayde most chaste, whiche beyng in a most filthy stewes of whores and harlots, dothe both liue exceeding chaste, and giueth commaundement dayly to the harlots to keepe chastitie, but yet considerying their desperate vnshamefastnesse, doth no good therewithall. Euē so it fareth with the law. It can not make others as it is it selfe. And thereof come the sayings of the Apostle: Bycause it was not possible for the lawe to do it, for that it was weakened by the flesche, God sent his sonne, &c. that the iustifying of the lawe might be fulfilled in vs. In deede the lawe hath iustice & righteousnesse to commaunde things that be iuste, but it is vnpossible that it can iustifie. For it is hindered and made vnable by the flesche, that is, by the corrupt and crooked affections of our flesche: whereby it commeth to passe, that the carnall man, the slaue

Rom. 8.

of

slaue of sinne, can not obey the holy, iuste, and good commaundementes. And it hath not thus muche power, that it can deliuer him from this corruption of the flesche, and make him of a wicked man a godly man, & giue him eares to heare, and a harte to obey, whiche is not the power of the letter, but of the spirite. So he saith: The law brought nothing to perfection, therefore for the weakenesse & insufficiency of it, it is reproued, and a better hope brought in, by whiche we may approche nere to God. The first lawe which was giuen to Adam in Paradise, of a matter most easie to haue bene obserued when his nature was yet sound and incorrupt, had no sufficiencie in it. What good then (I pray you) should the lawe do, giuen after the corruption of our nature, written in the tables not of our hartes, but in tables of stone? If you aske me, Wherefore then was it giuen? The Apostle answereth: It was giuen for transgressours, vntill the sede shoulde come whiche he promised. Item, Before that fayth came, we were kepte vnder the lawe, & were shut vp vnto the faith whiche should be reueled. So ý the lawe was as our scholemaster vnto Christ. Againe we may also see wherfore it was giuē, of that which we haue noted before, Of the vse of the lawe.

Ebre.7.

Galat.3.

How the Gospell is also weak.

And those things whiche I do report here of the weakenesse & insufficiencie of the law, whiche the people of Israell did ouer well fele, taketh place also in the worde of faith, as it is written in paper and parchment, & preached by mans voice, vnto men that be voide of the spirite of God, & destitute of the gift of faith. For the very same that happned to ý lawe, for the corruptiō of the flesche, among the Iewes, the same (it is a clere case) hath happened also to the Gospel, for the like corruption of the flesche, by manifest experience, bothe among the Iewes and the Gentils: and doth in these dayes also happen among fleshely and carnall Christian men. And the letter is insufficient and dead, to the carnall man.

But you wil say: For all that the Apostle doth report of it, that it is ý power of God to saue. I answer, he saith not simply, It is the power of God to saue, but he addeth, To euery one ý beleueth. It is another matter to say To al beleuers, than if he had sayd To al mē. Where faith is, there the gospel is ý power of God to saue. Then what is it else whē faith is away, but a dead & insufficient letter?

Againe you will say: Yet the Apostle doth put such difference betwixt the Gospell & the law, that he saith, that the ministerie of the Gospel cōsisteth not in the letter, but in the spirite. I answere. He speaketh of the efficacie of the Gospell whiche is in the elect by the spirite of faithe iustifying, therfore he calleth it the ministerie of the spirit and iustice. Therfore it remayneth, that as touchyng them which be not of God, and therfore heare not the worde of the Gospel, though it were preached by the very mouth of Christe himselfe: to them I say, the Gospell is a weake letter, and an vnfrutefull worde, not of it selfe, but of the faulte of the corrupt flesh: but in the respect of the elect, it is not the letter, but the spirit. Thus I meante in fewe wordes to giue a taste of, for them whiche do not well perceiue how weake al holsome doctrine is, vnlesse we be endewed with the heauealy gifte of faith and the spirite of grace. But let vs go on, to consider the strength and efficacy of the law.

The strength and efficacie of the law, whiche is called the Letter, we say is of two sortes. The one is that, whiche it bringeth of his owne, and may be called Proper: the other is improper, whiche it bringeth not of his owne, but worketh by the fault of our flesh. It is proper, because it bringeth the knowledge of sinne. Of this the Apostle speaketh in this wise: I knew not sinne, but by the lawe: for I knewe not concupiscence, vnlesse the lawe had sayde: Couet not. Againe: By lawe is the knowledge of sinne. And he meaneth of that radicall sinne, whiche is in our members, and raygneth in our flesh by corrupt Concupiscence: not of the sinne of any worke, as of periurie, murder, adulterie, theffte, &c. the knowledge of whiche sinne may be had otherwise of the law of nature, and ciuill ordinaunces. Further was knowen to be sinne, before there was any lawe made. &c. And the Gentiles were not destitute of suche knowledge of their sinnes. Secondly, he speaketh not onely of the knowledge of sinne whiche consisteth in our vnderstanding, but specially of that knowledge whiche is conceyued in our flesche by the liuely sense of sinne. That is to say: the lawe causeth that I do not onely vnderstand, but that I do also fele and proue by the remorse of my conscience, that there is sinne in me. Also, it is proper, because it doth

The lavve doth reprone of sinne and condēne. Ad. 3. Rom. 7.

Improper.

Lavve bringeth in trāsgressiō. Rom. 4.

Similitudes

without all excuse constraine vs to be guiltie of sinne, & doth subdue vs vnto the curse & condemnation, & ouerthrow the feeling of sinne & condemnation, it maketh our mindes ouerthrowen, and desirous of the grace of God. From thence commeth that, whiche the Apostle disputeth, and crieth out at length: Vnhappy I man, who shall deliuer me from the body of this death? The grace of God by Iesus Christe.

It is improper, because it bringeth in transgression, and wrong doyng: and that it doth not of it self, but by our faulte. It requireth obedience, and findeth doyng amisse, and so it happeneth, that it is the cause of transgression. For as the Apostle sayth, where is no lawe, there is no transgression. The lawe is giuen from God, the transgression commeth of vs. But for asmuche as it is necessary that the lawe go before transgression, and that there can be no transgression where is no lawe gyuen: it commeth to passe, that the lawe is the cause of the transgression, like as the cause of ingratitude, is the good tourne that went before, (for a man can not be ingrate, vnto whome no good turne hath bene done) and the cause of enuy is an other mannes prosperitie, and swearyng of periurie, and wedlocke, of adulterie, &c. This kind of cause is without blame, and yet it condēneth our malice by which it is wrought, that the law bydeth trāsgression, as a good turne ingratitude, an other mans prosperitie, enuy, &c. Whereas by order of nature, obedience ought rather to folow the law, than transgression after a good turne thanke-

thankefulnesse rather than vngratitude, and to the prosperitie of thy neyghbour, congratulation rather than enuie. So that the law may impute it vnto vs, rather that it maketh vs transgressours when it requyreth obedience, than we impute it to the lawe, that we do go out of the way, and transgresse the precepts of God.

The lawe stirreth vp sinne.

The efficacie of the lawe is also improper, because it rayseth vp, quickeneth, prouoketh, and stirreth the sinne lurkyng in our flesh, and so trayneth our affections more than it did before, and bringeth out fruyte to death. The Apostle remembred this when he sayde: For when we were in the flesshe, the affections of sinne whiche were by the lawe, wrought in my members, to bring forth fruite vnto death. And a little after: And sinne takyng occasion of the commaundement, wrought in me al concupiscence. For without lawe sinne was dead. And I liued sometyme without law: but when the cõmaundement came, sinne reuiued. And, The vertue of sinne is the Lawe. These things, sin doth by our fault, not by hyr owne, whereby we be so ordered, yea depraued, ẏ we do moste busily endeuour to do that whiche is forbidden, and desire things fore spoken, and that stolen bread is sweeter vnto vs, than that whiche is gotten by vpright labour. When the lawe sayth to vs (beyng thus disposed) Couet not thy neyghbours wyfe: the sinne which is in our flesshe is so stirred vp, that the more the couetyng of an other mans wife is forbidden, the more we do couet an other mans, & loathe our owne. Thus the affectiõs of sinnes are sharpened by the lawe: thus sinne taketh occasion by commaundement, and kindleth in vs all kinde of concupiscence: thus sinne without lawe is dead, that is weake and feble, but by the lawe it is reuiued and stirred vp. Thus law is the vertue of sinne, that is, the strength and worckyng. Wherefore the lawe is of like effect to our flesshe, as colde water is to lyme. And who can sufficiently ponder how great this malice of our nature is, whereby it falleth out, that the law forbiddyng iniustice, is the minister and cause of iniustice? Who can heale that sicke person, to whome the medicine is a nourishment and increase of the disease?

Rom. 7.

Hitherto also is that to be applied, that the lawe worcketh anger and death: wherefore it is also called of the Apostle, The killyng letter, and ministerie of death: and thus it doth not of his owne nature, but by our malice. It worcketh anger, when it maketh vs subiecte to the anger of God, for our transgression. And the same which was meant for lyfe, serueth to death, in making vs guiltie of death. It is called, sayth Augustine, the ministration of death, when the letter killeth, forbiddyng the euil which we do, and commaundyng the good whiche we do not.

1. Corinth. 15

Here some body will say: Then it had bene better that the law had neuer bene giuen to suche manner of men, that be not onely not iustified by it, but be also made more transgressours, and be so farre wide from the purchasing the fauour of God, that they be rather made subiect vnto his displeasure: and so farre from being thereby thereby reuiued, that they be rather killed. I answer: But this is the very matter why it ought to be giuen vnto such persons, whiche when they be euill, do nother acknowledge themselues to be euill, nother be sory for it, nother desire the heauenly grace being ready for thẽ in Christ. They muste be subiect vnto the feelyng of sinne, anger, curse, & death, that they may aspire vnto the grace of the kingdome of God, blessing, & life by faith in Christe. God woulde in this wise shew his displeasure to the disobedient, & trãsgressours, to haue mercy vpon them when they do amend, & to kil them by the feeling of condemnation and death, that when they be dead, he may releeue thẽ. Wherefore the law of the letter was not giuen, that by it we should be releeued, iustified and saued: but God ordeyned for euer the iustifying, releeuing, and saueing of mankind in Christ, whom he promised to the Fathers nowe and then, as well in the law, as before the law, that they should looke for him in fayth: and afterwarde he sent him in to this worlde, that they whiche do beleue, should be saued.

What it is to fulfil the Lavv.

The lawe is fulfilled when the figures and promises and promises of the lavv be fulfilled in Christ.

FOr asmuche as Christe sayth, Thinke not that I came to destroy the law or ẏ Prophets, I came not to destroy, but to fulfill it. Verily I say vnto you, whiles heaue and earth dothe passe, one iote or one pricke shall not passe of the law, vntill all things be done. Who soeuer therefore breaketh one of these litle commaundements, and dothe teache men so, shall be called the least in the kingdome of heauen: but who soeuer doth it and teacheth it, he shalbe called great in the kingdome of heauen. &c. I thinke the labour worth my trauayle, if I note somewhat touchyng the fulfilling of the lawes.

There are conteyned in the lawe, cõmandements, figures, & promises: of whiche there is none so set forth, but that it is requisite to be fulfilled. He that cõmaundeth, doth according vnto his authoritie, muste iustly require obedience. The same when he doth by figures, as it were by certain shadowes drawe forth (as it were in a plat) things to come, and promiseth by his answeres, he dothe according vnto his truth, whiche did prefigure and promise, and fulfill also euery thing in his tyme that is prefigured and promised.

1 First therefore the law is fulfilled when the figures and promises cõprehended in the law & Prophets, are fulfilled in the new Testament, by the comming and order of Christ. Of this fulfilling of the law, Christe speaketh, saying: These be ẏ wordes whiche I spake vnto you, when I was yet with you, that it is necessarie that all things be fulfilled, which be written in the lawe of Moses, & in the Prophetes & Psalmes of me. He saith not simply, that they shalbe fulfilled: but, that it is necessarie that al things be fulfilled which be written in the lawe of Moses. &c. Why was this necessary? For because it was not only so writte, but also ordeyned by God, whose will & promise muste of necessitie be performed and fulfilled, because of his omnipotencie whiche can not be withstanded, & his truth which can not be deceyued.

Luke. 16.

The newe Testament is the fulfilling of the lawe & prophets. Deut.4.

Therefore the newe Testament in Christ, is both the fulfilling of the law and of the prophets: Whereof it is not nede that we speake at this present. The first worke of the lawe is the dispensation of Christe, for whiche cause Christe is called The end of the lawe. This bestowing of Christ was fulfilled by the incarnation, death, resurrection, ascention of Christe, and the sending of the holy ghost. There remaineth yet certaine poynts to be fulfilled, as the conuersiō of Israel, told before of Moses, ỹ resurrection of the dead, & the iudgement of the worlde. And we may be ascertayned of that that is to come, by those things that be fulfilled already, albeit we were destitute of the fayth of Gods truth.

Deut.4.

The lawe is fulfilled by teachyng and liuing.

2 Secondly, the law is fulfilled by teachyng and liuing, as it is by teachyng & liuing broken. By teaching, when it is well expoūded to the people, not accordyng vnto the teachings of the Phariseis, but accordyng to the natural spirite and sense of it: that is, accordyng to the minde and sense of the lawmaker. Examples whereof are set forth in the gospell. He that teacheth pharisaically, breaketh the lawe, & fulfilleth it not. It is fulfilled by liuyng, firste, when those things be commonly obserued, whiche are to be done commonly. Secondly, when the things whiche touch euery man priuately, are done priuately. For all the precepts are not to be obserued commonly of all mē, but some things do belong seuerally vnto seuerall persons. The Priestes and Leuites haue theyr peculiar precepts, whiche can not be fulfilled but onely by them. No man dothe fulfill the lawe in doyng that whiche belongeth not vnto him, though it be commaunded in the law whiche he dothe: but he that dothe it, breaketh the law.

Matth.5.

3 Thirdly, there is also respecte to be had of the times. There be many things cōmaunded in the law, which are tied to certayne tymes, out of which they may be broken, but they can not be fulfilled. There is a certayne day appointed for the sabbath, and there is a certaine time appoynted for the memory of the Passeouer, like as for other certen tēporarie obseruations also. Of this sorte is the dispositiō of God, wherby the course of the law and prophets, sabbath, circumcision, Passeouer, lawmeates, sacrifices, &c. were determined vntill the light and truth of the New testament. And in case any man will neglect the determination of time disposed of God, and with preposterous obseruation mingle the shadowes of the old Testament with the light of the new, and so confounde the night and day togither, he maketh himselfe a transgressor, and not a fulfiller of the lawe, as many go aboute to do now adayes, when they do endeuor to bryng agayne a day after the fayre, the lawish sabbath, and the obseruance of lawish meates.

4 Fourthly, there muste be consideration had also in the fulfillyng of the law of the locall determination. Those things that be restrayned to certayne places, can not be fulfilled in any other place. Let the Iewe go and offer accordyng vnto the law, and let him do these thyngs whiche be manifestly restrayned to the place chosen by God, and to the promised lande, when he hath bene now so many a hundred yeres turned out of that lande, and taste a great way of from the chosen place by God.

5 Fiftely, it is requisite to the fulfillyng of the lawe, that it be accomplished not in one poynte alone, but in all: yea it can not bee obserued in one or two preceptes onely, neglectyng the reste. He that offendeth in one (sayeth James) is guiltie of all. It is one thyng to honor the parentes, and an other to fulfill the lawe. It is possible inough, that he that honoreth hys parents, may worshyp straunge Gods, may worshyp Images, prophane the Sabbath, blaspheme and dishonour the name of God, and do al euill against his neyghbour. Wherefore it can not be sayde, that he is an obseruer of Gods lawe, whiche dothe so many wayes breake it. So that it is requisite to the fulfillyng of Gods lawe, that it be accomplished in all the cōmaundements thereof.

6 Sirtly, to fulfill the lawe, is not in worke onely to do that which the law cōmaundeth, and to eschue that which it forbiddeth, but to conforme himselfe also in hart to the meaning of the lawe. The lawe is spirituall (layth the Apostle) therefore it requireth godlinesse, iustice, holynesse, not onely of mouth and handes, but specially of the very Spirite and harte, and that as well in the obseruāce of the First table, as of the Seconde also.

Some body will say: Then who is able to fulfill the lawe? I answer: He that is carnall, is not able to accomplish the spirituall lawe, as the Apostle doth also lament of himself, saying: The lawe is spirituall, but I am carnal, solde vnder sinne. Christe only hath perfectly fulfilled the law. Christian men do also fulfil the law perfectly in Christe, & imperfectly in themselues. For in as much as loue is the fulnesse of the law, so far forth they that do sincerely loue, do fulfill the law. But the loue also of ỹ faithful is not perfect, as long as they be in this flesh. Therefore they do not fulfill the lawe perfectly. Finally in as much as they do beleue the promisses of God comprised in the law, so far forth also beleuing in Christ, they do fulfill the lawe. But they beleue none perfectly, but accordyng vnto ỹ measure of faith receyued of God. Wherfore they do neither this wise perfectly fulfill the law. Therefore it foloweth ỹ vniuersally of all men, there is not one that dothe perfectly and without reproofe fulfill the lawe, sauyng onely Christe. So that Peter did not without cause say: Why do ye tempte God, laying a yoke vpō the necke of the disciples, whiche neyther we, nor our fathers coulde beare? Conclude therfore my brother, accoding vnto the sentence of the Apostle, which foloweth there: that saluation and lyfe is gotten not by fulfillyng of the lawe, but by the grace of our Lorde Iesus Christe, to them which do beleue in him.

Rom.13.

None euer fulfilled the lawe perfectly but Christe alone.

Act.15.

Rom.6.

Of the lawe of the Spirite.

After the Apostle had disputed in the.8. chapter to the Romains of the strēgth and efficacie of the law, whiche worketh in carnall liuyng men, in the chapter that foloweth he addeth vnto it of the grace of the holy spirite, whiche is gyuen to them that beléeue in Chriſte, saying: For the lawe of the spirite of lyfe, hath made me fréé from the law of sinne & death. Wherfore before we make an end of this place of Law, we muſt consider of this law of the spirit. Ambroſe maketh ỹ law of the spirit to be fayth, or the law of fayth, by whiche we be deliuered frō the second death wherein sinne is condemned: whereunto lyfe may be ascribed, bycause that in remittyng of sinne, it deliuereth from death & giueth lyfe. Chryſoſtome vnderſtandeth by the lawe of the spirite of lyfe, the holy spirite, from whome lyfe commeth. He calleth here the lawe of the spirite, the spirite: for as he calleth the lawe of sinne, sinne: so the law of the spirite, the spirite. In my iudgement as the lawe of the letter is the lawe wrytten by letters in tables of ſtone, or of paper, contaynyng nothyng else but the letter, teachyng in déede and enforcing men, but weake and inſufficient: so the lawe of the spirite is not the lawe written in ſtony tables with inke and letters, but put into the harts of the elect and beléeuing, by the spyrite of God. And this law written by the holy spirite, is not a certayne doctrine that teacheth and cōmaundeth what we muſt beléeue, what is to be ſerued & worſhipped, loued, & what is to be done towardes God and our neyghbor, but it is the very way and drifte of our minde to beléeue the heauenly grace, to loue, hope, to do & ſuffer any thing accordyng to the will of God: and at a worde, to liue in Chriſte. And for bicause this drifte is the worke of the holy spirite, it is termed The law of the spirite, for a difference from the law of the letter. The very lawe of Moſes was alſo made by the holy spirite, and is spirituall: but it is not written by the finger of God in the hartes of men, but in tables of ſtone. Wherefore it is not bycause they be giuen by ſundry authors, that the one is termed The law of the letter, and the other the The law of the spirite, hauing both one maker of them, but that there ſhould be a diſtinction betwixt the diſpenſations of the olde & new Teſtament, and the difference & diuerſe lawgiuing of the ſelfe ſame spirit, ſhould be expreſſed. And whereas he calleth this spirite, that is the teacher of hartes, the spirite of life, it is for that, that he dothe giue life, as Chriſt alſo reporteth of him, saying: The fleſh profiteth nothing, it is the spirite that doth giue lyfe. So he calleth the holy spirite in this diſputation of the lawe, the spirite of life, in reſpect of that, that the letter of Moſes lawe dothe kyll, and the miniſterie of it is the miniſterie of death, as we made mention before. For them whome the lawe of the letter maketh ſubiect vnto anger & death, the lawe of the spirite dothe giue life vnto, and ſaue.

V What is the lawe of the spirite.

But we muſt beware that we do not thinke, that as the lawe not by his owne, but by our fault is weake & inſufficient to iuſtifie, but ſufficient to kill, that in like ſort the law of the spirite is not ſufficiēt to iuſtifie and giue life not by his owne, but by our ſtrength. For it is not hindered by our corruption and malice, but that it may accomplithe hys worke in our hartes, ſo as the lawe of the letter is: but it cōmeth furniſhed, firſte with the blonde of Chriſte, wherewithall it waſheth and blotteth out our ſinnes: ſecondly we be alſo by that treaſure of grace, by which we be made one body with Chriſt, made partakers of his righteouſneſſe, and deliuered from all condemnation, and alſo regenerate into new men, ſo that ſuppreſſing the reyne of ſin, we may ſerue iuſtice. This grace and law of the ſpirite, furniſhed with the ſtrength of God, doth iuſtifie the wicked, reconcile the damned, and giue lyfe to the dead.

This lawe of the ſpirite of life, Iames calleth The law of perfect libertie, not only bicause it is fréé and vtterly voyde frō al vnwilling compulſion, but alſo bycause it maketh men fréé: which thing Paule expoūdeth, saying: For the lawe of the ſpirite of life, hath made me fréé frō the law of ſinne & death. By the lawe of ſinne, he vnderſtandeth the ſtrength & tirány of ſin reygning in our fleſh, whereby we be drawen and egged vnto ſin. The law of death is, whereby ſinners are appoynted to euerlaſting death. For the reward of ſinne is death. So that the lawe of the ſpirite of life, doth not worke this onely in vs, that we be not condemned thorow the imputation of iuſtice, which is by faith in Chriſt: but it killeth alſo the ſtrength of ſinne in vs, ſo that ſinne reigneth not now in vs, but the vertue and grace of Chriſt, and that we do ſerue ſinne no more, but iuſtice: we be not ſubiect to death, but chalenged vnto true life. Albeit theſe matters do belong to the place of Grace rather than to this place of Lawe, yet I thought it good in fewe wordes to adde it, bycauſe the Apoſtle did adde it vnto the diſputatiō of the law. But ſome man will ſay agayne, that is more affectioned to Philoſophie, than eyther to the lawe of Moſes, eyther to Chriſtian fayth: Seing that the lawe of nature is written by God in the hartes of all men, and doth cōtayne in it the chief points of godlineſſe and iuſtice, what nede is it that the very ſame lawe in déede, once written in our hartes by God, ſhoulde bée written agayne by the holy spirite? We do anſwére: If the firſt wrytyng had bene ſufficient vnto true godlineſſe and iuſtice, then the ſeconde had not bene added vnto it. The firſte, whiche is of nature (of which we ſpake before) hath this in it, that thereby wé haue a perſeuerance of God, and do vnderſtande the lawe of equitie, and that our conſcience is ſo reſtrayned vnto the deuotion of God, and to the Law of equitie, that it doth reproue trangreſſours: but it dothe lacke in that, firſte that it is ignorant of the myſtery hidden from the beginnyng of the worlde, whereby mankinde is deliuered from ſinne and death, by the word of God incarnate: ſecondly it giueth nother loue, nor endeuour, nor ſtrength to the kéepyng of the law of equitie, but through the corruption of our fleſhe (whiche it can not amend) it is made vtterly weake and vnable, ſo that the Ethnikes as well as the Iewes, knowyng thoſe things that be beſte, do the worſte. Wherefore ſeyng that neyther this law, neyther the law written coulde help our corrupt nature, it was nede to haue a more diuine, able, & inward lawe, by whiche our inwarde man hould be renewed, & be informed in

A queſtion of the lawe of nature.

V Wherein the lawe of nature lacketh.

the very inwarde and secrete corners of the hart, to true godlines & iustice. And that was this law of the spirite of life, of which we now speake.

Of the Abrogation of the lavv of Moses.

The lavv of Moses abrogate in deede.

IT is a cleare matter not onely among the Christians, which of the Israelites receyued Christ the son of God & sauiour of the worlde in beleuing, but among the Iewes also that do exceedingly glory of the law, ý the law of Moses which is cõprehended in writing, is in very deede abrogate. Of Christian men there is no doubt. Of the Iewes peraduenture some body wil doubt. For they do kepe the circũcision, washyngs, sabbathes, choyce of meates, & I cã not tell what other matters cõmaũded in the law of Moses. But seyng that now they be cast out of the land of Promisse, & haue vtterly lost that which is the chief matter in the law, of theyr ceremonies & seruices, whiche is the priesthod, with all the obseruations of the sacrifices, oblations, & burnt offerings, & hostes, who seeth not that the lawe of Moses is made in very deede frustrate & abrogate: so that what soeuer blinde men do kepe of it, they kepe it not according to the wil of God, but according to the darknesse & frowardnesse of their harts? Wherefore it might seeme to be a matter superfluous, to note any thing of ý matter touching the abrogation of the law, bicause it is in deede so manifest, that no wise man can doubt therof, vnlesse the cõsciences of many weake folkes conscience were assayled with this temptation, that a lawe gyuen by God, ought not to be abrogate: specially seeing that it is without doubte, good, iuste, holy, and perfect, and by Christ himselfe also not onely confirmed in woords, but kept also vntil his death. For theyr cause this place is to be considered a while. But forasmuche as toucheth the carnal and obstinate Iewes, or those Christians whiche do vnderstand the grace and dispensation of the new Testamẽt, it were not needefull that we shoulde speake any thing of this matter.

First of al, it was manifestly told before by the Prophecie of the prophete Jeremie, that it should come to passe, that there shoulde be gyuen a new law by God, & the old giuen by Moses, abrogated: we reade in this wise: Lo the dayes shal come (sayth the Lord) and I will make with the house of Israell, and with the house of Juda, a newe couenant or a newe bargayne. Not as the bargayne whiche I made with theyr Fathers in the day when I toke them by their handes, to bryng them out of the land of Egipt, which falke brake couenant, and I despised them sayth the Lorde: but this shalbe the couenant whiche I will stryke with the house of Israell: after these dayes, (sayth the Lorde) I will gyue my lawe in the middes of them, and I will wryte it vpon theyr harte, and I wil be to them as a God, and they shall be to me as a people. And leaste some man may shifte in this place, that the Prophete did prophecie of a newe newe Couenant and not of a newe law, it is manifest that the Hebrewe woorde which signifieth Couenant or bargayne, is in this place put for law. For God did not Couenant wt Israel in the mount Sina otherwise than by law: wherevpon the tables of the lawe be called The tables of the couenant. And the Prophete after he had sayde: And I will strike a newe bargayne with the house of Israell, and with the house of Juda, &c. to expounde it he doth adde, But this shalbe the bargayne whiche I wil strike with the house of Israel: After those dayes (sayth God) I will giue my law in the middes of them, and I will write it vpon theyr hart, &c. Therefore the same which he termed a new bargayne, in expounding he calleth it His law, which he wold wyte in theyr hartes. And the Ebrewes do acknowledge this when they do say in the boke Mechilta, that there is no couenant but the law.

1 So that by this Prophecy is declared a good whiles before that the law of Moses should ceasse, by bryngyng in of a new law.

2 Secondly, that there was a certayne time appointed by God, when this abrogation of Moses lawe, and the bryngyng in of a new, should be. Lo (sayth he) the dayes shall come, And, After those dayes. And there was a time certayne appoynted for the new law, of whiche he speaketh, saying: Lo the dayes shall come.

3 He doth also note the difference of the olde and newe lawe, when he sayth: I will gyue my lawe in the middes of thẽ, and I will wryte it vpon theyr hart: whiche he sayde for the difference of the olde, whiche he wrote in the tables of stone, and not in the hartes of Israell.

4 Besides that, he allegeth also the cause of the abrogatyng of the olde law, and bryngyng in the new, when he sayth: Which brake my couenãt, & I neglected thẽ. These be ý things well nere, that be conteyned in this prophecie of Jeremie. And in Esay there is manifestly promised a law, which shall come forth of Sion and Hierusalem. That was not Moses law, whiche was giuen in Sina, not in Sion. And in case that Moses law should haue endured to the ende of the world, there had bene no cause to haue sent another. Wherefore it is manifest, that they do exceedingly erre, whiche suppose that the lawe of the letter is so gyuen of God, that it endureth for euer. Esa.2.

And that there shoulde be an abrogation of Moses lawe by the comming of Messias our Sauiour, may be proued, that it was foreshewed euen by that that there was promised another Priest, whiche should be not accordyng to the order of Aaron, but accordyng to the order of Melchisedech: whiche Psalme dothe altogither Prophecie of Christe. And in the foretellyng of the translation of the Priesthod, there was also foretolde the translation of the Law. An ende was made of the Priesthod of Aaron, by the Priest Christe: Ergo, the Lawe was ended also by hym whiche had the Priesthod of Aaron, and appoynted Priestes not of the trybe of Juda, but of the trybe of Loui. But Christe was of the tribe of Juda, whereof we may see in the Epistle to the Ebrewes. Psalm.110. Hebr.7.

The abrogation of the lavve vvas the cõmyng of Messias.

In deede they do consider little the glory of the heauenly king Chriſte, that ſuppoſe his kingdome, as deſtitute of the heauenly lawe, was to be included in the lawe of the letter, gyuen by Moſes. A new kyng, a newe Lawe. Chriſte is a newe king, ſuch a one as the worlde neuer had before, nor ſhall haue hereafter, muche leſſe any one people of this worlde: and he receyued this his lawe, togyther with his kingdome, of his Father, méete for his reygne, & brought it into this worlde: at the riſing of the whiche, the Lawe of the letter, euen as the Mone at the riſing of the Sunne, was quayled and abrogate. Neyther the Iewes nor the Chriſtians dare denie, that Chriſte is a kyng, Prieſte, and Prophete, and yet they do gyue him a kyngdome without lawe, a Prieſthode without ſacrifice, the office of a Prophete without the worde, as many as do include his diſpenſation vnder the lawe, ſacrifices and wordes of Moſes.

We must consider the glory of the heauenly king.

Beſides that that they do take frō the kingdome of Chriſte his order & direction of law, they do alſo declare how little they vnderſtande the corruption of mankinde, the weakeneſſe and inſufficiencie of Moſes lawe, the vertue of redemptiō of Chriſt. They perceyue not the vſe of the lawe of the letter, they cōſider not the courſe of the ſcholing of Moſes, and the ſundry meanes of the inſtruction of one people choſen by God out of all people to be his flocke, of all the people of the whole worlde congregate vnto one Church of Chriſt.

The firſt Church of Chriſt gathered togyther by the Apoſtles at Hieruſalē, was a folower of Moſes law. They vnderſtode not yet the eſtate & vertue of the kingdome of Chriſte. Beſides that they were not yet altogither delyuered from the receyued cuſtome of the lawiſh obſeruations. Furdermore that ſtaggeryng and emulation of theſe was to be borne withall, for the reſte of the Iewes, among whome the Chriſtians of that tyme lyued, leaſt by the vnſeaſonable reiectyng of the law, the courſe of grace mighte be vtterly hindered among the Iſraelites. But the caſe of thoſe Chriſtians is farre otherwiſe, whiche after ſo many hundred yéeres of the reygne of Chriſte and abrogation of the lawe, and of the ſpreddyng abroade of the goſpell of God throughout the worlde, ſuppoſe they muſte returne to the ſhadowes of the lawe, and the mayſterſhip of Moſes ſchoolings.

The first Church of Chriſt gathered togyther by the Apoſtles at Hieruſalē, was a folower of Moſes law.

Hitherto we haue ſhewed that the lawe of Moſes ſhoulde be abrogate by the commyng of Chriſt and bryngyng in of a new lawe: now conſequently we muſt ſée how farre forth it is abrogate. We muſt not cōſider in the abrogation of the lawe any fault of it, why it ought to be abrogated (for it is holy, iuſte, good & perfect,) but we muſte looke to the diſpoſition of God, whereby the olde Teſtament was ſo determined, that it ſhoulde bée diſcharged and called by the bryngyng in of the new. So that in reſpect that the olde Teſtament was abrogate by a newe commyng into his place, in that reſpect alſo is the lawe of the old Teſtament abrogate. In aſmuche as Moſes gaue place vnto Chriſt, ſo far forth the old lawe gaue place to the Goſpell of Chriſt. In aſmuch as the worde of ý mounte mount of Sina gaue place to the word that went out of Zion, ſo farre forth the law is abrogate.

They demaund whether it be all abrogate or no: We aunſwere: Sure if all gaue place to Chriſt, al his lawe gaue place to the lawe of Chriſt. If there be anye imperfectneſſe in the law of Chriſt, if there be any authoritie, light, vertue in the law of Moſes, which is not in ý lawe of Chriſt, let the lawe of Chriſte ſerue for ayde of the law of Moſes. But God forbidde. That whiche was weake and inſufficient was také away, bycauſe it could not iuſtifie: and it was then taken away, when there came a new lawe that had ſtrēgth to iuſtifie and to ſaue. Howe ſhoulde the power to ſaue, clayme ayde and ſuccoure of weakeneſſe and vnableneſſe, wherevnto it did ſuccéede, to the intente it ſhould performe the ſame which the other could not do.

In the law is conteyned (as I dyd declare alſo before) commaundementes, promiſes, and figures. The commaundementes of the lawe bée Morall, Judiciall, and Ceremoniall. It is manifeſt that the ceremonials are ceaſſed by that, that the verye Prieſthode of the lawe, wherevnto the ceremonies were annexed, was abrogate by ý Prieſthode of Chriſt, according to the order of Melchiſedech. And that the Judicials are alſo ceaſſed, it is declared by that, that the whole gouernance of the Iſraelites as they ordeyned for theyr dwellyng in the land of promiſe, ceaſſed from that time, that they were turned out, and began to dwell among the Gentiles, without King, without guydes, without Prieſts, and without lawe.

Now are left the morall lawes, ſpecially the Decalogus. If they can iuſtifie, if they worke not anger, if they be not the vertue of ſinne, if they bée not the pricking letter and killing, if they doe not make them that be vnder the law ſubiect vnto curſe, if they do not belong to the ſcholing of Iſraell vntill the promiſed ſéede ſhould come, it is neceſſary that they abyde. But if they be weake, if they be letter, if they doe worke tranſgreſſion, anger, curſe, and death: and Chriſt by the lawe of the ſpirite of life, deliuered them that beléeued in him from the lawe of the letter, (whiche was weake to iuſtifie, and ſtrong to condemne) and from curſe, (bēyng made the curſe for vs) ſurely they be alſo abrogated. If they be alſo abrogated, then the whole law is abrogated, for aſmuch as all the partes of it bée abrogated.

But héere ſome man will ſay: If the Decalogus be alſo abrogate, then no man is any longer bounde to the kéeping of it, and ſo we ſhal not ſinne in ſeruing ſtrange Gods and Images, in vſing the name of GOD in vayne, in prophaning the Sabbath, in diſhonoring oure parentes, in killing, adultering, ſtealing, bearing of falſe witneſſe, and coueting thoſe things that be our neyghbours. To this obiection we made aunſwere in the fourth precept of the Decalogus. If it bée a Chriſtian man that ſayeth thus, let him hearken to the Apoſtle, whiche aunſwereth this queſtion in this wiſe: Yon be not (ſayth he) vnder the law, but vnder grace: What thē? Shal we ſinne bicauſe we be not vnder the lawe, but vnder grace? God forbid. Know you not, that to whom you haue giuen your selues as seruauntes to obey, that you be his seruants to whome you do obey, eyther of sinne to death, eyther of obedience to rightuousnes: This is Paule. And so we doe also answer this obiection. He that is a Christian man, though he be not vnder the scholing of Moses, yet he is not therefore at libertie to doe those things that be vngodly and wicked, & vnlawfull to be done. Abraham surely was not vnder the scholing of Moses, yet it followeth not for all that, that it was lawfull for him to do those things that were wicked and vniust. It is a wicked matter to haue strange gods to serue Images, to blaspheme the name of God, to prophane the Sabboth: and it were amisse to dishonor oure Parents, to kyll, to committe adultery, &c. Wherefore though this Decalogus had neuer bin prescribed by Moses to the rude people, yet Abraham had sinned, if he hadde committed any of these things: yea and also the Iewe as well as the Christian man, should sinne in doyng of these things. Abraham (I saye) and the Christian man, bycause they be the seruantes not of sinne, but of rightuousnes: the Iewe, bycause he should doe contrary vnto the law which he bound himselfe to obey. The Christian man is not vnder Moses, but vnder Christ. If those things do not displease Christ, if they be not much different, yea rather cõtrary to his law, if they doe not repugne vnto the rightuousnes whych we receyued of him, let it be lawfull for a Christian man to do them. But if they be most far wide from the spirite, worde, kingdome, iustice and life of Christ, how can a Christian man say: If I be not vnder Moses and vnder the law of Moses, Ergo, I may at libertie haue strange Gods, worship images, and doe all things that be forbidden in the Decalogus. Those things they do which be the seruants of synne, not they whiche be the seruauntes of rightuousenesse. The boy whiche is vnder the scholemaisters handes, is verye earnestly instructed that he feare God, and gyue due honor vnto his Parentes: that he flée from lyes, theftes, slaunders, ribaude wordes, wantonnesse &c. Whyleft he is vnder hys Scholemaisters hande, he is instructed and taughte wyth these lawes. Afterwardes when he is come to the time of rype age and libertie, and is no longer vnder the maysterie of the Scholemaister, shall it bée lawfull for hym and at hys libertie, not to feare God, to sette at lyght hys Parentes, to kyll, to committe adultery, to steale, lye, &c? No, in no wise. But if he do those things, he sinneth more grieuously than if he dyd them béyng yet vnder the Scholemaister. The case of them is such, that be not vnder the Scholemaister Moses, but vnder Chryste. Wherefore a Christian man doyng against those things that be commaunded in the Decalogus, doth sinne more outragiously, than he that should do so béyng vnder the lawe: so farre off is he from being free from those thynges that bée there commaunded. For though he be free from Moses, yet hée is not free from the obedience of Christe, and of true iustice. And if Moses doe not condemne, yet the disobedience it selfe, repugning vnto Christe and true rightuousenesse, doth condemne the transgressor and treader vnder feete of the heauenly grace, muche more grieuouser, than they be condemned of Moses, that be disobediente vnto his scholing. Yet some bodye will say: If the Decalogus do belong vnto the scholing of Moses, and Christian men be not vnder Moses but vnder Christ: howe came it to passe among Christian men, that the Decalogus is any parte of the Catechismus? I aunswere: In the congregation of Christian menne there be ponglings and little ones, and there be men well growne and more soundly endewed with the perseuerance of spirituall thinges. For ponglings and little ones, as yet rude and vnpractised, there is neede of the ministerie of the Catechisme, that there may be shewed, and that in a shorte tale, what is to be beleeued, how men muste liue, what, how, and to whom we ought to pray. For this purpose there were pickte out certayne lessons méte for the rude and ponglings. The forme or lesson of the faith is cõprised in the Créede, whiche is called the Apostles. The forme of liuing is taken of that, that is conteyned in the Decalogus. And that mighte haue done muche good, that the Iewes shoulde the sooner haue ioyned themselues vnto the congregation of the Christians, vnlesse they had bin hindered by an obstinate blindenesse. The forme of praying was vsed according vnto the teaching of ỹ Lorde. And whereas the Churche doth yet vse the Decalogus, it is not for that, that it dothe acknowledge it selfe to be vnder the scholing of Moses, but bycause that thys forme of Decalogus was iudged to agrée with the rudenesse and capacitie of the yonglings and symple sorte. For them that be more thoroughly growē in faith, it is ynough to know thys briefe lesson, Loue the Lorde thy God with all thy hearte, and thy neyghboure as thy selfe: but it is nedefull that the ruder sort bée taught some larger lesson. Wherefore it is so farre from the truth, that we doe condemne the vse of the Decalogus, that we do also much commende their studie and diligence, whiche did firste iudge it méete to bée vsed in the Catechising or admitting to the faith of the ponglings.

Of the Decalogus.

Rom. 6.

Of the Couenant and Testament of God.

For asmuche as in holy Scriptures we doe oftentimes fall into matters touchyng the couenant and testamente of God, we doe not without cause appoint this place for the consideration therof. And we suppose that wée do it not amisse after the place of the lawe, whiche is it selfe also a parcell of Gods couenaunt.

Couenant, pacte, testament.

1 First these wordes be commonly vsed in Scriptures: couenant, bargayn or agréement, and Testament, whiche the Latine interpreter vsed without difference. The Ebrewe worde signifieth a couenant, a bargaine or agréemente, the Gréeke word, an appoyntmẽt and bargaine. What a couenant and bargaine is, it is so well knowen, that we nede not not to note any thing of it. The word Teſtamente, is commonly vſed of that whiche is bequeathed: as of inheritance to certayne perſons, by them that are like to dye. A Couenaunte and bargayne néedeth not of neceſſitie to haue deathe of the teſtatour, but a teſtament doth. And couenants and bargaines among men, are rather broken vp again by death and made voyde, whereas teſtamẽts are not ratified but by death. And beſides that, couenants and bargaynes are confirmed by an othe, whiche no wiſe man doth require in a teſtamẽt making. Wherefore there is muche diuerſitie betwixt a couenant and a teſtament. And whereas the word of Teſtament is made ſo frequent and common among Chriſtian folkes, it is in reſpecte of Chriſte, by whoſe death (as our mediatour and teſtatour) the grace of oure redemption was confirmed.

A marueilous matter that God made a couenant vvith men.

2 Secondly, we muſt conſider that in Scriptures the binding of the couenaunt and bargaine, is attributed vnto God. It is a matter right marueilous, that that infinite Maieſtie, whoſe will and power it is méete to be moſt frée, vouchſafeth to bind and ſtreyne himſelfe to the conditions of bargaines, driuen vnto it by no neceſſitie, nor allured by the hope of any commoditie to doe it. He is good, but yet he myght at libertie haue declared his goodneſſe towards whome he woulde, and haue withdrawen it from whome he would, without any bond of ſure couenãt: but he would haue vs to knowe what we myghte be ſure to truſt vnto of it. Thus hée might haue done vpon his word only and promiſes, without any bonde of othe: but his meaning was to confirme our minds in faith and al truſt towardes him, by bond of couenaunt and othe. For by this meanes hée woulde haue the aſſuredneſſe of hys purpoſe witneſſed towardes vs, that by theſe two vnmouable poyntes, promiſe and othe, (for it is impoſſible for God to lie) we might haue a moſt ſtrong comfort, whereunto we in all temptatiõs, and to find a faſt anker holde to reſt vppon vntill the ende. Without this truſt of faithful mind, conceyued vppon the truth and ſtedfaſtneſſe of Gods couenaunte, it can not be that we may be made partakers for euer of the goodneſſe of God. So that I ſuppoſe this is the chiefe cauſe, why that infinite and euerlaſting goodneſſe of Gods Maieſtie, woulde enter couenaunte with vs: whyche woulde God we did hartily embrace, and neuer made voyde in vs, by oure vnbeliefe and vnthankefulneſſe.

The cauſe of Gods couenant.

3 Thirdly, I finde that the couenant of God is of two ſortes. One is generall, an other is ſpeciall and euerlaſting. The generall couenante is ỳ, which he made with hys whole frame of the earth and all that dwelleth therein, as well beaſtes as men, with the day alſo and the night, winter and ſommer, cold and heate, ſéede time and harueſt. &c. Of this couenante it is redde in this wiſe: Lo, I do make my bargaine with you and with youre ſéede after you, and to euery ſoule liuing which is with you, as well in byrdes as alſo in beaſtes and cattell of the earth, and al which came out of the Arke, and with all the beaſtes of the earth. I wil make my couenaunt with you, and all fleſh ſhall no more be killed with the waters of the fludde: nor there ſhall bée hereafter no more any fluddde to deſtroy the earthe, &c. And agayne: I will no more curſe the land for mens ſake, &c. All the dayes of the land, the ſéede time and harueſt, the colde and heate, the ſommer and winter, the night and the day, they ſhal not ceaſe. And Jeremie ſayth: Thus ſayth the Lord, ſayth he: If my couenant ſhall breake with the day, and my couenãt with the nighte, ſo that the daye and the night be not in their due time. &c. This couenaunt is generall, bycauſe it concerneth the whole world: and it may be called earthly and temporal, bycauſe it doth touch the ſtedfaſtnes of earthly matters, as it appeareth by the very words: and it dureth no longer than the ſtandyng of thys world, which ſhall once periſh. And I do not ſpeake for that, that I do condemne ſo noble, manifeſt, and generall grace of oure creator, withoute which this world can not endure, bycauſe it is earthly and temporal. God forbidde. Surely he is not worthy to enioy the good euerlaſting, that maketh nothing of the earthly and temporall goodes. Yea he is vnthankefull for the gifte of hys life, and not worthy to enioy this aire whiche he doth breath of.

The ſpeciall and euerlaſting couenant, is the ſame which hée hathe vouchſaued to make with his electe and beléeuing. Of thys it is redde in Geneſis in this wiſe: Thy name ſhal no longer be called Abram, but thou ſhalt be called Abraham, bycauſe I haue appoynted thée to be a Father of many nations, and will make thée encreaſe exceedingly, and I wil make nations of thée, yea and kings ſhall ſpring out of thée. Moreouer I wyll make my couenante betwixt me and thée, and thy ſéede after thée into generations for an euerlaſting couenant, that I may be thy God, and thy ſéedes after thée, &c. Thys couenante is ſpeciall, bycauſe it perteyneth not vnto all, but vnto the elect and beléeuing only, that is to ſay, to Abraham the father of all beléeuers, and hys ſéede. And the ſéede of Abraham are not onely the Iſraelites in fleſhe, if they be faithfull, but all they alſo of the Gentiles whiche beléeue in Chriſt, and are choſen to euerlaſting life. So the Apoſtle ſayth: Not they that be the children of the fleſh, they be not the children of God: but they that be the children of promiſe, be eſtéemed in the ſéede. Agayne: If you be of Chriſt, then you be Abrahams ſéede, and according vnto promiſe, heires. And for this cauſe Abrahams name was changed in the verye couenaunt, and he was no more called Abram, that is the high or great Father, but Abraham, that is the father of the multitude, that is of the Gentiles, as God himſelfe expoundeth, ſaying: Nor thy name ſhall no more be called Abram, but thou ſhalte bée called Abraham: for I haue appoynted thée a father of a multitude of nations. He ſaith not, Bycauſe I haue appoynted thée for a father of a multitude of nations, leaſt a man might apply it to the multitude of the fleſhly Iſraelites, but in the plurall number, Of natiõs, to declare that he appointed him to be a father of al them which ſhould cleaue vnto his promiſes, as well of the Gentiles as the Iſraelites. They ſauor too muche of VVhy it is called ſpeciall.

Rom. 9.

Gal. 3.

VVhy Abrahams name vvas changed.

the fleſhe, and vnderſtande not the meaning of the wordes of God, that doe applye thys couenaunte to the fleſhly Iſrael. There were of Iewes alſo that did acknowledge that Abrahaam was appoynted by thys preſent couenant, to be the father of the whole worlde, that is to ſay, of all nations that be in the worlde, as we may ſée in a booke of theirs named Meſchathbetorim, that is, The Booke of firſtlings. But this is fulfilled in Chriſte the true ſéede of Abrahaam, in whome hée is, accoyding vnto his name, made the father of the multitude of nations. The greateneſſe of thys couenaunt was hydden vntyll Chriſtes commyng, and was reuealed then at length, when the time was come that grace ſhoulde be reuealed. The fleſhly Iſraell and alſo blinde, and lokyng rather to Abram, than to Abrahaam, byeauſe he perceyueth not thys miſterie, dothe frowardly withſtande the calling of the Gentiles, that is the renoumednelſe of thys couenant, and the accomplyſhment of Goddes determination. The ſilly poore men do not perceyue that whiche is appoynted héere by God with Abrahaam in their fleſhe alone, (though they doe neuer ſo vehemently glorye of it, byeauſe of the prerogatiue of Abrahaam,) it can not be accompliſhed, but that it is in any wiſe requiſite, that it be referred vnto all nations as manye as doe embrace the faith of the promiſe of Chriſte the ſéede of Abrahaam.

The Iewes do rather looke vnto Abram than vnto Abrahaam.

Therefore when I doe call thys couenaunte of God made with Abrahaam and his ſéede, Speciall, it is not ſo to bée vnderſtanded, that I do meane that it pertaineth vnto one people of Iſraell alone, breede of the fleſhe of Abrahaam, but that it is a cleare caſe, that there is compriſed in it onely the elecke and beléeuyng in Chriſte, as the true ſéede of Abrahaam and the children of promiſe. But if anye man will haue it called Generall and vniuerſall, for aſmuche as it excludeth no people of all the whole worlde, but comprehendeth vniuerſallye all and ſome, whyche cleaue in beléeuing to oure Lorde Chriſt the ſéede of Abrahaam, he maye doe ſo for me. I call it ſpeciall, in reſpecte of the former couenaunte, whyche dothe ſo comprehende all the world, men and beaſts, that it maketh no difference betwirt the elecke and the wicked, the beléeuing and the vnbeléeuing, but without difference includeth both menne and beaſtes. And alſo in reſpect of the wicked and vnbeléeuing, whome the grace of this couenant doth not admitte.

Thys is called alſo an euerlaſting couenaunte. In theyr generations (ſayeth he) in an euerlaſting couenaunte. What is euerlaſting elſe, but during euer and infinite: and this eternitie is not to be conſidered abſolutely, but to be referred vnto the couenaunte, and the partakers of the couenaunte, that is God and hys confederates: in whome, or if you will (betwirt whome) this couenant dureth for euer: he dyd handſomly ioyne theſe two togyther: In theyr generations, and in euerlaſting couenaunte, to expreſſe the perpetuall continuance of thys couenaunte, throughout all generations of the faithfull.

The laſting couenaunte.

In

In thys perpetuitie two things are to be conſidered. The one is the acceſſe vnto it: the other is the continuance. I call that the acceſſe, whereby they y be not of the fleſh of Abrahaam, but are from elſe where grafte in, be brought to this couenaunt: and that the cõtinuance which commeth by their generations whiche be once receyued into this grace. For without this grafting in, the grace of this couenaunte ſhoulde haue place in the fleſhly Iſrael alone, for aſmuch as it is conteyned by the generations of the confederates. Therefore like as the faithfull Abrahaam beléeuing the promiſes of God was ſo receyued to the grace of this couenaunt, that not onely he was partaker thereof, but hys ſéede alſo after him, in a perpetuall continuance throughout all generations: in like wiſe is the condition of them alſo, whyche are from elſewhere called to thys grace, and grafted by fayth into thys euerlaſting couenant, ſo that Abrahaam is not only the father in this couenant, but the example and patterne alſo of the beléeuers, in whome is declared not onely the perpetuitie of continuance whiche is throughout all generations, but the meanes of the acceſſe alſo. They that be forwarde in yeares come by fayth, and be grafted into this euerlaſting couenante, after the example of Abrahaam that was forward in yeares. So our forefathers came firſt to this couenant, when they were fierſte called to the kingdome of Chriſte, and obeyed their calling in beléeuing, and beléeuing were admitted by the token of the couenant. Agayne, whereas God woulde that thys couenante ſhoulde be made not onely with them that beléeued béeyng of ſome yeares, but with theyr ſéede alſo, he would with all, that it ſhould be ſpreade abrode, and continued ſtill for euer throughout all generations in the ſucceſſion of the ſéede, as long as thys worlde endureth, wherein the generations of mankynde doe take place.

A ſimilitude.

And the condition of thys couenaunte is alſo, like as if a King dyd newe builde a Citie, and chooſe Citizens vnto it, ſo as not only they whiche nowe at the firſt appoynted vnto it, ſhoulde enioy the right and prerogatiue of the Citie whiles they lyued: but after them there mighte be others alſo taken in, and enioy the ſame righte of the Citie with the firſt: beſides this, their children and ſucceſſors alſo ioyne in this Citie, maye by a perpetuall continuance throughout all generations be partakers of the ciuile ſocietie and prerogatiue. Of ſuch nature is this Holy Citie builded by God, and endowed with the euerlaſting couenante throughe his goodneſſe.

The chiefe pointes of the couenaunte.

Fourthly, there be two ſpeciall poynts of this couenaunt. One that toucheth God, the other concerneth the partners of the couenaunte. And that poynt whiche concerneth God, whiche he toyneth thereunto, ſaying: That I may be thy God, and of thy ſéede after thée. This is the chiefe point of all thoſe matters that may be referred vnto felicitie, as well euerlaſting as temporall. For to be any mãs God, is to be not onely his creator, but his ſauioure alſo. This is the principal point of the couenant. The couenaunte was ſo made, that it is euerla-

The capitulations of the couenaunts of God be euerlaſting.

euerlaſting. Therefore the chiefe capitulations of it, muſt alſo be euerlaſting as touching the ſubſtance of them. So that God is the God of Abraham and his ſeede, not for one or two ages, but for euer. And that is to be referred not only vnto the continuation and order of generations, but vnto euery particular perſon alſo of the confederates. For the grace of this couenante, whereby that omnipotent God, eternall and infinite, vouchſaueth to be my God, is not determined with my death, although it were reſtreyned vnto the courſe of this preſente life, but endureth for euer, ſo that he is my God alſo after my death: that is to ſay, he declareth alſo his faith, truth, goodnes, & grace, in me in the life to come. So that it is a cleere caſe, that I can not periſh by death, but that I doe liue firſte in ſpirite: and next in body and ſpirite for euer. Therevppon came that argument of Chriſt againſt the Saduces that denyed the reſurrection to come, when he ſayeth: Haue you not redde of the reſurrection of the dead, that is ſayde by God ſpeaking vnto you: I am the God of Abraham, the God of Iſaac, the God of Iacob: he is not God of the dead, but of the liuing. If he be not God of the dead, but of the liuing, and is my God by an euerlaſting couenaunte, it muſt needes follow, that when I am dead in body, I ſhall not be exempte out of this couenaunt, and therefore is it neceſſary, that I muſt liue for euer.

The grace of the couenaunt of God is not determined by death.

Matth. 22.

The perpetuitie of this couenaunte includeth a threfolde eternitie, that is of God which couenanteth, ſecondly, of the confederates: thirdly, of the grace whiche in the ſtrength of thys couenant is ſet forth and confirmed.

A threfolde eternitie in the couenaunt of God.

The other chiefe poynt of this couenaunt toucheth the confederates. This is expreſſed in this wiſe: Walke before me, and be vpright. Like as the other chiefe poynt touching God was ſhortly ſet forth in that that he ſayd: That I may be thy God, and of thy ſeede after thee: ſo alſo the ſecond poynte touching the confederates, is briefely ſette forthe in this particle, where he ſayeth: Walke before me, and be vpright. That doth include al kinde of well doyng, and faithe towards God, belonging both to thys life, and to the life to come. Thys poynte conteyneth all things belonging to our true faith, obedience, religion, ſinceritie of minde, truſt, and loue of the heart.

For what elſe is it to walke before God, but to liue in the conſcience of God as it were vnder his eyes, after the manner of ſeruants, continually depending at their maiſters becke: And to be vpright, is nothing elſe, but to bee of ſimple, faithfull, cleere, and right hearte. He that is ſo diſpoſed, will refuſe nothing of all that, that he knoweth his Lord God would haue, eyther by ſigne or by his word. This is once the true godlyneſſe, by whiche onely we be liked of God, and his true ſeruice, whyche they can neuer performe that be without the ſpirite of this faith.

So that by the conſideration of theſe things it appeareth playnely, that it is the only couenaunt of God which concerneth our true and perpetuall ſaluation, wherein all the electe and beleeuing, euen vntill the ende of the worlde, be comprehended, which as it is perpetuall, ſo it is immuimmutable. God is one, euerlaſting, and immutable: the purpoſe of hys will is appoynted from euer to the health of mankinde, and that is one, immutable, and euerlaſting. And the ſame true godlyneſſe is in all ages like it ſelfe, yea euen the verye ſame. Wherefore it is neceſſary that thys couenāt be one, and euerlaſting, and al things muſt be referred vnto that, whiche be redde in the holye Scriptures of the chiefe poyntes of oure health.

Yet there be ſome things whyche ſeeme to be againſt this iudgemente, wherof the reader muſt be inſtructed by the way.

An obiection of the appendātes of the couenant.

1 Firſt, againſt that that we ſay, that this couenāt of God made with Abraham and hys ſeede, perteyneth to all the elect and beleeuing, it ſeemeth that it may bee obiected of Adam, Abel, Seth, and the reſt of all the godly men which liued euē from the beginning of the worlde, vntil the times of Abraham: and that it maye be demaunded, by what couenaunte they were made partakers of Gods grace, or howe they can perteyne to this couenaunt of Abraham? I anſwere: All the godlye and elect perſons were partakers of theſe two chiefe poyntes, which are principall in this couenante, as well without any manifeſt making of couenaunte before Abrahams time, as Abraham himſelf was with his aftercommers by the expreſſe bargayne of this couenant: They had ỹ promiſe of grace made vnto Adam and his aftercommers of the ſeede of the woman, that is Chriſte, vnto whome they leaned as to the foundation of their faithe and hope. They had the appearings of God, whereby they were now and then confirmed in the faith and godly life. Therfore, whereas an expreſſe couenaunte was made afterwardes with Abraham, as the father of beleeuers, it muſt not be ſo vnderſtanded, that there was then brought in a certaine newe and neuer before vſed grace of our ſaluation: God forbidde: but that the very ſame by whiche the olde holy Fathers and predeceſſors of Abraham, both before and after the ſludde, obteyned ſaluation, was made by the comming of the couenaunte, more expreſſe and confirmed.

2 Secondly, this couenaunt of Abraham hath certaine things annexed vnto it, whiche can not be applyed vnto all godly and faithfull perſons of al ages and nations. Such as this very ſame token of the couenant is, that is the circumciſion of the fleſhe, and againe the promiſed inheritance of the land of Canaan. And the couenant alſo ſeemeth not to apperteyne but to them onely, vnto whome both circumciſion and the inheritance of the promiſed lande doth apperteyne, that is, to the Iewes as the aftercommers of Abraham, whiche were both circumciſed, and poſſeſſed the lande of Canaan manye hundred yeares. Therefore, ſeeyng that the faithfull whiche before Abrahams time, and whiche after the abrogation of Moſes lawe, in the new Teſtamente, beleeued in Chriſte, be partakers nother of circumciſion, nother of the lande of Canaan: it ſeemeth that this couenaunte dothe not perteyne to them, and therefore that it is not the only nor the euerlaſting couenaunt of all the faithfull. I aun ſwere: In this couenaunte of Abraham, we muſt diligētly and diſcretelye putte a difference betwixte thoſe things that be of the ſubſtance of the matter, and thoſe things whiche bee but acceſſorie. The matters of Subſtaunce be theſe: I am the Lorde thy God, and of thy Sēde. And, Walke before me, and be vpright. Theſe bee euerlaſting and vniuerſall, that is, perteyning vnto all. The acceſſories be the ſignes ioyned to the couenant, the circumciſion of the fleſhe, and the promiſe of the lād of Canaan. Theſe be neyther euerlaſting nor vniuerſall, but laſting only for a whyle, and perteyning to the people of Iſraell. God woulde haue the people of the fleſhe of Abraham, from whence Chriſt ſhoulde come the ſēde of bleſſing, the Mediatour and Redēmer of mankynde, to be ſo long before diſſeuered from other nations, vntill the time serued that all the world ſhould be called vnto the vnitie of faith in Chriſt, and that there ſhoulde be but one ſhepheарde and one ſhēpefolde. Therefore hee dyd adde vnto thys couenaunte of Abraham theſe matters laſting but for a little whyle, namely circumciſion, the promiſe of the land of Canaan, and afterwards alſo the lawe, and the Ceremoniall prieſthode: whyche all ſerued to thys purpoſe, to be a certayne leſſoning to that nation towards Chriſt: of whyche matter we ſpake before in the place Of the lawe. All thys pollicie of the Churche of Iſraell, was ordeyned for Chriſte, that there ſhoulde bee a certayne outward congregation of the people, ſequeſtred from other nations by ſygnes, promiſes, lawe, prieſthode, and lande alſo deuided from other nations, in whiche the name of the one and true God ſhoulde bee renowmed a little and by little, and the redemption that was to come of mankynde, ſhoulde be ſhadowed by fygures and prophecies, vntyll the ſpringing vp of Chriſte, as the vniuerſall lyghte of all. Wherefore theſe outwarde and temporarye thynges annexed, muſte bee wyſely ſequeſtred from the ſubſtaunce of the onely and eternall couenaunte, that we doe not make eyther that whyche is eternall and vniuerſall, temporary alſo and Jewiſhe with them: or that whyche is temporary and Jewiſhe, eternall and vniuerſall. For vnleſſe wee doe thys vice cunningly deuyde betwixte the verye ſubſtaunce of the couenaunte, and theſe thynges whyche were annexed vnto it but for a tyme, it muſt nēdes followe, that either wee muſt denye (contrarye to the expreſſe ſaying of God) that the couenaunte of God made wyth Abraham, as the father of the beleeuers, is eternall and fulfilled in Chriſte: or elſe we muſt driue all the nations of the whole worlde to the obſeruance of the circumciſion, of Moſes lawe, and of the prieſthode of Aaron, and to the inhabityng of the Lande of Canaan, and to the expectation of Chriſte promyſed, that is, to the blyndeneſſe of the Iewes, and to the denyall of the redemption perfourmed.

We muſt put difference betwixt the pointes of ſubſtaunce and the acceſſorie.

Thyrdely, whereas we doe ſay that the couenaunte of Abraham is one and eternall, there ſēmeth to bee a repugnancye in it, for aſmuche as there was afterwardes ordeyned another couenaunte vnder Moſes, whyche endured vntill Chriſte, and after that of Moſes there was yet an other brought in by Chriſte, the ſame whereby, we that doe beleeue, doe lyue in hym, and bee ſaued by oure beleeuyng, vntyll the ende of the worlde. Whereof it ſhoulde ſeeme that there be three rather than one alone, of Abraham, of Moſes, and of Chriſt.

In deede the Apoſtle dothe appoynte two Teſtamentes, that is, two Couenauntes: one whyche was inſtituted in the mount of Sina, the other in Zion: ſo that the common opinion is not without reaſon, that the Olde was before the comming of Chriſte, and the Newe Teſtamente after hym: and that the wrytynges of Moſes and the Prophetes are called the Olde, and the wrytynges of the Euangeliſtes and the Apoſtles, the Newe: and therefore in the Epiſtle to the Ebrewes there is ſo muche reaſonyng of the bryaſyng of the Olde Teſtamente: Finallye, the Apoſtle maketh mencion of the Olde and Newe Teſtamente in hys Epiſtle to the Corinthians.

I aunſwere: Theſe thynges bee not repugnaunte vnto oure ſaying, if they bee well conſydered. In deede there bee three principall ſeaſons or tymes, in whiche the whole worlde is comprehended: as the firſte whyche was before the lawe, the Seconde vnder the law, and the Third after the lawe.

Agayne there bee three principall perſons, as the ringleaders of euery ſeaſon: Abraham, Moſes, and Chriſte. And euery ſeaſon hathe hys peculiar order of Religion, which is alſo in Scriptures called a Bargayne or couenaunte. Yet it followeth not thereof, that there be three couenauntes of ſubſtaunce, concernyng the ſaluation of mankynde. There is one God and father of all, whyche is aboue all, and by all, and in all. There is one Lord ſauioure and redēmer of all, Chryſte Jeſus: there is one holy ſpirite, there is one Kyngdome prepared from the begynnyng of the worlde for the electe and bleſſed, there is one grace of heauenlye calling, there is one faythe, one hope of euerlaſtyng life, there is one bodye, one people, and one Catholike Churche of the elect, ſo tearmed, bycauſe it comprehendeth all the electe and faithfull from the begynnyng of the worlde vntyll the ende: and there is one onelye and perpetuall Couenaunte of God, made and confyrmed wyth all hys electes, and there is but one onely and perpetuall Godlyneſſe and iuſtification of beleeuers. But the ordering of thys one Couenaunte, grace, faythe, Churche, religion, and Godlyneſſe, is not one and perpetuall, but was by the purpoſe of Goddes wiſedome, dyuerſlye and ſundrye wayes appoynted, accordyng vnto the qualitie of the tymes. Onewyſe before the lawe, an otherwiſe in the law, and an other wiſe after the lawe. Men bee otherwyſe ordered and gouerned in theyr chyldehode, otherwiſe in theyr youthe, and otherwyſe in mans eſtate: yet the rightueouſeneſſe, innocencye and honeſty, is not founde to bee ſundrye or dyuers, but all one. Abraham, Moſes, and the Apoſtles were all made partakers of that heauenlye grace by one couenaunte, they were iuſtifyed and ſaued by one faith.

ברית Berith.

And whereas after the couenante made with Abzaham, there was a newe made with Moſes, concerning the law and Prieſthode, it muſt not be ſo vnderſtanded, that there was any other couenant bzought in moze thã the firſt, and that Abzaham was commaunded to beléue Moſes: but that the ozdering of the firſte couenant which befoze the law conſiſted only in circumciſion, ſacrifices, and appearings of Angels, was encreaſed and made moze large and ample, by the comming of the lawe, of a determinate Prieſthode, and of diuers rites, bycauſe the people beganne to multiplye, and the poſſeſſion of the land of Canaan was at hand. But if there had bin a new couenant made with Moſes, there had bin alſo added vnto the new couenant a new ſacrament of initiation, which was not ſo at all, but the olde ſigne of the olde couenant was kept ſtill, whiche was circumciſion, added vnto the couenaunte of Abzaham befoze, foz a ſeaſon. So that the perpetuitie of the couenaunt of Abzaham continued vntill Chriſt. And whereas there was a new teſtament inſtituted by Chriſt after Moſes, that was not done neyther to the purpoſe that the only and eternall couenant of God ſhoulde be ended by the commyng of the newe: but it ſhould be confirmed in the fulfilling of thoſe things that were pzomiſed by the bloud of ỹ bleſſed ſéede. Foz that eternall couenaunte of all faithfull people is eſtabliſhed in the ſéede of Abzaham, which is Chryſte, and obteyneth thereby al his ſtrẽgth and efficacy. The ſame whiche was pzomiſed vnto Abzaham and the reſt of the Fathers of the bleſſed ſéede, and was deſcribed in the lawe by figures and ſhadowes, and was tolde befoze by the Pzophetes, was after the lawe fulfilled and perfozmed by Chriſte. Therfoze ſéeyng that Chriſt dyd in no wiſe take away the couenaunte of Abzaham, but dyd rather confirme it, it is manifeſt that there is no newe couenaunte neyther bzoughte in by hym. But yée wyll ſay: If an nother couenaunte muſte haue an other ſigne of the couenant, it followeth that an other ſigne of a couenant is an argumente of an other couenaunt. Foz Chriſte in the New teſtamente inſtituted an other ſigne from the firſt. Foz he commanded vs not to be circumcided, but to be Baptiſed. Ergo he did inſtitute an other couenant from the firſt, which thing Moſes did not.

A newe couenant requireth to haue a newe couenant of admiſſion.

I aunſwere: Moſes was the diſpenſer of thoſe things which were to be done in the nation of the Iſraelites, the fleſhly ſéede of Abzaham. Wherefoze it was not conueniente, that he ſhould with a newe ſigne alter the circumciſion, peculiarly gyuen vnto that nation, which ſhoulde endure vntill the comming of ỹ bleſſed ſéede pzomiſed vnto Abzaham: but Chriſt though he were a mediatour & confirmer of ỹ ſame onely couenant of Abzahams, yet he did alter the circumciſion into Baptiſme: bycauſe that that newe ozder of Gods couenant touched now not one nation of the Iſraelites onely, but all the nations of the whole woꝛld. The diuerſitie & noueltie of the diſpenſation oz ozdering, not the altering of the ſame couenant, gaue occaſion to alter the ſigne not only in the ſacramẽt of initiation oz admiſſion, but in the ſacrament of redemption alſo. I ſuppoſe, if theſe poyntes be diligentlye conſidered, the matter is left plaine, that there is no couenaunt of ſaluation, but that onely and euerlaſting, whiche was inſtituted by God wyth Abzaham the father of the beléeuers, and compzehendeth in an vniuerſall grace, all the electes and beléeuers of all ages: and is perfozmed and obteineth ſtrength of ſaluatiõ in Chriſt only, the bleſſed ſéede and common redéemer of all.

¶ Of the difference of the Old and of the nevv Teſtamente.

IF the woꝛde of Teſtament I ſpake befoze. It agréeth indéede well with the Newe couenaunte, bycauſe of the death of Chriſte the teſtatour: but not ſo well with the Olde, and that of the lawe.

2 Secondlye, when we ſpeake of the olde teſtament oz couenaunt, we muſt not loke to the couenant of Abzaham, but vnto the giuing of Moſes law. The ſame the Apoſtle calleth, The olde bargaine, oz the olde conſtitution, to whiche belongeth thoſe thyngs whiche he diſputeth of in the ſame Chapter of the olde teſtamente. And it is called Olde, not bycauſe it is the firſte and moſt auncient, whiche the couenant of Abzaham dothe not beare withall, but in reſpect of the Newe: foz in reſpect of that of Abzaham, both the olde and newe are called newe, bycauſe they ſucceéded after them. And theſe two diſpenſations of that perpetuall and eternall couenant, hath this relation betwirt them, that the one beganne to be called Olde in reſpect of thys new: and the other to be called Newe, in reſpecte of the olde and abolished. Foz what ſo euer is abolished, is there vtterly ended and bzoughte to nothing, ſo that nothing of it remaine any moze: either elſe is changed into an other thing, as if it were renewed. And nothing is renewed, but by the ſucceſſion of that whyche is new: and yet the ſame is not called Newe conſidered of it ſelfe, but in reſpect of that which was befoze. If the couenaunte of Moſes had bin vtterly made nothing, it could not haue admitted the ſucceſſion of any new. Wherefoze, that whiche the Apoſtle ſayeth to the Ebzewes: In that hée ſayth a new teſtamẽt, he hath woꝛne out the old. Foz that which is woꝛne out and wareth auncient and olde, is ready to vaniſh away, it muſt not be ſo vnderſtanded, that the poyntes of the ſubſtance of Moſes couenant are vtterly bzought to nothing, God fozbidde: but that the accelloꝛie poyntes of it be abzogated by the ſucceſſion of a newe diſpenſation. And that abzogation of whyche wée ſpake befoze, the Apoſtle calleth an abolishement and decaye. Succeſſion is here of two thyngs: the one is of perſones, the other of diſpenſation. In the firſte Chriſte ſucceéded vnto Moyſes, the Maiſter to the ſeruaunte, the Doctour of lyfe vnto the Scholemaister, the deliuerer and sauioure vnto the hard exactor: in the other, the dispensation of the Gospell, succeedeth the dispensation of the Lawe. In both respectes the testament of Christ, is called the new testament or couenant. When the Senate is altered in Imperiall and free Cities, as it is wont to bee yearely, albeit the olde state of the gouernement doe remayne, yet they whiche be removed from the Senatoures place, are called the olde Senate, and they which doe succeede the, are called the new: how muche more is the worde of newnesse vsed there, where not onely the persons whiche gouerne are chaunged, but also the wayes, formes, lawes, and rightes of the olde gouernance are altered by succession of a newe gouernaunce? Likewise it standeth in the condition of these two couenants of Moses and Christ, the olde and newe testament.

Hebre. 8.

A similitude.

The comparison of things of both the testaments.

A man may some see by the waying of these things, what is the difference betweene the olde and newe testament. If you loke vnto the Mediatours of both, ỹ is Moses & Christe, then shall you finde much difference. In deede Moses was faithfull in the house, not of his owne, but of Christ, as a seruante to testifie those thynges that were to be spoken: but Christe, as the Sonne in his owne house, is worthy so muche the greater glory, how much the more glory he oughte to haue whiche bothe builded the house and is the maister in it, than he whiche in a house not of his owne, dothe not gouerne, but serueth as a seruaunt. See to the Ebrewes in the thirde Chapter.

If ye doe waye besides, of what manner the dispensation of both the testamentes is, you shall also herein finde great diuersitie. Let vs searche the qualitie of the whole, in the parts of it. In the seruile, shadowing and temporarie dispensation of the couenaunte of Moses were these things: The deliuerance of Goddes people out of the bondage of the Egyptians wyth the triumph of the ouercomming of Pharao. Agayne the bringing in and the possession by inheritance of the lande of Canaan. The giuing of the law in the mount of Sina by the ministerie of Angels, by a fearefull meane, by letter, and stony tables. The spirite of feare was in the people. There was the ministerie of death, the Sacramẽts, the outward Priesthode, with the determination of the priestly tribe, the figures, shadowes, and promises of Sacrifices, cleansings and ceremonies. Besides that the same whole dispensation of the olde testamente serueth for a time, and perteyned to the people of Israell alone.

Let vs compare herewithall the dispensation of the new testamente. Here is also a deliuerance of Gods people, but not from any earthely, but rather from a spiritual bondage, that is of sinne and of the kingdome of Satan. Here is a triumph of the ouercommyng of an enemy, but not of Pharao, but of Satan himselfe. Here is a bringing in to possesse not the lande of Canaan, but the inheritance of the Countrey of Heauen. Here is the making of a law, not in Sina, but in Zion, not by the ministerie of Angels, but by the presence and dispensation of the Lorde: not by terrible terrible meanes, but with a wonderfull mildenesse: not in letter, but in spirite, not grauen in stony tables, but profitably wrought into the heartes of the electes. Here is the very same meaning whiche is in the other, if you consider the author therof, but it is diuers, if you loke to the difference of the gifte. There was bondage and feare in the firste, here is libertie and cheerefulnesse. Here is ministerie, not of death, but of life. Here be the Sacramentes not circumcision and the lambe of the Passouer, the ministration whereof was bloudy, but Baptisme and the Supper of the Lord, both without bloud. For all that sacramental bloud doth rest accomplished in the Crosse of Christe. Here is a Priesthode, but not Aarons, not outward, not tyed to anye nation or tribe, but spirituall, and common to all faithfull folkes. Here is a sacrifice, and that bloudy, but not of any beast, but of the Lord: not renued, but once perfected in the Crosse. Here bee cleansynges, but not of the bodye, but inwarde and of the spirite. Here bee ceremonyes, but they bee fewe and easie, of the worde, of Sacramentes, and of Prayers. There were figures, shadowes, and promises, here is the fulfilling of all these. Finallye, the dispensation of thys newe Testament, shall endure vntyll the worlds ende, and not gyue place to any that shall followe, but onely the fruition of Heauen. Agayne, thys is not determined to any one nation, but extẽdeth hys largenesse vnto all the nations of the whole worlde. So that as muche difference as there is betwirte those things whiche we haue rehearsed, so muche surelye the dispensations of the olde and newe Testamente doe differ betwirte themselues: so that it is a playne manifest matter to bee true that the Apostle sayeth, that Christe is mediatour of a muche better Testamente than Moses was.

Heb. 7.

¶ Of the Grace of GOD.

I Suppose it is not far out of the order of matters of Diuinitie, if after the explication of the euerlasting Testamente, we doe put nexte the place of The grace of God: not bycause the Testamente in order goeth before grace, seeyng it springeth out of Grace, but that passing vppe the riuer to the very well head, wee maye see whereunto the purpose of the eternall couenaunte of God tendeth. For it helpeth muche to the ryghte vnderstanding of holye thynges, if wee doe searche well to the fountaynes and rootes of them.

VVhat grace is.

Firste, we muste defyne what Grace is, that no erroure bee commytted in the worde: and when the vnderstanding of wordes is sought, wee muste take counsell of the tongues. And for asmuche as apperteyneth to the sense of thys worde, wee neede not to seeke anye strange languages, other than these two, in whyche the holye spirite speaketh vnto vs, as well in the Newe as in the Olde Testamente that is the Ebrewe, and the Greeke. The same which we do reade in the Latine translation, namely Grace, is in the Ebrewe חן, and in Greeke χάρις. And the Hebrewes do vse this worde, fyrst for fauoure and comelinesse, or whether it be in the bodye or in woords: as to witte, when that we see the same either in the body, either in fact, or hearing it in speach, we doe with a certaine liking allowe it, and make much of it. So we do reade in the Prouerbes: Beautie is a deceptfull and vayne grace, where that aboue recited Hebrew word is taken for that fauoure or grace, whiche entreth into the eyes of lokers, from the handsomnesse of a womās beautie. And so in this sense the Greekes do sometimes call it χάριν. Though the Seuentie interpreters do in thys place translate it ἀρεσκίαν, which is pleasing. And in the Psalme. There was powred out חן, that is, grace in thy lippes, that is to saye, in thy woords. This sense of thys worde is not often vsed in Scriptures, wherefore it is not to be followed of vs in this present matter.

Chesed.

Prouerb. 31.

Psalm. 45.

Fauour.

Againe the Ebrewes doe call חן, fauoure, when of a speciall disposition of our minde, we do wish well to any man. So we do reade in the xxxix. of Genesis: And Noe found grace in ỳ eyes of the Lord: which is nothing else, but: Noe found fauoure before the Lorde. And the Seuenty translated it heere χάριν. In this sense it is taken in diuers places of the Euangelistes and the Apostles, as in the Gospell of Luke, Thou hast founde grace. And ỳ often saying of Paule: Grace and peace, and other like places of hys.

Luke. i.

Thirdly, this woorde is vsed for a gift, whiche is giuen of very fauour. In this sense the Ebrewes doe vse this woorde חנן. So Jacob sayde to Esau hys brother, of his children: They be the children whiche the Lord God hath giuen thy seruaunte. And Luke in the Actes saith of Barnabas: Who when he saw the grace of God, reioyced. He saw the gyft of God powred vpon the beleeuers. And Paule sayth: I will sende these men to carry your reward or liberalitie to Ieruſalem. And, Receiue not ỳ grace of God in vayne. These two senses be often vsed in holy Scriptures, and specially the latter. Therfore, Grace is, as touching this present matter, that affection of fauoure, when we loue a man hartely, and whatsoeuer through thys fauoure is frely and franckely geuen without respecte of anye deserte or duetie. This definition of grace we muste diligentlye kéepe, that wée maye well vnderstande these thynges, whyche the holye Scripture dothe ascribe vnto Goddes grace, leaſt we bée seduced by some meanes, and make voyde the glorye of the grace of God.

Secondly, we muste sée also whether the affection of grace maye bée attributed vnto God or not. When our flesh heareth that God is iuſt, by and by it beginneth to doubt of hys grace. For ỳ streightnesse of iustice, and affectiō of grace (as a mā would thinke) can not stand togither in one mind. For iustice requireth the rigor of right & due: but grace going wide from thys marke, is gyuen oftentimes not onely to them whiche deserue it not, but to them also that deserue euill. Thus the flesshe iudgeth: If there be iustice in God, there is not grace: if there bée grace, then there is no iustice. Here we muste cōsider that the holy Scripture doth not lie, which reported bothe of God. The Lord is iuſt (the Prophet saith) and loueth iustice. Item, God is a iudge. Itē, Thou art iuſte O Lord, and thy iudgemēt is right. And that whiche commeth oftentimes: Gracious God (as I may say) and mercyfull. And for that that these things be thought to be so contrarie, that they can not be togither in God, there is sprong such an errour therevpon, that we do suppose accordyng vnto our owne condition and sense, that the iustice of God is the same, whereby not onely they whiche deserue well, haue well, but they also whiche deserue euill, are reprobate and punished. So we do thynke that God is iuſte to rewarde the iuſte folkes, and to refuse and punishe the vniuſte: and that he can do no otherwyse, vnleſſe he will do agaynſt iustice. In this sense we do plucke away from God the libertie of will, whiche hée hath ouer all thinges which he hath made, in respect whereof he can not be vniuſte when he fauoreth, spareth, & doth good to whome he will, whether they haue deserued well or euyll, and punisheth whiche sinners that he will, and as it pleaseth him. With this agreeth the place of the Apoſtle. Ergo (sayth he) he hath mercy vpō whom he liſteth, and dothe harden whome he liſteth. There is no Prince in the woorlde would be content to be accoūted vniuſt, bycause he doth somtimes spare the euill persons, & letteth the guiltie to scape vnpunished: but hée dothe thinke that this clemēcy muſt néedes turne more to his commendation than rebuke. So that grace and clemency be rightly commended in a Prince, and that commendation no wise man can take euil, vnleſſe it become so pernerse, that verlets be let go, and good iuſte and honeſt folkes troubled and punished. If bothe these togither may be reported with prayse of a good Prince, that he is iuſte, and that he is also forgiuefull and mercyfull, how much more may they be so reported of God, whiche hath moſt frée power ouer al things? Wherefore we muſt ſtoutly knocke downe this thought of our flesshe, as oft as we perceyue it to doubt of the grace of god. And for this may serue not only the bookes written in prayse of the grace of God, but ỳ innumerable experiments also of it, which bée partly set forth in holy Scriptures, and partely do happen dayly in our owne selues.

Of whēce the affectiō of grace is in God.

Thirdly, it may bée also neyther vngodly, neyther improfitably demaunded, of whence this affection of grace is in God? It is a great matter what the beginnyng of it bée, to that that it be pure and sincere. I cal pure and sincere, not defiled. The same is a defiled and impure grace, which riseth in respect of mens owne proper gaine or commoditie: as that is wonte to be, whiche fleshly menne and they that loue thēselues, do vse. You shall finde a Prince that beareth a certayne speciall fauour towardes them that he perceyueth do yéelde vnto and folowe his affections be they neuer so vnlawfull and wicked, and sheweth hym moſte fauorable vnto them. Such a grace is foule & filthy, both for the beginnyng of it, and the qualitie also. It beginneth of a fault, & tendeth vnto a faulty ende. For that thing can not be constant, whiche is naught, both in the rote & in the fruite. Euen so we do see that the grace of the flesh & of the worlde is most vnstable. The flesh fauoreth exceedingly to day, & to morow it doth hate & abhorre aboue measure. The grace of God is vtterly voyde from this vncleannesse & inconstancie. For the beginnyng of it riseth not of vs, but of his goodnesse: nor it tendeth not to any ende of his owne proper commoditie, but to our saluation. If we do searche our selues altogither within and without, we shal find nothing wherevnto we may attribute the cause and beginnyng of the grace of God. Wherefore we can not determine vpon any other beginnyng of it, but vpon that goodnesse whiche is in him meruelous & great. This welspryng is most pure from all self loue, wherefore the riuers also of heauenly grace flowyng out of it, be altogither pure and sincere. The nature of grace is to be franche & free. What soeuer is not free, it is not grace, neyther hath it this puritie of grace taken from the welspryng of goodnesse whereof we do speake.

The grace of fauour of the flesh and the worlde is vnstable.

The nature of grace is free.

Yet we must beware, when we do attribute a beginnyng to Goddes grace, that we do not thinke it to be but for a time and not eternall. For what soeuer is naturally in God, is not for a time, but eternall. Euen like as goodnesse is in him naturally, so is grace also; which you may well call, the nature of goodnesse. As ỹ one is eternall, so is the other in that we do say, that Christe the sonne of God hath his beginning of the father, we do not take away any thing frō the eternitie of his Godhed, but by this cōfessiō we do the more affirme him to be the euerlasting Sonne of God. For as God is eternall Father, so is the sonne also eternall, without whō the Father could not be. Take grace frō the goodnesse of God, the nature of his goodnesse can not stande. The brightnes of the fire, hath his beginning of the fire, whose brightnesse it is: and yet it is not after the fyre in time, but of one season. The same order is in the heauenly goodnesse that although grace commeth of it, yet they be all both in God coeternall.

The grace of God is not temporarie but eternall.

Fourthly, we must see how many sortes there be of this grace of Gods goodnesse. The Scholemē make two: Grace working, & Working together: & in other terms, The grace going before, & the grace cōming after.

They call the Worckyng grace, the same, whiche dothe regenerate and chaunge the hart of man, giuing him to will that whiche is good. Otherwise for as much as it is by natural corruption vncleane, it can not of it selfe will that which is good, vnlesse it be chaūged by heauēly grace. And for as muche as this chaungyng is the worke of the grace of God alone, and is made in vs by no will of ours, goyng before or worckyng withall, they call it The grace whiche goeth before. So it is called the Worckyng & Preuentyng grace, in respect of one selfe same worcking or doyng: but they call The grace worckyng with an other, the same whereby there is gyuen to the regenerate harte, and the same whiche would would good, strength to perfourme the good whiche he would, least he should will in vayne and to no effect. They do call this The grace worckyng with an other, for because that when by the grace goyng before, the will is iustified, and desireth to do that whiche is good, it dothe as it were reache hyr helpyng hand vnto it, and succour it with worckyng withall, giuyng strength & succesle to perfourme the good worke, as the other gaue the affect of willing. They do cal this also The folowyng grace, bycause it doth come after the other whiche is gone before. There is signified by this saying, not onely the order of the grace that worketh in vs, but the accomplishment also of Gods worke. God dothe not leaue his worke vnperfect, But what soeuer he dothe once beginne, he doth make an ende of it. He dothe preuent vs with his grace, giuyng and worcking in vs a will to do a good deede: and he dothe immediatly prosecute this his worck in aydyng vs also, that we do not in vayne will the same good, whiche we do will by his grace, but that with his further ayde, we may bring it to perfection. Both of these are rightly imputed to the grace of God. It is not onely ỹ worke of the mere grace of God that we will good, but that we do worke well in deede also. For say not: I come to the ablenesse to do it by the merite of my good will, that I may also perfecte the good whiche I will: nor thynke not that it is to be attributed vnto the strēgth of thy good will, if thou doest accomplishe in deede that whiche is good. For there is no pece of it, eyther of any merite, or of vertue of thine. It commeth not of our natural wil, but onely of the grace of God in our regenerate will. Our regenerate will trauayleth in the good worke wherevnto it is disposed, but yet beyng as it is, it shoulde worke and trauayle to no purpose, vnlesse the same grace of gods goodnesse (which goyng before made it to be good, and to will that whiche is good) do make it also afterwardes able to do in deede, and to perfecte the same good whiche hee willeth. And when hee dothe perfecte it, this ablenesse and efficacie is not attributed vnto our will that worketh, but vnto the grace of God, worckyng withal. The alteration of our mynde goyng before, is to no small purpose, for this is in it by grace, that it endeuoreth to do the same whiche it willeth: and for this cause they do cal it the grace whiche foloweth, whiche gyueth strēgth to perfect the matter, ỹ grace worckyng with an other, to make a differēce from the grace which worketh & goeth before, which chaūgeth our will when it had no meaning at all to do that whiche is good. For it seemeth to be one point to worck somwhat in thē that be altogither idle, and an other poynt to worke with them whiche bee doyng of somethyng, or else at the least goe aboute to do somethyng. Thus it hath pleased them to sette a difference betwixte the grace of God, goyng before and cōmyng after, to admonish vs that the grace whiche commeth after, wold not haue a dastard slow, and idle will, but suche a one whiche muste endeuour (although in vaine, vnlesse it be holpen) yet as I said, endeuor thyough the helpe of the grace goyng before, and aspire to well doyng. And in this wise it seemeth the Apostle spake: I am by the grace of God that, which I am: and his grace hath not bene voyde in me, but I haue labored more largely than all, but not I, but the grace of God with me. Thus it seemeth he comprehended both the workes of Gods grace, that whereas he dothe say: I am by the grace of God that that I am, is to be referred to the grace working and goyng before: and whereas he addeth, And his grace hath not bene voyde in me, but I haue laboured more than all. It pertayneth to the grace whiche followeth and worketh with all. And therefore he addeth also: But not I, but the grace of God with me. I laboured (sayth he) but lest he should seeme to attribute this vnto himselfe, he dothe wisely adde: Not I, Agayne, least he should seeme to tell an vntrue tale and a lie, that he labored more than all, he sayth not simply, But the grace of God: but he addeth, With me, to declare that he beyng ayded with the grace of God working withall, wrought more than the rest.

1. Corinth 15.

That God vvorketh, and vve do vvorke vvith hym.

Thus the Scholemen do speake of the grace of God, whiche opinion although it may be borne withal, for asmuche as it dothe not obscure the grace of God, yet I take it not to be accommodate inough to the māners of speach whiche the Apostle vseth, whereas he sayth: For it is GOD whiche worketh in you, both to will and to performe. He dothe ascribe both simply, to will and to performe, to the worckyng of God, when he sayth: Worckyng in you, and he addeth bothe to will and to performe. Agayne, wheras in the common Latine translation is redde: Not I, but the grace of God with me. It is in the Greeke: But not I, but the grace of God which is with me. By which wordes he doth referre his trauayle (by callyng himselfe backe) to the grace of God. For this word, With me, is not referred to the worde of labozyng, whiche went before, that it ought to be redde: Which labored with me: but is set accordyng to the vse of the Ebrewe tongue, for, Which is w̄ me. So the Ebrewes do speak: Whiche with me. And the Apostle, though he wrote in Greeke, yet being an Ebrewe, did not forbeare the Ebrewe phrases. The Apostle laboreth, and his iustified will trauayleth and worketh in that whiche is good, so that it is nothyng lesse than idle. We do know this. But yet for all that, we do lyke the Apostolicall diligence the more, when he hideth not his worckyng: but withall when he maketh mention of the grace of God, and dothe attribute altogither therevnto, and is gladder to make it the very worker than a felow worker with him. I so not vtterly mislike, if a manne do vse this terme of worckyng with an other, in this matter, whiche Marke vsed in his laste chapter, saying: The Lord worcking withall, & confirmyng it with signes. Yet I had rather folow the diligece of the Apostle, whiche would rather say: We be workers togither with God, than, God is the worker togither with vs, whiche he neuer sayde so far as I know, but where soeuer he maketh mention of the worckyng of God, he maketh him rather worckyng in vs, than worckyng with vs.

Philip. 2.

θς ἐργῶν ἐν ὑμῖν.

And he dothe it not without cause. For it is more conuenient that he be called the worker than the felowe worker, in whome is the deuise of the worke, the wisedome, the vertue, the power, yea & al the whole worke. And all these things belong not to our will, but vnto the grace of God. The same worketh all things in vs: we be but as the instruments. The workeman worketh, and the instrument worketh with him, in so muche as it is not onely made ready by the workeman to the worke whiche he will do, but it is also fashioned in the very worke. When a Scholemaster teacheth a childe to wryte, he maketh him a penne, and setteth it in his fingers: after that he taketh his hande, and directeth it in the worke of wryting, and leadeth him to fashiō out his letters: and I pray you, to whome may we most rightly attribute the wryting? To the maister surely. And whiche of them may we best say did write? Surely the scholemaster. The boy doth rather worke with him, thā worke: and the scholemaster may be said rather to worke, than to worke with him.

So I suppose we ought also to iudge of the grace of God that worketh in vs, and of that whiche we do whē we be directed therby to worke. We must not only beware that we take not away the whole, but also that we take not the principall parte of the good worke from the grace of God, & attribute it vnto our selues. Nor we can not be excused in so doyng, if we say, that we do not attribute the same vnto vs as the children of Adam, but as regenerate by grace, and ready furnished to good workes. For they only are not worthily to be blamed of pryde, which do attribute so much free will vnto our nature, that it can be able of it selfe to do any good worke: but they also whiche do attribute vnto a regenerated man that abilitie, that he may by his owne strength, not onely will the same whiche is good, but also to performe it: for else in case they be compelled to acknowledge the grace folowyng, that is, the same grace whiche directeth and strengtheneth our will in all good workes, yet they do iudge that worcking of it to be as secondary and accessorie, & our owne to be chiefe and principal. And to vnderstande here to auoyde this pryde also, I thinke it a safer matter folowyng, that rather the Apostle thā this diuision of the Scholemens, we may attribute altogither what soeuer good we will and worke, to the grace of God, and call our selues rather workers with the grace, than the grace worker with vs.

The grace of god purposing and vvorkyng.

Hitherto I haue admonished what a godly man ought to iudge of the diuision of the Scholemē when they do deuide the grace of God, into the grace worckyng, and working with an other: nowe it remayneth that I shewe howe I thinke it ought to be deuided. When I do consider those things whiche be mentioned of it in holy Scriptures, specially of the Apostles, I thinke wee muste consider somewhat further of the grace of God, thā as it doth priuately worke in the elect. We must loke therein vnto the very grounde of our common health and redemption, that is to say, the meanyng, good will and purpose of the wil of God, fro whēce that whole dispensation of our redēption proceded. Wherfore I suppose that this grace of God is to be deuided into the grace Purposing, & the grace Worcking. To the grace Purposing, it is to be referred, that from euer before the constitution of the worlde, he willed, decreed, and purposed so, that sendyng his sonne at the fulnesse of the time, he wold deliuer & saue mankinde. And therunto is to be referred also all that which is red to the Ephesiās, of the mysterye, good liking, counsel, purpose, election, and predestinatiō of his will, which was in him before the makyng of the worlde: and also to Timothie, where he sayth thus: Which made vs to be saued, & called vs in a holy callyng, not according vnto our workes, but according vnto his purpose & grace, whiche is giuen vnto vs by Christe Iesu before the euerlastyng time, but made opē now, &c. By these places we do see that there was grace from euer before the making of the worlde, willing, purposing, chosing, and predestenyng those thyngs that do concerne the saluation of Mankynde. It is a greate prayse of the grace of God, that it dothe preuent the wicked to iustifie and saue thē: but it is yet a greatter matter, that he did purpose & predestinate it according vnto the will of his goodnesse, from euerlastyng before the establishment of the worlde, when the worlde yet was not, muche lesse men dwellyng in it. To this sense is the same whiche Christe sayth: Come you blessed of my Father, possesse the kyngdome whiche is appointed for you from the makyng of the worlde.

Purposing grace.

Ephes.1.

2.Timoth.1.

Matth.25.

But vnto the Worcking grace first that is to be referred, that immediatly after that he had made ỹ worlde, he created this man vnto his owne image, whiche he purposed to saue by Christe, from euerlastyng, he placed hym in Paradyse, and after hee had gyuen him a lawe, he made him vnderstād his will, and when he had transgressed it, he condemned him to die, and shut him out of Paradise, & promised him the sēde of saluation, and clothed him beyng naked: gaue warnyng to Cain, whiche slewe his brother, before hande, & after he had murdered his brother, he chastened hym, and lefte him to wander and runne at large: Alowed the sacrifice of iuste Abel: toke vp Enoch vnto him, appeared to the Fathers: preserued Noe and his, out of the wicked worlde, as the remnant to be the sēde plat of our kinde: he entred a couenant with them, he gaue commaundement in an expresse lawe, what they should do: he called Abraham out of Hur of the lande of the Chaldeis, he bound himself to him & to his sēde in a couenant, he chose a peculiar people to himselfe out of him, and promised vnto him the sēde of blessing. All these matters, I say, which were done before ỹ law, must so be considered by vs, that we may marke & honour in thē the workings of the heauenly grace of God, according vnto his eternall purpose.

And herevnto are also to be referred those matters which chaūced to the people of Israell vnder the law: as the deliuerance out of Egypt, the bringing into the Promised land, the giuing of the law, the ordinaunce of the priesthod, with the rites of it: the shadowing shadowyng and prefiguring of the truth whiche was to come, and the promisse of Christ so oftentymes repeted by the tellings of ỹ Prophets. In dede these matters do concerne the dispensation of Moses lawe, and the schoolyng of the old Testament: but all was meante to the purposed end, that is Christ the sauiour of the worlde. And so farre forth they are to be referred vnto the workings of the eternall grace. In dede the Apostle maketh a difference betwirt the law and grace, when he saith: You be not vnder the law, but vnder grace: but that difference is not such, that it doth exclude the lawe from the eternall counsell of the grace of God, but to make a distinction betwixte the dispensations of him.

After the law, succeded that singular worke of the grace of God, whē by Christ taking flesh, mākind shold be redeēmed. To this sort belongeth the incarnatiō of the eternall Woord of God, and suche matters as depend vpon the same: the course of John Baptiste, as precursour sent for this entent, to make ready the way to reueale the sauiour. The dispensation of Christe comprehended in hys teaching, in his doing of myracles, in instructing his disciples, in his passiō & death, resurrection & ascension, and sendyng of the holy spirite, and such things as be requisite to this, that the same dispensation may attayne to his effecte and ende, that is the myniſterie of the Gospell, whiche was spredde abroade and diuulgated by the Apostles throughout the worlde: and the calling of all people, wherby all nations are called to the vnitie of fayth, knowledge of truth, and true saluation in Christe.

After the consideration of these matters, wee be ledde by a strayght lyne to the pryuate workings of Goddes grace, whereby there is wrought in the hearts of the elect, the lightnyng of the blynde minde, by the holy Spirite, the iustifying and regeneration of the wicked harte, the traynyng in of the gyftes of God, of faith, hope, charitie, patience, &c. And whatsoeuer things else bee requisite to the doyng of good workes, and at the ende the glorifying of our bodies and soules, to the likenesse of Christe.

Priuate vvorkings of grace.

This briefly runnyng ouer the matter, wee haue set forth the diuision of the grace of God. Not so that wee can be able worthily to poynte out the greatnesse of it in this wyse, but to shewe briefely that the consideration of it, whiche the Schoolemenne do sette forth, is ouerstreight and slender, and to gyue you to vnderstande, that al matters are to bee referred vnto it, whiche haue bene done by God towardes Mankinde, euen from the beginnyng of the worlde, perteynyng vnto theyr saluation, and whatsoeuer shall be done also til the worldes ende. Wherfore whensoeuer there chāceth to be any reasoning of election, predestinatiō, creation, vocation, dispensation, eyther of the woorde of the lawe, eyther of the Gospell, of the working of the holy spirite, of iustification, regeneration, doyng of good workes, glorifying, to be short, of the very euerlasting lyfe, we muste haue an eye vnto the counsell and purpose of Gods grace, as to the fountaine of al these matters: & we must chiefly beware, that we do allowe nothyng whiche doth not auaũce the glory of ỹ grace of God, or is discrepant from this eternall counsell of Gods will.

that

I suppose that this is sufficient for this present. For I meane not here to reason agaynst the teachers of frée will, merites, and mens owne iustice, the obscurers or darkeners of the grace of God, but those matters whiche be requisite to confute them withall, shall be mentioned in other places, where we must speake of fayth and iustification, of the forgiuenesse of sinnes, & of good workes.

Of the Redemption of Mankinde.

I Haue thought good nexte after the place of the grace of God, to ioyne vnto it, the same of the redemption of Mankinde, wherein is comprysed, as it were, the very summe of the counsell and purpose of the heauenly grace. And me thinketh the procédyng of it not euill, to go from the fountayne of our saluatiõ downe to the riuer, that is from the counsell of Gods grace, to that worke predestinated from euerlastyng. This is a principall place, large, and of muche consideration. And bycause the multitude of those things whiche do pertayne vnto this matter, should not brẽde confusion to the reader, I will vse a certayne order, though not exact, yet such as I iudge may be sufficient to a godly myndc. As for them that be curious, no man can be able to satisfie.

Concernyng the word of Redemption, it is manifest what it is. To redeéme: surely to chalenge into a mans owne power, or to procure to libertie, by giuyng the value or price of any thyng whiche came into another mans power by sellyng or imprysonmẽt. Likewise also this greke worde, ἀπολύτρωσις, which the Apostle vseth nowe and then, hath the signification of Redemption, whiche is by gyuyng a pryce or raunsome, whiche they do meane by λύτρον. But the Ebrewes vse this worde גאל, whiche signifieth to redeéme, somwhat more largely and generally. In Leuiticus it is vsed for the deliuerãce which is by giuyng a price. In diuerse places of Scripture it is vsed also for any kind of deliuerãce, yea though it be by strong hande, when a man oppressed, is taken frõ the violence of the wicked.

Now we must in redemption consider by degrées, who it is that is redeémed, from whẽce, by whom, how, when, and to what purpose and end. Touchyng this matter we haue in hand, the very title of this place speaketh of the redemption of mankinde. Mankinde comprehẽdeth not one or two nations, but the vniuersal world, that is all the nations of the whole worlde, all men from the first to the laste. Israell was redeémed sundry tymes out of the power of hys enimies, out of Egypt, sometimes from the tyranny of the Cananites, out of Babylõ, &c. But here it is not meant of some speciall redemption of any people, but of the same whiche is generally of all. We know that all be not partakers of this redemptiõ, but yet the losse of them which be not saued, doth hinder nothing at all, why it should not be called an vniuersall redemption, which is appointed not for one nation, but for all the whole worlde. That resolution or opening of the earth, when all things euery where are opened in the somm'er, to budde forth, is well called vnuniuersal, albeit many trées & many places do bryng forth neyther buddes nor fruite. The Sunne is that generall giuer of lighte to the whole worlde, though there be many whiche do receyue no light at all of him. There was among the Iewes vpõ the yéere of Iubilee, a generall deliuerie of all bond men, although many whiche abide in their bondage, did refuse the grace of the deliuerie. In like case it is with this redemptiõ of mãkinde, whereof we talke, it is not for lacke of the grace of God, that the reprobate & desperatly wicked men do not receyue it: nor it is not right that it should lésse his title and glory of vniuersall redẽption, bicause of the chil dren of perditiõ, seyng that it is ready for all men, and all be called vnto it. So he that redéemed the worlde, what soeuer do become of the reprobate, is most iustly called the Sauiour of the worlde. And Christ doth not lie when he saith: I am the light of the worlde, albeit there be an innumerable sorte in this worlo which haue no parte of ỹ grace of his light. And this redemption is also vniuersall for this cause, bicause it is so appointed vnto al men, that without it no man is, nor can be redeémed. No doubte it is to be vnderstanded in this sense, when the grace of vniuersall saluation and redemption is propounded in the Scriptures. For this way we shall auoyde eyther to obscure and straynghten the glory of the vniuersall grace, eyther to say with the phrenetike persons, that no man at all is damned, and do perishe euerlastingly.

Secondly, we must sée frõ whence mankynde is redeémed. Redemption taketh no place in men that be at libertie, as nother gyuing lyfe againe to them whiche be alme. For from whẽce should he be redeémed, which is vnder bondage to no body? But mankinde is redeémed. Which gaue himselfe (sayth the Apostle) the price of redemption for all men. Ergo all mankynde was subiecte vnto bondage, from whiche it is redeémed. What bondage the same was, it appeareth by the wrytings alwell of the Apostles, as also of the Euangelists. He that doth sinne, is the bondman of sinne, sayth Christe. Item, I am solde vnder sinne, sayth the Apostle. Also whiche deliuered vs, sayth he, out of the power of darkenesse, & translated vs into the kyngdome of the loue of his Sonne. So that all mankinde seruing sinne, fell into the power of darkenesse, that is of Satan, whome Christ also calleth therfore, the Prince of this worlde. This consideratiõ giueth vs to vnderstãd, that there is not one of al mankinde, but in that that he is conceyued and borne in sinne, he is bondman vnto sinne, and consequently also subiect vnto the power of darkenesse, vnlesse he bée made partaker of this vniuersall redemption. In thys poynt wée muste not excepte the holy men, Patriarches, Prophetes, and Apostles.

Frõ vvhẽce none is redeemed that is not eyther bõd or captiue.

1. Timoth. 2.

The bondage out of vvhich vve be redeemed. Iohn. 8. Rom. 7. Colos. 1.

Saintes or holy persons be not excluded.

For in that that they were Godly, they were so as redeemed, not as borne of Adã. Their godlinesse came of the grace of God, not of nature, God had concluded them also vnder sinne, that beyng saued, they mighte boast of his mercy, not glory of their owne iustice.

Howe much the redemptiõ of the bondage of sin ought to be esteemed.

It can not be vnderstãded by carnall men, how much this redemptiõ frõ the bõdage of sinne is to be esteemed. For as it semeth pleasant vnto them to folowe the pleasures of the flesh in sinning, so it is to thẽ a very vnthankefull matter to be redeemed frõ sinne. The whoremonger priest, when he dothe mumble out the Colects, as they call them, in the cõmemoratiõ of Virgins, wherin he doth pray vnto God, as the wordes do leade him, for chastitie, dothe with much ado name the word of Chastitie, fearing least by the means of the Virgin, he shold receyue of God the gifte of chastitie, whether he will or not, & so shifted from the filthe of his pleasure, might be brought to lyue chast: which kinde of life he iudgeth to be most miserable. Thus the carnal and voluptuous men be affected.

Wherefore they set not a heare by this grace of redemption, but do earnestly with their whole harte abhorre it. But others which be strikẽ with the perseuerance of their sinne and feare of Gods iudgement, when they began once to tast the grace of this redemption, they would not forgoe it in no case for al the kingdoms & Empyres of all the whole worlde. Their affection the Apostle did expresse to the Romaines, saying: Unhappy man, am I, who shall deliuer me from this bodie subdued vnto death? The carnall man like meme that be in a phrenesie, perceiueth not the bondage of sinne whervnto he is subiect, that it tendeth to euerlasting perditiõ, and that the reward of it is death. But of this bõdage if any mã lisse, let him loke vpon those things which are noted in our Commentaries vpon John Cap. 8.

Rom. 7.

Thirdly, we must thinke also of the Redeemer, by whome mankinde is redeemed from the bõdage of sinne & Satan. It is a matter of renoune, and not euery mans worke, to redeeme not one man or nation alone, but the vniuersall kinde of men, and that not for a season, but for euer: moreouer not from a common sorte of power, but most strong next vnto God, and whiche is yet more wonderfull, so to redeeme captiues, that whereas of nature they do loue their own slauery, he alttereth their harts, so that contrary vnto the nature of their owne flesh, they do vtterly detest the bondage of sinne, and do earnestly desire to be deliuered from it. To auaunce the glory of this redeemer, we must way the conditions of the redemption. In a redeemer, there be two poynts requisite.

1. The firste is, that he be able to redeeme: the other, is the right of the redemption. As touching the first, he can not be a redeemer, which eyther of strength is to weake, of power to take away stoutly a prysoner out of the power of the tyrannie, eyther to powre to raunsome him in paying the pryce. Therefore it is requisite first of all, that he which wil redeeme any person, muste be of power and ability, necessarie to redeeme, accordyng to the qualitie of the tyrannie. Concerning the other parte, no man can be a redeemer of righte, but he to whom the right of redemption doth belong vnto. And that is of two partes. For either it consisteth in the right of proprietie, or else in aliance. By the right of proprietie, the mayster may lawfully redeeme his seruant, the King and Prince his ministers or people. By the right of aliaunce, ỹ father doth of right redeeme his sonne, the brother the brother, the kinsman the kinsman. Of this right of aliaunce, many things be ordered in the lawe. In respecte hereof, this worde גאל, that is redeemer, is taken sometimes in the law for a kinsman & allie, so that גאל חרם, is asmuch, as ỹ allie in bloud. And there is two sortes of alliaunce: one of bloud, an other of religion. Wherefore it is conteyned in the Cannons, that it doth perteyne to the Church of the faithfull, to redeeme the faithfull prysoners out of the hand of the enimies, yea by selling of the holy Iewels of Siluer and Golde.

cerning

The power of Satan howe great.

Therfore seing that these poynts be requisite in a redeemer, let vs see consequently who it is that was able bothe in strength and right to redeeme mankinde, captiue vnder sinne and Satan. The doctrine of the Apostles doth attribute this vnto Christ Iesu the sonne of God. It setteth him forth vnto vs for our redeemer and deliuerer. And he dothe witnesse this of himselfe saying: If the sonne do deliuer you, you shall be at libertie in deede. Then these two things must be found in him, that is to say, a greater strength and power then the tyrannie of sinne and Satan is able to withstande, and the right of redemption. The strength of sinne and the power of Satã be both such, that no vertue or strẽgth of man, no nor of Angels can do any good agaynst this bondage. That of men coulde not, bicause all mankynde is suppressed & captiue in this bondage. Wherefore none of the whole numbre of men borne of the sede of mã, coulde be of so great power to ouercome the tyranne, and deliuer mankynde. For as Iob sayth: Who can make cleane, that whiche is conceyued of an vncleane sede? so we may say also here: Who is able by hys power, beyng himselfe a prysoner and bounde, to deliuer them whiche be in pryson and bounde, whereof he hath none? The strength of Angels coulde do no good, for that that the nature of Angels can not take away the euill of sinne from mankynde, by whiche Satan dothe raygne in the worlde. Wherefore the strength of God was in any case requisite, in deede such a redeemer, whiche beyng endowed with the power of God, shoulde bothe take away the euill of sinne whiche is in our flesshe, and destroy also the kingdome of Satan. But Christ did this, beyng stronger than Satan, and whole spirit is able inough to heale our harts, and to deliuer vs from the euil of sinne. Herein thou hast an argumẽt of the Diuine nature and power bothe together in Christ.

Iob. 14.

The righte of redemption.

As concerning the right of redemption, this is also found in Christ ful and whole. He hath the right of proprietie ouer vs, in asmuche as he is true God, ỹ eternal Worde, wherby all things are made. No man hath so much propertie ouer his bonemã either bought or caught in warre, as the workeman hath ouer his workemanship, the creator ouer his creatures. He hath the right of aliaunce in that he was made a very man, so much the nearer vnto our primitiue nature of man, the further he is off from any accessiō of Satans malice. This is that mysterie of the incarnate Worde, which no mans reason is able to cōprehende. By incarnatiō he was made our brother, who by the godhed of the worde is the Lord of all. Wherfore, he is not ashamed, sayth the Apostle, to call vs his bretherne, when he sayth: I will declare thy name to my bretherne. Herevnto belōg all those Scriptures which do commende vnto vs the Incarnation of the Worde, that is, the nature of mā truly in Christ, of which matter we must retayne a sounde beleefe agaynst the pestilent poyson of them whiche do defende, that the flesshe of Christe came from heauen, from the very substance of the godhead it self, and not from the sede of Abraham, & our flesshe. They do bereeue vs from Christ this right of alliaunce, and ouerthrow the greatest parte of our cōfort. Mathew doth bring the flesh of Christ, vnto Abraham, and Luke euen to Adam the firste man, the parent of our common nature, calling him manifestly The sonne of Adam: and Christ himselfe doth oftentimes call himselfe The sonne of man, that is very mā, verily borne of our flesh. There can be nothyng therefore lacking in Christe our common redeemer, in whom there is the strēgth of God agaynst the strength of Satan and sinne, able inough to deliuer, and the right of redemption full and whole, chiefely for his dominion of proprietie, and partly also for his alliaunce and kindred of the bloud of man. These matters haue an earnest and necessary consideration, whereby we do finde by what counsel of God it is done, that there is giuen vnto vs suche a redeemer, which is both true God and true Man, that is the Worde incarnate.

Heb. 2.

Here it may be thought vpō also, whether Christe ought to redeeme mankinde or no? But I suppose wee had neede to walk warely in answering this questiō. For if you say that he ought, the daunger is, least you bring the worke of our redemption vnder a kinde of dutie, and denie the grace of God. For that which commeth of dutie, cā not be imputed vnto grace. God keepe that out of the mindes of them that be redeemed, to refer the cause of their redēption to any other thing, than vnto the mere free & vndeserued grace of the redeemer, and so obscure the glory of his grace. In the otherside if you say, ỹ he ought not to redeeme mākind, the daunger is least you take from him the right of redēption, & beare away this notable and right wonderfull worke of the right of his lawful authoritie, and attribute it vnto power onely, so that the olde enimy may accuse our redeemer, that he toke mankinde out of his kingdome by might only, & no right. Therfore we must say, that Christ did in this matter, in respect of vs, not that whiche he ought to do, but that whiche he willed and purposed to do by grace: and that in respecte of his right as wel of proprietie as of alliance, that he did not onely the same whiche he might and would, but that whiche he ought to do also, that is whiche pertayned to him onely of right. Wee must beware, because we will not deny this right of his, that we do not say, he did that whiche he ought not to do. For to do that whiche a man ought not to do, seemeth to be al one as to do a thyng vnlawfully, and by no right belongyng vnto him. And for almuche as no man is bounde to this, that he muste pursue his right, as if it were not at libertie eyther to gyue place or to folowe the matter, we muste not tie a duetie vnto this righte of Christe in the worke of redemptiō, as though he dyd a thing whiche hee ought of dutie to do, and shoulde offende, vnlesse hee did it. For albeit he bounde hys fayth and truthe with promyses, whiche he did afterwards accomplish in redeeming vs, yet the very promyses also are not to bee referred to any other thing, than to the purpose of grace. He bounde hymselfe vnto vs in promysing, not because he ought to do so, but because he had pitie vpon vs, and wouldе, and from euer determined it. Wherfore the very fulfilling also of the promises, is not to be referred vnto the promises, but vnto free grace, as the very roote & fountayne of the promises. Hee might haue not promised, vnlesse he would haue redeemed: and he might haue willed not to redeeme vs, vnlesse he had enclyned by the drift of his own grace to redeeme vs. Wherefore we muste exceedingly beware, that we make not of the worke of free and meere grace, a worke of duety, because of the meanes of the promises of grace, whiche though they seeme to haue a bonde of performance of truth, yet of vs to whome they were made frankly vppon no deserte, but rather deseruyng euill, they muste not be taken for dutie, but to bee had and embraced as of grace.

Fourthly, wee must see also, howe we be deliuered by Christe frō sinne and Satan. The deliuerie of captiues and bondmen chaunceth to bee foure wayes: eyther by francke and free manumission or discharge, eyther by exchaunge, eyther by a price of raunsome, eyther by violente taking away. Francke and free discharge had here no place, whether we do consider the sin cleauyng most fast to our flesh, or the nature of Satan ỹ most wicked tyrant. For there passed no exchaunge. For God forbidde, that our redeemer did so deliuer vs, that he should restore againe to Satan any of them which he bound vnto him, whom to redeeme al, gaue himselfe to death for all. There remaineth the raunsome of redemptiō, and violēt taking away. These twoo bee of that nature, that we may see they can not come togither in one and self same redemption. For when a prysoner is redeemed by giuyng a raunsome, he is not deemed to be taken away violently: and on the other side, when a man is violently taken out of the hande of hys enymie, it appeareth that he is deliuered by violence and not by raunsome. And yet for all that, these two do alwayes concurre in the redemption of Mankinde.

The deliuery of captiues foure wayes.

That Christe redeemed vs by a price or ransome, the Apostle witneseth, saying: You be bought for a 1. Cor. 6. 1. Cor. 7.

1.Corinth. 6. & 7.

greate pryce. And, Yea are deerely bought, be not the seruants of men. That he shoulde stoutely ouercome Satã & his guarde, destroy his kingdome, and carrie away the spoyle, Christe himselfe witnesseth saying: When a strong armed man keepeth his warde, al things be in quiet whiche he possesseth: but when a stroger than he doth come on, & ouercometh him, he will take away from him all his armour wherein he trusted, and shall bestow his spoyle. And the Apostle maketh mention of the triúph of the spoyling of Satan. And he reporteth of Christe, also that he destroyed him whiche had the imperie vpon death, meaning the Diuell, and so deliuered his people. Wherfore a man may well demaunde, how these twoo coulde haue place in the deliuerie of mankynde. If he redeemed vs by giuyng raunsome, how did he violently take vs away from Satan, and destroyed his kingdome? And what faithfull person is so witlesse, that he can beleeue that Christe the Sonne of God, very God and Man, gaue any raunsome to the olde and cursed Serpent, the most wicked aduersarie, for whose destruction hee came into this worlde to redeeme vs from him, seyng that he might with greater glory vtterly vanquish him, and stoutely take away mankynde out of his power? Who is of so simple a minde, to gyue his enimie a raunsome, when he can with strong hande and with triumphe take from him ỳ captiues which he detayneth? To what purpose is the glory of triumphe giuen vnto Christe, if he did redeeme by giuing a raunsome? And yet both these be reported of Christ:

Exod. 31.

Coloss. 2. Hebr. 2.

it is not meete to go to law with holy Scriptures.

Wherefore we muste know, that these things be reported of Christ in sundry respects. Whereas he redeemed vs by raunsome, it is not to be referred vnto Satan but vnto God the father. He gaue in raunsome for vs his owne bloud, that is his owne selfe. In whome (sayth the Apostle) we haue redemption by his bloud. And Peter sayth: Ye are not redeemed by corruptible things, golde or siluer, but by the precious bloud of Christ, as of a Lambe vndefiled and without spotte. And Paule sayth: There is one mediatour of God and men, the man Christe Iesus, whiche gaue himselfe a redemption for all. This raunsome he gaue to God the father. For he offered himselfe vnto him as the mediatour betwirte God and vs. This price of his bloudshed for vs, is the offeryng and the oblation, belongyng vnto his priesthode, wherein he did sacrifice, offeryng it not to Satan, but to God his father. The Apostle sayth also: How much more thã the bloud of Christ, which by the holy spirite offered himselfe, immaculate vnto God.

Ephes. 1. 1.Pet. 1. 1.Tim. 2. Hebr. 9.

And whereas he deliuered vs by strong hãd, that is to be referred vnto Satan the Prince of this worlde, whose power and kingdome he destroyed, and deliuered them whiche he detayned captiues. But you wil say: What neede was there to gyue a raunsome to God the father for the redeemyng of mankynde, seyng we were not his prysoners but Satans? The raunsome was giuen not to the wrõgful tyrant, but vnto him which had a right vpõ vs to condemne vs, that is to God, agaynst whome the parentes of our kinde had sinned. There was amends to be made to his iustice. And whereas there was no mã that could do that, but he that were vtterly cleere from al blame of transgression and disobedience: and beyng none such, he sent his Worde into our flesshe, in the likenesse of the flesh of sinne: that as Paule sayth, he might condemne sinne through sinne in the flesh. For this purpose our redeemer offered himselfe to God the father as a raunsome of redemption for vs all, that beyng deliuered from the right of condemnation, blame & guilte of sinne, we might be made at one with God. And this atonement destroyed the strẽgth & power of sinne and Satan. For it could not be, that the Serpente coulde holde them any longer prysoners, whiche were made at one with God by the raunsome of redemption.

How we be redeemed from Satan. How Christ was offered vnto God.

So was both done vpõ the crosse. Bothe the raunsome of our redemption was gyuen to God the Father to reconcile mankynde, when he did shed his bloud for vs, and the power of sinne and Satan was destroyed withall. That by death (as the Apostle sayth) he might destroy hym whiche had death at his cõmaundement. Agayne: That he did put out vpon the crosse the handwryting whiche was agaynst vs, and toke it away, forgiuyng vs our sinnes. &c. These things briefly I thought good to touche of by the way, concerning our redemption, for the ruder sorte, that they may yet perceyue some lighte of suche debatyng of the matter, by the meanes of the grace of Christe.

Fiftly, it falleth also to the consideration of this present matter, how the redemption of mankynde was wrought. He whiche determined with himselfe to redeeme mankinde by his grace, from euerlasting before the establishment of the worlde, did by his wisdome determine vpon the time also of this redemption. There was nothyng done in this matter rashly. God made all things in wisedome, in numbre, waight, and measure: howe muche more trowe you, were all things ordered with special wisedome and counsell in the worke of redemption? By this wisdome order was taken also before the beginnyng of tymes, for the time when mankind should be redeemed. There is no wiseman but knoweth, that there is a great matter in the times to haue things well, orderly, & profitably handled. Of the tyme of the counsell and purpose of God, when he appoynted to redeeme vs, there is no reason to demaund. For the same whiche was done before times from euerlastyng, passeth the capacitie & cõpasse of time. But the very worke it selfe of redemption, for asmuche as it is subiect vnto tyme, did require a certayne determination of prefired tyme. Thereupon is that of the Apostle, saying: When the fulnesse of time came, God sente his Sonne. &c. And in an other place: To make vs to know (sayth he) ỳ mysterie of his will accordyng vnto his good pleasure, whiche hee determined with hymselfe to the dispensation of the fulnesse of times, ỳ he might restore all thyngs by Christe. &c. The fulnesse of times is the accomplishment of the appoynted and prefired tyme

VVhē the Redẽption of mākinde was made.

The fulnesse of tyme. Galat. 4. Ephes. 1.

The fulnesse of time came, when the determyned tyme was accomplished. Hereby we be easily admonished, that the tyme of our redemptiō was not casuall, euen as the worke it selfe was not, but appointed and determined from euerlastyng by the counsell of Gods wisedome.

And that this time was determined vpon, the writyngs bothe of the Apostles and of the Prophetes also do teache. In Esaie, those things which be forespoken of the dispensation of Christe, are appointed vnto the latter dayes: and Peter, Manifested (sayth he) in the laste dayes, by cause of you. And the Hystorie of the Gospell dothe sufficiently declare, at what time the redeemer came into ỹ worlde. He came nother in the beginning nother in the middest, but towards the euening, when the course of this worlde was passe more than half, & began to encline to ỹ decay. A man would thinke that the space of tyme hath bene very long since the birth of Christe vntil these dayes of ours: but if you loke backwards to the times that are past, which went before the lawe, and the tymes which were after that againe, appointed for the lawe, vntill the comming of Christe, whiche came to foure thousande yeeres, you shall perceyue that the dispensation of Christe was appointed vnto the latter tymes, as to the very later parte of Euenyng of the worlde.

Esay 2.

1. Pet. 1.

Christe came at the Euening of the vvorld.

VVhy christ came not immediatly after the fall of Adam.

Here we may not be to busse to searche the counsell of God, why he sent not his sonne and redeemer immediatly after the fall of mankinde. Without doubte there be many and great reasons, wherefore the prouidēce of God did so dispose the course of mans saluation, that the seasons in whiche our nature should be concluded vnder sinne, & the promises, figures and shadowes of our redeptiō that was to come, the law of the letter also and the course of the Prophets should haue theyr race, & in all them shoulde runne out more than halfe this present worlde.

1 It was requisite, that the hugenesse or extremities of euil should be set forth more and more by innumerable, most great, and moste euident examples and arguments, not of one hūdred yeere alone, but of many that should be wrought & most certainely knowen of all things, that all mankinde is corrupt and depraued in his very nature.

2 Secondly, that exceeding & wonderfull patience of Gods godnesse was to be declared in that, ỹ he dyd spare so many hundred yeeres the desperate malice of men, & withall did beare with the times of ignorāunce, & blindnesse, as the Apostle speaketh.

3 Thirdly, it was expediēt to sharpen the desire of godly men, to make them to wishe for the promised seede, with endelesse wishyng and sighyng, and to exercise their fayth also in looking for the redemption to come, and to embrace it as present a greate whiles before it came. In this faith, hope, expectation, desire, and wishes, it behoued the holy menne not onely to lyue, but to die also, and to departe out of this life, as not hauyng gotten that which they did looke for. Furthermore it was entended, that the more the euil of our losse was reueled & enforced, so muche the greater & more renowned should the glory of of the vniuersall redemption and the iustice of God seeme to be, in that that he being iust himselfe, doth iustifie them whiche be of the faithe of Iesu. See Paule vnto the Romaines. This we may godly and to some profite consider in this matter, and beware withall, that we do not vnadvisedly search the most secret causes of the deferring so log of the redemption.

Peraduenture some bodye wyll aske, what became of them which departed out of this life before the time of redemption, euen from the begynning of the worlde, how they could be saued, seyng they dyed before that Christe the redeemer was borne. I aunswere: The verye worke of redemption was subiecte vnto a determination of time, that it could not be accomplished sooner than it was appointed: but the effect and vertue of the worke is in no wise tyed to anye tyme, but hangeth vpon the perpetuitie of the grace of God, and began euen from the beginning, and it extended euen vnto the very end of the worlde. And in respect of this vertue, and not of the worke it selfe, whych was at length fulfilled in the later dayes, it is sayde in the Apocalipse, that the lambe, meaning Christ, was slayne from the beginning of the worlde. The vertue of his death, as it were with both armes stretched out, embraced as well the tymes that went before, as the times followyng. Wherefore we muste not iudge so childishly of the redemption of oure kinde, to thinke that the efficacie and vertue thereof is to be measured according vnto that appointmente of time, when the very worke of it was done. It is the condition of bodylye and temporarie redemptions, that captiues can not be in very deede redeemed and deliuered, before the very worke of the redemption be transacte: agayne the very effect of the redemption dothe not extende to any, but to them only whiche be found aliue and present at the time of the redemption, and not to them whych be dead. Wherefore they be most fonde of all others, which do apply the holy scriptures prophecying of the deliuery promised by Christe, vnto a temporall and bodilye redemption. This redemption appointed to the worlde in Christe, is farre larger and more effectuall. It is eternall, not tempozall. Once (sayth the Apostle) he entred into the holye place, and founde eternall redemption. That whiche is eternall, is not to be tyed only neyther to the times passed, neither to the presente, nor to the tymes to come. This redemption is eternall, first for the counsell of the grace of God, whereby it was purposed frō euerlastyng: agayne for because of that perpetuitie whereby the vertue of it doth reache out it selfe thorowe ouer all times, euen from beginning vntill the ende of the worlde, and farther into euerlastyng. Wherefore there is no question of them whyche dyed in the foretymes, before that Christe was borne. Their saluation standeth vpon the verye selfe same grace and redemption, which oures doth. And hereunto is that to be referred which we do reade to the Romaynes in this wise: All haue sinned, and be destitute of the glory of God: but they be iustifyed freely by his grace, by the redemption whyche Redemption eternall. Heb. 9.

Rom. 3.

As in Chriſt Ieſu, whome God hathe ſet forthe to be the attonemaker by faithe, by the meane of his bloud, to ſhewe his iuſtice for the forgiuenesſe of the ſinnes, whiche were done before vnder the ſufferance of God, to ſhew his iuſtice in this preſent time, &c. He calleth the ſufferance of God, the tyme of the ſufferance of God, whereby he ſpared the times of the ages paſſed before, as it is mentioned alſo in the Actes: Till the time of redemption and of the declaring of iuſtice came, whereby they whyche do beleeue in Chriſt are iuſtified, and the ſinnes of the ages paſt, are forgiuen. And to this purpoſe ſerueth alſo thoſe thinges which we do reade to the Ebrewes. And therefore (ſaith he) he is the mediatour of the newe Teſtamente, that by the meanes of deathe for the redemption of thoſe tranſgreſſions, which were committed vnder the former teſtament, they which be called, may receiue promiſe of euerlaſting inheritance. By thys conſideration we be giuen to vnderſtande, that ſaluation and life was not giuen to our forefathers, for any maner of lawith or anye other kind of obſeruations, nor for anye holyneſſe of lyfe and iuſtice, were it neuer ſo greate, but for faith onely in Chriſt to come, euen as it is alſo vnto vs whiche do beleeue in the grace of the redemption alreadye perfourmed.

Actes. 17.

Hebr. 9.

Thirdly, we muſte thynke alſo of that, to whome and to what purpoſe Chriſt hath redemed vs. For aſmuch as he hath redeemed vs not exempte from his right, but belonging vnto his dominion, whereunto all thinges be worthely ſubiecte, whiche ſo euer were made by him, and from whom we ſlipte away by diſobedience: it is manifeſt, that he hathe redeemed vs vnto him, ſo that we do nowe belong to the right of his propriete for two cauſes, that is creation, and redemption. We be not in this poynt ſo redeemed, that we be free and at oure owne iuriſdiction and arbitrement: but that as the Apoſtle ſayth, Whether we liue, or dye, we be the Lords. And hereuppon are gathered three things. Firſt, that we be not at libertie to liue vnto our ſelues, and to glorye of our owne will, as the Scholemen do much reaſon the matter. Secondly, that it is not lawfull for vs to ſerue any other, than him whyche redeemed vs. Therof commeth that ſaying of the Apoſtle: Ye be boughte for a raunſome, ſee you be not the ſeruauntes of menne. Thyrdely, that it is not meete for vs, to iudge our brethren. Who arte thou, ſaith the Apoſtle, whiche iudgeſt an other mans ſeruaunte? he ſtandeth or falleth to his maiſter.

To whom and to what purpoſe Chriſt hath redemed vs.

It is alſo very profitable to conſider, to what ende Chriſt redeemed vs vnto him. If he had redeemed vs of purpoſe to haue gouernance, we ſhould haue bin redeemed by him for no other purpoſe, but to haue a people whome he might rule at his pleaſure. And this ende of redemption ſhoulde fall out to hys commoditie and not to ours. But for aſmuch as the counſell and purpoſe of the eternall grace, is the beginning of thys redemption, it is neceſſary that the ende alſo perteyne therevnto. And the nature of grace is fartheſt of all thynges from ſelfe loue, ſeking nothing leſſe than his owne commoditie:

Wherefore the reſpect of it can not be ſuch, as ſhould tende to the purpoſe of his owne commoditie. Therfore it followeth, that whereas we be redeemed by Chriſt, accordyng vnto the purpoſe of the eternall grace, it was done to this end, that it ſhould profit vs more than the redeemer: as the fruites of the redemption do the declare. For by this redemption we be made of ſeruants of ſinne and Satan, not only ſeruants and reconciled men, but ſonnes alſo and heyres of God. The largenelle of thys grace dothe require, that we employ oure ſelues to holyneſſe and iuſtice, and that we be to oure redeemer a people not onely peculiar, but alſo vnſpotted. So the Apoſtle ſayth: Whiche gaue himſelfe for vs, to redeeme vs from al wickednelle, and to clenſe a people acceptable vnto hym, feruently giuen to al good workes. The ſinne was greate, whereby we fell vnto the bondage of ſinne and Satan: and growing ſtill by encreaſe of miſchenous dedes & infinite wayes of wickednelle, it dyd thruſt downe the nature of oure kynde euen vnto Hell. Thys plentie of ſinne, the plentie of heauenly grace ſurmounted and exceeded, and ſente a redeemer. Nowe I beſeech you, who can ſufficiently way how enormious the wickednelle, malice, and vnthankefulneſſe of oure heart muſt be, if after the greate grace of redemption, we doe thys wrong and ſhame to Chriſte oure redeemer, that we doe runne backe to the fielde of the enimie that old Serpent, and lay downe oure neckes, yea oure bodyes and ſoules, vnto the olde bondage, from whence we were delyuered by the bloud of the ſonne of God. They doe greeuouſely ſinne againſt this grace of the redeemer, which do refuſe and contemne it when it is offered. But they doe ſinne moſt grieuouſly of all, whichs hauing receyued, and beeyng ſealed with the holy marke, doe prophane it in returning vnto their vanitie, doe make a mockery of themſelues vnto Satan. Theſe thynges concernig the redemption of mankynde; I thought ſhoulde doe muche good in godly mindes, if they be godly and deuoutely conſidered. The matter is exceeding large, and yet theſe fewe things whiche we haue treated of, be ſuche as may ſerue to good purpoſe towarde the conſideration of thoſe poyntes alſo whiche be not mentioned here.

Of the Incarnation of the vvorde.

Nowe that we haue noted ſuche thynges as wee thoughte neceſſarye touching the redemption of mankinde, whiche was made by Chriſt, before we doe proceede to anye further matters, of thoſe whiche doe perteyne to diſpenſation of oure ſaluation, I thoughte it meete to ſee the place of the Incarnation of Chriſte, for bycauſe that the ſame dothe chiefely belong to the worke of oure redemption. And wee wyll note thoſe thynges onelye, whiche ſhall ſeeme to helpe towardes the ſtay of the puritie and certaynenelle of our faythe, cutting off the

The chatts of dyuers men.

of the vnprofitable & curious chattes of the Scholemen and Sophisters, as these be of Duns, that darke Doctor, Whether the Incarnation of the Worde be a thing possible, What a person, or a suppositum dothe adde aboue nature, Whether one person may be incarnate without an other, What is the formall reason of the determining of ỹ incarnation, Whether three persons may take one nature in number: Whether God had bin incarnate if man had not sinned, whiche question some of our menne woulde call agayne to lyght, buryed in the filth of the Sophisters: Whether God may take vpon hun reasonable nature, Whether the bodye of Christe were made suddaynely and at an instante, Whether the blessed Virgine wroughte any thing actiuelye in the conceyuing of hir sonne, Whether a person maye take vppon hym a person, Whether there be many beings in Christ, Whether there be two reall filiations in Christe, Whether according vnto that that he is a man, he be a person: Whether God might take man vpon him from any other where, than from the kinde of Adam: And whether God might take man of woman kind, and other such like paltry, which they do reason of concerning the soule of Christ, all which matters are to bee left vnto the Idle men, whiche trauell more irreligiously than is conuenient in searching out the chiefe pointes of our religion, and setteth abrode the thornes and wilde weedes of mans witte, rather than the holsome fruites and good hearbes of Gods truth.

It is needefull for them whiche wyll consider the misterie of the Word incarnate, to loke firste vpon the word as the subiect, and nexte to the incarnation which is reported of the word. And for asmuch as this incarnation is reported not of euery word, but of the worde whiche is in God, it is needefull first of all for the confirmation of oure faith, that we doe heare the testimonies of holye Scripture for it. That the worde is in God, it is declared euen in the beginning of Genesis, where in the history of the creation of all thinges that is so oftentimes iterated: And God sayd, let it be: Item, And it was done. Whereunto the Prophete dyd loke, saying: He sayd, and they were made: he commanded, and they were created. And in an other place, By the worde of the Lorde the Heauens were fastned. And, In the beginning the worde was, and the worde was with God, and God was the worde. And Paule when he sayth: Bearing all things by the word of his vertue. And againe, By fayth we do vnderstand, that the worldes were framed by the word of God.

So that our faith is confirmed in this by the testimonie of the holye Scriptures of the Olde and Newe testamente, that we doe beleeue the word to be in God, of whiche thyng there be founde testimonies also in the writings of the Ethnikes, which did attribute vnto godhead, ỹ minde, the word, and the spirite. Wherefore a Christian man maye so muche the more stedfastly stand vnto our faith, bycause that those things whiche he dothe beleeue of God the father and his worde, are so certayne and manifest, that they be approued not onely by testimonies of the holye Scriptures, but of Ethnikes also, and doe openly reproue the blindenesse of the vnhappy Iewes.

But howe the word is in God, no Christian man must be too curious to searche. Those things whiche bee spoken of God, be so attemperate vnto our capacitie, that they be spoken vpon some likenesse, rather than according to anye exacte propertie of Gods nature and essence. And bycause we shoulde not thinke of God to be onely but an essence, as a masse high and excellente essence: but dissecured and separated from all others as well spirites as bodyes, he is called by the Ebrewes IEHOVA, as existent in euery place, and makyng and preseruing all things. And by the Grekes Θεὸς, that is pearcing and passing thorough: from whence the word Deus came to the Latines. And to signifie that he is the same to the frame of the whole worlde, that the mind is in a man, they called him the minde. Farther they did adde vnto it The word, and Spirite, to giue vs to vnderstand, that the same infinite essence of godhead is not after that sort, that it dothe altogither rest in it selfe, and keepe his vertue, goodnesse, and wisedome to himselfe alone, but doth rather sette it forth and reueale it, euen as the minde of man can not be idle, but dothe expresse in worde whatsoeuer it dothe conceyue in it selfe, by the meane of the spirite, whiche is as it were, the conduit where by the word is broughte forth from the deepe secrete parts of the mynde. Imagine that God the Father were like as a liuely and endlesse fountayne, the Word and his sonne to be as a riuer continually flowing out of this fountaine: and that the holy Spirite mughte be the very mouing and flowing out, whereby the water floweth out of the compasse of the fountayne, whiche mouing can not bee without the meane and working of the ayre. Nowe whereas this worde is called the Sonne of God, it is like as if a man should call the riuer the Sonne of the fountayne, and oure word that we do speake, the sonne of the minde. So I saye, these wordes, God, the word, or the father, the son, and the spirite be accommodate vnto the weakenesse of our capacitie. For no Angell is able to talke, nor no man able to vnderstande him, if hee did speake of the nature and essence of God, as it is in it selfe. But of this Metaphore of the Word, you maye see what is noted in my Commentaries vpon John, in the firste Chapter.

The vvord the sonne of God.

Marg. here.

What we ought to iudge of thys worde of God, no man is able better to set forth, than the holye spirite dyd expresse by the Euangelike John, where he sayeth: In the beginning was the worde, and the worde was with God, and God was the worde. This was in the beginning wyth God. All things were made by hym, and without hun was made nothing, that was made. In hym was life, and the life was the light of menne, and the lighte shineth in darkenesse, and the darkenesse receyued it not. And a little after: And the word was made flesh, and dwelt among vs (and we saw his glory, as the glory of the only begotten sonne of the father) ful of grace and truth.

The Euangelist doth sette forthe two kindes of things reported of the Two kinde of things reported of the vvorde of God.

He sayth not God was made flesshe.

wozde of God: that is to saye the godhed, and the incarnation. Touchyng the godhed, he saithe, that the wozde was in the beginnyng, was wyth God, and was God: againe that therby was the making, life and light of al things. Nowe these sayings haue the prayse of the godhed of Chzist, we haue expounded in oure Commentaries vpon John. Nowe touching the incarnation, it is said: And the wozde was made flesh. &c. which is nothyng else, but: And the wozde was made man: albeit it is not wythout cause, that he vsed the wozd of flesh. Nowe whereas hée saithe that the wozde is made man, of the which he said nowe before, that it was God, hée doeth without any contradiction saye that God is made man, although he wold rather say, the wozde, than God was made flesh. Where of the speaking of the Church also begon, that God is made man, and mans nature so knit vnto the nature of God. But lette vs consider those things, that doe belong vnto this matter.

First, he saith not, And God was made flesh: but, And the wozde was made flesh. Whé you do name God, it may aswel be referred vnto the father and the holye spirite, as to the Wozde. Wherefoze if he had sayde, God was made flesshe, he had expzessed no person of godhed: and the repozt of incarnation might haue béene aswell referred vnto the father, oz the holy spirite, as to the wozde. Seing therefoze that neyther the father, neyther the holye spirite was incarnated, he did beware to say God: but, The wozde was made flesshe. Here they doe demaunde, why the father oz the holye spirite was not incarnate, but the wozd. And they do determine, that the father and the holye spirite might aswell bée incarnate as the wozde: but that it was moze conuenient, that the wozde should become flesh: first, bycause it was séemly that the wozde shoulde be redeemed, and al things restozed by that wisedome whereby all thyngs were made: secondly, bycause the beginning of the Sonne is to be from an other, which doth not agrée with the father: thirdly bicause it was not méete that ther should be two sonnes, one in godhed, and another in manhode: wherefoze it was conuenient, that he whiche was sonne in godhead, should be son also in manhode. And to declare yet neuertheless that the holye Trinitie wzoughte in this incarnation of the wozde, they do imagin thzée maidens making a coate, and one of them to weare it. So they saye, the thzée persons of the holy Trinitie wzoughte indéede in the wozke of this incarnation, but one of them alone did putte on the flesshe. I suppose these thyngs haue no hurte in them, if they be not applyed to curiositye. Yet in my iudgement it behoueth neyther the father, neyther the holye spirite, but the wozde to bée incarnate, not onelye for that that hée is the sonne in godhead, and that by hym the world is made: but for this cause also chiefly, that the wozde is that counsell coeternall wyth God the father, purposed to saue mankynde, in whome oure redemption is predestinated euen from euerlastyng, in whome also we be chosen into the adoption of the children of God, as we may sée in the firste to the Ephesians. Wherefoze the wozke of oure redemption coulde coulde not be brought to passe, but by this wozde, noz it oughte not, noz it coulde not disagrée from the eternall predestination of the wyll of God.

Secondly, he sayth not, Chzistе is made flesshe, for that hadde bin as muche as if hée shoulde saye, The incarnate wozde is made flesh. For Chzistе is the incarnate wozde, God and man. Noz he sayth not, Chzystе is borne: but, The wozde is made flesshe, to admonish whereof Chzystе is, that is, of the wozde and flesshe, so that we muste consider, that in hys natiuitie there is not onely the nature of man, but the nature also of God ioyned togyther personallye with the nature of man. Wherefoze we must holde and vse with moste firme and stedfast faith thys circumlocution of Chzystе, that is, The wozde is made flesshe, as expzessed by the holy spirite: so that if a Christian man be asked, what is Chzistе, he may aunswere: The wozde made flesshe.

Thirdly, he sayth not simply, The wozde is made: but, The wozde is made flesshe. Hée dothe not repozt of the wozde, that it is made: as neyther hé sayde before, In the begynning God made the wozde: oz, In the begynnyng the wozd was made: but, In the begynnyng was the wozde, by whyche speache he doth attribute eternitie to the wozde. The opinion of the Arrians is wicked, wherein they dyd obstinately affirme, that the Wozd was made.

Fourthly, he doth not saye: The wozd is made man, for although (as I sayde before) that by the wozde of Flesshe, he dothe not meane simplye flesshe, but the soule and spirite wyth the flesshe also, that is the whole man: yet he dyd rather saye playnely and vppon great reason, The wozde was made flesshe, rather than The wozd was made manne, oz the sonne of Marie, oz the sonne of man was made.

1 For Chzistе by the wozde of Flesshe, there is not meante that that man onely whome the virgine dyd beare was receyued of the wozde into thys coniunction: but the verye nature of mankynde for the redemyng and restozing of whychе, thys incarnation of the wozde was predestinated from euerlastyng: so that wée must iudge, that the wozde was made not onely the sonne of the Virgine Marye, but surely the sonne of Adam also and of Eue, whychе thing Luke did also diligentlye expzesse in his Genealogie.

Luke. 3.

The vveakenesse of man taken vpon the vvorde.

2 Secondlye, the wozde of Flesh, hathe also the signification of mans weakenesse, that wée maye knowe that the wozde of God is not so made manne, that it toke those thyngs only vpó it which perteineth to mans spirite and soule, but it toke also the infirmitie of his flesh also, sauyng synne: whychе is sufficientlye expzessed in the verye race of hys dispensation, when he hungered and thirsted, ate and dzunke, was made wéerye, slepte, wepte, was made sozye, and at length suffered deathe: all whychе thinges were not fayned by him by counterfeptyng, but truely declared accozdyng vnto the truth of mans nature.

Fiftly, he sayth not, the wozd toke vppon him flesshe, oz ioyned it vnto him:

He sayeth not the vvorde toke flesh or ioyned it vnto him.

him: but, The vvord was made flesh. It is a greater matter to bée made flesh, than to take or to ioyne vnto him flesh. No man is saide to bée the same immediately, whiche he taketh vppon him, or ioyneth vnto hym. In deede we haue the same whiche wée doe take vppon vs: but we be not by and by the same, although wée doe ioyne neuer so nére vnto it. What can be more coniunct and more vnited, than that euerlasting Trinitie in the godhead of the persons? And yet it can not be saide, that the father is made the sonne, or the holy spirite, or the sonne the father, or the holye spirite: or the holy spirite the father, or the sonne, as it is here spoken of the vvord, ỳ it is made flesh. Why? For bycause the vnitie of the holy Trinitie is of godlye nature, and not of person, that is to saye, consisteth not of one and selfe same person, but of one selfe same nature. Yet agayne. The man and the woman be so ioyned and vnited by wedlock, that they do become into one flesh. Now (sayth he) they be not two, but one flesh. And yet no man can truely saye, that the man is made the womã. Why? Bycause the man and the woman be not coupled into one selfe same person, but in wedlocke they bée two persons, ioyned togither in one flesh and nature. But it may be sayde, that the vvord was made flesh, bycause it dyd not simplye take our flesh, but ioyned it selfe vnto it in vnitie of person. And this the condition of personall vnitie, that albeit, it do comprehende diuers natures, yet it is reported of the one, that it is the other, as in this case it is reported of the vvorde that it is made flesh. Ther is a great diuersitie betwirte the vvord and the flesh, if you consider the nature of both. There is no greater difference betwirt heauen and earth. For there the difference is betwixt things created, which do at the leaste way agrée in that, both that they do encline to the weakenesse, baseneste, and corruption of creatures: but in this case the worker and the worke, the nature infinite, immortall, omnipotent, and eternall: and the nature finite, mortall, most feéble, and temporarie, are farre asunder. And yet these two most diuerse natures of godhead and manhode, of the vvorde and the flesh, are so vnited into one person, that by entercourse of properties, flesche may be reported of the vvorde. Thus wée may saye, that The vvorde whiche is borne of ỳ Virgine, did eate, drinke, grew, that it did teach in the worlde, wepte, was wofull, and dyed, rose againe, and ascended vppe to heauen. All these things, when they be considered as otherwise in Christe, than they bée in man, be muche too base to seéme that they may any thing helpe to the saluation and redemption of mankinde. Wherefore the verie necessitie of our faith requireth, that we should not seuerally consider the flesche and the workes of the flesche, but only with the vvord of God. So that it was done moste aduisedly of the Euangelistе, that he did not simply say, The vvorde toke flesche: but The vvorde was made flesche, to expresse thys personall vnitie of the vvorde and the flesche both togither.

Some folkes doe reason of thys matter here, whether it may not bée sayde as well, The flesche was made the vvord: and Man was made God: as,

Mark. 4.

Personall vnitie.

He sayeth not, The vvorde was changed into flesche.

as, The vvorde flesche: and, God was made man. I knowe what may bée done in conferring the languages, and into how great a dignitie mans flesh is aduanced in the vvord: but in my iudgemente it becommeth oure modestie, rather according vnto the mouth of the holy spirite reporte of Gods grace and fauoure what the vvord was made, thã what our flesche was made. The very worke of thys incarnation, whiche no mans wisedome could euer comprehende, is no wise oures, but the Words. Wherefore it behoueth also to attribute the reporte thereof not vnto oure flesche, but vnto the vvorde only. Let this be inough for ỳ godly person to knowe, wonder, adore and reporte, what the vouchsauing of God hath done vnto vs, and withall happily to enioy the grace and effect of it. Otherwise our flesh, euen from the first corruption, to the aspire vnto the glorye of the godhead, so that we maye not giue it neuer so little occasion to bée proude of, and to forget the baseness therof, and crake rather of his owne glories, than of the benefites of Gods mercyes. For we be of thys nature, that we be moze readye to be puft vp with the glory of anye manner or anye wise gotten estimation, than to remember what the begynning of oure baseneste is, and to set forthe his grace which hath done vs good. And hereby, a wise man maye easily perceyue, why we doe stryue agaynst them, which do make a God of the flesh in Christ, and that we do iudge better to stande vppon this, to say rather the Word was made mã than, The flesh made God.

Sirtly, he sayeth not, The Word was chaunged into flesche: but, The vvorde was made flesh. This change must haue had an alteration of nature, whiche can not take place in Christ, whether you consider the nature of his godhead, or of hys manhode. The vvord is not changed, but retayneth his nature: neyther it receyuing flesche, left his nature. It is not possible, that God can leaue to be God. The nature of God suffereth neyther chaunge nor ende. For it is immutable and infinite. Nor the dispensation which was taken in hand, can beare it, that the nature of man ioyned vnto ỳ nature of God, shaulde lése those things whiche be proper vnto it: for so it mighte be inferred, that Christe were not true man, nor truely conceyued, borne, did not suffer, dyed not, rose not agayne from the dead: whiche all things the holye Scriptures notwithstanding openly and manifestly ascribe vnto hym. Wherefore the Churche doth sing a right: God was made man, He toke vpon him that which he was not, and lost not that which he was. Neyther the vnitie of the person doth require the change of natures, but dothe reteyne them safe and sound.

The person of a man béeing one, doth consist of a soule and a body, personally ioyned togither. The soule hath a heauenly, and ỳ body an earthly beginning: the soule is immortal and not suffering corruption, the body is mortal and corruptible. And yet they be so ioyned togither without confusion, that in both remaineth his owne nature.

A similitude.

The testimonies of the godhead, which be giuen vnto Christ in holy Scriptures, shoulde bée altogither

The testimonies of the Godhead and manhood of Christ, can not bee vayne.

vayne, if the Worde were chaunged into flesh on the other side, if the flesh had bin chaunged into the worde, all those testimonies which the writings of the Euangelistes doe sette forth of the true manhoode of Christ, were worthy to be beléeued nothyng at all. The Apostle sayeth, that all things are by Christ, and that there dwelleth in him bodily all fulnesse of the Godhed. Take from him the nature of the word, and this testimonie of the Apostle shall be of no weight. The Euangelistes and the Apostles doe witnesse of him, that he is of the séede of Abraham and of Dauid accoding vnto the flesh, the fruite of the wombe of Mary, conceyued in hir belly, and (accoding vntoý fulnesse of time appoynted to women wyth childe) borne of God. And suche other things as they doe make mention of the course of his dispensation to trye that he was true man: passing ouer that which the Apostle witnesseth of him, that we are bone of his bones, and flesh of his flesh. This I saye as I said, all these things shall be false, if the flesh of him lost that hir nature by the coniunction of the Word, and turned it into godly nature. Wherefore we must diligently loke to oure selues in this matter, for bycause of false Doctors, whiche doe bereaue Christ from the true nature of oure flesshe, bycause he said not, The word is changed into flesh: nor, The word chaunged the flesshe into it selfe: but, The word was made flesh.

Ephes. 5.

The diligence of the fathers.

The holy and learned men which trauelled to aduaunce the puritie of our faith, hadde a great and very necessary care in this poynte, to refute their erraures which eyther denyed, eyther confounded two natures in Christe, or so confessed the one, that they extinguished the other: or elles so appoynted both, that they dyd holde also that they be two persons. And it was wrought by a maruellous slight of Satan, that the simplicitie of the faithfull is so trenched aboute wyth the bulwarkes of heresies, fronted one againste the other on both sydes, that there is greate daunger, least when he flée from the wickednesse which assaulteth him vpon the right hande, he fall not in another contrarye mischiefe lying in a stale for him on the left hande. For euen as in the faith of the holy Trinitie, if your will auoyde Sabellius, whiche dothe so appoynte the vnitie of nature in Godhead, that he taketh away the Trinitie of persons, vnlesse your doe warely auoyde it, it is an easie matter to fall vnto Arrius, whiche dothe confesse in déede three persons in the godhead, but dothe extinguish the vnitie of nature. When he dothe pull away the nature of the word, from the nature of God the father, as a created from the increate, as made from the maker. In like sort it maye befall to them that be not warefull, that when they doe eschewe the poyson of Manichee, so extolling the diuine nature of Christe, that denying the truth of mans nature, he dothe affirme that Christe had not a new body, but phantasticall and the similitude of a man, they maye stumble on the lefte syde, and fall into the snares of Photinus, whiche doth so attribute the trueth of mans nature vnto Christe, that he taketh quite away the nature of God. Againe if they will turne from Nestorius the the Archbishop of Constantinople, whiche dyd so graunte to be two natures in Christe, that he did make to be in him also two persons, and dyd cutte one Christe into two: one whiche shoulde be the sonne of God, the other the sonne of man: ther is great daunger least they doe fall to Eutyches the Abbote of Constantinople, whyche dyd so appoynte to bée one person in Christe, and denyed to bée two, that he dyd withall teache that there was but one nature in hym, meanyng the nature of God, so that the nature of man shoulde be swalowed vppe by the coniunction of the worde.

These thrée couples of heretikes did wonderfully vexe the Church of Christe, but through the vigilancie and derteritie of the holy Fathers, they were in the olde time strongly ouerthrowé by the armure of Gods word, but not vtterly extincted. For we do sée, that of the sparkes of them which were left, there do rise vp as it were new firebrands in this our age. There be some whiche doe sauor of Sabellius, appoynting but one person in godhead: Some doe hurle abrode the poyson of Arrius, when they do denie that Christ the eternal sonne of God was borne before the worlds of the substãce of the father. And yet there be some, which railing vp again Eutyches, doe affirme that mans nature is so swalowed vp of the Godhead of the worde in the womb of the Virgine, that there remained none but the nature of Godhead. Some of those men, when they be compelled by euident testimonies of holye Scriptures, are driuen to graunte the truth of the flesh receiued by the word, they do graunte it, but not to passe beyonde the tearme of the earthly dispensation, whyche was ended in the ascésion of Christ, after whyche they doe stande in it, that there dothe remayne nothing in him of the nature of man whiche hée toke.

We must vvisely distincte betvvixt nature and person.

Wherefore godlye men must bée admonished, that diligétly eschewing these renewers of olde heresies, they maye cunningly putte difference betwixte nature and person, least they doe of errour so appoint it to be one person in Christ, that they doe denie two natures: or else confound them in a portétuous sort minglemaugle, or in that they doe acknowledge to be two natures in him distincted one from another by their properties, they doe withall suppose to bée also two persons in him. Concerning the person, there is one person of one selfesame Christ: touching nature, in déede there be in him two distinct natures, but not disseuered one from another, that of God which is of the word, which toke vpon him flesh: and that of man, which is of the flesh that was taken, of whyche none is changed into the other, but eache of them doth kéepe their proper and naturall condition. Christ which is conueyed vp into heauen true man, shalbe sene retourning so in the daye of iudgement, euen like as the Disciples saw him goe vp to heauen: not another from hym whiche ascended, but the same sonne of man, witnesseth hymselfe, shall returne with Angels in the maiestie & glory of the father, and shall at length restore the kingdome to God and the father, as we maye sée in the Epistle to the Corinthiãs.

Actes 1.

1. Cor. 15.

I meant to say somewhat of these matters in this place, vppon the occasion of that that the Euangelist doth not say, And the word was chãged into flesh, whiche shoulde please well the Photinians: nor, The word changed ẏ flesh into it, which shoulde like the Eutychians: nor, The word did counterfeite the flesh, whiche the Manichees would haue snatched vppon as spoken for them: Nother, And God toke vpon him flesh, which Sabellius woulde falsely abuse for the confirming of his wickednesse: nor simply, And ẏ word was made, whiche Arrius would commend euen vp to the skies: but, And the worde was made flesh, that is to say, the word so toke oure flesche, ẏ it became one person with it, which is of one Chryste true God and true man. So that if in this place, To be made, were heere all one, that it is or to be changed, or to passe from his owne nature into an other: it might folow that ẏ word was rather turned into flesche, than the flesche into the worde, so that we shoulde be compelled to thinke, that the nature of God did shrinke away, and was chaunged in the Virgins wombe, whiche were an horrible matter for godlye mindes. For it is an other manner of matter, for the flesche to become the worde, than the worde to become flesche. But away with these portentes. Neyther the flesche was chaunged into the worde, neither the word into the flesche. The Euangelist had none of those matters in his head when he wrote this, but his intent was, that like as the rest of the Euangelistes hadde sette forth the humane nature of Christe, so he woulde also sette forth both the Diuine and humane nature of the very same.

Seuenthly, thus far forth we haue treated of the words of the Euangelist John, in which he doth manifestly attribute ỹ. natures vnto Christ, that is of God and of man, in that he saith, The word was made flesh: now let vs consequently see of whence is the beginning of the taking of ỹ flesh by the worde. Valentinus ỹ folower of Plato, doth attribute vnto Christ flesh, not taken of the branch of oure kind, but brought downe frõ heauen. And his Scholers, to deceyue them ỹ be vnlearned in holy Scriptures, do from thence alleage testimonies, to confirme their opiniõ withal: as this out of John: No man ascended into heauẽ, but he which came downe frõ heauen, the sonne of man, which is in heauẽ. They do iudge that the sonne of man came so downe frõ heauen, ỹ he came into the wombe of the virgine not only in word, but in flesh also. And againe, You be frõ beneath, I am from aboue. And that they doe refer not to the corruption, but to the beginning of the flesche. Againe, He ỹ is of the earth, is of the earthe, and speketh earthly things: he that came from heauen is ouer all. Ergo saye they, Christ hath not this beginning of his flesche from the earthe as we haue, but hath the beginning of hys flesche from heauen as the sonne of God. And to the Corinthians: The first man is earthly of earthe, the second man the Lord himselfe frõ heauen. And they doe drawe this place likewise vnto the beginning of the flesh of Christ. Furthermore they do wrest vnto this error of theirs the same which the Church of ỹ faithful doth doth cõfesse in the Crẽde, that Christ was conceyued of the holye spirite, appoynting the holy spirite to be so the authour of the flesche of Christe, that they doe attribute vnto it the beginning from God, and denie it to be of man. And they be so blinded in this erroure, that they doe affirme, that the blessed Virgin brought nothing else to the incarnation of the word, but that it gaue it a lodging in hir wombe for the forming of it: and after it was formed, she bare it and brought it forthe: so that by thys meanes Christe shoulde not bée the birth or fruite, but as a guest of the virgins wombe, contrarye vnto the manifest saying of Elizabeth, whych sayde: And blessed be the fruite of thy wombe. This is the opinion of the Valentinians of the beginning of the flesh of Christ.

But the right Orthodore church dothe beléeue and graunte, that the flesh of Christ is generally taken out of our flesche, which we haue altogyther taken by natural encrease from the very parent of our kinde Adam, but specially from the séede of Dauid and Abraham. And we doe confesse this faith, beléeuing the testimonies of the Euangelistes and of the Apostles. Luke dothe confirme it, in that that he doth drawe the generation of the flesh of Christ, as I tolde before, euen from Adam, who hadde some hope also that the séede of the woman shoulde breake the head of the Serpente, whiche can be vnderstode by none other but by Christe, euen as the worde of woman is of right principally referred vnto Eue, so that it is most certaynely proued, that Christe is the séede of the woman, and sonne of Eue. And I sée not how this may truly be spoké, vnlesse his flesh be taken out of the flesche of Adam and Eue, which is oure common flesche. And that he hath his beginning specially from the séede of Abraham and Dauid, the testimony of the Apostle and Euangelist Mathewe is playne, whereby excludyng euen at the beginning, and as it were from the first boundes of his gospell, the error of ỹ Valentinians, he saith: The booke of the generation of Iesu Christ the sonne of Dauid, the sonne of Abraham. And leaste the aduersaries might haue occasion to deuise I wote not what, of sundrye kindes of children, he doth adde by and by, the race of the posteritie of Abraham, drawen out in order by his whole petigrew, crying out almost that the flesh of Christ was not brought frõ heauen, but taken out of the auncient and long race of the séede of Abraham, to prouoke the Iewes by this hys testimonie, to embrace the faith of Christ. And was not content with that diligence, but did namelye also recken the generations or petigrewe of Abraham vntill Christe hymselfe. So that in case Valentine do not erre, surely I sée not whiche wayes the Euangelist can bée defended here, and not worthely blamed of deceyte and guile.

After these two Euangelistes cõmeth Paule the Apostle, for he also doth attribute the beginning of the flesh of Christe to be nother frõ heauen, nother from the very substance and nature of the godhead, as one man durst anouch in these our days: but from the séede of Abraham, and from our common flesche. For so hée said openly in the cõgregation of the Israelites, which was at Antioch in Pisidia. And whe he was thus (speaking of Saul) remoued, he set vp Dauid to be their king, of whõe he gaue testimonie also saying: I haue found Dauid the son of Jesse, a man according vnto my heart, which shal do al my willes. Out of his seede GOD brought forth vnto Israell his sauiour, according vnto his promise, whiche (as the Apostle saith) he promised before by his Prophets in the holye scriptures of his sonne, whiche was made to him out of ỹ sede of Dauid according vnto ỹ flesh. Also he speaking of ỹ Iewes: Whose fathers be they (saith he) of whome Christ is according to the flesh, whiche is aboue all things God blessed for euer. And againe, he calleth Christ ỹ sede of Abraham, to whom the promises were made: To Abraham (saith he) the promises were spoken, & to his sede. He saith not, To his sedes, as in manye: but as in one, And to thy sede, whych is Christe. And to the Ephesians he saith manifestly: We be members of his body, of his flesh, & of his bones. And in an other place: Bicause that children (saith he) did communicate in flesh and bloud, and he likewise was made partaker of the same. &c. And in the same Epistle: It is manifest, that our Lord was borne of Juda.

Acts.13.

Rom.13.

Rom.9.

Galat.3.

Ephes.5.

Hebr.2.

These testimonies of the firste beginning of ỹ flesh of Christ be so manifest, that they do leaue no maner of doubt in their hearts, which wil giue credite to the plaine & euident truth rather than to madde mens imaginatiõs: whose vnbeliefulnes is so great, that they will saye that Christ is not borne of a virgin, but passed through hir euen as it were by a certaine pipe or conduite. And for ỹ cause, whereas this worde, Of, was put, they blotted it out and did set in this word, Vnto: reade it, Christe was brought forthe vnto the world, not Of, but By ỹ sede of Abraham & Dauid. Thus they are wont to doe which put their owne deuices into holy scriptures. Either they do wrest the vnto straunge sences, either they do corrupt also ỹ very wordes, which both ỹ Valentinias did.

And touching the scriptures whiche they do cite for themselues, as I mentioned before, the abuse of this is easily founde out by them which doe knowe that there be two natures in Christe, one of GOD, another of man. Faithfull folkes do vnderstand that the Sonne of man came downe from heauen, not so that his flesh was let downe frõ heauen, but in asmuch as ỹ word was made flesh: and that the sonne of man was then also in heauen, when he spake those thynges in the earthe, not by the presence of the flesh, but by the nature and maiestie of the worde, which was neuer sequestred from the father: in whych sense that is also to be taken, whiche is cited out of John. He that came frõ heauen, is aboue all. And that which he saith: You be from beneth, and I am from aboue, is spoken not of the beginning, but of the corruption of ỹ flesh which is of many sede. Christ was not conceyued of the sede of mã, but of working of the holy spirite conceiued in the wombe of the Virgin: wherefore he was not of beneath nor of the world ỹ is set to mischiefe, but as the word he was borne before the times of the nature & essence of God: but as man he was formed within compasse of time of the flesh of the Virgine, by the worke of the holye spirit, wout any sinne. And touching that whiche is redde in the Epistle to the Corinthians, The first man was of earth earthly, the seconde man the Lord himselfe frõ heauen. As concerning Adam, it hath no darkenes in it at all. It is knowen, how he is of the earthe, and is called earthly. But whereas Christ the seconde Adam is said to be from heauen, that is peruerted by heretikes. The true meaning of it is, that Christe and Adam are alleaged by the Apostle as the two heads in mãkinde, to this intent ỹ he might expresse by them the condition of our mortalitie and glorification. As many as be of Adam, bee earthly, & bearing the image of their parente, subiecte vnto deathe and corruption. And this all we be vniuersally. On the other side, the elect whiche be borne not of bloud, nor of the will of flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God, they be called here heauenly, albeit in flesh they be of Adame and of them it is reported, ỹ they shal be such in the resurrectiõ, as the heauenly Christ is also. If the Valentinians and the Eutychians do gather of this, the one sorte, that the flesh of Christ cõmeth not of our flesh, the other sort, that it did not hold that true nature of man: it followeth that the flesh of the elect persons also is of the very same condition. For the Apostle sayeth here not only that the seconde man Christe is of heauen heauenly, but he addeth that also manifestlye, saying: And such as is the heauenly, suche be they also that be heauenlye. And bycause you shall not referre it vnto Angels, in knitting vp the matter he doth conclude: Therefore lyke as we haue borne the image of the earthely, so we shall beare also the image of the heauenly. Wherefore it appereth ỹ the Apostle doth attribute this vnto the faithful, bicause they do expresse in them both the images of Adam & of Christ, one of corruption & mortalitie, the other of incorruptiõ & vnmortalitie: so ỹ in ỹ former they do expresse the earthly Adã, in ỹ they do dye and be corrupted: in the latter they do expresse the heauenly Adam, that is Christ, when they shal rise in the ende of the worlde to glorifying, immortalitie, & incorruption. This is the true and right meaning of the Apostle, whiche can not stande, vnlesse we do grant ỹ the flesh of Christ was taken of our flesh wout sinne, caried into heauen to the glory of immortalitie through the cõiunctiõ of ỹ word and the power of God. Otherwise we cã haue no hope, that after the image of the earthly man, we shall be lyke vnto the heauenly. But of thys place of the Apostle see our Cõmentaries vpon ỹ first Epistle to the Corinthias.

But whereas they do argue, that the flesh of Christ is not of the Virgine, is saide in the Crede, Whiche was cõceyued of the holy spirit. The same is also verye friuolous. The meaning of this peece is to be sought of the wordes of the Angell, wherein he said to ỹ blessed virgine: The holy spirite shal come vpõ thee: & to expoũd ỹ which he had sayd, he added: And ỹ power of ỹ highest shal shadow thee. The blessed virgine wondered, saying she had not touched a man, howe she shuld bring forth a child. The Angel doth opẽ the matter vnto hir, ỹ it shal not be by the accustomed course of nature, by the sæde of man, but of the singular worʒking of the vertue of God. For he meaneth nothing else when he sayeth: The holy spirit shall come vppon thee, but the very same whiche he addeth: And the power of the highest shall shadow thee. For ỳ vertue and power of the highest, is the holye spirite. He wrought in the wombe of the Virgine, forming the sonne of man of hir fleshy and bloud, and perfourming this incarnation of the Worde, without anye sæde of man. Of this it doth not folow by any meanes, that the fleshy was conceiued of the nature and substaunce of the holy spirite: whiche opinion the Christian faith, as absurde and contrary vnto Scripturcs, dothe not admitte, which doth not acknowledge that Christe hathe two fathers, one God the father of the word, and the other of the fleshy the holy spirite: but one only God the father, who accorʒding to the Godhead, begat him from euerlasting, and in the later dayes formed him by the vertue of his holy spirite, true man accorʒding vnto ỳ fleshy in the wombe, and of the fleshy & bloud of the Virgine, as of the sæde of Abrahaam, accorʒding vnto his promises, and sent him the Sauior into the world. This I meant briefely to note of the beginning of the fleshe of Christ, wherby it is manifest inough how wicked an opiniō they had, whiche denyedỳ truth therof: which they do also, which doe fondly deuise it to be conceiued of the nature and substance of the holy spirite. For like as Christe saide vnto Nicodeme: The same which is borne of the fleshe, is fleshy: and the same which is borne of the spirite, is spirite. If Christe bée borne of ỳ substance of the holy spirite & not of the substance of the Virgines fleshy, it folowcth he is a spirite & not fleshy. For the substance of anye thing that is borne, is most rightely deemed to be of the substaunce of it from whence it is, and hathe his beginning. Adam was called earthly, bycause ỳ he was taken of the earth: Thou art earth (saith God) and shalt returne into earth. But if we do say that Christ is a spirite, in asmuch as he is borne of a Virgin, what do we else, but denie that he is man, and so do bring to nothing all his dispensation whiche he toke vpon him in the fleshy, and withall the whole hope and certaintie of oure redemption? But God forbidde. It appeareth clearer than the Sunne, of the very birth of ỳ fleshy of Christ, of ỳ promises which wente before, of those things whiche he suffered, spake and dyd, that he is true man, yea the very sonne of man: which cā not be true, vnlesse he hath the truth of our fleshy. Wherfore we doe affirme, that the heresies of the Manichees, the Marcionites and the Saturnines be damnable, which deemed the truth of the fleshy of Christe, whether they depriued frō it the beginning thereof, or whether confessing that it was borne of oure fleshe, yet they did spoile it of the nature of our manhode, bycause of the conimuction of the worde. 1 Eightly, some men haue also searched of the manner how the worde of God is incarnate. As for me, I thinke playnely it can not bée sought out, howe the child is conceyued, quickened, fedde, and doth growe of the sæde of man, after the accustomed course of nature, in the mothers womb, muche lesse howe this vnwonted and wonderfull incarnation of the word was perfected. It passeth the compasse of our vnderstandyng to yeeld any reason thereof, other than was answeded to the blessed Virgin hyr self, by the Angell, that is that it doth not cōsiste of the sæde of man, but of the vertue of the holy spirite.

VVhich vvas conceyued of the holy spirite.

2 But naughty and vngodly curious men, not content with this vnderstanding, do deny that there was made in the wombe of the Virgine a coniunction of the worde and the fleshy, that is to say, of the nature of God and of man, and haue taught that Christe was borne but a bare & pure man, saying that afterwardes when he shoulde take vpon him the dispensation, then the godhead was added vnto him by the anoynting of the holy spirite: agaynst whome the same is to be stoutely set, whiche the Euangelist doth denounce: And the worde was made fleshy: & that which the Aungell sayde to the blessed Virgin, The holy spirite shal come vpon thée, & the vertue of the highest shall shadow thée.

3 They thought it an vnfitting matter to attribute vnto the worde the coniunction of that fleshe which lieth hidde nine moneths within the compasse of the mothers wombe, increaseth, and when the time is accōplished, is borne, is wrapte in swadling bāds, is cherished in the armes, is subiect vnto the conditions of infancie and childhod, and suffereth all such other things. For they do think these maters ouer base to agrée with the maiestie of the worde to be ioyned vnto it. So that the same which with wonder they ought to worship, they do with their rashe deuises much dishonor.

4 The synode of Constantinople did withstād this errour, in that that it ordeyned, that the blessed Virgine shoulde be called the mother or bearer of God, not meanyng that God of himself could be borne of the Virgins wombe, vnto whome no suche matter can befall, but that the same man whiche the Virgine did beare, was not onely man, but through the coniunction of the worde, was both God and Man. Nestorius.

5 Agayne, Apollynaris Bishop of Laodicea, to the intent he would also disorder the way of the incarnated worde, did fondly deuise, that the worde toke vpon him fleshe onely, and not soule, in stéede of whiche in Christ (he sayd) that the worde was. Against him the very word of Christ is to be layde, when he sayde: My soule is heauy, euen to death. And in John, Now my soule is troubled: by which wordes certainely he witnessed, not onely that he had a soule, but suche a soule also, as is subiect vnto heauinesse and trouble: which thing can in no wise be attributed vnto the nature of the worde in it selfe. Wherefore it must nedes be vnderstāded of the soule of the man, which he toke vpon him. Apollynaris. Matth. 26. John. 12.

6 And least that be thought also sounde which they sayd afterwards, beyng ouercome by the manifest testimony of the wordes of Christe, that the worde in déede toke vpon him the very soule of man: but not so the minde, that is to say, the spirite: but that the worde it selfe was in stéede of the minde and spirite. Wée must hearken vnto Christ agayne, who who speaking of his spirite, sayth: Father I commende my spirite into thy hands. And, Jesus crying with a loud voyce, gaue vp his spirit. These places can not be vnderstanded as spokē of the worde of God, nor of the holy spirit, but in any wise of the spirite of man, which he toke vpō him.

John. 3.

Luca 23. Matth 27.

7 By the consideration of these matters it is manifest, that the word is not so incarnated in the wombe of the Virgine, that it toke vpon hym either ỹ bare flesh without the soule, eyther the flesh & soule without the spirite of man: but that this incarnatiō was so made, that therein is cōprehended both the soule and the spirite, that is, that the word toke vpon him the whole man, with flesh, spirite, and soule: of whence it cōmeth, that some folkes had rather call this coniunction of the worde and flesh, To be man, rather Than flesh: for ỹ that the fulnesse of the taking vpō him of man, or if ye lust of mans nature, is more expressed in the word of humanation, than of incarnation.

σὰρκωσις. σάρκωσις.

8 Lastly, let vs adde also the cause of this incarnation. The generall & summarie cause is, that mankinde should be redeemed frō sin, the kingdome of Satan, and euerlasting condemnation. Of this was somewhat sayd in the place before. Paule touched this to the Hebrewes, saying: For as much therfore as the children are partakers of flesh and bloud, he was also likewise made partaker of the same, that he might abolishe him by death, which had the dominion of death, that is the Diuell, and to make thē free, which through feare of death were subiect vnto bondage. For he toke not vpon him the nature of Angels, but the seede of Abrahā. Vnto this may be also referred these reasons.

Of the cause of this incarnation.

1 The firste, that it was meete to be declared by moste certayne argument, how louing of mankind God is. For this purpose he woulde not onely redeeme man, but he knit vnto him also in a perfyuall & an indiuisible vnion and band. By this reason the Apostle calleth the presence of Christ in the flesh, the louingnesse of man in God, saying: But when the goodnesse & louingnesse of God our sauiour appeared. Wherewith that agreeth whiche is written in John: So God loued the worlde, that he gaue his sonne, &c.

2 The seconde reason is, that he might be like his brethrē. Wherfore the Apostle saith: He ought to be made like in al poynts to his brethrē. For bothe he that doth sanctifie, and they which be sanctified be al of one.

3 The third is, that he should be a faythfull and a merciefull Bishop in those matters whiche were to be wrought with God, to cleanse the sinnes of the people. Nazianzene did briefly after his fashion cōprise those thinges whiche concerne our saluation in this case: Last of al (saith he) he was borne for vs, to the intēt that he whiche graunted vnto vs that we should be, might graunt to vs also to be in good case. Or rather to the intēt ỹ we whiche through malice ceassed to be in good case, might be brought by his incarnatiō to the same again. The comming of God vnto men, is that we may returne again to God, and putting of our old man, may put on the new: and that like as we dyed all in Adā, so we may liue in Christ, borne borne with Christ, crucified, buried, and risen againe also with Christ.

Of the dispensation or bestowyng of the Grace of God, and of mans saluation purchased by Christe the Redeemer.

WE haue spoken in the places before, of the grace of God, of the redemption of mankinde appointed to vs from euerlasting in Christe, and perfected these latter times, and also of the incarnation of the worde: now we must procede by degrees to his dispensation. And Ioan vsed the name of the dispensation whereby Christe in his flesh executed the will of his father in offering himself for vs, but of the same whereby saluation is gotten & cōmunicated vnto the world, that we may be made partakers of it. Why grace of God is redy and set forth open to al the whole worlde, euen as the benefite of the sunne, casting out his heate & bright nesse euery where, is ready vnto all. But it is necessary ỹ the same which is so ready & at hand to all mē, be profitably receyued. To this purpose serueth the dispesatiō of the purchased & prepared saluatiō. Two things do belong vnto a redeemer. The one is to redeeme: the other, to dispence or bestow the grace of his redemption. Without this dispensation a man can not attaine vnto the end & prycke of the appointed redemption. For it is not a perfect redemption, vnlesse the fruite of it do stretch vnto hī which be redeemed, & so take his effect. In deede the grace of it selfe is perfect, & the worke of redēption perfect, which was made absolute & cōsummate by one oblation vpon the crosse: but for asmuch as the same perfectiō wherby the iustice of God is satisfied for the sinnes of the whole world, is appointed vnto the fruite of our saluatiō, it is rightly deemed vnperfect, vnlesse it do reach vnto this appointed end, although it be neuer so ful & cōsummate in it selfe. Wherefore the very necessitie of ỹ perfecting & fulfilling of our redēption, & the counsel & purpose of Gods grace, did not requyre this only, that he should be offered as an expiatory, perfect & sufficiēt hoste for our sins, but ỹ the grace of the redēption gotten by this oblatiō, shold be cōmunicated amongst wretched sinners, & obtaine his effect by vertue of the dispensation. It may be that there be a medicine gotte, the vertue whereof is sufficient to heale the sicke person, yet vnlesse it be well bestowed, so that it may do good to the helth of the sick person, for asmuch as it is not brought vnto his end, so far forth it is rightly called vnperfect. For it is vnperfecte in respecte of the ende, though it come not by the faulte of it selfe, but either of the Physition, or of the pacient. Likewise also we must iudge of the grace of our redemptiō & saluation. We nede not to recoūte here any thing of the worke of our redēption, but we must see of the dispensation of it. This dispensation hath three cōsiderations. The first is, who doth it: the seconde, how: the third, to whome. If a mā do demaūd of the authoritie of the dispensation of the grace of God, it cānot be attributed

This dispensation hath three considerations.

Christ himselfe is the dispensor of the grace of God.

vnto any other, than vnto the Lorde himselfe, whiche is himselfe both the redeemer, and the dispensor of the redemption, as Lord of all, vnto whom God the father hath giue all power, and vnto whome also, as to the fountayne and throne of grace, we be cõmaunded to go. Come to me (sayth he) all, and I will refresh you. Item, Iohn.7. He that thirsteth, lette him come to me and drynke. And to the woman of Sichem: If thou knewest (sayth he) who it is that sayth vnto thée, Giue me to drinke, thou wouldest haue asked of him, & he woulde haue giuen thée water of lyfe. And,

Iohn.6. Séeke you not the meate which perisheth, but that which abideth vnto euerlasting lyfe, whiche the Sonne of man shal giue you. And the Apostle saith:

Ephes.4. Vnto euery one of vs, is giuē grace, according vnto the measure of the giuyng of Christe. Wherefore he sayth: He going vp a high, ledde captiuitie captiue, he gaue giftes vnto men. Further if we do search for the efficacie and sufficiencie of this dispensation in respect of it also, there is none but Christe, that can effectually dispense the grace of redemptiō vnto men. For it is hée onely that is able by his spirite to open our harts, to illuminate them in forgiuyng of sinnes, to iustifie, to regenerate, and and make sonnes & heyres of God. In déede he appointed the Apostles to be the dispensors of this his grace, but no otherwise but as ministers, and kept the authoritie and efficacie vnto his owne maiestie and vertue.

The efficacy of the dispensing of grace perteyneth onely to Christ.

1.Corinth.4. So it is to be vnderstanded, that the Apostle sayth: Let a man so estéeme vs, as mynisters of Christe, and dispensors of the mysteries of God. Agayne, The dispensation is comitted vnto me. And to the Ephesians. For you haue hearde the dispensatiō of the grace of God, whiche is giuen me towardes you. And to Titus: A bishop must be blameleslie, as the dispensor of God. And Peter sayth: As good dispensors of the manyfold grace of God. These things haue a respect vnto the mynisterie committed, and are done seruiceably: in whiche sense they were also called the light of the world, where as in very déede Christ is the light of the worlde. What soeuer is done by this seruiceable dispensation, is not to be imputed vnto the mynisters, but to the Lorde himselfe; whiche by the vertue of his spirite, doth make theyr mynisterie sufficient and profitable. For he sayde: Without me you can do nothyng. And, Lo I am with you, vntill the ende of the worlde.

2 If it be demaunded, how the dispensation of the grace of God is perfected, we must know that there be two things necessarily requisite, that this grace be rightly offered, & rightly accepted. These two some folkes cal Application, and do attribute it vnto the sacrifice of ỹ Masse, which they do call Applicatorie, and in this behalfe do diffinct it from the sacrifice of the Crosse, bycause that was Expiatory and once onely offered: but this is Applicatorie, and to be repeated dayly, bycause in it the vertue and efficacie of it is applyed vnto them, whiche deuoutely stande by, and do pray (specially if they giue mony for the Masse) yea & to ỹ dead also. But of this deuise wée will speake, if God graūt, when we come to the place of the sacrifice of the

Newe

Newe testament. Their oblation is not that, whiche doth exhibite vnto men the grace of redemptiō and saluation purchased. They do counterfayte that they do offer a sacrifice vnto God for the quicke and dead, and that they do with thēselues apply in theyr minds the efficacie therof to whome they liste. The true dispensation committed by the Lorde to the Apostles, hath no expresse cōmaundement of sacrifying and offering vnto God, but of gospellyng, that is of preachyng the gospel in the worlde. So (sayth he) about the worlde, preach the gospell to al creatures. Item, Teache ye all people. And that the dispensation of grace is committed vnto this commaundement of the preaching of the gospel, it is very manifest in the wordes of the Apostle, where he sayth: Woe be to me if I do not preach the gospell. For if I do it willingly, I haue a rewarde: but if I do it agaynst my will, there is a dispensation committed vnto me. And when he had sayde to the Ephesians, that the dispēsatiō of the grace of God was giuen vnto him, a litle while after he doth adde, that the Gentils be felow heyres of one body, and partners of the promise in Christe Iesu, by the gospell whereof (sayth he) I am made a mynister according vnto the gift of the grace of God, which is giuen me according vnto the working of his vertue. For vnto me the least of all saintes, is giuē this grace to preach among the Gentils the vnsearchable riches of Christe, and to lighten all, &c. And most playnely of al to the Corinthians: It pleased God (sayth he) by the foolishnesse of preachyng to saue the beléeuers. Thereof it is, that in the same chapt. he sayth, that the word of the crosse (so he termeth the gospell of Christ crucified) is the vertue of God vnto them, which are saued. And in an other place he saith:

Rom.1. I am not ashamed of the gospel. For it is the vertue of God to saluation vnto euery beléeuer. Sée how farre wide they be from the determinatiō of God, whiche do attribute the dispensation of mans saluation vnto Popish Masses, whiche God woulde haue done by the preachyng of the Gospell.

How the grace of God is rightly accepted.

Hitherto we haue spoken of this point, how the grace of God is rightly offered vnto men, nowe nerte wée must sée how it is receyued aright. Vnlesse it be conuenientely receiued, it is to no purpose offered. And it is receyued by hearyng, beleuing, and obeying. Christe sayde: Preache the gospell vnto all creatures. He that beleeueth, and is Baptised, shalbe saued: he that beleeueth not, shalbe cōdemned. And, he that beleeueth in me, shall haue life euerlastyng. And the Apostle sayth, the gospell is the vertue of God, to saluatiō vnto euery beleeuer. And when he had sayd, It pleased God to saue men by foolishnesse of preachyng, he did adde, the beleeuers: Ergo, the grace of saluation is receyued by fayth. And it is requisite, that firste the gospell be hearde.

Rom.10. For how shall they beleue (sayth the Apostle) of whome they haue not hearde? How shall they heare without a preacher? &c. Ergo, fayth commeth by hearing the word of Christ. So that it is nédefull, that the Gospell be hearde, to stirre vp fayth in the hart of mā. And in déede it is not Saluation commeth by fayth.

inough

Hearing of the goſpell.

nough to heare, vnleſſe the ſame whiche is heard, be heard with the eares, not as the woꝛde of men, but as the woꝛde of God, and as he ſaith to the Theſſalonians, be credited with hart: wherfoꝛe the Apoſtle ſaith in the ſame chapter to ỹ Romaines: Haue they not heard? And to the Ebꝛewes, It hath bene declared vnto vs, euen as to them. But the hearing of the woꝛde pꝛofited them not, bicauſe it was not ioyned with faith to them which heard it: & yet it is requiſite of neceſſitie, that the woꝛd of the grace of God be heard. Further it is nedefull, that the hartes of the hearers be opened to beleue. Foꝛ if there come withall no woꝛking of God within the mind of the hearer, it cã not be ỹ the fleſhly mã can perceiue thoſe things ỹ be of God. Mãs reaſon wil crie out, that ỹ pꝛeaching is a thing moſt fooliſh, ſuperſtitious, abſurde, & to beware of, moſt of all other matters: ſo far off is it frõ receiuing of it in faith. Foꝛ reaſon ſuppoſeth it not méete foꝛ any wiſe body to beleue ỹ woꝛd of matters vnknowẽ, ſet foꝛth without any Syllogiſticall demõſtratiõ. There is requiſite then a ſingular woꝛking of God to ouerthꝛow the ſenſe of mans reaſon, & to make it captiue vnto the obedience of faith. Of this there is a very godly exãple ſet foꝛth in the Acts of the Apoſtles, of Lydia ỹ ſeller of Purples, of whom theſe two things be mẽtioned: one that ſhe heard Paul pꝛeach: the other that the Lord opened hir hart, to be intẽtiue vnto thoſe things which were ſpokẽ by Paul: & ſo came to the faith of Chriſte. Here you do ſée the woꝛd of the pꝛeachyng of the goſpell, the hearing of the eares, and the opening of the hart al ioyned togither. There doth cõcurre vnto this diſpenſation of grace the miniſter, the man, & the Lorde. The miniſter pꝛeacheth, the partie whether it be man oꝛ woman, heareth it, the Lorde openeth the harte, & giueth ablenes diligently to attende it, to vnderſtãd it, and beléue it. So that vnleſſe the Lord do teach & woꝛke within in the hart, ſurely he is nothing whiche either in pꝛeaching doth plante oꝛ water. On the otherſide, vnleſſe there be one that do pꝛeach, & vnleſſe ỹ woꝛde of pꝛeaching be heard, we may not hope, that (ſpeakyng accoꝛdyng vnto this oꝛder of the Apoſtle,) the vertue of God in woꝛkyng dothe poure in faith into the harts of the faithful.

Hebr. 7.

Acts. 16.

Cõſequently, the obedience of ỹ beleuer is requiſite, to that ỹ the grace of ſaluatiõ & life be receyued by hearing & beleuing, to pꝛofit & to do good withal: wout it we do not only heare in vaine, but we beleue alſo in vain the ſame ỹ we haue heard. This obedience doth include in it amendmẽt & renewyng of life. The Apoſtle dothe cõplaine of the Galathiãs that they did obey the truth, ſaying: Who letted you ỹ you obeyed not the truthe? And to the Theſſalonians, he threatneth ỹ vẽgeance of God vnto them, which do not obey the goſpel. And to the Romaines: Know you not (ſaith he) ỹ vnto whõ you yelded your ſelfe ſeruãts to obey, that his ſeruãts you be, whom you do obey: whether it be of ſinne to death, oꝛ of obedience vnto iuſtice? But thankes be to God, that wheras you were ſeruants of ſinne, you haue obeyed hartyly to this faſhion of doctrine wherevnto you be bꝛought. In any caſe as incredulitie doth obey ſin, ſo it is requiſite, ỹ faith do obey ỹ woꝛde of grace. Wherfoꝛe it is ỹ ſame Apoſtle ſayth, That he receiued ỹ Apoſtleſhip, to the obedience of faith to be pꝛeached among al the Gẽtils. So that whether he do ioyne faith and obedience togither, oꝛ whether he do ſal obedience faith itſelf, alwaies it is manifeſt that there is neither true faith, neither ſufficiẽt to ſaluatiõ in thẽ which do ſo beleue Chriſt, that wall they be diſobedient vnto the woꝛde of grace, & do bring foꝛth no fruite of their fayth, but do liue in ỹ church of Chriſt wout any amẽdment & newnelle of life. To thẽ belõgeth that admonitiõ of the Apoſtle, whẽ he ſaith: But we as helpers do alſo deſire you, ỹ you receyue not ỹ grace of God in vaine. They ſéeme to receyue the grace of God in vain, which do receiue in déede the woꝛd of grace wõ a cõuterfaite faith, but they obey not the woꝛde, nꝛ put not on newnelle of life, but continue in the bõdage & obedience of ſin. Surely theſe folkes do receiue the grace of god in vaine, foꝛ almuch as being deſtitute of vertue & of the effect thereof, they be not ſaued. And as foꝛ that whiche ỹ eninies of the grace of god do here obiect, ſaying: Ergo, faith onely dothe not iuſtifie, but the woꝛkes of faith & obedience be alſo requiſite. We will anſwer the matter by the grace of ỹ Lord, in ỹ place of iuſtificatiõ. Thus much how the grace of ſaluatiõ & life is diſpẽſed: now let vs cõſider of that which we ſaid is the third point, that is to whom it is diſpenſed. Here we muſt loke vnto the partes of this diſpẽſatiõ, of which we made mention.

1 As concerning the firſt, when the grace of God is diſpẽſed in the Apoſtolical miniſtery by the pꝛeaching of the goſpel, in this poynt we muſt anſwer, that it is cõmonly diſpẽſed vnto all, accoꝛding vnto the inſtitution of the Lord, whẽ he cõmaunded that the goſpell ſhould be pꝛeached to all creatures thꝛough out al the woꝛld, and to be taught vnto al people. And thus far foꝛth alſo the Old & Newe teſtamẽt do differ, ỹ the diſpenſation of the old is appointed vnto one people onely of Iſrael, accoꝛding vnto ỹ ſaying, He did not like vnto euery natiõ: but the diſpenſatiõ of the new is by Gods gwonelle appointed vnto al the nations, and all the men of the whole woꝛld. Herwith agreeth that which the Apoſtle ſaith: who would that al mẽ ſhould be ſaued, & come to the knowledge of the truth. In this reſpect the Apoſtle did acknowledge himſelfe, to be detter vnto all men, Grekes & Barbariãs, wiſe & vnwiſe to declare vnto thẽ the goſpel of god. And would God, al the miniſters of Chriſt were of this minde, that they were deſirous to diſpẽce the grace of ſaluation & life by pꝛeaching vnto al mẽ generally. 2 But as touching the latter part, which requireth that the grace of God be rightly & pꝛofitably taken, we muſt graũt that the efficacie of this diſpenſation cõmeth not vnto al mẽ. Foꝛ all mẽ haue not faith, & amõg thẽ alſo which do pꝛofeſſe the faith in Chriſte, there be but few ỹ do truely beléue, & bring foꝛth the fruites of faith, which belõg vnto them which be of God. The parable of the ſowꝛer is known, wherein by the fourth parte of the ſéede are deſcribed the elect, whiche receyue the woꝛd with a good hart, & bꝛyng foꝛth fruite. And therof it cõmeth that few be Pſalm.

1. Timoth. 2.

Rom. 1.

Iohn. 1. & 8. Matth. 13.

our ſaluation is diſpenſed.

Matth.22.

be saued. For albeit that there be many called, yet there be fewe electe and chosen. If any body do aske, whereof the fault of this lacke commeth, God forbid we should impute it to any other thing, than to the corruption and blindenesse of the flesshe, whereby it commeth to passe, that men do loue darknesse rather than light, and that they had rather serue the pleasures & affections of the flesh to destruction, than obey the worde of grace to saluatiō. The light came into the worlde, but the worlde so embraceth the prince of darknesse, that it turneth frowardly away from the Prince of light. When he that is the mynister to dispence the grace of God, dothe finde in very deede, that there be very fewe whiche do aright receyue the grace offered them, and profitably beskowe it, he may not despayre and forsake the charge cōmitted vnto him: but let him thinke rather of the Prophets, Apostles, and of Christ himselfe, whiche although they did not onely preach, but did also prouoke all men vnto saluation, by exāples of innocencie, godlinesse, and meekenesse, and confirmed also the doctrine of truthe by the brightnesse of miracles, and secluded all excuses from the vnbeleuers, yet they brought a very smal parcell of men, vnto the true amendement and fellowship of the grace of God.

A comfort for the ministers of the vvord.

Of the Gospell of Iesu Christe.

The very order of the matters, whereof we haue taken vpon vs to instruct the simpler sorte, in these places, dothe of it selfe leade vs to this, that after the dispensation of grace, whereof we haue treated in generall, we do passe on to expounde the partes of it. Let vs consider therfore of the Gospell of Iesu Christe, whereby the grace of our saluation is dispensed in the worlde. The Latine worde Euangelium, commeth of the Græke, signifying a good & wilfull message. It is vsed also in good Authors for the rewarde, whiche is giuen vnto them that do bryng good tidyngs: In whiche sense Cicero also in his Epistles to Atticus vsed this worde. Besides that, like as the supper of the Lorde in the church of Christe was called by our fathers Eucharistia, which soundeth a thākesgiuing, bycause that in it there is offered by the faythfull a sacrifice of thankes giuyng for the redemption gotten by Christ: So the Ethnikes vsed also, when they reioyced of any good tidings, to offer sacrifices vnto their Gods, and those sacrifices they called Euangelion, that is good tidings. They were not of themselues good tidings, but they were termed so for the good tidings whiche they had receyued, in consideration wherof, they made theyr sacrifices. So Christian men may also most rightly call the memory of the Lordes death, the Lordes death. This by the way of the name of the Gospell, in what sense it was vsed of men heretofore.

The Latine.

But as cōcernyng Christian mē, this name is so passed ouer vnto thē, that it is become vnto them most frequent and common, and of good right also most proper and peculiar.

How vvordes the Gospell were vsed.

For

For nothing in all the worlde, from the beginning thereof vntill the end, befell to mankynde so luckie as the same whiche began to be tolde and preached in euery place throwe the worlde vnder the name of Christe. That is, that mankynde is redemed by the death of the onely begotten sonne of God, & that the forgiuenesse of all mens sinnes and life euerlasting, is ready for al thē that do beleeue in him. This tidings as most lucky of all that euer came, Christ & his Apostles called the Euangely or gospell, to admonishe vs in what reputation we ought to haue it. Amēd (he sayth) and beleue the gospel. Put a parte (sayth Paule) to the gospel of Christe. This gospell is adorned in the holy wrytings of the Euangelistes and the Apostles with moste handsome additions and sayings. First it is called the gospell of God: so termed of the author from whom it was sente into the worlde. And so it is called also the worde of God. It is a great commendation of the gospel, that it came not into the worlde by any mans deuice, but predestined frō euerlasting by the cōsel and wil of God, promised by the Prophets, & that it is performed at length. Gamaliel sayd most wisely: If this cōsell or worke be of menne, it will be broken: but if it be of God, you can not destroy it. I would they were of the same minde, whiche do so stryue now a dayes to defend the doctrines & commaundements of men, against the doctrine of the Gospell, and tumble heauen and earth together, goyng about to breake the same which is sente into the worlde not by men but from God. Secondly, the Gospell of Iesu Christe the Sonne of God, is called The word of Christe, The word of the Lord, The doctrine of the Lord, The doctrine of the Sauiour, The preachyng of the Lord, that is to say, so named by him of whome it is so reported, taught and preached in the worlde by the gospel. By these speaches we be admonished of whome we muste make reporte in the Church, yea in the whole compasse of the earth: that is, of Iesu Christe the sonne of God and our Lorde. He is declared and reported vnto vs by the gospell, to be the only redeemer of all men, the mediatour betwixt God and men, the reconciler and sauiour, Lord and Master, kyng and chiefe Priest, onely to be hearde of all men, the saluation & life vnto al which do beleeue in him. This gospell is to be preached in the church. He that preacheth any other gospel, though he do pretende the name of Christe, dothe not bryng the doctrine of Christe, but the doctrine of Antichrist. Thirdly, it is called by the qualitie thereof The good worde of God. Agayne, Good doctrine. And also in Mathew, Good seede. Lastly the very worde, Gospell, dothe include this qualitie, that it signifieth to be good tidings. The goodnesse of it is, bycause it is profitable vnto saluation, and hath nothyng noysome in it. For whereas by Paule it is cōpared vnto a good sauour, which vnto others is a saucur of death vnto death, it is not to be referred to the qualitie of it, but vnto the faulte of them whiche do perishe for theyr incredulitie. Otherwise the Gospell is of it selfe good, and most profitable to them that be saued. In which respect it is called also, The holsome worde or talke. It is somewhat like a medicine, which beyng of his owne qualitie good and holsome, by the disease of them that do perish withall, it becommeth noysome. And I am very carefully afrayd, least this goodnesse of the Gospell of God, will be pernicious for many in this age of ours, for whome it had bene much better neuer to haue had knowē the truthe, than to slippe backe agayne after they haue tasted of the good worde of God. The worlde woulde neuer abide to acknowlege the goodnesse of the Gospell of Christe, but dothe alwayes turne from it as a thyng very noysome. So that it is no newes that there is so great a nūber of them in the worlde, which say that god is euill, & euill goodis make darkenesse light, and light darknesse, sower swéete, and swéete sower, to whom the Lorde doth threaten that horrible woe of his reuenge. They that do not serue Christe, but do apply thēselues to the world, do blame this good worde of God of sedition: and that before Princes, to prouide that it finde no place among them, whereas they themselues be rather infect with the spirite of seditions. They that be droomed in ỳ pleasures of the flesh, do iudge this good worde of God and swéete yoke of Christ to be most grēeuous and bitter, bicause it requireth the amēdment and newnesse of lyfe, frō which they do marueilously abhorre. And do we mārueill how it is, that so few do constātly and earnestly cleaue vnto the Gospell? That saying is most true: The gospels burthen were but light, if flesh and prouide raygned not.

The gospel of Iesu Christe. Marke.1. Colos.3. Act.6. Act.13. Tit.2. Rom.16.

The good vvorde of God. Good doctrine, good seede, and Good tydings. Heb.6. 1.Timoth. 4. Matth.13. 2.Corinth. 2. Tit.2.

Fourthly, it is called in Marke the gospell of the kingdome of God, and in Mathew, The worde of the kingdome, surely for that that it doth call vs frō the kingdome of Satan vnto the kingdome of God, whiche is prepared for the elect, euen frō the establishment of the world. So saith the Apostle: Whiche called you into his kingdome. And ỳ kingdome of God is of two considerations, that is, of grace, and of glory. It is begon in vs by the dispensation of grace, if we take it by faith, and so it cōmeth to passe, that turning out the Prince of the worlde, the spirite of God dothe raigne in vs, and after this life we be brought vnto eternall glory, whiche they do trust vpō altogither in vain, in case they do trust vpō it, as many as do despise & turne from the kingdome of the grace of God.

Fiftely, it hath also very fayre additiōs, by that which it doth denoūce and promise vnto them that beléue in Christ. It denounceth the grace of God, whereby the Redéemer whiche was appointed for mākind frō euerlasting, was sent into the world, and for this cause it is called the gospell of the grace of God, and the word of grace. It is also ỳ worde of the Prophets, & the worde of the true & onely God: but they do oftentymes declare not the grace, but the anger of God, and the secrets of them be full of the threatenyngs of the worde of Gods reuenge. And the lawe giuen by Moses, commaundyng and prescribyng, threateneth curse vnto the disobedient, and accordyng vnto the testimony of the Apostle worketh anger. Wherefore there is so greate difference betwixt the lawe & the gospell, that that they which do beléue in Christ are sayde to be not vnder the lawe, but vnder grace: And that they do fall from grace, whiche do seeke their iustifying in the lawe. The lawe chargeth, presseth, and curseth: the Gospell preacheth to them that beléue it, grace and remission of their sinnes. And what is more wilfull, yea what more necessary vnto saluatiō for them which are cōceyued & borne in sinnes, and drinke sinne as fast as water? They do most worthily perishe and are subiecte vnto the wrath of God, whiche do eyther peruerte the Gospel of the grace of God into the doctrine of merites, or else do vtterly sette naught by it. God kepe this from my spirite, that I a sinfull man should reiect the grace of God, without which, what so euer other folkes do presume vpon, I do acknowledge and confesse without all dissimulatiō and doubt, that there can be no manner of saluation: and do giue thankes vnto Christ my Redéemer, that hée hath mercyfully vouchsaued to call me by his Gospel to his inestimable grace, out of the torment of conscience whiche reygneth in Babylon.

Sirtly, there is denounced by the Gospell, health and saluation to the beléuers of it, wherefore it is moste rightly called, The gospell of health, and the worde of health. Health, is not here vnderstāded to be the same, when that whiche is well, kepeth his health that it decay not: but that it is rather saluation when the same is deliuered and preserued from destruction, whiche else shoulde vtterly perishe. So health is denounced vnto sinners and to them that be subiect vnto death by the Gospell, whereby the olde enimy being ouercome, they be deliuered vnto lyfe, so that they do giue themselues wholly by fayth to theyr deliuerer and redéemer, and do thankfully embrace the grace offered vnto them. The firste kinde of health, when those things that be whole, be kepte whole, agreeth vnto the Angels: and the latter vnto mākind. To this place is to be referred that whiche the Apostle sayth: I am not ashamed of the Gospell, for it is the vertue of God, vnto saluation to al beléuers, which is so spoken, that we must vnderstand that there is no saluation to be trusted vpon of any man, vnlesse he do beléue the gospel. For so it pleased God, that by the foolishnesse of the preachyng of the gospel, he would saue the beleuers in it.

Rom. 1.

1. Cor. 1.

Seuenthly, it is called also the worde of life. Keping (sayth the Apostle) the worde of life, that I may reioyce in the day of Christe. And hée speketh not of the lyfe of this world, but of the same which is true and eternall. The gospel is called ỳ worde of this life, bicause that it dothe promisse it to them whiche do beléue in Christ, according vnto that: He that beleueth in me, hath life euerlasting. And, This is the will of him that sent me, that euery one whiche seeth the Sonne and beléueth on him, haue euerlastyng lyfe. This Peter meant, when he sayd: Lord to whom shall we go? Thou hast the wordes of eternall lyfe. The worde of the olde Serpent, whiche draweth men from the worde of lyfe, is the worde of death to all them which do cleaue vnto it, though it do promisse in this worlde not deathe, but prosperitie

The vvord of Lyfe. Philip. 2.

Iohn. 6.

The vvord of Death.

of al things. He said not vnto Christ: If thou fal downe and worship me, I will make thee subiect vnto euerlasting death: but thewyng him all the kingdomes of the world, he said: I wil giue thee all these, if thou wilt fall downe & worship me. When he did seduce our first parents, he sayde not: Ye shall die if you do eate of the fruite of the tree of knowledge of good & euill: but, No, you shal not die, but you shalbe as Gods, knowyng good and euil. The moste wyly Serpent knewe, that there was death in the taste of mās knowledge. Wherfore who soeuer feareth death, lette him take hede of the word of death, that is to say, of the doctrine of mās wisedome, whiche dothe profer vs the taste of the forbidden fruyte to death, and leadeth vs away from the worde of life. It is surely the tongue of the serpent, whiche teacheth of the free will of man to good, and of the strength & merites of man, that is, whiche doth iustifie & maketh a God of our flesh, to make voyde the grace and life whiche commeth by Christ.

Gene. 3.

Death in the taste of the forbidē knowledge.

Eightly, it hath this cōmendation also, that it is called The word of reconcilement. For it dothe denounce that the reconcilement is made betwixt God and mankynde by Christ the Redeemer. So sayth the Apostle: All things be of God, who reconciled vs to him by Christe, and gaue vs the mynisterie of the reconciliation. For God reconciled the world to him in Christ, not repatyng theyr sinnes vnto them, and did place the word of reconciliation in vs. In this respect also it is called The gospel of peace. Stande therefore (sayth he) gyrdyng about your loynes with the

The vvord of Reconcilement.

2. Corinth. 5.

girdle of truthe, and puttyng on the brest plate of iustice, and with shoes vpon your feete, that you may be ready to the gospell of peace. For of hence peace is denounced from God vnto vs: that we be reconciled to him by Christe, as many of vs as do truly beleeue in him. And this is that peace of Christe whiche passeth all perseuerance, whiche the worlde can not giue, but goeth about to take it away, in that it offereth peace to the which folow the worlde, and destruction to them that forsake it.

The gospel of Peace. Ephes. 6.

Ninthly, it is called also The word of the truth. For the hope (saith the Apostle) which is layde vp for you in heauen, whiche you heard in the worde of the truth of the gospel, whiche came vnto you, &c. And agayne: Endeuor to shewe thy self to be liked of God, a workeman that needeth not to be ashamed, deuidyng the worde of truthe euenly and iustly. He begate vs (sayth James) willingly by the worde of truthe. And the worde of truthe is taken two wayes. Firste after the manner of the Ebrewes for a true worde, for they do cal the worde of truth, what so euer is truly spoke. So the quene of Saba sayde vnto Salomon. The worde that I hearde in my owne lande, is the truth. And in the same booke of the Kynges the woman of Sarepta sayde vnto Elias: Nowe I haue knowen that thou arte the man of God, and the worde of God is in thy mouth, that is truthe. Secondly it is taken for the worde spoken vpon any truth. Bothe wayes the Gospell is the worde of truthe. For it is true doctrine, without lie, and it is brought into the worlde of the worde of God by Christe. The same is the counsell and purpose of God of our healthy predestinated frō euermore in Christe: wherefore he sayde: I am the way, truth, and life. And he sayde vnto Pilate, that he came into this worlde, to beare witnesse to the truth, and to them which beleeued in him. If you abide (sayth he) in my talke, you shall knowe the truth, and the truth shal deliuer you. Loke there what is noted in our Commentaries of this truth.

So that the gospel is commended vnto vs for the truthe of it in two respectes, partely bycause it is quite clere from lying and deceyt, though it be accused in the worlde of heresie and deceyte, and partely bycause it dothe tell vs of that truth of God, in whiche onely is the way vnto health, lyfe, & true peace with God. Our aduersaries crie out that the doctrine of it is seditious, and disturbeth the vniuersall peace. If they do meane of the peace of the worlde, we graunt that it helpeth not to the peace, but rather to the sequestryng, I meane of them whiche do sticke togither not in the truthe of God, but in the lies of Satan. So Christe himselfe sayde: Suppose you that I came to sende peace into the world? I tell you, No, but diuision. The elect and the reprobate be mingled togither in the worlde. Among these whiche do euil agree in errour, what shoulde truth, when it is brought in, worke else, but the diuision of them which hang but euilfauoredly together, whereby the elect be pluckte frō the reprobate? This is the worlyng of the worde of truth, detecting errours and lies, gatherynge vnto it the children of lighte, and confoundyng the children of darknesse. This is the fame whereof Iohn Baptist spake, crying out to all men, that it was in the Lordes hande, to the entēt to purge hys flower of his barne, & to gather the corne into his barne, and cast the chaffe into euerlastyng fire. What hath the corne to do with the chaffe? It is not an euill but a good diuision, when the corne is sifted from the chaffe. Will not the wicked folkes be counted for chaffe? If they be corne in dede, let them shew themselues to be corne, the worde of the truthe dothe trie and discouer bothe the elect and the reprobate, as well as the fanne doth sifte the corne from the chaffe. If they be electe, lette them acknowledge the worde of truth, and beleeue. They haue no care for the truthe, but that they would haue it suppressed. They wold haue peace, but that not of Christe and of the elect, but of the worlde: not the same whiche consisteth in the truth, but the same which is kept in by lies. We would also haue peace, for wee lyke no stryfe. We would also haue that whiche is true, and chiefly the truth it selfe. For we like not lies. A fewe yeeres agone, there was declared to be a greate zeale of the truth and vpō the desire of truth: there is rysen in euery place discordes. Now a greate sorte whiche seemed that they were become fautors of the truth, turnyng the cat into the pan, haue chaunged the study of truth into the study of peace: & as before they did refuse the peace of the worlde for the truthe, so they do now forsake the study & profession of the truth for the peace of the world.

The vvork of truth amōgst them that do erre.

The zeale of truthe chaunged into the study of peace.

Herebyō came the cōsent that some men a few yeres past, did yelde theselues vnto such determinations, as that the Papish coūcel should make, not for that they had any hope that they should be conformable vnto the truth of Christ, but that thei thought that in pretence thereof, they might the more honestly returne vnto their olde peace and concorde. And for asmuch as I am fallen into this matter, I do vniuersally beseche all thē, whiche in these latter and wicked times do profesle and acknowledge the gospel and the truth, that they do withall endeuor beware, that they desire not that peace, whiche may turne out the profession of the truth: but let them certainely knowe, that same peace whiche is ordeyned besides the truthe can not altogither stande, much lesse the same which is now adayes sought to, the destructiō of it, by the wicked folkes of this worlde, and not beyng the fauorers of the truth. We must kepe well in minde the same whiche the Synode of Arminēsis did signifie to the Emperour Cōstantine as for an admonition, whiche is this: Who shal also informe thy godlinesse, that there shall not folowe peace, as Vrsacius and Valens haue sayd, but contentiō & trouble, if any thing of that which is right be ouerthrowen.

An. 1545.

The vvord of fayth.

Rom. 10.

Tenthly, it is also called The worde of fayth. This is the worde of fayth (sayth the Apostle) which we do preach. First it is called the word of fayth, for a difference from the law, and the same for asmuche as it chargeth & cōmaundeth those things whiche are to be done, may be rightly called The worde of workes. So the Gospell, bycause it denounceth things that are to be beleued, is called by the Apostle, the word of faith. Secondly, it may be called the worde of fayth, for that cause that those things which be denoūced by the gospell, are not receyued but by fayth, so that there can be no place for syllogisticall reasons. Wherefore the disciples of mans wisedome can not be scholers of the gospell of God, bycause they wil not beleue nor cā not. For that saying taketh here place: Vnlesse you do beleeue, you shal not vnderstande. Wherefore, euen as the workemaisters and inkeritiaries whiche do auaunce the worde of workes, so the Philosophers also whiche do honor the word of knowledge and wisedome, are far off from the Gospell and worde of faith, as by no meanes able to attayne vnto it. But of the fayth whiche the gospell of Christ requireth, we must speake in a place by it selfe.

Eleuenthly, it is also called by the Apostle, The doctrine of the spirite. We (saith he) haue receyued not the spirite of this worlde, but the spirite which is of God, that we may know what things be geuen vs of GOD, whiche we do also speake, not in the talkes whiche mans wisedome teacheth, but in the doctrine of the spyrite. By this speache also is the gospell sequestred from the doctrine of mans wysedome, and that in two respectes. First, bycause it is not such a doctrine & science, whiche is bredde out of the harte or minde of any man, but of the spirite of God. Secondly, for that also that it can not be comprehended by mans wisedome, but it hath nede of the worckyng of the holy spirite, wherby it is cōueyed into our hartes. Therefore as this gospell of Christe is a spirituall doctrine, so it maketh men also spirituall in dede, neither it can not take place in carnal and fleshly men, whether you consider the vnderstanding or the affection, whiche bothe it will haue to be spirituall. You may see now adayes them that be called spirituall, wrestle moste of all agaynst the true spirituall doctrine of the gospell. Wherefore we must beware, that we do not iudge of the gospel of Christ according vnto their doings, but contrarywise, rather to seke out of the Gospell to iudge of theyr deuices and workes.

Twelfthly, the Gospell of Christe hath also this speache, that it is called The swoorde of the spirite. So we do read: And take the head peece of Saluation, and the swoorde of the Spirite, whiche is the Worde of God. By this figuratiue speache, he bothe teache what is the vse of the worde of God agaynst Satan: euen the very same whiche is of the swoorde agaynst the enimie. But the vse of this swoorde serueth not the vnbeleeuyng mā, more than an yron swoorde bothe the fearefull and hartlesse man. Fayth standeth here in stede of a moste valiant strength, whiche the Apostle Peter bothe requyre of the faythfull to this purpose, that they may be able thereby strongly to withstande the Deuil: Faith beyng armed with the worde of God, is moste valiant agaynst the assaults of Satan.

Thirtenthly, that is also a godly figure, when that the Gospell is called of Christe, the sede. The vse of the sede is, that beyng cast into good lande, it will bring forth according vnto the nature of his kinde. It is lyke also with the worde of God. It is cast abroade as the sede is, when it is preached in the worlde. It beareth fruyte, when it falleth into good hartes prepared by the worckyng of the holy spirite. And it bringeth no other fruytes, but suche as do agree with his nature. The worde of faith, doth engendre fayth in the hartes of the elect, the worde of hope, hope, the worde of loue, loue. &c. There is a larger declaration of this matter in the xiij. Chapter of Matthew.

Matth. 13.

Foureteenthly, it is also by a Metaphore called Meate, in the parable of the faythfull seruaunt: That hee may giue them meate (sayth Christ) in season. So is feeding set for preaching, where he sayth also: Simon louest thou mee? fede my sheepe. &c. And Peter saith, Fede the flocke of the Lord, which is among you. The efficacy and profite of the worde of the gospel is great. By it we be new borne, by it we bee fedde after wee be borne, by it we be made learned vnto true godlinesse, we be armed agaynst all the temptatiōs of Satan, and we be auaunced vnto the true and eternall life.

Meate. Matth. 14.

Iohn. 22.

1. Peter. 5.

Fifteenthly, it is also called by the Lorde himselfe New wine. For so Christe answered the Disciples of Iohn, demaūding why his Disciples did not fast oftetimes, aswel as they and the Pharisees. They do not, (saith he) put New wine into old vessels, for then the vessels will breake, & the wine will be spilte & the vessels marde: but new wine they put into newe vessels, & bothe are preserued.

Newe wyne. Matth. 9.

Luke. 5.

So by the figure of comparison of newe wyne, he did set forth the condition of the Gospell, that it is as it were a newe wyne, a newe doctrine, agreeable to a new Testament, and it is taken also for a newe doctrine. And it is taken also for a newe doctrine in the worlde, and for that cause it is also refused of superstitious persons, and suche as be obstinately bent in the errours and customes of this worlde, as they whiche be much giue to old wine, refuse to drinke the new, saying that the old is better. So in Marke they sayde also: What is this newe doctrine? And in the Actes of the Apostles it was sayde vnto Paule: May we not know what this new doctrine is? We do also in our age feele the very same condition and estate of the gospel, when it is yet after so many hundred yeares blamed for the newnesse of it, by them which thinke that there is more accopt to be made of an olde worne customs, than of the healthfull & sauing truth.

Mar.1.

Act.17.

A denouncement of publication. 1.Cor.15. Mat.3.4.10. Marc.1.

Sixtethly, it is also called κήρυγμα, in the Epistle to the Corinthias, which is as it were, an open denouncement or publication: And so the Euangelists do vse the word κηρύσσειν, to preache, whiche signifieth not simply to tel or say any thing, but it signifieth to preache with a certayne kinde of publication. What it is to preache any thing, men know well inough. I woulde it were as well knowen vnto al preachers of the gospell of God, what it is to preache and proclayme the Gospell, & what affection & spirite is requisite to that office. They be out of the way that thinke it is inough, if they do simply tell to the people those things that be true. He can not be called a preacher of the Gospell, whiche doth not so fauor of the affection and spirite of a preacher, that he dothe simply tell it with greate reioycing, hartely, openly, stoutly, and to al me, preach, celebrate, commende, and extolle that great grace of our redemption, and trauayle to prouoke all folkes vnto it. Wherefore they be nothing lesse than preachers of the Gospell, whiche eyther neglecting the cause of the Gospell, trauayle not to edifie, but with paynted talke will make the hearer to maruell at them, eyther they speake so coldely, that they do relent and cole al their hearers, so that it may be sayde vnto them: Thou if thou spakest as thou thinkest, wouldest thou speake this? And that saying of Seneca may bee verified of them: He can not make an other manne to haue a minde to a matter, which hath not a minde vnto it himselfe: or else sumthing they, voice of a set purpose, do sing rather than preach: or else talke so in tune, that they seeme to read as it were out of a booke: or else entende onely this, to speake vnto the people for an houre, how soeuer it bee, to fulfill and satisfie theyr dutie. None of these poynts do appertayne vnto them whiche do with hart earnestly preach the Gospell of Christ, & be true proclaymours of the kingdome of God.

Seuententhly, That I thinke is not to be ouer-skipt neither, that the Apostle Paule doth cal the gospel of Christ which he preached, his gospel, saying: In the day when God shall iudge the secretes of men, according vnto my Gospell by Iesus Christe.

And

And in an other place: So that if our Gospell be hidden, it is hidden in the which do perish. As touching the authoritie of the Gospell, it is the Gospell of God, not of Paule, or of anye other Apostle: but as touching the ministerie, the Gospel is ỹ Apostles, as preached euerye where through the worlde by the Apostles. And they can not chuse but acknowledge it for their Gospell, when they shall come agayne with Christ our Lord to iudge the world. Let Rome which boasteth that it hathe the Apostolike and Catholike doctrine, shewe from whence they take their doctrine, for whiche they doe nowe determine so wonderfully to trouble al ỹ worlde. We do know that this is the verye Apostolicall doctrine, that which the Apostles preached, which now adays they doe most impudently condemne for heresie.

Eightenthly, the Apostle calleth the Gospel The word of the Crosse, when he saith: The word of ỹ Crosse is folishnesse to them whiche doe perish, but to them that be saued, it is the vertue of God. It is called the worde of the Crosse, because it preacheth of the Sauioure crucified. By this speach the holy spirit doth commende vnto vs not only the history, but also the vertue of the healthfull crosse, which the world condemneth of folishnesse, iudging it to be ỹ maddest matter in the world, to giue credite vnto that preaching, whiche declareth euerlasting life to be gotten by the death of one crucified. And in these dayes there be some that seeme to be not a little ashamed of ỹ crosse of Christe, whiche can not abide the baseneſſe of the flesh of Christe, and deuise to applye certayne godlynesse vnto it, whereunto they doe referre the whole grace of our redemption. But the Apostle did so stande vppon the fayth of the crosse, that he sayde: God forbidde I should glory in anye thing but in the crosse of oure Lorde Iesu Christ. Agayne, he iudged that he knew nothing among the Corinthians, but Iesu Christ, and him crucifyed. And to the Colossias he saith: that all things whiche are in heauen & in earth, are pacified by the bloud of the crosse: So that this speache is applyed to the Gospell as by the meanes of our redemption, which is perfected in the Crosse.

To make a god of the flesh of Christe.

Galath.5.

1.Corin.2.

Nintenthly, it is to be considered also, that this Gospell is called The Gospell of the glory of Christ to the Corinthians, wher we do reade this: The God of this world hath blinded the minds of the vnfaithfull, for that the lighte of the Gospell of Christe, which is the image of God, shineth not vnto them. And to Timothe: According vnto the Gospell of glory of the blessed God, which is committed vnto me. The Gospel is commended of the principall ende wherevnto it was predestinated from euerlasting, that is to say, of the glory of God the father, from whome, and of the son, by whome we be redeemed. Who predestinated vs (saith he) into the adoption of hys children by Iesus Christ: according vnto the purpose of his will, to the prayse of the glory of his grace. And a little after: Which worketh all things (saith he) according vnto the counsel of his wil, that we may be to the praise of his glory. Item, In whome beleeuing (saith he) you be signed with the holye spirite

The Gospell of the glorye of Christe.

2.Corin.4.

The principall ende of the gospell.

Ephes.1.

of promise, which is the pledge of the obteyning of oure inheritance vnto redemption, vnto the prayse of hys glorie. Againe in the same Chapter, he calleth God, the father of glorye, that is, the glorious father: in ỹ same respect, he doth also ascribe vnto the inheritance whiche we haue gotten in Christ, the ri[illegible]es of glorye, that is, the most rich glorye, saying: That the God of our Lord Iesu Christ the father of glorye, may giue you the spirit of wisedome, and reuelation in hys knowledge, that is, that the eyes of youre hearte be illuminate, that you may know what is the hope of your vocation, and what be the riches of the glorye of his inheritance vpon the saintes. Seeing therefore that the Gospell doth declare and preach vnto vs the glorye of the grace of God, whiche predestined our saluation frō euermore, and the glorye also of the trueth, whiche dothe fulfill that that was predestined, and of the power whiche destroyeth the kingdome of Satan, and ouercommeth deathe in the flesh of his sonne, and of the renoume whiche appeareth vnto vs in the inheritance purchased for vs, and seeyng that thys preaching dothe much help vnto the setting forthe of the glorye of the grace, trueth, power, and renoume of God, it is most rightly called the Gospell of the glorye of Christe and of God. Hereunto the Angels loked the first Euangelistes and Preachers, singing thys song, Glorye be vnto God on high. Thys speache can not agree with the doctrine whyche is broughte into the Churche of the iustice and merites of our workes. Also they whiche are ashamed of the worde of the Crosse, shoulde rather be ashamed of their ignorannce, if they vnderstode that the worde of the Crosse is the Gospell of the glorye of Christe and of God.

Twentithly, the Gospell of God is called the Eternall Gospell in the Reuelation of John, where we doe reade: And I sawe another Aungell flying by the middest of heauen, hauing the eternall Gospell to preache to them which sate vpon the earthe, &c. The ministerie of the Gospell is for a time appointed for this present worlde: but the grace and spirite of it endureth for euermore, though Hell gates striue agaynste it neuer so muche. That vertue and efficacie of our redemption which is declared in the worlde by the Gospell, comprehendeth all worldes, in whiche respect the Gospel is called the eternall Gospel.

There be also in the Scriptures many other phrases, speaches, adiectiues, metaphors, and sayings of the holy Gospell, whereby the holye spirite would commend vnto vs the authoritie, profite, necessitie, qualitie, condition, and iudgement of it: but I suppose that these things whiche we haue in order recited, may suffise the godly person well ynough, if he will consider the strength and valew, eyther to prise them seuerally, as men doe precious stones: and so lay them vp to be kept euer in faithfull memorie, eyther to embrace them all in a lumpe vpon the sight onely, waying that this doctrine of Christ (for whiche there hathe bin euer so greate turmoyle in the worlde, and whyche the wisedome and power also of this worlde hath continually most stiffely withstanded) is the very Gospel, and the the Gospell of God and Christe hys sonne, the good worde of God, good doctrine, good sauoure, holsome talke, the Gospel of the kingdome of God, the Gospell and worde of the grace of God, the worde of health, the worde of life, the worde of reconcilemente, the Gospell of peace, the worde of truth, the worde of faith, the doctrine of the spirite, the sworde of the spirite, the good seede, the meate, the newe wyne, the preaching and publication, the Apostolicall Gospell, the worde of the Crosse, the Gospell of the glorye of Christ and of the blessed God, and eternall Gospell.

Some man will aske me and say: Then seeyng the Gospell is the doctrine of the spirite, and the ministerie of it is not the ministerie of the letter but of the spirite, as the Apostle maketh mention, why then is it put in writing? I aunswere: By the same reason you maye aske the Apostle, why he did put ỹ very same in writing of the doctrine and ministerie of the spirite for the differrence of the letter of Moses lawe. You maye aske also the Lorde himselfe, why he woulde haue the doctrine of the spirite published and preached in the worlde by the Apostles by the ministerie of the worde, if the dispensation of the Gospell be simplye and immediately giuen to the spirite, there is no place in it left not onely for the letter, but not for the pronoūced word nether. For what is the pronounced word to the eares, other than the letter is to the eyes? In both there is outwarde signes of spirituall meanings. Therefore if the speach of the mouth do any wise belong to the ministerie of the spirite, the letter doth alyke. But of the differrence of the letter and the spirite, there was mention made before.

And yet it was not done without reason, that the truth of the Gospell was published in the worlde by the Euangelistes and Apostles, not by worde only, but by writtings also. The Euangelistes and Apostles wrote euery one of them vpon some speciall cause. Mathewe wrote in Ebrewe, of purpose to bryng the Ebrewes vnto the faith of Christe. And Marke also to serue ỹ Grekes turne herein, wrote a certayne Epitome or briefe rehearsall in Greke. Luke doth himselfe in the preface of his Gospell shewe the cause, why he would write the historie of the Gospell. He sawe that there was manye whiche wente aboute to do it, but for asmuch as there were spred abroade by their euill willers, things that were doubtfull, yea and also peraduenture false, he thoughte it not amisse to put in writing those things which he had receyued of ỹ Apostles themselues. For what cause John wrote, the matter it selfe dothe enforme vs. He meante to adde in a boke alone those things which lackt in ỹ writings of the other, touching the godhead of Christe. What nede I to speake what was the cause of Paules writing? His seuerall Epistles doe sufficiently declare themselues, not onely to whome, but also wherefore they were written. Surely he coulde not be presente to preache them the Gospell euery where, or to correct things that were to be corrected: therefore accordyng vnto the feruencie of his spirite and desire of fayth to Christe, (I wil not speake of the carefulnesse he had of all congregations) he would do that by writing, whiche he could not do by word of mouth. The like reason moued also the rest, that is to say Peter and John. Agayne, bycause it was not possible that those things which wer preached by the Apostles by worde of mouth, could come whole & sound to others, either nere, eyther farther off, it was most profitable for thys cause, that the doctrine should be put in writing, and that not by euery bodye, but eyther by the Apostles theselues, eyther by their Disciples.

VVhy the Euangelistes vvere moued to vvrite.

VVhy Paule and the other Apostles vvrote.

Thirdly, it was not commodious only for them vnto whome the fayre fete of the Apostles could not reach, but also to their owne hearers, that for asmuch as the word once hearde is sone gone, and the letter written bydeth by it, as we say, they myghte by reading of their writings kepe the stedfast vnderstanding of those things, that they had hearde. It was a great help for the times to come againste an innumerable sorte of errours, which the holy spirite knewe should be brought into the Churche by the instincte of Satan. The Apostles must dye, and after thē there shoulde rise nother other Apostles, nother such as should all be true followers of the Apostles, but false doctors without number subuertyng the way of the truth: Wherefore it was necessary, ỹ these things whiche they had taught by word of mouth, shoulde after their deathe sticke not only in the mindes of the godlye and faithfull, but shoulde remaine also written in bookes. We finde by experience also in these dayes, with how greate wickednesse Satan goeth about by his companions, to draw the Church of Christ from things written, to matters not written. I beseech you, in case the writings of the Euangelistes and of the Apostles were not extant preserued vntil these latter times by the wonderfull benefite of God, what shuld we haue left of the pure doctrine of Christ, amōg so many so portentuous and sundrye monsters of sectes, opinions, and decrees, which seketh euery way to extinguishe and oppresse the true fayth of Christe: When the faithfull and godly person doth way those things, hee will embrace the prouidence of God, whiche hathe vouchsaued to kepe and preserue hitherto the writings of the Euangelistes and the Apostles for vs, as a certaine candle burning in the middest of darkenes, againste Satans will and spite of his teeth, in the middest of the monstrous heresies, persecutions, and spoyles of warres: So that he maye not curiously demaunde, why the doctrine of the Gospell is put in writing.

Satan leadeth men from things vvritten to vnvvritten

Last of all we must see also, what be the partes of the doctrine of the Gospell. We will not searche them ouer-curiously, but we will touche only the principall, which the mouth of the Lorde himselfe dothe set forth vnto vs saying: Amende, and beleue the Gospell. And, Going into all the worlde, preache the Gospell vnto all creatures. He that beleeueth and is baptized, shall be saued: but he which beleueth not, shall be condemned. And in Luke: Thus is it written (sayeth Christe) and thus it behoued Christe to suffer, and to rise agayne the thirde day from the dead, and to haue amendment and forgiuenesse of sinnes sinnes to be preached in his name to all people. And Mathewe in the last Chapter: Go and teache all people, baptising them in the name of the father, and the sonne, and of the holye spirite, teaching them to kepe all thynges that I haue commanded you. By these wordes is sette forthe vnto vs first the facte of Christ, nexte, hys ordinaunce, whereby it is an easie matter to gather what be the partes of the doctrine of the Gospell. Fyrste he preached his owne selfe, after ỹ he appoynted and ordeyned that the same doctrine should be published to the worlde by his Disciples. The summe of his Preaching is comprehended in that that he sayth: Amend, and beleeue the Gospell. Item: Amendment and forgiuenesse of sinnes must be Preached in his name. Whē he dothe prescribe and appoynte the doctrine to the Apostles, he dothe set forthe the Preaching of the Gospell, and doth adde, saying: Teaching thē to kepe whatsoeuer I haue commaunded you. So that the Gospell conteyneth three partes. The firste requireth amendment of life, the seconde fayth, the thirde the keeping of Christs preceptes. The Gospell calleth sinners to amendment, it promiseth forgiuenesse of sinnes and life euerlasting to them that doe beleeue, and threateneth condemnation vnto them that beleeue not, and gyueth things in charge to be obserued of the faithfull. These partes maye not be pluckt asunder. For so he Preacheth the Gospell naughtily, whyche preacheth eyther amendmente without denouncement of grace, or preacheth grace without amendment and doctrine of obedience. But of amendment or penance and of forgiuenesse of sinnes, we will speake in seuerall places by themselues.

Of holy Scriptures.

The certaintie of our faith is grounded vpon vvritings of the olde Testament.

WE may conueniently hye after the place of the Gospell, set nexte the place which is of holy Scriptures, not as though that the writings of olde testamente were after the Gospel, but bycause that the certaintie of Christian faith standeth by them. For those things whiche be preached vnto vs by the Gospell of Christe, are read and promised in the holye Scriptures manye hundred yeares before. So Paule to the Romaynes meaning to expresse the certainetie of the doctrine of the Gospell, sayeth: Paule the seruaunte of Iesu Christ, called to the office of an Apostle, put a part for the Gospel of God, whiche he promised before by his Prophetes in holy Scriptures of his sonne. Rom. 1.

Holy scriptures.

Firste that the Scriptures of whiche we will speake in this place, and which the Church is wont deuoutely to vse, to the instruction of faithful folkes in godlynesse, be called holye, as the Apostle calleth them, saying: And for asmuch as thou knowest holy scriptures from a childe, it commeth of that, that whē we do speake of holy Scriptures, they be separate from all other scriptures whiche bee written of prophane matters. And I call prophane matters, not only those which perteyn to this present worlde, and which doe concerne nothing el but but the things of the worlde and thys temporarie life, but any other superstitions also, false worshippings, wicked sacrifices, and erronious opinions of God, of any manner of tymes or peoples, to exclude frō this speach of scriptures, al those writings, whiche are through errour come abroade into the worlde of the seruices and religion of God, suche as the Alkoran of the Mahomets doth conteyne. For they are not worthy to be called holye, whiche be holy only in shewe and be not so in deede, although they be taken for holy of false and superstitious persons, but in like sorte as they do call the pestilēt Leper, the holye disease, and the fire of Sainte Anthony, the holy fyre. For like as nother the title of truth dothe apperteyne vnto those things whiche bee not true, although they seeme so, and by a lykelynesse of truth, seduce the vnware and vnwise, and they ought not to be accounted for Gods, which the olde tymes toke to be Gods: so nother those things ought to be called holy, whiche in very deede be not holy, but rather wicked and superstitious.

2. Timo. 3.

Prophane vvritings.

Of the beginning of holye Scriptures.

No holye Scripture before Moyses.

WE do not reade that before Moses there was any scripture inspired from God. In that matter I will not striue with any bodye, whether there wer any holy scripture extant in ỹ Church of God before him or no. Whether there were or not, surely there came no holy scriptures to our knowledge more ancient thā these of Moses. For if it were otherwise, Christe, to the declaration of whom al the holy Scriptures be appointed, wouldе not haue begun at Moses, when he expounded all ỹ holy scripture touching him, vnto ỹ. disciples going vnto Emaus, beginning frō Moses: but if ther had ben any holy scripture more auncient than they of Moses, he would surely haue made his beginning first frō ỹ same. They be able to affirme of the boke of Enoch, which either saw him whē he wrote it, or els saw Noes librarie in the ark, or els the bookes of the olde worlde cast to any coast after ỹ flood. The beginning which we must take of holy scriptures is, that, In the beginning God made heauen & earth.

And wheras there is no scripture giuen to the church of God, inspired from God, which might helpe to the knowledge and worship of God, and also to the studie of godlinesse, in all the ages which passed ouer from the beginning of ỹ worlde vntil Moses, it is not done altogither without cause what soeuer they do affirme, whiche saye, that there is no scripture in all the worlde before the bookes of Enoch, whiche be kepte in the churche of the Quéne of Saba, and be had in more estimation than the bookes of Moses. Thus we do see, that God wouldе before the Flood, and after also vntil Moses, declare those things whiche might profite vnto faith, religion, and godlynesse, eyther by visions in the night season, or by appearing in the daye time, vnto the holye fathers, by whome such as were vnder them, might afterwardes be instructed. There was in all that time which was before Moses the lawgyuer, a certayne foundation to be layde, whereupon the scripture that shoulde followe might be grounded. The way of faithe was to be made by often appearings and answers, to make them to beléeue that God had a care and a regard of mankind, and that he did vouchsafe to instruct some speciall men of the will of hys grace, by answeres, appearings, and reuelations, by whose meanes, other myghte bée brought vnto the knowledge of God and study of religion. So he spake firste vnto Adam, and after him vnto the holye Patriarches, not onely before, but also after the Flodde, and he gaue vnto all the generations of the godly, suche men as shoulde be guides vnto the rest, in religion and true godlynesse, vntill Moses. The histories of the fathers be knowen, so that there is no néede to alleage them here.

And when the tyme came to publish and set forth the true knowlege and Religion of God in the worlde, not nowe by priuate families, but by a mannerous people, he prouided him a singular man and apoynted for the purpose, by whome holye scriptures should haue their beginning. Unto whom he purchased so muche authoritie and credite by greate and terrible wōders, that those things which he should write, mighte be credited as things not imagined by man, but inspired from God, at the least way of that people, which were driuen to beléeue it by miracles and straunge workings. It encreaseth the matter also, that the beginning of holy scripture was written by the fingers of God, and not by his. After that the holy scripture was once deliuered by him vnto the people of God, the apparitiōs of Angels which wer made to Israell, did not by & by altogither cease, but the custome of them came by little and little to decrease, by that time that those things which Moses had written, had fastned déepe rots in the Church of God. After Moses the Prophets were sent, vnto whom also the aunsweres of God came by visions and reuelations: but they did put in writyng also those thynges which they did spreade abroade in Israel by talk, to the intent there should be no excuse for them that shoulde come after, but that this saying of Christ might serue: They haue Moses and the Prophets, if they wil not heare them, they wyll not beléeue though any rise from the dead.

Prophets.

Luke. 16.

And the scriptures of the old Testament were not onely thys wayes brought in, but they of the new Testament were as strangely disposed. There were neuer suche portentes and wonders heard as were shewed before, not only by Christ himselfe, but done also by ỹ Apostles, by whiche the way mighte be made to encrease the newe faith abroade in the worlde. There folowed afterward ỹ holy writings of the Euangelistes & of the Apostles. And after that they were once spreade abroade, albeit the trade of miracles whiche serued to confirme the Gospell, were not vpon the suddaine broken off, yet after the death of the Apostles, miracles were more seldome wrought. I speake of ỹ true, pure & sincere miracles, not of those whiche are to be attributed to the workings of Satan rather than to the vertue of Christ, of which thē godly mā Paul thought good to giue those faithful mē warning of, before

The Scriptures of the new Testament nowre brought in.

2. Thess. 2.

then

After holy Scriptures we maye hearken to reuelatiõs.

they were wrought.

So that this dispensation of the holy Scripture, as well of the old as of the new Testamẽt, which in both was brought into the worlde after the answeres and reuelations of God passed before, and many marueilous wonders withall, doth giue vs plainly to vnderstand if it be well considered, that after that we haue receiued once the holy scriptures of God, we may not seke nor looke for any reuelations of those things whiche be requisite vnto true faith, lone & knowledge of God, and life. For firste it shoulde be against the order of Gods dispensation, which the prouidence of God wil not alter. Secõdly it should giue way to the Angell of Satan, whiche dothe sometimes turne hym selfe into the likeneſſe of the Angell of light, and is wont to decepue their mindes with false reuelations, which conteyning the lighte of the holye scriptures, doe looke for (I wote not what) more subtile and spirituall poyntes by some speciall reuelatiõs.

Of the diuision of holye Scriptures.

VVhiche be the Canonicall bookes of the olde testament.

HOly scriptures, the double bodye wherof is called the holy Bible, be deuided into the old and new Testamente. And some be called Canonicall, and some Apocryphall. The Canonicall bée taken for to bée authenticall and of authoritie in the triall of a case of faith and religion: those which be out of the Canon and Apocryphall, they haue not this authoritie. In the Canon or rule are the fyue bookes of Moses, Genesis, Exodus, Leuiticus, Numeri, & Deuteronomy. To them be ioined Iosua, Judicum, Ruth, Samuel, the Kings, Paralypomenon, Esther, Daniel, Esdras, Job, the Psalter, the Prouerbes of Salomon, Ecclesiastes, Cantica Canticorum, Esay, Hieremie, Threny or Lamentations, Ezechiel, and the booke of the twelue Prophets. These bookes the Ebrewes doe call for the number of them עשרים וארבע that is to say, foure and twenty: two of Samuell for one, and two of the Kings also for one, and taking also two of the Paralypomenon for one, albeit in their bookes they be deuided into two. What soeuer there bée besydes these, saith Hierome in his Galeate prologe, it is to be put among the Apocryphall. The Canonicall Scriptures of the new Testament, be the bookes of the Euangelists, Mathew, Marke, Luke, and John, the Actes of the Apostles, the foureteene Epistles of Paule: to the Romaynes one, to the Corinthians two, to the Galathians one, to the Ephesians one, to the Philippians one, to the Colossias one, to the Thessalonians two, vnto Timothe two, to Titus one, to Philemon one, and one to the Ebrewes. Vnto these there be added in the Canon. vj. Epistles of Peter, of James one, of John thrée, of Judas one, and the Reuelation of John.

Amongst the bookes of the old testament, the Grécks and the Latins haue these boks which the Hebrues do not allow to the authoritie of the Canon, that is to say, Tobias, Judith, Baruch, the Epistle of Hieremie, the song of the thrée children, the third and fourth booke of Esdras, the booke of Wisedome of Salomon, the booke of Jesus Sirach called Sapientia, whiche tia, whiche booke the Latines do call Ecclesiasticus, the history of Susanna, Bel, and the Dragon, bookes of the Machabees, vnto which the Grécks doe adde also the booke of Iosephus. These be taken for Apocrypha, not bycause they be to be had in some secrete authoritie, but eyther bycause their beginning was hidden and not knowen, or else bycause they were wont to be redde not openly in the Churche of God as the canonicall bookes, but in secrete and at home by priuate persons. For Apocryphon is as muche to saye, as secrete and hidden. Peraduenture this word crepte into the Church vppon that that the reading of such bookes which conteineth secret and déepe matters as the booke of the Reuelations is, whych a man might more rightly call, The booke of the hidden matters, was not accustomed to be allowed to the open and publike reading of the Church, and for asmuch as they were not allowed as manye as were not of the Canon of the scripture, it was receyued in the Church by processe of time, that all such bookes whiche were excluded from the canon, were called Apocryphall, that is hidden, but they were excluded out of the Canon, bycause they were written more sauering of the spirite of man than of the spirite of God, and they séeme to conteyne some poyntes not agréeable ynough with the Canonicall Scripture: finallye as Augustine saith: I wote not by whose presumptiõ they were set forth.

There be some also of the bookes of the newe testament, of whiche the opinions of the elders doe vary: as the latter Epistle of Peter, the two later of John, the Epistle of Judas, the Epistle to the Ebrewes, and the Apocalyps of John, which in the councel Laodicene is not rehearsed amõg the Canonicall scriptures: with whiche some of our newer men do recke also the same whiche is entituled vnto James. It is not for my behauior to pronounce of them whither they be theirs vnder whose names they do passe, or not, yet the iudgement of the elders maketh me to be lesse bold vnto thẽ than to the rest of the scriptures, albeit I do not thinke that all things whiche is redde in them, is slightly to be condemned.

The Apocryphall of the newe testament.

Agayne they doe deuide the holye scriptures of the old Testamẽt into Legal, Historical, Prophetical, and Hagiographal. The Legal or lawish, they doe call the fiue bookes of Moses. Those the Ebrews doe call תורה, that is to say, the law or doctrine: and of the nũber חמשה that is to say, fyue folde, the Grécks doe call them πεντάτευχον, fiue bookes. The historicall bookes, they doe call Iosue, Judges, the bookes of Samuell, & Kings. The prophetical bookes they doe name the same of Esay, Jeremie, Ezechiel, and the twelue lesse Prophetes. The Hagiographal, that is the scriptures of the holy mẽ, they do call all the rest. The Legal, historical, and prophetical wer also written of holy men by the instinct of God: but they iudged it méete to call these so, bycause they bée vtterlye nother prophetical nor legall, nor historical, and bycause that for the varietie of matters they can not well haue any certaine title. Yet ther be some whiche thinketh they muste bée called bookes of wisedome. We may deuide

The diuision of the Scriptures of the olde testament.

the scriptures of the new testament into the hiſtories of the goſpel, & the doctrins of Epiſtles. The euāgelical hiſtories be cōteined in ỹ iiij. bookes of the Euangeliſts, & the firſt which Luke wrote of the Acts of the Apoſtles. The reſte of the ſcriptures be cōteined in the Epiſtles of the Apoſtles, ſauing onely the Apocalyps.

The diuiſion of the ſcriptures of the new Teſtament

Now what is conteined in euery booke, & what be the argumentes of them, I think it not neceſſarie to reckon vp here in order. I think it were much more profitable, if the diligent & godly reader, would turne & toſſe ỹ holy ſcriptures with ſo deuout a diligēce, ỹ he might gather for himſelf the argumēts of euery boke or rather of euery chapter. For I fear leſt we ſhal make ỹ readers of holy ſcriptures ſlouthful & careleſſe, if we do contract al things cōpendiouſly into briefe arguments. And yet I do not blame their trauel, which did ſet before the argumēts of ỹ books & chapters alſo in ỹ holy Bibles. But if a mā think ỹ he cā vſe thē wel, let him ſeke them in the preface which is ſet before in the edition of Tygure, of the excellencie & dignitie of the holie ſcripture, & in the Epiſtle of Jerome to Pauline Prieſt, of all the bookes of the diuine Hiſtories, whiche they are wont to ſet before in the beginning of the Latine edition.

Of the authoritie & excellēcy of the Canonical ſcriptures.

The neceſſitie and vſe of authoritie.

COnſequently we muſt ſée for the authoritie of the holy ſcriptures. For ſo much as ỹ vſe of the holy ſcripture is ordeined to this purpoſe, that thoſe which be ignorāt of godly thinges, may be inſtructed in ỹ knowlege of God to their ſaluation: and ſeeing it is not profitable that the ignorant can be perſwaded euen at the firſte with the vnderſtanding of the matters, and ſo procéde in the way of truth, very neceſſitie requireth, that they be firſt moued by ſome authoritie to ſubmit thēſelues vnto doctrine, the ſpirite and vnderſtanding whereof they are not able ſtreight way to reach vnto, til their ſenſes be wel exercíſed therein, to vnderſtande thoſe things whereof they began to be inſtructed. So that authoritie maye be wel accounted to be as the very gate through which generally al ſcholers and learners muſt come in at, to atteyne ỹ knowledge of things which are to be learned. And like as no mā that is ignorant of things which are to be beléeued, will credite his words that ſpeaketh vnto hym, vnleſſe hée haue an opinion of him to be ſuche a one as will not lye: ſo no man dothe readily obey him which cōmandeth, vnleſſe he dothe acknowledge his power and authoritie whereunto hée ought to yéelde his ſpéedy obeyſance, and beléeue that there is ſuche wiſedome in his precepte, that they may not be neglected without ſome preſent danger of health to enſue. And how neceſſary it is, that they which cānot certainely & infallibly iudge of things that are to be learned thēſelues, ſhould hang vpon ſome authoritie, whereby they might be kept in order: it appeareth very wel by that, ỹ they which be ledde by their owne iudgement, being weake and rude of vnderſtanding, are oftentimes trayned out of the way of truth, by the likely glarings of reaſon, and ſlippe into ſundry errors, from whéence they can can neuer or with muche adoe hée brought backe againe to the right of the truth. So that the rude and vnlearned muſt beware, that they doe not preſume to déeme and iudge of matters which they vnderſtand not, without ſome authoritall direction or guiding.

With like circumſpectiō al ſcholers muſt beware, that they doe not ſubmit themſelues vnto any falſe authoritie, in ſtéede of that whiche is true. For as well is he out of ỹ way which doth committe an erroure, ſeduced by the iudgement or inticemēt of a nother body, as he that is ſeduced of himſelfe. And that the firſt rulers of the Church of God ſaw well, and therefore did attribute the higheſt authoritie vnto holy ſcriptures, by the direction of which the minds of all godly men ſhoulde be ſtayed in the obedience of faith, ſo that they ſhould beléeue thoſe things which be ſette forth in them to be of all moſte true, and whenſoeuer they ſhuld forſake this rule, they ſhould be ſubiect vnto all kind of errors.

And there be two kinds of authorities. One euerlaſting & higheſt, the other temporarie and lower. 1 The euerlaſting & higheſt is in God only, who doth excell euer & in all things. The authoritie of him cōſiſteth herein, that firſte he made all things, ſecōdly, he gouerneth all things, thirdly, he hathe power ouer all thinges: fourthly, he palſeth all things which be in heauen and in earthe, in iuſtice, truth, vertue, and wiſedome: Fiftly, all our life and health hangeth vpon his will, which is as it were the foūtaine of all good things. For theſe cauſes he is knowen by the common perceiuerance or vnderſtanding of al men, to haue the higheſt and euerlaſting authoritie, whereof no mā may derogate any iote without great impietie. 2 The temporarie and lower authoritie, that is lawfull, commeth of God, regarded among men eyther for the naturall prerogatiue, as the authoritie is of the parents towards their children, either for righte and power, as it is of maiſters vpon ſeruants: eyther for office, as the authoritie of the magiſtrates is ouer the Citizens that bée vnder them, or of the preachers ouer the faithfull people: or that authoritie of ripe & comely age, as that is of graue perſons towards yonger folke: or that which ſtandeth in ſome ſpeciall wiſedome and foreſight, ſuche as the authoritie of the learned, wiſe, and ſage men is towards the ignorant.

I call this the lower authoritie, bycauſe it commeth not of it ſelfe, but dependeth vpon a higher authoritie, and is reſtreyned in all things to loke vnto it, or rather it ought to be as a miniſter vnto it, and to direct all things vnto that marke, that the authoritie of God may remayne alwayes and in al places vnblemiſhed. I call it temporarie, for the alteration and weakeneſſe of worldlye matters, and the orderyng of them, when that he whyche is thys daye muche aduanced for his authoritie, the next day is nothing at al. It commeth of God, bycauſe it procéedeth from hys benefyte giuen to the commoditie of menne, from whome all fatherhode is, and from whence all gouernelle deſcendeth. Wherefore it is méete that it be had in regarde of them that bée inferioure, and not wrongfully wrested through any abuse of the superioures.

The dispensation of authoritie.

No we the vse and dispensation of authoritie consisteth eyther in word or in deed. They that be in authoritie, doe exercise the same eyther in wordes, teaching, cõmanding, correcting, admonishing, promising, threatning, &c. or in deeds, doing those thinges whiche may profite their inferiours to followe, or otherwise do them good. There is no cause at this present to treat of the inferior and temporarie authoritie. We muste consider of that higher and everlasting, whiche we do attribute to God only and alone: and that not in respecte as it is practised in deede, but as it is dispensed in the worde of our salvation. And lyke as there is so greate authoritie attributed vnto his deeds, that they can not be called vnto reckenyng by anye man, but rather to bee meruayled and honoured: so it is meete that all men doe acknowledge the firme Authoritye of hys wordes also, although the wysedom and truthe of them be not streyghte wayes vnderstanded.

Of vvhẽce faith is giuen to holy scriptures.

And forasmuche as holy scriptures are brought forth not by mans will and wisedome, but giuen from God for oure saluation, and containe the word not of men, but of God, to get conuenient authoritie in our myndes, no otherwise than if God shuld talke with vs face to face: the holy spirite did earnestly trauaile, that not only those things whiche be taught by it, should sauour of heauenly wisedome truth, and godnesse: but that the men also by whome he did set it forth as ỹ interpreters of Gods Oracles, or in speaking, or in writing, should be of so famous a godly lyfe, and of suche spirite of godlie wysedome, that albeit they were not acknowledged, as it chanceth often, whyles they liued, of men of their owne time for godly persons, & the interpreters of Gods wil: yet they should be knowen after they were departed out of this lyfe. Apõ these two argumẽts ther is credite giuen vnto holy scriptures, that they be of God, & sufficiẽt authoritie gottẽ vnto it in the Church of God, which holy men haue alwayes wyth exceeding great diligence recõmẽded vnto vs. And therefore the Apostle whẽ he would tell vs of the profite of holy scripture, he did of speciall purpose cal it inspired frõ God. And Peter saith: The holy mẽ of God, spake inspired with the holy spirite. Herewithal agreeth ỹ which Christ sayde vnto his Apostles & Disciples: It is not you that speake, but the spirite of your father whiche speaketh in you. And this authoritie the Prophets did pretend, saying: Thus sayth ỹ Lord. Item, The mouth of the Lorde of hoasts spake. This authority Christ confirmed when he answered Satan out of ỹ holy scriptures, & did reade in ỹ synagoge out of the booke of Esay, & cited nowe and then places to holye scriptures, and aduised men to reade them, and finally expounded them to his disciples. Wherefore they also which heard Paule at Thessalonica, did dayly search the scriptures, to se whether they were so as they were reported by him, meaning no doubt to credit him, if they should find those matters which he cited to be so as he told them, although they did not yet plainely vnderstand thẽ. For they did beleue ỹ God was the author of the holy scriptures, and that they came of the instinct of the holy spirite, that they dyd passe all the wisedome of this world, that they dyd exceede all the capacitie of mans reason, and that it conteyned perfecte doctrine, and that it was the rule of thinges which are to be beleued, giuen from God for our saluation. Wherefore they did diligently search them wyth a circumspect feare, take hæde least they should rashly receyue or reiecte anye thing contrarye vnto the truth and will of God, shewing by theyr most godly and profitable example, whereunto godly men must haue recourse when anye doubtes do rise in the matters of faith and religion.

And for asmuche as men can not streightway determine of the matters themselues, doe but beleeue that the scriptures be giuen to the people of God to be in stæde of a light burning in the middest of darknesse, and for that all poyntes perteyning vnto true faith and godlynesse be plainely expressed in them, whereunto elfe shoulde men runne to certifie their consciences, and to confirme theyr vnderstanding of the truth, but vnto the holy scriptures?

To this vse the holy spirite would haue a certaine canon or rule of the holy scriptures extante, whereby all matters that are to bee beleeued or misliked in the religion of God, must be examined. Canon, whereof holye scriptures is called Canonicall, is a Greeke word, signifying in Englishe a rule. The vse of a rule is, that those matters whiche be proposed must be compared vnto the streightenesse of the rule, and so eyther to be liked or amended. In this age of ours, there be risen doubts vpon many matters in the Church of Christ. They which doe stande to the defence of the accustomed orders, for asmuche as theyr meaning is not to set forthe Goddes truth, and helpe the consciences of good folkes, but to defend and maynteyne the prerogatiue and lordlinesse of the sea of Rome, and the glory of their estate and name, and some also their belly and gaine: they do contend parte of them by arguments grounded vppon the long custome, the prescription of tyme, the holynesse of some of the fathers, of the vniuersall obseruation of the things receyued and vsed of the excellency and power of the sea of Rome, and taken out of the philosophie of Plato or of Aristotle: part of them worke by threatnings of cruell tearing and tormenting withfyre, sword, chaines, enprisonmente, executions and writtes of Princes. But they which haue a desire to prouide for the safetie & quiet of the faithfull, do suspẽd their iudgement to the rule of the holye Scriptures, and suppose that al controuersies may be determined by the iudgement of them. Wherein they doe not onely followe in dœde the counsell of the holy spirite, which gaue the scriptures vnto the Churche of God in this wise, that there should be a stayed rule of suche thyngs as are to be beleeued, but they doe also follow the example of the old Churche, whyche did oppresse all heresies by the authoritie of holy Scriptures, and the myndes of the holye fathers, whyche did set forthe this vse of holy Scriptures vnto good and godly men.

Chrysost. in Matth. Ex. for Homil. 2. Hom. 49.

Reade Chrysostome vppon Matthew where he sayeth thus: For in this time, since that heresie hath preuayled in the Churche, there can bee no triall of true Christianitie, nor ther cã be no other refuge for Christian men, that will knowe the truth of the faith, but the holye scriptures. For heretofore it was shewen many wayes whyche was the Churche of God, and whiche was Gentilitie: but now they ý would know whiche is ý true Church of Christ, cã know it by no manner of meanes, but only by scriptures. Why? Bicause that al those things whiche are proper vnto Christ in the truth, the heresies haue the same in the schisme: Churches alike, the verye holy scriptures alyke, Bishops alike, and the rest of the degrées of the Cleargy alyke, Baptisme alike, the Supper of the Lorde alike, and all other things: and finally Christ himselfe. Therefore when a man would know which is the true Churche in so greate a confusion of likenesse, whereby shalbe knowe it, but only by the Scriptures? But the Churche of Christe was knowen aforetimes by the verye behauioure and manners of men, when the conuersation of the Christian men eyther for all, or for most part was holy, whiche was not so among the vngodly. But nowe the Christian men are become as euill or worse thã the heretikes or Gentiles: and yet there is greater continence founde among them. though they be in schisme, than there is among Christian mẽ. Therfore he that would knowe whiche is the true Church of Christ, how cã he know it but only by the Scriptures? To that intente the Lorde knowing howe greate a confusion of thynges houlde come in the later dayes, gyueth a charge, that they that be christian men and will receyue the stedfastnesse of true faith in Christiantie, muste haue recourse to no other thing, but vnto the scriptures. Otherwise if they haue a respect vnto other things, they shall be deceyued and perish, not vnderstanding which is the true Church. This is Chrysostome, word for word.

The opinion of Augustine is like also, who writeth thus. In the scriptures we haue learned Christ, in the scriptures we haue lerned ý church. These scriptures we haue commonly: and why do we not commonly receyne both Christ and the Church in them? This is Augustine. In thys wise the holy fathers iudged, that mẽ houlde in cases doubtfull runne to the authority of the Canonical scripture, which if it be despised, there can nothing elſe ensue vpõ it, but the wauering of oure faith. As Augustine also supposeth, saying: That fayth muſt nedes faile, if the authoritie of Gods scriptures do wauer. And how doth it not wauer, yea is decayed, vterly contẽned and reiected, when the iudgement of it is not sought nor regarded to finde the truth, and pacifie the churches of Christ, but the truth is violently oppressed, and the kingdome of lyes eſtablished by the armour of mens malkery & gouernãce.

The aduersaries crie out, that the holy scriptures be to dark, to gather any certain iudgement out of them. Let them make aunswere vnto Augustine, who bẽing of a contrary opinion noteth this: The holye spirite hathe so nobly and holsomely tempered the holy scriptures, that he might with the easie places of it serue the gredy hunger of men, and with the darker places take away oure lothsomnesse. For there is no poynte almost found of the darkest of it, which is not most playnely spoken in some other place. Thus muche Augustine. Wherby it is manifest ynough, that if any thing be spoke darkly in some place of the scriptures, the light of it must be sought out of those places wher ý same matter is more plainely expressed. But they which be euill affected towards the doctrine of the truth, haue their mindes so blynded, that they can not abide the lighte of the holye scriptures. Wherefore the same whiche is to godly men clearer than the sunne, is vnto them darker than any cloude. If the Gospell of God be darke, it is darke vnto them ý do perish, sayeth the Apostle, whose mindes ý god of this world, the belly, glorye, selfe loue, hatred, &c. hathe blinded, so that the lighte of the Gospell of the glory of Christe, dothe not shine vnto them. If the holy Scripture be darke in the poyntes of oure faith and religion, how it can agrée, that Christ dothe charge the Sadducees, saying: Ye do erre, not knowing the scriptures: And, Search the scriptures: for they doe beare witnesse of me. Howe is it else true that the Apostle Peter doth compare it vnto a cãdle, shining in a darke place: Ther was some obscuritie of figures in the old testament: but after ý Christ appeared, whiche is the lighte of the world, and shifted away ý shadowes of figures, fulfilled the truth, and so gaue most clére light vnto the holye scriptures: how is it conueniente for Christian menne, to slander it wyth darkenesse, and to refuse to abide the iudgement of them in doubtes of religion not Ethnicall, but Christian? And these be they which haue still in their mouth, the fathers. Why doe they not followe their example, whiche with greate dexteritie and diligence did ouercome all heresies with the armoures and weapons of the holy Scriptures? Lette them leaue their lokes of great Elephants, and beginne to be simple lambes, and thẽ let them enter into the riuers of the holye Scriptures with the feare of the Lorde, vnto the bottome of the which (as one sayth) the Lambe perceth: when the Elephant swimmeth aboue. If they will not doe this, no wise body will maruell, that beyng as they be, they doe fynde fault that the holy Scriptures be darke.

The example of fathers.

The holy scripture is like a riuer where the Lambes treadeth the botome and the Elephant swimmeth

That our aduersaries do flee to the fathers.

What difference is betwixt the holy Scriptures and the writings of the Fathers, Byshoppes, and Councels.

The shifting flesshe dothe turne it selfe vnto al fashions, bycause it will not be compelled in al things to obey the truth of God. Wherefore whereas it séemeth to drawe nére a kynde of tyrannie to ordeyne and maynteyne in the Churche anye thyng after their owne wyll and rule. For asmuche as thys rashe dealyng can bée by no manner of couloure defended by the authoritie of the holye Scriptures, forsakyng that, they doe flée vnto some couloure or pretence of the Fathers, Bysshops and Councels, as though those matters could defende sticke vnto by colour of them, not going aboute to proue that they doe defende those things which be true, but to make men beleeue that they doe maynteyne no newe poyntes of doctrine, and that so they maye craftyly auoyde the enuy of anye vniust gouernance: and albeit they be men most irreligious, yet do they fynde a defence of their matter vnder estimation and holinesse of the fathers. Who if it were any wise possible, I woulde wish with all my heart, that in all matters of oure religion they would abide the iudgement of the fathers, by the buckler of whome they doe endeuoure to defend themselues in these presente controuersies. I beseech you what should become of the whole see of Rome with all these counterfeyte Bysshops, Cardinalles, Prelates, Monkes, Scholemen, Sophisters, Scotistes, Thomistes, Occamistes, and other suche kynd of men, whyche haue a mawe of hundred yeares, by right and wrõg, by praying and paying, by strength and armoure, inuaded the gouernement of Christian religion, if they were put to the iudgemẽt of the holy fathers, and of the olde Canons and Coũcels?

But although that wise mẽ know well inough, that none of the Decrees of any of the fathers or Councels are to be set againste the authoritie of the holye Scriptures, yet bycause of them which do make ouermuch of the writings of the fathers, I will bring forthe the opinion of some of the fathers, whereby they may see what difference ther is to be made betwixt their writings, and the authoritie of the holy Scriptures.

Hiero.

Jerome vppon the Epistle to the Galathians writeth thus: It is the doctrine of the holye spirite, whiche is sette forthe in the Canonical writings, contrarye vnto whyche if the Councels doe ordeyne anye thyng, I doe account it wicked. This is Jerome.

Augustine sayeth: Nor we ought not to accounte the disputation of any men, though they be neuer so catholike and commendable, as Canonicall scriptures, so that it shall not be lawfull for vs, sauing the honor due vnto those men, to reproue or refuse anye thing in their writings, if we do find perchance, by Gods help, that they take it otherwise than the truth is in deede, vnderstanded either by others, either by vs. And in an other place: If any thing be established by manifest authoritie of the diuine Scriptures, those I meane which be called Canonicall, in the congregation of the faithfull, we must beleeue it without any doubting, as for anye other witnesse or testimonies whereby any thing is perswaded to be beleeued, it is lawfull for thee, eyther to beleeue eyther not to beleeue.

And in the second booke agaynste Cresc̃etius. We (saith he) do Cyprian no wrong, whẽ we do put a difference betwixt al his writings, and the Canonicall authoritie of Gods Scriptures. For the Ecclesiasticall rule was not ordeyned with so hollome diligence without cause, whereunto certain bookes of the Prophets and of the Apostles doe belong, of whome we muste in no wyse enterprise to iudge, & according vnto whichemay bee freely iudged of al other writings, either of ỹ faithfull, either of of the vnfaithfull. This sayth he.

Nowe I beseeke you, if we muste iudge of the wrytings of all the Fathers, accordyng vnto the Canon of the holy Scriptures, and not of the Canonical scriptures, according vnto the wrytings of the fathers, how can that stande whereof I spake also before, that they do complayne that the holy Scriptures be darke, & that therefore it is neede that they be expounded by the expositions of the fathers, and that they muste be iudged accordyng vnto the same? Who is so blockysh, that can thinke we muste iudge of that which is open & cleere ly, that, whiche is hidden and darke, and not rather of that whiche is obscure, by that which is cleere? Whõ one will they appoynt vs, out of the number of the Fathers, whose wrytings we should folow as a light, to lighten the holy scriptures? If wee will folow all them whose wrytings be extant, it will come to passe, that the same whiche is open in holy scriptures, shalbe darkened by takyng theyr expositions, through the diuersitie of opinions and expositions. If we will chose out but one alone, it can not appeare certainely which of them is to be chosen, nor the opinion of one can not make our consciences out of doubte, when others do iudge otherwise. What and if it were knowen, that there is not asmuch as one of all the fathers, who if he were aliue agayne, woulde acknowledge to be his, those wrytings that be caryed and blowen aboute, to be his. Let the examples of our times be cõpared togither, & let it be seene how foule a discrepancie is founde to be euery where. What and if the bookes that we haue in occupying were cõpared with the very bookes of theyr owne hande wryting? The writings of the fathers are so degenerate in course of tyme from that that they were at the first, partly by negligẽce of them that haue gathered togither our antiquities, and partely by the rashnesse of heretikes, that surely hee were a very fole, or of sette purpose malicious agaynst the Churche of God, that would thinke that the consciences of kaythfull men shoulde be bound vnto theyr iudgements.

Epist. 19. ad Hieronymũ.

But I returne vnto Augustine whiche wrote vnto Jerome in this wise: I haue learned to giue vnto that bookes of Scripture, whiche be now called Canonicall, this feare & honor, that I do moste stedfastly beleeue, that no author of them did erre in any thyng. And in case I do finde any thing in that wrytings whiche seeme to be contrary vnto the truth, I do mistrust nothyng, but that eyther the booke is false, or that the interpretour vnderstood not what was meante, or that I vnderstoode it not my selfe. But I do reade other writers, though they be of neuer so great learnyng and holinesse, in that sorte, that I do not take the matter to be true, bycause they thought so, but bycause they could persuade me, either by the same Canonicall authors, eyther by some probable reason, that it is true. And I suppose (my brother) that thou arte of no other minde. I thinke verily (I say) that thou woulddest not haue thy bookes so read, as the bookes of the Prophetes or Apostles, of whose it were a wicked thing to doubte, whether they bee without errour or no. This saith he.

Dist. 9. can. Ego solus.

and that vnto Hierome, whome we do not read that he did in one worde go agaynst this opinion. Also this opinion semed to be so well liked, or worthy rather to bee diligētly obserued, ỳ it was put also into ỳ decrées.

How we do cyte the wrytings of the fathers.

But it wil be sayde vnto me: In case the wrytings of the Fathers be such, that neyther they haue any authoritie, neither yet are like to their originals, to what purpose doest thou alleage testimonies out of them, to proue and extoll the authoritie of the Canonicall Scripture, and to refute them whiche do muche esteme the Fathers? I answere: For my part I loke for no testimonies of the Fathers, whereby there shoulde bée any authoritie gyuen vnto the Canonicall Scripture, and to make difference betwirte it and the wrytings of the fathers, but am content with the authoritie and Canon of the holy Scripture it selfe: but for almuche as our aduersaries do go aboute to trouble the truthe by colour of the fathers, and do preferre theyr wrytings almoste aboue the Canonicall scriptures, I may well bryng them whē they be against their owne purpose, and occupy their owne weapon whiche they do bryng, not to defende the truth, wherfore they be not strōg inough, but to beate them backe with theyr owne weapon, whiche they come armed withal. But when they do alleage any thyng out of the wrytings of the fathers agaynst vs, I do protestе playnely, that I will not be bounde vnto theyr authoritie. For I do take theyr wrytings (to say with Augustine) not as Canonicall, but I do way them by the Canons, & in case there be any thing in thē agrēeable with ỳ authoritie of ỳ Canonicall wrytings, I do receiue it: otherwise, by their leaue, I do refuse it. But they which do charge vs with the wrytings of the fathers as for the groundes of the Canonicall Scripture, if wee do bryng any thing agaynst them out of the wrytings of the fathers, they must of necessitie yelde, and of right hold their peace as ouercome, not for any authoritie that the wrytings do deserue, but for that they attribute so much vnto them.

See Augustine the second booke, against Cresconius cap. xxxii.

They do obiect the authoritie of the Churche. The churche they say, is more auncient than the Scriptures. For when the Apostles began firste to preache, there was no Scripture of the Gospell, no Epistle of Paule, and yet for all that there was a Churche dedicate in the bloud of Christe. Ergo, the authoritie of the churche is greater than the authoritie of the Scripture.

That the authoritie of the church is not proued by the Scripture.

guyle.

I answere: The true churche of Christe neuer vsed this argument agaynst the authoritie of the holy and Canonical scriptures, though it were molested with diuers and many heresies: but did alwayes defende and preserue the puritie of theyr faith by the authoritie of them. Wherfore it appeareth, that they which do goe about to defende their doctrine by this argument, do not contende for the true church of Christ, nor for the vpholdyng of any truth, whiche may be defended by the authoritie of the holy scriptures, but for a counterfayte Churche and the sea of Antichriste, which for asmuch as it hath no buckler of truth, it is dryuen to defende it selfe, eyther by violence and tyrānie, eyther eyther by a mistaken authoritie vnder the name of the Churche.

But let vs sée the foondnesse of this argument. The Churche (they say) is more auncient than the holy Scriptures. Whiche Churche then, which scriptures? Firste that Churche of the gospel is more auncient than the wrytings of the Gospels and of the Apostles. It is in deede. But why do they plucke asunder the Canonicall scriptures of bothe the Testaments, and neglecting the firste, frame their argument of the laste? Be they onely Canonicall which be written by the Apostles and the Euāgelists? No in deede. It is a guyle, that they do dilleuer those of the newe Testament from the olde: as that is also, ỳ they do extoll ỳ authoritie of ỳ firste Euangelicall Churche. Also, they thought that the Scriptures of the newe Testament mighte by this meanes be the easlier oppressed, if sequestring them from the reste of the body, they might bereaue them from their reputation of auncientie, & set them behinde the Church as newer. And they iudged it beste to disauthorise them, by whose authoritie they found thēselues more prested than of the others. Thirdly, forasmuch as ỳ estimatiō of the former Church was blessed and holy, they thought it good to extoll the same, and vnder the name of that, to set forth theyr counterfayte Churche. Otherwise seyng that the catholike Churche beganne not firste in the tyme of the new Testamene, but takyng his beginnyng euen from Adam, cōprised all the elect and faithful, they might haue extolled the antiquitie of it agaynst all holy scriptures in this wise that they mighte haue sayde: the Churche is more auncient than the Scriptures. For when the holy Patriarkes liued, Adam, Abel, Seth, Enoch, Noe, Abraham, Isaac, Iacob, &c. there was no scripture vntill Moses, who firste began to write: Ergo, the authoritie of the Churche is greater than the authoritie of the whole scripture. But this way a man mighte argue by & by in this wise: Ergo, the church of the old Testament is more authenticall than the Churche of the new, the lawe better than the gospel, Moses greater than Christe, the sacrifices of beastes more effectuous than the sacrifice of Christ: figures, shadowes, & Prophecies more to be made of than the truth: whiche argumēts would be cut off as absurde, euen as the firste hearing, and should neuer a whitte anayle to their purpose. So that it appeareth that there is nothyng else done by this argumēt, but that they do with fond prating betray the weakenesse of theyr cause. In the church of Christ auncientie is not loked for, but the truthe of the doctrine. For the authoritie of Christian doctrine & of the holy scripture cōmeth not by that that it passeth in antiquitie, but that it passeth in truthe and in the beginnyng of it from God. Else the Iewes mighte haue with good reason preferred the the olde lyne of Moses lawe, aboue the newe musle of the doctrine of Christ. Wherfore it stādeth yet fast, that we do preferre the authoritie of the holy and Canonicall Scripture, aboue the decrées, custome, consent, & vsage of any Churche what soeuer it be. Yet further they do obiect: The Scripture is not authētical without the

Dist. 9. can. Ego solis.

and that vnto Hierome, whome we do not read that he did in one worde go agaynst this opinion. Also this opinion semed to be so well liked, or worthy rather to bee diligētly obserued, ỹ it was put also into ỹ decrées.

How we do cyte the wrytings of the fathers.

But it wil be sayde vnto me: In case the wrytings of the Fathers be such, that neyther they haue any authoritie, neither yet are like to their originals, to what purpose doest thou alleage testimonies out of them, to proue and extoll the authoritie of the Canonicall Scripture, and to refute them whiche do muche esteeme the Fathers? I answere: For my part I loke for no testimonies of the Fathers, whereby there shoulde bée any authoritie gyuen vnto the Canonicall Scripture, and to make difference betwirte it and the wrytings of the fathers, but am content with the authoritie and Canon of the holy Scripture it selfe: but for asmuche as our aduersaries do go aboute to trouble the truthe by colour of the fathers, and do preferre theyr wrytings almoste aboue the Canonicall scriptures, I may well bryng them whē they be against their owne purpose, and occupy their owne weapon whiche they do bryng, not to defende the truth, wherefore they be not strōg inough, but to beate them backe with theyr owne weapon, whiche they come armed withal. But when they do alleage any thyng out of the wrytings of the fathers agaynst vs, I do protestе playnely, that I will not be bounde vnto theyr authoritie. For I do take theyr wrytings (to say with Augustine) not as Canonicall, but I do way them by the Canons, & in case there be any thing in thē agréeable with ỹ authoritie of ỹ Canonicall wrytings, I do receiue it: otherwise, by their leaue, I do refuse it. But they which do charge vs with the wrytings of the fathers as for the groundes of the Canonicall Scripture, if wée do bryng any thing agaynst them out of the wrytings of the fathers, they must of necessitie yéelde, and of right hold their peace as ouercome, not for any authoritie that the wrytings do deserue, but for that they attribute so much vnto them.

See Augustine the second booke, against Cresconius cap. xxxii.

They do obiect the authoritie of the Churche. The churche they say, is more auncient than the Scriptures. For when the Apostles began firste to preache, there was no Scripture of the Gospell, no Epistle of Paule, and yet for all that there was a Churche dedicate in the bloud of Christe. Ergo, the authoritie of the churche is greater than the authoritie of the Scripture.

That authoritie of the church is not preferred before the Scripture.

I answere: The true churche of Christe neuer vsed this argument agaynst the authoritie of the holy and Canonical scriptures, though it were molested with diuers and many heresies: but did alwayes defende and preserue the puritie of theyr faith by the authoritie of them. Wherefore it appeareth, that they which do goe about to defende their doctrine by this argument, do not contende for the true church of Christ, nor for the vpholdyng of any truth, whiche may be defended by the authoritie of the holy scriptures, but for a counterfayte Churche and the sea of Antichristе, which for asmuch as it hath no bucler of truth, it is dryuen to defende it selfe, eyther by violence and tyránie, eyther eyther by a mistaken authoritie vnder the name of the Churche.

But let vs sée the fondnesse of this argument. The Churche (they say) is more auncient than the holy Scriptures. Whiche Churche then, which scriptures? Firste that Churche of the gospel is more auncient than the wrytings of the Gospels and of the Apostles. It is in déede. But why do they plucke asunder the Canonicall scriptures of bothe the Testaments, and neglecting the firste, frame their argument of the laste? Be they onely Canonicall which be written by the Apostles and the Euāgelists? No in déede. It is a guyle, that they do dissemble those of the newe Testament from the olde: as that is also, ỹ they do extoll ỹ authoritie of ỹ firste Euangelicall Churche. Also, they thought that the Scriptures of the newe Testament might by this meanes be the easlier oppressed, if sequestring them from the reste of the body, they might bereaue them from their reputation of auncientie, & set them behinde the Church as newer. And they iudged it beste to disauthorise them, by whose authoritie they found thēselues more prested than of the others. Thirdly, forasmuch as ỹ estimatiō of the former Church was blessed and holy, they thought it good to extoll the same, and vnder the name of that, to set forth theyr counterfayte Churche. Otherwise seyng that the catholike Churche beganne not firste in the tyme of the new Testamene, but takyng his beginnyng euen from Adam, cōpriseth all the elect and faithful, they might haue extolled the antiquitie of it agaynst all holy scriptures in this wise that they mighte haue sayde: the Churche is more auncient than the Scriptures. For when the holy Patriarkes liued, Adam, Abel, Seth, Enoch, Noe, Abraham, Isaac, Iacob, &c. there was no scripture vntill Moses, who firste began to write: Ergo, the authoritie of the Churche is greater than the authoritie of the whole scripture. But this way a man mighte argue by & by in this wise: Ergo, the church of the old Testament is more authenticall than the Churche of the new, the lawe better than the gospel, Moses greater than Christe, the sacrifices of beastes more effectuous than the sacrifice of Christ: figures, shadowes, & Prophecies more to be made of than the truth: whiche argumēts would be cut off as absurde, euen at the firste hearing, and should neuer a whitte anayle to their purpose. So that it appeareth that there is nothyng else done by this argumēt, but that they do with fond prating betray the weakenesse of theyr cause. In the church of Christ auncientie is not looked for, but the truthe of the doctrine. For the authoritie of Christian doctrine & of the holy scripture cōmeth not by that that it passeth in antiquitie, but that it passeth in truthe and in the beginnyng of it from God. Else the Iewes mighte haue with good reason preferred the the olde wyne of Moses lawe, aboue the newe muste of the doctrine of Christ. Wherefore it stādeth yet fast, that we do preferre the authoritie of the holy and Canonicall Scripture, aboue the decrées, custome, consent, & wage of any Churche what socuer it be. Yet further they do obiect: The Scripture is not authētical without

the

The authoritie of holy scriptures is not of the Churche.

the authoritie of the Churche. For the Canonicall writers be members of the Churche. I answere: I do acknowledge that the Canonicall writers be membres of the Church: but whereas it is gathered by that that the scripture is not authetically without the authoritie of the Churche, I do vtterly denie it, vnlesse they do meane of the inferiour authoritie, which is as a minister vnto ỳ higher. For otherwise that most high and euerlasting authoritie of the Canonicall scripture commeth from none other, but from God as the author of it. And the holy writers wrote not by the motion of the Church, but by the instinct of the holy spirite: and therefore did wryte nat as members of the Churche, but as the interpreters of God, and ministers of the spirite. Otherwise the Canonical writers were not onely members of the Churche, but the rest of the writers also, as Chrysostome, Basile, Athanasius, Nazianzene, Hierome, Ambrose, Augustine, &c. whose writings for all that, haue not gotten the authoritie to be as the Canonicall.

But they will say, that the holy scripture is not authenticall, bycause that they whiche wrote it, be members of the chyrche: but bycause the churche gaue it the authoritie of the Canon, & not to the rest of the scriptures. I answere: This is true, if they meane of the baser authoritie, whiche the holy scripture hath with the ruder sorte and vnerercised, for that the Churche taketh it for authenticall and canonicall, and dothe not take other wrytings so, bycause they be not allowed into the cannon by the Churche. But this kinde of authoritie is not of so greate stay, that it can make the consciences of the faythfull apeased and carelesse in the conflict of fayth. Wherfore there is a greater authoritie to be considered in holy scriptures, ỳ same which they take from God the author of them, of whiche wee made mention before. For we may not gather herevpō, that the authoritie of the church is greater than the authority of the holy scripture, bycause that there be many founde which do take the holy scriptures for authentical as moued by the authoritie of the churche. In deede to them the church seemeth better than the holy scripture: but they be far otherwise of themselues. Else Moses should by the same reason be of greater authoritie than Christe, bicause that many beleeued in Christ moued by the authoritie of the scripture of Moses, accordyng vnto the saying of Christe: If you would beleeue Moses, yee woulde beleeue mee also: as the Thessalonias did, which searchyng the holy scriptures, were by theyr authoritie brought vnto the fayth of Christe. We read in John this: And of that citie, many of the Samaritans beleeued in Christ, vpō the worde of the woman, which bare witnesse, and sayd: For he tolde me all things that I haue done. Accordyng vnto this argument, the authoritie of the sinfull woman was more than of Christe. And so it was in deede at the firste of more reputation with the people of the citie, to whom Christe was yet vnknowen. But of it selfe it was not so, nor afterwards, when they hearyng the doctrine of saluation of Christe himselfe, they sayd vnto the woman: Now we do not not beleeue, bycause of thy wordes, for we haue heard and knowen, that this is verily the sauiour of ỳ world. In Peter we do reade in this wyse: Likewise yee women also be subiect vnto your husbandes, that they also which do not beleeue the worde, may be won without the worde, through the conuersation of the woman, &c. Ergo, where as the vnfaythfull husbande is stirred vnto the fayth of Christe by the regard of the conuersation of his wife, whiche he seeth is honest, chaste, faithfull and obedient, where as he coulde not be moued by the preachyng of the gospell, may we gather that the conuersation of the woman is better than the gospell? In deede so it appeareth, but it is to him whiche is still vnfaythfull, not vnto him whiche doth acknowledge the truth of the Gospell and the authoritie of God. In likewise wee muste say also to byde vpon, of the church. It had in deede in times past great estimation of holy conuersatiō, whereby many were brought vnto the fayth of Christ, which otherwise shoulde neuer haue bene throughly moued, by the holy Scriptures and preachyng of the gospell. No doubte the authoritie of the church did them good. But yet it was not of it selfe better than the truthe of the gospell, but did serue to the authoritie therefore for a tyme.

August. Surely I would not beleeue the Gospel. &c.

Herby we may easily iudge what we ought to thynke of that whiche Augustine sayth, writing against the Epistle of Fundamentus, saying: But I would not beleeue the gospel, vnlesse that the authoritie of the catholike church did moue me. Which saying of the holy man, eyther they that do not vnderstande this saying of Augustine, eyther do maliciously dissemble and peruerte it, do vse against the authoritie of the Gospell. He dothe argue agaynst the Manichees in this wise: You know that I haue determined not to beleeue that you do speake vnadiuisedly. Therfore I aske thē who is that Manicheus? Thou answerest: The Apostle of Christe. I do not beleeue it. Nowe thou canst not tell what to say, or what to do. For thou didst prayse the knowledge of the truth, and wouldst driue me to beleeue that whiche I know not, peraduenture thou wilt reade the gospell vnto me, and wilt go about to proue the person of Manichee vpō that. Then if thou shouldst finde any man whiche dothe not yet beleue the gospel, what wouldst thou do to him if he say: I do not beleeue? When he had obiected those things to the Manichees boastyng and crakyng of the declaration of the truth, for an exāple he doth say of himselfe, of what dispositiō he was, not at that tyme when he wrote these things, but a good whiles past, before he left the heresie of the Manichees, & came to the true fayth of the gospell: that is, that he would not beleeue any body alleagyng testimony out of the Gospell. So he sayth consequently: Surely I woulde not beleeue the gospell, vnlesse the authoritie of the catholike church did moue me. Which is as much to him, as if he had sayde, Surely I was once such a one, whe I departed frō you Manichees, that I woulde not haue beleeued the gospell, Augustines argument.

I wvculde not beleue, for I vvold not haue had beleued.

spel, vnlesse the authoritie of the Catholike church had moued me. And that he liued a certayne time among the Manichées, before he was cõuerted by S. Ambrose bishop of Millane, to the catholike faith, it appeareth in many places by his owne wordes. And in this same place, disputing against ỳ Manichées, he saith this: Let vs sée therfore what Manichée doth teach me: and let vs consider that booke principally which you do call, the Epistle of Fundamentus, wherein is conteyned almoste the whole that you do beléeue. For whẽ the same was read vnto vs wretched men in that time, we did knéele downe and sayd, Amen. And againe. As though I desired to learne that of you now, whiche I coulde not do in nine yéeres. So that he was a Manichée nine yéeres. And that hée hath this kind of phrase peculiar vnto him (that he is wonte to say, I woulde not beléeue, for I would not haue had beléeued: and did moue me, for, had moued me) it is well knowẽ to him that doth diligently read hys writings. In hys booke of Confessions speaking of a theft that he had done when he was a boye, hée sayth thus: For I then loued the Apples whiche I stole, and did couet to enioy them, I mighte haue committed the wickednesse alone, if that had bene inough to come to my pleasure, and I should not kindle the itch of concupiscence, with the styrring of other mẽs mindes that were prie vnto it. For alinuch as my pleasure was not in the Apples, it consisted in the vnthriftinesse, whiche the company of them that offended with me, made. Where we do sée, that all the sentẽce is spoken in this kinde of phrase ỳ he vseth, Did loue, for Had loued, and coueted, for had coueted, & so forth. For the meanyng is: If I had loued the Apples which I stole, & had coueted to inioy them, I mighte alone, if that had bene inough, haue had cõmitted that wickednes, wherby I mighte haue come to my pleasure, & not haue had kindled the itche of my cõcupiscence with the stirring of other mens mindes, made prone to the same, &c. A man may finde this kynde of speaking often in his wrytings, specially when he doth tel any thyng of matters past, as he dothe in this place when he maketh mention what maner of man he was in time past, before he came to the catholicke fayth: that is, suche a one, as that he would not haue had beléeued the gospel, vnlesse he had séene in the catholicke church whereby he might haue bene moued to beléeue the Gospell. Wherefore it is altogither wyde frõ his minde, if you doe referre these wordes: I would not haue beléeued the Gospell, vnlesse the authority of the catholike church had moued me, not vnto those tymes when he was yet a Manichée, but vnto those times when he wrote this against the Manichées: at whiche tyme now he beléeued the Gospell, not bicause of the Churche, but bycause of the heauenly and infallible truth of God which he knew to be in it. Let the place be loked vpon, and it shal appeare to be true that wée do say. Therefore they may be ashamed at theyr vnatuisednesse, that do obiect this place against vs to derogate the authority of the Gospell, and to plucke it into the compasse of the authority of the church

Capit. 5.

Capit. 10.

Augustine was a Manichee nine yeeres.

Lib. 2. cap. 8.

church of Rome, as though the holy man had bene so minded all his lyfe dayes, that he did not beléeue the gospell, but so far forth as he was moued by the authority of the church to the fayth of the Gospel: & that the example of him should be set forth vnto al faithful men, & that it should be so taught in the church that al mẽ should more depende of the authority of the churche, thã vpõ the authoritie of the gospel of God. But I would to God that the countenance, authority and estimation of the churche of Christe were such now adays, that in respect of it, there might be moued to beleue the Gospel not one or two of the vnfaithful, but al that natiõs of Iewes, Turkes, &c. as many as do mislike the faith of Christ, & are rather driuen away from the gospell as offended with our vniuersall corruption, thã inuited vnto it. What do I say? Would to God that euen they themselues whiche do abuse these wordes of Augustine, were not so farre wide frõ ỳ spirite of ỳ true former church, that they were not only by their corruptiõ a slaũder to the gospel of god, but that by their peruersnesse they do also persecute with fire & sworde thẽ that do beleue the gospell. The true, catholike and apostolike churche of Christ, would haue the authoritie of the canonicall scripture allwayes saued & much estéemed. What manner of church is that now adayes, which doth make so light of it, as though it were become foolishe through age, & after so excellent and great matters brought to passe and auaũced, as vnable to do any more, it ought to bée tumbled out of the seate of his olde authoritie, and the subtill sinenesse and maiestie of mans teachyng to be set in the place of it. If it be truly Apostolyke, how is it so far wyde from the olde spirite? If it be not, whose is it then, seyng it cannot bée Christes?

But to return to our purpose, they say, that the authoritie of the church is greater than the authoritie of the holy Scripture. We do hold the contrary, that the authoritie of the holy Scripture is greater, than the authoritie of the Church. And we will argue the same way that they do, for that the holy Scripture gaue credite and authority to the Churche. For firste we do reade, as I made mentiõ alsbefore, that the Iewes of Thessalonica came to the fayth & churche of Christe, moued by the authoritie of the holy Scripture. Agayne, Apollo dyd stoutely ouercome the Iewes by the authoritie of the holy Scripture, and dyd mayntayne the faith of the churche of Christ. Without doubte, Peter and Paule did the very same, and the reste of the Apostles. Seing therfore ỳ the fundation of Christes churche and of the newe Testament cõsisted not of the Gentils, but of Iewes, & that it is knowẽ that the Apostles did conuey the beléefe of their doctrine into the minds of the Iewes, not onely by myracles, but by ỳ authoritie of holy scripture also, and so moued the first beginnings of Israell vnto the church of Christe, who seeth not, that the holy Scripture dyd firste bring faith and authoritie vnto the Church, and not the Churche vnto the holy scripture? So Philip sayd vnto Nathanaell: We haue founde Iesus, whome Moses wrote of in the Lawe and

That the authoritie of the holy scripture is greater, thã that of the Church.

Act. 17.

Act. 18.

Iohn. 1.

Prophets.

Luc.24.

Prophetes. And Chriſte, interpreted the holy Scripture vnto his diſciples, and opened their ſenſe to vnderſtande them, no doubt to this intent, that they moued by the authoritie of them, might beleeue themſelues, and bring others to beleeue alſo. So Peter doth ſtrengthen his ſayings with Scripture. And Paule to purchaſe credite vnto his apoſtolike office, and to the Goſpell whiche he preached, ſayth ſtraightwayes at the beginning: Paul the ſeruãt of Ieſu Chriſt, called an Apoſtle, ſequeſtred to the goſpell of God, whiche he promiſed before by his Prophetes in the holy ſcriptures. If the ſame which giueth authoritie to any thing is better thã that to whome it is giuen, then ſurely this way alſo the holy ſcripture is aboue the church.

Act.2.

Rom.1.

If he heare not the Churche. And the churche is the piller of the truth. Matth.18. 1.Timoth.3.

They do alledge for the Churche the ſame of Matthew: If he do not heare the churche, let him be to thee as an Ethnicke. And: The Church of the lyuing God, is the piller and foundation of the truthe, and other like. If theſe things do giue authoritie vnto the churche, then it is the ſcripture that doth get an authority vnto the church, and not the churche vnto the ſcripture. Elſe if they do denie this, how ſhall they perſwade me to obey the church: in caſe I do ſay, I do not obey the churche, how will they proue that I do offende: They will alleage the wordes of Chriſte and of the Apoſtle, if they bring any thing. But from whence: Out of the Scriptures of the Euangeliſtes and the Apoſtles, and will ſay: Thus Chriſte ſayde, Thus the Apoſtles wrote. But if I ſay, I beleeue not theſe ſcriptures, being ſo taught by you, which do diminiſh the authority of the holy ſcripture, what will they do trowe ye then: They will pull me to the fire, whome they might haue inſtructed in the truthe of God by the authoritie of the holy Scripture. Wherefore they muſte in anywiſe leaue the authoritie of it ſafe & ſound, otherwiſe they cã do nothing els, but as Auguſtine ſaith, make the chriſtian fayth to ſtagger & wauer, whiche they do muche leſſe regarde thẽ that the leaſt peece of the Romiſh authoritie ſhoulde decay. Lette this therefore be the ſumme of our opiniõ in this matter. The holy Scripture hauing authoritie from God the author of it, as inſpired from God, hath made & doth make alſo nowe aduies fayth, credite, and authoritie to the doctrine, religion, and churche of the chriſtian men: and the church if it be truly of Chriſte, truely Catholicke & Apoſtolicke, it doth agayne ſerue to the authoritie of the holy ſcripture, not onely defending it in wordes and writings, but alſo inuiting and prouoking to beleeue day and night by the light of true godlyneſſe & iuſtice, thoſe whiche do not yet beleeue, according vnto the example of the former Churche.

Of the languages of the holy Scriptures.

ALL the holy ſcripture was cõprehended in two languages, Ebrew, and Greeke. In the Ebrew tongue were writtẽ the .xxiiij. bookes of the olde Teſtament. They of the New teſtament were written in the Greeke, ſauing that it is affirmed of the goſpel of Matthew, and the Epiſtle to the Ebrewes, that becauſe of the people of Iſraell whiche was diſperſed in other nations, they were written in the Ebrew tongue. Sophronius witneſſeth of the goſpell of Matthew that it was diligẽtly kept written in Ebrew in the library of Pamphilus the martyr in Ceſarea, and that hee had leaue giuen hym of the Nazarites of Berrohe in Siria, to wryte it out. The Gloſer of the Canon lawe, ſaythe, that the Epiſtle to the Romaynes was wrytten in Latine by the Apoſtle, but hee bringeth no proofe of it. Peraduenture he thought that the Greeke tongue was not vſed at Rome in thoſe dayes.

There be manifeſt cauſes why the ſcripture of the olde Teſtament was wryten in the Ebrew tongue. For firſt, that was the language of Gods people, vnto whome the holy ſcripture did chiefly belõg: they were appoynted for Iſraell, whiche ſpake Ebrew, wherefore the holy men did write in the Ebrew, to good purpoſe that Iſrael might vnderſtand the holy ſcripture. Secondly the language was holy, partly for the auncienty of the beginnyng of it brought by the generation of the fathers euen from Adam, partely bycauſe the oracles of Gods mouth whiche was ſpoken in that language to the fathers. Wherefore it was not conuenient, that the holy wrytings ſhoulde be diſcrepant from the holy oracles made to the ſame people, and alſo from the ſame language whiche the people ſpake, to whom they were appoynted. For to what purpoſe ſhould the holy ſpirite be of two tongues in the church of one ſelfe ſame people, to ſpeake in one language, and write in another? Therefore Moſes did well to wryte not in the Egyptians tongue, but in the Ebrew, although he could good ſkill of the language of Egypt, as bredde and brought vp in Pharaos courte. He did godly and profitably conſecrate the firſt fruites of the holy ſcriptures vnto the holy lãguage, whiche they might vſe that ſhoulde afterwardes wryte by the inſtinct of the holy ſpirit amongſt the people of God, and to regarde that their wrytings ſhould not differ frõ the beginning of the holy ſcripture: but ſhould as well agree with it in the vnitie of ſpirite and language alſo, as an vpper buildyng dothe with the foundation that is layde before. When we do cõſider theſe things, we do quickly vnderſtande why this language is called holy: truely not onely for the matter of thoſe things whiche be written in it, but alſo for the firſte antiquitie of the beginning, for the church of God, vnto whiche it was proper vntill the tyme of Chriſte, for the oracles of Gods mouthe, for the holy Patriarches, Prophetes, and Chriſt himſelfe, which vſed this language: Finally for the holy wrytings which were ſpoke in the ſame by the counſell and inſtinct of the holy ſpirite. What ſoeuer become of the Ebrewe letters nowe vſed, whether they were the old which Moſes and the wryters that folowed hym vſed or no: or elſe as ſome ſuppoſe, the old beyng loſt, that theſe were ſet in their place by Eſdras: of this matter I wil ſtriue with no mã, yet this is certaine, that the holy language it ſelf was not chaunged, though they which were ſubiect vnto ỹ captiuitie

VVhy the Ebrevv tongue is called holy of Babylō for ỳ space of Lxx. yeres, gat ỳ time in Babylō some Chaldey wordes, and some varietie of speach. And therefore it is, ỳ the writings of Daniell do differ, (bicause of ỳ Chaldey phrase) somewhat frō the puritie of the Ebrew lāguage, which did nothing hurt the people, being an easie matter for them to vnderstande him wel ỳ spake Chaldey, both for the cōpany of them, and also for the affinitie, and neerenesse of the language.

Daniell.

VVhy the new testament was vvritten in the Greeke tongue.

But whereas none of the writers of the new Testament, Euangelistes and Apostles wrote in the Ebrew, sauing Matthew, and the author of the Epistle to the Ebrewes, but in Greeke, that was not done neyther without cause. The holy spirite did attemper himselfe vnto the course and dilatement of the kingdome of Christe, whiche was to be spread abroad not only in Israel, for thē they needed not to haue written but in Ebrew, but vnto all natiōs of ỳ whole worlde. Wherevpon the Lorde commaunded also the Apostles to preach the gospell of the kyngdome of God in all the worlde. Wherefore hee woulde that the Scriptures of the new Testament should be extant in that language, whiche was in that ages moste common, and spreade abroade vnto the knowledge and vse of moste nations, and that was the Greeke, whiche at that tyme, by the reason of the empire of the Greekes, whiche was before the Romaynes, came almost vnto all natiōs: Wherof I may alleage also for me the testimony of Cicero, who in his Oracion for Licinius Archias the poet, saith thus: For if any body do think, that there is take lesse fruit of glory of Greeke verses than of Latine, he is much deceyued: bicause these matters whiche be written in Greeke, be read almoste in all nations, but Latine matters be contayned within their bounds, and they be surely very narow. This is Cicero.

The greeke tōgue vvas more famous than the Latine.

Therefore the doctrine of the new Testamēt could not haue bene written in a more conuenient language to be farre spreade abroade in the worlde, than in the Greeke. For this cause the Apostle wrote also to the Romaynes not in Latine, but in Greeke. For he did not set forth the Epistle for thē alone, but vnto other nations also. And albeit he was in warde at Rome when he wrote to ỳ churches of Galatia, Ephesis, Philippi, Colossis, Thessalonica (namely the seconde epistle) & to Timothe the last, & that to Philemon, yet he wrote not in the Romains language, but in Greeke, partely bycause of them to whome he wrote, and partely besides that those things which he wrote of, might be the farther spred abroade.

For these causes the writers of the old Testament wrote in Ebrew, and the wryters of the Newe in Greeke. Wherfore it was requisite of it selfe in the churches of Christe, that these tongues shoulde florishe at the least way in the Scholes of the faythfull for the better vnderstandyng of holy Scriptures, that the certaintie of the olde writers might be examined by the Ebrew bokes, & ỳ the truth of ỳ New might consist in the rule of the Greeke tongue, as it is redde also in the Canon lawe. And it was ordayned in the Councell of Vienna vnder Clementine the fifte, that there shold be had in certayne chosen Schooles, professors of the Ebrewe, Chaldee, and Greeke tongue. But that matter was so muche neglected vntill our tymes, that it was a miracle to finde any man that coulde know as much as the bare letters of these tongues. Wherefore there is no cause why any wise man shoulde wonder, from whence this grosse darkenesse and so contrary and strange exposicions to the holy Scripture creepte into the churches. What Augustine lackt in the exposition of the holy scriptures, learned mē do know well inough. He shoulde haue bene able to haue done muche more, if he had vnderstanded at the least so much in the Ebrew, as he did in the Greeke tongue. For it cannot be but he muste lacke a great light in the expoundyng of holy scriptures, who soeuer wadeth in thē wout the knowledge of holy lāguages. For albeit a man be learned in the Greeke, yet he can not wade through without the knowledge of ỳ Ebrew tōgue, no not in the New testament, much lesse the old, specially when the trāslatiō of the Seuēty interpreters, as Jerome witnesseth, beyng so corrupt for the Ebrew phrases mingled in euery place, whiche holy wryters did not forbeare for the familiaritie that they had of the Ebrew tongue.

I know that Augustine did attribute much vnto the variety of translatiōs, for he saith this: They which did translate the scriptures out of the Ebrew tongue into the Greeke, may be reckned, but the Latine interpreters can not by no wise. For as sone as the Greeke boke came into a mās hands in the first times of our faith, if he thought himself able to do any thing in both the tongues (that is the Greeke and the Latine) he durste aduenture to interpret it. Which thing did more help the vnderstanding thā hinder it, if the readers were not negligent. For the very lokyng vpon diuers bokes, did oftentimes open many harde sentences. Thus saith he. But I beseeche you, howe can it certainely appeare where is the true sense of them, whiche many interpreters goeth aboute to expresse, euery one accordyng vnto his own abilitie, vnlesse the same tongue be sought (to vse Augustines own wordes) which they do interprete? For this cause in the same boke he doth infer thus: Therefore eyther wee muste seeke the knowledge of these tongues, out of which the scripture came into the Latine, either we muste haue the interpretations of them which bounde theselues exceedingly to the wordes, not bicause they do suffise, but that by them either the libertie, either the errour of others may be reformed, which would folow not so much the wordes as the sentences, in their interpretations. Thus saith he there. But although you haue the translation set forth word for word, as that is of Pagninus: yet you shall be driuen in all things to depende vpon an other mans iudgement, nor you shal not be able to iudge of the varietie of the translations, why an other mā translated it an other wayes, if you be vtterly destitute of the knowledge of the holy tongues. Whiche thing I do iudge to be very miserable in hym that hath the charge to teache, as to expounde the holy Scriptures accordyng to the dutie of any function layde vpon hym: but in hym that will attempte to do it of himselfe. I of Babylō for ỳ space of lxx. yéres, gat ỳ time in Babylō some Chaldey wordes, and some varietie of speach. And therefore it is, ỳ the writings of Daniell do differ, (bicause of ỳ Chaldey phrase) somewhat frō the puritie of the Ebrew lāguage, which did nothing hurt the people, being an easie matter for them to vnderstande him wel ỳ spake Chaldey, both for the cōpany of them, and also for the affinitie, and nereneſſe of the language.

Capite. 13.

Daniell.

VVhy the new testament vvas vvritten in the Greeke tongue.

But whereas none of the writers of the new Testament, Euangelists and Apostles wrote in the Ebrew, sauing Matthew, and the author of the Epistle to the Ebrewes, but in Greéke, that was not done neyther without cause. The holy spirite did attemper himselfe vnto the course and dilatement of the kingdome of Christe, whiche was to be spread abroad not only in Israel, for thē they néded not to haue written but in Ebrew, but vnto all natiōs of ỳ whole worlde. Wherevpon the Lorde commaunded also the Apostles to preach the gospell of the kyngdome of God in all the worlde. Wherefore hée woulde that the Scriptures of the new Testament should be extant in that language, whiche was in that ages moste common, and spreade abroade vnto the knowledge and vse of moste nations, and that was the Greéke, whiche at that tyme, by the reason of the empire of the Greékes, whiche was before the Romaynes, came almoste vnto all natiōs: Wherof I may alleage also for me the testimony of Cicero, who in his Oration for Licinius Archias the poet, saith thus: For if any body do think, that there is take lesse fruit of glory of Greéke verses than of Latine, he is much deceyued: bicause these matters whiche be written in Greéke, be read almoste in all nations, but Latine matters be contayned within their boundes, and they be surely very narow. This is Cicero.

The greéke tōgue vvas more famous than the Latine.

Therefore the doctrine of the new Testamēt could not haue bene written in a more conuenient language to be farre spreade abroade in the worlde, than in the Greéke. For this cause the Apostle wrote also to the Romaynes not in Latine, but in Greéke. For he did not set forth the Epistle for thē alone, but vnto other nations also. And albeit he was in warde at Rome when he wrote to ỳ churches of Galatia, Ephesis, Philippi, Colossis, Thessalonica (namely the seconde epistle) & to Timothe the last, & that to Philemon, yet he wrote not in the Romains language, but in Greéke, partely bycause of them to whome he wrote, and partely besides that those things which he wrote of, might be the farther spred abroade.

For these causes the writers of the old Testament wrote in Ebrew, and the wryters of the Newe in Greéke. Wherfore it was requisite of it selfe in the churches of Christe, that these tongues shoulde florishe at the least way in the Scholes of the faythfull for the better vnderstandyng of holy Scriptures, that the certaintie of the olde writers might be examined by the Ebrew bokes, & ỳ truth of ỳ New might consist in the rule of the Greéke tongue, as it is redde also in the Canon lawe. And it was ordayned in the Councell of Vienna vnder Clementine the fifte, that there shold be had in certayne chosen Scholes, professors of the Ebrewe, Chaldee, and Greéke tongue. But that matter was so muche neglected vntill our tymes, that it was a miracle to finde any man that coulde know as much as the bare letters of these tongues. Wherefore there is no cause why any wise man shoulde wonder, from whence this grosse darkneſſe and so contrary and strange exposition to the holy Scripture crepte into the churches. What Augustine lackt in the exposition of the holy scriptures, learned mē do know well inough. He shoulde haue bene able to haue done muche more, if he had vnderstanded at the least so much in the Ebrew, as he did in the Greéke tongue. For it cannot be but he muste lacke a great light in the expoundyng of holy scriptures, who soeuer wadeth in thē wout the knowledge of holy lāguages. For albeit a man be learned in the Greéke, yet he can not wade through without the knowledge of ỳ Ebrew tōgue, no not in the New testament, much lesse the old, specially when the trāslatiō of the Seuēty interpreters, as Jerome witnesseth, beyng so corrupt for the Ebrew phrases mingled in euery place, whiche holy wryters did not forbeare for the familiaritie that they had of the Ebrew tongue.

I know that Augustine did attribute much vnto the variety of translatiōs, for he saith this: They which did translate the scriptures out of the Ebrew tongue into the Greéke, may be reckned, but the Latine interpreters can not by no wise. For as sone as the Greéke boke came into a mās hands in the firſt times of our faith, if he thought himself able to do any thing in both the tongues (that is the Greéke and the Latine) he durſte aduenture to interpret it. Which thing did more help the vnderstanding thā hinder it, if the readers were not negligent. For the very lokyng vpon diuers bokes, did oftentimes open many harde sentences. Thus saith he. But I beséche you, howe can it certainely appeare where is the true sense of them, whiche many interpreters goeth about to expresse, euery one according vnto his own abilitie, vnleſſe the same tongue be sought (to vse Augustines own wordes) which they do interprete? For this cause in the same boke he doth infer thus: Therefore eyther wée muste séeke the knowledge of these tongues, out of which the scripture came into the Latine, either we muste haue the interpretations of them which bounde thēselues ercédingly to the wordes, not bicause they do suffise, but that by them either the libertie, either the errour of others may be reformed, which would folow not so much the wordes as the sentences, in their interpretations. Thus saith he there. But although you haue the translation set forth word for word, as that is of Pagninus: yet you shall be driuen in all things to depende vpon an other mans iudgement, nor you shal not be able to iudge of the varietie of the translations, why an other mā translated it an other wayes, if you be vtterly destitute of the knowledge of the holy tongues. Whiche thing I do iudge to be very miserable in hym that hath the charge to teache, as to expounde the holy Scriptures according to the dutie of any function layde vppon hym: but in hym that will attempte to do it of himselfe. I iudge it to be a thing very vnaduisedly and rashly handled.

Capite. 13.

Yong men ought to be pricked forth to learne the holy tongs.

Wherefore yong men studious of holy scriptures ar to be admonished, that they do in no wise neglect the gifte of God graunted in these our tymes, but to embrace it with a deuoute diligence to learne, that is to say, that they will ioyne vnto theyr studies the knowledge of the holy tongues, the Ebrew and the Greeke, not as a thing of pleasure that might be lefte off, but to lay it for a foundation in the very bottome of theyr hartes. It muste bee esteemed no lighte faulte in a godly man, to contemne the possibilitie of Gods giftes offered vnto hym, & to make nothing of that whiche is gyuen of a greate fauour, not only to the priuate vses, but to the common vses also of the churche of God, specially if this bee done by them, whiche be fedde by the stipendes of the churche to the ministeries of the worde, in those places where the giftes of the grace of God be so open and so ready, that menne do loathe them when they be layde before them. This charge dothe lye specially in the truste of them whiche be Presidentes of the Vniuersities where the gospel is taught, that they do earnestly sette forth the studies of the holy tongues among yong men. Vnlesse this be done, I knowe it to be moste sure, that it wil shortly come to passe, that when a fewe learned men be gone out of the way, the olde darkenesse of errours, yea and grosser also, will reygne in the churches than euer were. So God will punish the vnthãkfulnesse of these present times, and the contempt of his giftes. For it is moste right, that they which refuse the blessyng of ỹ knowledge of God, shoulde haue it taken far from them, and be ouerwhelmed to the vttermoste with the course of errours and ignorance.

Of the readyng of holy Scriptures.

FOr almuch as these things that be written cannot profit, vnlesse they be redde, let vs consequently see of the readyng of holy Scriptures. And that is of two sortes. One is publike, the other is priuate. It is publike, when holy scriptures be openly redde in the cõgregation of the faithfull, to the hearyng of all men. This was done by the publicke readers. They were ordayned in the sight of the people, as it is read in the fourth councell of Carthage in this wyse: When a reader is ordayned, let the bishop make reporte of him vnto the people, denoũcing his faith, life, & disposition. After that, let him deliuer him a boke in the sight of the people to read vpõ, saying vnto him: Take, & be a reader of Gods worde, and if thou doest faythfully and profitably accõplish thine office, thou shalt haue parte with thẽ which haue ministred the worde of God. This is there. In this wyse also Iulian the Emperour and Apostata, was ordayned a reader in the Church of Nicomedia. Of this publicke and ecclesiasticall readyng, Socrates noteth this: It Alexandria, vpon the day, which is called Gwdfriday, the Scriptures be read, and the Doctors do expõne thẽ, & all things be done belongyng vnto the holy cõmunion, sauing the ceremonye of the misteries. And of this reading the Apostle speaketh when he sayth: Apply thy readyng, exhortation and doctrine till I come: by whiche wordes he doth meane, that ecclesiastical order, whan firste some peece of the scripture was read: & after that an exhortation and doctrine was ioyned vnto it. This vse of ecclesiasticall readyng, flourished sometimes in al churches, not only of the New, but also of the old Testament. Iosephus writing against Appion of the custome of the Israelites, sayth thus: Euery weeke all people come togither to heare the law. Eache of vs demaunded of the lawes, can easlier recite them than tell his owne name. For we haue them all written in our mindes, euen strayght frõ our first perseuerãce. And that which we reade in Luke of Christ our sauiour, that he wente into the Sinagoge of Nazareth vpon the sabath day, & rose vp to read: & did read ỹ out of the prophete Esay, whose boke was deliuered vnto him: The spirite of the Lord vpon me, &c. doth sufficiently declare, that Israell vsed this publicke reading vpon the Sabbath dayes. And herewithal that place agreeth of the Actes, where it is mentioned, that from old times the writyngs of Moses were redde euery sabbath in all Cities. Of the churches of the new Testament the Canons do witnesse, whiche were ordeyned for the making of readers, and it was a cõmon song emong them, The lesson whiche you haue heard, moste deerely beloued brethern. But of this moste holy and auncient vse of the ecclesiastical reading, there is nothing else lefte in the Popery, but ỹ very slẽderlesse name, the thing it selfe beyng vtterly out of vse. And in the reformed churches there be but few that do thinke vpon it, so far of it is, to be restored. There hath neuer bene hitherto vntill our times in the Popery so great a commoditie to reade the holy scriptures openly to the hearyng of the people, as there is now offered by the grace of God, when the holy Bybles are so readily had in the vulgare tõgue, not onely in Englande, and Scotland, but in Almayne, Italy, Fraũce, yea and if I bee not deceyued, in Spayne and Hungarie also, so that they may be redde openly and distinctly before the people of GOD, if the Pastors do faithfully serue Christe and his Churche.

The profit of publicke readyng.

And it is harde to say, howe great the profite of this reading might be, in case the vse of it were restored vnto the Churches.

1 Firste, it shoulde do good herein, that the puritie of publicke doctrine should be kepte vndefiled. For the teachers should bee kepte in some order, and restrayned, that they shoulde not so easily in theyr teachyng bring in that that is contrary vnto the holy scripture. For this readyng of it shoulde be publicke and often in the eares of the people, euen like a candel wherby the darkenesse of errours & straũge opinions should be reproued. So the Churche should not be easily deceyued with false doctrines, if it were accustomed vnto the wordes & sentences of scripture. And it should seeme a matter not to be borne, if the wordes of the teacher shoulde differ from these things whiche be redde out of the holy scriptures. But whẽ this lighte of holy Scriptures was taken out of the Churche, what else could folow thereof but moste thicke blindneſſe, mother of all errours, although the churches dit blaze of neuer ſo many burnyng tapers. O craftie and ſubtiltie of Satan. He filled the churche with earthly ſhynyng of Golde, Siluer and Candels: whereby ther could be no repꝛofe oꝛ triall of falſe doctrine & ſeruices, & in the meane ſeaſon it toke quite away the light of Gods woꝛde, whiche the reading of the holy ſcriptures yelded to the eyes of ỹ people, that it might be eaſier foꝛ coꝛrupt and adulterous teachers to ſpꝛead abꝛode all kind of errours in the church. He had his deſire when the paſtours of the church that were willyng to fede thẽſelues and not the flocke of the Lorde, applied theyꝛ mind to idleneſſe, to the belly, gaine, and pꝛyde.

2 Secondly, that the publicke leſſon of holy ſcripture ſhould ſerue foꝛ thoſe men whiche can not reade: foꝛ aged perſons alſo, chyldꝛen and women: laſtely foꝛ them which though they can reade, yet they haue not the holy Scriptures at home. It ſtandeth not with his counſell and ſpirite to contemne all thoſe perſons, whiche maketh his pꝛayſe out of the mouthes of babes and ſuckelings, and whiche reuealeth vnto chyldꝛen thoſe things that he doth hide from the pꝛudent and wyſe, and calleth the foliſhe and weake things of this woꝛlde, to confounde the wiſe and ſtrong things.

3 Thirdly, it ſhould do god to this alſo, that the holy pꝛeachings ſhould be the better pꝛercpued in the hartes of the hearers, thoꝛough the cuſtome and dayly exercyſe of the woꝛdes and ſentences of the Scripture. I beſeech you if a boy ſhoulde be taught in the arte of Grammer, vnto whome the very woꝛdes of the arte were vtterly vnknowen & neuer heard of, could there be any hope that he ſhoulde haue the vnderſtandyng of the rules and exãples of it? No ſurely. Wherfoꝛe the very caſe it ſelfe requyꝛeth, that the chyldꝛen muſte firſte learne and beare away the woꝛdes, that they may the eaſilier afterwardes gette the vnderſtandyng of it. The caſe is lyke to the vnderſtandyng of pꝛeachings. If the hearer be ignorãt of holy ſcriptures, that he vnderſtandeth not ſmuch as the woꝛdes, I beſeeche you how can he vnderſtãd him that teacheth? But if he haue gotten the knowledge of the woꝛdes of the holy Scripture by readyng in ỹ Churche oꝛ at home, he may eaſily attaine to the expoſition and doctrine of them.

4 Laſtly, let godly men way this, whether it bee not poſſible, that a rude hearer going out of the congregation of the Churche, may carie away moꝛe with hym in his minde vpon the onely readyng of the holy Scripture, than from a whole Sermon, ſpecially of ſuche a Doctoꝛ, as goeth about moꝛe to ſhewe his learnyng and eloquence, than after a playne ſoꝛte to inſtruct the rude hearer in the knowledge of God, and ſtudie of godlineſſe.

The pꝛiuate readyng of holy ſcripture is, when it is redde out of the congregation of the church. This is done thꝛee manner of wayes. Firſte in the Colleges oꝛ felowſhips, of the whiche in olde time were wonte to be bꝛought vp togither vnto Eccleſiaſticall mynikters. Their chiefe exercyſe was in the readyng of ſcriptures. A certaine ſhadow of it ſtucke ſtill in the Monaſteries, in whiche there was wonte to be a readyng at the table, ſauyng that ther was mingled amõgſt them either Apocriphal, eyther ſuperſtitious wꝛytings, at the appoyntment of the ſuperiours: and there was not ioyned vnto it any good interpꝛetation of the ſcripture that was redde, which was ioyned vpõ the readyng in the old times of the Fathers by the beſte learned and eldeſt. Suche as Baſilius Magnus, and Auguſtine, & Oꝛigen were.

Secõdly, it was vſed alſo in faithfull mennes houſes in this ſoꝛte, that eyther before eyther after that the table was vncouered, the good man of the houſe, oꝛ elſe ſome boy, oꝛ in caſe there be none elſe in the houſe that can reade, the good wyfe oꝛ the doughter do reade ſome peece of ſcripture, and all the reſte harken vnto it, and ſo continuyng theyꝛ reading, accoꝛdyng as the bookes doe ſtande in oꝛder, they do runne ouer all the Scriptures, euen to the ende. By this meanes of readyng, the godly lyfe within doꝛes at home may bee much holpen, if the feare of the Lord be ioyned withall. Herewithall the firſte perſeuerance of youth may be ſo imbꝛued, that accoꝛding vnto that ſaying, That whiche is learned in youth, will not away in age all the lyfe folowyng, vntil theyꝛ dying day, may be the better inſtructed with the feare and loue of God. And this readyng at the Table may do this good alſo, that if it be done before meate, it may mynikter matter and occaſion to talke and conferre vpon ſome points of fayth and godlineſſe, whyles they be eating, and ſo to ſhut of all folilh and vayne talkes which are wont otherwiſe craftily to cꝛepe vp vnto the tables.

Thirdly, this reading is vſed at the libertie of godly men a parte, eyther at houres certaine, eyther when they may get a commodious time to reade. By this reading the minde of the reader is onely edified, in aſmuch as he doth reade onely vnto himſelf. But if he do reade it to this purpoſe, to communicate his readyng vnto others, as the mynikers of the woꝛde do, then the meanyng of the Apoſtle is fulfilled, ſaying: This doyng, thou ſhalte ſaue thy ſelfe, and them that doe heare thee. 1. Timoth. 4.

But foꝛ aſmuche a Satan that Pꝛince of darkeneſſe, whiche ſetteleth his kingdome onely in the darkneſſe of mens mindes, can not abyde the light of the truthe ſhyning vp agayne in the church of God thꝛough hys woꝛd, like as heretofoꝛe he toke out of the churche by his Champions and falſe Apoſtles as wel the publyke as pꝛyuate readyng of holy Scriptures, ſo beyng very angry in our tyme, that the holy Bible beyng tranſlated into the vulgare tongues, are ſette foꝛth in euery mans hands, hee dothe ſeeke and ſue moſte earneſtly by his mynikers and wiſe menne, the Inchantours of Pꝛinces and Kings, that the Lay menne (as they dꝛ call Gods people) may not bee ſuffered to reade the holy Scriptures. Some of theſe dꝛ foꝛ a colour pꝛetende, that the Byble is tranſlated by heretikes, and that theꝛfoꝛe ſhee is coꝛrupted. To them we dꝛ anſwere: If they do meane ſo in dēde, that they woulde not haue the people reade the Scriptures that bée corrupted (to graunt them that their pretence is true) then lette them according vnto theyr dutie sée that the Byble may bée had in euery place, translated by them, whome they shall iudge most catholicke. And then let them tell vs some cause, why they haue kepte away the readyng of the holy Scriptures from the Churche of the faythfull so many hundred yéeres. And after that, lette them informe vs also, in what places, and to what daunger the trãslations of our times be corrupted.

Againſt thẽ vvhiche do crie that the holy Scripture is not to be redde of the Lay men.

Others vnderstãding well inough how little it shalbe for theyr profite, if the faythfull people shoulde frely reade holy Scriptures, they do pretende an other thyng and crie out, that Laye menne ought in no wyse at all reade the holy Scriptures, but that the readyng of them dothe belong vnto the Doctours of the Church, to Monkes, Friers and Curates, to the Byshops and Prelates: and they do gyue a reason, why, that the reading of the Bible doth brēde Heretikes, if Laye menne be suffered to read it as they lust. Touching the publicke and Ecclesiasticall readyng of holy Scriptures, it is true, it is not to be presumed vpon, and to bée admynistred in the Churche at euery mans libertie, but there must bée godly and fitte menne appoynted to that office. But as concernyng the pryuate readyng at home, none of the Apostles, nor of them that folowed the Apostles, no none of the olde Doctours was of that minde, that it is not lawful for faithfull people to reade holy Scriptures at home at theyr house. Chrysostome did iudge the readyng to bée necessary for faithfull people, that he did also blame them in his open sermons whiche were of his Dioces, for the neglectyng of it. Whiche of you (sayth hée) I beséeche you, make me answere, whiche do stande here, can say me ought, one Psalme by harte if he be requyred so to do, or any péece of the holy Scriptures: And a little after: But at length (sayth hée) the excuse of these faultes is that thou wilte say: I am no Cloyster man, I haue wyfe and chyldren, and charge of householde, for this is the matter that thou do corrupte all things as it were with one poyson. For asmuch as you say, that the reading of holy Scriptures doth belong to Cloyster men onely, whereas it is muche more necessary for you than for them. For they that be conuersant in the middes of the fielde, and do dayly receyue wound vpō woūde, they haue more nēde of Gods medicine. So that it is more grēuous and worse to thinke, that the lawe of God is superfluous, than to be vtterly ignorant of it. For these be the wordes whiche be vttered euen by the deuice of the Diuell. Doest thou not heare Paule say, that all these thyngs be written for our informatiõ? Thus muche there. And vpon Genesis: Therefore I beséeche you (sayth he) that you repayre hyther now and then, & harken diligently to the reading of Gods Scripture, and not onely when you do come hither, but take also Gods booke into your handes at home, and receyue with great desire the profite sette forth in it. And a little after: Therefore (I pray you) let vs not lose by negligēce so great a gaine, but let vs apply the reading of holye Scriptures also at home. And vpon that saying of the Apostle: Let ỹ word of Christ dwell in you abundantly in all wisedome, he sayth this: Heare as many as bée worldly, and haue rule of wife and children, howe he dothe commaunde you also, specially to read scriptures, (Ergo the reading of holye scripture dothe pertayne vnto lay men, by the commaundemente of the Apostle) and that not simply, nor negligently, but with great diligence. And a little after he doth repeate it agayne, saying: Heare, I beséeche you al secular men: Bye you Bibles, the medicines of your soule. If you will haue nothing else, yet at the least get you the newe Testamente, the Apostle, the Actes, the Gospels, the continual and diligent teachers. And a little after: This is sure the cause of all euils (sayth he) that the scriptures bée not knowen, and the rest that he addeth there. Thus muche of Chrysostome. I beséeche you what shall we thynke that this holy man woulde saye vnto these wise men of our times, whiche to make al ỹ world shut vp in darkenesse and madde, do take awaye the scriptures from the people: and will in no wise graunt, that they be profitable for them, but doe imagine also that they be hurtfull, and do take thē away by force and burne them? So that we doe finde them of no gentler affection towardes the monumentes of the holy spirite and the healthe of the faithfull, than Diocletian that most cruell enimie of Christian men was, who commaunded by a publike decrée, that holy scriptures should be burned, as Eusebius witnesseth, for that he knew there was no spédyer way to extinguithe ỹ faith in Christ, than if the holye scriptures were not knowen.

Lib. 8. cap. 2.

But leaste that anye man giuyng small truste vnto Chrisostome beyng a Gréeke, and sticking faster to the Latine doctours, will not care for the testimonie of him onely, lette vs adde also a witnesse of his opinion out of the Latines, and that no basker, but him that is wont to be counted the chiefe amongst them: that is Hierome, who vppon the Epistle to the Colossians vpon that place: Let the word of Christ dwell in you, doth expounde it after the verye same spirite and sense, saying: Héere is declared that the lay men ought to haue also the worde of Christe, not sufficiently, but abundantly, and to teache or admonish one another: This saith he. So that he dothe not only admonish that it is lawfull for lay men to reade holy Scriptures, but he dothe witnesse that they ought to doe it, and that abundantly, that they may teache and admonithe one an other. Truely he was of Chrysostomes opinion, that this is a precepte of the Apostle, which ought to be neglected of no man, but must be beaten into mens heads by the Preachers, with earnest telling and charging of thē, specially by them which do exceedingly glorye of the Sée and Churche Apostolike. If any man list, let him also sée Beda vpon the firste Epistle of Peter, the second Chapter.

Hierome.

Coloss. 3.

And whereas they doe pretende, that the reading of Scriptures dothe brēde Heretikes, it is a slaunder, wherein they doe wickedlye defame

The reading of holy scriptures maketh not men heretikes.

eyther the holy scripture it selfe, eyther (if they do deme that) the faythfull people, that they be so giuen to hereses, ỳ they doe like spiders sucke the poyson of heresie euen out of the truth of holy Scriptures. They doe alleage this out of Peter: Like as our well beloued brother Paule, according to the wisedome giuen vnto him, wrote vnto you, speaking also of these things almost in all his Epistles, among which there be many things hard to vnderstand, which the vnlearned and vnstayed men doe wrest as they doe other Scriptures also, vnto their owne destruction. Ergo the reading of holy Scriptures must bee imbarred vnto all faythfull people for the rashnesse of some that doe wreast holye Scriptures vnto their owne destruction, as though all were such as they were, who the Apostle dothe blame heere. I beseech you, is there not in the order of the Cleargie a greate number of them that doe vtterlye prophane all theyr holy things: Shall we then conclude that they ought to be all sequestred from the medlyng with anye holye matters? Surely it were more reason and righte, than to embarre the people of Christ from the reading of holy Scriptures, as they do. But let wise and godly men consider withal, what these kind of men do call heresie. It is heresie with them, if a man do goe but his nayles breadth wyde from the accustomed opinions and rites. And for bicause that they which do diligently read the holy scripture, do finde in them a cõtrary trade of true godlynesse, and that they can not alow those things which doe not agree with their Canon, they began this to slaunder both the scriptures and the readers, that the holye Bible doth brede heretikes. This is the deuice of very Satan himselfe, whereby he goeth about not only to feare godly men from the reading of scriptures, but he doth slaunder them also with a certayne hydden poyson, whiche the lay men can not auoyde, but our great maisters can, and the rest of the order of the Prelates and religious folkes.

2. Pet. 3.

How the papists doe saye that Scripture doth brede heretikes.

Nazianzene in his Apologie, doth cite a law of the Ebrewes, whereby it was prouided, that all ages should not be admitted vnto all scriptures: but some scriptures were permitted to be redde of all men as common at the first, but others onely vnto them which were aboue fiue and twentye yeares olde. And he dothe commende this lawe for the discretion that is to be had in the reading of holy Scriptures among faithfull people, for the whiche for lacke of yeares haue not yet capacitie of mistical Scriptures, though they be meete with profit to reade them that be more playne and manifest. I would not disalow this discretion. But where can it take place in those churches, in which the faithfull people is vtterly embarred from all reading of holye scripture, by the maskerie of my Lordes the Popes? Let the publike and ecclesiasticall reading of scriptures be restored to the Church of Christe. Let those things that be redde, be expounded by the Pastours and Preachers. Let the people be instructed what euerye man ought to reade at home, meete for his yeares, for his state of life, for the qualitie of their temptations and chaunces. Let euerye man be admonished how conuenient it is, that they come not with foule hands to the readyng of the sayinges of GOD, but with deuotion makyng theyr prayers before vnto God, and with studye and trauaile to knowe the truth, and amende theyr life. Thys way it maye be, that those thyngs shall bee sette forthe for children to reade, whiche bee meete for them: not Cantica Canticorum, not the writings of the Prophets, not the figures and shadowes of Moses law, not that booke of the Reuelations, but those whyche bee the hystories of the olde and newe Testamente, conteynyng the manifest and simple doctrine of fayth and behauioure conuenient for that age: so that the same saying of the Apostle may take place also in our children where he sayeth: And for asmuch as from infancie, thou hast knowen the holy Scriptures, whyche maye make the learned vnto saluation, by the fayth whyche is in Christe Iesu, &c. And that of Dauid: In what dothe the yong man amende hys waye? In keepyng of thy sayynges.

Of the profyte of holy Scripture.

HItherto wee haue spoken of the readyng of holye Scripture, without whyche all that diligence of the holye spiryte, employed vppon the writing of the worde of God to the vse of the faithfull, is voyde and to no purpose: nowe consequentlye lette vs see of the profite of it. And I knowe that it is so hygh, that it can not be comprehended by thoughte, nu che lesse expressed in words. And Satan himselfe dothe well and sufficiently declare, by that that he hathe bereafte the reading of holy Scriptures from the Churches of Christ, and droue the tyrauntes, the enimies of Gods truth, to take ỳ holye bookes out of the faithfull mens hands, and to consume them in the fire: how notable the profit of holy scripture is, and howe muche it auaileth to the knowledge of God and encrease of true godly life, which his kingdome, the kyngdome of darkenesse and synne, can not abyde. Yet for the vnlearned sake, we will rehearse some kindes of the profyte of it, whiche be set forth vnto vs by the testimony of the scriptures.

The auoyders and minde of God came to vs by scriptures.

First, there is a very great commoditie of the holy Scripture to bee considered and embraced, in that, that by it the sayings of God were conueyed by a continuall course to the generations of the aftercommers, vntyll the verye ende of the worlde vttered, fyrste by the appearings of Angels to the Patriarches, nexte by the mouthes of the Prophetes, and Christ hymselfe, vnto Israell, after by the Apostles vnto the whole worlde, and by the workes also of Gods prouidence: that is to saye, of his creation and gouernaunce, and by whyche he declared hys faythe, truth and power, in deliuering and conseruyng his people. Heerevnto it were meete to vse that place of Dauid: Thys shall bee written for the age that is to come, and the people that shall bee created, shall praise God. So that whereas the Prophet did tell before, ỳ the memorie of those things whiche happened from God to the restoring of Israel, should be conueyed vnto the generations of the aftercommers, to the intent that the people that should come after, should prayse the Lorde, truely we may most conuenientlly say, that the same was wrought by the holye Scriptures. And to this purpose serueth ẏ we do reade also: How greate matters did he committe to oure fathers, to make them knowen to their childrẽ, that the generations to come after, may know them, and put theyr trust in God, and not forget ẏ workes of God, and search out his commandements. &c. The holy Patriarches, Prophets, Christe, and the Apostles, mought not alwayes be in ẏ worlde, to spread abroade in the worlde the words of God by mouth. Wherfore it was done to moste good purpose, that those things whiche they did set forth by worde of mouth when they were in the world, should be committed to writing, and so that they maye teache, informe, and correcte all men by the scriptures vntil the very ende of the world, to the intent that no mã should imagine, O that I had lyued in the times of the Prophets, Christ and Apostles, that I might haue bin instructed by them in the knowledge of God.

Psalm. 102.

from

Psalm.78.

By the scriptures we haue the Prophetes, Christ and the Apostles, yet talking with vs.

As touching their doctrine, they be not dead, they be not departed frõ vs, they haue not bereft vs of the doctrine of the truth, but by a nere way of scripture they do talke with vs as truly, as sufficiently, and as hollomly, as they spake with them amongst whom they were bodily conuersant. So by the benefite of scriptures we haue also the Patriarches, the Prophetes, Christ, and the Apostles, no lesse than they among whome they liued. Christ bringeth Abraham, saying to the rich man that was in hell fire: They haue Moses and the Prophets, let them heare them. How had they at that time Moses and the Prophets? how coulde they heare Moses and the Prophets, when they were dead many hundreth yeares before? They had their writings. Therfore to haue the wordes of Moses, of the Prophets, Christ, and the Apostles, is as muche as to haue Moses hymselfe, the Prophetes, Christe and the Apostles: & to heare their writings, is to heare them themselues. In very deede he that heareth not this wayes, or if he doe heare, dothe not beleeue, woulde not beleeue neyther though they rose againe from the dead, and spake with vs againe by worde of mouth. Therefore we maye thanke the holy scriptures for the continual memorie of the workes of God, and the euerlasting voyce comming vnto vs of the sayings of God. So that if the scripture did no good else, yet who can sufficiently wey, how greate the profite of this matter is?

Luke.

Agayne the Apostle dothe commend vnto vs also the profite of the scripture of God, when he saith: All scripture inspired from God, is profitable to doctrine, to reproouing, to correction, and to the information, whiche is in righteousnesse, that the man of God be upright, ready to euery good worke. This is there. In deede it is a greate commendation of the scripture. First he saith, that it is profitable. Then let al them be ashamed, whiche doe take away the reading of it from the congregations and the faithfull of Christ, as hurtfull.

full. Albeit we maye finde many peruerse folke that doe abuse it, yet is it expressly proued heere by the testimonie of the Apostle, that it is profitable. Nor he sayeth not simply The scripture inspired from God: but, All the scripture inspired from God (saith he) is profitable. And where as he dothe specifie, saying: Inspyred from God: it is spoken for the difference of other scriptures, whiche sauor not of the inspiration of God, but of the malyce of mans wisedome. Whereas he speaketh vniuersally, All scripture, it serueth to this, to reproue the rashnesse of them, which do alow that which they lust of the Canon of the holye scriptures, and refute those that they like not. Briefly, ẏ Apostle dothe gyue thys honoure vnto the scripture of God, that it is altogither profitable, and that it conteyneth in it nothing that is hurtfull, but so as all things be vncleane to ẏ vncleane, and as Christe hymselfe is a stumbling stone, and the Apostles a sauor of death vnto them that doe perishe, and the iuyce of a sweete smellyng floure is poyson to the Spyders.

Secondly, for asmuch as he sayd, that all Scripture is profitable, ioyning the parcels of the profit, he saith To doctrine. Doctrine is an instruction of them that be ignorante. The minde of man is not so bright by the lighte of nature, that it can of hys owne sharpnesse know the things of God, and necessary to be knowen for his saluation. The liuing man (sayth the Apostle) vnderstandeth not those things that be of God. Wherefore he hathe nede to haue a more godlye light, whereby he maye haue lighte and be taughte. The same is proued by the holy spirite. And to this vse the holy scripture is applyed, by whiche childrẽ and little ones are taught and brought to light. The testimonie of the Lord saith Dauid, is faithfull, giuing lighte to the little ones, the commaundement of the Lord is clere, giuing lighte to the eyes: So that a man maye well call the holye scripture, the doctrine of ponglings, and that which ẏ wise of thys world do loath, and are ready to spue at, yea and whiche is to them the boke shut and sealed vp. But ẏ doctrine wherefore the scripture of God is giuẽ vnto vs, is of four parts: that is to say, of the Knowledge of God, of Fayth, of Godly loue, and of Iustice. For we be taught out of the scriptures of God, and be instructed in the knowledge of him, the order whereof wee did set forth in the beginning of these Places. We be taught and informed to beleeue. First that there is a God, and that he is a rewarder of them that do seeke him. Next, that we doe beleeue in Christ his onely begotten sonne, sente into this world for oure saluation. For the scriptures do giue witnesse vnto him, whereof he sayth also himselfe: Search the scriptures, in which you suppose to haue lyfe euerlasting. They do also giue testimonie of me. And for this cause hee did expound the scriptures that were written of himselfe to his Disciples, and opened their perseueraunce to vnderstand them. And the Apostles did alleage testimonies of scriptures to confirme that faith in Christe: And Paule saith, that ẏ misterie of Christ which was kept close from the eternall times, was opened by the scriptures in the time of the new Testa-

Psalme.19.

The doctrine of the holy Scripture is of foure partes.

Heb.11.

Iohn.5.

Rom.16.

ment. So the Scriptures do serue vs for the doctrine both of the generall faith, and the speciall also. The generall faith is that, when we doe beléeue in God the maker, gouernour, and preseruer of all things. The special faith is that, when we do beléeue in Christ, and are saued for oure beléeuing, of whiche the Apostle speaketh, saying: And that thou learnedst holy Scriptures from a child, which can instruct thée to saluatiō by faith, whiche is in Christe Iesu. We be taughte out of Scriptures of true godly life towardes God: howe wée muste feare him, loue him, obserue and worship hym chiefly aboue all others. We be taughte also of rygh-teousnesse to be vsed in all our lyfe, towardes them wyth whome we do lyue in thys worlde, eyther as equal, superioures, or inferiours. And in this sorte, that doctrine wherevnto the Apostle sayeth, that the Scripture inspyred from God is profitable, is comprehended in these four partes. Thirdly, The Scripture hée saith is profitable for a triall. The Gréeke word πρὸς ἔλεγχον, soundeth Tryall: as in case there bée anye thyng erronious or false in a matter, that is either spoken in word or done in déede, it is founde by it, as when a man lighteth a candle, and is tryed so manifestly, that it can not be denyed. This triall is a thing most necessary for the Churche, to represse the endeuoures of Sathan, where he is wonte to spread abroade and sowe continually his straunge and erronious opinions by his ministers, whiche can no wayes be more euidently tryed and reproued, than by the lighte of the holy Scriptures.

Tryall.

And there be two kyndes of tryall. One is, when false and erronious opinions, heresies, false worshipps, false Preachers, Prophets and Doctors, false Byshops, false brethren, and Antichrist hymselfe is opened and reproued. And therefore it is, that these darkelings or nightbats, whiche doe reygne in the Churche of God, doe not onely flée like Théues from thys lyght of holy Scriptures, whereby they be disclosed and reproued, but they doe goe aboute also vterly to extinguisshe it. The other is, whereby our faces be reproued. By thys euerye man maye knowe hys owne lyfe, yea the secretes of hys hearte, yea and theyr deuices also, whyche doe wynde themselues into the flocke of the Lorde, couered wyth the Shéepes garmentes, of whome Christ sayd: You shall know them by their workes. And, The tré is knowen by hys frutes. And as for both these tryals or reprowes, you can not better take them out of anye place, than out of ỹ holy Scriptures. Therefore whereas the Apostle sayeth: Trye all thyngs, and holde that which is good. And, Let the mā proue himselfe: it can not be done without diligent loking vpon the holy scriptures. For as ỹ same Apostle sayth: Whatsoeuer is reproued, is opened by the lyghte, and the same whiche lurketh in darkenelle, is not reuealed but by lighte.

Fourthly, It serueth for redresse. The Gréeke word signifyeth the restoring of such things as were fallē, when they be sette vppe agayne and broughte vnto their olde vprightnesse. And whereas all things doe abyde in conueniente estate, nor nothing doth fall, there truely thys reformation néedeth not. In Heauen there is that stedfast and perpetuall vprightnesse of all things, but in the earth it is not so, not onely in natural and worldly things, no nother in godly things, not in the very Church of God. For albeit, the truth of God which is the foundation and piller of the Church, be of it selfe stedfast and inuincible, yet in vs it is weakened, and falleth through our infirmitie and inconstancie, yea rather by our aptnesse to erre and fall. And the studye of godlye life and of iustice, wherevnto we be instructed in the holy Scriptures, hathe néede to haue nowe and then some correction. So that it is wroughte by the holye spirite, that the same holye Scripture which doth teach the ignorannte, and doth reprouc them that be in faulte and erroure, doth also correct and reforme, that is, dothe teache and shewe howe these things muste be amended, whiche are fallen through oure defaulte. The holye Scripture is the rule whereby all faultes are to bée amended, as well of doctrine, as of life. The Prelates of the Churche mighte be admonished euen by this, howe the faultes and controuersies of our times in matters of religion are to be redressed. Let them heare the Apostle: All scripture inspired from God (sayth he) is profitable to doctrine, reprofe, and amendment. If they do séeke a true and holsome redresse, let thē séeke it from no whére else, but from whence all true doctrine and the reprofe of all erroures commeth, that is from the holy scriptures inspired from God. They doe pretende that they will examine and redresse al these controuersies of this present time according vnto the writings of the fathers, and ordinances of the Councels. And so they doe refuse the vse of the Canonical Scripture shewed by the Apostle, and in stéede thereof they do put in the writings, and ordinances of the fathers, which be not themselues vnadusedly to be allowed, but must be examined by the rule of holy scripture. So that the profite of the holye Scripture is greate in this respect, that it helpeth to correcte the doctrine that is fallen, and oure counterfaite lyfe also wandering out of the way from the true path of iustice, whereof the Prophete meaneth when he sayeth: Wherein dothe the yong man redresse hys way? In keeping of thy wordes.

Fiftly, to Instruction (he sayeth) which is in iustice. In Gréeke it is to instruction and discipline, suche as is vsed with children. The holye spirite dothe instructe vs to iustice in holye Scriptures, euen as the father doth his children. They haue milke méete for children, that is to saye, the principles of learning, wherewithall the ignorannte bée taughte. They haue also strong meate conueniente for them that bée elder and better practised.

Sixtly, he dothe adde the ende of these thynges wherevnto they bée directed. That the man of God (sayeth he) may be vpright, furnished to all good workes. In Gréeke it signifyeth whole and sounde. And the Apostle meaneth of the wholenesse and soundnesse of the mynde in true faythe, godlye loue, and iustice. Herevnto the matters spoken Instruction πρὸς παιδείαν.

The ende and steppe of the profite of holy Scripture. ἄρτιος.

of beſoze, muſt ſerue, I meane doctrine, repzake, redzelle, and inſtruc-on. Theſe things muſt not be idle and doing nothing, but they muſt be wozking and fruitefull. He that rea-deth ſcriptures to any other ende, ſe-duceth himſelfe, and ſtrayeth from the right marke. The holy ſcripture muſt haue the man of God, that is, him that is of God endowed with the deſire of true godlineſſe. There the ſonne of this wozlde ſhall doe no
gwd. It maketh him ſake and ſounde by teaching, repzouing, redzelling, and inſtructing, and ſo dothe pzepare and furniſhe him to all kinde of gwd wozkes. You muſt underſtande of thoſe wozkes, wherevnto we be inſtructed by the doctrine of the holye Scripture. They be the wozkes of true faith, and charitie. The mã that is inſtructed by the holy ſcriptures, can not apply his minde vnto ſuperſtitious wozkes, and therefoze is reputed foz an heretike and a wicked perſon of the Churche of the malig-nants.

The comfort out of the holy Scripture. 2. Tim. 3. Rom. 15.

Hitherto we haue briefely conſ-dered of the pzofite oz commoditie of holy Scripture, which the Apoſtle doth ſet fozthe in few wozds. Vnto that I thought gwd to ioyne alſo the ſame whiche he doth ſet out to ỹ Ro-maines ſaying: What ſo euer things are afoze time written, they be written foz oure doctrine, that we maye haue hope, thzough patience and cõ-fozt of the Scriptures. The meaning of it is: What ſo euer thynges hath bin written in times paſſed by Moſes and the Pzophetes manye a hundzed yeares befoze, be not writtẽ only foz them which were aliue whe they were written, but foz the after commers alſo, that they might alſo haue a doctrine wherewyth they might be inſtructed. So he ſayeth:
They were written foz our doctrine.
Not ſimple, They may ſerue foz our doctrine, but, they were written be-foze time foz oure doctrine, as if he had ſaid: They were written foz this purpoſe a greate whiles paſt, that they ſhoulde ſerue foz oure doctrine.
Wherefoze it is not to be imputed to the rathneſſe of man, that we doe vſe the Scriptures of the olde and newe Teſtamente foz a doctrine of this our age, but we muſte acknowledge in this matter the pzouidence of God, that he would haue the perpetuall doctrine of all ages written, which ſhould endure vntill the very ende of the wozld. So that this matter muſt ſticke faſt in the mindes of godly folke, which the Apoſtle ſayth here: What ſoeuer things wer written afoze time, they were written befoze foz our doctrine: and let them thinke that the whole holy ſcripture is no leſſe ozdeyned to vs by GOD to this intente that we ſhoulde be taught of the truth out of it, than it was in times paſt giuen to our foze-fathers: and let them not ſuffer thys doctrine, deliuered to thẽ from God, to be conueyed from them by the legerdemayne of falſe Doctours. We can not without greate offence neg-lecte the ſame, whiche is written foz vs by the inſtinct and pzouidence of God.

That we may haue hope (ſaith he) by pacience and comfozt of the ſcriptures. Heere he declareth a ſpeciall vſe of the Scriptures, foz them whiche be turmoyled with troubles.
There be in them manye noble examples

amples of the patience of holy men, wherby receyuing comfozt, we may conceiue in our mind a hope of Gods help & of better ſucceſſe, and ſo keepe pacience in aduerſitie, and goe away with the victozye. The place of the wozds of Chriſt is knowen. Where ſetting fozth the example of the Pzo-phets, he dothe arme his diſciples to beare any aduerſitie. And the authoz of the Epiſtle to the Ebzeiwes bzyngeth fozth examples of ſuch patience out of Scripture. And Peter in hys ſecond epiſtle alleaged the examples of Noe and Loth out of the Scriptures. The holye Scripture is full of examples of patience, and of the comfoztes of the godly. Foz the God of patience and comfozte, dyd ſo a-dzne it by the inſtinct of the holye Spirite, to the vſe and commoditie of Godly folkes. You may ſee a place of thys in Chryſoſtome, whyche wzote of hys out of exile vnto Cyri-ake the Byſhoppe, being alſo an outlaw, after this wiſe: When I was dziuen out of the Citie, I cared foz none of theſe matters, but I ſayde to my ſelfe: If the Quéene will out-lawe me, lette hyz dzyue me out of the lande. The lande is the Lozdes and the fulneſſe of it: and if ſhe will burne me, let hir burne me, I haue Elay foz my patterne: if ſhe wyll hurle me into the Sea, I will call Jonas to remembzance: if ſhe wyll caſt me into the Quen, I haue the thzee chyldzen whyche abyded the ſame: if ſhe wyll caſt me to wilde beaſtes, I remember Daniell that was put to the Lions in the denne:
if ſhe will ſtone me, lette hir ſtone me, I haue Stephen the firſte Martyz: if ſhe will take away my head, lette hir take it, I haue John the Baptiſt: if ſhe wyll take my gwdes let hir take them, I came naked out of my mothers wombe, and will departe naked agayne. The Apoſtle telleth me, God regardeth not the perſon of the man, and if I dyd yet pleaſe men, I ſhouldenot bée the ſer-uaunte of Chryſte. And Dauid dothe arme mée, ſaying: I ſpake be-foze Kynges, and was not aſha-med. Thys ſayeth hée, whyche thynges I beſéeke you, of whence were they ſo readye at hande, but of the readyng of the holye Scriptures?

The holye Scripture giueth armoure againſt the temptatiõs of Sathan. Math. 4.

Beſydes thys, when we do reade of Chriſte oure Sauioure, that hée did obiect places of Scriptures vnto Satan the tempter, ſaying: It is written, Man lyueth not by bzead onely, but by euerye wozde that pzocéedeth out of the mouth of God. Alſo it is written, Thou ſhalte not tempt the Lozd thy God. Agayne, it is written, Thou ſhalte wozſhippe the Lozde thy God, and ſerue hym onely. Doe we not ſée, that thys is the pzofyte of holye Scripture, that we be armed by it againſt the temptations of Satan, the fleſhe, and the wozlde, as wyth a whole armure, whereby we may defende our faith, hope and godly loue? And howe can they haue thys armure, whyche doe not make themſelues acquaynted wyth the holye Scriptures, by readyng and exerciſyng, that they maye be readye at hande as oftentymes as néede requyzeth, to ſerue ſpédily agaynſt anye kynde of temptation?
It is ouer true that Chryſoſtome ſayeth: We goe into the fielde without armure, and how ſhall we ouer-come: He is a very desperate souldyer, that hath no care for hys armour, no not at the very time of the fighte. 1. Sam. 17. When Dauid should fight agaynste the enimie of Gods people, he chose hymselfe fyne smothe stones out of the Riuer, fytte for hys slyng, wherwith he myghte stryke hym and ouerthrowe hym. The holy scripture is full of suche stones. And euen as Dauid did in the bodyly fighte, so let the godlye man doe in the spirituall conflicte.

The pleasant refreshing out of Scripture.

Lastly, I will adde this also. We are wonte to make greate store of those things whiche doe serue for recreation and cherishyng of our bodye, so that the bodye wearyed eyther by heate, labours, colde, hunger or thyrste, maye bee refreshed by them. And not withoute cause. For that whiche is weake and fraple, can not abyde the continuaunce of trauayle, vnlesse it bee nowe and then refreshed, but muste needes decay and slinke away. In thys case the Godly man must thynke vppon the refreshing of the spirite, whereby he maye bee sometymes recreated, after dyuers and sundrye trauels. The Godlye person can in no place finde a swéter and pleasaunter refreshyng, than in the garden of the holye Scriptures, where the tree is of knowledge, not of that that was forbydden, but of that whyche is appoynted by God to the electe, where standeth in the myddes the tree of lyfe, whyche is Chryste: The doze wherevnto is not kepte close by Cherubin and the fyrye swoorde, but it is opened by the instincte of the holye spirite and the lighte of the Gospell, to all that be hungrye, where the ryuers be of lyuely waters, whereby the Churche of the faythfull is ouerflowen and cherished: and where the myndes of the godlye are enriched with most fyne Golde and precious stones, that is with the ryches of heauenly graces, where bee trées of all sortes, fayre to the eye, and swéete to the taste, trées planted by God, handsome, and fruitefull, that is the Patriarches, Prophetes, and Apostles. Where the ayre passeth very smoth and calme, I meane the breathing of the holy spirite, most swétely cherishing the heartes of the dwellers in thys garden. Where the voyce of God is walking and séeking the saluation of the seduced man, not crying thys onely: Adam, where arte thou? but callyng all men also vnto hym, instructing and teachyng the ignoraunte, correcting and prouokyng to amendment them that doe sinne, shewyng vnto them that be deceyued the tree of true knowledge, leading them that bee subiecte vnto deathe and destruction vnto the tree of lyfe, rapsyng vppe them that are fallen, comfortyng the carefull, and refreshyng them that that bee weary.

The garden or Paradyse of the holye Scriptures.

I doe boldly saye, that the same garden of pleasure, out of the whiche Adam was thrust out for his disobedience, hadde scarsely the shadowe of that true pleasure, whyche the electe and they that doe beléeue, do enioy in thys garden of the holye and Godlye Scriptures, whercin they doe heare the voyces and oracles of God, they doe sée the appearings of the Angels, they be conuersant with the holy Patriarches, Pro-

Prophetes, with Chriſte hymselfe, and the Apostles, they haue the most pleasaunte ayre of the holye spirite breathing vpon them, they do fede of the tree of lyfe, not onely takyng no hurte, but excedyng profyte, yea they doe eate of the tree of lyfe, and bee made partakers of it for euer: they doe walke betwixte the moste beautifull and fertile trées, and they be so cherished with the delightes of thys garden, that they wote not whether they be in the bodye or out of the bodye, and doe vtterly forget all worldlye matters, yea and all trouble, care and afflictions also.

I beséeche you, what bee all the writing of the Orators and Philosophers that were wise, compared herewithall, but a dyre and thyrstie deserte, wherein all places bee full of the barren sande of hungrye talke, wherein is nothing but vyle shardes of vayne knowledge, wherein there be false opinions, cruell and venemous beastes, wherein is wearisomnesse for the trauellers, and doubtfull wayes, the mother of all kyndes of errours, in which the hunger and thirst is not quenched, and that whiche is soughte, is not founde. And this deserte of Ethnike writing, is so muche esteemed nowe adayes by the children of the flesshe, and of this worlde, that they thinke they muste needes continue in it. On the other syde, the chyldren of God neglecting the vayne knowledge, say with the Prophete: How swéete are thy sayings vnto my throte, as honey and the honey combe to my mouth. And in an other place: More desirefull than Golde and precious stones, and swéeter than honey and the honey combe. They that be so affected, theyr pleasure and delighte is in the lawe of the Lorde, and doe exercise themselues in it dayes and nyghtes, and through theyr exercise are moste pleasauntly refreshed.

In this saying we doe not condemne the readyng of secular wryters, so that it bee not continuall, that it be not the principall studye, so that it be not vsed to refreshe the spirite, so that it brede not a loathsomnesse to reade holy scripture, so that it holde not the myndes of the readers heartes vnto it till they bee olde, so that it bee not the maister of religion and faithe, but the seruaunte: so that it doe not chalenge vnto it selfe the title of true wisedome and learnyng, but that it stay in his owne degree, and be as a seruaunte and a cast off farre vnder the scripture of God: and so that it decepue not the myndes of the readers wyth the allurements of painted speache, but doe dispatche from it the hungry and emptie soules, to the abundance of the holye Scriptures.

Of the truth and the accomplishment of the holy Scriptures.

The truth of Scriptures doth depende vpon the truthe of God.

The truth of the holy Scriptures doth depende vppon the truth of God, who is the author of them. He that doubteth of the truth of them, eyther he doth not beléeue, that they were vttered by the instincte of the holy spirite, or else if he doubteth not of that, hée doeth not beléeue that God cannot lye: or if hée doe beléeue that also, he taketh him to be mutable as manne, so that the same which he would haue to day, to morrowe chaunging his mind, he would none of it: all whiche opinions bée farre from them that be of the number of true beléeuers. For they doe doubt nothing at all, but that the holye Scriptures be of God, and that God can neyther lye, neyther bée chaunged. They doe say with the Apostle: Let God rather be true, and euery man a lyar. And with the Prophet: The worde of God is tryed by fyre, clensed seauen tymes. They knowe that saying: I am GOD, and am not chaunged. And that also of Esay: Like as the dewe and the snowe commeth from the Heauen, and returneth not thither againe, but moisteth the earth, &c. So is the worde that goeth out of my mouthe, it returneth not vnto me voyde, but dothe whatsoeuer I will, and doth prosper in those matters wherunto I sente it. Wherefore they that be perswaded of the truth of God, are perswaded also of the certaintie and truthe of the sayings of God, which be set forth vnto vs in the holy scriptures.

Esai. 55.

Psalm. 115. Psalm. 11. Num. 23. Mala. 3.

And the things that doe specially require credite of truth in the holye Scriptures, are these: Narrations, commendations, doctrines, prophecies, promises and threateninges. There be also in scriptures cõmaundements and forbiddings, whiche do require obedience. But those matters that I rehearsed, do chiefly and specially require credite or faith that they be true. Albeit, it is requisite also in the precepts and forbiddings, to beléeue that they be charged and forbidden by God. If there be matter tolde in Scripture, that it was done eyther by God either by Angels, eyther men good or euill, there is then a credite to be giuen to the historical truth, so that we must beléeue that it was done without doubte as it is tolde. In thys degrée those matters are the chiefe, which are tolde of the workes of God and of Christe hys sonne. Other thinges be lower, not for ỳ they be lesse true, but bycause they be of an inferiour degrée and of lesse waight. There is report, and as it were in praise, cõmendation made of God in Scriptures, that he is iust, good, true, faithfull, louing, mercifull and kind, slowe to anger, &c. and that he appoynted from euer his only begotten sonne to be our redéemer, and that he sent him into this worlde, that he which doth beléeue, should not perish, but haue life euerlasting, & what soeuer is reported in the worlde by the commendation of the Gospell. Suche and other lyke commendations as they be true, so they doe require credite of the truthe. The Scripture teacheth them that bée ignorannt and doe erre of the grace and will of God, and sheweth the way of saluation and eternall lyfe, and sheweth also what is true godlynesse and iustice: Unlesse this doctrine be accepted as true & certayne, it can not be fruitefull, for without credite of the truth it can not be, that we should become his true disciples, and be lightened with the lighte of Gods knowledge. There be prophecies in the scriptures, either spoken by Aungels to the Patriarches, either by Prophets to the people of Israell, by whiche God vouchsaued to warne warne thé before of things to come: there be also promises of grace perteyning to the elect. There be threatnings appoynted for the disobedient, vnbeléeuing and wicked persons. Take away the credit of truth from these things, although they be neuer so true of themselues, and must bée fulfilled of necessitie, yet they do not worke with the vnbeléeuers, but vnto their destruction. Wherefore thys is the chiefe poynte of oure religion, that we doe giue credite of truth to the holy scripture, without any manner of doubte, whether it do declare, commende, teache, prophecie, or promise anye thyng to the beléeuers, or threaten the vnbeléeuyng. Without thys faythe of truth, there is nothyng in oure religion that can stande.

VVhiche Scriptures do peculiarlye require the beleef of truth.

Upon this truth of the holy scriptures, doth depende also the fulfilling of them, whyche is as necessary, as it is nédefull, for God to be true. And therebypon commeth that saying of Christe: For it is necessarye that all thinges be fulfylled, whiche bée written of me in the lawe of Moses, and the Prophetes, and Psalmes, Item: for so it is written, and so it behoued Christe to dye, and to ryse agayne from the dead, &c.

And the fulfylling of ỳ scriptures is dyuers wayes. For first there bée some things that haue their fulfylling by God hymselfe and Christ his sonne, and ỳ holy spirite, some things are fulfilled by Angels, some by mé, or godly, or vngodly, some by Satan himselfe, and the euill spirites. Agayne, some thinges were fulfilled once, and so had their perfectiõ, some other thynges hathe also bin oftentymes fulfylled, and are yet fulfylled, partly in the elect, and partly in the wicked, vntyll the ende of the worlde: some shall be fulfylled in the worlde to come. But I meane not nowe to touche euerye thyng particularly, séeyng that the diligent reader of holy scripture may easily obserue euery thing particularly in the reading.

Hytherto we haue briefely sette forthe suche things as we haue iudged not vnprofitable for the godlye reader, touching holye scriptures. I woulde gladly that all the ministers of Gods worde, woulde euerye man according vnto hys power, putte his whole endeuoure to prouoke all menne to the readyng of holy scripture, vsing a conueniente instruction and direction of them in the same. For vnlesse men will so doe, I sée not howe the knowledge of Goddes truth, the sincerite of the Christian faithe, and the studye of true godlye loue and iustice, maye bée kepte in the Churche of Christ, in these latter times.

¶ Of the Ministers of the vvorde of God.

VVhy god vvold vse the ministerie of the vvorde.

After the places of the Gospell, and of ỳ holy Scriptures, I thoughte good to treate nexte of the Ministers of Gods worde. And firste let the godly man thinke vpon the purpose of God, why he woulde vse Ministers, ministers, by whome he would dispense and bestowe his worde among men. We must not attribute this vnto anye necessitie that it coulde not haue bin otherwise, as though he could by no other meanes haue prouided for the saluation of men, and that it was in any wise necessary for God, willing to help the world, to do it by the outward ministerie of the outwarde worde. For he coulde haue done all things that belong to oure saluation and to the knowledge of God, godly loue, and iustice, by the inwarde instinct of his spirite, without the outward worde or ministerie of ỹ worde: but he would vpon greate wisedome vse the worde and ministers of the worde: which doyng of his, wee muste honor and profitably embrace, not rashly enquire vpon, and muche lesse contemne it. We muste in anye wyse beware, that we giue no place to the rashnesse of mans reason, whiche assone as it vnderstandeth that it may be otherwise done, which is wrought by God after a certaine and appointed meanes, eyther it beginneth to searche out the causes, and scrupeth with the counsell of God, or supposeth that way not to be regarded, whē it is not so done, that it can not bee otherwise done.

God dothe instruct mē otherwyse than hee doth other creatures.

We be at a poynt and assure oure selues, that it pleased God so to instruct men of his will and grace, otherwise than eyther the heauenlye spirites whiche haue no earthly bodyes, eyther brute beastes whyche haue no suche power of reason and vnderstanding, as is in men and angels: or other creatures destitute not only of reason, but of the senses also of hearing, seeing, and vnderstanding, whiche all he hath notwithstandyng subiect and seruiceable vnto his wil. Fyre, hayle, snowe, yce, the spirite of the stormes, whiche dothe his worde (sayth the Prophet) doe worke and fulfil the commaundements of God, and serue his wyll without any ministerie of the outward worde. They be driuen with the secrete power of the drift of God, whereby men may be also driuen, euen as they be also oftentimes driuen, but it so liked hys vnsearcheable counsel, that the matter of mans saluation shoulde be dispensed in men of vnderstanding, by the ministrie of the worde, which dispensation of the worde dothe for all that worke nothing in vs effectually, vnlesse the instinct and inspiration of the holye spirite be ioyned withall. This I say we do stand vpon, whatsoeuer become of the matter. Wherfore it is conuenient, that setting aparte all curiositie and contempte, we do with a desirous and thankeful heart obey the appointment of God, yea and take it for a great fauor, that he doth voutsafe to instruct vs of his will & our saluation, by this meanes of the ministring of his worde.

But there be many kindes of the ministers of God, whose ministery he doth vse diuerslye in this vniuersall frame of heauen and earthe, according vnto his vnspeakeable power and at the libertie of his will, from ỹ numerous multitude and diuersitie of whiche, we must in this place sequester them whome he himselfe did sequester, and sanctifie to the ministerie of his worde, and are also now chosen and ordeined in the Churches to the same office. Those we may by a principall diuision deuide into three kindes, kindes, according vnto the threefolde estate of the three principall seasons. The three seasons be, the first before the lawe, the second vnder the lawe, and the third after the law, which is the time of the new Testamente. In these three times God sent his word, but in sundry sortes. Before the law he vsed the ministerie of Angels, by whose appearings he dyd informe the patriarches of his grace and wil. In the time of the law, he sente Moses and the Prophetes to his people, as ministers of his word. In ỹ time of the new Testamente, he sente hys only begotten sonne Jesus Christe, and after him his Apostles, Euangelistes, Doctors, &c. Ergo there bee three principall kindes of ministers of the worde. But leauing the two first, we muste see of the third, whyche conteyneth the misteries of the new Testament.

Dist. 60. ca. Nullus in Epistolis.

And they haue a diuision and diuersitie in them. There be diuisions of ministeries sayth the Apostle, and one Lord. And in the same Chapiter, And others God did set in ỹ Church, first Apostles, next Prophets, thirdly Doctors. And ỹ same (saith hee) gaue others to be Apostles, & other Prophets, and others Euangelistes, and others Pastors, and Doctors, to the restoring of the Sainctes, into the worke of the administration, &c. And Paule calleth vnto him the Priestes of ỹ Church of ỹ Ephesians, whome he calleth also Bishops. And ther be seauen Deacons chosen. Therefore these names of ministers of ỹ word, be found in the new Testament, Apostles, Prophetes, Doctors, Euangelistes, Pastors, Priestes and Byshops. The Deacons were not ministers of the worde, but of the churche tables: By those the worke of administration, restoryement and edifying of the faithfull, was perfourmed in the first times of Christes Churche. So it is openly read, that there was in the primitiue church only Priests and Deacons. Afterwards when the multitude of the faithfull encreased, and men began to order and decke vp the Church more gayly, and that they grewe vp by little and little frō the simplicitie and basenesse of the Apostles, the degrees of ministers encreased also, and there was added vnto the firste Bishops of countries, suffragans, Metropolitans, Patriarches, Archdeacons, Archpriestes: and of the lower degree, subdeacons, wayters, cōiurers, readers, singers, doze keepers. I neede not to speake of the Princes of the court of Rome, the Cardinals and Popes, with the rest of the retinue of their Officials, and of their manifold sects, Monkes, Abbots, Priours, Suppriors, Wardens, Generals, Prouincials, Deanes, Chanons, Abbatesses and Prioresses, of all which the number is so encreased through the blessing and plentifulnesse of the holye Deuill of hell, and blessed hypocrisie, that it is a maruell to see, howe the faithfull should be able to fede, muche lesse to fat vp and enriche so huge a multitude of idle Lordes or leude lozels and dasterds.

How gret the order of ministers is growen in the churche.

Of the duties of the Ministers of the VVorde.

Ministers.

We wil at this preset, leauing off this last rable, & consider of the ministers of ỹ word, whose office are set forthe vnto vs out of the Scriptures of the new Testamente. And what is to be iudged of them, the Apostle doth generally admonisthe vs, saying: Let a man so estéme vs, as the Ministers of Chriſte, and dispensers of the misteries of God. He saith that there be thæ thynges to be loked for of the Apostles, Prophetes, Euangelistes, Pastors, Doctors, Priests and Bishops.

1.Cor.4.

ὑπηρέτας.

Firſte, that they be Ministers and such as do serue for the execution of the sentence which passed before, and therefore this worde is sometymes taken for the minister of a Iudge, as we may sée in Mathew, where we do reade thus: Least once the aduersary deliuer thée to the Iudge, and the Iudge betake thée to the minister, and so thou be cast into prison. And Peter sate with the ministers to sée the ende. And the Phariseys and high Priestes sente ministers to apprehende Chriſte. So that Hypereta be ministers seruing an other bodyes will, doyng anye thing not at theyr owne arbitremente. And I beseech you, howe dothe that saying of the Pope agrée with thys, Whereas there is Maiorítie, there is authoritie to commaunde, and for the reste, there is lefte a necessitie to obey? They that boast themselues to bée the successors of the Apostles, ought not to extoll themselues aboue the Apostles, which would not be taken for Lordes that hadde authoritie to commaunde, but for ministers seruing the will of the Lord.

Math.5.

Math.26.

Iohn.7.

Secondly, for a specifying, he doth adde whose ministers they be, he sayeth: As ỹ ministers of Chriſt. Who soeuer is a minister, is rightly called his minister, whose will he is bound vnto, and to whome he is bounde to giue a reckening of hys ministerie. Truly it is a great matter, to be the minister of Chriſte, the onely begotten sonne of God, the King of Kings, and Lorde of Lords, of whose Kingdome there is no ende. But how desperately be they disposed, that doe worke their owne affayres vnder the name and colour of him, and doe rule like Lordes the flocke of the faithfull, as though they shoulde neuer giue vp an accounte of theyr doynges.

Of Chriſte.

Thirdly, he doth adde also the qualitie of the ministerie, saying: As dispensers of the misteries of God. He calleth Gods misteries, what soeuer things be sette forthe by God, to bée preached in the worlde of Chriſte our Sauioure by the Gospell of God, of which Chriſt himselfe speaketh, saying to his Disciples: It is giuen to you, to know the mysteries. And the Apostle sayeth: And if I knewe all misteries. And, In spirit he speaketh mysteries. Chriſte is altogyther the mysterie of God, hydden from the worlde, opened in the latter tyme to the Apostles. A mystery in Greke, is as muche to saye, as some secrete and hidden thing. Chriſte is secrete and hidden, and those things whyche be preached by the Gospell of him, are secrete and hidden in respecte of the wisedome of the worlde: but in respect of the faith of the elects, they be the candle and light of the minds. So it pleased GOD to hyde those thinges from the wise and cunnyng folkes of the worlde, and to disclose them to little ones. Therefore thys is the cómon seruice of the ministers of Dispensers of the misteries of God.

Mark.4. 1.Cor.2.

Rom.16. Ephes.3. Colos.1.

of Chriſte, that they must be the dispensers of the mysteries of GOD, whiche is done by the preachyng of the Gospel, whereof we spake before in the place of the dispensation of the grace of God.

And yet there is a difference betwirt ỹ very same ministers, whiche be rehearsed of the Apostle. For it is an other matter to be an Apostle, & another matter to be a Prophete: agayne it is one thing to be an Euangelist, and an other to be a Pastor, a Doctor, to be a Priest, and a Bishop. An Apostle is he, whiche serueth not one or two Churches, but hath this in his charge, to declare the gospell in euery place throughout ỹ worlde, amongst the nations, which yet haue heard nothing of Chriſte. To them doth peculiarly belong, whiche was giuen in charge from the Lorde, saying: Go yée into all the worlde, and preach the gospell vnto al creatures. And, Goyng into all the world, teach all nations. With this mynisterie the name of the Apostle dothe agrée. For Apostle is asmuche to say, as Messenger.

A Prophete, which being inspyred by the motion of the holy spirite of God, doth forsée & tell before, things that be to come. This inspiration was promised in the tymes of the new Testament, as it is alleaged in the Actes out of Ioel: And your sonnes and your doughters shal prophecie, &c. Suche prophetes were Agabus, and the foure doughters of Philip, and they whiche be spokē of, that they were at Antioche. And the Apostles themselues had the inspiration of Prophecie. But yet there be some that doe meane by the worde Prophet here, not the teller of thinges before, but them whiche do expound holy Scriptures to the people, in whiche sense this worde séemeth to be taken of the Apostle.

1.Cor.4.

An Euangelist.

2.Tim.4.

Act.21.

What an Euangelist is, it is diuersly expounded. In fewe wordes, it is eyther he that doth preache, eyther he that doth wryte the histories and doctrine of the Gospell. In the firste sense, the Apostle sayth to Timothée: Do the worke of an Euangelist. And in the Actes, Philip, one of the seuen Deacons, is called an Euangelist. In the laste sense, or rather in bothe, Matthew, Marke, Luke, and Iohn, be called Euangelistes, whiche dyd spreade abroade the gospel of Chriſt, bothe by worde of mouth, and wryting also.

Pastors, doctors, priests Bishops. So a priest is the name of age, and Byshop of office.

Pastors and Doctors be all one, whiche be called also Priestes and Byshops. They be appointed vnto some certayne churches, to fede thē and teach them. They be called Pastors by a figurate speache, vpon fedyng, that is teaching, wherfore they be also called Doctors: and they bée called Priestes, bicause they do passe other men bothe in age & wisedome, (for so that word Priest, is asmuch to say as an Elder.) And they be called Bishops, bycause there is a charge committed vnto them ouer the people of God, to loke vnto them diligently in the case of saluation, and in case there shoulde any daunger hang ouer theyr heades, to warne euery one of them by time, & to withstand it. The Athenians did call thē Bishops, whome they sente to theyr Cities abroade, to sée how the matter wente with them. And he Was the Bishop also that was the ouer

A Byshop.

That Pastors and doctors, priests and byshops be all one.

seeer in things that were to be solde for mens cayly living. So this word was passed ouer from those matters to the charge of the churche, that the Bishops, Doctors, and Priests be called Byshops, whiche some do now adays call also Superintendents. And that Pastors and Doctors be al one, as to fede and to teache is al one, I thinke it is manifest: whiche thing Hierome also dothe note vpon that that the Apostle dothe not say, Others Pastors, and others Doctors, but ioynaly, others pastors and doctors. Agayne that priestes and pastors be all one, it is manifest of that that we do reade that the priests and Elders be warned by the Apostle, to fede the flocke of God.

1. Peter. 5.

Thirdly, that Elders, bishops and Pastors be all one, it is manifest by that which we do read in this wise: And sendyng messengers from Miletus to Ephesus, he sente for the Priestes or Elders of the Churche, & when they came vnto him, he said: You knowe that from the firste day, &c. and a little after: Loke therfore to your selues and to all the flocke, in whiche the holy spirite hath sette you byshops to Fede the Churche of God, &c. The same whiche Luke calleth the priestes of the churche of Ephesus, those Paul calleth bishops, and sayth: that they be sette there to that intent, to fede the Churche of God. So we do see manifestly, that priestes or elders, byshops and pastors be al one: and that there was in one selfe same churche ioynaly together many byshops, and that appointed by the holy spirite, as we may see by that whiche wee do reade in the Apostle, saying: Paule and Timothee

Act. 20.

ποιμένες vdy.

Philip. 1.

the seruaunts of Iesus Christ, to all the saincts in Christe Iesu, whiche bee at Philippos togither with the Byshops & Deacons. Lo there was many byshops togither also at Philippos, and they were the priestes of the Elders of the congregation. And whereas wee do reade in the Epistle to Tite, saying: For this cause I left thee in Creta, that thou shouldest procede to redresse those things that be amisse, and ordeyne Priestes in euery towne, as I did appoynt to thee. If any bee without blame, &c. For a Byshop muste be without blame, &c. do not we see also here, that a bishop and a priest is al one: And in Peter these three wordes, Priestes, fede, and bishops, are referred by the Apostle all to one. Whereby you may see that in the Apostles tyme, Priests, Pastors, and Byshops were all one in the churche of Christ. And if any man list, let him reade of this matter in the Canon lawe, those things that be alleaged out of the writings of Jerome.

So that it is a cleere case out of all doubte, that there was this order taken in the firste and Apostolicke churche, by the Apostles, that the Elders of ỹ churche, that is, they which bore the charge of the Lords flocke, did with a common trauayle performe the mynisteries of teachyng and gouernance, and that they were as I might say, headlesse, that is subiect vnto no heade or president, as there bee many mynisters of the worde, founde also nowe adayes in some Churches, of whome none is superiour in office and power aboue the reste, although that one be better than the other, eyther in learning, ning, either in the gifte of vtterance, or wisedome. But after the Apostles tyme, when that as Jerome thinketh there sprong vp dissensions and Schismes betwixt the Elders of the church, and as I suppose it to be likely, when that temptation of greaternesse and superiorite gat once into the mindes of the Priestes, Pastors and Doctors, then men beganne to chose some one of the Elders, which shoulde be sette aboue the reste, and auaunced vnto a higher degree, and to be called a Byshop: & so he should onely and singularly be called so, as all the reste were commonly called before. Whether this deuice do any good or no to Christes churche, that Byshops are become rather of custome as Jerome sayth, than vpon any truthe of the Lordes appoyntement, whiche should be greater than the Priestes, it is better declared in these latter tymes, than when this custome was firste taken vp, whiche wee may thanke for all that pryde, wealth and tyranny of the princely and ryding Byshops, yea for the corruption of all Churches, whiche if Jerome sawe, no doubte he woulde acknowledge it to be not the deuice of the holy ghoste, to take away schismes, as it was pretended to be, but of Satan himselfe, to decay and destroy the olde ministeries in feeding the Lordes flocke, of whence it is come, that the churche hath not true Pastors, Doctors, Priests, and Byshops, but vnder the colours of these names, wee haue idle bellies and magnificall Princes, which do not fede the people of the Lorde themselues with holsome and Apostolicke doctrine onely, but they do also with moste wicked force lay wayte, that no manne else shall do it. So that by this deuice of Satan it is come to passe, that the Churches haue in stede of Byshops, mighty Lordes, and Princes, chosen for the moste parte of the degrees of the noble and highe bloud, so that bothe by themselues & holdfred also by the power of their kinsefolkes, they do rule as they luste, in the Lordes flocke. But lette vs leaue them, and come againe to the true ministers of Christes and Gods worde.

Two sorts of true Ministers of Christe.

Of thē there be two kindes. One of them whiche were specially appointed for the beginnyng of the dispensation of the gospell, as the Apostles, Prophetes and Euangelistes, they were appoynted to no speciall churches certainely. There is an other sort of them which do belong to the order of the ministery, whereby ỹ faithfull must be gouerned and fedde with the fode of life, throughout all the time of the new Testamēt, as be Pastors, Doctors, Priestes, and Byshops. These be appointed vnto certaine churches, and their office is to preache the gospell of God, to teache them that do erre, to correct them that do sinne, to rayse vp the weake, to withstande them that do speake against the faith, and to dispence to the Churches the mysteries of Grace giuen frō Christ. There was this māner of order prescribed vnto these bishops whiche followed the times of ỹ Apostles, ỹ they should preach to the people, & minister the sacraments, injoyne penaunce, beare the charge of clergie & people, aswel within ỹ citie, as also in ỹ coūtrie, ordein ministers, visite the sicke and needy, see that the

What is prescribed to Byshops after the Apostles tymes.

goodes

goodes of the churche were well kept and bestowed, finally to take vpon them the defence of innocentes towardes the Princes. So that in case Bishops had continued and marched vpon this ground, the churches should haue bene in better case, or if the Pastors & Prelates of oure time would come to these Canonical rules, there were some hope that it were not impossible, but that the estate and order of the Churche mighte be reformed, and the controuersies of this present time take away by the light of Gods worde. The Apostle doth requyre of a Bishop, that he do holde faste the faithfull saying, which is according vnto sounde doctrine, and that he be able by the same to exhorte and to conuince the that do speake agaynst it. And, That he be apte to teache. And, That he do apply readyng, exhortation, and doctrine. And, That he do reproue sinners before al men, that the rest may haue feare. Item, that he lay not handes hastely vpon no man, that is, that he do not vnaduisedly appoynt any man to the Ecclesiasticall mynisterie. And, That he do cut aright ỹ worde of the truth. And, That he do preache the worde, and stande to it, in season and out of season, that he do reproue, rebuke, exhort with al lenitie and doctrine, and that he do performe the worke of an Euangelist. And Peter requyred of ỹ Elders and Bishops, that they do feede the flocke of Christe, and that they be as paterns vnto the, takyng a care of them not by compulsiõ, but voluntarily.

V What the Apostle doth require of a Bishop.

Tit. 1.

1. Tim. 3.

1. Tim. 4.

1. Tim. 5.

2. Timoth. 2. & 4.

1. Peter. 5.

By this I suppose it is manifest inough, that the office of Elders and Bishops in the churche of Christ, is to feede the Lordes flocke with holy doctrine, and that they be Pastors & Doctors in deede. They do counterfayte a pastorall care, when they be cladde as they do thinke, Bishoplike, to celebrate the communion. They do put on a white Albe, somewhat longer than they be wont to weare, and takyng a girdle, not suche a one as John Baptist vsed, but a linnen one, they do girde their loynes withal, & so restraine their lõg & wide garmẽt, bycause it should not let them to goe, and so they thinke they do that mercuelous trimly, whiche the Lord sayde by a similitude: Lette your loines be girded in. They haue shoes put on vpon theyr feete, not suche as they be wõte to weare euery day, but slipper-lyke, such as men be wonte to weare when they goe abroade into the fielde, or when they woulde go a iourney. And so they do fulfill that saying of the Apostle: Shodde vpon your feete, that you may be ready to go aboute the Gospel of peace. Upõ theyr Albe they do caste on a lose cloke, and couer theyr head with a long myter, in steede of the shepardes cappe, as it were to defend the rayny weather. There hangeth downe at it two bandes, which shepards do occupy, to tie and to kẽpe on their cap agaynst the boysterous windes. And when they be thus disguysed, they take theyr shepe-hooke in theyr hãd, as though they woulde immediatly bring forth the Lordes flocke vnto the pastures. This fashion of garments the Greeke bishops vsed, according vnto the custome of the shepherdes of the East countries, and of Asia, which are so cladde when they kẽpe their shepe. And what cõmeth of this matter? When the maskyng shepeherde is thus disguised, he doth not feede the flocke of the Lord at al, although he be neuer so shepardlike cladde for the weather, but he goeth vp to sing Masse, with suche kinde of gesture, such ceremonies, and suche a languag, that in the church of God you shall finde nothing else but pompous and vayne sightes, all things so deckt vp with Golde, Siluer, Purple, Silke, Torches, Little bels, and Great belles, Singing, Organs, Musicke, and such a princely noyse, that if any of the Apostles were there hee cold not imagine, no not in a dreame, that this were the bishoplike feeding of the Lordes flocke. And when my Lorde bishop hath done this once or twice a yeere, he thinketh hee hath well done his dutie, whatsoeuer he do all the yeere long else. As for the making of mynisters, or whatsoeuer is else to be done in churchly matters, he dothe partly put it away to his Suffragane, and partely to hys Commissarie. All preachyng he leaueth to his Chaplaynes, maister Doctors, or to some Friers, but sweareyng him firste, so that he dare not for his lyfe once quinche otherwise, than it is in certayne formes & rules prescribed vnto him. Now what shal we say to the Priests? Some of them be regulare, and some irregulare. If I should speake English, and call thẽ Unruly or out of rule, it were a foule matter. Bothe of them do nothing else in the churche of God, but sing & say Masse, doing manifestly cõtrary vnto that whiche was forbidden by Pope Gregory, that none should sing Psalmes in the churche, but they of the lower degree, as Subdeacons: but that Deacons should apply readyng and preachyng. And if it were an vnfit matter for Deacons to sing in the church, howe muche more vncomly is it I beseech you, for priests: so that they do obserue nother the Canon of the Apostles, neyther the Decree of the Popes.

Let vs come to those ministers, as Pastors, and Bishops, which beyng of an other degree, do nothyng else in the churche of Christ but preach and teach. They haue certayne dayes in the weeke to preach. It is wel done. They do teach nothing else but scriptures. And that is wel done to. But that is not well, that there bee very many of them, do it so negligently, shiftingly, & coldly, that it may well be applyed vnto them that whiche Seneca sayth: It maketh not a mã warme, bycause these be not warme themselues: and as an Orator of Rome sayde: If thou shouldest say as thou inwardly thinkest, wouldest thou so say? They do not as they ought to do, cut the word of the Lord right and profitably, apply it to the edifying of theyr hearers, but they thinke that they haue done theyr dutie well inough, if they shifte out the matter, and make vp theyr houre. And withall they do not take heede of the disposition and doyngs of the people, much lesse they do redresse that whiche is amisse, nor they haue no care how the people do profite in the knowledge of God, the fayth of Christe, and true godlinesse: nor they do not giue thẽselues to the reading of the holy Scripture, nor cause the people to reade them at home, nor they make no reckyng of the power and strangers, nor they do not visite

Of some ministers of the gospell.

Let the minister of the gospell marke here.

the

the sicke, hauyng no care how and in what fayth they do departe out of this lyfe, and so they do occupie them selues in the mynisterie of Christe, nother faythfully, nother wisely, no nother profitably. It is a great matter surely, that they do not sowe straunge doctrine in the Churche of Christe: but do set forth doctrine taken out of the holy Scriptures, nor they do not vse any superstitious ceremonies, but they be cõtẽt with the simple administration of the Sacramentes, accordyng to the custome of the primitiue church: but we finde thẽ blame worthy in this, that they do not performe those things that be good and profitable earnestly and diligently, but they be slacke and negligent in them, and that they do vterly neglecte some things that a faithfull mynister ought to do besides. In this their ministration in deede they do bryng in no superstitions and errours into the church, as men haue done heretofore, but yet withal, they do fall too farre another way, and giue occasion to the people to fall by little and little into a certaine Indifferency in religion, most pestilent of al things, and to become Epicures, to destroy & extinguish all maner of religion. In theyr ministerie there is no mã afrayd, least there shoulde spring vp hypocrites, superstitious folkes, worshippers of images, and iusticiaries. They dw quite themselues and others also well inough of this care. If all Christendome were so wel, do you think they were without blame? No, for whereas nowe it is requyred of the faythfull, not onely ỹ they be not superstitious, hypocrites, iusticiaries, and worshippers of Images, but that they shoulde be also truely faithfull, sounde in the fayth of Christe, in the feare of God, in hope and Charitie, and in newnesse of life: I suppose it is to manifest, that this kinde of men in ỹ ministerie of Christ is not without blame. Wherefore I do beseche them in the Lorde, that they will be diligent to do and fulfill theyr mynisterie, not by peece meale, but by the full.

Hitherto we haue noted some few pointes of the office of the ministers of the worde. Besides those there were chosen & ordayned firste at Ierusalẽ Deacons vnder the Apostles: the vse of whiche was turned ouer also into other Churches: but since that time the firste order of them is worne out, and the bare name onely left. For the first ordinaunce of them was in this wyse: When the number of Disciples increased, there began to be a murmure of the Grekes agaynst the Ebrewes, for that theyr widowes were despised in the dayly ministery. But when the twelue had commaunded the multitude of the disciples to assemble, they sayd: We like not that we must leaue ỹ worde of God, and mynister to the tables. Wherfore loke out among the bretherne seuen men of you of tried honesty, ful of the holy spirite and wisedome, to whome we shall cõmit this businesse. And we shall gyue our selues to prayer & to the ministratiõ of the word. And this saying pleased the multitude. And they chose Stephan, &c. Therfore Deacons, that is ministers, were ordeyned to this intent, to serue the tables in the dayly ministery of the foode, that the Apostles stles might not be letted frõ the ministery of the worde. These were the almes bestowers, of these thinges which were giuen by the faythful, in the meetings at the churches & other where, to the releefe of the poore, the straunge widowes, and fatherlesse. Eusebius in his Historia ecclesiastica saithe, that they had the ouersighte of the common things of the church. Afterwarde they began to sing in the church, as we may see in the History of Athanasius, and appeareth also by the decree of Gregory, whereof wee made mention before. Furthermore for asmuch as after the former order of the mynistring the communion, there was collections made and bestowed amõg the poore, and that done by the Deacons. It came to passe at length, that chãging theyr first way, they were appoynted to the mynistryng of the sacraments, after that it was enioyned them to reade or to sing the gospell at the Communion. In fine they were put also to publike preachyng. So that by this time the Deacons are muche chaunged from theyr first institution in the Church. The Apostles would not be combred with cõmon matters, but layde that burthen vpõ the Deacons shoulders, that they mought apply prayers, & the ministery of the worde. Now adayes the successors of the Apostles do forsake the ministerie of the worde, and do themselues employ these things to the fẽding of theyr wãton lustes, whiche the Deacon by vertue of his office was wonte to bestowe to the vse of the poore. And wouldde to God the churches that do professe the gospel, would vse the office of the Deacons as it ought to be.

Of the Chosing and ordeynyng of the Ministers of the VVorde.

It is to rash a thing for a man to thrust himselfe into the ministery. Ebrew. 5.

For asmuch as it were to muche rashe dealyng & not conuenient, that a man shoulde take to himselfe the honor of the ministerie of God, seyng that nother Christ himself did glorifie himselfe to be a Bishop, consequently wee muste consider vpon the chosing and ordayning of mynisters. We sayde before that there be two sortes of mynisters of the word. And accordyng to the diuersitie of them, so there be two wayes of chosing them also: one certainly of God, the other by the Churche. That of God is the same, wherby Moses, Aaron, the Prophetes, John Baptist, Christe, and the Apostles were chosen by God. This kinde of choyce is done partely by the meanes and inspiration of the holy spirite: so the Prophetes were chosen partely by heauenly callyng frõ heauen, so Moses and Aaron: and so the Apostles were partely chosen by the Lorde himselfe. The election by the church is, when neyther Prophets nor Apostles, but Priests, Byshops, Pastors, and Doctors are chose to the worke of the mynisterie. And we do see that this manner of Election is growen oute of kynde, from the custome of the primitiue Church. When there was one to be appoynted vnto Iudas place, to accomplish the numbre of twelue, by the aduice of Peter, it was done in the middes of the brethren, that is of the Disciples and beleeuers, whiche were then assembled togither at that tyme to the nũbre of a hundred and twenty. And it

Two maner of chosing of ministers.

A decay of the chosing after the Primitiue church was done in this sorte: They chose two out of the whole numbre, which both they iudged no doubt to be meet men for that place, that is to witte, Joseph called Barsabas, and surnamed Justus, & Mathias. Those they did place in the middes of the brethren, and making stricte theyr prayers vnto God, desiring him to shewe whom he chose for himselfe, they did cast a lotte after the manner of theyr fathers: and the lotte fell vpon Mathias. And they accompted him with the number of the eleuen Apostles. Afterwarde when there shoulde bee Deacons chosen, the Apostles called togither the multitude of the Disciples, and badde them chose amongst them seuen men, full of the holy spirite, & of good reporte. And they chose them, and presented those which they had chosen to ỹ Apostles, who praying vnto God, layde handes vpon thē. So they were chosen also in the assembly of the faythfull, and after that they were chosen, they were ordayned or instituted by the Apostles by laying handes vpon them. No doubt the Apostles kepte still this manner of chosing and ordayning. Wherfore whereas we do reade in the Actes that Paule & Barnabas did ordaine Priests at Iconium, Lystra, and Antioche, it is not to be take otherwise, but that it was done in the assemble of the faythfull, and whiles whē they were present. They did also cōfirme them in the fayth. Hereof we haue a manifest argument in Luke, where he sayth: And when they had ordayned Priestes in euery churche, & had prayed with fasting, they commended them to the Lord, in whom they beleeued. Therfore they did ordaine Priestes chosen by the faythful with prayer and fastyng, whiche was wont to be done in the assēbly of the faithfull: and after that ordinaunce they commended the congregation vnto the Lorde, and departed. This fashiō of chosing and ordayning Priestes & Byshops, the Apostle doth commend also vnto his workefellowes, Tite and Timothée, saying: For this cause I lefte thée in Creta, that thou shouldest reforme those things that be lacking, and shouldest ordayne elders in euery Citie, as I appointed thée. For who can beleeue, that he did otherwise appoynt Titus, than he and the rest of the Apostles were wōt to do?

Therefore according to the example & order of the Apostles, Priestes, Pastors, and Byshops, yea and Deacons also, in the primitiue Churche were chosen by the people in the assembly of the Churche, by the lifting vp theyr handes: and so beyng orderly chosen, they were confirmed and ordinated by prayer and laying on of handes of the Byshops and Elders, which were at the election: And this fashion of election continued in the churches vntill Cyprians time, as we may see by his wordes. For thus he writeth: Wherfore the people following the commaundements of the Lorde, and fearyng God, must sequester themselues from a sinful gouernour, and not intermeddle in the sacrifice of a wicked Priestе, whereas they haue power specially to chose worthy Priestes, or to repell the vnworthy. Which thyng we do see also cōmeth from the authoritie of God, that the Priest must be chosen vnder the eyes of all men, the people beyng present: and that he that is worthy and meete, may be alowed by the publicke iudgement and testimonie, &c. And a little after: That eyther the faults of the wicked may be opened, and the merites of the good folkes reported in the presence of the people, that the ordinaunce may be right and lawfull, whiche is examined and tryed by the voyces and iudgements of all men, whiche is afterwardes obserued according vnto Gods teachyng in the Actes of the Apostles. And in the same place: Wherefore (sayth he) the same is diligently to be kepte and holden faste of the godly and apostolical tradition of God and the Apostles, whiche is kepte also with vs and almost in al Prouinces, that to vse the ordayning of mynisters aright, all ỹ bishops of the prouince being neare, must assemble vnto that people, whiche the Pastor must haue appointed them, and that there be chosen a Bishop when the people which doth fully know euery mans lyfe is present, and hath perceyued euery mans doings by his conuersation. This saith he.

Act. 14.

And in the.xxiij. Distinction wée reade this: The sure & lawfull order of election is cōsidered, if that loking to the rules and doings of diuers of the fathers, that sentēce of Pope Leo our predecessor be remēbred. There is no reason (sayth he) to suffer that they shoulde be taken for Byshops, whiche neither be chosen by the clergie, nor desired by the people, nor cōsecrate by the Bishops of the same prouince, with the iudgement of the Metropolitane.

And in the Canon folowing: Whē he hath bene (saith he) examined in all these things, and found throughly well furnished, then lette him be ordeyned and made Byshop, with the cōsent of the Clergie and Laitie, and the assembly of the Bishops of the whole prouince, chiefly eyther by the authoritie or presence of the Metropolitane. &c. See also the. Lxiij. Distinction of the holy Canons.

So that after this manner Priestes, Bishops, and Deacons, were chosen in tymes paste, whiche the Churches vsed vntill the tymes of Christian Princes and Magistrates, whose consent was requyred to the election of Bishops: and not without cause. For it is not conuenient that those thyngs whiche be done publickely, and dothe also concerne the people that be subiect vnto them: yea and suche things as for religion doth also touche themselues, shoulde bee done without theyr consience and consent (vnlesse we will say with the madde Anabaptistes, that Princes and Magistrates bee not Christians, nor can not pertayne to the Churche of the faythfull) The Bishop of Rome did abyde this order vntill it was thought good that the election of the Bishop of Rome should be of no strength without the consent of the Emperoure of Rome. So the interest to chose the bishop of Rome, was giuen to the Emperour. And ỹ electiō of the bishops of Rome was graunted by Lewes to the Romaynes. But when they thought that this consent of the Emperoure wente not as they woulde haue it, they did deuise by the crafte of Satan to pretende a prerogatiue of the Churche of Rome and Apostolicke, and so they did shake off aswell this custome & right of the Emperours,

The cōsent of Princes and Magistrates.

The Emperour did chose the byshop of Rome, which is now void.

Dist. 3. can. Adrianus P. P.

Dist. eadem

How the lawfull election was disanulled.

as the right also of the people. And this they did the boldlyer, when they had the disposition of other Kinges and Princes more inclyned vnto them. This when the power and gayne also of Bishops grewe to be greate vnder Christian Princes, and when dissentions and deuices of Schismes ouerwhelmed the church, forsakyng the olde and primitiue, godly, apostolicke, and lawfull election and ordinaunce of ministers of the worde, they begaune to thrust into the Churches, men vnknowen to the people, not lawfully chosen, but brought in either by the trauaile of the parties, eyther at the luste of Princes, eyther by the meanes of fauour, prayng, or paying of the Bishoppes: whereof our times do very well beare witnesse. Thus we haue the Horsekepers of the Cardinalles of Rome, the Courtiers, Bawdes, Souldiers, &c. sente into other Kings dominions, to possesse the Churches, specially the riche ones, whome the people of Christe neuer knewe at all. And this is made nowe an vniuersall case, that there is no election of the ministers of the worde in the Romishe Churches: whereof Ierome also lamented that it began in his time, where he sayth: Many do builde churches, and make greate pillers, &c. but of the ministers of Christe there is no choyse made. Penne do runne to the Bishoppes suffragans certayne times of the yeere, and bryngyng a peece of money, they be anoynted and ordinate, not chosen by any. And the Bishoppes be chosen without any lawfull election by the Canons alone in a corner, without any knowledge of the people. And the very olde simplicitie of orders is chaunged into I wote not what, worldly pope rather than Christian. But what skylleth it by whome and howe, and who bee ordeyned, when they be ordeyned not to the ministerie of the worde, that is to feede, but to deuoure the sheepe of Christe: to serue not Christe, but the courte of Rome and theyr owne bellies? For it skilleth not so muche, by whome and howe, as whereunto ministers be chosen. The very estate, orders, doctrine, rytes, Sacramentes, ministers of the Churche are degenerate frō the institution of the Lorde, what maruell is it then, if the fashion of the chosing and ordeynyng be altered?

In Epistola de Vita clericorum.

But some man peraduenture will obiect vnto me, that ỹ same churches which wold seeme to reforme things that are amisse in the doctrine and Christian religiō in our time, do not themselues chose the ministers of the word with the people, but taketh them that be appoynted to them of the Magistrate. I am compelled to say of this matter what I do think, not for them which do obiect this vnto vs, but because of the vnlearned and weake, whiche though they do faythfully minister in the worde of the Lorde, yet they be wonte sometymes to doubt of their calling, whether it be lawful or not. Because they be not elect and ordeyned after the Apostolicke fashion which the churches vsed in times past. No doubte we must cōfesse that the ministers of Christe that in tymes passe were ordeyned and confirmed by the laying on of the handes of the Elders, after that that they were chosen by the presence and assent of the people, as we declared before: secondly that the same fashion of chosing was Apostolicke and lawfull: thirdly that it is agreeable vnto the libertie and power of the Church, whereof Cyprian made mention: and that the same fashion, when men were thrust in to be ministers of the people of Christe, not chosen by them, agreeth not with the free church, but with the church that is in subiection: fourthly that it doth much auayle, that the minister may with a clere conscience gouerne the flocke of the Lorde, by whome hee is chosen to bee their Pastor, Doctor and Bishop, and that the flocke of the Lord may on the otherside more easily yelde themselfe to be gouerned and fedde by him, than by the same that is brought in without the consent, will and election of the people. All these things I say, be certayne, and cannot to be sayde to the contrary. But if you consider the state of the churche now farre other than it hath bene, you shalbe dryuen to graunt, that the same which is of it selfe Apostolike, lawfull, accustomed, & agreeing with the free church, might do wel in the first times of the Church, but not so in our times. For then the faythfull people were not of so great numbers, but that there might bee a minister chosen by all mens voyces in publicke assemblies, without any tumulte, whiche nowe adayes shoulde bee very hardely wrought. Besides that, the hartes of the faithful were not blinded with vniuersal errours and false worshippings, but they stacke yet fast to the doctrine and religion which they had receyued of the Apostles. Wherefore it might well be that there might bee chosen a true minister of Christe in the middes of the people by common voices. But after that the multitude of ỹ beleuers grew to be very great, and that Schismes began to beare a swynge in the churches, then an vniuersall blindenesse and ignorance preuailed euery where in the church: and when the puritie of the Apostolicke doctrine was gone, false opinions bare rule, and true religion was exchaunged for sundry kyndes of superstitions, then there coulde not bee chosen any more a sincere minister of Christe by the common assent of the people: so that it is not without reason, that the olde fashiō of chosing ministers is forsaken a greate whyles passe in the Romishe Churches, by the craftie deuise of the Bishoppes, and it coulde not bee immediatly restored, neyther in the Churches of the gospell, bicause there coulde not bee immediatly gotten a common and vniuersall consent of the people, to chose a minister of the doctrine of the Gospell. Wherefore considerying the condition of the tymes, very necessitie requyred, that the Magistrates and Princes shoulde bee induced vnto this, by the meanes of some fewe men whiche were of a better iudgement, and desired the commoditie of Christes Churche, to appoynt faithfull and learned Pastors ouer their subiectes, whiche shoulde instructe them to the true knowledge of Christe, by the worde of lyfe, albeit there were yet many that did abhorre the doctryne of the truth. Considerynge these circumstaunces of the tymes, lyke as there can not be restored by and by in all Churches the Apostolyke fashion of election and ordinaunce, so there is no cause why the mynister of Christ, called by the godly Magistrate or Prynce, to preache the gospel, should stagger or stande in doubte of hys vocation, whether it be righte or no: but wee muste thynke, that when the estate of the churche and religiō is corrupt, there muste be sought an other way to redresse the things corrupte, than the same whiche was accustomed in the Churches, when all things were safe and sounde.

The necessitie of our times.

They that be not lawfully called, do make the doubt of the calling.

They that do seeke rather to maintayne the authoritie of the Bishops, than the saluation of the faythfull, when they can not charge the mynisters of Christe, that be called by the Magistrate, of any falsehode of doctrine, they do make a questiō of their callyng, beyng themselues neyther lawfully elect nor called, and they say: What Suffragan made thée a Priestе? What Bishop called thée to any office in the Churche? So the Priestes asked of Christ in the temple: By what power doest thou this? And who gaue thée this authoritie? as if they shoulde say: The power and interest to speake in this temple lieth in vs. That which thou doest, thou doest not by lawfull authoritie. They made no question to the facte it selfe, whiche they coulde not blame, but they made a quarrell to his authoritie. Likewise these menne also, for as much as they can not maynteyne by the authoritie of Goddes worde theyr manifeste errours and abuses, nor reproue the doctrine of the truthe to bée a lie, they do runne to the authoritie and power of the Bishop, as though they had that clére and lawfull, whereas they do neyther fulfill the office of a Bishop, nor haue not eyther the power or authoritie of true Byshoppes. Wherefore lette not the true and sincere mynister of Christe make any account of theyr barking, but content him with the testimonie of hys owne conscience, and with the vocation that he is called by a lawfull Magistrate to the office of teaching, and procéede on with a quicke and wel minded spirite, in the worke of the Lorde.

And for as much as we be fallen into this matter, I thynke the reader wil not mislike, if I declare how the mynisters of the worde be chosen and confirmed in this famous Churche of Berna, whiche is after this order. When the necessitie of the churche dothe require, that there bée chosen a minister, there is knowledge gyuen from the Councell or Senate of the towne to the mynisters of the worde, to loke about for some, whome they shall iudge méete for that purpose, and to chose him by common voyces, and presente hym to the Councell. If it happen that suche a one be chosen by them, whose fayth, learnyng, and doctrine be not well inough tried, the Senate sendeth him to the mynisters agayne to haue him examined, and when they haue made a further triall of him, to certifie the Councell agayne howe they finde hym méete or not. If he bée founde méete, the election of him is ratified by the Senate or Councell, if hée bée to be sente to any church abroade in the countrie: but if he be to serue the Lorde within the citie, the election of him is put ouer to the great Councell, whiche doth consiste of all the accustomed Magistrates, and a greate sorte of Citizens also chosen out of the people. Here the consentes be taken by holding vp of hands, whereby he that is chosen, is eyther confirmed, either refused. So the election standeth in the ministers of the worde, & the confirmation in the Councell. The minister whiche is chosen & confirmed by the Senate, if he shall serue in the countrie, carrieth letters with hym from the councell to ỹ Magistrate of that place, and afterwarde when commoditie serueth, hée is brought and presented to the Churche wherin he muste serue the Lorde. And he is presented by the authoritie of the Councell and the Ecclesiasticall order also. For there is sente to that presentmēt some Senator, and some one mynister of the worde, whiche dothe with an open oration appoynt and commende vnto the people there presente, the Pastor that is chosen: and that not without prayers to the Lorde, that hée will vouchesafe to ayde and assiste hym in all the course of hys mynisterie, with the grace of hys spyrite, that hée may gouerne to the profite of the churche committed vnto him, and to the glorie of hys name. I suppose that this order of election, confirmation and presentation is suche, that in case the same order of theyrs bée not too negligently vsed bothe by the Mynisters and the Councell, but if it bée handled diligently and earnestly, and that with the feare of the Lorde, and with desire to helpe the Churches, it can not bée done without fruyte, nor otherwyse then shal become the mynisterie. But if thys diligence doe lacke: and that the elections of the Churche come not to the due ende, the faulte muste be layde not to the manner of the chosing, confirming, and presentyng, but vnto the sluggishnesse and heauynesse of them whiche through theyr defaulte doe make that vnprofitable, whiche mighte bée profitably handled.

Vniuersitie of the citie of Berna.

Two vniuersities in the territory of Berna.

I will adde that also. For asmuch as the noble state of Berna hath a large dominion and territorie full of Euangelicall churches, it hath appointed two Vniuersities in it: One in the Citie it selfe, and an other at Lawsanna: in which there be continually mainteyned and brought vp a certaine numbre of yong men to studie diuinitie. Frō thence some be takē as they be thought méete to serue in the churches as Deacons, & they be trayned vp in the office of Deacons, so long till they may be auaunced, as necessitie dothe require, to the degrée of Priests and Pastors. I beséeche God, that those things whiche be well meant and institute here and in other common wealths, may haue euer a faythfull, constant, diligent & frutefull execution. Thus much of the electiō and ordayning of the mynisters of the worde.

Of the powver of the Ministers.

This matter is meruaylous contentiously, and continually tossed and tumbled by thē, whiche haue still aspired more to the preeminence of a higher power, rather than to the lawfull dispensation in the ministerie, coueting rather to haue dominiō in the Churches, than to minister. Yea & there be now adayes also many of them assaulted with this temptation, which haue shaken off the tyranny of the Bishop of Rome, and would séeme that they haue deliuered the churches of Chriſte, vnto the libertie, purchased by Chriſt. Otherwise they be good men, faithfully & diligently applying the mynisterie of teachyng, & this wayes they thinke they shall do good to the Churches, if they can bryng the ministerie of the worde from that contempte that it is had in euery where & neglected, and restore it to the olde honour of the same. On the other side there be some that be not euill and learned also, and laborying in the worde of the Lorde, whiche doe stande agaynſt them, fearyng least through theyr vnaduised care and zeale, there may bée gappes opened to bryng in by littell and a littell the olde Lordlinesse into the Churches, that is, least they by the authoritie whiche they take vppon them by the mynisterie of the worde, make a waye for false and vnfaythfull mynisters, to abuse the authoritie gotten by them otherwise than they ought to do. And they do thinke that it is reason to heare this, when they looke backe to the begynnyngs of the Popishe lordlinesse, and consider howe goodly a pretence it hath, and howe it was brought into the Churches through the zeale of greate and holy menne, immediatly after the times of the Apostles. So that where as the one side will haue the minister to bée aboue all: they do laye agaynſt them quite contrarie, that the mynister is vnder al. And there groweth suche contentions sometymes vpon this, that they do foulye breake out to raylyng in theyr open Sermons, when they shoulde fede the people with the worde of the Lorde, to the great hinderaunce of the Churche. The carnall people whiche desireth to the libertie of the flesh more than of the spirite, is gladde to embrace their opinions, whiche do affirme that the mynister of the worde is not onely not aboue all, but also lowest of all. And I feare me, least they that do faythfully serue Chriſte, shall be to lowe and vylely trodden vnder foote more than the rest.

Leauyng therefore the imaginations of bothe partes, dangerous in this respecte that they do tende to extremities, we will endeuour to giue them occasion to iudge more temperatly of the authoritie of mynisters, if they will embrace not onely that whiche is in some meanyng right, but those things whiche be also profitable for the Churche.

First of all, We muſt in any wise confesse, that there is ioyned some power to the ministerie of the worde and the dispensation of Gods mysteries, whiche is profitable, and good to edifie, yea necessary to our saluation by Chriſte. That is meante by a similitude sette forth by Chriſte himself, when he sayth: Who thinke you is the faythfull and wyse seruaunt whiche the Lorde will sette ouer his household, to gyue thē meate in due season? He meaneth that hée will gyue his Disciples suche, or like power ouer his Churche, as they haue, to whome the good man of the house committeth his household, to minister vnto them conuenient foode. And in Marke: Like as the manne (saith hée) that wente forth into a straunge countrey, lefte his house, and gaue his seruauntes authoritie, and to euery manne his worke, and charged the porter to be wakefull. Therefore wake you, &c. This hée spake no doubte to his Disciples, to declare what theyr estate shoulde be in Goddes house, when hée shoulde be gone from them into Heauen. And the Apoſtle when he sayth: And if I shoulde glorie somewhat more yet of our power, whiche the Lorde hath gyuen vs to your edifying, and not to destruction, I néede not to be ashamed. And, Therefore I do write this beyng absente, leaſte when I am present, I shoulde be somewhat rough, according to the power whiche the Lorde hath gyuen mée, to edifying and not to destruction, &c. he dothe playnely declare, that there is power giuen by the Lorde to the ministers of the worde, if they bée true and doe their duetie faythfully, whiche muste be to edifie, and not to destroy.

Secondly, we muſt sée, what manner of power it is that is graunted to the mynisters of the worde, by the Lorde. And I suppose it were expedient here to sée, what kindes of powers are to bée considered in this present matter. All power is eyther of righte, eyther of office, of reason and equitie, eyther by counsell it is lawfull, eyther bycause a man is able to do it. The power of right is, when a man hath rule ouer his own things, not subiect vnto any other bodies righte. In this sense Peter vsed that worde ἐξουσιαν, when hée spake to Ananias of the fielde that was solde, saying: Was it not in thine owne power? And the Apoſtle: Or hath not the potte maker power of the earth? So Princes and rulers bée called powers. This power of righte, is deliuered to Chriſt the Sonne of God from the Father. All power (sayth he) is gyuen to mée in Heauen and in Earth. This power Peter taketh from the mynisters of Chriſte, when hée sayth: Neyther vsing Lordlinesse. And the Apoſtle dothe shake it from hym, saying: Wée do not lordly rule your fayth. And hée dothe exhorte the faythfull, that they do not submit themselues vnto them, whiche would vse a lordlynesse ouer them, when hée sayth: Become not the seruauntes of men. Wherefore they that do chalenge themselues this authoritie in the house of God, endeuoryng to bée not the mynisters of Chriſte, but Lordes of the Churche, firſte they bée iniurious to the maiestie of Chriſte, and nexte to the libertie of the Churche. As many as doe this, be of the kingdome of Antichriſte, who dothe take the place of Chriſte in the Churche, and dothe arrogate vnto hymselfe his power, and is rightly called bothe the aduersarie and vicare of Chriſte, not onely for that that hée is agaynſt Chriſte, but also for that that hée dothe thruste himselfe into the Churche in stéede of hym. Lyke as he is not called a false Captayne onely, that dothe stande agaynſt him that is the Captayne in déede, but he also that dothe thruste and set forth himselfe to the souldiours to be their Acts.5.

Rom.9.

Matth.28.

1.Peter.5.

Antichriſt.

Captayne

Captayne when he is not so: For as muche as this preposition ἀντὶ in Greeke, signifieth both Agaynst and For: so both he is called Antichrist, that is an aduersarie and Vicare also of Christe. Wherefore who soeuer taketh vpon him the power of right in the Churche, and practiseth Lordlinesse vpon the flocke of the Lorde, is the member and companio of Antichristе. And of those be yet now adayes, that doe turmoyle heauen and earth togither, to defend the sea and power of Antichristе, leaste they should lose the head of this wickednesse, & then be brought into some order.

The powver of righte, of tvvo sorts.

And this power of right is of two sortes. The one is that whiche is giuen and gotten from an other: the other is that whiche is not giuen nor gotten from any other. The firste is that of Christe the sonne of God, which toke frō God the father, as by inheritance beyng his only begotten sonne, the power of al things that be in earth and in heauen. The latter is that of God the father, whiche hath power of himselfe and not from any other vpon all things, as Lorde ouer his own things, and creator ouer his creatures, from whom is all power either equall either inferiour: equal in Christe his onely begotten sonne, inferiour in the things created as well in that which is heauenly, as that whiche is earthly. But of this highe and chiefe power, we neede not here to speake.

The powver of office.

The power of office, is that which is giuen to the ministers from him, whose ministers they be. Of this there be two partes. The one is, whereby they be discharged frō any blame of vnfaithfulnesse, in that that they do minister to the Lorde, for as muche as they do minister not at their owne arbitrement, but by reason of the office layde vppon them. They haue not this power which do runne with the false Prophetes, whē they be not sente. No man can minister without blame that is not rightly chosen & called, though that otherwise he do those things whiche are good to be done. The other parte of this power is that, whereby those things whiche the minister dothe by vertue of his office, are accepted before his Lorde, and ought to be allowed of them, whose minister he is appoynted to be by the Lord, as well as though they were done by the Lorde himselfe. Both partes do depende vpon the will of him, that hath the power of right. This power giueth authoritie vnto the minister that is chosen by him, to minister, and to minister according vnto the qualitie of his office. The firste you may well call, The power to minister, and this laste, The power to minister this or that wayes.

Yet this power of office is of two sorts: Determinate & Indeterminate.

It is Determinate, in asmuche as it hath a prescript, the bounds whereof the minister may not excēde: as if it bee prescribed to an Embassadour what he shall do, and what not do, hee receyueth a determinate power of his embassade. So that if he do adde any thyng of his owne head, or diminishe any thing, he runneth in the daunger & blame of doing amisse. The Indeterminate power is that, when in accessarie matters whiche doe not hinder the principall poynte, poynt, the minister may do and order what he shall iudge meete for the profyte of his maister, valesse it bee namely forbidden by him.

All this power of office both most truely belong to the true ministers of Christ. They haue power to minister vnto the Lord in his Church. All they that do beleeue in Christ and be borne of God, haue the power to be the Children of God: but all haue not power to minister in the Church of God, but they onely whiche haue obteyned it by lawful election. This parte of power must not be contemned of them whiche be rightly called to minister vnto Christe. Nor they ought not to be accounted for true Christians, which do not honor this parte in the ministers of Christe. Whē that is decayed in the Church, so that the saying also of Jerome, There is no choyse of the ministers of Christ, may haue place, knowe it to be the manifest token of the decay of Christendome. They whiche goe about now adayes to extinguishe the light of the truth, do crake exceedyng muche of the power of the Bishops, Archbishops, Metropolitans, Patriarches, and Popes of Rome, whyche for all that can not proue by anye truth of Gods institution, that thys principall power of ministers of Christe is in the Bishops, Archbishops, Metropolitans, Patriarches, and Popes of Rome, the galantes of Christes Churche. Let them teach vs that these are the true ministers of Christ. I striue not for the Bishoprieke it selfe, whether it bee to be accompted amōg the ministeries of Christ or no: but the contention is whether that such Bishops as oure times do ouer-patiētly abide, ought to be reckened amongst the true ministers of Christ or no. Surely they ought to be afeard, least they shall heare that horrible saying of the Lord at the day of Judgemente: Departe from me you workers of wickednesse, I know you not. Math. 25.

Secondly, the ministers of Christ haue the second part also of thys power, that they doe not only minister, but that they doe minister to hym in the worde of grace, in the Gospell of the kingdome, in the doctrine of lyfe and true saluatiō, and the dispensing of Gods misteries: whiche kinde of ministerie doth not immediately fall vnto all the ministers of God. Who is able sufficiently to wey the dignitie and excellencie of it, much lesse to expresse it in wordes? What is the matter that the excellencie of this power, seemeth to be so common and of so light estimation vnto those menne which leaue the ministerie of Preaching and teaching, and deuise to vse I wote not what power of commandements in the Church? They saye, whereas there is a maioritie, there is also authoritie to commaunde. Why do they not say, Where the ministerie of Christe is, there is power to teache and preach? And there are verye fewe of thys number also whiche doe preache the Gospell of Christe, that doe take this power of preaching the worde of life, for a power giuen of God, and esteeme it any thing. To this power that saying of Christ is annexed: He that heareth you, heareth me, And, What soeuer you do lose in the earth, shall be lose also in Heauen. And agayne, What soeuer you do binde vpon the earthe, Luc. 10. Mat. 16.

shall be bound in heauen. It is euen as muche as if he saide: I will haue your ministerie to be so allowed, that I will haue youre worde to be of as greate authoritie, as if it were spoken by my selfe: and that they which doe beleeue it, shall be as verily losed from theyr sinnes in the earth, as though they were losed from them in Heauen. And on the other syde, that they whyche doe not beleeue, shall continue as verilye charged and bounde with theyr sinnes in the earthe, as if they were bounde in Heauen.

The determinate power.

But thys authorized certaynetie of the ministerie hath place in them whych do stand in a determinate power, nor doe not excéede the lisles of it, nor bring anye thyng besides the prescription of Gods worde. For this authoritie dothe certainely depende vpon the worde of God, which though it be spoken by man, as the minister, yet it is not mans worde but Gods, and therefore ought not to bée contemned according to the baseneſſe of the minister, but it deserueth godlye authoritie according vnto the maiestie & truth of God. So that Chriſte is then truly and rightly heard at the mouth of the minister, whē he preacheth not his owne or any other mās worde, but Chriſtes himselfe, and so doth lawfully vse this determinate power of his ministerie. He that despiseth suche a Minister, despiseth Chriſt himselfe.

The Indeterminate power.

The ministers of Chriſt haue also a certaine Indeterminate power, which we take to be in those thyngs whereof there is nothing determined by expresse worde of the Lord, and yet doth help some wayes, that their ministerie may be the better or more profitably accomplished, or be otherwise profitable or also necessarye to the edifying of the Churche. As for the Apoſtles, there was no place determined to them where they should preach and teach, but they receyued a commaundemente of the Lorde to preach the Goſpell euery where thorough out all the world, and to teach all nations. So that in this respecte they had an indeterminate power to Preach, for asmuche as they myghte preach in all places of the world, restreyned to no Church. Such Indeterminate power the Euangeliſtes & Prophets haue also: but Bishops, Prieſts, and pastors haue not so. For they be restreyned to the Churches, to which they be appoynted by lawfull election and ordinance. It is not méete that a Bishop do conuerte the power of his ministerie to other Churchés, but to minister faithfully in the same wherein he is elected and confirmed, like as it was not conuenient for the Apoſtle to conuert hys Apoſtleship to a Bishoprycke, and to be restreyned to one Church onely: whiche is falsely attributed vnto the Apoſtle Peter. Wherefore lette the Bishops loke to themselues, whych whereas they do not lawfully minister in one Church, yet they do extēd their power not to a few Churches, but vnto whole prouinces also. Let them reade Chryſoſtome vpō the Epiſtle to Tite the firſt Chapter: By Cities, sayth he. In déede he wouldе not haue a whole yſlande committed vnto one man, but euery mā to haue his charge and care alone. This is Chryſoſtome. Héereby you maye sée, what is to be iudged of that that is redde redde in the Epiſtle of Pelagius in this wise: Know you that a prouince is that whiche hath tenne, or eleuen Cities, and one King, and as manye inferiour powers vnder him, and one Bishoppe, and other tenne or eleuen ſuffragans or Bishops, &c. In thys place there be tenne Bishops wyth their Churches, that is a whole prouince, ſubiect vnto the power of one Bishop. At length it came to paſſe, ỹ the Bishoppes of the Cities loſt also the verye name of the Bishoprycke. Yea the impudencie of the eſtate of Bishops is become so great, that a nūber of Bishoprykes be ſwalowed vppe in the gormandiſe of some Metropolitan Bishop, ſuch as there bée many now adayes, and the Bishop of Rome euen like the Deuill painted with his wide mouth, deuoureth vp all the Bishoprickes and Churches of the world, chalenging to him selfe an vniuerſall and an indeterminate power vpon al the whole flocke of the Lords, whereas he serueth not as much as one Church, vnleſſe thys be to serue all mens conſciences, and to picke their purses.

Whereſoeuer a Bishop be (ſayth Jerome) eyther at Rome, eyther at Euguby, or at Conſtantinople, or Reghium, or Alexādria, or Thebes, or Guarmatia, it hath all one power and prieſthood. The power of riches, or baſeneſſe, or peuertie, maketh not a Bishop higher or lower. But al be the ſucceſſors of the Apoſtles. Thys ſayeth he. And Saint Cyprian ſayth thus: Surely the reſt of the Apoſtles were ỹ verye ſame that Peter was, endowed with like condition, both of honor and of power: but the begynning proceédeth of vnitie, to declare that héere is one Church. And a little after: Whiche vnitie we muſt likewiſe holde and ſtande vnto, ſpecially we Bishops, which haue rule in the Church, to declare that the Byſhoppricke it ſelfe is one and vndeuided. Let no man deceyue the brotherhod with a lye, lette no man corrupte the truth of your faith by falſe trāſgreſſion. There is one Byſhoppricke, whereof euery man taketh a parte in the whole. And in the ſeconde booke: But we do know (ſaith he) that ther be ſome whiche will not leaue nor eaſily forſake that whiche they haue once taſted of, but they will kéepe certaine things to themſelues, which they haue once vſed: not breaking the bond of peace and concord amōg their friends and felowes. Wherein we will not vſe violence, or giue any law to reſtreyne any man, ſeing that euery Paſtor hathe the frée arbitrement of his owne will, in the adminiſtration of his Churche, and ſhall make an accompt of his doing to the Lord. And in an other place he wryteth the very ſame of Biſhops. And yet nother he nor Jerome when they wrote this, did euer thinke vpon the power of anye Patriarches, Metropolitans, or of the Popes primacie, but they were of the opinion that al Byſhops had like charge & power, euery man in his owne Churche.

Lib. 2. epiſt.

Lib. 4. Epiſt. 2. & 7.

The election of Mathevve and the ſeuen Deacons.

But let vs returne to the indeterminate authoritie of ỹ miniſters of Chriſt. 1 The Lord had determined nothing to the Apoſtles, concerning the choſing of any other into Judas place, no nor touching Deacons, Elders, and Biſhops: and yet they dyd make Mathias an Apoſtle, and cauſed ſeauen Deacons to be choſen, aud

and Paule and Barnabas did conſtitute Elders in the churches, whyche was by their indeterminate authoritie, as Tite alſo was wylled to ordeyne Elders and Biſhops in Creta. For it was requiſite that it ſhould ſo be, for the edifying and neceſſitie of the Churches. 2 By this authoritie Paule ordeyned, that there ſhould be 1.Cor.16. gatherings vppon ſome holy day in the Churches of the Corinthians. 3 That one of the brethren ſhoulde iudge betwixte brethren in caſes of controuerſie. 4 And that the faithfull wife ſhould not depart from the vnfaithfull huſbande. 5 That the man ſhoulde pray open headed, and the woman couered. 6 That in the ſupper of the Lord, one ſhould tarry 1.Cor.6. for an other, and he tolde them that 1.Cor.7. when he were once come vnto them, 1.Cor.11. he would take order in the reſt of the matter. 7 And he decreed that no man ſhould ſpeake in the Church in an vnknowen language, without a truſhmã or interpreter. 8 And that two or three Prophets ſhuld ſpeake, and the reſt iudge, in thoſe matters that might healp towards the edifying of the ſame congregation for a 1.Cor.14. time. And in the ſame Chapiter: 9 That a woman ſhould not teache in the Church. And to the Theſſalonians, 10 That the faithfull folkes 2.Theſſ.3. ſhal not haue to do with him, which liueth like a troubleſome perſon, and is curious, giuing himſelf to no kind of worke. And to Timothe. 11 That 1.Tim.2. there be prayers and ſupplications made in the Church for all men, and for the Princes. 12 Alſo, what manner of folkes they ought to be, that ſhuld be made Prieſts and Biſhops. 13 And what manner of widdowes ſhould be alowed, and what refuſed: 14 And after that, that no complaint 1.Tim. ought to be receyued againſte a Prieſt, but with two or three witneſſes. Thoſe and ſuch other like matters, whereof the Lorde had preſcribed nothing before, the Apoſtles 1.Tim. dyd order in the church by their indeterminate power, to the ende that all things might be honeſtly and orderly done in the Churche, to the edifying of the faithfull. The like authoritie of and power belongeth vnto all Biſhops, Prieſtes, and Paſtors: but in 1.Pe. his owne Churche, nor farther than thoſe matters whiche may auaile towards the edifying of the faithfull, and the keeping of conuenient honeſtie and order among them: but yet they muſt regard it in any wiſe, that no thing be inſtitute to bynde the people vnto, without the conſente of the people, nor it muſt be no longer vſed, thã whiles it may be profitable for them and ſerue their turne. It ſauoreth rather of tyrannie and vſurped power, if the Paſtor doe lay burthens vpon the faithfull people, lyke as ỹ Phariſeis and Jewiſh Prieſts did, of his owne authoritie or rather raſhneſſe, without their common cõſent. This much Chryſoſtome ſawe Cry. right well, being Biſhop of ſo great a Citie as he was. For thus he wryteth vpon the Epiſtle vnto Tite: For he which groundeth himſelfe vppon the outward and worldly authoritie, and muſt of neceſſitie be obeyed, by cauſe he gouerneth by a lawe, maye well gouerne often times againſte the ſubiectes will and minde. But he that will beare a rule ouer men whiche are at liberty, and giue thankes therefore, if he preſume as vpon that lawe, lawe, to doe anye thing of his owne hand, as though he ſhoulde make accoumpte to no bodye, doth vſe his office tyrannouſly rather than friendly. Loke now what things elſe the Popes power is, and whether after this reckening it be not verye tyrannye.

1 The miniſter of Chriſte maye without any daunger of tyrannye or vſurped power, taking with him the agreementes of the people, ordeyne in the Churche committed vnto hym (as for example) dayes of prayers and faſting, at ſome daungerous ſeaſons, to teach the faithfull to humble themſelues in the ſight of the Lorde, and to ſeeke for his fauour. And this were not without the examples of the Churche, both of the new and of the olde Teſtament.

2 Secondly, for almuch as it hath bin an auncient cuſtome and muche vſed in the Churche, to make open gatherings, that is to ſay, the voluntarie contributions of the faithfull, wherby to ſuſteyne as well the poore ſtraungers, as alſo their owne countrey men: I ſuppoſe that the miniſters haue this power alſo to take this order and way by the conſent of the people, and to appoynt Deacons in the congregation of the Churche, through whoſe truſtineſſe & charge, this peece of godlyneſſe may alſo bee put in vre. There be examples of this matter in the Actes, in the Epiſtles of Paule, in the Eccleſiaſticall hyſtories, and in Tertullians Apologie.

3 Thirdely, there dothe belong to this indeterminate power of the miniſters, the neceſſitie of the diſcipline of the Churche, without the whyche the true ſtudie of godlyneſſe cannot be kept among the people. This diſcipline dothe include the redreſſe of mens manners, as well publike as priuate: the iudgementes alſo of the Church matters, whereof Tertullian maketh mention in his Apologie. In theſe matters the miniſter ſhall not doe any thing, nother vppon hys owne head, but ſhall be a ſetter forth and a director for the order of them, and aſke the myndes and conſente of his people, and ſee that there be nothing charged vpon the congregation againſt their will. But he muſte prouide, that the people themſelues do chooſe ſome graue perſons that do feare God, and be of a good reporte, through whoſe care and diligence the diſcipline of the Churche may be practiſed, and in caſe anye matter of greate waighte ſhall happen, then to referre the ſame to the congregation it ſelfe. And yet all theſe matters whiche we do referre to the indeterminate power, do cõcerne, that churches onely whiche haue no Chriſtian magiſtrate, as they were in tymes paſt, before there were any Chriſtened princes. For there is great difference betwixt theſe Churches which haue no Chriſtian Magiſtrate, but are ſubiect to ỹ vnfaithfull, and thoſe whoſe Princes and Magiſtrates bee Chriſtians alſo themſelues, and be of the body of ỹ Church, and ſeruing the Lord Chriſte, doe by the office of their gouernance, lawfully and orderly repreſſe the corrupt behauiour and outrages of their ſubiects. And in this caſe there can be nothing determined of certaintie, but the faithfull and wiſe miniſters muſt moderate this diſcipline according to the nature of the times, the publicke estate, and ỳ necessitie of the Churche, so ỳ all things may be ordred comely, honestly, and to the edifying of the Churche.

An exception.

The assemblie of the congregation.

4 Fourthly, the minister must appointe also with the consente of the people, howe oftentimes the people shall assemble togither, and what dayes of the weke are to be appointed to heare the word of lyfe, to pray and to sing. For it is necessary, that in this poynte also he do ordeyne nothing of his owne head, least when the people shall assemble togither to heare the holy Sermons not at their owne will, but constreyned by the Minister, they shall come negligently and harken vnto it with vnwillyng heartes and eares: and so departe doing but little good. Of this sorte are those things also which doe concerne the order of baptising, of celebratyng ỳ Lords supper, of blessing the marriages, and burying the dead.

The ministerie of preaching, reading, singing and admitting.

5 Fiftly, as concerning the ministery of preaching, reading, singing, and admitting into the Churche, I suppose those things may be done by the minister hymselfe at hys owne commoditie, and the churches, without anye wrong of the people. And thus much by the way we haue touched as well of the determinate, as of the indeterminate power of the ministers: which things though that of themselues they seme not to bee sufficiente for ỳ vse and necessitie of the Church, yet they may do thus much good, that whersoeuer the study of godlines and religion be not altogither extinguished, menne may by the foresteps of them goe on further. Wherefore let vs proceede to the other kindes of power.

After the power of right and duetie, we sayd there is also a power of Justice and Equitie. This power the minister may vse in those thynges that be due vnto hym of Justice and Equitie. And first of all there is due to the minister necessary and honest liuelode, wherevpon not only he him selfe may liue, with his family, wife, and children, but he may be able also to entertayne strangers and his brethren. And that this is right and reason, it is proued not only by our common sense and the examples of the old Testamẽt, but also by the wordes of the Lorde himselfe, and by the testimonie of the Apostle. Christ saith: The workeman is worthy to haue his meate. And the Apostle: Haue not we power (sayeth he) to eate and to drinke? Haue not we power to carry about a sister woman (vnderstãding it in our message) as the rest of the Apostles also, and the brethrẽ of the Lorde, and Cephas? Or haue Barnabas and I onely no power to do this? Who euer goeth a warfare vpon his owne finding? Who planteth a vineyard, and eateth not of the fruite of it? Or who feedeth a flocke, and eateth not of the milke of the flocke? Do I speake these things after the manner of men? Dothe not the lawe saye the same also? Thou shalt not mosell the oxes mouth that treadeth out the corne. Dothe God take care for oxen? Or dothe he not speake it altogither for vs? In deede it is written for vs, that he whiche ploweth must plow in hope: and hee that thresheth in hope, should be partaker of his hope. If we haue sowen spiritual things for you, is it so great a matter, a matter, if we do reape your bodily things? Item. Knowe you not that they whiche worke in the holy matters, do liue vpon the sacrifice? They that doe waite at the temple, be partakers of ỳ temple. And so the Lorde did ordeyne also, that they whiche do preach the Gospell, should liue of the Gospell. This sayeth the Apostle. Whereby it doth manifestly appere what this power of Christes ministers is, when they doe take of the Lordes people by good right and reason, that whereby they and theirs may liue. To goe a warfare, to plãt, to fede the flocke, they be earthely matters: and yet by the perseuerance of all men it is right, that they which do practise those matters, should liue vpon those their labours. How much more righte and equitie is it, that hee whiche doth sow spirituall things in the Church of God, shoulde reape of their earthly goodes, things necessary for his liuing? In the lawe they that serued in ỳ figurate shadowing and childishe sacrifices, liued vppon their seruice: and is it not much more reason, that they which do dispence and bestow the worde of the truthe, lighte, life, and saluation, shoulde receyue vpon their seruice whereby to liue? specially seeyng that the Lorde so appoynted it, that they whiche doe Preach the Gospel, should take their liuing of the Gospell. So that it is the power of righte and reason, that the minister of Christe shoulde liue vppon his ministerie, whereof bothe the minister and the people ought to haue regarde. The minister, to know that this power perteyneth not but to them, whiche do their dutie faythfully, least he fall into a fylthy Idlenesse, and a false neglect of his seruice with the Lords of the Popishe Churche, which doe separate the benefyce from the office: the people that they thynke it not an vnfitte matter to part their goodes with thẽ, by whome they be instructed in the matter of their saluation, accordyng vnto the will and ordinaunce of the Lord.

The minister maye take the honor due to him. 1. Timo. 5.

Secondly, there is a special honor due vnto the minister of the worde. The Priestes saith the Apostle, whiche doe well gouerne, are worthye of double honor: especially they whych do trauaile in the worde, and in teaching. It is not the part of a true minister to be ambitious of honor: and yet for all that he must not refuse that honor whiche is giuen to hym, yea rather to his office, from ỳ faithfull. For he must beware not onely that he fall not into vaineglory, but he must also forsee that the Lordes people ware not ouer brutishe towardes the ministers of Christe, and by their vncomely dealing prouoke the wrath of the Lord against them. Wherefore he must vse this power also, as farforth as he shall iudge it may help to ỳ edifying of ỳ faithfull.

The power of layvfulnes.

Now followeth the power of that whiche we may lawfully doe. The same I doe so separate from the power of Justice and equitie, that like as by that power the minister maye doe well in receyuing of liuing and honor at their hands to whome he doth minister in the Lord, so by this power it is lawfull for hym not to vse the same power of Justice and equitie, but that he maye if hee will, Preache for naught. We haue ỳ example of this in Paule, whyche dyd preach nature of the times, the publicke estate, and ỳ necessitie of the Churche, so ỳ all things may be ordred comely, honestly, and to the edifying of the Churche.

The assemblie of the congregation.

4 Fourthly, the minister must appointe also with the consente of the people, howe oftentimes the people shall assemble togither, and what dayes of the weke are to be appointed to heare the word of lyfe, to pray and to sing. For it is necessary, that in this poynte also he do ordeyne nothing of his owne head, least when the people shall assemble togither to heare the holy Sermons not at their owne will, but constreyned by the Minister, they shall come negligently and harken vnto it with vnwillyng heartes and eares: and so departe doing but little good. Of this sorte are those things also which doe concerne the order of baptising, of celebratyng ỳ Lords supper, of blessing the marriages, and burying the dead.

The ministerie of preaching, reading, singing and admitting.

5 Fiftly, as concerning the ministery of preaching, reading, singing, and admitting into the Churche, I suppose those things may be done by the minister hymselfe at hys owne commoditie, and the churches, without anye wrong of the people. And thus much by the way we haue touched as well of the determinate, as of the indeterminate power of the ministers: which things though that of themselues they seme not to be sufficiente for the vse and necessitie of the Church, yet they may do thus much good, that whersoeuer the study of godlines and religion be not altogither extinguished, menne may by the smoke espye them goe on further. Wherefore let vs procede to the other kindes of power.

After the power of right and duetie, we sayd there is also a power of Justice and Equitie. This power the minister may vse in those thynges that be due vnto hym of Justice and Equitie. And first of all there is due to the minister necessary and honest liuelode, wherevpon not only he him selfe may liue, with his family, wife, and children, but he may be able also to entertayne strangers and his brethren. And that this is right and reason, it is proued not only by our common sense and the examples of the old Testament, but also by the words of the Lorde himselfe, and by the testimonie of the Apostle. Christ saith: The workeman is worthy to haue his meate. And the Apostle: Haue not we power (sayeth he) to eate and to drinke? Haue not we power to carry about a sister woman (vnderstãding it in our message) as the rest of the Apostles also, and the brethren of the Lorde, and Cephas? Or haue Barnabas and I onely no power to do this? Who euer goeth a warfare vpon his owne finding? Who planteth a vineyard, and eateth not of the fruite of it? Or who fedeth a flocke, and eateth not of the milke of the flocke? Do I speake these things after the manner of men? Doth not the lawe saye the same also? Thou shalt not mosell the oxes mouth that treadeth out the corne. Doth God take care for oxen? Or dothe he not speake it altogither for vs? In dede it is written for vs, that he whiche ploweth must plow in hope: and he that thresheth in hope, should be partaker of his hope. If we haue sowen spiritual things for you, is it so great a matter, a matter, if we do reape your bodily things? Item. Knowe you not that they whiche worke in the holy matters, do liue vpon the sacrifice? They that doe waite at the temple, be partakers of ỳ temple. And so the Lorde did ordeyne also, that they whiche do preach the Gospell, should liue of the Gospell. This sayeth the Apostle. Whereby it doth manifestly appere what this power of Christes ministers is, when they doe take of the Lordes people by good right and reason, that whereby they and theirs may liue. To goe a warfare, to plãt, to fede the flocke, they be earthely matters: and yet by the perseuerance of all men it is right, that they which do practise those matters, should liue vpon those their labours. How much more righte and equitie is it, that hee whiche doth sow spirituall things in the Church of God, shoulde reape of their earthly goodes, things necessary for his liuing? In the lawe they that serued in ỳ figurate shadowing and childishe sacrifices, lined vppon their seruice: and is it not much more reason, that they which do dispence and beskow the worde of the truthe, lighte, life, and saluation, shoulde receyue vpon their seruice whereby to liue? specially seeyng that the Lorde so appoynted it, that they whiche doe preach the Gospel, should take their liuing of the Gospell. So that it is the power of righte and reason, that the minister of Christe shoulde liue vppon his ministerie, whereof bothe the minister and the people ought to haue regarde. The minister, to know that this power perteyneth not but to them, whiche do their dutie faythfully, least he fall into a filthy Idlenesse, and a false neglect of his seruice with the Lords of the Popishe Churche, which doe separate the benefyce from the office: the people that they thynke it not an vnfitte matter to part their goodes with thẽ, by whome they be instructed in the matter of their saluation, accordyng vnto the will and ordinaunce of the Lord.

The minister maye take the honor due to him. 1. Timo. 5.

Secondly, there is a special honor due vnto the minister of the worde. The Priestes saith the Apostle, whiche doe well gouerne, are worthye of double honor: especially they whych do trauaile in the worde, and in teaching. It is not the part of a true minister to be ambitious of honor: and yet for all that he must not refuse that honor whiche is giuen to hym, yea rather to his office, from ỳ faithfull. For he must beware not onely that he fall not into vaineglory, but he must also forsee that the Lordes people ware not ouer brutishe towardes the ministers of Christe, and by their vncomely dealing prouoke the wrath of the Lord against them. Wherefore he must vse this power also, as farforth as he shall iudge it may help to ỳ edifying of ỳ faithfull.

The power of lawfulnes.

Now foloweth the power of that whiche we may lawfully doe. The same I dde so separate from the power of Justice and equitie, that like as by that power the minister maye doe well in receyuing of liuing and honor at their hands to whome hee doth minister in the Lord, so by this power it is lawfull for hym not to vse the same power of Justice and equitie, but that he maye if hee will, preache for naught. We haue ỳ example of this in Paule, whyche dyd preach

preache to some Churches, freely for nothing, getting his living by the labour of his hands, because he would giue no offence to euill tongs, and because he woulde not abuse the power of Iustice and equity, to the hinderance of the profyte of the Gospel, not to preiudice other ministers, and to condemne the power incidente to the ministery. So he saith: But we haue not vsed this power, but we do beare all things, to the intent we wil not giue anye offence to the Gospell of Christe. And this he did by no other power, but by the power of lawfulnesse. It is lawfull for any man to refuse his owne right, and not to vse the power of Iustice and equitie in those things which are due vnto him, so that he doe it without the hinderance of anye of his, or of others, but when it is not expediente to doe that whiche you may do by that power of Iustice and equity, you doe not sinne if you do forbeare. But you do rather deserue prayse with the Apostle, if you followe hys example. What shal I say here of them, whiche whereas they mighte liue vppon their fathers goodes, or otherwise vpon their owne, yet they do neuer the lesse liue vpon the churches goodes? In the Canon law are these wordes cited out of Saint Jerome: They of the Cleargy that be not holpen by none of the goodes of their parentes or kinsefolkes, it is conuenient they should be found of the stipende of the Church. But they whiche maye bee found vpon the goodes either of their parents, eyther of their owne, if they doe take the same that whiche is due to the poore, surely they do committe sacrilege, and by the abusing of those things they do eate and drinke, they owne iudgemente, &c. Where you may marke, that he doth call the stipendes of the Churche, the goodes of the poore. If we might sequester thys kinde of menne from the vsing of the Church goodes, who shoulde be able to kepe the reckening of the number of them that shoulde by this vertue of the Canon, be remoued from the Church mangers?

1. Cor. 9.

Hieronymus. Quest. 1. ca. 1. Clericos.

And it is also to be referred to the power of Lawfulnesse, that the Apostle did circumcide Timothe, because of the Iewes. And that he was purified after the order of the law at Hierusalem, because of thē that beliued of the Iewes, and that whereas he was free, did make hymselfe bond vnto all men: and became to the Iewes as a Iewe, and to them that were vnder ỹ lawe, as though he had bin vnder the law: and to them whiche were without lawe, as though he were without the law, and weake to the weake, and all things to all menne, that alwayes he might saue some. The minister of Christ maye also vse the like power in matters indifferent, for a quietnesse sake, for the setting forth of the Gospell, whē he seeth that the truthe maye take place. But we must haue a maruelious discretion in this matter, that we take not those things for indifferente, whiche be eyther contrarye to Gods worde, or worthye for their superstition and false religion, to bee vtterly abhorred.

Lastly, there is the power of doing. This is the power to doe those things whiche doe belong to a mans office. And it consisteth in two parts: that is to say, in knowledge, and habilitie.

bilitie. 1 Without this power all other power is nothing worth. For what auaileth a man to haue the power of an office, whether it be determinate or indeterminate, if he lacke eyther knowledge or habilitie to do those things, whiche are requisite to the performance of the charge, that is vndertaken? He that is destitute of the knowledge of Gods worde, and the wisedome to cut it aright, albeit he can well talke in other matters, he hath not the power to teache. Agayne on the other side: If a man be ripe in all the Scriptures, and not vnwise in the wordes of the Lorde, yet vnlesse he hathe the power and gift of speach, he can not accomplish the ministerie yf it bee layde vppon him. Wherefore this power and habilitie also to doe his duetie, is in anye wise necessarye for the minister of Christ.

2 And the same is giuen from the Lorde. Moses complayned that hee had not this habilitie to perfourme the charge layde vppon him, for that he was somewhat drawing and slow in speach. But the Lord saide vnto him: Who made the mouth of man? Not I? I will be in thy mouthe, and teach thee what thou shalte speake. And when Jeremie complayned of the same, the Lord sent his hand and touched his mouth, and sayd: Lo, I haue put my wordes into thy mouth. And the Lord sayd vnto ỹ Apostles: It is not you that doe speake, but the spirite of your father shall speake in you. And, I will giue you a mouthe and wisedome, which al your aduersaries cannot be able to withstande. The Apostle bothe confesse this of himselfe, that he is vnable to thinke any thing as of hymselfe, but that maye be referred vnto this, that all his ablenes came of God, who made him a meete minister of the New testament. The very same whiche the Apostle spake of himselfe, maye bee sayde also of euerye minister. That saying of Christ belongeth vnto all: Without me you be able to doe nothing. Wherefore, vnlesse the Lorde himselfe giue vs meete ministers for hys Church, well furnished with wil and habilitie to perfourme the ministery of saluation, we maye haue a number of idle bellies and gay men in countenaunce, but no true workemen and dispensers of Goddes mysteries at all. Wherefore we must beseech God, that he will send forthe workemen into hys harueste, such as wil not contend in words, and striue for theyr authoritie and power: but beyng instructed from God, will declare and practise in very deede the true lawfull and profitable power for the Churches.

Iohn. 15.

Let this be sayde of the power of the ministers of the word. I know I please not euery mans taste. But any body may for al me say more or meeter to the purpose. In my opinion a temperate man must specially in this matter refrayne from all outragiousnesse in words and deedes, and cut off all those things whiche maye bee wrested by carnal men, eyther to the contempt of the ministery, eyther to the puffing of their worldy preeminence. The ministery of Christ, and the liberty of the Church, are not so contrary one to another, that when this latter is vsed, the first must decay: or when the former is in place, the latter can not also stand withall.

The true paſtor and miniſter maye moſte conueniently ſerue the Lorde in a free churche, and vſe his power therin: and againe, the Church may without any daunger of leſyng hir libertie, yeld hir ſelfe to the lawfull paſtor that dothe faithfully doe hys duetie, to be taught, ruled and gouerned, and intende to decay and haue derogate no one iote of that power which ſhe receyued of the Lorde, acknowleging it to be giuen hir not to deſtroy, but to edifie, not to marre, but to make.

Of the blameleſſe life and honeſty of the Miniſters.

What manner of men the Miniſters of Chriſt, paſtors, Prieſts and Byſhops ought to be, and howe they ought to behaue themſelues, it is ſette forth vnto vs by no counterfaite canon, but by the very Apoſtolike rule. And that is done by the Apoſtle, writing thus vnto Timothe and Tite: Unto Timothe he writeth thus, It is a moſt certayne ſaying, If a man deſire the office of a Biſhoppe, he deſireth a good worke. Therefore it behoueth a Biſhop to be vnblamable, the huſbande of one wife, watchful, ſober, temperate, hoſpitall, meete to teache, not gyuen to wine, no ſtriker, not fouly gyuen to gaine, but righteous, far from fighting, far from coueting, that can wel rule his owne houſe, that kepeth his children in all reuerence. But in caſe a man can not rule his owne houſe, how ſhall he take charge of ỹ church of God? He may not be a new man, leaſt he be puft vp and fall into the condemnation of the ſlaunderoure. And he muſt haue a good reporte of ſtraungers, that he fall not into the reproſe and ſnare of the ſlaunderour. The Deacons muſt be alſo men of good behauioure, not double tonged, not giuen to muche wyne, not fouly couetous of gayne, kéeping the miſtery of the faith with a cleane conſcience, and let them be tryed firſte, and miniſter afterwardes, ſo that no man maye fynde faulte with them. Their wiues muſt be alſo of good behauioure, not ſlaunderous, ſober, and faithfull in all things. Let Deacons be the huſbandes of one wife, whiche do rule their children and families aright. For they that doe miniſter aright, do purchaſe themſelues a good degrée, and muche libertie in the faith whiche is in Chriſte Ieſu. Thus much there. The like is redde in the Epiſtle vnto Tite, whiche begamne of late to growe out of vre in the Church of Chriſt. But lette vs conſider euery point in order.

1. Tim. 3. Tit. 1.

Firſte, he ſayeth that a Byſhoppricke is a worke. If any man (ſayth he) deſireth a Biſhoppricke, or the office of a Biſhop, he deſireth an honeſt worke. Then it may not haue an idle and a ſlouthfull perſon. Now adayes Byſhoppricke be nothyng elſe, but greate gouernaunces, dignities, and Lordſhippes, and therefore they be ſoughte for, but chiefely for the gayne and reuenue.

Tit. 1.

A Biſhoppricke is a worke.

Dist. 25. Cum Timotheum.

Secondly, he calleth the worke of a Byſhoppricke, honeſt. The Greéke maye bée tranſlated thus: He deſyreth a good worke. Yet the tranſlation of Eraſmus is better to be lyked, whyche is: He deſyreth an honeſt worke. For the Greéke worde

A Byſhoppricke is an honeſt vvorke.

worde ſignifieth honeſt, faire, trimme, and welfauoured, rather than good. And thys ſenſe agreeth better with the purpoſe of the Apoſtle. The office of a Byſhoppe is in all poyntes ſéemelye and honeſt. Thys the Apoſtle confeſſed, bycauſe of them that woulde ſéeke to be Byſhoppes to the intente they would be notable aboue the reſt. But conſider to what intent he ſpake it.

What it is to be irreprehenſible.

Thirdlye, It behoueth therefore (bée ſayeth) a Byſhoppe to be blameleſſe. So it is in the Greéke. In the worde, therefore, there is ſuche an inferremente. In anye wyſe it is a moſt certayne ſaying, that the office of a Byſhoppe is an honeſt and a fayre worke. It is verye true. But thys honeſt and welfauoured worke muſte haue not euerye Jacke, in whoune menne maye fynde faultes, whereby the office maye purchaſe ſome ſhame and rebuke, and be deſpiſed: but thoſe thyngs that be honeſt, muſt bée done by them that are honeſt indéede. Therefore it behoueth, in reſpecte of the honeſt office, that ſuche menne be choſen to Byſhoppricke, that bée not faultye in anye poynte, lyghte, vayne, and wicked, as the common ſorte of menne bée. It was properly ſayde in the Canon Lawe: Let ſuche a one bée choſen, in compariſon of whome, the reſte maye well bée called, the ſlocke. He meante they ſhoulde chooſe an excellente and a notable man.

The Greéke ſignifyeth Irreprehenſible. And he is not irreprehenſible, that dothe no offence, but hée whyche ſo liueth amongſt men, that he can not be worthily called before the Juſtice for any offence, or otherwiſe be blamed. In the Epiſtle vnto Titus he ſayth thus: If any man bée vnblamable, for ἐγκαλεῖν, ſignifieth to call a man before a Magiſtrate, and to accuſe hym of ſome faulte. Wherefore he is ἀνέγκλητος, that dothe liue ſo blameleſſe, that he can not be called before any Magiſtrate for any treſpaſſe. There is one meaning of both. The common Latine tranſlation to Titus is: It behoueth a Biſhoppe to bée without faulte. Whiche the Apoſtle doth ſo meane, that it behoueth a Biſhoppe to be ſo without faulte, that he can be called into the court by no man, nor iuſtlye be accuſed of any faulte, no not of his enimies and aduerſaries. Eraſmus doth tranſlate it Blameleſſe. In my opinion, he is blameleſſe not that he is neuer found faulty withall by his euill willers, but he that of right can not be found faulte withall: So that the tranſlation muſt goe: If any man be vnblamable, rather than, If anye man be vnblamed. Otherwiſe Chriſt himſelfe could neuer haue bin choſen for a Byſhoppe, whome the wicked menne dyd greéuouſlye accuſe. So that a man can not call hym vnblamed, but muſte ryghtely of all vnblamable. Wherefore lyke as to Timothee hée tranſlated not irreprehended, but irreprehenſible: So that to Tite muſte be tranſlated not vnblamed, but vnblamable. The very ſame worde to Timothe, he dothe tranſlate it more rightly in this ſorte, ſo that no man be able to blame them.

ἀνεπίλημπτον Titum. 1. ἀνέγκλητος. Titum. 1.

The fathers did note, that euerye offence is not a crime, but ſuch an offence or sinne, as is worthy to be accused and condemned. So that the Apostle doth not loke to haue suche men whiche be vtterly voyde of all synne, and are meeter to be reckened for Aungels than for men, bycause there bee none suche founde in thys life: but he meaneth suche as can bee charged with no crime, nor can not be found fault with all, no not of the children of this worlde.

1. Crim.

VVhat integritie of lyfe is requisite to a minister.

And this vprightnesse of life is requisite to be in him that is to be chosen to the ministery of Christe, not only that he doe liue without blame in the same ministerye, after he bee chosen vnto it, but before he be chosen also. And to that ende the Apostle doth write to Timothe and to Tite, that they see that they chose them which should be irreprehensible, not only when they be in the ministerye, but those which also before they were chosen, liued in that sorte both in the Church after their baptisme, and before that among straungers, so that they can bee accused and condemned of no notable crime, but do also carry with them a good reporte from thence that they came. In the verye ministerie it selfe, there is requisite two sortes of vprightnesse, so that the minister muste both doe his ministerye without blame, and liue also without blame. They that sate vpon the chayer of Moses, notwithstanding they did teach well, yet for asmuch as they liued naughtily, they were well worthily blamed by the Lorde. Doe (saith he) that whyche they speake, and do not that whych they doe. On the other syde, they that doe teache euill, whereas they do lyue to the shew without blame, bee not therefore without blame, but they be worse than the fyrste. What shall wee say of them, whych doe both lyue euill and teach worse: Therefore the Apostle was constreyned of greate necessitie to require on bothe sydes that the minister shoulde behaue himselfe blameles, as well in hys lyfe, as also in his ministery. But let vs see what followeth.

Matth 23.

The husbande of one wife.

He sayeth, The husbande of one wife. He commeth downe to the particularities of those thynges whiche bee requisite in a Minister, to that that hee bee irreprehensible. For it was spoken generally, that the Bysshoppe muste bee irreprehensible. And the same hee dothe more at large expounde afterwardes. In bothe places both heere and to Tite, hee dothe place fyrste, thys poynte of wedlocke, saying: The husbande of one wife. Whereupon maye be asked a question, howe it helpeth to the matter, to make the Minister to bee irreprehensible, if hee bee chosen the husbande of one wife. In case that keeping the husbande of one wyfe, do make the minister inculpable and worthy to bee chosen, than to be the husbande of no wife, maketh a man vnworthy and culpable. If we say so, we shall shake off all them that bee eyther borne chaste from theyr mothers wombe, or else that haue bin gelded by meane or by themselues for the Kingdome of GOD, and doe refrayne from marriage: of whyche for all that very many haue serued the Churche verye profitably, and then the Lord hymselfe shoulde not haue spoken verye circumspectlye, when VVhat it be requisite the husbande of one wife.

when he sayd: Who soeuer can take it, let him take it: but he shoulde rather haue said: Let none of you refrayne from wedlocke, least you be vnmete, and not worthye of my ministery. All these matters must needes follow, in case the Apostle doe absolutely and necessarily require, that the minister of Christe be married, What shall befall then?

We must aunswere. He doth not say absolutely that he shall be married, or if he be married, but the husbād of one wife. Therefore he dothe not simplye require that there shall bee none chosen but a married mā, whereby we myghte gather, that the vnmarried person and bacheler myght not bee chosen to the office: but that they maye chose the husbande of one wife, meaning that he that hathe manye wyues, is not to bee chosen, as the husband of sundry wiues.

Agayne it maye be sayde: What offence is it, if a man when his first wife is dead, doe marry the seconde, and in case she dye also, doe marrie a thirde, seyng that Abraham when Sara was dead, married Kethura, and thys same Apostle sayeth, that this manner of wedlocke is clere from sinne, so that it be done in the Lorde: We must aunswere that the Apostle doth not speake here of thys kind of second marriage, when that after the deathe of the first wife wee doe marrie another, but of Polygamy, that is, when men haue manye wiues at one tyme and togyther, whiche vsage was not vnlawfull among the Israelites, and dothe yet continue among the Ethnikes. And wheras men began to be called Bygames in the Church, that do marry another wife after the deathe of the first, it is contrary to the meaning of the scripture, whiche counteth it no bygamy, but when a man hath two wiues at once.

VVhy the Apostle doth require Monogamy in the minister. Monogamia.

And the Apostle speaketh heere of none other kinde of marriage, but when a man hath but one wife, as Isaac had. This Monogamy he doth require to be in the ministers of Christ, least if one shoulde be chosen that had manye wiues, he shoulde be chargeable and burdenous to the Churche that he is set to ouersee: or as some doe expound it, least he shuld be noted of intemperancie, whereof all faithfull ought to be voyde, but specially the ministers, Priests, Pastors, and Bishops. And in thys respect he sayeth: The husbande of one wife, which is nothing else to say, but that he shall not haue manye wyues at once, but liue moderately, contented with one.

Of Bygamye.

As for Bygamy, the Bishoppes haue wonderfully tossed it in the Church contrary to the meanyng of the Apostles, and contrary to the custome of the Apostles time, takyng him to be Bygamus, which whē his first wife is dead, dothe marrie another. The scholemen and Canonists which folowed them, deuided Bigamie into true bygamy, in Interpretatiue, and in Similitudinarie. So that it should be true Bigamy, when a mā hath two lawfull wiues, if they haue bin both lyen withall. The Interpretatiue bigamy, when a man marrieth a womā that hath bin lyen withall before, and when the husbād weth a wife that is an adulteresse. The Similitudinarie is, when hee that hath contracted wedlocke wyth

God by a solemne vowe, dothe actually afterwards marrie another: and whē a man hath had two wiues at sundry tymes, one of right, and an other actually, and hath layne with both. Or in case he had two wiues togither, the one of right, the other in facte, or else bothe in facte, and hath lyen with them both: and also if hée doe marrye béeyng in holye ordersMarginal note: Seconde marriage after the death of the firste. This they doe imagine whiche Paule neuer thought vppon whē he made the rule for the chosing of ministers. Besides thys, they doe searche what kinde of bygamy it is, that the Bishop of Rome onely hath power to dispence withal, & what any other Bishop may dispence withall. But let vs leaue this, and iudge as the Apostle did, of true bygamy, whyche was taken to bée Bygamy in his time, ỹ is to say, suche as Lamech and Jacobs was, whiche both we do read had two wiues at once. For this kind of bygamy was noted also of intemperaunce amongst the Gentiles, for ỹ if a man wil eschewe the intemperaunce of wanton lust, one wife is euen inough for the law of wedlocke: and the same mariage, when, after the death of the fyrst, a man doth marry another, is neyther sinful, nor to be blamed of intemperancy. For the cause therof is no intemperate wanton lust, but necessity both of nature and of liuing togither in one family. It is a very wicked & diuelish poynte, to slaunder a lawful and a necessary matter with intemperancie. He that liueth with hys first wife, vntyll his dying day, is discharged from anye note of intemperancie, bycause he had but one wyfe. Why? bycause he was contented with one wife. In case a man hath the like minde and continency, chance to lose his first wife, euen the fyrste or seconde yeare, or ten yeres after he were married, or at anye time by casualtye of death to his great grief and sorow, I beseech you, if he be driuen by necessitie, do mary with an other, what doth he that by any reaso ought to be misliked: The first had but one wife. But he kepte hir vntyl his dying day. The seconde also had but one, if you consider the vse of mariage. He neuer had two. When he was maried, he hadde not two, but one onely. The hauing of two wiues for as muche as it is deuided by death, is not one selfe same wedlock, nor taken for one, and therfore it maketh not a man Bigamus. He was sory and heauy for the death of his first wife, and wished neuer to haue had other. When she was take from him, he was not glad to take an other, but was compelled by ỹ sharp dent of necessitie, to repayre the vse of the firste for himselfe and his family. Wherefore it appeareth, that there hath ben many things damnably ordayned in this point of Bygamy: as for example, that it was forbidden that no Priestе shoulde be a bidde guest at any second mariage. If he were, he shoulde doe penaunce for it. Loke vpon the chapters of the Grékes Synodes.

But least I should séeme to make thys sense of the Apostles wordes of my owne head, I wyll not sticke to recite some olde Doctours, whiche doe lykewyse expounde it. Chrisostome hath thys: Therefore the Bishoppe muste be irreprehensible, the husbande of one wife. He sayeth though not this as making it a lawe, as though it were not lawfull for a Bishoppe to be without a wife, but making a meane of it. For it was lawfull for the Jewes to be twice married, and to haue two wiues together, and at one time, for marriage is honorable. This sayth he, expounding the words of the apostle. But if any body wil alledge ỹ contrary vpon that that the same selfe man doth write in thys wise, vpon the Epistle to Titus: How can he be a good teacher to the Churche, whome we find to haue obserued no beneuolence towardes his wife that is departed: It shall not make our opinion neuer a whit the weaker, but shall rather abase, decay the estimation of so great a man, in whose writings there is founde so sundrye exposytions of one thyng, eyther lefte so of hymselfe, eyther putte in there by others.

Unto him we doe ioyne Jerome. Who writing vnto Oceanus: The Apostle (sayeth he) was a Jewe, and the firste Churche of Christe was gathered togyther of the leauings of Israel. He knewe that they might by lawe and the example of the Patriarches and of the people that wer familiar with Moyses, begette children by sundry wiues, and that the priestes hadde the like libertie. He commaunded therfore, ỹ the priestes of the Churche shoulde not claime to themselues the like libertye, to haue two or three wiues togyther, but euerye man to haue but one at once. Thys sayth he. Albeit that others do wrest thys place of the Apostle vnto an other kinde of Bygamye, yet it appeareth sufficiently by these wordes, that our opinion is not newe, nor imagined of our selues but suche as is to bée founde in the writings of the olde Doctours also.

But to what purpose do we talke of Bygamy, when they that haue or hadde but one wife, be reiected also from the ministery? And theyr mariage is also condēned to be vncleane and intemperate, contrary vnto the plaine scriptures and Institution of of the Lorde: The Apostle sayth, The Bishop must be irreprehensible, the husbande of one wife. They that do boast themselues to be successors of the Apostles, they doe turne in and out this decree of ỹ apostle, as though the Apostle sayde: A Bishop must be irreprehensible, the husbande of no wife. For they do so seclude married mē frō the ministerie of Christ, as though they were worthie to be reprehended for their marriage, & vnmēete to be chosen into the ministerie, wheras the Apostle doth call the husband of one wife somuch irreprehensible, that he apointeth him to be mēete for a bishoprike. Pope Nicholas saith, that a married priest is verie irreprehensible. Who doeth not sée howe disagréeable these opinions be, that Paule wouldе haue the husband of one wife, and these folke the husband of no wife called to the ministerie of Christe? He iudgeth the husbande of one wyfe to be irreprehensible, these men do abhorre hym as foule and filthie.

The Apostle reporteth that wedlock is honorable among al men, and the bedde ther of vndefiled. And that the Apostles not only had wiues, but that they didde carrie them aboute

That the Papistes do reiect suche as haue but one wyfe from the ministerie.

Dist. 28. Can. Confuetudinem. Heb. 13.

That the Apostles had wyues.

1.Cor.9.

with them, it appeareth by that that Paule sayde: Haue not we (sayeth he) power to carrie a sister wife aboute, as well as the rest of the Apostles, and the brethren of the Lord and Cephas?

Of them which said that the Apostles carried rich women about with them.

They doe diminishe the authoritie of thys place, that doe expounde it of the riche women, whiche they suppose that the Apostles carried aboute with them to beare theyr charge in Preaching the Gospell. But lette vs see howe wyde they be from reason in so thinking.

Fyrste, they doe not marke the Apostles purpose. For he doth speake of the charges whyche the Ministers maye of ryghte exacte vppon them to whome they doe Preach the Gospell, to serue not onely theyr owne necessitie, but theirs also whych they haue in retinue with them. Thys he sayeth the rest of the Apostles dyd, but that hée dyd not so to the Corinthians, bycause he woulde be burdenous to none of them. Nowe if ye will meane it of suche women as wente aboute with the Apostles, and defrayed their necessaries, charges and expenses in Preachyng the Gospell, I aske you whether they whyche were reported to carrye aboute suche women, dyd take theyr necessarye costes and charges of the faithfull or not? If they did take it, what néeded they to carrie aboute women when they went to Preache the Gospell? If they toke it not, then they did that which the Apostle doth write of himselfe in thys Chapter. But hée maketh such a difference betwirt himselfe and them, that he saith he vsed not that right which the rest of the Apostles vsed. Then it must néedes be, that the rest of ỳ Apostles toke the liuing necessarye for them and theirs, of the Churches. If they did take it as it is héere reported they did, what else remayneth, but that the Apostles did not carry about rich women to defraye theyr charges, but theyr wyues whyche were supported vppon the Churches with them.

And they can not saye, that Paule héerein did otherwyse than the rest of the Apostles, in that he gote hys lyuing by the labour of his hands, and toke it not of the riche women, as men doe beléeue that the rest of the Apostles dyd. For so we shall runne from the purpose of the Apostle. For hys intent is not to teach that hée dyd not vse the relefe of the riche women, as other the Apostles dyd, but that neglecting his right, he toke nothyng of the Corinthians, and that in so doing he dyd not as the rest of the Apostles dyd. Else I pray you what skyll were it, whether he had his liuing of other faythful women, or whether hée burdened other Churches, that he myghte wythout charge preach the Gospell of Christ to the Corinthians, whych he dothe 1.Cor.9. repoꝛte of hymselfe in these wordes: For I haue freely preached the Gospell of God vnto you. I haue spoyled other Churches, taking my stipende for your seruice. If we do vnderstand it of that that he did not carry about rich women to take hys necessarye liuing of, whereas hée mighte haue done it as well as the rest of the Apostles, who perceyueth not that the whole purpose of the Apostle, and that difference betwirt him and the rest of ỳ Apostles is is cleane gone. For so it shalbe found that the rest of the Apostles also thémselues, did not take of the churches, to whiche they preached, to beare theyr charges, but some other way, as Paule did: they of riche women, and Paule of other Churches.

The Apostle speaketh of the authoꝛity of his myniſtery in this sort, that he doth teach, that it is not lawfull simply to take his liuyng where he liste to preache, but that he may take it of them to whome he dothe preach the Gospell. Thus he wryteth that he did not, but that the rest of the Apostles did it. Therefore according vnto the authoꝛitie of theyr Apostleship, they toke theyr charges not of the riche women, but of the faythfull folkes to whome they did preach, and how should the Apostles haue had vsed this authoꝛitie, in case they had taken theyr relefe in preaching the gospel not of the churches, but of the riche women, caried about to that intent?

2 Secondly, he declareth that he vsed not his authoꝛitie, bycause hée would be burdenous to any of them. Now if it did belong to the authoꝛitie of an Apostle, to carrie about rich women, to take theyr liuyng of, bycause the Churches should not be burdened, why did not Paule the same, to vnburden the Corinthians, for asmuch as it should not be burdenous vnto them, but ease and relieue them? Therefore when he saith that he vsed not his owne power, bicause he would bestowe the Gospell vpon them freely, and that therefore he did not carie aboute a woman sister as the rest of the Apostles did, he doth sufficiently declare, that he doth not speake of the riche women that did defray the Apostles charges, but of suche whiche togyther with the Apostles toke theyr charges of the Churches, and that so the rest of the Apostles did not preache the Gospell freely, but receiued, according to their right, their liuing for themselues and theyr wiues, of the churches to whō they did preache.

3 Thirdly, if he shoulde meane of any woman that were not a wyfe, what néeded he when he had sayde: Haue we not authoꝛitie to carie aboute a sister, to adde γυναῖκα? for who can be a sister and not a womā, if that woꝛde shoulde be taken onely for a woman? But shée may be a sister that is not the wife. Therefore when he had sayde Sister, he added, Wife: so that he were a very Asse, that woulde not perceyue, that this woꝛde γυναῖκα was added to the intente that men shoulde perceyue that he spake not of euerye sister, but of a faythfull wife. And in case any bodye will saye by an vnfaithfull woman, that there were a good hope that suche a woman shoulde be wonne to Christe, bycause shée commeth with a brother hyr good mā to the Church: I suppose it is manifest that it cannot be meant of any other man, than of hyr faythfull husbande. For else it were not néede to adde the woꝛd God mā, if it were meant of euery faythfull that is not the husband. If a schoolemaister should say: Haue wée no authoꝛitie to chasten with roddes a yong scholer, who dothe not perceyue that he meaneth not of euery yong man, but of hym that is his scholer, and therefore for a specialty he added that woꝛde Scholer? Likewise the Apostle in this place added γυναῖκα to declare what sister he meant, that is to say, the same that is the wife.

4 Fourthly, another mater is. It is the parte of an Apostle, specially to be not onely cleere from euill, but also from the colour of euill: how I beseech you should the Apostles haue had eschewed colour of euill, if they had lefte theyr owne lawfull wiues at home, and had ranged aboute the worlde with other riche women?

5 Fiftly, I do alledge that also, ỹ he doth not simply say, that he dothe not carrie about a sister wife, but he dothe praesse them in askyng whether he haue not authoritie to cary about a sister wife. He speaketh without any nay of the power of the Apostleship. Then if he spake of the riche womẽ, which defrayde their charges that preached, the Apostles had the power to cal any riche women from their dwellings, and to constreyne them to go about with them, as ofte as they would. I pray you who will graunt this authoritie to an Apostle, that he may compel any riche womã to forsake all that she hath, and to go aboute the worlde with him? If any Apostle shoulde require this of women, (as in deede they haue authoritie to demaunde a due reliefe) who I pray you would not worthily detest them? Agayne, why shoulde he not rather take some rich mã with him? are onely women riche to beare the costes and charges of the gospell? or hath the Apostle this power vpon women onely, and not aswell vpon men? Is it not an honester conduct, if a Man do accompany the Apostle whan he preacheth and defray the charges, thã a Womã to do it which is not his wife? And in case that the ayde of the gospell were to be sought at the hãds of women, yet what nede had thẽ to folow the Apostle gadding aboute, seyng that they might haue borne the same charges more honestly & conueniently otherwise by some other meane? Wherfore this deuice of riche women dothe so euill agrée with the Apostleship, that it can not purchase any credit with wise men.

Now that the Apostles were maried (bycause I woulde haue no man to stande in controuersie thereof) theyr owne Disciples do beare witnesse, Ignatius and Clement. Ignatius amongst other wryteth in this wise: As Peter and Paule, and the reste of the Apostles, whiche were coupled in mariage, and had wiues, not for wanton lusse, but for the increase of the posteritie. Clement affirmeth, not onely that they had wiues, but that they did carry them aboute also. And Eusebius doth alleage him in this wise: In deede this same Clement, whose wordes wée noted, wrytyng agaynst them which do contemne mariage (you may se the olde mischiefe) among the reste sayth this also: Do they also reproue the Apostles? For Peter and Philip, bothe had wiues, and bestowed theyr daughters in mariage. And the Apostle Paule also dothe not refuse to make mention and some greeting of his companion in a certayne Epistle: Whome (he saith) he dothe not carry abroade with hym, that hée mighte be the readier to the preachyng of the Gospell. This sayth he. And this sentence Leo the Pope did sette forth also, agaynst the Epistle of of Nicetus the Abbot. Wée muste in any wyse confesse (sayth he) that it is not lawfull for a Bysshoppe, Priestе, or Deacon to shifte off hys wyfe from his charge, for religions sake, but hée muste gyue hyr meate and drinke and clothyng, but they muste not lye with them carnally as other menne are wonte to do, as wée reade that the holy Apostles did, and as S. Paule the Apostle sayth: Haue not wée power to carry aboute our sister wyfe, as the brother of the Lorde and Cephas? See fole, that hée sayth not: Haue not wée power to embrace in our armes our sister wyfe, but to carry them about with vs, so that they mighte be mayntayned by the rewarde of theyr preachyng, not that there was any more after that, any carnall wedlocke betwixte them. This is written in that place, whiche dothe so farre forth stande with the truthe, that it dothe testifie that the Apostles were maried, and that they did carry aboute theyr wynes in theyr message doing, to bée founde with them vppon the Gospell.

How then: is it not méeter trowe we, that we should credite the Disciples of the Apostles, cõcernyng their doings, than them whiche liued long after the tymes of the Apostles, and began to take vpon them & to teache what they lisked in Chrystes church? It is written that Ignatius was the seconde after Peter, that ruled the Churche of Antioche. See therefore Eusebius in his Ecclesiasticall history. Of Clement, Paule himselfe maketh mention.

The one doth not only graũt that that the Apostles Peter and Paule and the reste, had wiues, but he witnesseth also, that he had a desire of the encrease of the posteritie, as the lawfull vsage of mariage is. The other dothe also attribute mariage to the Apostles, & dothe expounde not onely those wordes to be meant of the Apostles, wherof we do now speake, but the same also which be written in the epistle to the Philippiãs of his owne lawfull wife. If the Apostles did cary aboute with them riche women, and not their owne lawfull wiues, howe chaunceth that their Disciples knew not of it? and that Hierome & Chrysostome knewe it which folowed them so long afterwarde, and others also that be later than they? Clement (as Eusebius dothe alleage in the place and chapter before sayd) writeth that the Apostle Peter, whé he saw his wife ledde vnto death, hée cried out to hir at hir backe, & sayde: O déere wife, remember the Lorde. Where shall we thinke that this was done, and when? Doth it not appeare that it was done at that time, when Peter also shoulde suffer martyrdome? or shall wée thynke that there was no daunger towards him, when hé did with an open mouthe crie, and aduised hys wyfe to suffer the martyrdome constantly? Who perceyueth not that this Apostle did carrie aboute hys wyfe with hym in his Apostleship, euen till hyr dying day?

Lib. 3. cap. 36 Philemon.

The talke of Hierome resolued.

Hierome maketh a worke vpõ the worde, Carying aboute. He sayth not (saith he) to mary womé, leaste he shold be thought to speake of wiues, but he saith, to carry them about the prouinces, to minister vnto thẽ necessary things of their goods. But what credite

credite is this reporte worthy to haue, whiche is contrary to that of the Apostles disciples? It is true, he sayth not, To take, but to carry aboute. For he speaketh not of the power to marriage, & to take wiues (for it had bin nothing to the purpose of which he spake in the .7. chapiter) but of ỳ power to take theyr necessarie expenses of the Churches, to the finding not only of the Apostles, but of theyr wiues also, if shée be in his company as of hyr lawful husband. And he saithe, that he vsed not hys power, no nor yet toke not hys owne charges of the Corinthians, muche lesse caried about his wyfe to be founde of their goodes. It séemeth that this poynte of the company of wiues dothe encrease the power of the Apostles, to make vs to vnderstande that there is due not onely to the ministers, but vnto their wyues also liuyng vpon the churches, which they do serue in the Lorde.

So that it doth appeare partely by the wordes of the Apostle, and partly by the testimony of Ignatius and Clemẽt, that ỳ Apostles had wiues, and that they did not forsake theyr wiues in theyr Apostleship, but that they caried them aboute with them. Wherefore wée may not agrée to their wickednesse, which by the drift of the Diuell do withstande the exãples of the Apostles & their Canons for the making them Bishops that be the husbandes of one wife, and go aboute to sequester maried men frõ the ministery of Chriſte, as carnall and vncleane.

Pope Siritius, sanoyng plainely of the Diuels doctrine, presumed to vse the wordes of the Apostle against the honesty of wedlocke, where he saith: They that be in the flesh, can not please God. And in that place he maketh a decrée agaynst ỳ mariage of the ministers of Chriſt, as though that they whiche liue in lawful wedlocke, should be with that kind of life in the flesh, & could not please God. The Apostle shoulde haue reckened wedlocke among the workes of the flesh, and haue sayde: Wedlocke is vncleane in all men, and the defiled bedde: and that to be a Bishop, it is not requisite to be the husbãd to one wife. And by this diuelish sentence of the Pope, all laye faithfull maried folkes that do liue in matrimony, are cõdemned and excluded frõ the grace of God. And this is the same which the Apostle did forsée to come.

Siritius Pope.

Some of the Councels did wrestle with this wickednesse of Satan, as the same that was gathered at Nyce, the yéere of our saluation .325. and the same at Gangres the yeare 333. of that of Nyce wée do reade in this wise: The Councell of Nyce studying to redresse the lyfe of the Churchmen, did sette them certayne lawes which we do call Canons. In the treatise of ỳ which some thought it good to bring in a lawe, ỳ Bishops Priests, Deacons, and Subdeacons, should lye no more with their wiues whiche they had maried before theyr consecration. And Paphnutius the cõfessour arose vp and spake against it, protesting that mariage was honorable, and saying that it was chastity for a man to lie with his owne wyfe. So that he aduised the Coũcell, that they shoulde not make any suche lawe, assuryng them that the matter was great, and might be an occasion occasion of fornication, eyther to thẽ, either to theyr wyues. And thus Paphnutius did set forth the matter, albeit he were vnmaried himselfe, & the Synode commended his opinion, and decreed nothing in this matter, & left it to euery mans will, and not to be of any necessitie. This is written there: Wherein the diligent reader may marke these poyntes.

1 First, that at those times bishops, Priests, Deacons, Subdeacõs were maried. For they were chosen according to the Canon of the Apostles, whiche were the husbandes of one wyfe.

2 Secondly, that Satan enticed the fathers of the Councell to sequester them by the authoritie of the Councell, whom God had ioyned togither. For what was it else to forbidde the vse of mariage, but to separate the man and wyfe asunder? If a tyraunt shoulde say to a Bishop: I am content thou shalte be the Bishop of the Churche, vpon this condition, that thou shalte not doe thy duetie in it: What were it else, but to sequester the Bishop from hys Churche, and take away all the myniſterie of Chriſte?

3 Thirdly, we may perceyue that it is no new matter in the Churche, that some one man may be of a better iudgement than the whole Coũcell, and not onely iudge better, but also speake against the decrées of the Councel. Wherefore it were a most wicked matter, that the right iudgement, though it be in few, should bée ouerwhelmed with the multitude of them that be out of the way. Let the maried Bishop therfore thinke, that he is not bound before God, but that he alone ought to resist all the lawes in the worlde that do condemne wedlocke.

4 Fourthly, in that that Paphnutius did protest before the Councell, that mariage is honorable, and that it is no vncleanneſſe or incontinẽcie for a man to lye with his own wife, but that it is chaſtitie, and that the Synode commended his iudgement, wé do sée what we may iudge of thé whiche do condemne the weddyng of Priestes and Bishops for vncleanneſſe and incõtinencie, contrary both to the authoritie of the apostles, and also of the Synode.

5 Fiftly, that is also to be noted, that Paphnutius did no doubte, by the inſtinct of the holy Spirite, to assure them that the law made against the wedlocke of the myniſters of Chriſte, houlde be a sore occasion of whoredome. I beséeche you what could haue bene forsayd more true? By this tyme the heauen & the earth not onely the eyes of Gods Maieſtie dothe abhorre (I will say no more) that vnstayed, large, manifolde, and vniuersall whoremongyng of Bishops, Priests, Friers, and Nonnes. The Synode was astonied at this lodyng of Paphnutius, but the frowardneſſe of the Bishops that haue folowed, hath not bene ashamed of the vncleanneſſe of whoremongyng raygning openly and euery where. The holy Synod would not by their law minister any occasiõ of vncleanneſſe to the myniſters of Chriſte, did therefore refuse all bonde of neceſſitie, and woulde haue the matter lefte at libertie. The Bishops that came after, coulde be moued by no exãples howe horrible soeuer the wanton neſſe tonnelle was, to reſtore again the liberty of mariage, and to ridde the churche from ſo haynous ſlaunders. Pius the ſecõd, before he was made Byſhop of Rome, and toke into his hands the cup of the Babylonicall whoredome to reache it out vnto kings, ſayd opẽly, that he thought the mariage was vpon ſome great reaſon take from prieſts, but yet that it was to be reſtored agayne for other great reaſons. Why did he not then after that he had gotten to be Byſhop of Rome, reſtore the ſame to the church, whiche he knew was for ſo great reaſon to be reſtored? Surely it is not the vſe of the Byſhops of Rome to ordayne the ſame, whiche iuſtice and equitie, yea and neceſſitie doth require, but to hynder as much as they bee able by fyre, ſworde, &c. that none elſe ſhall attempte it. But thus muche of the councell of Nice, whiche they do make euen equall with the Goſpell of Chriſte, that dare withſtande the Decrees of the ſame.

Pius ſecundus.

The councel of Ancegane.

The Councell of Ancerane was fiue yeres before ỹ Synode of Nice, at that there was made a decree for Deacons, that if they promiſed chaſtitie at their inſtitution, they might not marrie afterwardes: but in caſe they did not promyſe it, they mighte marry lawfully. And that was the gappe and beginnyng of all the miſchief that folowed after. The Councell at Nyce whiche enſued ſhortly after, went aboute to take away the vſe of lawfull wedlocke from them alſo that were married before their inſtitution. In that ſorte Satan inticed them, tranſformed into an Angell of light, bryging, compelling and thruſting on the Paſtors of ỹ church, to ſette open not the narrow gappes, but great wide gates toward the pit of perdition.

The councel of Gangrence which was kepte in the tyme of Sylueſter, the yeere of the Lorde. 333. meanyng to withſtande this miſchiefe that grewe to be great, ordeyned in this wiſe. If any man do ſhunne a maried Prieſte, as though he ought not to communicate, bicauſe of his mariage, and ſo forbeareth from his cõmunion, let him be accurſed. This Canon doth ſufficiently declare, that the ſame which was godly & profitably ordayned in the councel of Nice, began within twentie yeares after to be ſo contemned, that maried miniſters were counted vnworthy to miniſter to the churches of Chriſte, bycauſe that lawfull mariage was ſpit at, as vncleane, by them whiche embraced the doctrine of the Diuell. The very Canons do declare, howe this miſchiefe toke rote. It was decreed in the ſame Councell in this wiſe: If any man that profeſſeth virginitie or chaſtitie, do condemne mariage as abhominable, &c. lette him be accurſed. And, If any perſon that profeſſeth virginitie for Gods ſake, do vpon a pryde rebuke them that be in mariage, lette hym be accurſed. And, If any woman will forſake hir huſbande and departe, breakyng the bonde of wedlocke, to condemne mariage, let hyr be accurſed. Then they whiche dyd vowe virginitie and the Sole lyfe, condemned mariage, and dyd diſdaine them that were maried. Thereupon folowed the breache of wedlock, and the ſequeſtration of the man and wife. The huſbands abãdoned ned their wiues, and the wiues their huſbandes, and brake the knotte that God made, vnder the colour of continence: the women did cut off their heare, which the womenkinde receiued of God for a couert, and token of ſubiection, as we may ſee in the ſame Councell, and that miſchiefe grewe ſo great, that vnder the pretence of religion and continencie, the parentes diſpiſed their owne children, whiche they ought to bryng vp, and the children forſoke their parentes. Theſe things we finde that the doctrine of the Diuell bredde in the Churche of Chriſte a thouſande and two hũdred yeare agone.

The councell of Gangrence.

And the ſixte Synode, as it is alleaged in the Canon law, willing to withſtande this miſchiefe, decreed in this ſort: If any man do preſume cõtrary to the Canons of the Apoſtles, to bereaue any Prieſts or Deacons from the company and hauyng to do with their lawfull wiues, lette him be depoſed. Lykewiſe any Prieſte or Deacon, whiche doe put away his wyfe for religions ſake, let hym be excommunicated: and in caſe he doe ſtande in the matter, let him be depoſed. This is in ỹ place. But yet the authoritie of this Councel could not bryde thys miſchiefe, bycauſe it came on ſo faſte. And yet there were ſome wiſe men, whiche folowyng the Canon of the Apoſtles and the Nycene councell, dyd more imbrace the ſafe chaſtitie of Matrimony, than that newe and daungerous kinde of continencie. And there were many ſuche alſo found in the tymes of Hierome. Whereupon he wryteth in this ſorte againſt Iouinian: And if Samuell whiche was brought vp in the Tabernacle, maried a wyfe, what maketh that againſt virginitie? as though that many Prieſtes had not wyues alſo now adayes, and that the Apoſtle deſcribeth not a byſhop to be the huſbande of one wyfe, hauing children in al chaſtitee. Thus much there. At length the libertie of lawfull wedlocke, honeſtie, and chaſtitee, was vtterly taken from the Miniſters of Chriſte, in al the Weſt partes vnder the tyranny of the Byſhops of Rome, and that at that time ſpecially when Hypocriſie, ſuperſtition and Symonie grewe in the Churche; and there dyd ouergrowe alſo a multitude of idle perſons, gapyng for benefices for their bellies ſake, and all the worlde began to be full of Temples, Chappels, Aulters, and Monkeries, and now meane not onely of thirty yeres of age, but beardleſſe, wiſking boies, were euery where bounde to the vowe of chaſtitie. It is knowen what befell in Almaigne, the yeere. 1074. vnder Hildebrande, whiche was called Gregory the vij. He (as we may ſee in the Chronicle of Sigilbert Gemblacenſis) ſequeſtred maried prieſts frõ Gods ſeruice, and forbadde Lay men to heare their Maſſes. What became of it? Few kepe chaſtitie, and many did counterfayte it, ſome for gayne, ſome for ỹ ſpirite of glory: many did heape vp vpon their incõtinency, periurie, and adultery alſo: the cõſcience of them that were ſecretely coupled vnto their wyues, were marueilouſly troubled, the faythfull folkes did iudge euill of the myniſtery of maried Prieſtes, and fell ſo farre, that there were ſome that did treade vnder their feete the Sacrament of the

The tyranny of Rome rooke away wyues frõ prieſts and myniſters.

Gregorius ſeptimus.

Lordes

Lordes body, whiche was conſecrated by maried Prieſtes, and poured out the Lordes cup vpō the ground. In this wiſe, whē ſome prieſtes were in contempt for mariage, and ſome for theyr whoredome, whiche did immediatly folowe the forbiddyng of wedlocke, many Hypocrites takyng this occaſiō, and falſe doctours riſing vp in the churches, drewe the people after them.

The order of the myniſters of the church corrupted.

Of thence ſprange ſo many and ſundry ſectes of Monkes, Friers, and ſo the order of the myniſters of the Church beyng corrupt by the meane of Satan, became mēcte (according to the ſaying of our Sauior) to be caſte away like vnſaucery ſalte, and to bee trodē vnder mens fēete that do paſſe by. And howe exceedingly this wickednes is increaſed within theſe fiue yeres, the thing it ſelfe crieth out. The people whiche was wonte to be offended with the myniſtery of the maried Prieſtes, learned by litell and litle to vſe the ſeruice of whoremongers, concubinaries, adulterers, inceſtuaries, defilers of byrgins, & what not? There is no kinde of lechery ſo manifeſt, ſo ſhameleſſe, obſtinate, ſo horrible & pernitious, whiche can now offende the blinded people, and make any man vnmēete to receyue a benefice: the onely honeſtie & chaſtitie of honeſt wedlocke hath bidden an vnrecuperable foyle in the Churche of Rome, and is iudged worthie (where and what way ſoeuer it do attempt to recouer his olde loſen right) to be cruelly caſt to the ſwoorde and fire, againſt whiche violence, neyther the ordinaunce of God, nor the Doctrine of the Apoſtles, nor ỹ cuſtome of the old church, nor the decrees of the olde Counels, nor the manifeſt decay of the order of the Churche, nor ſo many thouſandes of loſt ſoules, be able to make hyr parte good.

Why that Mariage vvas taken from the Miniſters of Chriſte.

A Man may well maruell, vppon what conſideratiō mariage was ſo ſtoutly taken away from the myniſters of Chriſt. And whē I thinke vpō the matter, I do finde two principall cauſes thereof. The one doth concerne the purpoſe of Satan, who meante by the pretence of Sole life, to ouerwhelme the Churche with horrible examples of leachery. And in that reſpecte this lawe that was made againſt the mariage of the miniſters, is called by the Apoſtle, The doctrine of Diuelles. The tree is knowen by the fruyte, for all they, practiſe that woulde referre the prophecie of the Apoſtle vnto Tacian, Montane, and Eucratites. Like as he is deēmed a right to be the enimy of mankynde, which though he marreth not all, yet hee dothe marre a great ſorte: and as hee is a very tyraunt, which albeit he do not vſe his tyrannous violence againſt all men but againſt ſome: ſo they be the very enimies and oppreſſours of lawfull wedlocke, which feare not to take away the vſe of it, not from one or two, but from an innumerable multitude of the miniſters, vpō their owne rathe heads, contrary vnto the expreſſe Canon of the Apoſtle. The Apoſtle ſayth, ſuch as do forbidde to marry, he ſayth not to all men, for in caſe caſe they do forbid none, the the prophecie of the Apoſtle cānot be referred vnto them. But they do forbidde it to an innumerable ſorte, therefore whether they will or no, they muſte nedes be touched with this prophecie, no leſſe than the Montanſtes, Tacians, and the Eucratites. This is the firſte cauſe of the bringing in of the Sole lyfe into the church, ouer true and ſtrong, though they will not be acknowen of it.

Another is, that they may kēepe and heape vp togither the goodes of the Churche. When theyr wealth beganne to be greate, the Byſhops were afrayde leaſt there ſhould happen ſome decay by the maried Byſhops and Prieſtes, ſpecially if they had ſonnes, doughters, and nephues, &c. vnto whome they might derive the Churche goodes. And leaſt any body may thinke that I do bring out this of my owne head, I will alleage a moſte worthie witneſſe for this purpoſe, that is Pelagius the Byſhop of Rome, whoſe wordes ſette forth into the decrees of the biſhops, be theſe: (he ſpeaketh of the Biſhop of Syracuſa:) We wiſhed to haue obeyed your deſire in the very beginnyng of your glory, vnleſſe that ſundry cauſes had enforced vs to defer the inſtitution of his prieſthode many times, for ỹ that eyther the qualitie of ỹ perſon, as you do know right wel, or elſe his wife being yet alyue, or the childrē, by whom the ſubſtance of the church is wonte to be endaungered, did ſuſpend our minde the longer frō the inſtituting of him. And a little after that: In ſuche doubtfull caſes we iudged that beſt to be done, that with conuenient foreſight and with ſure order of counſel, we ſhould make ſure that matter, wherfore our principall conſtitutiō doth forbidde, that he that hath wife and children, ſhould be preferred vnto a Byſhoprick. In whith matter we take ſuch ſurety of the ſame Byſhop of Syracuſa, before it chaūced him to be ordeyned Biſhop by vs, whereby he ſhoulde declare what his little ſubſtance were at this preſent time, taking an inuētorie of his goodes, and ỹ he ſhould neuer be ſo bold as to occupy any of the goodes of the church, eyther by himſelfe, either by his childrē & wife, or by any of his houſe, or alye, or by any ſtraunger: and that he ſhall adde to the dominiō of ỹ church all maner things whiche he ſhall get in the tyme of hys Byſhoprick, and leaue nothyng more to his chyldren or heyres, than the ſame whiche is now written in the Inuētorie. This is there. Whereby I ſuppoſe it is manifeſt, for what cauſe mariage is ſo earneſtly taken away from the myniſters of Chriſte, Byſhops, and Prieſtes, and that it is prouyded no maried menne ſhoulde bee choſen, ſpecially if they had chyldren: and that they whiche were choſen, ſhould forbeare theyr wiues. In deede they ſought the wealth of the Churche, and when the ſame was gotten, all that diſſimulatiō paſſed away, wherwith the pretence of puritie of the order & office of prieſthode was made. This Erāſmus ſaw, who in his Annotations after a ſore lamentation he addeth very prettily, ſaying: But I am much afrayde, leaſt the goodes of the Churches do make the clergy chalke nowe adayes rather then any godly loue, when we do feare, leaſt that which we haue, wold be caught away, or at the leaſt that we ſhoulde haue no more.

Erasmus Roterod. in annot. ſuper 1. Tim. 3.

For theſe two cauſes, the ſole life of Prieſtes hath bene hitherto vſed and maintayned, and mariage refuſed. And what the fruytes of the wealth of the Churche be, I nede to ſay nothing here. Let men but loke vpō the pride of Prieſts & Biſhops, which the high eſtate of princes may ſcarcely be compared therunto, loke vpon theyr Epicuricall delights and pleaſures, loke vpō their luſty warlikeneſſe, loke vpon theyr idleneſſe, how filthy it is, and what deteſtable vices and crymes it dothe brēde, ſo that it was not ſpoken of without cauſe of our aūceſtors: Religion bredde riches, and the daughter hath choked vp the mother.

VVhether be lavvful for a bysop to take a vvife

This I haue thought mete to ſay briefly in this matter, worthy in very dede for Chriſtian Princes to know and to take care of, that there may be ſome proviſion had for the wretched and decayed ſtate of the church. The dregges of the obſtinate vncleanlineſſe doth crie and ſay: Albeit that it were vſed in tymes paſſed, that maried men were choſen to the myniſteries of the Church, yet it was neuer heard that it was lawful for them which were choſen, that after theyr inſtitution, being in the miniſterie, they might marry.

1 Let them firſt returne to the Canō of the Apoſtle, & chooſe the huſbāds of one wife, hauyng his chyldren in ſubiection & obedience, and then lette them diſpute of that, whether it be lawful for a Miniſter, Biſhop, prieſt, and Paſtor for to marry or no.

They gaue to theſelues authority to forbid the ſame, which the Apoſtle did not forbidde, how much more the hath the Miniſter authoritie to do the ſame, whiche is in no place forbidden by any authoritie of the Apoſtle?

3 It is lawful for a Biſhop to be a huſbande. Let him be the huſbande of one wyfe, ſayth the Apoſtle. If it be lawfull to be ſo, howe ſtandeth it withal, that it is not lawfull to bee? It is not lawfull for hym that hath two wiues to be a Biſhop, Ergo, it can not be. For if it be not lawfull to chooſe ſuche a one, it is not lawfull that he ſhoulde be ſuche a one. It is lawfull to chooſe the huſbande of one wyfe, Ergo, there is nothyng to lette, but that he may be the huſbād of one wife after his choſing. But if it be not lawfull for a Biſhop to be a huſbande, then he can not be a huſband. For whatſoeuer cannot bee lawfully done, cannot be ſette in the hande of thoſe thynges whiche bee bothe lawfull and honeſt. But the mariage of one wyfe is lawfull and honeſt for a Biſhop, Ergo, it is lawful and honeſt for him to be the huſband of one wyfe.

And whereas they do ſay, that it was neuer heard that any prieſt and Biſhop married a wife, it is proued to be a very fonde and falſe tale, of that whiche we reade in the decrées of Pope Stephan in this wyſe. The traditions of the Eaſte Churche bee of one ſorte, and the tradition of this holy Churche of Rome be of an other ſorte. For theyr Prieſtes, Deacons, and Subdeacons are maried, but no Prieſt from a Subdeacon to a Biſhop of this church hath licence to be maried. This is written there.

VVhat by thes euer Dyſhes

Doth

Dothe he not ſay openly & plainely, that Prieſtes, Deacons, and Subdeacons in the Eaſte Churches bee maried? Ye dothe not ſay that they did chooſe ſuch as were maried, which was for all that the tradition of the Apoſtle, but hee ſaith, that they were ioyned in mariage. If they were ioyned in marriage, then they maried wyues alſo when they were in the myniſtery. And this the Eaſt churches did, erected by the Apoſtles, keping the traditiōs of the Apoſtles, which the Romiſh churche did vnadviſedly flee frō a good while agone. At length this libertie to marrie in the Grēke churches was narrowly reſtrayned, as we perceiue in the Diet at Wormes. An. 1540. by ỳ Grēkes which were there preſent. It is lawful for a Deacō after he is choſen, to mary a maydē. And in caſe he be maried when he is made Prieſt, he may mary likewiſe, ſo that he do it before ỳ he do practiſe the office of ỳ Prieſt. But in caſe he do mary after that he hath practiſed the office, he is deposed frō his prieſthood. Therfore they ỳ be ordeyned to be prieſtes, do marie immediately, ſo that they may be huſbandes before that they do lay theyr handes to any holy thing. I ſuppoſe that this cuſtome roſe vpō that, that the people was offended more with the ſolempnitie of their mariage, thā with theyr mariage of the Prieſtes in dēde, becauſe there was vſed ſome lightneſſe therein, as well as in other menues. Elſe what matter is it, whether a Prieſte marie before or after the beginning of his function, ſeyng that throughout all the time of his miniſtery he may be maried, as ſone as he hath done ſeruice, and returne againe to his wyfe? Is it reaſon to make ſo greate a difference betwirt the ſolemniſing of the mariage, and to be maried, ſo that it is not holden to bee vnlawful for him to bee maried when he dothe his office, and yet vnlawfull to ſolemniſe the mariage? What is mariage elſe, but the holy entryng and beginnyng of the moſte honeſt Patrimonie? If Patrimony by it ſelfe be holy, than is the beginnyng of it holy alſo. If the tree be good, the rote muſt nedes be good. This cuſtome is very much to bee blamed, that the ſame whiche is lawfull to be vſed at the beginnyng, ſhoulde not be lawfull after that men haue taken vpon them the Myniſterie, for it is the nexte degrée to decay the whole, to bee by little and little forbidden all togither, whē they will not haue it lawfull to enter into it after the myniſtery. For it ſeemeth they do ſufficiently declare that they woulde as they could take away wedlocke from the myniſters, and that they doe eſteeme more the myniſtery of a ſingle myniſter, than of a maried, in that that they will not haue hym to mary after he hath miniſtred once: But lette vs returne to the Canon of the Apoſtle. Hee ſaith the huſbande of one wife. Wee haue declared that the Apoſtle doth not reiect wedlocke, but when a man hath many wyues at once. So the faithfull men muſt vſe to iudge more reuerently and religiouſly of the honeſtie and chaſtitie of wedlocke, and not ſeke to ſeeme to be more religious than the very Apoſtles which were married themſelues, whiche were married menne, and caried about theyr wiues in the miniſtery a their Apostleship: and for a conclusion, did ordeyne to chose Bysshops the husbandes of one wife.

VVhat is mirriage.

Secondly, he woulde haue him to be sober. For so signifieth the Greeke worde, But for asmuch as they that be sober, be not sleepy, but ofte wakefull, and attent to those matters that they haue charge of, therefore Erasmus dyd handsomely translate it vigilant. For in a Bysshop, that is to say, the watche and the superattendent wakefulnesse, is specially requisite, that hee may be attent to watch all things that may befall to the Lordes flocke, least in case he be sleepy, he fal into that saying of the prophete: His watchemen be al blinde, all ignorant, dombe dogges that cannot barke, seyng vayne things, slumberyng and louyng sleepe, &c. And what can come to any Citie more hurtfull in the tyme of warre, than a sleepy and dronken watcheman: Of these latter tymes the Lorde talde vs before, that all shoulde slumber. If all doe fall aslepe, yea and the watchemen doe sleepe also, who shall wake for the Lordes flocke? Who shall awake them when they doe sleepe and snorte? It is therefore moste necessarie, that no slouthfull person, sluggish, negligent, and sleepy, bee chosen to Bysshoprickes, but they that haue a quicke, vigilant, and attent mynde to vse things that they haue vndertaken to do. It is not conuenient, that he which hath the rule of others, shoulde sleepe all the night, muche lesse in the day tyme. The saying of the Poete is well knowen: A counsellour may not sleepe all night.

Thirdly, he doth adde: Sounde of minde. For so signifieth the Greeke worde, Erasmus dothe translate it sober, the vulgare interpreter, wyse. The soundenesse of the mynde, is the whole and vnblemished constitution of the minde, so that it be not blemished in any parte, either with hate or enuy, or with any naughty purpose, or otherwise with any vncurable effect of vnderstandyng or iudgement. It is in deede a very necessary condition. For albeit a Bysshop be neuer so watchfull, vnlesse that he haue this soundnesse of mynde, he shall do the Churche more harme than good. Therefore menne that haue not a sounde minde, are reiected, as corrupt both in iudgement and in mynde: and in case they haue any wysedome, they haue it more to doe euill thnto do good.

Fourthly, he saith, Modest. Erasmus dothe translate it Modest. The vulgar translation hath comely and orderly. It meaneth a well mannered man, any of good behauiour, furnished with such conditions agreable for such an office. This orderlinesse hath a great efficacie in the doyng of any matter. For it dothe adorne all honest and godly doings, and maketh them also pleasant and acceptable to the Ethnykes. In the contrary wise what soeuer is done vnstily, loseth much of the estimation of it.

Fiftly, hee saith, Hospitall, the worde signifieth the man that dothe louyngly entertayne straungers, lodge them, and ayde them to hys power. This gifte the Apostle doth requyre of necessitie to be in the mynisterie. For this is the chaunce and choyce of faythfull folkes, that they bee turned out of theyr owne houses for Christes sake, and do become straungers and outlawes in the worlde. Wherefore it dothe belong to the Bysshops chiefly, to entertaine and receiue them into their house for Christes sake, least when they be driuen out of the dores by the vnfaithfull, and do finde no comfort among theyr fellowes in fayth, they may chaunce to be ouerthrowen and ouerwhelmed with ỹ waight of their aduersitie, & so returne to the worlde againe. And God doth require this hospitalitie of the people of Israell, when he saith, that he loueth straungers, and doth gyue them meate and drinke and clothe, and addeth: Therfore see that you do loue also straungers, for you your selues were strangers in the land. It is another point to be a louer of straungers, and to be hospitall. He dothe not alwayes loue straungers that dothe lodge them, which may be done vpon some slight cause, and slender respect.

Sixtly, he sayth, Able to teache. The vulgare interpreter hath, A teacher. It doth not simply signifie a teacher, but one able and mete to teache. It is not necessary that the Bysshop must purchase the title of a doctour of Diuinitie at his greate charge in the vniuersitie, but that he be furnished both with habilitie and will to teache. This peece he did set forth more at large to Titus, in this wise: Holding fast the faithful worde that is according vnto doctrine, that he may be able to exhorte by sounde doctrine, and ouerthrowe them that shall speake agaynst it. He calleth the doctrine of the Gospell, the sounde doctrine and faythfull worde, and sayth: that a Bysshop muste stande stifly to the preachyng of the same. And hee maketh twoo partes of it: the one, whereby they that be ignorant are instructed, the other, whereby they that doe speake agaynst it are ouerthrowen. And this is the principall parte of a Bishop, euery sote to be teaching the faithful, and to reproue them that doe speake agaynst it. The other things that be sette forth here, are of that nature, that they may bee well loked for of euery Christian man: but the publike office of teachyng is loked for only of him, whose charge and office it is so to do, sauing that it dothe also pertayne to the good man of the house, to teache his family at home, and to instruct them in the knowledge of God and true godlinesse. Now compare here with the counterfaite Bysshops of our dayes. I beseeche you, shew me one among a hundred, that dothe thinke that the charge of teaching dothe belong vnto him. There was in a place a certaine carnall bysshop, then whē he would make folks to beleeue that he was a true Bysshop, he gate hym once or twice in his lyfe vp into the pulpit, trimmed vp for the same purpose, and talked to the people, whiche he went about to reuoke from the truthe and libertie of the Gospell, vnto the darknesse and yoke of Popery, lokyng sometimes vpon the scroule of paper that hee had in hys hande, sometymes prompted by one that stode behynde him: as though this were to be a teacher, and as though to shew himselfe in the pulpitte once or twise in his lyfe to the people, were to holde faste the faithful wordes and sounde doctrine. But hee made a quicke ende of his tale. For he spake accordyng to his knowledge, but dissembled the matter to a wicked entent. His talke was so foolish, that it made them of his owne side, specially the rest of the Bishops ashamed.

Tvvoo partes of sounde doctrine.

Not giuen to wyne. μὴ πάροινον.

Seuenthly, hée proceédeth in the behauour of the life, and addeth: Not giuen to wine. Eras. and the commō interpretour dothe translate it, Not giuen to drinke wine. πάροινος is not is not he that is sometymes dronke with ouermuch wine, but he that is giuen to wine, though he drynke not so that he be dronke. It signifieth one that sitteth at the wyne, that is continually at the wyne. And he that is of that sorte, is altogither vnmeete for that office, for it requireth a speciall sobrietie and watchefulnesse. Upon this reason, the Canons did forbidde, that the ministers of the churche shoulde not enter or come in Winetauernes. I knowe that this Greeke worde is oftentimes taken for one that like a dronkarde dothe outrage & take on like a madde man. But I thinke that the same is the simpler sense which I appoynted before. For the Apostle dothe not onely exclude him that doth outrage, but him also that is ouermuche giuen to wyne.

πάροινος

No striker. μὴ πλήκτην.

Eighthly, he saith, No striker. The Greeke worde signifieth a stricker. But it séemeth to be set in this place, for him that striketh with the tong rather then with the hand, to seclude him that hath a bitter tongue and gyuen to rayling. And yet it is conuenient for a bishop that he do stricke nor with hande nor tongue, as men do that be stirred vnto anger, but that he kéepe his hande and tongue bothe frée from this faulte, and be of a gentle and milde disposition, to resemble ỳ spirite of his master, which shewed no poynt of sharpenesse, no not to his enimies.

Not gredy of filthy lucre. μὴ αἰσχροκερδῆ.

Ninthly, he saith, Not a filthy gayner. He that doth gaine fouly, gyuen to dishonest gayne. Erasmus dothe translate it, Fouly desirous of gaine. The common trāslation hath in the first Couetous or desirous of filthy lucre, But the Apostle dothe not requyre this only of a Bishop, that he be not couetous of filthy lucre, as though ỳ desire of some lucre might stande in a Bishop, so that it were not foule: but that in no wise he shal be intent or gyuen to lucre, bicause it is foule in a Bishop. No man that dothe gape after gayne, hath any minde to the filthinesse in the gayne, but séeketh his gayne, and he findeth a good sauour of the gayne, vpō what matter so euer it doe arise, fayre or foule. So that αἰσχροκερδῆ is not he that doth coueth filthy gayne, but hée that doth couet any thing filthily. He that hath this disease, hath no regard whereupon he doth rayse his gayne, so that he may do it. He spareth no body, nor parents, nor brotherne, nor kinsfolke, nor friendes, nor the widowes, nor the fatherlesse, and motherlesse, nor the poore, nor the faythfolkes, nor them that be committed to his defence, nor he feareth not the knowledge of God, nor he maketh no account of his name and office, but he doth flée euen so after the smell of gayne, as the Rauens do after stinking carriō. Hée turneth himself into all fashions, to licke vp some gayne in euery corner. He is trustie to no mā, he lieth in wayte for euery mans mans goodes disceptfully, craftily, counterfayting and dissembling, and is hys craftes mayster to deuise any thyng, he taketh holde of any occasion, whereby he may sholder in to pyll and poule whatsoeuer it be, be it holy or prophane. Will you haue a paterne of this moste filthy vice? as though it were not to be founde euery where in the Prelates of the Churche, and most of all in the court of Rome, whiche as men do say commonly now adayes, wil not haue the shéepe without the woll. Their marketting there, hath nor meane, nor bottome, nor ende, nor any shame at all. They doe picke vp as very slaues of incredible couetousnesse by money an vnnumerable sorte of wayes, from all nations, by all manner of cases and causes, so that the saying of the Poete doth most truely frame to them: What doest thou not compell the harts of men to bye and sell, O holy hunger of golde?

Howe farre our Bishops of these dayes be from this vice, we néede not to go by gesse, as for the Bishops, Prelates, Abbots, & all the Churchmen of Almaigne, the conscience of tffe Almaines can iudge, the French of the Frenche, the Spanyardes of the Spanyardes, the Polonians of the Polishe, the Italians of the Italians, the Hungarians of the Hungarians, yea the Turkes conscience may iudge of them, as for the Bishop of Rome, whiche hath made himselfe by righte and wrong, contrary vnto the Decrées and Canons of oure Forefathers, yea and contrary to the mynde of Chriſte, the vniuersall Bishoppe of all Christendome, and hath layde his ingins and snares for al Christian mens purses and consciences, it is conuenient that all Christian menne shoulde iudge vpon it.

And forasmuche as we bee fallen into this place of the filthy gayne of the court of Rome, I am compelled by the very naughtinesse of the matter, to stande a whyle vpon it, & to giue the Reader at the least some taste of it, and that not in those Cases that are done sometime by chaunce, but in certaine, stayed, and determinate cases, in whiche they: dayly and accustomed marketting is practised, euen as openly as is possible.

Of the causes of Matrimonie.

In causes of Matrimony for a contract within the fourth degree, the cõmon fine is vij. Turons, one Duc. sire Charl.

If any persons that doe know the let of this degree, haue carnall copulation togither, they be fined at rrvj. Turons iiij. Ducates.

For the legittimation of a Childe to be borne in the same degree, ỹ spectall fine is ir. Tur. j. Duc. r. Carl.

They that knowe not this let, and be carnally copulate, pay ir. Turons j. Duc. r. Carl.

They that contracted of ignorãce, and vpon knowledge did accõplish it, must pay vij. Tur. j. Duc. vj. Carl.

They that made a contract knowing the case, & did not accomplish, are taxed at ir. Tur. j. Duc, r. Carl.

But when the Matrimony is contracted and consumated vpon knowledge, then they muste compounde with the Datarie.

If they that be diuorced by ordinarie authoritie, did seeke for the legittimatiõ of the childe borne before the diuorcement, they shall pay ir. Turons i. Duc. r. Carl.

For Matrimony contracte in the thirde degree of kinred or alliaunce, the fine is riiij. Turons iii. Duc. iiii. Carl. And besides that he must euer agree with the Datarie.

In the second degree of kinred or alliaunce, the Popes Lordship dothe only dispence, or the chiefe Penitentiarie when the sea is voyde, and the fine is L. Tur. rii. Duc. vi. Carl.

In the first degree of alliaunce, it is dispenced only in the court of conscience, and the fine is rrr. Tur. vii. Duc. vi. Carl.

Single deuorce is taxed at vii. Turons i. Duc. vi. Carlines.

They that haue made any cõtract in spirituall kinred, are taxed at rvii. Tur. iij. Duc. ir. Carl.

If the kindred be of both sides, the taxe is rrr. Tur. vii. Duc. ij. Carl.

To marry with the godfather, the Popes holinesse may only dispence, or when the see is voyde, the high penitentiarie, and the taxe is L. Tur. rii. Duc. ij. Carl.

When an adulterour, or he that hath promised to make a contract, or hath made a contracte in deede, hath imagined the death of the womans former husband with effect, it cã neuer be dispensed with him to cõtract with an other, onely if he be already contracted, so that the matter be secrete, it may be dispensed withall in the court of conscience onely, and the fine is rrr vi. Tur. ir. Ducates.

If any man hath imagined his wifes death, & the effect folowed not, nor giue his faith to another, he may be dispensed withall, that when his wife is dead he may mary an other, & the fine is ir. Tur. ij. Duc. ir. Carl.

If any man that is wedded, doe whiles his wife is yet aliue, contract with an other ỹ knoweth not ỹ he is wedded, he is bound after his wiues death to take hyr to his wife, taking yet a newe consent, & there can be no diuorce, but at the request of the one part that is ignorant of the matter, & the fyne is ir. Tur. ij. Duc. ir. Carl.

If any mã beleuing that his wife whiche hath bin many yeares from hym, is dead, and do marry another, lette him keepe his last wife, and as long as he doth so beleeue, lette hym yelde the dutie of wedlocke, if he be requested, but he shall not require it. In case his first wife do returne, hee shall leaue the seconde, and sticke to the firste, and the fine is ir. Turo. ij. Ducat ir. Carl.

He that hathe vowed perpetuall chastitie may be dispensed withall in the courte of conscience only, and the fine is rvi. Tur. iij. Ducat. vi. Carl.

With him that hath vowed to enter into religion, but not suddainely, it is dispensed that he may contracte marriage in the court of conscience only, and ỹ fine is rv. Tur. iiij. Duc.

If there be a clause that a man be bound to fulfill his vowe when hys wife is dead, yet it is dispensed withall, the fine vj. Tur. ij. Duc. ij. Carl.

If anye man being within holye orders marry a wife, so that it be secrete, he is dispensed withall that hee may keepe his marriage, as long as his wife liueth, but afterwarde, hee must forbeare marriage, and whiles he is so, he must say ỹ seruice of our Lady at the least vpon the holy days, by way of satisfaction, and he is taxed at rv. Tur. iiij. Ducates.

Of Ievves.

That a Iew may haue a Temple within his owne house, he is taxed at rrr. Tur. vij. Duc. vj. Carl.

For a licence to set vp a new publike Sinagoge, the taxe is ir. Tur. rv. Duc.

A Iewe is taxed for a licence to practise Phisicke with an assistente, at ir. Turons.

Of them that doe take orders, or shall take orders lacking age.

At sixe yeare olde, or first entring into sixe, he shall pay for the first rasure ir. Tur. ij. Duc. ir. Carl.

At sixteene yeares, or as sone as he doe enter into sixteene yeares for subdeaconrie, he is taxed at ry. Tur. iij. Duc. viij. Carl.

At seauentéene yeares, he is taxed at vi. Tur. viij. Ducates.

At eyghteene yeares, for Deaconrie rij. Tur.

At nintéene vi. Turons.

At two and twentye yeares, for Priesthode rij. Tur. ij. Duc. r. Carl.

At foure and twenty vi. Turons.

Licence to take orders.

He that taketh the first rasure, or foure the lesser orders not of hys owne ordinarie, is taxed at iiij. Tur. j. Duc. ir. Carl.

And of whomesoeuer they be taken, or all holy orders, or two, or one alone rij. Tur. ij. Duc. r. Carl.

To be promoted out of the times to all the holy orders, or to two, or one alone r. Tur. ij. Ducates.

For him whosoeuer receyneth the office of blessing for an Abbot rriij. Turo. vi. Duc. and for a Bysshoppe rriij. Tur.

Of them that be faulty in their body.

FOr lacke of ſome member there may be a diſpenſation, to the order of the Clergy and the foure leſſe orders, tare vi. Tur. y. Duc.

For the lacke of anye member there is a diſpenſation to holye orders, or to execute the order, tare xvi. Tur. iiij. Duc.

For lacke of fingers to any ſingle benefice xij. Tur. iij. Duc. vi. Carl.

For lacke of the ſight of the right eye xvi. Tur. iiij. Duc.

For lacke of the leſte eye, ſo that he do holde his boke in the middes of the aultare, and that it be no greate deformitie xxx. Tur. vj. Ducat. vi. Carl.

For lacke of both the eyes, or one of the ſtones vi. Tur. y. Duc.

For him that hath cut off his own yard xij. Tur. iij. Duc. vi. Carl.

Of them that be not orderly put into orders.

HE that is put into orders vnder yeares vj. Turons. y. Ducat. iij. Carlyns.

Without his dimiſſaries, for the irregularitie vj. Tur. y. Ducat. iij. Carlyns.

If it be with the keeping of a benefice xiij. Tur. iij. Duc. vij. Carl.

He that taketh orders out of the dewe ſeaſon vij. Turons. y. Duc. iij. Carlyns.

And for to keepe a benefice xiij. Turons iij. Duc. vij. Carl.

He that after a fayned coulour take orders after the olde ſorte, that is to ſaye, that toke not an othe or brought in no witneſſe vij. Turo. ij. Duc. iij. Carl.

He that ſkypte ouer the four orders, and toke the chiefe orders leppyng ouer the reſt vi. Turo. ij. Duc. ij. Carl.

If expreſſly he do ſkippe ouer ſubdeaconrie or deaconrie xij. Tur. iij. Duc. vj. Carl.

If he doe ſkippe both xvij. Turo. iij. Ducat. ix. Carl.

He that is inſtitute vnto two or three orders in one day vi. Turons ij. Ducates.

Of them that do miniſter and haue taken no Orders.

IF they do it in ſubdeacõrie or deaconrie, the tare is xj. Tur. iij. Ducates, vi. Carl.

If keeping a benefice xvij. Tur. iiij. Duc. ix. Carl.

If they do exercile the miniſtery of the aultare, and do adminiſter the ſacramentes, being no Prieſts, tare xxvi. Tur. ix. Duc.

Of them that be vnlavvfull.

IN the firſt ſort, that is to all orders and one benefice, though it be with cure v. Tur. j. Duc. y. Carl.

And with a clauſe to exchange, if it be demaunded, once only vij. Tur. vij. Duc. iij. Carl.

If a man that is not lawfull, hyding his lacke, doe cauſe himſelfe to be preferred to any orders. vij. Tur. vj. Duc. iij. Carl.

That

That he which is vnlawfull, may change a benefice vi. Turons. ij. Ducates.

For two benefices xij. Turo. iij. Duc. vi. Carl.

For three xviij. Tur. iiij. Duc. ix. Carl.

That a man maye ſerue his fathers benefice in his preſence or abſence vi. Tur. ij. Duc.

For a fyndling vi. Tur. ij. Duc.

For the religious perſons vnlavvful.

FOr religious that be beggers, the fine is vi. Tur. i. Duc. viij. Carl.

With the ſame barefote Friers it is diſpenſed, that one maye be a Miniſter prouinciall, or a Priour, or any other dignity, and with them that be no mendicantes, that they maye come to the dignity to be Abbots x. Tur. iij. Duc.

Of married folkes vvith one alone, or a Maide.

THat they may after the deathe of their wife be promoted to holye orders, the tare is vi. Turons. ij. Ducates.

If they will enioy the priuileges, they be tared at ix. Tur. ij. Duc. ix. Carl.

Of Bygames.

THat they maye enioy the marke of the Clergy, and the foure leſſe orders well receyued before, tare xij. Tur. iij. Duc. iij. Carl.

If there be put vnto a clauſe, that if it chance him to contracte with an other, the tare xviij. Tur. iij. Duc. ix. Carl.

If there be added a diſpenſation to receiue ſingle benefices for a Bygamus that hathe no wife, there bee added vnto it xj. Tur. and the tare is xviij. Tur. vi. Duc.

He that conceyued hys Bygamy when hee was married, and made himſelfe to be ſhorne into the Clergye, is tared at xxi. Turons. v. Duc. vi. Carlyns.

For a Souldioure that is Bygamus contrary to the ordinance of the holy warres and orders, it is diſpenſed, that he may enioy the priuileges of warre, and to continue in Matrimonye xviij. Turons. iij. Ducat. ix. Carlyns.

For the Bygamus that is without a wife, that he maye be promoted to the foure leſſe orders, the tare is xij. Tur. iij. Duc. vi Carl.

For the Bygamus whych conceiued it and toke orders, it is diſpenſed for the miniſtery of the altare in the courte of conſcience onely, with the clauſe Nullius, &c. xxv. Tur. ix. Duc.

For a Bygamus with whom the Pope hath diſpenſed for holy orders and a canonrie or prebend, it is diſpenſed to haue two ſingle benefices, and that they may ſtande both togyther xviij. Tur. vi. Duc.

Of abſolutions and diſpenſations.

FOr him that hath bin at ỹ warrs, and yet killed no man, nor mangled none, nor yet did help to it xxvi. Tur. ix. Duc.

They

They that haue iudged or written in cauſes criminall, are taxed for euery time xxxvi. Turons. ix. Duc.

He that hath layd violent handes vpon a Clerke or a Prieſte, is taxed at vi. Tur. ij. Duc.

He that layd hands vpon an Abbot or any generall Prelate of anye order, is taxed at xij. Tur. iij. Duc. vi. Carl.

He that doth ſo to a Byſhoppe or a ſuperior Prelate xxiiij. Turons. vi. Ducates.

Of the diſmembring of any perſon.

For the Clergy with the accuſtomed limitations xviij. Tur. iiij. Duc. ix. Carl.

If they do deſire abſolution onely without diſpenſation vj. Turons. ij. Ducates.

If any body hath diſmembred an Abbot or generall vi. Turons.

If a Byſhoppe, there be added xij. Turons.

If a lay man doe it to a lay man, the diſpenſation is giuen in the court of conſcience, and he is taxed at vi. Tur. ij. Ducates.

Of vvilfull Murder.

IT is diſpenſed with a wilful Murderoure beyng in the leſſe orders, for one benefice alone, if that bee not inough, for an other, if the ſecond bee not ſufficiente, nother than for the third, and ſo with abſolution, he is taxed at xij. Turons. iij. Duc. vi. Carlins.

And to enioy the priuileges of the Clergie xviij. Turons. iiij. Ducates. ix. Carl.

And with an inhibition he is taxed at xxx. Turons. viij. Duc. vi. Carl.

And to haue three benefices, if he do aſke them. xviij. Tur. iiij. Duc. ix. Carl.

If it be requeſted to his conuenient ſuſtentation xxiiij. Tur. vi. Duc.

And with an inhibition xxxvi. Turons. ix. Duc.

If the partie dyed and not vppon the wound, but by ſome other chāce, and that he which ſtroke him, hadde not the meaning to kill him, it is diſpenſed with hym in that caſe for the miniſtery at the altare, and for al his benefices of the Church xxxvi. Tur. ix. Ducates.

An abſolution for murther for a Biſhop, or an Abbote, or the general of anye order, or of religion of the Rodes, taxed at. l. Tur. xij. Ducates. vi. Carl.

For a Prior of a Monaſtery, or the Popes notarie xl. Tur. x. Duc.

With a ſecrete wilfull murderer beyng in holy orders, it is diſpenſed to miniſter at the altare, and for all his benefices of the Churche in the courte of conſcience, onely with the clauſe, Nullis xxxvi. Tur. ix. Duc.

If manye perſons mette in one murther, for two there is taxed. l. Tur. xij. Duc. vi. Carl.

If one man haue bin at manye murthers at one time, and at one conflicte, he is taxed at xxxvi. Tur. ix. Ducates.

But if it be at diuers conflictes, he is taxed for two. l. Tur. xij. Duc. vi. Carl.

If there be deſired an abſolution for murder for any cōmunaltie, the fine is arbitrarie, according to the conſideration of the place, as it ſhall ſeeme good to the Lordes the Corrector, and Officials for ȳ time beeyng.

Of

Of Murder by chance medly.

For a Clerke, the taxe is vi. Tur. ij. Duc.

If the aſſiſtence alſo be pardoned, then it is done of a ſpecial fauor, and it is taxed xij. Tur. iiij. Duc.

And if abſolution be aſked to beware of the like, it is taxed at xviij. Tur. iiij. Duc. ix. Carl.

If the aſſiſtence be added to xxx. Tur. ix. Duc.

If he that ſlew, vſed not that diligence that he ought to doe, he is taxed at xxiiij. Tur. vi. Duc.

If the aſſiſtēce be added alſo xxxvi Tur. ix. Ducates.

And in caſe he did follow anye vnlawfull matter, as hunting, or gambling, or caſting a ſtaffe or a ſtone, he is taked at xxxvi. Tur. ix. Duc.

Of neceſſary Murder.

IF a Clerke did it in defending himſelfe of neceſſitie vi. Tur. ij. Duc.

If the aſſiſtence be added xij. Tur. iiij. Duc.

If he deſire abſolution to beware xxi. Tur. v. Duc. vi. Carl.

If with an inhibition xxxvi. Tur. ix. Duc.

For murder done in the defence of an other body, whiche elſe coulde not haue eſcaped, it is diſpenſed for the ſeruice of the aultare xxx. Turo. xij. Duc. vi. Carl.

For a Biſhop or an Abbot, &c. abſolution for murder, eyther wilful or caſuall, or neceſſary l. Tur. xij. Duc. vi. Carl.

For a Prior of a monaſterie, &c. iiij. Tur. x. Duc.

Of the Murdering of a Prieſt.

For a lay mā, in forme, in open penance, for one perſon only taxe at vi. Tur. ij. Duc.

For a ſimple Clerke or Prieſt being in holy orders, with the execution of his order vtterly forbidden him vi. Tur. ij. Duc.

If there be mo than one, ſo that it be in one ſelfeſame matter, he is taxed holy for the firſt and for euery one of the other for the halfe.

If one man do committe the murder of many Prieſts at one time and in one conflict, he is taxed aboue. vi.

But in caſe it be done at ſundrye times: For the firſt he is taxed in the whole, and for euerye other time in the halfe only.

If a Prieſte killer doe deſire to change his open penance in a priuie penance, with abſolution alſo, hee is taxed at xviij. Tur. iiij. Duc. ix. Carl.

If he deſire the ſame that hathe done manye Prieſt murders xviij. Turons.

He that hathe ſlayne a Biſhop or any ſuperior Prelate xxxvi. Tur. ix. Ducates.

He that hath ſlayne an Abbot or an other general Prelate xxiiij. Tur.

A diſpenſation for a Prieſt killer that he may obteyne benefices of the Churc ij. Turo. ij. Ducates.

Of the killing of a lay perſon.

THe killing of a lay man in forme, for one lay man alone ij. Turo. i. Duc. iiij. Carl.

If one man hath killed moe than one at one conflict, he is taxed onely for for one.

Of the killing of parents.

The killing of the father, the mother, the brother, or the sister, is tared for one alone iiij. Tur. i. Duc. viij. Carl.

Of the murder of the Wife.

It is tared like as the killing of the Parents.

If the murderer do desire licence to marrie with another viij. Turo. j. Duk. ix. Carl.

And for others whiche ayded the husbande in the matter, the fare is augmented for euery man j. Tur.

Of the murder of an Infant.

For one alone iiij. Tur. i. Duc. viij. Carl.

If the father or the mother or any kinsman doe oppresse the infant, but if it be a straunger, he is tared as for the slaying of a lay man.

For the husbande and the wife together vi. Tur. j. Duc.

Of the casting of a yvomans childe.

For a woman whiche hathe receyued a drinke to kill hir childe, or for the father which gaue the drinke to ỳ mother iij. Tur. i. Duc. v. Carl.

For a straunger that procured the casting of an other bodyes child iij. Tur. i. Duc. v. Carl.

Of Witchecraftes and Inchantmentes.

For a woman that is a Witche or an Inchanter, after she hathe abiured hir superstition in anye of the forsayde cases, she is tared at vi. Tur. j. Ducat.

Of Heretikes.

The absolution from heresie before he hath abiured with the authoritie to make him an able person agayne in the large manner, and with an inhibition is gyuen xxx vi. Tur. ix. Duc.

For a lay man with an absolution of infamie xj. Turo. iij. Duc. vi. Carlyns.

And with an inhibition, are added xj. Tur. xxiij. Duc. vi. Tur.

Of Sacrilege, theft, Burning, Spoiling, Periurie, and the lyke.

An absolution with the makyng a man able agayne, on the large manner, with an inhibition in anye of the forsayde copyes xxx vi. Turo. ix. Ducates.

Of Symonye.

A Simple absolution, for him that hathe committed Symonye, or him that hathe bin the meane for it, lay man or Clerke xxx vi. Turo. ix. Ducates.

And with a dispensation for hys irregularitie concerning holy orders and the vse of them vi. Tur. j. Duc.

If it be with a dispensation to get other benefices, besides that wherefore the Symony was committed, the matter must be made vppe with the Popes Datarie.

If there be absolution desired, it is giuen on ỳ in the courte of conscience, with licence to kepe his benefice, wherevppon the Simony was committed, whether he receyued any profite of it or no, with the clause Nullis, &c. and then he must not compounde with the Datarie, but he is tared at iij. Turo. vj. Duc. vi. Carl.

Of the fall of the Fleshe.

An absolution for the sinne of the flesh for any lecherous acte committed by a Clerke, yea vñ Nunnes, within or without the walles of the monasterie, or with his kinsfolkes or allyes, or with his spirituall daughter, or with any other, or by anye other, whether the absolution be asked by himselfe alone, or of all, wyth a dispensation to take orders and benefices, with an inhibition xxx vi. Tur. iij. Duc.

And in case with the same ther be desired absolution, yea for the cryme committed againste nature, or wyth beastes, with a dispensation as before, and with an inhibition &c. Tur. xj. Duc. vi. Carl.

And if the absolution be desired only for the crime againste nature & with beastes, with a dispensation and inhibition xxx vi. Tur. ix. Duc.

An absolution for a Nunne that hath bin content to lye with manye, in and without the close of the monasterie, with restitution to the dignitie of ỳ religion, and to be Abbesse, xxx vi. Tur. ix. Duc.

An absolution for a concubice, vñ a dispensation for orders and benefices xj. Turo. v. Duc. vi. Car. & wyth an inhibitiõ xxx vi. Tur. ix. Ducates.

A lay man for any lecherous acte, in the fall of the flesh, in the court of conscience vi. Tur. j. Duc.

Incest for a lay man in the courte of conscience only iiij. Turons.

If it be desired for both, that is for man and woman, in both the courts xviij. Tur. iiij. Duc. ix. Carl. If with an inhibition for one alone xviij. Tur. vi. Duc.

If for both wyth an inhibition xxx vi. Tur. ix. Duc.

An absolution for adultery, for a lay man in the courte of conscience iij. Tur. From adultery with incest for one person alone vi. Tur.

For an adulterer and an adulteresse togither vi. Tur. j. Duc.

Of sundry Excesses.

An absolution for him that haue layde the bodyes of them ỳ haue bene excommunicate in Churche buriall vi. Tur. ij. Duc.

If it be with a dispensation for irregularitie, and to obteyne benefices ix. Tur. ij. Duc. ix. Carl.

If it be to kepe that whiche he hath gotten alreadye xij. Tur. iij. Duc. vi. Carl.

An absolution for him ỳ conceiued ỳ carkas of a dead man, to the intent to get his benefices vi. Tur. ij. Duc.

If it be with a dispẽsation, for his irregularitie to get benefices ix. Tu. ij. Duc. ix. Carl. If it be also to reteyne a benefice that he hathe alreadye xij. Tur. iij. Duc. vi. Carl.

An absolution for a Priest that hath ignorãtly sayd Masse in a place suspended vi. Tur. ij. Ducates.

And in case he did it wittingly, but not in contempte of the keyes, if the suspension were set by the ordinary authoritye, a simple absolution is at vi. Tur. ij. Duc. If ỳ suspension were from ỳ Pope xij. Tur. iij. Du. vi. Ca.

An absolutiõ for a Priest that did blesse them that were married at the second marriage, whereas they were blessed at the firste vi. Turo. ij. Ducates.

If

for one.

Of the killing of parents.

The killing of the father, the mother, the brother, or the sister, is tared for one alone iiij. Tur. i. Duc. viij. Carl.

Of the murder of the Wife.

It is tared like as the killing of the Parents.

If the murderer do desire licence to marrie with another viij. Turo. v. Duk. ix. Carl.

And for others whiche ayded the husbande in the matter, the taxe is augmented for euery man v. Tur.

Of the murder of an Infant.

For one alone iij. Tur. i. Duc. viij. Carl.

If the father or the mother or any kinsman doe oppresse the infant, but if it be a straunger, he is tared as for the slaying of a lay man.

For the husbande and the wife togither vi. Tur. ij. Duc.

Of the casting of a woomans childe.

For a woman whiche hathe receyued a drinke to kill hir childe, or for the father which gaue the drinke to ỹ mother iij. Tur. i. Duc. v. Carl.

For a straunger that procured the casting of an other bodyes child iij. Tur. i. Duc. v. Carl.

Of Witchecraftes and Inchantmentes.

For a woman that is a Witche or an Inchanter, after she hathe abiured hir superstition in anye of the forsayde cases, she is tared at vi. Tur. v. Ducat.

Of Heretikes.

The absolution from heresie before he hath abiured with the authoritie to make him an able person agayne in the large manner, and with an inhibition is gyuen xxvi. Tur. ix. Duc.

For a lay man with an absolution of infamie xj. Turo. iij. Duc. vi. Carlyns.

And with an inhibition, are added xij. Tur. xxiij. Duc. vi. Tur.

Of Sacrilege, theft, Burning, Spoiling, Periurie, and the lyke.

An absolution with the makyng a man able agayne, on the large manner, with an inhibition in anye of the forsayde copies xxvi. Turo. ix. Ducates.

Of Symonye.

A Simple absolution, for him that hathe committed Symonye, or him that hathe bin the meane for it, lay man or Clerke xxvi. Turo. ix. Ducates.

And with a dispensation for hys irregularitie concerning holy orders and the vse of them vi. Tur. ij. Duc.

If it be with a dispensation to get other benefices, besides that wherefore the Symony was committed, the matter must be made vppe with the Popes Datarie.

If there be absolution desired, it is giuen on'y in the courte of conscience, with licence to kepe his benefice, wherevppon the Simony was committed, whether he receyued any profite of it or no, with the clause Nullis, &c. and then he must not compounde pounde with the Datarie, but he is tared at iij. Turo. vij. Duc. vi. Carl.

Of the fall of the Fleshe.

An absolution for the sinne of the flesh for any lecherous acte committed by a Clerke, yea w̄ Nunnes, within or without the walles of the monasterie, or with his kinsfolkes or allyes, or with his spirituall daughter, or with any other, or by anye other, whether the absolution be asked by himselfe alone, or of all, wyth a dispensation to take orders and benefices, with an inhibition xxvi. Tur. ij. Duc.

And in case with the same ther be desired absolution, yea for the crime committed againste nature, or wyth beastes, with a dispensation as before, and with an inhibition &c. Tur. xj. Duc. vi. Carl.

And if the absolution be desired only for the crime againste nature & with beastes, with a dispensation and inhibition xxvi. Tur. ix. Duc.

An absolution for a Nunne that hath bin content to lye with manye, in and without the close of the monasterie, with restitution to the dignitie of ỹ religion, and to be Abbesse, xxvi. Tur. ix. Duc.

An absolution for a concubice, w̄ a dispensation for orders and benefices xj. Turo. v. Duc. vi. Car. & wyth an inhibitiō xxvi. Tur. ix. Ducates.

A lay man for any lecherous acte, in the fall of the flesh, in the court of conscience vi. Tur. ij. Duc.

Incest for a lay man in the courte of conscience only iiij. Turons.

If it be desired for both, that is for man and woman, in both the courts xviij. Tur. iiij. Duc. ix. Carl. If with an inhibition for one alone xxiij. Tur. vi. Duc.

If for both wyth an inhibition xxx vi. Tur. ix. Duc.

An absolution for adultery, for a lay man in the courte of conscience iij. Tur. From adultery with incest for one person alone vi. Tur.

For an adulterer and an adulteresse togither vi. Tur. v. Duc.

Of sundry Excesses.

An absolution for him that haue layde the bodyes of them ỹ haue bēne excommunicate in Churche buriall vi. Tur. ij. Duc.

If it be with a dispensation for irregularitie, and to obteyne benefices ix. Tur. ij. Duc. ix. Carl.

If it be to kepe that whiche he hath gotten alreadye xij. Tur. iij. Duc. vi. Carl.

An absolution for him ỹ conceiued ỹ carkas of a dead man, to the intent to get his benefices vi. Tur. ij. Duc.

If it be with a dispēsation, for his irregularitie to get benefices ix. Tu. ij. Duc. ix. Carl. If it be also to reteyne a benefice that he hathe alreadye xij. Tur. iij. Duc. vi. Carl.

An absolution for a Priestе that hath ignorātly sayd Masse in a place suspended vi. Tur. ij. Ducates.

And in case he did it wittingly, but not in contempte of the keyes, if the suspension were set by the ordinary authoritye, a simple absolution is at vi. Tur. ij. Duc. If ỹ suspension were from ỹ Pope xij. Tur. iij. Du. vi. Ca.

An absolutiō for a Priest that did blesse them that were married at the second marriage, whereas they were blessed at the firste vi. Turo. ij. Ducates.

If

If with a dispensation for irregularitie ir.Tur.ij.Duc.ir.Carl.

If it bee with a dispensation to keepe a benefice that he hathe already xij.Tur.ij.Duc.vi.Carl.

If a Preeste hathe married anye couple secretely, and sayde Masse before them with an absolution for the married folkes vi. Tur. ij. Duc. iij. Carl. and for the lay men that were presente at it, the tare is augmented iij.Turo.for euery polle.

An absolution for him that hathe withstode that the Popes Bulles could not be put in execution if he be a Clerke, with a dispensation for that he hath alreadye gotten and can get, and an absolution of infamy and assistence xxxvi.Tur.ir.Duc.

A single absolution for a Clerke xj.Tur.iij. Duc.vi.Carl.

An absolution for a marchaunte man that hathe carried ouer speares to the partes of the vnfaithfull, and had no gayne by it xj. Tur.iij.Duc. vi.Carl.

If he had gayne, he is tared alike, and must compound with the Popes Datarie.

An absolution for him that dothe withholde the goodes of a dead body for the wages that were gyuen to the dead, and doth not restore them, so that they exceede not the due of the wages in the court of conscience only vi.Tur.ij.Duc.

An absolution for a Bishop that hath sworne to visit the seate of the Apostles certayne yeares and times prefired, and yet hathe not visited them, with an iniunction that hereafter he will visit the same xij. Tur. ij.Duc.vi.Carl.

An absolution from the spirituall sentence of excommunication giuen by the ordinarye power vi. Tur. ij. Ducat. and if it be by the Popes power xj.Tur. iij.Duc.vi.Carl.

Of Irregularity.

A Generall absolution and dispensation for irregularitie l. Turo. xiij.Duc.

And if it be also with a generall absolution from all maner of sinnes. viij.Tur.xx.Duc.

If it be for any irregularitie falle into by him that was a iudge in criminall matters, or the like without absolutiō for that past, yea and with taking away an infamie, and with an inhibition or otherwise.xxx.Tur. vij.Duc.vi.Carl.

And with an absolution for that which is past when he hath nede of it xxxvi.Tur.ir.Duc.

And if it be required togither with a dispensation of that which is past, that he may afterward also become a iudge or an aduocate xlv.Tur.

And if the dispensation be desired with both that is for the time passe and to come, and the absolution also for a thing past when he nedeth not l.Tur.xij.Duc.vi.Carl.

For him that dothe fall into irregularitie by practising Phisike xxxvi. Tur. ir. Ducates. And if it be asked with licence for time to come also l. Tur.xj.Duc.vi.Carl.

Of Buryings.

A N absolution at the request of the kinsefolkes of a man dead, whiche was excommunicate or violently killed, that his body maye bee buried in holy grounde vi. Turo.ij. Ducates.

For

For an Abbot or a Bysshoppe xj. Tur.iij.Duc.vi.Carl.

An absolution for them that contracted secretely when the one is aliue, and the other dead iiij. Turo.ij. Duc.ir.Carl.

Of the exchange and releasement of paines.

A Single release of outlawe or of perpetuall prison xl. Turons. r. Ducates.

If there be a dispensation asked for irregularitie, and to keepe a benefice that he hath already and wyth absolution from the faulte lr. Turo. rv.Ducates.

A release of outlawe or prison frō tenne yeare to fifténe yeare xxxvi. Tur.ir.Ducates.

With a dispensation for irregularitie, and with the keeping of benefices l.Turons. xj.Duc.vi.Carl.

A release from outlawe or prison from fiue yeares to tenne single and with a single absolution from synne without dispensatiō, is tared at xxiij. Turo.vi.Duc. and for assistence vi. Turons.

A single release for fiue yeares, &c. xj.Turo.iij.Duc.vi.Carl.

A release of a suspension for a Preest that had the falling euill, and therefore was suspended by his ordinary, and hath not had the same release for these two yeares vi. Turo. y.Duc.with a commaundemente to the Bysshop, that he do suffer him to say Masse with an other Preest standing by him.

Of releasing of an oth.

A Release of an Oth for the effecte of doyng any thing for one man in one contracte vij. Turo.ij.Duca. iij.Carl.

And with an inhibition and absolution of infamy xxxvi.Tur.ir.Duc.

If there be manye in one matter, there is added for euery one iij.Tur.

If there be sundrye contractes in one matter betwixte the same parties, besides the first, there is encreased for euery one iij.Turons.

A release of an Oth for him that hath sworne to take degrée in one vniuersitie whiche he maye take in an other vi.Tur.ij.Ducates.

A release of an Oth which can not be kept without the losse of eternall saluation, as in promising of euill things, or a foule bowe vi. Turo.ij. Ducates.

And an Abbot is tared one way, a Bishoppe an other, and a generall Prelate an other way.

Of the changing of a vovve.

THe chaunge of a bowe in religion not solemne, in the court of conscience only xv.Tur.iiij.Duc.

Likewise the chaunge of the bow of chastitie not solemne, in the courte of conscience only xv.Tur.iiij.Duc.

An absolution for the breakyng of a mans worde in the bowe of religion, that a man may continue in matrimony, with ỹ puttyng to a clause, ỹ if he dae suruiue his wife, he shall be bounde to fulfyll his bowe, lykewise in the court of conscience onely xv.Tur.iiij.Duc.

There is the like absolution and tare for the bow of chastitie.

To fette ouer the bowe of the Sepulcher of the Lord, or of S. James in Compostella, or of the Church o.

Peter and Paule for ſeme lawfull cauſes ir.Tur. ij.Duc.ir.Carl. If it be for two yeares iiij.Turons.

The exchaunge of the vowe to the ſepulchre of the Lord rij.Turo. iij.Duc.vi. Carl. and he muſt compound with the Popes Datary.

The exchange of the vowe of S. James in Compoſtella rij.Tur.iij. Duc.vi.Carl. and he muſt compoũd with the Popes Datary.

The exchange of the vowe to Peter and Paule in the Citie rij.Tur. iij.Duc.vi.Carl. and he muſte compounde with the Popes Datary.

The chaunge of any other vowe vi.Tur.ij.Ducates.

The exchaunge of faſtings or other abſtinences,or of any garmente vi.Tur.ij.Duc.

If it bee required for dyuers perſons that be ioyned togyther among themſelues, the tare runneth wholly for the firſte, and for the others, the one halfe for euery one, but if they be perſons vtterly diſtinct,it is tared for euery man in the whole.And if it be aſked for a Chapter, or a Couent or ſome iolly Colledge, it is tared at C. Turons if the exchaunge be for euer.

Of the chaunge of Prayers.

The chaunge of Prayers for the Knightes of religion r. Turo. iij. Duc.vi.Carl.

The chaunge or calling backe of diuine ſeruice for him that lacketh his ſighte, or for anye other impediment rij.Tur.

And if it be changed from the vſe of one Church to another vſe.ir.Tu. j.Duc.ir.Carl.

The change of ſeruice for the Couent or Chapter lr.Tur.rv.Duc.

And if it be with leaue to put before or behinde C.Tur.rr.v.Duc.

Of the chaunge of the laſt will.

It is tared at rij.Turo.iij.Duc.vi. Carl.if there be leaue aſked to trãſlate boanes, or Maſſes,or ỹ church, and the like, there is added more vi. Turons.

Of the calling backe of Maſſes.

The calling backe of Maſſes for ỹ thinneſſe of the profite rij. Turo. iij.Duc.vi.Carl. and with aſſiſtence rviij.Tur.v.Duc.

If it be at the requeſt of the Parſon for him and his ſucceſſors wyth aſſiſtaunce rrr.Tur.vij.Ducates.vi Carlins.

If it be aſked for a Colledge, or Chapter,or an Vniuerſitie rl.Turo. ij.Ducates.

If it be with exchaunge of the laſt will of the Teſtator, there is added to the tare of the calling backe. vi. Turons.

Of Confirmation.

A Confirmation of concord for priuate perſons, done lawfully, and according the Canonical decrees rij. Tur.iij.Duc.vi.Carl.

If it be for a confraternitie or an vniuerſitie or Monaſterie rviij.Tu. vi.Duc.

A confirmation of agreement for the goodes of the Churche,if it bee in forme, of si in euidentem, it is tared according to the valew, &c. But if it bee not in forme to the euidente rij. Turo.

Turo.iij.Duc.vi.Carl.

A Confirmation of the alienation of Church goodes, is tared according to the forme of Si in euidentem.

The confirmation of ſtatutes for a certayne number of benefices or benefliced men, with or without aſſiſtance rl.Tur.r.Duc.

A confirmation of ſtatutes for a Cathedrall Churche lrrr. Turo.rr. Ducates. And if it be for a Collegiate Church lr.Tur.rv.Duc.

If a confirmation be aſked but of one expreſſe ſtatute, if it be of anye waighte, & for a Cathedrall Church rl.Tur.r.Duc. But if it ſeme to bee of no great moment,it is tared at the arbiterment of the Officials.

Confirmations of erections or reſeruatiõs of the right of patronage, be tared as the erections and the reſeruations be,and ſo of the like.

A Confirmation of a perpetuall vnion, done by the ordinary for ſuch cauſe as is permitted by the lawe l. Turons.

Of the benfites of the lavve for poore folkes.

An alternatiue benefice, or for departing of goods, or for the terme of fiue yeares at the choyſe of the ſuperior v.Tur.i.Duc.vi.Carl.

If it be with the derogation of a ſtatute taking vppon it a certayne forme of reſkoring, viij. Turons. ỹ. Ducates.v.Carl.

The Chapter Edwardus for a Clerke v. Turons. i. Ducate. vi. Carl.

If with abſolution vi.Turons.i. Ducate.ir.Carl.

If with diſpenſation from irregularitie ir. Turons. ỹ. Ducates. ir. Carlyns.

The Chapter Peruenit for a Clerke and a beneficed man vi. Turons. i. Duc.ir.Carl.

If it be for a Biſhop,it is doubled.

Of Declaratories.

Declaratories of right, or of religion,eyther of murder or of anye other thing tared vi. Tur. ỹ.Duc.i. Carl. Excepte caſes of matrimony which be tar.vỹ. Turo. ỹ.Ducates. i.Carl.

A Perinde valere.

For him which hath loſt his letters of teſtimonye of anye orders vi. Tur.ỹ.Ducates.

For him whiche hathe omitted to recite any thing in his letters,which if he had recited, he ſhoulde haue obteyned them neuertheleſſe,nor ſhuld not haue altered anye thing in hys tare vi.Tur.ỹ.Duc.

But if that whiche was omitted, had not bin ſo ſone graunted,and yet had not altered the tare,tare vi.Turons.ỹ.Ducates.

But if it had altered the tare,if into leſſe than fire,Tur.vi.

If into more, he ſhall be tared ſo much aboue fyre,as the whole hadde bin, wherein the tare was altered.

Of Licences and pardons.

A Licence to ſucne a parith church or Colledge with all his rightes into a Monaſterery rviij.Tur. vi.Du. and in caſe it be with a prophanation of the firſte place rl.Turons. r. Ducates.

A licence to sette vp a font Turo. rviij.vi.

A licence to erect a Colledge, or to change a parish Church C.Tur.

A licence to erect a parish Church, or a Frame stone, or a Monasterie, rciij.Turon.

A licence to erecte or translate a Churchyard, or a place of prayer, or a Chappell rij.Tur.ij.Duc.vi.Car. with the prophanation of the firste place rviij.Tur.vi.Duc. and if it bee asked at the instance of some vniuersitie, the tare is doubled.

A licence to translate reliques frō place to place, with the consente of them that haue to doe in it, but not from Rome Tur.ir.ij.ir.

A licence for a chappel, for a chappell annexed, depending vppon a parish Church, that Masse and other diuine service may be sayde in it for euer, and the bodyes of the dead buried there, and the Sacramente of the altare ministred there, sauyng at the feast of Easter rl.Tur.r.Duc.

And in case it be a Font for baptisme, may be erected thereto l. Tur. rij.Duc.rij.Carl.

A licence to celebrate in a Chappell not consecrate rij. Tur.iij. Duc. vi.Carl.

Togyther wyth a licence to translate or set vp a Chappell rviij.Tur. iiij.Duc.vi.Carl.

A reseruation of the right of a patronage to hym and hys heyres Turons. rl. r.Ducates.

A licence to make a place to laye vp geare at the Churche porch, rij. Tur.iij.Duc.vi.Carl.

A licence to set vp a Brotherhode, with a place to haue in for to bestowe all kinds, for an altare poyntiue, and licēce to bury in places suspended, and to receyue the Sacramēt of the altare, sauing at Easter Cxx. Tur.rxx.Duc.

To chaunge the dedication or inuocation of a Saincte, &c. rij.Turo. iij.Duc.vi.Carl.

A licence to saye Masse in euerye place ir.Tur.

A licence to say Masse twice a day for the life of one man alone Turo. rij.iij.vi. If it be at the request of a Colledge or vniuersitie, or a congregatiō of secular preests Tur.C.rxv.

A licence for the Maior or Sheriffe of a Towne that in time of suspension they may cause seruice to be said in their Chappel, and bury there with the clausure accustomed C.Tu.

A portatiue altare, at Turo. ir.ij. vi. If it be for the man and his wife Tur.ir.ij.ir. If it be for the children and for any body else, it is encreased iiij.Tur.

A licence to say Masse before day rij.iij.vi.

A licence to publishe Cardinals pardons, without the licence of the Ordinary vi.Tur.ij.Duc.

A licence to saye Mattins accordyng to the vse of an other diocesse than his owne vi. Tur.ij. Ducates. Accordyng to the vse of the Churche of Rome vi.Tur.ij.Duc.

The same licence for a regulare person ir.Tur.ij.Duc.ir.Carl.

A licence to saye Mattins out of order ir.Tur.ij.Duc.ir.Carl.

And if it be asked also accordyng to the vse of the Churche of Rome or any other rij.rxxvi.

And if the licence to say out of order be asked for a Couent or Chapter ir.Tur.rv.Ducates.

A licence to make a testamente, and to dispose his goodes for a secular Clerke.ij.Turo.iij.Ducates.vi. Carlins.

For a Regulare, so that it be not for the goodes gotten of the Monasterie rviij.vi.

For a Bishop in title Tur.rxxvi. ir. For an other Bishop Tur.l.rij. For an Abbot as muche. For a Prior Turo.rxxvi.ir. For the Popes Prothonotarie Tur.rviij. Ducat.v.

Licence to chose a mans Confessour for one alone vi.Tur.ij.Ducat. For the man and the wife vj. Tur. ij.Duc.iij.Carl.

For their children and other adioyned for euery polle the tare is encreased one. If the number of them be not expressed, it is iij.Tur.

For a Brotherhode, Chapter, or vniuersitie, if it be for euer, the tare is arbitrarie, and there must be a regard had of their qualitie. For a regular vpon the licence of his superioure vi, Tur. ij.Duc. Without the licence of his superioure rij.Tur.iij. Duc. vi.Carl. that he maye stande without vi.Tur.

A licence to vse milke meates in tymes forbidden, for one person alone Tur.vi.ij.

For the whole family Turo. rij. iij.vi. For manye togyther Turo. rij.D.iij.C.vi.

For a Chapter, Colledge, Congregation, or vniuersitie for euer, the tare is arbitrary.

For a towne and the circuite of it, and for Clerkes also and brethren and Nonnes of a lorders Tur. CCl. And yet there muste be a regarde had of townes.

If it be for a communaltie in consideration of the colde place, and for lacke of fyshe and oyle of olyues, whiche communaltie was vsed vnto mylke meates from their youth C. Turo.rxv.Duc.

A Licence to take the profytes when the partie is away, lying at an other benefice, or at the courte of Rome, or studying in some place, where is a generall place of studye ir.Tur.ij.Duc.ir.Carl.

A licence to translate the boanes of a dead corpes Tur.vi.ij. And if it be of many carcases of one house, the tare is whole for euery one.

A licence to visite an Archdeaconrie by an other rxxvi. Turons. ir. Ducates.

A derogation of the foundation of a benefice, wherein it is prouided, that no man maye obteyne a benefice, but he that is actually a Priest, or that hauyng the same, he can get no more rij.Turons. iij. Ducat.vi. Carlyns.

A licence to carrie about the body of Christ if it be once a yeare alone Tur. rij.iij.vi. If twise rr. v.iij. If thryse Tur.rxx.vij.vi. If four times Tur.rl.ri. If fyue tymes Tur. l.rij. vi. If syxe tymes Turo lr. rv. and so on, addyng for euery tyme tenne.

A licence to carrie marchandise once or oftener to the parties of the vnfaithfull, or otherwise to vse marchandise, yea takyng no leaue of the ordinarye places, or of anye temporall Lordes, Kyng, or Emperoure, or anye other: wyth most large derogations rxiiij. Turons. vi. Ducates.

A licence to carrye corne to the partyes of the vnfaithfull, that is to say, throughout all Barbary, to the number of thꝛee thousande great vessels, accoꝛding vnto the tenoꝛ of the pꝛiuilege and Popes Bulles l.Tur. rij.Duc.vi.Carl.

A licence foꝛ a Vicare that in the absence of the Bishop, he may blesse all the ornamentes of the Churche, but yet not the Coꝛpoꝛesse, Chalice, and Patentes l. Turons. rij. Duc. vi.Carlins.

And foꝛ an Abbot foꝛ the vse of his Monastery foꝛ his lyfe tyme xxxvi. Tur.ix.Duc.

If it be foꝛ a Bishop l. Turons. rij.Duc.vi.Carl.

A licence foꝛ a Pꝛiest that he may study and pꝛactise Phisike, with an absolution foꝛ that that is past, in case if he dyd amisse in anye thyng exercising the arte xl.Turons.x.Ducates.

A licence foꝛ a secular Pꝛiestte to byꝛe the lawe xc.Tur.ix.Duc.

Foꝛ a regulare in the Couente rij. Turons.iij. Duc.vi. Carlyns.

Out of the Conuent rij.Turons. iij.Duc.vi.Carl.

If it be without the leaue of hys superiour, without the couente foꝛ seauen yeares xviij. Turo. iiij. Ducates.vi.Carl.

If it be with licence to seꝛue a benefice and Pꝛeache xxi. Turons. vi. Ducates.vi.Carlins.

A licence to be a Pꝛoctour, oꝛ an Aduocate foꝛ a secular Clerke xxx. Tur.vij.Duc.vi. Carlins.

If it bee with an absolution foꝛ that that is past xxxvi. Turons. ix Ducates.

A licence to exercise the office of a notary xij. Turons. iij.Ducates.vi. Carlyns.

A licence to exercise the office of a seculare iudge in ciuil matters only xviij.Turons. vi. Ducates. But if it bee in criminall matters also wyth the accustomed limitations xxxvj.Turons.

A licence foꝛ a man to change his pꝛoper name ix.Turons.v.Ducates ix.Carl.

A licence to change his surname oꝛ signe vi. Tur.v.Duc.

A licence to reconcyle a Churche oꝛ Churchyarde xj.Tur.iij.Duc.vi. Carlyns.

A licence to gette a pꝛebende in a Cathedꝛall Churche foꝛ one that is twelue yeares of age, notwithstanding the rules made to the contrary xj. Turons. iij. Ducates. vi. Carlyns.

Foꝛ hym that is thirteene yeares olde vi Tur.v.Duc.

A licence to saye Masse in Greeke among the Greekes, and in Latyne among the Latine folkes ix. Tur.v. Duc.ix.Carl.

A licence to visite the Sepulchre of the Lord iiij. Turons.i. Duc. vi. Carlyns.

A licence foꝛ a Bysshoppe to take no oꝛders, noꝛ to saye Masse foꝛ a yeares space xxx. Turons. vj.Duc. vi.Carlyns.

To take no oꝛders foꝛ seauen yeares. ix.Tur.v.Duc.ix.Carl.

A licence foꝛ one to saye Masse with his cappe vppon his head xj. Tur.iij.Duc.vi.Carl.

If it be foꝛ a Bysshop oꝛ an Abbot xxiij.Tur.vi.Ducates.

A licence foꝛ a suffragan to be no resident xviij.Tur.iiij.Duc.ix.Carl.

A licence to haue two benefices vnlꝛeke vnder one roke xj. Tur.iij. Duc.vi.Carl.

A

A licence that a suffragane shall not be bound to visite the Church of the Apostles Peter and Paule, by cause of the distance of the place and not foꝛ euer xxiij.Tur.vi.Duc.

If it be foꝛ euer l. Tur. xj. Duc. vi.Carl.

A licece foꝛ a baꝛꝛard that he may take of his father a lay man oꝛ a secular Clerke to the summe of a hundꝛed Ducates in bequest oꝛ gifte xj. Tur. iij.Duc.vi.Carl. The same to haue the like of his father beeyng a religious man, hauyng otherwise authoꝛitie to dispose his goodes, and of the religious father that hath not power to dispose xxiij.Tur.vi.Duc.

A licence to fishe vppon the Sundayes oꝛ other holye dayes. Foꝛ the redemption of Captiues foꝛ tyue yeares xj.Tur.iij. Duc.vi.Carl. If it be foꝛ a couent, bꝛotherhode oꝛ cõmunitie l.Tur.x.Duc.vi.Carl.

A licence foꝛ the Chapter of a Cathedꝛall Church, that it may contribute some money towards the separation and maintenance of the Citie xxiij.Tur.vi.Duc.

A licence foꝛ a man to adopte a child to succeede hym in all hys good, and yet without the wꝛong of the kinsfolke xj.Tur.iij.Du.vi.Carl.

A licence to eate flesh killed by the Sarazens foꝛ some tempoꝛall Lorde e family xx.Turo.vj.Duc.vi.Carl.

A licence foꝛ an honest woman to goe into a Monasterie of Nunnes with thꝛee oꝛ foure other wome, four times in the yeare, disguising herself xj.Tur.iij.Duc.vi.Carlyns.

A licence foꝛ the father that hee may bring his daughter into a Monastery to learne good manners xj. Tur.iij.Duc.vi Car.

A licence to receyue the habite of the Knightes of Saint James De la spata, of any Pꝛelate ix. Turons.xv. Ducates.

A licence to receyue the habite of the Knyghthode of Jesu Chꝛiste, oꝛ any other xxx. Turons.vj.Ducates vi.Carlins.

And foꝛ a woman also of the oꝛder of Sainte James xl.Turons. x. Ducates.

A licence to receiue the habite of the third oꝛder of Sainte Fraunces, called the oꝛder of penance, of anye Bysshop, oꝛ of any person of dignitie in the Church, foꝛ a married manne xj. Turons. iij. Ducates. vi. Carlyns.

A pardon that a Knight of the oꝛder of Sainte James maye marry with a widowe, whiche is foꝛbidden by the statutes of the oꝛder.

A licence foꝛ a religious person that he maye bee a confessour vnto Nunnes, yea of a contrary oꝛder xv. Tur.iiij.Duc.

A licence foꝛ a good Pꝛeacher to pꝛeach xxvij.Tur. ij. Duc. And that they which come to his sermõs, shall haue certayne dayes of pardon xl. Tur.x.Duc.

A licence foꝛ a secular Clerke oꝛ regular to become a Doctoꝛ xj.Tu. iij.Duc.vi.Carlins.

If it be with the leaue of hys superiour, elles xviij.Turo. iiij.Duc.ix. Carlyns.

A licence foꝛ an Abbesse, that shee may goe to see the houses and landes of hir monasterie with thꝛee oꝛ four Nunnes xviij. Turons. vi. Ducates.

A licence foꝛ an obseruant Frier, that he may haue a pꝛoctoure to demaunde and receyue suche money as he hathe gotten by his industrie, and turne it vnto the vse of the same Friers onely sonne xij. Turons iij. Ducates. vi. Carlyns.

A licence to weare linnen shurts, and to lye in shetes for a religious man xij. Turons. iij. Ducates. vi. Carlyns.

A licence for a whole monasterye when they desire it, that they may be broughte to a streighter order than they dyd profesſe before, not chaunging theyr superior xl. Turons. x. Ducates.

A licence for a Nunne, that shee shall not be brought to a streyghter order than she professed at the firste xij. Turons iij. Ducates. vi. Carlins.

A licence to passe from one order to the like l. Tur. iij. Duc.

If it bee vnto a straighter xij. Turons. iij. Ducates vi. Carl.

If the whole Monasterie doe desire to be chaunged vnto an other order l. Turons. xij. Ducates. vi. Carlyns.

If from one order to a longer order xviij. Tur vi Duc.

If it be from one Monasterie to another Monasterie of the same order, profession, habite, and obseruaunce regulare of the same prouince iij. Turons. i. Ducate. viij. Carlyns.

If it be of an other prouince xij. Turo: iij. Duc. vi. Carl.

If it be with the perfecte and endowmēt with their stuffe there must be added vi. Tur.

A licence to leade an Hermites life. xij. Turons. iij. Ducates. vi. Carlyns.

An absolution for the running away for the vagabonde that will returne agayne to the shepefolde xij. Tur. iij. Duc. vi. Carl.

A licence to weare hys habite vnder, xij. Turons. iij. Ducates. vi. Carlyns.

Marrania.

THe Marrania is made in most ample fashion, for a Clerke lx. Tur. xb. Duc.

For a laye man xl. Turons. x. Duc. And in both the cases they must compound with the Popes Datarie, vnlesse the sea be vacant, then is gyuen for a Clerke at the rate of lxx. Turons. And for a lay man lx. Turons.

But when it is not gyuen in ample forme, but to exercise anye office, whereby he maye lyue, and whiche hee hathe skyll of, or for a Prieste that hee maye celebrate xij. Turo. iij. Duc. vi. Carl. Unlesse it be to the intente to be an aduocate or a Phisition, than it is taxed at xviij. Turons.

Those matters whyche we haue hitherto rehearsed, whereby the discipline of the olde fathers was changed into a money marchaundise, though in the multitude and the varietie of the cases and causes, they doe seeme to be small, yet they doe yeelde a most plentifull gayne to the Rauens of Rome: notwithstanding that those peeces are in their owne waight most gaynefull, whyche are wrong out and gotten vppe out of all

The conclusion of this matter.

all the prouinces of Christendome, for the Bishops palles, where besides the chiefe tare, there muste be bought the Principall bull, the bull of Cōmission, the bull of Absolution, the bull to the Chapter, the bull to the Clergie, the bull to the People, the bull to the Vassales, the bull to the Archbishop, the bull to the King, the forme of the Othe: and he muste pay in the Consistories for the rewarde of his consecration, for the rewarde of his blessing: I nēde not to speake of the retaynings, deuolutions, and pensions. And how wicked and foule the eraction of the Annates is, what nēde I to touche? The princes of Almaigne did among the reste of the griefes of the people of Almaigne, obiect the same also to the Popes Nuncio', at the Dyet of the Empyre at Norenberg, Anno. 1522. but they tolde their tale to deafe eares. There hath bene gathered vpon the taxation of the cathedrall Churches and Abbeys in Fraunce, sire hundred,' nintie and seuē thousand, seuen hundred & fifty franckes, besides theyr places and other inferiour dignities and benefices which they did not tare, which would draw nere vnto the like summe. If a man wil discourse in his minde of the reste of al nations, who is so cunning an Arithmetrician, that he is able to accomte the totall summe? What shal I speake of pardōs, wherin the foule shame of Rome brasting out of that sea, hath moste impudently ranged through out all Christēdome? What shall I say of the fauours or graces, the reseruations, pectorals and mentals, bredde in the breast and mynde, the returnes generall and speciall, of the accessions, incorporations and vnions? Hell it selfe is not so plentyfull of wicked spirites, as the courte of Rome is of allurements, of snares, of Merchandisers, of gaynes, and all manner of snatchyng and catchyng. His p[illegible]sterschip taketh vppon hym pow[illegible]uer all spirituall things and seculare, to dispence, to absoyle, to pardon, to change, to release, to restrayne, to confirme, to declare, to derogate, to reserue, yea and what not: and at length to tumble downe to Hell.

The vse of the riches of Rome. The rauēners of Rome.

Peraduenture the Reader will wonder to what purpose these portentuous riches of most filthy gayne are heaped vp togither in this Babilon. The first vse that they do serue vnto, is that this kingdome of Babylon may be outwardly borne vp withall, when it beginneth to fall in the consciences of the faithfull. The second is, that theyr princely pompe, theyr wastfull feasting, and incredible delicate lustes, may be sustayned. The thirde is, to fēde the grēdy gripes that do flie out of all nations to this rotten carrayne, whose custome is with a wide open and vnsatiable mouth to be euer gapyng and catchyng, the Vicechancelours, the maisters of the leade, maisters of Ceremonies, the prothonotaries, officials, the holy colledge of chāberlains, the portioners, S. Peters knightes, the Maizeries, the chamberers, the maisters of the horse, ỹ doze kēpers, the Popes singers, the warder of the Iron gate, the warders of ỹ cheyne, the warders of the priuie garden, the Notaries, Correctors, Abbreuiators, Aduocates, Solliciters, the Duppemen, the Clerkes of the chappell, and let men say nothing of the great and purple Bees of the purpurate strumpet, they⁹ henche menne, they⁹ fayre boyes and harlottes, whereof there are an infinite number, consecrate vnto this courte. Who could set out here howe this spoyle is parted betwirt these Disciples of the Romish Simonistes? but I haue already turned vp myne owne and the readers stomacke also, with the lothsomnesse in the styrring of the stinke of this filthy puddle. No man nede now to maruell why that Pope Boniface the twelfth, which was about the yeare of our Lorde M.CCC.xxvj. when he was required to increase the number of Cardinals, answered, that he would gladly doit, if he could make also a new worlde. For this that we haue sayth he, is fearfully sufficient for the Cardinals that wee haue already. The wryter of this is Engelhusen.

Mazerii.

Lette vs returne therefore to the Canon of the Apostle, by the tenor whereof it is requyred in a Bysshop, that hée be not fouly gyuen vnto gayne: and so it is moste certainely declared, that the Bysshop of Rome is most vnworthy of all, to be a Bysshop of one Churche, muche lesse the heade of all Bysshoppes and Churches, sauyng that perhaps in this fallyng away vnto Antichrist, he is founde to bée of all them moste worthy ryngleader of Simonike and false Bysshops, and the very decay of all Churches.

Vpright. ἐπιεικῆ.

Tenthly, he saith, He must be Modest. Erasmus dothe translate it, Upright ἐπιεικῆ, is a man so moderate, that in the handelyng of matters hée doth yéelde nothing to affections, but doth followe the same which séemeth to be comely, vpright, and alowable. This vertue is most necessary for all rulers, wherby they may be restrayned, that in followyng the rigor of the lawe, they do not too sore wryng theyr subiectes.

Eleuenthly, he saith, Not giuen to fighting, as to fighte in the Latine tongue is not alwayes referred vnto matters offence, but is oftentimes also taken for brauling and stryuyng in wordes: so this word μαχὴ is two wayes also vsed of the Grékes. Wherefore we must thinke that the Apostle dothe reiecte here from the office of a Bysshoppe, not onely the fighter and the fence master, but the chyder and brauler also. The same whiche is here cõprised in one word, is set forth somewhat more at large to Timothée, for there wée do reade in this wyse: Eschewe fonde & rashe questions, knowyng that they do brédde fighting or contention, and stryfe. For the seruaunt of the Lord muste not fight, but be peaceable towardes all men, ready to teache, sufferyng the euill menne with mildenesse, teachyng them that do withstande, if God may giue thé at sometyme repentance to know the truth, &c. When hée dothe warne Timothée, that hée shall eschewe fonde and rashe questions, bycause they doo brédde fightings or stryfes, and dothe adde that it is not méete for the seruaunt of God to fight, he doth sufficiently declare, that hée speaketh of the fightings, of brauling, dissention, contention and stryuyng, whiche riseth vpon tryflyng questions among them, whose purpose is rather to defende their owne opinions, than to auaunce the truth of God. This kynde of fighte hath maruelously troubled the Churche, and hath exceedingly followed the Bysshoppes and Doctors. The listes of these fightes, are wonte to be the Bysshoppes Synodes, whiche the vnlearned menne do thinke to be the onely remedie of dissentions. There is a worthy saying of Gregory Nazianzene touchyng this matter, in his Epistle to Procopius, where he writeth in this wyse: I am of this minde, If I shall say as I do thinke, that I do eschewe all Councels of Bysshops, for that I coulde neuer sée hitherto, that any Synode councell had any good and profitable ende, but that thyngs that were amisse, were thereby rather made worse than better. For they haue such lustes to contende, and such ambition to gouerne, and be so obstinate in their reasonyng, that if any manne will stande with them in the iudgement, he shall rather runne into some other errour, than winne them to yéelde in the errour whiche they stande vnto. This saith he. And the Scholasticall Doctours haue shewed examples inough of this disease. For what can fall out more grieuous in Christes Churche than hath bene done in matters of religiõ, by tongue and penne, betwirt contentious men? Be not the Thomistes, Scotists, Ockanists, and Albertists men gyuen to fighting? Do they not fighte and stryue one with another, when they will Canonise their own Heresie, and condemne all other truthes? when they doe dispute, whether that Diuinitie bée of God as of the subiecte, by reason of the Infinitie or the attribute? Whether Diuinitie be a science Subalternate or in the midle lighte, practise, speculatiue, or affective? whether in godly things there be any production intrinsecall, whether Ens be vniuocally spoken of God, and the Creator, whether it hath a proper conceyuyng, whether it bée proportionall, whether the Quiddite of a material thyng be the firste obiecte of the vnderstandyng by the nature of the power, whether wée muste set a spice in the vnderstandyng, whether the Essence of GOD do ingender or be ingendred, whether the vnitie of the persõs of God be collectiue, whether the Sonne be of the substance of the Father as of the matter, whether the Essence of God be generate substectiuely, whether the bringyng forth of the sonne be of the fathers will, or of necessitie & naturall: whether the generation of God be vniuocall or equiuocall, whether there be in God a composition of matter and forme, whether the holy Spirite bée produced by acte of will, whether the Father and the Sonne doe equally beginne the holy Spirite, whether the persons of GOD bée equall in greatnesse, whether the equalitie in godly things be a real relation, whether God coulde make the worlde better: and innumerable other things, whereupon they do most bitterly and contentiously striue amõg themselues.

Of the cõtentions of our tymes.

What shall I say of the contentions of our times, when they do contende vpon Popish pardons, vpon the primacie of the sea of Rome, vpon mans constitutions, vppon meates forbidden by the Pope, vpon the sacrifice of the Romishe Masse, vpon

Monkes and Nunnes vowes, vpon the sole life of the Clergie, vpō churche Images, vpon the accessorie Sacraments, vpon the Communion vnder one kynde alone, of the fyre of Purgatory, whereby the faythfull mens purses are well scowred, vpon frée wyll, vppon the merites of workes, vpon the inuocation of Saincts, and other like matters, not with words & writing only, but wt fire, sword, ỹ halter, & exilyng? Suche Bysshops the Canon of ỹ Apostle doth not alowe.

No money louer. ἀφιλάργυρος.

Twelfthly, he sayth, No mony louer. He sayth not, Not hauing money, or not touchyng money, but not louyng, not couetous of money. The loue of money must not be in the minister of the worde. For it maketh him to be couetous, a niggarde, and to be a filthy gayner. And in this poynt there be three things to be feared. Firste, lest he shal neglect hospitality and the care of the powre. Secondlye leaste he shall falsely turne those things that be gyuen by the faythfull to this intent, vnto an other vse. The thirde is, leaste when he is giuē to heape vp money, he do not very truelly fulfil his ministerit office

He that gouerneth vvell his owne house

Thirtenthly, he sayth, He that gouerneth well his owne house, hauing his children in subiection with al honestie. So that in case any man can not gouerne his owne house, how cā he take charge of the church of God? He doth warne that none be chosen, in whome there dothe not appeare some expresse argument that he will take a competent care of the church. And for asmuche as he wouldbe haue him chose the husbande of one wyfe, leaste we should thinke that poynt to be inough in a Bysshop, and that it skilled not how well or how euill he ruled his house, he addeth also this cōditiō, that they chose not him that is not profitable to himselfe and his household, though he be the husband of one wyfe onely: he addeth the reason, saying: For if a man can not rule his owne house, how shal he take the charge of Gods church? It is a common saying: He that is euill to himselfe, how can he be good to others?

This legit uerna

He requireth the knowledge of gouernaunce, in that he dothe not onely say, If any mā do not gouerne his owne house, but he saith: If any man know not how to gouerne his house. A starke fole may haue a wyfe, house and children, but he can not tell how to gouerne the house. And how should he rule the Church of God? It is no doubte a poynt of very godly knowledge, to bée able stoutly and faithfully to gouerne the church of God. They be called Gods that are appoynted by God to gouerne others, yea in temporall matters also. In this case there is required a gouernaunce, which consisteth not in violence and might, after the fashion of the worlde, but in the faithfull & wise dispensation of Gods mysteries, in diligent admonishment, correcting, teaching, comforting and lifting vp, that the faythfull may be edified and endewed with the knowledge and true loue of God. It is a great matter to haue obedient children with all reuerence and honesty, but it is a muche easier matter to kéepe the tender youth in obedience by the power of the father, to yéelde and folow in al things, than to bring into order by authoritie of the word, men and women euill taught & not wonted wonted to discipline, meane of theyr owne head, men sometimes riche as touching the worlde, worldly wise, of honour and power, and to make thē lyke children to abide doctrine, warnyng and correction, to make them yelding to amende their life, and not eyther to ouerthrowe and kill theyr hartes, eyther that they keppe not backe from theyr godly purpose, euē like as it is lesse difficultie to bowe a tender twigge than a stiffe & sturdie tree, so men must be circumspect that they do not rashly attempt matters, that will soner breake than bowe. Therefore he ỹ hath not skill to rule his children that be yet softe and tender, how shall he be able to gouerne the church of God, wherein are olde stockes of trées, yea and sometimes of that heigth straight vp, that there must be vsed great industry and diligēce to be able to bow them downe, to their commoditie and contentation to the humblenesse of christian life and discipline?

Fourtenthly, he sayth, Not graffed in of new. He meaneth into christian lyfe and fayth, he biddeth him to beware, that he chose him not straight way to be a bishop, that doth now but beginne firste to be a christian man. And he giueth a reason why: leaste he be puffe vp in pryde, and fall into indgement, and to the condemnation of the Diuel. In deede it is not of it selfe vnlawfull to chose suche a man as came late vnto christendome, in case he be méete in all other poynts: but it is not without perill and daunger. It is to be feared, leaste being not yet cōfirmed sufficiētly in faith, modestly, and lowlinesse of spirit, he may be made dronken with the new honour of his bysshoprike, as it were with muste, and be puffed vp in pryde, & thinke himselfe to be such a one, that he passeth all others, eyther in learning, either in wisedome, eyther in perfectnesse of life, and that he is vpon that consideration sette to rule the Churche.

Leaste he fal into the iudgement of the Diuell.

Whereas he sayth, Leaste he fall into the iudgement of the Diuell, it is expounded sundry wayes. There is vnderstanded by the Diuell, either that euil spirite himselfe, so called, bicause he is the slaunderer of the brethern, or the slaunderous man.

If we do vnderstande it of the euill spirite, it may be taken into twoo meanyngs. Firste, leaste Satan by his instruments doe procure slaunder to the Bishop so puffed vp in pryde, and turne him to the rebuke thereof. Another way, Leaste the Bysshop so puste vp and so arrogant, fal into the same iudgement and condemnation, that the Diuell fell into, through the malice of arrogancie and pryde.

If it be meante of the slaunderous man, it may so be expoūded also twoo wayes. Firste thus: Leaste being puffe vp, he be condemned of backebyters and slaunderers, yea and not he only, but the Churche also, which he is set to ouersée, & that the very Christian religion be subiect vnto theyr iudgements and slaunders. Secondly in this wyse. Leaste he beyng puffed vp in pryde, become of a Pastor to be a Slaunderer, and so do fall into the condemnation due vnto slaūderers. This is the nature of pryde, that of Bishops it maketh them Diuels, of Shepheards, Wolfes, of fathers, oppressors and tyraunts. Would God the Church had neuer séne any exā-

The nature of pryde.

ples

ples of this Metamorphosis, & these foure seces had no cõtrarietie. They may all take place in such a bishop.

To haue good reporte.

Fiftenthly. It behoueth him also to haue a good reporte of straungers. He sayth of straungers also, that is to say, of the vnfaithfull that do not belong vnto Christe, straungers from christian religion, whether they be Gentils or Iewes, the Bishop must be well reported by them. He meaneth of the good reporte not of fayth, doctrine, & religion, whiche no godly person shall haue of the vnfaithfull, the enimies of our religion, but of good behauiour, honestie, modestie, humanitie, mildnesse, and vpright liuing. So that straungers might say: He is a good man, well tried, vpright, godly, & honest, but he is a Christian, that is his onely fault.

He giueth a reason why: Least he fal into the snare of the Diuel, That is, least he may be subiect vnto the slaũder and reproches of backbiters, and so become not onely vnfit to set forth Christes fayth among straungers, but be a shame & dishonestly to the churche of God. For he can not be bolde inough to teache & conuince the contrary part, whose conscience & tongue also is entangled as it were snarled through his owne fault, with the rebukes of straungers, & yet if he will notwithstandyng vse it, he shall rather ioyne vnto the former reproue, to be noted to be a person past shame, than do any good.

Hitherto the Apostle described vnto Timothée what manner Bishops and Priestes ought to be chosen, and what they should be. There is somewhat more in the Epistle to Tite, as that they chose not him ẏ is headdy, that is to say, of a froward, stubborn, harde and stifnecked nature, that wil not leaue his owne opiniõ. This hardnesse is a spice of pryde, whiche muste bée farre from the minde of a Byshop. And besides that, it agreeth not with the office of him whiche must apply himself to the behauiour and capacitie of them, ouer whome he is appoynted and set, & to be with Paule all vnto all, that at the least way he may winne some. This stifnesse of vntractable nature, is naught in indifferent matters, in whiche wysedome and Christian charitie may for a quietnesse, and to gette occasion to edifie, giue place to other mens opinions, so that they be not vngodly and wicked. But when the puritie of the fayth & of the doctrine of Christe is in daunger, then it is a vertue and constancie méete not onely for a bishop, but also most necessary for all faithfull, to be harder and more intractable, than any stone.

Secondly, he addeth also, that hée be not Irefull, and giuen to wrath. Therefore he requireth a man that is slow to anger, as they are wont to be that are of a milde, kynd, and gentill nature. It is a thyng gyuen to proude menne, froward and iusticiarie hypocrites, to bée sone angry. And that is very vnfittyng for the office of a Bishop, yea and now and then hurtfull also. For the anger of mã doth not worke the righteousnesse of God.

Thirdely, he sayth, Louing that whiche is good, iuste, holy and temperate. He linked togither two couples of vertues, whereof the firste belongeth vnto others, and the latter doth reach to the Bishop himselfe. Lette a bishop be a louer of al good folkes, bicause that they be good, and let him take pleasure in their company and familiaritie. For that dothe muche helpe to the honor of the Gospell.

Let him be iuste, that is good and gentle. The Apostle speaketh of that iustice, whiche hath a compassion of sinners, and not a disdayne: He saith not, let him be without sinne, which can not be: but he requireth that Iustice, that is the gẽtleneslle & goodnesse of minde, whiche is voyde of all wickednesse & vnrighteous dealyng.

To be godly or holy & temperate, it belongeth to the holynesse and tẽperaunce of the Bishops lyfe. The Apostle would haue him to be a mã voyde from all vncleane and prophane lyfe, louyng a pure, chaste, and holy life. Where we must marke by the way, ẏ lawful wedlocke doth not make a man vncleane and vnchaste, for hée is requyred here, to bée the husbande of one wyfe, hauyng chyldren, and yet withall, chaste and holy. The same whiche I made mention of before of Paphnutius, hath place here, whiche in the Councell of Nice, called the cõpany with a wife, Chastitie.

What temperaunce is, it is well knowen. The Greeke worde signifieth a continent person, whiche doth rule his affections, dothe nothyng in his lyfe that is vnhoneste and intemperate. This vertue is very necessary for a Bishop, for he whiche can not stay himselfe, and bryddell his owne affections, howe is hé able to gouerne others?

Fourthly, he addeth that, Holding faste that faithfull worde, whiche is according vnto doctrine, that he may be able to exhort also by holsome doctrine, and to conuince them that speake agaynst it. But of this condiciõ of a bishop we spake before, wher it is required that he be apt to teach.

There be many disobedient.

Wée must here marke that which is added after: for there be many disobedient vayne talkers, seducers of mens hartes, whose mouthes muste be stopt, which do ouerthrow whole families, teachyng things that are not to be taught for filthy lucres sake. So that a Bishop muste be then specially strõg in soũd doctrine, when the number of them dothe beginne to increase, whiche be disobedient to the worde of the truthe, and do sowe vaine doctrines, & seduce the mindes of the simple, through their opinion of knowledge: & that they do for filthy gaine: euen as there is then most néede of a valiant and a diligẽt Captayne, when there is daunger of the enimies on euery side. And suche is the chaũce of the church these latter times, that the more daũger there is of the guyles of the seducer, the more dastardes the bishops and pastors be. And which is yet the worst, now that the Bishops do were to be dumbe in the churches, the charge of teaching is cõmitted to them in déede that be the vayne talkers and seducers of mens mindes.

1. Tim. 3.

He doth giue order for deacons in the epistle vnto Timothé, that they should also be the husbandes of one wyfe, which shuld gouerne their own children & families rightly, graue men and honest. Erasmus trãslateth it, Well ordred, but the common Latine is, Chaste. The apostle meaneth by them that be not light and vaine, but graue and honest in behauiour,

Of Deacõs.

Grane and honest.

and

and countenaunce.

Not double tonged.

Secondly, that they be not double tongued, whiche do breath both colde and hote out of one mouthe, whiche faulte is very shamefull, not onely in a holy and Christian man, but in a worldly person also, and it is very hatefull in a mynister. He woulde haue Deacõs to be true and stedfast in theyr wordes.

Not giuen to muche wyne.

He doth adde to it, Not gyuen to much wine. He dothe not say, not drinkyng wine, but not giue to much wine. This fault maketh the mynisters vnprofitable, yea & sometimes hurtfull also, besides the very filthynesse it selfe, of the dronkennesse.

Keping the mystery of the fayth.

He saith further, Not filthily coueitous of gayne, He would haue Deacons here to be such, as he would the Bisheppes to be before, keppyng the mysterye of the faith with a pure conscience. He calleth the mysterye of the faith, the doctrine of saluation and of the Christian faith. And he sayth not Teachyng, but keppyng the mysterie of the fayth. For the Deacons were not chosen to the intent to teach, but to take the charge of the goods of the churche, of widowes, of the fatherlesse and motherlesse, & of the poore.

And the meanyng of Paule is far wide from them, the whiche do suppose it to be sufficient for suche mynisters to be chosen, that be worldly wise men, how soeuer it goe with the mystery of fayth: as though it were no matter among Christian menne, what manner of men there be in the fayth of Christe, whiche do mynister in the outwarde functions.

Let the be tried first.

And let them (sayth he) be first tried, and afterwardes let them mynister, if they be founde blamelesse. He giueth warning that no mã be rashly preferred to the office of a Deacõ, least through negligence there may creepe in a slouthfull and an vnprofitable person, or a filthie and vayne man, or a false and an vnfaythfull creature. Wherefore he commaundeth that they be tried before that they be chosen, that it may be founde by some triall what they be: and the to chose them to the Deaconrie, whe they be proued to be blamelesse.

How were they tryed.

I suppose that they were wont to be tried two manner of wayes. First by the testimony of their lyfe paste: secondly, by the mynisterie it selfe, whiche they did practise a good whyle before that they were chosen vnto it, and confirmed by the layyng on of handes, vntil such time as they were well tried, & so eyther reiected, or else admitted.

Of the wyues of the Deacons.

He giueth order also for the Deacons wiues, for they did hang vpon the mynistery also in theyr sorte, and besides that it importeth much to the honor of the ministerie, what the ministers wiues be. He sayth, Wiues likewise sadde and honest. The estimatiõ of a man is not a litle decayed by a vaine and light wife. He addeth, Not backbyters, nor slaunderers, sober, trustie in al respectes. He would haue the Deacons wiues to differ from the cõmon behauiour of other women. For there were wonte to be many light womẽ, slaunderous, bibbers, and hauyng little regarde of their bounden fayth, specially in the East partes.

Thus muche by the way of the Canon of the Apostle, whereby wee are taught, what manner men Bysshops and Deacons ought to be, at one one worde, suche men, neither dishonest, nor blamed of the strangers, nor vnprofitable, much lesse harmeful to the churche. In consideration of this Canon, the matter wẽt so in the primitiue church, that he could seldome finde any body, that would be cõtent to be chosen and ordayned a minister of Christ, so that they were fayne to compell them that were chosen, and drawe them against theyr will to be Bishops, whereof S. Augustine maketh mention, writyng thus: Marke what the Apostle sayde: He that desireth a Bysshoprieke, desireth a good worke. And yet so many are holden against theyr will, are brought out, are shut vp, are kepte in to take Bysshoprickes, they doe suffer so greate matters whiche they be loath to doe, vntill that theyr will come vpon the to take the good worke in hand. This saith he. But now adayes the world is bente otherwise, men are of an other disposition. No man is compelled, euery man cõmeth running vnto it. Why? Bicause they do vtterly set at naught this Canon. But in case the Churches had not forsaken this order of the Apostle, we shoulde haue had nowe much lesse errour, false doctrine, enormities, filthinesse and vncleannesse, and wicked Symony, in Christes religion. Now who is able worthily to bewayle this most miserable waste & desolation of the churches, whiche the vnkindely decay of the order of the Church hath bredde: They that ought to haue had bene the doctours, are become seductours, they that shoulde haue bene Bishops of Churches, we see are become princes of earthly dominions. They that should fede the Lords flocke, do fede themselues, and do either themselues deuour the Lordes sheepe, or else they do caste them to the Wolues, and other cruell beastes. They that were wonte to be Priests in the Church, that is to say Elders, their place is nowe occupied by menne not rype of age, and in behauiour moste lighte varlettes. To make a shorte tale, the lighte of the worlde is turned into darkenesse, the salte of the earth is vtterly vnsauery, and hath losse al his sharpenesse. In the meane time, whyles that there be founde very fewe faythfull Mynisters of Goddes worde, all the worlde is full in euery corner with the glarings of Bysshoppes in name, Priestes, Prelates, Doctours, &c. and theyr conuersation is so foule and filthie, so prophane and shamefull, that wise men can not chose but acknowledge, that the horrible wrath of God is already sore enkendled against ỹ churches of Christendome.

Of the reformation of the Ministers of Gods Worde.

There is no hope of the reformation of false pastours.

I knowe that there is no hope of any true and perfecte reformation of them that do fighte vnder the banner of the Romishe Symon, not Peter, but Judas, whiche haue troden vnder theyr feete the discipline of Goddes worde, of the Canons of the Apostles, trustyng vpon theyr secular power, and haue put them on a whorishe face or visarde, that they can not be ashamed thereof. This is an olde inueterate disease, lyke a gowte that can not be healed. Who euer saw saith Chrysostome, a lerne easily reformed? By what poudering can the salte, when it hath lost his taste, be restored againe? But I will recyte his wordes more at large, whiche are redde in the exposition vppon Mathewe. There is nothing (saythe he) more impossible, than to correcte hym who knoweth all things: and yet contemneth the good, loueth the euill. For all that is in the Scriptures, by the reason of his dayly exercise in them is accounted to be old and litle worth in his sight. For any thing that is terrible there, by vse becommeth to be of no estimation. Therfore the Clerke which doth alwayes reade the Scriptures, eyther muste alwayes obserue them and be perfect, or in case he beginne once to set them at light, he is neuer stirred by thē to be in feare againe. Who euer hath sene a Clerke repēting himself quickly, for although he chaunce to be take with the maner, and so be ouerthrowē, he is not sory because he hath sinned, but he is amazed, because his glory is gone. Doe you thinke, that the Lord was cruel in denying of repentaunce to the Clergy, when he sayde: If the salte lose his taste, wherby shal it be made sauerie? No, but he spake it as considerying it to be a naturall case, for there is no body to teache him when he doth amisse, that shoulde correct others when they do erre. Therefore he sayth further: Verily I say vnto you, that the Publicans & harlottes shall passe you in the kyngdome of God. This saith he. Wherefore as touching those things, which I shall speake of the reformation of the ministers of Christe, shall not be spoken for thē that be desperately & inueterately corrupte, but for them which in these latter times are called to the ministery of the worde, vnto whom we do wishe this minde from the Lorde, that they will occupy theselues in the feare of the Lorde, and beware of the fotesteppes of their forefathers, least they fall into the same pitte of perdition that they did, and vndoe themselues & the churches of Christe without recouery.

Chrysost. com. Second. epist. in Matth. hom. 40.

It is a very harde matter for a man to continue euer stoutely to the ende, in that whiche he hath well begon withall, but yet it is in any case necessarie so to do, and chiefly for the minister of the worde. We be all inclyned to errour and to sinne, as long as we continue in this fleshe. Satan whiche runneth aboute lyke a Lion, to seeke whome he may deuour, doth chiefly lye in watch for the Pastors. The dutie or office of ministration, is to admonishe them that doe erre, to admonishe the negligent, to correct the sinfull, to comfort the weake, to conuince the aduersaries, whiche can not be done without sturdy and stoute labour. Sometimes a mans owne pewfellowes (I say as I haue found) will vppon hatered and spyte, hinder and lette him by all meanes they can, from the dyeing of his doctrie, when he dothe cutte the worde of God aright. The blockishe, fonde, and impenitent people, dyd trouble and disquiete Moyses and Aaron also, and mynistred occasion to them to do amisse. I nede to say nothing of these our times, when men say, that it goeth by destiny, that we shoulde abounde in all mischiefes without any amendment. For these & many other respectes, the mynistery of the worde worde is very daūgerous. Wherfore it were exceeding necessarie, that there were a certain discipline of reformation amongst the ministers, & a meanes of mutuall comforte, that there mighte be bothe correction for them that do offende, and brotherly comforte and mutuall relefe to succour them, whose heart dothe fainte and falleth vnder the burden.

And it seemeth that the very qualitie of this matter would haue foure sortes of discipline, eyther to reforme sinners thereby, or if that cannot be, to succour and relieue the necessities of the Churche. The beste and fullest amendment is this, when bothe the minister that dothe offende, and the sinne that hurteth the Churche, are bothe corrected. To this pricke and marke, the discipline of correctiō ought to be directed. But in case the minister be founde to be paste recouery, we muste haue a regarde of the Churche, that there come no harme thereby to the Church. And this care of the church muste be principally loked vnto, in the correction of the minister. But let vs viewe the partes of this discipline orderly.

The firste, is the correction of the minister that offendeth, whereof the Apostle gyueth a precepte, saying: Take no complaint against a priest, without twoo or three witnesses. Reproue them that doe sinne before all, that the rest may be also afrayde. He will not haue him to correcte the minister vnaduisedly, and at euery light complaynt, forasmuche as they that be rulers, are nowe and then founde faulte withall, of them that be vnder thē, without cause. On the other side, he doth prouide by this order, that they shall not be exempted from all complaynes, whiche might breede a carelesnesse among mynisters to doe what they liste. Wherefore he dothe adde: But with twoo or three witnesses. And thus he doth bothe defende the innocencie of the ministers, and cut off also their carelesnesse to sinne, when hee dothe reiecte all headlesse complaynes, and doth allowe that whiche is true and worthy to be beleeued. And whereas he saith more: Reproue them that do sinne, in the sighte of all, that the rest also may be afrayde: it hangeth vpon that that wente before, touchyng the commaundement to reproue the ministers that do offende. All & euery mans sinne is not to be reproued openly and in all mens sight, for some secrete sinne is not to be reuealed, but to be reformed secretly. But whē the Minister doth sinne in that sorte, that it is to be feared least he shoulde be a slaunder to the church, and giue a libertie to sinne by his example, whiche kinde of daunger is not to be feared in euery mans offence: then the necessitie of the charge of the Churche dothe require, that the mynister so offendyng, shoulde be reproued in ỹ sight of all, to strike in bashfulnesse and terrour to others, that they be not infected by his euill example. So Paule reprehended Peter in the presence of al, when he saw that he walked not aright in the gospell of Christe.

Reprone sinners before all mē.

Galat. 2.

The Greeke worde that Paule vseth here, signifieth as muche as is Reproue or conuince. Wherevpon we may gather, that the witnesse testifying against a Priestе, muste be heard not aparte and secretely, but ἐλέγχω.

openly, and before all. And by this ſaying to conuince and repꝛoue a ſinner before all is meante, that after he is euidently conuicted by witneſſes, he may bée eyther rebuked by wordes, oꝛ elſe abyde other puniſhment, accordyng to the waight of the offence.

The turning of a miniſter to an other place.

The ſecond way of coꝛrection, is to turne ỹ miniſter to an other place. And this is vſed when the myniſter is enticed to ſinne by ſome occaſions, which the place where he miniſtreth, dothe yéelde vnto him. As in caſe he be gyuen ouer muche to dꝛynke wine, and do myniſter there where there be many wyne Tauernes, and that the people be alſo muche diſpoſed to dꝛynke: the caſe it ſelfe would, that ſuche a one beyng otherwiſe méete inough, ſhoulde be turned to ſome other place, where he ſhoulde finde leſſe occaſion to offende: oꝛ if one ſerue in ſome famous Churche, whiche is not able inough foꝛ the charge. Dꝛ of ſome learned perſon be appoynted to a ſmall Churche, which were worthy to ſerue a greater, as Nazianzene was, oꝛ if there be any diſcoꝛde betwirt the people & the Miniſter, & that there be no hope of a full attonement and reconcilement, oꝛ if the Miniſter be in contépt in the ſight of the people, this remedy of turning them to another place, is to be vſed.

But in caſe a man be founde not méete inough foꝛ the office of a Biſhop wherevnto he was choſen by the Churche in tyme of neceſſitie foꝛ lacke of a better, no doubte the very reaſon in reformation of the lackes of the Church, would that whé God ſendeth a meeter man, the firſt ſhould be turned either to ſome leſſe church, eyther to ſome myniſterie of leſſe impoꝛtaunce: ſo that he that was once a Biſhop ſhould be now of the number of them, that doe trauayle with the Biſhoppe in the woꝛke of the Lorde: and he that was ſometimes a Pꝛieſte, may ſo be ſette among the Deacons.

The third way of reformation, is to depoſe hym from his office. And this is vſed two wayes.

1 The one is, when he which hath ſinned is depoſed foꝛ a ſeaſon, vntill he be reformed and amended. This kinde of depoſition they do call a Suſpention. And in caſe he that is depoſed, do ſo behaue himſelfe in the tyme of his ſuſpention, that he do declare certayne and ſure tokens of his true amendment, he is ſet to rule ſome other church, where he may ſerue the Lord without the offéce of ỹ people.

2 The other, is a depoſitiō oꝛ remouyng foꝛ euer, when he that is depoſed, hath any ſinne, faulte, oꝛ lacke that can not be amēded, eyther of the bodie, as if hée be dumme, blinde, oꝛ a lepꝛe: eyther of the mynde, as if he be deſperately alienated from the fayth and Churche of Chꝛiſte: eyther of conditions, as if hée haue ſome very haynous oꝛ leſſe faultes, that can not bé reformed. Wée finde much of this ſoꝛte of depoſition in them that they call the Canons of the Apoſtles, and of the Generall and Pꝛouinciall Councels. So the Biſhops and Pꝛieſts were depoſed that medled with woꝛldly matters, they that committed any whoꝛedome oꝛ periurie, they ỹ ſtroke any faithfull man though they offended, they that were made and oꝛdeyned Pꝛieſtes oꝛ biſhops foꝛ money, they that kept their Churches by ſecular power, they that playde at dice, they ỹ were dꝛonkardes, they that demaunded vſurie vpon theyꝛ detters, they that did negligently inſtruct their people, they that folowed the warres, ſuche as there be many now a dayes fielde Biſhops and Cardinals, &c. Againſt theſe and all the lyke it is ſayde in one woꝛde, Depoſe them. If we ſhal ſtande to the olde Councels and Canons, as the aduerſaries of Chꝛiſtes doctrine do crie out vpon vs to do now adayes, I beſéech you, where is one of the Biſhops and Pꝛieſtes, &c. that be now, that ſhal eſcape the ſentence of depoſement?

4 The laſt & fourth way is by excōmunicatiō, wherby they that were depoſed, were foꝛ their lacke of repētance excluded from the cōmunion of the faithfull. And in very déede they be not woꝛthy to enioy the cōmuniō of the faithfull, whiche do ſo behaue themſelues, that they do not onely diſtayne the Miniſtery of Chꝛiſte, but foꝛgettyng theyꝛ owne ſaluatiō, they doe ſhame alſo the very Chꝛiſtian religion thꝛough theyꝛ miſchieuous and haynous life and behauiour.

Hitherto we haue touched ſomewhat of the reformation of the Myniſters of the woꝛde. Nowe they do demaunde, by whome this diſcipline ſhould be miniſtred. I anſwere: Firſt the people of the Churche that hath the authoꝛitie to chooſe a méete myniſter, hath alſo, as Cyprian witneſſeth, authoꝛitie to refuſe him that is vnwoꝛthie.

Secondly, they whiche be the iudges and cenſoꝛs of good maners in the church, are bounde by their office to repꝛoue ỹ Miniſter that offendeth, if he be conuicted before the Church of God by two oꝛ thꝛée witneſſes of tryed honeſtie.

Thirdly, the ſame perſons may by the conſent and voyces of the people, depoſe the Myniſter, eyther foꝛ a ſeaſon, eyther foꝛ altogither: eyther they may at length excommunicate him, accoꝛdyng to the qualitie of his ſinne oꝛ defecte. Onely the turning of a Myniſter from one Churche to an other, cā not be done by the iudgement and liking of one church alone. Foꝛ it is not reaſon that one church ſhoulde thꝛuſt in a man into another Churche, without theyꝛ owne conſent vnto it. Theſe things be done in many Churches nowe adayes, by the iudgemente and Decrée of the Chꝛiſtian Magiſtrate, ſauing the depoſement foꝛ euer, and the excommunication, of whiche none of thē bothe is nowe in vſe. In tymes paſt theſe matters were done at the Biſhops Synodes, whereof two were kepte euery yeare in euery Pꝛouince. At the ſame, Biſhops were depoſed, and other ſet in theyꝛ places, by contention and labour of parties, without the conſente and voyces of the Churches, ouer which they were ſet: whiche pꝛeſumption, I can not allowe. Foꝛ ſo bothe the intereſt of the Churches was bꝛoken, and there were gyuen occaſions of Schiſmes, whereby the concoꝛd of the churches was marueloully mangled and turmoyled, in ſo muche that it is no wōder that the Gréeke Churches haue had ſo hoꝛrible a ruyne, conſideryng the maruelous and innumerable diſeaſe of contention and deſire to condemne one anothers doings, whiche theyr Bysshoppes had.

Of Fayth.

LIke as our Sauiour, when he had giuen in charge to his Disciples the worke of the Apostolike mynisterie, saying: Goyng into al the world, preache the Gospell to all creatures, he did immediatly after that adde this saying, touchyng Faith: Whosoeuer doth beleeue and is Baptised, shall be saued: and as the Apostle sayth, that Faith is by hearyng, and hearing by the worde of Christe: so I do suppose, that after the place of the Ministerie and of the ministers of the worde, it is very conuenient to sette nexte therevnto this place of Faithe, whiche we thinke good to diuide into these members. First what Faith is, what be the partes of it, how necessary it is, wherby it is gotten, howe it is giuen, to whome it is giuen, when it is giuen, what be the nourishmentes of it, what is the increase of it, and what the power and efficacie of it is.

Mark.16.

Rom.10.

I. What Faith is.

VVith some folkes faith is nothing else, but an opinion.

FOrasmuch as there was neuer any superstition that came into this worlde, which is subiect vnto all kinde of errours, so vnreasonable and so muche to be misliked, but that it founde some place in many mennes heartes, it came to passe, that as by this slightnesse in beleeuing any thing, the worde of Faith hath had no very good stay among Christian menne, so that some menne take faith to be nothing else, but a certaine opinion of God, of Christ his sonne, of the holy spirite, and of certain other comon matters in ỹ church. And in very deede, they that haue not gotten true Faith by Gods gift, albeit they were borne and broedde and sanctified by the Sacrament of admission among Christian men, yet for all that, they are not able to iudge otherwise of fayth, but that it is a certayne opinion of things whiche wee can not attayne vnto by the iudgement and vnderstandyng of man. For they can not otherwise iudge of it than so as their hearts be affectioned, whiche bee of that disposition, that they doe beleeue those things whiche they do beleeue, for no other cause, but bycause they do so beleeue euery where, with whō they doe dwell and haue to doe, and amongst whome they were instructed in Faith from childehood. And this maner of beleeuyng is not onely vulgare and comon vnto false Christiās, but vnto Iewes and Turkes, and all other nations of the whole worlde, and subiect vnto all errours. And it cā not bee, but he must needes be deceyued that dothe beleeue all matters without any assured lighte of the Truth, which are euerywhere beleeued amongst the people, and dothe beleeue them for nothyng else, but bicause hee dothe see that the beliefe of them is general to all the people and countrey, wherevnto he dothe belong in byrth, education and religiō. And what else doe they smell of now adayes, whiche haue euer in theyr mouth the Catholike fayth, the Catholike Church? For they do plainly declare, that they doe take the same to be true and right, whiche they doe see is Catholyke and vniuersall, as though the multitude of people were not subiect vnto errours, and that the truth were not a straunger vpon the earth, and that the fayth standeth not in many, but in a fewe, that is to say, the elect: for whiche cause the Apostle also did call the Christian faith, the fayth of Gods elect.

Therefore we must diligently cōsider what the same faith is, whiche is not onely an opinion nor can not be subiect vnto any errours. The Apostle did set out the definition of the same, where he sayth: Faith is the substaunce of those things whiche be hoped for, and the tryall of those things that be not seene.

He dothe repoynte of Fayth two things in this definition.

1 First, that it is a substance and a trial, by which wordes he doth vtterly distinct al incertaintie of opinion, and doubt from true fayth. The one is a firme and vnmoueable substance the other is the euident and sure trial of the thing. So ỹ if faith be a substāce and a triall, it folowyth, first that it dothe not suffer any doubte to remayne in the minde of the beleeuer, so that it must appeare that he which doth doubte, is ledde by opinion and not by Faith: Secondly it muste folowe, that those things muste needes be true whiche are beleeued in true Faith. For there can be no sure and vndoubted Faithe of false things. Many may doubte of true things, albeit they doe decay no peece of the truth by theyr doubtyng: but of false things no manne can be assured, nor haue suche a fayth thereof, as shalbe a substaunce or a prowfe, no nor the opinion of the whole worlde, though it be neuer so Catholike and Vniuersall, is able to giue any truth vnto false things. The multitude of Turkes, though they be neuer so infinite, can not by theyr opinion purchase any glory of truthe vnto the wickednesse of Mahomet, and pull it from the Christian faith.

2 Another repoynte of faith in this definition of it is, that it is of things hoped vpon, and of suche as are not seene. In the worde of Hope, he hath a respecte vnto those things whiche are not yet gotten presently, but be yet loked for to come. By that which he sayth, And be not seene, he vnderstandeth those things that be inuisible and spirituall, hidden from the eyes of the flesh. And by these wordes also he dothe plainely put a difference betwirt an opinion which mans reason is able to conceyue of things eyther absent or inuisible, and true faith, in attributing vnto it that it hath a certayne substaunce and an euident prose in things to come and vnseene, which can not be ascribed to any opinion of man.

Faith is of thinges hoped for, & such as be not seene.

Whereas our Sauiour sayde vnto Thomas: Bycause thou hast seene Thomas, thou hast beleeued, it is not agaynst that definition of faythe whiche wee alleaged out of the Apostle. Christe spake in that place after the common phrase, when that is called fayth sometimes which is rather a knowledge than faith: as the same also is oftentimes called faith, which is an opinio rather than faith. But where as he sayth more: Blessed are they whiche haue not seene & yet beleeued: it doth bothe manifestly agrée with this definition, and dothe also discerne true fayth frō the same whiche is improperly called fayth, & doth withall extenuate the one, and commende & extoll the other, whiche the true beléeuers haue, gyuing it a prayse of blessednesse, commendyng the same expressly in it, whiche the Apostle did set forth in this definition, saying: and the triall of those things that be not séene.

Iohn.20. Bycause thou hast seene mee Thomas thou beleeuedst.

The definition of the name. 1. Timo. 3.

Hitherto wée haue set forth that definition of faith, which is in the doctrine of the Apostle, & it serueth rather for the thing than for the name: euen like as if a man shoulde define the Churche, he would say out of the Apostle, that it is the piller and fundation of the truth. If you will haue the definition of the name or worde, it appeareth that fayth is the constant assent of the heart vnto those things whiche be tolde or promysed by the worde. For to beléeue, is to assent vnto ý same which we do heare. But it liked the Apostle better to set forth the definition of the matter thā of the name, to the intent he woulde expresse the certaintie of the Christian faith, and discerne it from false faith whiche is not faith, but opiniō.

II. What be the partes of Fayth.

The partes of our Fayth.

AND to the intent that wée may know our whole Faith, we must loke vpon the partes of it. And they be three. The firste is, that whereby we do beleue certain things of God: The second, when we do beleue God as God: The thirde, when we do certainely beléeue vpon God as vpon God. I suppose that in these three partes there is comprysed as much as consisteth in faith, sufficient for a godly person. And albeit that the diuision of them is not darke, yet for al that I meane briefly to expound euery parte, bycause of the simpler sorte of men VVhat to be. God.

1 First of al we do beleue certayne things of God, as ý there is a God, ý there is but one & none other besides him: that he is omnipotēt, the creator of heauen & earth: that he is iuste, doing good to the righteous, & punishing the wicked: that he is good, gētle, and mercyfull towardes them that do amend: that he is true, and kepeth promisse: that he is euerlastyng, and many other things that be reported of him in the Scriptures. Of this sorte be those matters also, which we do beléeue of Christe the Sonne of God, & of the holy spirite. Of Christ, that he is the onely begotten sonne of God, the worde of God, made flesh, true God and true man, our onely Lorde, Redéemer, Sauiour and Mediatour: that he was crucified, dead, buryed, and rayled vp agayne, taken vp vnto heauen as touchyng his māhode, and that he sitteth at the right hande of the Father, hée shall come at the ende of this worlde to iudge the quicke and the dead: and other thyngs that are in the writyngs of the Euangelistes and the Apostles. Of the holy spirite, that he is of the same Godhead equall with the Father and the Sonne, that he is the lightgiuer of the mindes, the comforter, teacher, reliuer, renewer and gouernour of the elect of God.

And this is the firste degrée of faith, and it maketh a greate matter how it be grounded in our harts. They be farre farre wide from it, which do saye in their heartes: There is no God. Yea and they also, whiche although they doe beléeue that there is a God, yet they do not otherwise beléeue it, but as they doe sée that it is commonlye thought so in the Catholike or vniuersall opinion of men. And they also thirdly, whiche do beléeue of God, eyther not those things whiche they ought, or otherwise than they ought: which thing must of necessitie befall to them, that do not conceyue in their mind the faith of God, according vnto holy Scriptures, but doe imagine themselues opinions of their owne heart, and doe embrace them for the true faith. As for example. There be séene which do conceyue in this sorte of God: God is mercifull towardes all them whome he hath made: Ergo he will saue all, and condemne none. To what purpose shoulde he haue created them, in case he woulde condemne them? He hateth nothing of that whiche he hathe made, he made all, how then can he condemne them whome he doth not hate? Therefore none shall be damned, but all shal be saued, yea and the Deuils also. They which do beléeue this of God, do not beléeue that whiche is true, but they do suppose the same to be true which is false, bycause they doe not harken vnto Goddes worde, but vnto theyr owne imaginations. And therevpon specially heresies do rise.

The seeōd degree of faith.

God.

2 In the second part of faith, we doe beléeue God also, that is to saye, we do credite and beléeue his worde as the worde of God, of whose truth being a thing altogither infallible, it were a wicked matter to doubte. So we doe beléeue Christ also the sonne of God, whē we do beléeue his worde, as the worde of the only begotten son of God, sente vnto vs from the father. This is the seconde degrée of our faith, rising vpon the firste. For it can not be, but that he whiche dothe beléeue aright of God, should beleue him also in all poynts: or that he whiche doth halt in the firste degrée, should stand vpright also in the seconde. In this degrée we must also place that obedience whiche Gods worde dothe require of the faithfull. Let thē loke well to the matter héere, whiche doe obey rather the doctrines of menne, than the worde of Christ.

They which do stand sure on both féete in this second degrée of faith, do not only beléeue Christ saying: Hée that beléeueth in me, hath life euerlasting: but they will beléeue him also in all other things whiche he speaketh. You may fynde a passing number, whiche doe beléeue as muche as they do like in the wordes of Christe, and that which they like not, they do call into question, and tumble & tosse it with muche adoe. Suche as those sayings be: Resist not euill. Item, Men shall giue an accompt of euery idle worde. Item, Loue your enimies. Item, He that loueth his soule shall lose it, and, He whiche taketh not vp his crosse and folowyth me, is not a méete man for me: and suche other like, which our reason and flesh doth abhorre. This kinde of men doe not beléeue Christ as Christ, but as saying vnto them pleasaunt things. To beléeue him as Christ or the anointed of God, is to beléeue hym in all poyntes, and not to doubte any whit of any his sayings.

Iohn. 6.

3 In the third péece of our faythe

The thirde degree of fayth.

To beleue in God.

we doe not onely beléeue of God, and God, but in God also. And to beléeue in God, is to direct all our hope vnto God, and with sure truste to depende vpon hys goodnesse. And this is the third degrée of faith, rising vppon the two first. For whosoeuer do beléeue of God and beléeueth God also aright, can not chose, but assuredlye and with all his heart depend vppon the truth and goodnesse of hys promise.

These thrée partes of Faith are trimly expressed in the wordes of Christ, where he sayth: Doest thou not beléeue that I am in the Father, and the Father in me? Item, Beleue me, that I am in the Father, and the father in me. Also, Verely, verely I say vnto you, hée that beléeueth in me, the workes which I doe, he shall do also. And in the beginning of the Chapiter, Doe you beléeue in God? beléeue also in me. It toucheth the first part of our faith that he sayeth: Beléeuest thou not that I am in the father, and the father in me? It behoued them to beléeue that of Christ, whereof the Apostles were yet ignorannt. It toucheth the second part that he addeth, Beléeue me that I am in the father, and the Father in me. He required thē to beléeue him, in so saying. It toucheth the thirde part where he sayth: Verely verely, I say vnto you, he that beléeueth in me, &c. And, Doe you beleue in God? beleue then in me also: By whyche wordes he requireth beléefe and truste in him as well as in God.

Iohn.14.

There is a cleare difference in these thrée partes of our Faith: and that not onely for the order and degrée of them, but also for the apply-

Of the difference of the partes of fayth.

ing of them. The first two maye and ought also to be applyed, not only to God and Christe his Sonne, but to the Prophetes and Apostles also: the thirde belongeth onely to the father, the sonne, and the holye spirite. For we doe beléeue aright of Moses and the rest of the Prophets and the Apostles, that they were the seruants of God, loued of God, and that they spake by the holy spirite. Secondlye, we doe also aright beléeue Moses, the Prophetes and the Apostles, as the seruauntes and messengers of God, forasmuch as they spake thorough the holy spirite. For this faith doth so farreforth derogate nothing from that faith whiche is due vnto God and to Christ, that it dothe rather confirme it in vs, wherevppon Christ sayth also: If you did beléeue Moses, you woulde beléeue me also. For he wrote of me. The third part of oure faith ought to be attributed neyther vnto Moses, nor to the Prophets, nor to the Apostles, no nor yet to the Angels. It is not méete for vs to beléeue in Moses, Prophetes, Apostles, or anye other Saintes and Angels, for it is not méete that we shoulde giue vnto them the honoure of Godhead, which we should doe, if we should depend vpon them in hope and truste. I knowe it is written in Exodus: And they beléeued in the Lord, and in Moses his seruaunt. Againe, And the Lord sayde vnto Moses: Loe I will come to thée in the darkenesse of the cloude, that the people may heare when I doe talke with thée, and that they may beléeue in thée for euer. Wherevpon it might seeme, that we should as well beléeue in Moses as in God himself. Which can

Of what sort of necessaries faith is.

can not be allowed in that sense, as it is sayd, we do beleue and putte our truste in God. The letter Beth in Ebrew, doth not signify the very same as oure preposition In dothe, as they whiche haue skill in the Ebrewe doe well know. And therefore Hierome of purpose did translate it. And they beléeued God, and Moses his seruāt. Also, And let them beléeue thée for euermore: whiche way the Seuenty translatours did turne it also. The Hebrewes haue this manner of speches whiche we do call the Ebrewe phrase. Let the learned translatoure so translate it, that it hurt not ỳ sense. Therefore Augustine sayd aryghte: We do beléeue Paule, but we do not beleue in Paule, we do beleue Peter, but we do not beleue in Peter. Item vpon Christes wordes: do you beleue in God? beleue in me also: It followeth (saith he) that in case you do beleue in God, you must beleue in mée also, which truly should not folow, if Christ were not God. Let them loke vnto the matter then, that require ỳ faithful to beléeue in Saincts. They doe most grieuously sinne agaynste God and against his Saincte also, vnto whome they doe giue againste their will the same, which belongeth only vnto God: for it should not belōg vnto Christ nother, vnlesse he were God. Thus farre let vs haue spoken by the way of the thrée partes of faith, and of their degrées and differences.

III. Hovve necessary Fayth is.

Thirdly, we muste sée for the necessitie of Faith. There be sundry sortes of necessary things, according to the sundrye causes of the necessities, of which it is no time nowe to speake. Faith is of that sort of necessaries, whiche be therefore necessarie, for that they be necessary to atteyne some thing, and necessary else of themselues forced of no cause, nor bringing any compulsion against a mās will, as those things be which can not be otherwise. Suche is not the necessitie of Faithe. For no man is compelled agaynste his will to beléeue: but like as it is requisite of necessitie for a man that will sée, to opē his eyes, so it is necessarye also that we haue faith, to obteyn those things which are promised in Christ, by the grace of God. But if a man haue no minde vnto them, there is nothing to compell him to beléeue. As if a man list not to sée, he is not compelled of necessitie to open hys eyes. But in case he haue a lust to sée, or muste nedes sée, then he must in anye wise of necessitie open hys eyes to sée. In like manner they that haue no care for the euerlasting saluation, they be not compelled by any necessitie to beléeue, for they maye perishe without faithe: but they that doe desyre to bée saued, must of necessity thynke vpon faith, without the whiche they can not be saued.

Wherefore faith is necessary to the disposition of God.

And that the same faith (whereof we spake and sayde that it is onely true and christian) is necessarye to obteyne saluation, we may firste vnderstande by that that the nature and disposition of God is suche, that no vnfaithfull person can please hym. For how should the vnfaithfull person please him, who is the moste true and faithfull of all? Therevpon

commeth

Heb.11.

connecth that saying to ỹ Ebrewes: Without faith it is not possible that any man should please God. If no man can please God without faithe, it followeth that no man can be blessed without faith. For how can he be blessed, which pleaseth not God: But he that is vnfaithfull dothe not beleeue, Ergo, &c. There is suche an other matter in this, that the proude men do not please God: for God is against them. Ergo the proude bee not saued. The humble do please him, for he dothe giue them grace. Ergo, it is impossible to please God without humblenesse. Item. He that is impenitent pleaseth not God. For the Apostle sayth: According to the impenitent heart thou doest lay vppe the wrath of God for thee. Ergo, without repentance it is not possible to please God. So that repentance is necessary vnto saluation, as faith is also and true humblenesse of hart. Why? bycause God will haue it so.

1.Pet.5.

The pure pose of God.

2 Secondly, we must consider the speciall purpose of God in that that it pleased him, bycause the worlde knew not his wisedome by their own wisedome, to saue such as would beleeue in him by ỹ foolishnesse of preaching. Our Saviour said: that the father gaue his sonne to that intente and purpose, that whosoeuer doe beleeue in him, shoulde not perishe, but haue life euerlasting. And the Apostle sayeth: that God set his sonne to be a propiciation through faith in his bloud. So that faith is necessary also vnto saluation, in this respect of the counsell and purpose of God, as learning is necessary for the obtainement of the honoures appoynted for learned men. For who can obteyne saluation withoute thys meane of counsell and purpose? This is Gods will, that they whiche doe beleeue in Christe his sonne, shoulde be saued. For the saluation standeth in hys will and in his hands, which he dothe bestowe accoyding vnto his wil and not oures. And it is not our parte to contende with the purpose and counsell of God, and to wrastle agaynste his will, and search why he did so determine, that they whiche do beleeue in Christe shoulde be saued: but it is conueniente for vs, rather to adore and beseeke this his will with most deepe affections, that it maye please hym to giue vs thys faith, withoute whych we can not be saued.

1.Cor.1. Iohn.3.

Rom.3.

3 Thirdly, the quality of this present life and of this our pilgrimage, wherein we be yet straungers from God, not present in his sighte, dothe bryng also the necessitie of faithe in vs. Therevpon came that of the Apostle. Whiles that we be in thys body, we doe raunge from about the Lord. For we do walke by faith, and not by the thing it selfe. So that thys kinde of life dothe as necessarily require faith towards God, as the life to come hathe no vse of it, when we shal see God face to face, and we shal be openly conuersant in his syghte. Imagine of the case of the sonne, which lyueth like a pilgrime among straungers out of his fathers house. Forasmuch as he is absent from his fathers house, nor can not indede walke in his fathers sighte, he must needes credite and beleeue suche letters and messengers as be sente to him from his father: that is to say, he must in all things rest vpon ỹ fayth of the prouidence, louingnesse and truth

The pilgrimage.

2.Cor.5.

truth of his father, and in no poynte doubt, but that he loueth him derely, and will not fayle hym at hys nede, and that when it is hys pleasure, he will call him home into hys sight. In this wyse the Apostle meaneth, that we be pilgrims from God oure Father in this body, as long as we do dwell in this Earth: and that it can not be, that we shoulde nowe liue before him indede, as we shall doe after this life: and therefore it is necessary that walking by Fayth, we should beleeue his word and messengers, the Prophets, Christe, and the Apostles, &c. till that we shall bee called home from this oure pilgrimage, and set in the sighte of God our father. Wherefore faith is necessary for vs in this respect also.

Iohn.17.

1.Cor.2.

Iohn.6.

4 Fourthly, the quality of those things which be necessarye for our saluation is such, that they must needes haue faith, bycause they can not be apprehended without it: Lyke as mens matters the quality, artes and sciences is suche, that they doe of necessitie require to haue the sharpenesse of mans reason to learne them, for that they can not be apprehended withoute the power of vnderstanding, which beastes haue not, of such nature the things of God be. Lyke as mens matters do require an vnderstanding, so they doe require to haue faith. First of all it is necessary, that we doe knowe that God the father is the maker of all things, and that he made all with his word. And this knowledge can not be attainted by the benefyte of oure reason, but it is attained by faith only. Therefore the Apostle sayeth: By fayth we doe beleeue, that all the worlde was made by the word of God. Secondlye, it is necessary for vs to know, that Christ also the sonne of God is sente into this worlde from ỹ father, to redeeme and saue sinners. Christ saith: Thys is euerlasting life, to know thee God the father, and him whom thou hast sent Jesus Christe, the son. And this knowledge is so incomprehensible to mans vnderstanding, that it semeth rather to him to be verye ranke folishnesse. Therefore it is necessarye, that it be attayned by fayth. So Peter sayeth not simplye, and we haue knowen, but he putteth before it: and we haue beleeued, and then addeth: and we haue knowen that thou arte Christ the sonne of God. Of thys sort are all those poyntes which doe concerne the resurrection, the ascension, the priesthode and euerlastyng kingdome of Christe, that he sytteth and ruleth at the right hande of hys father, and for his comming agayne to judge, with the rising agayne, and life euerlasting to come. All whyche matters can not bee comprehended without Faith.

The vvkes of the holy spirite in the hearts of the elect. Rom.1.4. & 6.

1.Iohn.1. Acts.15. Galat.5. Rom.10. 1.Pet.5. Rom.5. Hebr.10.

5 Fiftly, those things also doe of necessitie require faithe, whyche the holy spirite doth worke in our hearts to our saluation, when Christe dothe forgiue vs our sinnes for our faythe in his bloud, and so doth iustifye vs: and when he doth make vs the Children of God by adoption: when hee doth purifye our hearts, and maketh vs able by loue to doe good workes: when he stirreth vs to call vpon our father, to withstand Satan: to persecuer also in troubles: and to the looking for of our Sauioure, he confirmeth vs. For all these matters be so wrought in the electe by the vertue of the grace of Chriſte, that none of them can be done in any man, vnleſſe there be Chriſtian faythe withall. But we ſhall ſpeake of thys when wee ſhall conſyder the efficacie of Fayth.

IIII. Of vvhence Fayth is attained.

Sap. 8.

And this is a great poynt of wiſedome (ſayeth the Wiſe man) to knowe of whence the gift is. We haue the power to beleeue grafted in vs by God of nature. There is no liuing man but dothe beleeue ſomewhat. He beleeueth ſome, and beleeueth not in ſome. For if Eue had not beleeued the Serpent, ſhe had not eaten of the Apple which was forbydden. We ſpeake not here of thys power and kind of beleeuing, foraſmuch as it is naturally grafted in al folkes, but of the faithe in God and in hys Chriſte. The nature of man is ſo throughly corrupted, that albeit wee haue power to beleue, yet we doe beleue nothing leſſe than God, & though we haue ſtrength to loue, yet we can loue any other rather than God: and we ſpeake not of that faith which is an opinion rather than true fayth, & is vpon ſundrye cauſes conceyued in mens minds. Firſt of the wondering at thoſe things whiche are wrought by maruellous meanes beſydes the common courſe of nature. Such was the faith of the of whome it is redde in the Goſpell of John: And when he was at Ieruſalē at the feaſt of Eaſter vpon a holy day, many beleeued in his name, ſeeing the ſignes and tokens which he wrought. But Jeſus himſelfe did not committe himſelfe vnto them, bycauſe he knewe them all, and that it was not needeful that any ſhould beare witneſſe of man, for he knew what was in man. This he ſayth there. Why did not the Lorde allowe their faith? Wherby, bicauſe it was not true and ſincere. They did beleeue for a ſeaſon, and would immediatelyfall agayne to their vnbeliefe. So the Israelites beleeued God and Moſes his ſeruaunte, when they ſawe the Egyptians drowned in the redde Sea, for al that, they retourned agayne by and by vnto their accuſtomed vnbeliefe and hardnes of heart. And that felow Simon Magus, whē he ſawe ſygnes and greate vertues wrought by Philip, was aſtonied, and wondered and beleeued, yea and he was baptiſed alſo, and did ſticke vnto Philip. But howe truely he beleeued, it appeared afterwarde. And the Capernaites, of whome John ſpeaketh, when they had eaten theyr meate, and were wonderfully filled, did ſo beleeue, that they went aboute to chooſe Chriſt to be their King.

Exod. 14.

Actes 8.

John 6.

VVherupon vayne faith doth riſe, vvhich is an opinion.

John 2.

Secondly, the ſame is alſo ſuche a faith, which is conceyued vpon ſome lighte of the truth ſo manifeſtly expreſſed, that reaſon is driuen to agree to it: whiche happeneth oftentymes vnto them, which vpon ſome occaſion do come to heare the worde of the truth, whereof we haue an example in the ſeruauntes of the Phariſies, whych they ſent to apprehende oure ſauiour. For they, when they hearde him teaching, were ſo ſtirred to beleeue him, that they returned agayne to their maiſters, and being demaunded, why they brought him not, they aunſwered: There was neuer man talked ſo as he talketh.

Thirdly,

Thirdly, their faith is alſo alyke, which do beleeue as moued with the authoritie of ſome principal perſons and headmenne. Thus happened to Auguſtine, when hee was infected with the diſeaſe of the Manichees, & came to Millaine to ſee the Church there, and to heare Ambroſe preach. Of whiche matter the ſame is to bee vnderſtanded, whiche he writeth againſt the Epiſtle of Fundamentus, ſaying: Truly I would not haue beleeued the Goſpell, vnleſſe the authoritie of the Churche had moued me. For ſo he is wont to ſpeake, whyche the diligent reader doth knowe well ynough, and as wee haue declared heretofore.

Fourthly, they doe beleeue wyth ſuch a faith, which do beleeue moued by the conſente of the multitude, as they bee now adayes whych do looke for the determinations of the Councels, where thoſe thynges be decreed whych do pleaſe the moſt part.

With theſe we muſt place them alſo, whome long and continuall cuſtome dothe moue to beleeue. They doe alwayes crake vpon I wote not how many hundred yeares, as though that cuſtome without truth were not the auncientie of erroure. We needē not to bee verye buſie to ſearche of whence ſuche faith is, whiche riſeth vppon theſe occaſions. It ſpringeth out of the barren ſoyle of mans reaſon, and it ſwimmeth like a foame in the outwarde partes of mennes thoughtes, pearcing not to the bottome of theyr hearts. And theſe cauſes be of that nature, that they doe not onely deceyue falſe Chriſtian men, but the Turkes alſo in theyr erroures, ſauing one of them whych was the ſecond that we recited.

We doe ſearche for the beginnyng of true and ſincere faithe. The ſame is the gyfte of God, witneſſe the Apoſtle, ſaying: By grace you bee ſaued by faythe, and that not of youre ſelues, for it is Goddes gyfte. And, Euery good gifte is from aboue (ſayeth Jaines) comming downe from the father of lyghtes. Ergo, true fayth is alſo from aboue, comming downe from God the father of lyghtes. So Paule ſayeth: As God hathe deuided to euerye one of vs the meaſure of faythe. And to the Galathians he reciteth faith amongſt the fruites of the ſpirite. And to the Corinthians: But ſeeyng that we (ſaith he) haue the ſame ſpirite of faythe. Where hee ſetteth the ſpirite, for the gift of the faithe, ſignifying that fayth is the gifte of God. And to the Philippians he ſayeth: To you it is gyuen, that you may beleeue in him. By theſe teſtimonyes it is ſufficiētly proued, that faithe is of God, and that it is the gifte of God, and that our deſerte or ſtrength hath no place in it, & therfore it is called by Chriſt in the Goſpell, The worke of God, wherevpon Auguſtine noteth that he ſayd not, This is your worke, but that it is the worke of God, bycauſe you ſhoulde beleeue in him whome he ſente, to the intent that he which dothe glorye, myghte glorye in the Lord.

The begin ning of faith. Eph. 2. Iacob 5.

Rom. 12. Gala. 5. 2. Cor. 4. Phil. 1.

John 6.

This conſideration doth admoniſh vs, that they which doe lacke true faith, muſt crye vnto him who onely doth worke the ſame in our hearts by hys holye ſpirite. For ſo great is the grace of the louingneſſe of God, that he doth not onely promiſe

Men muſt praye for the gift of faith.

like

life and euerlasting saluation vnto wretched sinners, if they doe beléeue in him: but he doth also giue thē this, that they maye beléeue in him. So is there clearely nothing of oure owne in this matter whereof our flesh may glorye. For we be not only so vtterlye lost, that we haue nēde of redemption and forgiuenesse of our sinnes, and the gift of saluation and true life, but our heart and mind is also so deprauate, that we can not bring forth as much as faith of our selues or of our owne, whereby to be made able to receyue the heauenly grace. So that the Lord hauing pitie vpon vs, doth euen the like as a good Phisition is wont to do, which doth not only bring the sicke man a medicine to heale him, but if nēde be, and in case he can do it, he doth ayde hym also in that that he maye be able to receyue the medicine which he bringeth him. No good Phisition doth say to his pacient: Heere is a medicine for thée, whereby thou mayest be healed, take it, and occupy it, or else die. But in case ỳ pipes & passages of his throte and his mouth be stopped, that hée can not receyue the medicine that is giuen him, he dothe most diligentlye trauell by all meanes that he can, to open the pipes and passages that bée stopte, and to make the pacient able to receyue the medicine. So oure most fauourable Phisition, dothe not onely offer vnto vs vndeseruing and lost people, forgiuenesse of sinnes, adoption, saluation, and lyfe euerlasting, but he doth worke thys faythe also in vs, whereby we may be partakers of all this grace and saluation. Let vs therefore whiche be diseased and desirous of our health, saye: Indeede Lord, we do see the medicine readye for vs, whereby we maybe holpē, but our heartes be so stopped, that we can not by faith receyue it: open them therefore, that we maye in beléeuing be able to receyue the same, which thou promisest to them that do beléeue. Let them whiche haue but a weake and small faythe say with the Apostles: Lord encrease our faith. Let them which bée strong in faithe, acknowledge the gifte of God and magnifie his grace. They doe see many that do lacke the same gift of faith. Let them pray to God for them, the author and gyuer of Faithe, that he wyll vouchsafe to gyue them also the spirite of Faith.

A similitude.

V. Hovv Fayth is giuen from God.

WE haue declared that true faith is the gift of God. And Goddes giftes are bestowed two manner of wayes. Some be giuen immediately from him without any ministery of man, as the soule, the life, vnderstanding, will, appetite, of those thynges which do help towards the sustentation of our life, lode, hatred, feare of euill, power to see, to heare, to smell, to taste, and to touche, and those outward things, the Sunne, light, daye, night, ayre, sommer, winter, &c. And some things be atteyned by ỳ meane of mans ministery: as the body, the nutriment of the body, corne, bread, wine, clothes, and suche other lyke, yea and publike quiet by the Magistrate, artes, sciences, tongs, vsage, and experience of things, &c.

Agayne, some things be so giuen, that he which receyueth them, dothe not perceiue that he receyueth them: as when the soule is ioyned to the body, and life put vnto it. And some things are receyued with perseuerance and vnderstanding of the receyuour of them, as those things bée whiche are giuen to men growen to some good yeares, and they maye bée perceyued eyther in bodye as corporall giftes, eyther in spirite as spirituall giftes.

And the faith whereof we do now speake, is one of those giftes, which be both gyuen from God, and are perceyued also when they be receyued, through the help of mans ministery. And that it is so gyuen commonlye, it is sufficiently knowen by the scriptures. The Apostle dothe compare the ministers of Christ vnto planters and waterers and sayeth: Who is Paule? and who is Apollo? They be ỳ ministers, through whome you haue beléeued. He that dothe plante is nothing, and he that dothe water is nothing, but hée that doth giue encrease is God. Hereby I suppose it is manifest ynough, that God dothe giue faithe through the meane of some ministerye, and that the same is by men whome he dothe vse as ministers, to that purpose that we may atteyne fayth by them. Besides that: that God dothe so vse the ministery of men, to the intente that his working may take effect.

Nowe consequentlye we must see how fayth is giuen from God by the ministery of men. For it is requisite that he whiche is ỳ minister of God, shall in any wise bring and applye somewhat that may helpe to the conceyuing of faythe in God. And what the same is, the Apostle dothe manifestly declare, when he sayeth: Howe shall they beleue in him whome they haue not heard? How shal they heare without a Preacher? And how shall they preach, vnlesse they be sente? As it is written: How beautifull are the feete of them whiche bring tidings of peace, & bring tidings of good things. But al do not obey the Gospell. For Esay sayeth also: Lord who hath beléeued our sayings? Ergo, fayth commeth by hearing, and hearing by the word of Christ. This is there. Whereby it is manifest, that the Minister of God, by whome we must atteine to ỳ faith in Christe, doth bring with him ỳ word, and that Christs word: that is to say the Gospell of Christ, and that faith in Christ is gotten by the hearing thereof. With thys agreeth that saying of Paule: It pleased God by foolishnesse of preachyng to saue the beléeuers. Wherefore Christe also when he sente hys Apostles into the worlde to be the ministers of this Gospell, sayd: Goe into all the worlde, and preach the Gospell vnto all creatures: whosoeuer shall beléeue and be baptised, shall be saued.

Esaie.53.

1.Corin.1.

Marc.16.

So that there dothe concurre in this worke of God, first the grace of God, next the word, thirdlye the minister to preach and teach it, fourthly the hearing of the word, and fiftly the working of God in the myndes and heartes of the hearer. And a most manifest example of this matter was declared in the woman that solde purple, vnto whome the Gospell of Saluation was sent through the grace of God, by the preachyng of the Apostle Paule. The woman heard ỳ same with hir bodily eares, VVhat things doe concurre herein.

Act.16.

but God opened hir heart to marke it, and to beleeue it.

It skilleth muche vvhat is preached.

The preaching therefore of the word of Christ is necessary. Wherefore they do exceedingly naught, whiche doe eyther withdraw it from the Churches, and withall do masse and bellowe it in a straunge language in the Church, and doe set out to the rude and vnlearned people, deasse & domme Images, eyther do preache any other matter than is commaunded by the Lord. It is a great poynt what the preaching be. For according to the qualitie of the doctrine, is gotten the qualitie of faithe. If Christ be preached, there is bredde fayth in Christ: if it be the prayses of Sainctes, what should there else bée bredde but the faith, inuocation, and worshippe of Sainctes? They that doe preache Mahomet, doe serue the fayth of Mahomet: they that doe extoll the merites of oure workes, doe put their truste in them. And they do most greeuously offend, whiche do despise the ministerye of the worde and the reading of holy Scriptures, as the voyce of man, and as the dead letter, obiecting the saying of Christ against the cõmandement of Christ: All whyche be taughte from God: of whiche matter I wke in my Commentaries vppon John the fyrth Chapter.

VVhether faith be giuen vvithout measure.

Consequentlye we muste consyder that also, that all and singulare the giftes of God, as well corporall as spirituall, whether they bée gyuen immediately from hym or by some meane, are bestowed with a certaine measure. No man hath al poynts giuen vnto him: there is granted vnto no man suche a perfection of anye gift, that eyther he himselfe, eyther a nother can not be made more perfect in the same. Whosoeuer is wise, is so wise in measure, that he may yet be made more wiser. Of that sort be all the giftes of God which be granted to men, and of that sort is the gift of faithe also. This Apostle witnesseth, saying: As God hath deuided the measure of Faithe to euery one. In which pointe these things are to be obserued.

Rom.12.

Firste, that all men haue not one like measure of Faith. There is one selfesame fayth for al, as the Apostle sayth, but it is not so for the measure of faith: but vnto some there is giuen a greater, and to some a lesser measure. Wherefore the faithfull be not all alyke, neyther in those thynges whyche doe growe vppon faith, and doe followe to the same, as in knowledge, in loue and feare of God, in hope, loue of the neygbour, patience, and study of godly life. Yea, ther was also in the Apostles not all alyke measure of faith.

Secondlye, that the measure of fayth is so deuided by the prouidence of God, that there is none of the electe that hath lesse gyuen vnto hym, than maye suffice to hys saluation. The measure of faith hath this in it, that euery man hath a sufficient portion of it. He that hath receyued a greater, hath neuer a whit the greater saluation: nor hée that receyued the lesse, hathe neuer a whit the lesse saluation. So that it is true also in this respect, that which is written in Exodus: He that gathered more, had neuer a whitte the more: and hée that gathered lesse, had neuer a whit the lesse.

But

But as touching that, that there is a greater measure of faith gyuen to some thã to others, it is not without the speciall counsell of Goddes prouidence, whiche doth so moderate those thinges, that there falleth a greater share of faith to them which must abide the more sharp stormes. He appoynteth some to be an example vnto others, and he doth set forth in them certaine, as it were, retracts or patternes of his glory and vertue. Such were Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Moises, Samuel, Dauid, ỹ prophets, Apostles, and Martirs, & therfore he gaue thẽ a larger measure of faithe, not that they shoulde purchase more saluation by the same, but that they should specially serue to aduance his glory, and be as guides to the weaker. Like as in mans body the bones haue more strength than the flesshe, not bycause that therefore there is euer a whit the more life in them, but bycause they shoulde carrie the weake flesh, and yet for all that touchyng the very lyfe of the bodye, the flesshe hathe neuer a whit the more than the least bones, but they haue all as muche strength as dothe suffise for the felowshippe of lyfe. For there is no one member in the bodye so weake (if it haue the spirite of life) but that it is as true and as lyuely a member of the body, as they that be better and greater: and they be better, not bycause they bée members more than the other lesse, but bicause they doe better seruice to the bodye than they do. In thys wise the prouidẽce of God doth wisely and faithfully imparte or giue vnto euerye member in the body of Christe, that is in the Churche of the electe, a certayne measure of faith, to euerye one as much as is sufficient vnto saluation: and to certayne principall persons, as much as their ministeries or afflictions dothe seuerallye require.

VI. Vnto vvhome faithe is giuen from God.

Some of Gods giftes be giuen to al men, and some not.

For asmuch as faith is the gyfte of God, let vs see next to whome it is giuen. For the giftes of God be so disseuered, that euery mã hath not all them togithe. But some are giuẽ vnto some, and some to others. Some be indifferentlye gyuen vnto all, as those things be whiche are requisite of necessitie for the conseruation of this life, and are bestowed indifferently without respect, to the good and to the euill. Among whiche Christe dothe put the Sunne and the rayne, saying: Whiche bringeth forthe hys Sunne vpon the good and the euill, and raineth vpon the iust and the vniust. But some things are giuen not vnto all: but vnto some certain only, as riches, honours, wisedome, foresighte, strength, and power, but good successe and fortune in gouernance, length of life, and other such like. Of this kinde be also the heauenly and spirituall giftes, which be necessarye vnto true and euerlasting felicitie: such as faith, hope, charitie, patience, ỹ feare of the Lord, the study of true godlynesse, and as such like are.

Matth.5.

So that this wayes, the faythe whereof we doe speake, is not gyuen vnto all men. And therefore it is that the Apostle sayth, For all men haue not faith. And, All doe not obey the Gospell. To obey the Gospell is nothing else, but to assente vnto it with true faith, and to repose vs in it with a good and assured trust. Lette this therefore be the first consideration of this place, that the true fayth of Christ is not in all men: that is to say, it is none of those comm̄o giftes of God, which are commonly and indifferently giuen vnto all folkes: but it is one of the special thyngs, which are giuen vnto some few, by the prouidence of God.

Faith is not to all men. 2. Thessal. 3. Roman. 10.

Faith is not giuen in respect of our qualitie, merite, or dignitie.

Secondlye, faith is such a gifte of God, that it is not giuen to anyman, nother in respect of our qualitie nor merite, nor worthynesse. For if it were so bestowed, it should be gyuen to the greater, and withdrawen from the baser sort, and so the noble, greate, rych, wyse, and prudent men, shoulde bee founde faithfull in thys worlde: and the refuse, I meane the poore and the base sorte, shoulde bee founde vnfaithfull and vnbeleeuyng. But seeing that the contrary is tryed to be true, as the Apostle dothe testifye and Christ himselfe, it is manifest, that God dothe not giue faythe after the acceptatiō of persons, qualities, or dignities of men, nor yet it is not giuen for the merites of oure iustice. For so it shoulde be giuen to the iust and godly onely, and restreyned from the sinners and wicked: whereas for all that Christ himselfe sayth, that he came into this worlde not for the iust, but for the sinners. And the Apostle dothe testifye of God, that he doth iustifie the wicked and sinfull. Wherefore it appeareth that it is neyther restreyned for that wickednesse gone before, nor is yet giuen for the merites past before. For whome can you shewe me of all mankind so iust before the heauenly grace, that he shoulde bee esteemed worthy of this gifte of God, seeyng that all be sinners, and doe lacke of the glory of God?

1. Cor. 1. Matth. 11.

Matth. Rom.

Therefore, seeing that faith is not giuen for any respect of worthinesse or merite, and is not giuen to all men but vnto some onely, it appeareth ẏ the giuing of it doth depend vpon the free choice of Gods will, so that God hath mercie vpon whom he willeth, and doth harden them whom he willeth, as the Apostle disputeth to the Romaines. Wherefore we doe determine ẏ this grace is giuē to the elect onely, whome God hathe chosen in Christe Iesus before the beginning of the worlde, vnto that purpose, that ẏ glory of his grace may be aduanced in thē. Therefore it is that ẏ Apostle doth cal this faith, the faith of Gods elect. And Luke saith in ẏ Actes: And there beleeued as many as were ordeined vnto life. Of the free choice of God Christ speaketh when he sayth: All that my father doth giue me, shal come to me. And, He that is of God, doth heare the worde of God. Therefore ye haue not heard it, bycause you be not of God. So the Apostle sayth, that the choise, that is to say, the chosen of Israell, obteyned that whyche Israell obteyned not.

Rom. 3. The gift of faith depe deth of the election of God. Rom. 9. Ephes. 1. Tit. 1. Act. 13. Iohn. 6. Iohn. 8. Rom. 11. The pub like pre ching of the gift is not a reiecti Matth. 1

Here vppon men maye not praie, why it should be necessary to preach the Gospell of Christe, the worde of faith, openly before all men, seeyng that faith is not for all menne, but for the elect onely? For as long as we doe continue in this life, the good be mingled wyth the euill, and the electe bee not sequestred from the wicked vntil the daye of iudgement, the the knowledge of which is reserued not to the ministers of the worde, but vnto God hymselfe, the chooser of them. Besydes that, this is not the onely ende of the preaching of the Gospell, that the elect may be saued, but that the vnfaithfull maye haue no excuse, as Christe himselfe sayeth also: If I had not come and had spoken, they shoulde haue had no sinne, but now they haue no excuse. Another thing is the appoyntment of the Lord, when the Apostles were charged to preache the Gospell vnto all creatures throughout all the whole worlde. And the example it selfe of the Prophetes, Christ and the Apostles dothe defende the publike preaching of the Gospell. For they dyd also without respecte and openly cast abroade the worde of faith and of saluation into the eares of all men, of whome for all that it may not be reported that they did vnaduisedly in hurling of precious stones of Gods grace before swine.

2. Cor. 13.

None m be iudge to be re probate rashly.

Thus muche by the way haue we spoken of this poynte, that faithe in Christ is none of the common giftes of God nor of all, but of the elect onely. Whereby we doe gather, that the same may be a most infallible token vnto vs of our election, as the stubborne vnbeliefe is the token that mē be refused and cast off. The iudgement of chosing and reiecting, are of themselues vnsearcheable, nor the electe can be knowen from the reprobate by any way, but by this faythe, euen as a good tree is knowen by the frute. Wherefore we nede not to bee to busy and curious in reasoning of our chosing and our refusing. Let vs rather trie our selues as Paule doth admonish vs, whether that we be in faith, and Christ in vs or no: or whether we be of the number of the reprobate men or no. The spirite of faith is like fyre in the heartes of the elect, and can not be so hidden, but it will be perceyued. Faithe dothe witnesse of vs what we be, eyther electe or reprobate. But yet for all that we must beware that we be not ouer-rash in iudgement. For he is not straight way one of the castawayes or reprobate which beleeueth not at the present. He that beleeueth not to day, shall beleeue peraduenture then when it is least loked for. The tyme of mens calling is in Goddes hande, whych doth call his elect, some in the morning, some at noonetide, and some at the euening. Yea Paule was one of the elect, albeit that he was called late to the faith, and after the rest of the Apostles.

VII. When Faith is giuen by God.

To vvhom this consi deration i profitable

THis poynte also is not vnprofitable to be considered, specially by them that are enioyned by the Lord to be ministers in his Church, and do minister to the elect towarde the receyuing of faith. They must thinke that forasmuch as this fayth is the gift of God, (as it appeared by that is gone before) so it doth depend nother vpon the merites nor strength of man, that it must nedes followe, that the time of it when it is gyuen, is not in mans arbitrement, but set in the prouidence of God only: who lyke as he hathe chosen whome hee would, so he dothe call them that bee chosen to faithe, by the ministery of the ministery of the worde, what time soeuer it pleaseth him. Therefore it is that the Apostle speaketh in thys wise of his calling: And what tyme it pleased him, who did set me apart from my mothers wombe, and called me by his grace, &c. he coulde not haue more certaynely spoken of the time of his calling vnto faith, thā to appoynt it to the pleasure of God.

Galat.1.

The tyme vvhē faithe is gyuen, is tyed to no age nor no qualitie of life.

And this pleasure of Goddes appoyntment in calling of his elect vnto faithe, is not tyed to anye age or qualitie of life. Some one is called in tender yeares, some other in hys lusky yeares, an other at mans estate, some in their age, some at ẏ last cast of their life. As long as the time of this presente life doth last, so long lasteth the tyme of the heauenlye calling: euen like as it is in the sommer season, some trées are fruiteful naturally in the beginning of sommer, some a little after, some in the middest, some after the middest, yea and some do beare their fruite at the very latter ende. And the trée is counted to be neuer a whit ẏ lesse fruitefull that beareth at the last, than the same whiche beareth in the begynning of the yeare. But the same is vnfruitefull, whiche dothe beare no fruite at al, nother in the beginning, nother in the middest, nor yet at the end of the sommer nother. For when that sommer is once past, there is no hope that ẏ trée which hathe bin barren all that whiles, can beare fruite at winter: bycause that God hathe so appointed that they should beare not in winter but in the sommer season. Likewise he that cōmeth vnto faithe at the last cast of his life, must be déemed no lesse faithfull, than he which began to beléue in his youth. The history of the thefe is knowen, who had the gifte of faith euen when hée hong ready to dye vppon the Crosse. But he that is neuer made faythfull at all in thys lyfe, there is no hope of him that he can come vnto faythe in the winter time, which shall followe the sommer of this oure life. For by the death of our body we be drawen thither, where there is no place for fayth, which is both giuen and determined also with this life.

A similitude.

The calling of Mathew Matth.9.

Agayne, some one is called in the very middest of ẏ race of sinne, some other when he is all in the studye and zeale of God, an other in affliction and tribulation: some other whē he doth withstand the truth and persecuteth the faithfull, some other in the verye middest of thys worldlye matters. Mathew the Apostle and Euangelist sate at receite of Custome house when he was called, as he hymselfe doth witnesse, which kind of life was at that time and amōg that people of that sort, that the toll takers, whyche they do call Publicans, were reckened for sinners. And the same sinners were such also, with whome Christe our sauiour did eate & drinke, whereat the Iusticiaries were offended. The examples of these do sufficiently instruct vs, that sometimes they be called vnto faith in the very middest of their race of sinning, whome God hathe chosen for him vnto lyfe. Secondlye Symeon and Anna the widdow, and Ioseph of Aremathia, the Eunuche of Quéne Candace, Cornelius, and Lidda the purple seller, with other moe, were called in their earnest affection and zeale of God. They were called in afflictions and troubles, whome Christe healed when they were euil handled and in miserable case, whose wretchednesse was the cause that they made so muche hast to the Sauioure. Paule was called in the verye race of hys persecution, when he hadde receyued his letters to goe to Damascus, to persecute the faithfull. The fishers, Peter, James and John, were called when they were busie and occupyed in the affaires to get their liuing, &c. yea and the shépeheardes also that fed their flocke in Bethleem fieldes, at the time of Christes birth. When we way these matters, we doe easily perceiue, howe little cause we haue to despaire of any age or of any kind of life: nor the time of the heauenlye calling, muste not bée so tyed in all poyntes to the occasion of the Preaching of the Gospell, as though hée should neuer receyue of God ẏ gyfte of faith, whiche doth not beléue immediately at the first light of ẏ Gospell: as though they could not come vnto faith, which are entangled in a kind of life that is sinful, or that doth withstand the truth, and do persecute the faithfull. There is no kinde of sinne so enormious, that can hynder this grace of heauenlye calling, vnlesse it be the pride and hipocrisie of Scribes and Pharisies. To whome our sauiour saide: How can you beleue which do séeke glory one of another: For God resisteth the proude, & doth detest hipocrites, specially them whiche do cloke their malice by the countenaunce of godlynesse. A man can hardly hope of this kind of men, that they can bée conuerted to the fayth of Christ.

Before that we doe procéede to

Of the faith of Infants.

We must paint of age, nor kynde of life.

Epist.23.ad quæstionem Bonifacij.

In Ioan. tract.80.

that which followeth, I suppose it to be conuenient briefely to admonithe the vnlearned reader of the opinion of them, whiche doe dispute of the faithe of the infantes, supposing that there is faithe giuen to them from God, to some, whiles they be a Christening, to some before they be Christened, to some whiles that they bée yet in their mothers wombe. In my opinion they doe take that worde of faithe for the secrete working of the holy spirite, when he worketh in the electe according to the frée will of God, by ẏ preuenting grace: Wherof I can not iudge. He dothe poure into them a certayne séede of faythe, which is denyed to ẏ reprobate. But when we doe speake of faith, we doe disseuer it from this secrete séede, and we doe defyne what it is, and whereof it commeth, according to the scriptures: which definitiōs no doubt can take no place in the infants newe borne, vntil that they may be able by age to receiue this faith. Thus much Augustine also did acknowlege, who writeth this: In déede albeit ẏ fayth whiche doth consist in the will of the beleuers, do not make the child faithfull, yet the sacrament of that faythe doth make him faithfull. For as it is answered, that he dothe beléue, so he is called also faithfull, not by consenting in minde to the matter it selfe, but by receyuing the Sacramente of the very same matter and effect. And in another place he sayeth: Thys worde of Fayth is of so greate strengthe in the Churche of Christe, that it dothe cleanse the the Infante by hym that dothe beléue, offer, blesse, and washe hym neuer so lyttle, although hée be not yet able to beléeue in heart to righteousnesse, and to confesse in mouth vnto saluation. Thus sayeth he.

VIII. Of the nourishments of Faythe.

It is not ynough to haue it, vnlesse it be nourished vvhen vve haue it.

NO doubte, it is a singular gyfte to haue faithe, but it is not ynough for a man to haue it, vnlesse that after he hath gotten it, it be continually conserued, encreased, and practised throughout al our life. For Faith is of the same nature that the vertues be, which be naturally poured into vs, and be necessary for the conseruation of this present life: whiche it is not sufficient to haue receyued them, vnlesse they be also furdered and amplifyed, and encreased: as (for example) the power of reason, which we receyued at the first birth of our flesh, whiche must alwayes be nourished, aduanced, and exercised to the necessarye vses of our life. So this Christian faith, whiche is as it were a certayne reason of our second birthe, and newe man, must be fedde and furdered like an infante to the spirituall life.

And whereas we do first treate of the nourishmente and encrease of faith, before that we do speake of the efficacie and working of it, it is not for that that faith giuen by God hath no efficacie vnlesse it be firste fedde & broughte vnto his perfect growth, whereas indéede these matters do so come together, that it dothe immediately exercise his power and efficacy, according to the present proporti-on of it, and yet it is necessary withall to be fedde and encreased, euen as that strēgth of life in the newe borne childe is both fedde and doth worke both together: but we doe therefore entreate of the féeding and encrease of fayth firste, to keepe a certayne order in our writing, and to eschewe the confusion of the things that we haue to entreate of.

From whence the nourishment of fayth cometh.

Nowe the nourishment of faythe commeth principally from God, frō whence faith it selfe commeth. Wherefore that he doe féede & further those things that he hathe giuen, they can not well continue, nor come to their perfect vse. For they be not so mad, that they haue no néede of the preseruation and furtherance of their maker, nor he is not such a workeman, that he doth neglect and leaue vnholpen that which he hath once made: but he doth also conserue and furder by his holye spirite those things that he hath made. Therevpon came that saying of Dauid: By the Lordes word, the heauens are stayed, and al the power of thē by the spirite of hys mouth. And our sauioure sayth: My father worketh yet hitherto. It is the part of a natural father, to nourish & set forth the child whiche he hath begottē. Wherefore we must not doubt but that God is so faithfull, that lyke as he giueth faythe vnto hys electe, so hee dothe farther féede and conserue the same also in them. And thys maye not bée taken for anye wonder, séeyng that hée dothe the lyke in euerye kynde of féede of thynges of the earth that doth spring vp and bears fruite, wherein hée dothe worke not only in the breeding of it, but in the furderyng of it also to perfecte growth. Let vs therefore praye vnto hym, that hée wyll nourish rishe the fayth in vs, whiche he himselfe hath giuen into our hearts. And let vs say with the Prophet: O God, confirme the same whiche thou hast wrought in vs: and with the Apostles: Lorde increase our fayth: and with the father of the lunatike child: I do beléeue Lorde, succour my lacke of beliefe.

The vse of praying & of singyng.

Moreouer, as this fayth commeth of God, & yet is applied by the meane of the worde of grace, so those things whiche do féede and increase it, doe come also of God, but yet they be purchased by certaine meanes, of the whiche the chiefe and firste is the worde of grace it selfe, from whence the fayth springeth, so that the faithfull inwarde, and newe man whiche is borne by the worde of Christe, is likewise nourished also by the same worde that he was borne by, lyke as the infant is nourished and increased by the same bloud that he was borne of turned into milke. So the Apostle doth aduise the faythfull saying: Let the worde of Christe dwell in you plentifully. For the féeding of the Lordes flocke is therin commended to the shepeheardes, whiche is then conuenient & profitable for Christes shéepe, when those things be set forth vnto them, whiche be taken out of Christes worde, from whence they are borne. Luke therefore how cruell and vnnaturall a matter it is, vpō no cause to deny or put of, or to corrupt by minglyng, or to giue ỹ childe newe borne naughty milke in stéede of the mothers milke, whiche is the naturall fode of it. By the whiche euill fode, or lacke of fode, the childe eyther should not enioy, or decay, and die of consumption: so cruell a matter it is, yea more haynous a greate deale, to take away or corrupte the worde of the grace of Christe, from the Lordes flocke, & to mingle withall the imaginations of men, whereby the new man may cōsume away, not increase but dye, and not be preserued and furthered in true life.

Secondly, we must ioyne with the worde of fayth and grace, the vse of praying and singyng. In déede there is no néede that the Lorde should be informed by our wordes what wée haue néede of: nor he is not so hard, but that he will gyue, though he bée not entreated by wordes: but yet it is profitable for vs so to aske those things whiche be necessary for vs at his hande, and in praying to practise and féede our faith. But of that matter we haue noted somewhat in our Commentaries vpon Matthew the fyfte chapiter. As touchyng the vse of Psalmes, wée may say with Tertullian: Of a suertie, we do féede our fayth with the holy noyses & songes. And of this matter sée in the Preface of our Commentaries vppon the Psalmes.

Apolog. cap. 39.

The vse of the Eucharistia.

And the vse of the Sacrament of thankes giuyng, of the Supper and remembraunce of the Lordes death, serue to the same purpose, the signe whereof is set forth vnto vs aright, vnder bread and wine, that is to say, meate and drinke: for when we doe participate of the bread, and of the cup of the Lord, and do celebrate the remembraunce of him, and offer the Sacrifice of prayse, we do practise & féede our fayth in Christe by this holy vse of the misteries, so that increasing therein more and more we may be strēgthned against all the deuises and slightes of Satan. And for this cause the faithful ministers and Pastors of Christes churche, ought to sette forth the wordes of the Lordes institution, the exhortation, the exposition of the mysterie, the prayer and the gyuing of thankes openly, and in a tongue that may be well understanded, by the hearyng thereof, the fayth may be feede in the hartes of the godly. So that lyke as Baptisme is the token of our regeneration and new byrth, so the mystery of thankes gyuing, dothe serue for the vse of feedyng and nourishing of the new man.

IX. Of the Increases of Fayth.

After the consideratiō of the nourishments of fayth, we will next in order see of the increase and growings of it. I graunt the matter is large, but we will accordyng vnto our final habilitie loke not the largenesse and deepenesse of it, but to the outwarde and superficiall parte of it onely. And the increase of Fayth is of two sortes. The one is, when the number of the faythfull dothe growe and multiply eyther in some church, eyther abroade in the worlde: in whiche sorte the Apostle sayde, that the worde of the truthe of the Gospel did growe and bare fruyte in all the worlde, in his tyme. And this kinde of increase is in deede very wonderfull, if you loke vppon them whiche then were and nowe be also the myniſters of it, and of howe small beginnyngs it rose and sprong vp. Wherevnto the same is to bee applyed whiche Christe spake of the increases of the kingdome of God, vnder the parable of the grayne of Mustarde seede and of Corne. The power or strength of this increase is decayed a good whyle agone: and the same saying of the Apostle is begonne to bee fulfilled, vnlesse there come a departyng firſt, &c. And yet we shall see at the ende of the worlde, and maruell at that infinite multitude of the faithfull of Christ, whervnto the fayth is growen euē in this naughty worlde.

The other increase of fayth is, when it groweth and increaseth in the hartes of the faythfull. The same hath also his wayes to increase, whereby it wareth stronger dayly by the grace of God: firſte that wee be able nowe to beleeue those things whiche before wee coulde not beleue, although they were neuer so true, and sette forth in Gods worde. Secondly that we may more certainly & firmely beleeue those things whiche wee did before gyue but slender credite vnto. So they saide in the Gospell of John: Nowe we do not beleeue bycause of thy wordes, but we haue hearde our selues, and wee doe know that this is verily the Sauiour of the worlde. The faith of the Thessalonians increased bothe wayes. And this sorte of increase of fayth doth depende vpon the increase of the knowledge of Christe, so that the faythfull be not for naught admonished of Peter, that they shoulde increase in the grace and knowledge of oure Lorde and Sauiour Iesu Christe.

But yet we muste beware, leaſte the same whiche is thought to be the increase of Fayth, be a daungerous arro-

The increase of fayth is of two kinds.

Coloſſ. 1.

Act. 6. & 11.

Marth. 13.

1. Thes. 3.

2. Thes. 1.

2. Pet. 3.

rogancie and pryde. For if fayth doe increase without charitie, suche as they: fayth was to whome Paule sayde: Hyke thou fayth? haue it to thy selfe before God: and doeſt thou stand by faith? be not to highly wise, but feare, it is no sounde increase, but a swelling and a daungerous puffing vp in pryde.

Whereby the Increase of Faith is knovven.

It is the duetie of the Pastor to loke vnto the Lordes sheepe, and to knowe the increase of them, that hee may know howe to dispence the meates of heauenly foode vnto them: and if any rotte or disease come amongſt them, howe to helpe them in tyme. The increase of faith may bee perceyued and marked: firſt in their mutuall loue towarde theyr brethren: secondely, in theyr patience and sufferyng of troubles. So the Apoſtle meante when he sayde: Forasmuche as your fayth increaseth: he addeth, and the charitie of euery of you, one towardes the other, so that wee our selues do glory of you in the Churches of GOD, for your patience and Fayth, in all your persecutions and trybulations whiche you doe suffer. On the other side, staggeryng and carefull feare dothe argue a weakeneſſe of fayth. So it was sayde to Peter: Why doubteſt thou of little Fayth? And they whiche doe starte backe in the tyme of temptation, are tryed to be weake in fayth. So the fayth of Peter was weake, and when he was proued by the maydens worde, and denied his maiſter.

What is the ende and measure of grovving in Fayth.

The increase of fayth be agreable to the measure of it.

Saye fayth, There is a meane in all things, and euery thyng hath his ende, and whatsoeuer is more or leſſe, is out of square. We muſt seeke therfore where that there be any certaine meane heard in this matter of the increase of fayth, and what the same is wherin the fulneſſe and perfection of fayth doth conſiſte. Firſte we muſt be out of doubte that there is some measure of faith whiche is giuen of God. Secondly, that al men haue it not alike: Thirdly, that there is gyuen to euery electe person as much faith, as the poynt of his saluation dothe requyre. But I spake of this matter also before in the fifte article. And seing that herein there is no doubte, it remayneth that the increases of fayth be of such sorte, that they doe agree with the measure of the same. For it is necessary, that faith doe take as muche increase, in euery elect, as is requyred to the attaynement of the measure thereof appoynted frō God. An eare of corne of three squares, muſte not haue so muche increase, conſidering the proportion thereof when it shal come to ripeneſſe, as the eare that is of fiue squares. And like as in euery mans body, it is necessary there be increases of the body, according to the measure and quantitie of euery one, vntil it come to the perfect measure, so it fareth with the case of fayth for the bryngyng of it vnto a iuſte measure, sauing that the increase thereof can not be made vp in any certaine number of yeares as the body may, but

needeth

nedeth to haue continuall increase as long as we do liue in the flesh. No man euer increased so farre forth in fayth in this lyfe, but if he should yet liue longer, he mighte still increase therein more and more. Therefore it is that the Apostle when he was at Rome in pryson, and had preached Christ many yeares, wrote vnto the Philippias, saying: Philip.3. Not that I haue now receyued, or am nowe perfecte, but I do follow on, to see whether I can any wise obtayne. Brethren, I thinke that I haue not obtayned.

A Questiō. The question is therefore in this place: Seing that there is gyuen to all the elect a measure of fayth from the Lorde, and that the same is not all one in all men, and yet sufficient for euery one vnto saluation, and is not suche that it is perfected in any certayne space of yeares, but that we muste endeuour and trauayle towardes it as long as we be in this lyfe: what consideratiō may be made thereof, suche as is méete for euery one and common vnto all?

The Answere. Lyb.f.4. What is the increase of fayth conuenient for euery one and cōmon for all. The Apostle doth assoile this question where he sayth, That the ministery of the worde is giuen to the elect by Christe, to this purpose that we shoulde all come to the vnitie of fayth and knowledge of Christe, and that we should increase therin to the measure of the age of the fulnesse of Christe, and that we shoulde be no longer chyldren, to be wauering and caryed aboute with euery blaste of doctrine, &c. Whereby it appeareth, how farre forth we shoulde all and each of vs increase in the fayth of Christe. For he dothe appoynt vnto vs mans age, whiche shoulde be so stayed with the practise of matters, and the steadinesse of our sences, that we should not be easily circumuented with vaine and trifling persuasions, made by the crafte of cuill men, as it chanceth sometimes to children. And bycause he would declare also, wherin the perfection of this mans age should consist, that is, least he should séeme to speake eyther of the body, or vnderstanding of man, he doth adde, of the fulnesse of Christ. And the fulnesse of Christe is vsed in this place accordyng vnto the image of his bodily age, wherein he passed ouer his dispensement in the flesh, and is to be considered in two wayes. The first is, that whereunto Christ dothe so increase in the hart of euery faithfull, that he is no longer in them a childe as he was among the Corinthians: but a full and perfecte man. The other is the same, whereby the same Christe taking to him, at the latter day, all his members of whom he is the head, is made in a manner full and perfect.

We muste therfore increase in the fayth of Christe vnto the measure of his age, whiche was of mans state, so that he may also waye greate in vs, and that we may euery man according to his measure, obtaine a ful perfection, soūdnesse and steadinesse of fayth in his body, with the reste of his members as members also our selues. And how necessary it is that in these latter times, we should fede our fayth dayly with a continuall & conuenient kinde of nourishmēt, and pricke vnto his manly strength, the reason whiche the Apostle addeth, doth sufficiently admonishe vs, when he saith: Least we do wauer and be caried aboute, with euery blaste of doctrine, doctrine, by the crafte and subtletie of men, wherewith they do assayle vs, to deceyue vs withall. For if euer this admonition did serue, it ought to serue at these latter tymes. Lette vs therefore stryre vp one another, that we may the more diligently sal to this heauenly foode, to comfort our fayth withall, the more that our necessitie requireth so to do. The foode of Gods worde is ready, and Christe the feast maker and shepehearde is not out of the way. So that we will dayly desire fully with delight and holy entent to vse ý same foode. Surely the bread of Christe is fatty, méete to fat vp the mindes of the faythfull, if not lothsomnesse do lette vs, and make vs to say with the carnall Israelites: Our soule doth loathe vpon this light meate.

Of the Efficacie of Faith.

This place of all others is moste large, and withall most necessary and worthy to be with al diligēce considered & wayed by all the faithful folkes. For all ý which we haue hitherto noted of fayth, is nothing. For what is that fayth which is vneffectuall, but a certayne vayne opinion, whereby no man can be saued: and like a lumpe of heauy matter cōbyng the stomacke, whiche can not nourrish nor come to disgestion. The profitableste way to know any thing is, to know the strength and vse of it. If a man do know what fire is, how and what way it is gotten, and how it should be mayntayned, and withall know not the strength and vse of it, nor séeke to know it, doth he not lack the knowledge of fyre which is most principall & most necessary to know? Euen so is it with faith. Wherefore seyng that some vnskilfull folkes do iudge, that we be ouer earnest in so wayghty a matter, yea and some other thinke, that in our continuall commendyng of fayth we do of purpose dryue out the matter in length with our aduersaries, it were expedient to take diligent hēde in the cōsideration of this place.

Hovv Efficacie is attributed vnto Fayth.

Galat.5. Hovv efficacie is attributed vnto fayth. The Apostle did attribute efficacie vnto fayth, when he sayth. For in Christe Iesu, nother circumcision is any thing worthe, nor vncircumcision, but fayth whiche is of efficacie and able to worke by loue. Here is efficacie attributed vnto it, not for that that it dothe worke any thing of it selfe, whereas all things are wrought by the grace of Gods worckyng, but for bycause that God doth worke in vs, partely for it, and partely by it. So Christe saith: Be of good comforte daughter, thy fayth hath made thée safe, whereas for all that, the vertue whiche wente out of him, gaue health to the woman, as he sayde himselfe: Some body hath touched mée, for I knowe there is some vertue passed from mée. And we reade in an other place: There wente out a vertue from him, and healed all men. Philip.2. Matth.9. Luce.8.

The Partes of this Efficacie.

This Efficacy of faith hath some partes, into whiche we may diuide it to make the matter the more orderly, whereof these shall serue for this present. Firste it dothe produce some thing: secondly it doth take hold of some thing: thyrdly it doth worke some thing: whiche we will consider one after another.

Fayth bredeth Repentaunce.

1 Firste of all, as sone as fayth is conceyued by the gift of God, it produceth and bringeth forth, as hyr daughter true repentaunce: and that so sone that it semeth to bryng it with hyr from heauen, as hir waytyng mayde, whereof there be examples in euery place in the Scriptures. Zacheus as sone as he was come to the fayth of Chriſte, sayde: Lo, Lorde I doe gyue the halfe of my goodes to the poore: and in case I haue beguiled any bodie, I doe restore foure tymes as muche, whiche wordes declared the iudgemente of true Repentaunce. And when a greate sorte beganne to beléeue at the saying of Peter, they had a remorse in theyr hartes, and brast out, saying: What shall we do brethren. And, Many of them that beganne to beléeue, came to the Apostles, and disclosed their doings, moued no doubt, by the Spirite of repentaunce. And againe, Many that had folowed curious matters, burnte their bookes of their curious artes in the sight of all men: whiche drewe to the value of fifty thousande pence. It appeareth by these exãples, that fauth doth immediatly bring forth of it true repẽtance, as appeared in the Niniuites. And the Niniuites (sayth he) beléeued in the Lorde, and commaunded fastyng. Therefore Augustine doth attribute the beginnyng of the reformation of the harte vnto fayth. It is a cléere matter therefore, that fayth without repentaunce is no true fayth, lyke as the fyre without warmth, is no true fyre. But as for repentaunce what it is, and what partes it hath, we will declare in a place by it selfe.

Luc.19.

Act.2.

Act.19.

Iquas.3.

Augustin. de perfectione Iustitiæ.

2 I sayde, that fayth dothe take holde of certayne things: whereof lette vs sée for the seconde parte.

Faith doth take hold of reconciliation & iustification.

1 Firste, it dothe take holde of the grace of reconcilement and of Iustification. This the wrytings of the Apostles doth openly testifie. And the Apostle sayth: The rightuousnesse of God is by the fayth of Iesus Chriſte, vnto all and vpon all them that beléeue in him. Item, that he might be counted iuste, and the iustifier of him which beléeueth on Iesus Chriſte. And, Therfore being iustified by faith, we haue peace, &c. But of Iustificatiõ, we wil speake in a place alone. 2 Secondly, fayth doth take holde of the adoption of the children of God, wherof the Apostle speaketh thus: Who predestined vs to be adoptiue children by Iesu Chriſte, vnto him, according to the purpose of his will, to the prayse of the glory of his grace. Againe, When the fulnesse of time was come, God sent his Sonne made of a woman, made vnder law, to redéeme them whiche were vnder the lawe, that we should receyue the adoptiõ of children. And that this incomparable grace of adoption is apprehended by faith in Chriſte, by the singular gifte of God, it appeareth in the Gospell of Iohn, where he sayde: As many as receyued him, he gaue them power to be the children of God, them that beléeued in hys name, &c. And how worthy a matter it is to become the chylde of God, and spirite God.

Adopt.

Ephes.1.

Gal.4.

Ioan.1.

and how greate a felicitie it is to become the heyre of God: what harte can comprysse, and what tongue is able to expresse it? If wée be the children sayth the Apostle to the Romanes, we be heyres also: the heyres of God, and fellowe heyres with Chriſte. And therevpon he gathereth, that the troubles of this present time, bée not able to counteruayle the glory that is to come, which shall be shewed in vs at the tyme appointed.

3 Thirdly, faith doth take hold also of the spirite of God, the spyrite of the children. So sayth the Apostle: For you haue not receyued the spirite of bondage againe in feare, but you haue receyued the spirite of adoption of Gods children, wherin we do crie, Abba Father. For the spirite it selfe beareth witnesse vnto our spirite, that we be the children of God. Againe: For as much as you be the children of God, God hath sente the spirite of his sonne into your hartes, crying, Abba father. And that this spirite is apprehended by fayth, it is knowen by that our Sauiour sayde: If any man thirste, let him come to me & drinke. He that beléeueth in me, as the Scripture sayth, there shall riuers of liuely water flowe out of his belly. This he spake of the spirite whiche they that beléeued in hym, should receyue. In whome (sayth he) you also, when you hearde the worde of truth, the Gospell of your saluatiõ, in which also when you beléeued, you were sealed vp with the holy spirite of promise, who is the pledge of the purchace of our inheritaunce vnto redemption, to the prayse of his glory. And, Whether haue you receiued the spirite by the workes of the law, or by the hearing of faith? It is manifest therefore, that this spirite of Chriſte is the spirite of the children of God, apprehended by fayth, & that he is the sealyng vp of the elect, and the pledge of our inheritaunce, in as much as he is the spirite of the chyldren and the heyres of God.

The true knowvlege of God.

4 Fourthly, Faith dothe take hold of the true knowledge of God, and of his Chriſt also, which the worlde here can not attayne vnto. The holy spirite doth kindle a light in the hartes of the faithfull, so that they may most certainely know that those things be moste true whiche they do beléeue in fayth. So Peter sayde: To whome shall we goe? thou hast the wordes of eternall life, and we haue beléeued & knowen that thou arte Chriſte the sonne of the liuing God. And Chriſt sayde vnto them whiche beléeued in him: If you abide in my worde, you be verily my Disciples, and you shal knowe the truthe. Whereof commeth that assurednesse of fayth, whereof we made mention before in the definition of it. So Iohn sayde: We know that we be the childrẽ of God. In Goddes cause and religion all things are blinde and doubtfull to mans reason, but vnto fayth they be certaine and cléere.

Ioan.6.

Ioan.8.

Everlasting lyfe.

5 Fyftly, our fayth in Chriſte dothe take holde of the euerlastyng lyfe, in whiche is hée true and moste perfecte felicitie. So our Sauiour himself sayth: That euery one which beléeueth in hym, may not perishe, but haue lyfe euerlastyng. Also hée that beléeueth in the Sonne, hath lyfe euerlastyng. Item: Verily verily I sage vnto you, Hée that

Ioan.3.

Ioan.5.

heareth

heareth my woꝛde, and beléeueth in him whiche sent me, hath life euerlastyng. And agayne: Foꝛ this is the will of my father whiche sente me, that euery man that seeth the sonne and beléeueth in him, should haue life euerlastyng. And in the same. Verily verily I say vnto you, he that beléeueth in me, hath life euerlastyng. And ỳ Euãgelist sayth: These things be wꝛitten, to the intent that you should beléeue that Iesus is Chꝛiste, the sonne of God, & that they whiche do beléeue, should haue lyfe in his name. Foꝛ so it hath pleased God, that by the folishnesse of pꝛeachyng, he would saue the beléeuers, and that the Gospell of Chꝛiste should be his powꝛe to saluation vnto euery beléeuer.

Ioan.6.

Ioan.20.

6 Sirdly, sayth dothe take holde of the giftes of God whithe we do requeste of him, the attaynement of the whiche, can not be hoped foꝛ, noꝛ trusted vpõ without sayth. Many places of the wꝛytings of the Gospell do testifie of this, as ỳ saying of Chꝛiste: Thy sayth hath made thée safe. And, Be it vnto thée, as thou hast beleued. Wherefoꝛe James sayth: Let hym aske in sayth, doubtyng nothing. And Chꝛiste sayth: Verily I say vnto you, what soeuer you requeste in your pꝛayers, beléeue that you shall obtayne it, and it shall befall vnto you.

The giftes of which we do aske of him.

Iacob.1.

Marc.11.

Thirdly, wée sayde that true sayth doth woꝛke certayne things. And we speake not here of a vayne sayth, vnsufficient & dead, whiche is not sayth, but an opinion, when we do apply our iustificatiõ vnto it, albeit our aduersaries doe lay this vnto our charge. Who is so fonde, that when he dothe attribute these conditions to a trée, whiche can not be but of a good trée, will apply the speach thereof vnto euery trée without difference? Lette vs sée therefoꝛe, what those things be whiche sayth doth woꝛke. And I mynde not to rehearse all, bycause it is not possible to do it, but those things onely, whiche we finde in Scriptures. They be of foure soꝛtes. Foꝛ some things it woꝛketh towards God, some things towards our neighbour, some things towarde the beléeuer himselfe, yea and some things agaynst Satan: whiche we will briefly runne ouer.

Faith dothe vvorke foure vvais

A Similitude.

1 Firste of all, sayth dothe woꝛke in the iustified people a peaceable, quiet, good, and contented conscience towardes God thꝛough Chꝛiste. So ỳ Apostle doth testifie, saying: Therefoꝛe beyng iustified by faith we haue peace towardes God, by our Lorde Iesus Chꝛist. We sayde before that sayth dothe apprehende the grace of reconcilement and iustification, purchased by the bloud of Chꝛiste: but here we muste marke, that the same sayth doth woꝛke a perseuerance also of this reconcilement in the harts of the faithful, so that theyr consciences may be quieted, & that they may be able to say boldly: Who is it that can not condemne? It is Chꝛiste that died, &c. Without this sayth it is not possible that we should haue a quiet conscience towards God. Our conscience may be made quiet foꝛ a season by the truste vnto mens traditions, but when the perseuerance of Gods iudgement, and the pꝛicke of sinne do rise in our hart, al that vaine truste is ouerblowen like a cloude.

Thꝛ... of ch... torm... God.

Rom.5.

2 Secondly, sayth woꝛketh loue towardes God and his Chꝛist. Foꝛ the perseperseuerance of the grace once receiued, and the spirite of the children of God, which we said is apprehended by faith, can not chose but woꝛk this loue in the harte of the beleuer. And that is the matter that Chꝛist doeth set foꝛthe vnder the parable of two debters, saying: When they had not wherewithall to paye, he foꝛgaue bothe. Which of them then loued him the moꝛe? And when Symon had answered: I suppose, he to whom he foꝛgaue the moꝛe. Thou hast iudged a righ: (saith he.) That the loue of the synfull woman came of faith, it is manifest by that that the Lord turned vnto hir, and sayd: Thy sayth hath made thée safe, go in peace. No doubt hir faith hath taken holde of the foꝛgiuenesse of hir sinnes, & had woꝛought the loue towards Chꝛist in hir harte.

3 Thirdlye, it woꝛketh al the hope of the glory of the children of God to come. So the Apostle doeth inert after the commendation of faythe speake of this Hope, saying: And we do reioyce in the hope of the glorie of the children of God. And therupon it is that we reade this in the definition of sayth, to the Ebꝛewes: Fayth is the substance of things which are to be hoped on. Whereby it is sufficientlye declared, that the hope of things to come is certayne and sure by faith. So Abꝛaham beleued vpon hope, contrarye vnto hope, that he might be the father of many natiõs. He beleued Gods pꝛomisse assuredly, and therfoꝛe he hoped that the same should befall vnto him, which he beleued, albeit it were contrary to the hope, that the course of nature could be able to compasse.

Fourthly, it woꝛketh a boldnesse and a sure confidence to come to God in Chꝛist. So he sayth in an other place: By whom we haue boldnesse & entrance with the confidence which is by the fayth of him. To this repayre, the Apostle doth counsell the beleuers, saying: Let vs repayre wi boldnesse to the thꝛone of grace, that we may obteyne mercye, &c. In exaumple hereof is set foꝛth vnto vs in the woman that had the bloudye flixe, who bicause she said in hir hart: If I do but only touch ỳ skirt of his garment, I shal be safe: being boldened with this faith, she repaired to the thꝛone of grace and obteyned hir recouery, &c. And with this confidence & truste, the faithfull do repaire to the thꝛone of grace, not only foꝛ theselfs, but foꝛ others also. So they did, which did let down the man that had the palsey, from the toppe of the house, whose faithe it is sayde, that Chꝛist sawe. They do stoppe & breake off this entrance, which do seke gaine in the church vnder pretence of godlinesse, and do make it a marchandise with fayned and counterfayte woꝛds. Faith must nedes woꝛke the inuocatiõ, adoꝛation, and woꝛship of him whome we doe beleue in. How shall they call vpon him (saith the Apostle) in whom they beleue not? And the blinde man which was made to sée, when he had sayd: Lord I do beleue, he woꝛshipped him immediatly in whome he beleued. Thereof it commeth, that they do call vpon, honoꝛ, and woꝛship Saincts, which do beleue in them.

The bold... nesse to come to God. Ephesi. Hebr. 4.

Math.9.

Mar. 1. Faith doth vvorke in... uocation and vvorship.

Rom.10.

Ioan.9.

The confession of the mouth.

Fiftly, it woꝛketh also the confession of the truth that is once beleued and knowen. So the Apostle doeth ioyne faith and confessing together, saying: For to beleeue with the hart, iustifieth, and to acknowledge with the mouth, maketh a man safe. Item, hauing (saith he) the selfe same spirit of fayth, as it is written: I beleued, wherefore I spake: And we doe beleeue, wherfore we do speake also.

Rom.10. 2. Cor.4.

Sirtly, fayth doth obeye God also when he calleth. So Abraham when he was called, did obeye in faith, to depart into the place which he should receyue for his inheritaunce, not knowing whether he went. And he offered his sonne when he was commanded. So the Apostle doth couple obedience with faith.

Obedience

Seuenthly, it worketh a continuance of dwelling with Christ, albeit that many do fal frō him. Therfore he sayd: To whom shall we go? thou hast the wordes of euerlasting life.

Hebr.11. Rom.1.

Perseuerance.

Ioan.6.

Eightly, at the poynt of deathe it doth commende the soule and spirite vnto the Lord. So the thiefe did vpō the Crosse: and Stephan. And this is the laste worke of faith towardes God. For after the yelding vp of the spirite once, there is no longer place nor vse of fayth.

The commendation of the spirite.

Matth.27. Act.7.

These be therefore the workes of faith towards God, a good cōscience, the loue of God, hope of thinges to come, a boldenesse to repayre to the throne of grace, inuocatiō, adoratiō, and worship, confession of the truthe, obedience, perseuerance, and the yelding vp of the spirit, to goe immediatly vnto God.

Secondly, faith doth also practise his efficacie towards the neighboys. First towardes the fellowes of the same fayth, and afterwards generally towardes all men. For as loue doeth not without consideration and respecte embrace all folkes a lyke, but in certayne degree, the clen and faithfull in one degree, & strangers in an other degree: so faith also which worketh by loue, doeth in this order practise his efficacie, that it doth regard the faithful before al other mē, albeit it desireth to doe good vnto all men. So the Apostle doth teach, saying: Whyles that we haue time, let vs worke good towards all men, but specially towards them which be of the family of faith. It worketh first towardes them an agreemente in Christ, and a linking of one with an other. And the same is of two sorts: the one is an inwarde concord, and ỹ other an outward. Of the inward is spoken in the Actes: Of the multitude of thē which beleued, their hart was one, and soule one. Of the outwarde is written: They that beleeued, kept themselfs together. Therof commeth the affection & linking together of the congregations of the church. And it is no maruel, for the faith in Christ maketh the faithfull to be the children of God, and so to be as brothers one to an other, yea and members in the body of Christ, vnder Christ their head. The history of the faithfull woman is knowen, which could not be restrayned by the threatnings of death, but ỹ she wold repaire to the church of the faithfull gathered together in the Lord, euen at the same very instant, when the Lieutenant of the Emperor Valens was about to send his men of warre to destroy them all.

Faith vvorketh towards our neighbour.

Secondlye, it worketh brotherly affection by Christ, wherby it is able to work. And that the same is the nature of charity, we may learne by the wordes of the Apostle: for the liuely experience of it, is bitterly decayed among vs. And we be well warned howe the members of the bodye of Christ ought to be affected one to an other. But generallye faythe doeth make a mans hart, gentle, kinde, curteous, tractable, lowly, and beneficial towards all men, yea and towards their enimies also. It pitieth, it sorroweth, it reioyseth, it giueth, it comforteth, it feedeth & clotheth, &c. This is the light of good workes whiche Christ doth charge the faithful withall, saying: Let your light so shyne among men, that they may see your good workes, &c.

Thirdly, faith doth worke also towardes the beleuer himselfe. First, patience in all kindes of troubles. And therfore the Apostle did so linke together faith and patience, that the vertue of faith is declared by the patience of troubles. For so we do read there: We must giue thankes to god alwayes for you brethren, as reason is, bicause your faith doeth greatlye encrease, and the charitie of you all, one to an other doth exceede, so that we our selues do reioyce of you in ỹ churches of God, for your patience and faith in all your persecutions & affections, which you do suffer, &c. In that he sayd, their faith did greatlye encrease, to declare the same to be true, he setteth forth their large charitie and stedfast sufferance of their aduersitye. Yea and fayth doeth not bryde this patience only, but it bryddeth reioysing also in trouble. The Apostle saith: Therefore now ỹ we be iustified by faith, we haue peace towards God through our Lord Iesus Christ, by whom it is so befallen vnto vs, that we should be leede by faith vnto this grace, in which we stande, & do reioyce vpon hope of the glorie of God. And not that only, but we do reioyce also in our afflictions, &c. Againe, When he would repayre the vertue and efficacy of faith in the beleuers, he saith, that they sustained the violence of their goods with ioye,

Hebr.10.

Secondly, it taketh away the carefulnesse of mind when a man is in daunger. And therupon is that sayd of Esay: He that beleueth, shall not be to hastye, that is to saye, he shall not be carefull or doubtfull, nor he shall not trembe and quake. For he is resolued with ỹ Apostle, to whom he shall trust vnto. Peter trembled vpon the sea for want of faith. Al Israel quaked when they hearde the reporte of the spyalles: but Iosue and Caleb were not afrayd, the one part through the lacke, the other through the benefites of faith. Saul was afrayde, for he hadde but small confidence in himselfe, and therefore he was carefull, and made haste to offer contrary to the commaundement of God. So it doth take awaye also the carefulnesse of liuing, whereof Ioke in Matthewe. For if God (saith he) doth so clothe the grasse of the fielde, howe muche more will he doe so to you, you of little fayth? Therefore be not carefull, saying: What shall we eate?

It taketh away the carefulnes of the minde.

Esayc.28.

Matth.14.

Num.13. & 14. 2.Reg.15.

Matth.6.

Thirdlye, the faithful haue comforts ready in the Lord by the benefite of faith. Wherupon Christ also when he admonished his disciples frō whence they should seeke their comforte in aduersitie, he sayde: Let not your hart be troubled, beleue in God,

It bringeth comforte.

Ioan.14.

beleue also in me. He sayd not, Be of good cheare, they shal die or it be long or it doe trouble you: or, consider that you be in the worlde, the market of all trouble: or, haue a good hope the worlde may change, for the world is ful of changes: but he directed their minde vnto God himselfe, in whome they beleued that they should seeke their comfort in their trouble of him. For there is in none greter goodnesse and mercie, in none greter knowlege of those things wherwith our hartes be tormēted, in none more knowlege and power to ayde, than is in God himselfe, so that he is not without cause called, The father of mercies, and the God of al comfort, by the Apostle. When he saith: You do beleue in God, beleue in me also, he doeth in anye case require them to haue faith. For it is it only ẏ can so apply it self to ẏ goodnesse of God, ẏ it doth perceyue the efficacie & sense therof, and bringeth comfort vnto the troubled harte, when it doeth beleue the promisses, of grace and doth embrace those things which be spoken of God in his worde.

2. Corint. 1.

It notifieth the flesh.

Fourthly, Fayth doth also mortifie the flesh with all the concupiscences therof, and maketh a mans mind humble and lowly, and worketh many other matters in the hartes of the beleuers, which to make short, I do briefly passe ouer: as that it doth clense the harts of the beleuers.

Act. 15.

And that it doth take in hande, and bring to passe harde and dangerous matters for the Lordes sake: as we do reade of Dauid, who being strēgthened with the power of fayth, did manly ouerthrowe Goliath, the Philistians, and the rest of the enimies of Gods people: and of Gedeon also and of others, which by faith did conquer kingdomes, &c. and of Moses, which contemned the estimation of the kings court, and toke part with the afflicted people.

1. Reg. 17.

Fourthly, Fayth is effectuall also against Satan and the worlde. For it fighteth against Satan in our temptations. Whereof the Apostle sayth in this wise: Taking in all thinges the target of faith, whereby you may quenche and vanquishe all the fyry dartes of the most wicked. So that loke what stede that ẏ target standeth the souldier in, to beare of the blowes of the enimie, the same stede faith is in to ẏ beleuer against the temptations of the Deuill. The lyke thing is this in Peter: Be sober and watch, for your aduersarye the Deuill goeth about as it were a roaring Lyon, to seeke whome he maye deuoure, whome resiste you being strong in fayth. But oure aduersaries doe some of them take for their buckler agaynst Satan, I wote not what superstitious and outwarde sacramentes. The faith also of the Electes, doeth ouercome the worlde. So we reade in John: This is (sayth he) the victorie which ouercommeth the worlde, your faith. And who is it that ouercommeth the worlde, but he which beleueth that Jesus Christ is the sonne of GOD? Truely this is a maruellous victory. They which doe seeme to be ouercome, and to be rooted out to the sight of the worlde, are the conquerours of the worlde. And to ouercome the world, is to ouercome al his malice, wisedome, power, and pleasures. And this is done two wayes. First in our Iudg. 6.

Heb. 11.

Eyphe. 6.

1. Pet. 5.

1. Ioan. 5.

our hearts, when we do treade vnder in our selues the remnaunts of the worlde. Agayne, we do it outwardly also, when we do ouercome the temptations, persequutions, and enticements of the worlde. Thus muche wee haue spoken of Fayth: nowe lette vs see for the Electes, to whome fayth doth belong.

Of Election.

For asmuche as in the former treatie of faithe in the firte Article: cyting the testimonies of holye Scripture, wee sayde, that faythe dothe not belong vnto all menne, but vnto the Electe onely, and that it dependeth vpon the free election of Gods will: I thinke it good and agreyng with the righte order of our places, to say somewhat here of Election, and Refusall, not for that the election dothe come after fayth, as though that we were then elect when we haue begon once to beleeue: but for that that after the consideration of faith, it is not amisse to goe backe to Election, lyke as it were lokyng vpon the riuer we are brought to the spryng and head of the same. Wee knowe that this matter, whiche is playne and cleare of it selfe, is through the scrupulositie of our wittes and desire of contention, made crabbed and intricate. Wherefore as neere as I can, I wil endeuour to speake of it moste simply and briefly, and that only which I shall iudge to be moste profitable for godly persons, accordyng to the certaintie of holy Scripture: as what it is to be elect, whether the election be of God, of howe many sortes it is, when, in what respect, in whome, whiche, what manner of men, and whereunto he hath chosen, lastly whether he hath refused any.

The order of the place

I. What it is to be Chosen.

To be elect or chosen, it is twoo wayes taken in Scriptures. First for that whiche is to be chosen out of others, lyke vnto some certain vse: as if a man hauing power and libertie to chose, do chose for himself that whiche he liketh to haue, albeit that the same whiche he doth chose, be neuer a whit better than the rest wherof he made his choyse, but somtimes peraduenture worse: this wee do see it chaunceth among men now and then, specially when we doe eyther of ignorāunce, either vpon some foolishe affections, chose that whiche dothe beste lyke vs. And I wouldo to God it were not so amongst them whiche haue power to chose the ministers of the Church. Secondly, it is taken for that whiche is excellent and passing: whiche albeit, it be not chosen, yet for all that it is called a chosen thing. So the best Golde is called the chosen golde, & the best and stoutest yong menne méte for the warres, are called the chosen menne. They sayde vnto Abraham: Burie thy dead carcas in our chose graues, that is to say, in our beste graues. So the noble men of the Egyptians which were drowned with Pharao,

To be chosen, is takē twvoo vvayes.

Gen. 23.

Exod. 15.

were called the chosen and and elect Princes. And Esaye saith, that he was set like an elect or chose arrow, that is, the best & the excellent. And it maketh a great matter, in what sense things be taken that be read in the Scriptures touching the elect of God. Wherfore me thought good to admonish the reder of this point, euē at the beginning of this treatie, that we do take the first sense of this word in this matter, and not the latter. For as much as the latter doeth not well frame with the grace of God, wherunto al this place doth belong. So we doe meane, that they be the elect or chosen of God, which be vpon a speciall purpose chosen and elect by him out of the whole multitude of men.

Esaye. 49.

II. Whether the Election be of God.

This question hath two partes. The first is, whether this may be agreable vnto God, to chose some out of the multitude of men whome he will saue: and that he should not rather indifferentlye without any choyse saue all men, like as he created and made all. The second is, whether that he chose any or no. To the first we do aunswere by the lasse. It is manifest ynough out of the Scriptures, that he hath chosen some. He chose vs (sayth Paule) before the making of the worlde. Againe: God chose those things which be foolishe. Wherupon Christ sayd also: that there be many called, and fewe chosen. And, that the evil dayes are shortened for the electes or chosens sake. And, That the elect shal be gathered together by the Angels, and, That God wil reuēge his elect. And the Apostle: Who (saith he) shall accuse the electes of God? Therefore seyng that it doth appeare, that God himself hath chosen some for to saue, who is so wicked to call it into question, whether it be lawfull and conuenient for him to do it or no? No mā that hath his fine wittes, wil denye that God hath not libertie to do with his owne what he listeth. For seyng that he is the Lord of all things that be in heauen and in the earth, it followeth that he hath power vpon all thinges, so that he may indifferently deale a like with al, or els at his own wil chose some out of all, to deale otherwise with them than wt the rest. When he made the worlde, he made it after his own will: when he dissenered those things that he had made, he dissenered them as he wold, heauē from earth, fyre from the water, darkenesse from light, beastes from beastes, plantes from plantes, times from times, and man from man. And how it is conuenient for vs to stande in this, that he hath not power to determine at his own will of the saluation of man? Eyther we must vtterly deny him to be God, and say that he hath not power ouer all thinges, eyther we must grant that he might vpon his owne right and authoritie, and may also yet determine what he will of man. And that he doeth nothing contrary vnto iustice, what so euer he doth determine. This matter the Apostle doeth treate of to the Romaines, vnto whose iudgement we do referre all this question.

Ephes. 1.

That God hath chosen some. 1. For 1.

Matthew. 22. Mark. 13. Luc. 18. Rom. 8.

III. Howe manifolde the Election of God is.

They whiche bee conuersant in Scriptures, do finde three maner of elections of God. The firste is of them which are to be saued: the seconde of the people of Israell: The thirde of the ministers. To the third those thinges do belong whiche are read in Numerus. They whome he hath chosen (saith Moses) shall approche nye vnto him. Whome so euer he choseth, he shal be holye. And the other lyke matters which are written in the scriptures, of Priests, Leuites, Prophetes, Kings, and Iudges, they were chosen vnto that ministery by God. Wherevnto those things do also belong, which are in the newe Testament of the election of the Apostles & ministers of Christ. To the second that is to be referred, which is spoken in Deuteronomie: The lord thy God hath chosen thee. And, He hathe chosen thee to be his people. And, This day the Lord God hath chosen thee to be a peculiar people for him. None of these two elections of God, doth of necessitie include saluation. It is manifest that all the people of Israell was not saued, no not they which wer baptised vnder the cloude and in the sea, nor all they which did eate that spirituall meate, and dranke that spirituall drinke oute of the spirituall rocke which was Christ: for many of them offended God, and were ouerthrowen in desert. And Christ when he said: Haue not I chosen you twelue, and one of you is a Deuill: did sufficiētly declare, that Judas was an elect or chosen, but yet þ he was none of them that shoulde be saued. For we can not saye of all the Priestes, Leuites, Prophets, Kings, Princes, and iudges which were elect of God and of his people, that they be al saued. Wherefore we meane not to speak presently of these two sorts of election, but purpose to speake of the same only, which pertaineth to them that shal be saued: that is to say, the first whereof we spake in the article before. And I thought it meete to distinct the same from the other two, because of the simpler sort, least they might through errour indifferently mistake the one for the other.

Judas was chosen and not saued.

IIII. When God chose vs.

The holye Spirite hathe not thought this consideration worthy to be neglected, and therfore we maye not passe it ouer vntouched. For almuch as it doeth alwayes appeare, that there be some elect, least men shoulde fall to reasoning in the Church, when God doth chose his elect: and least their opinion shoulde take effect, which do suppose euen as we men are wonte to doe, that he choseth none but them which be presentlye liuing, and better than the rest: the Apostle did in expresse wordes set forth this particle, saying: Who chose vs before that the fundations of the worlde was layde. And yet there was no man before the worlde was made. He chose vs therefore before wee were: so that there can be no occasion for the elect to boast them off. What difference was ther betwixt vs before the beginning of our nature? Surely none at all, but the same whereby God himselfe did distinct betwixte vs before wee were extant.

God chose vs before vve vvere.

This consideration doth cõmende vnto vs the wonderfull purpose of God, wherein he determined with himselfe vpon our saluation before he made the worlde. For what else is it to chose and elect men that bee not, but to foresee and appoynt vpon their saluation before they be borne? It is an incredible matter, howe great an assurance of saluatiõ there riseth in the hartes of the faithful, of that that they do beleeue, that God had a care of them before the worlde was made, and that they were chosen by him vnto saluatiõ, before that they were. Herevpon they do gather most assuredly, that God can not forsake them after they be made & are extant, whome he chose and appointed vnto saluation before they were extant, and before the worlde was made. For in this election whiche muste needes be of all things moste certayne, all those things be comprehended which do concerne the saluation of the elect. Wherefore Augustine also saith, that the electes can not perishe, because that all things with thẽ doe frame to good, yea their sinnes also. God is not forgetfull, that he hath for age forgotten himself of them, whõ he chose before the worlde was made, all whose names he hath, and the number also. Those thynges whiche be passe and to come with vs, and separated one from another many hundred yeares, yea the very beginnyng of the worlde and the ende, they bee all present in the sighte of God. Wherefore he that shall be lasse borne in this worlde of the number of the elect, shall no lesse enioy this grace of election, than he whiche was borne firste. Our deuises and purposes doe decay in processe of time, but the counsell of God dothe remayne whole and sounde in one lyke, and in the selfesame efficacie vntill the very ende, nor it dothe not ware any weaker for the long trace of yeares. And by this stablenesse, the Church of the elect doth continue still in the worlde, and cannot be ouerthrowen and extinguished by any engines of Satan, or slightes of the worlde, bycause the election of GOD can not be ouerthrowen. And this Churche was chosen before the worlde, to the entent it shoulde be a Schole of Grace in the worlde, and after the worlde is passe, to be the brightnesse of the glorye of God. Wherefore it must of necessitie not onely continue out, as vnoucrcome in this worlde, but at the end it must triumph also ouer the worlde. And this consideration in my iudgement is more profitable a greate deale of faithfull men, than the disputation of some folkes of the number of the elect, whether it may be more and lesse, or not. Which the Maister of the Sentence toucheth. Augustine did acknowledge that the number of the electes is certayne: and it is grounded also vpon the certaintie it selfe of the Election. But to dispute muche of the matter, whether that there may be any thing added or diminished from that number, I thinke it to curious a case for a godly person.

Thus much I would warne thẽ by the way, whiche do reade Augustines workes, that whereas he saith: Wherfore that which was said: For asmuch asmuch as God hathe chosen vs before the making of the worlde, I see not how it is spoken, vnlesse they doe take the word Prescience very warely. For we be elect not only by foreknowing, but by predestening also. In dede Augustine is wont sometimes to vse prescience for Destinie: but it is better to vse the common words of the scripture, and to distinct election and predestinatiõ from prescience. Those things which God did predestinate, he did foreknowe also: but he did not predestinate all things that he did foreknowe, vnlesse we wil say, that he did not only foreknowe the euill things to come, but that he did predestinate them also. And whereas the Apostle doth say: For them that he did foreknowe, the same he did appoynt before, it is not to be vnderstanded of hys generall foreknowledge, whereby he did foreknowe all thynges: but of the lyking, as when we be accounted to lyke the same which we do acknowledge. In the which sense Christ shal saye also: Departe &c. for I knowe you not.

Augustin. in Soliloquio. cap. 28.

V. In vvhat respect God hath chosen his.

There is almost nothing done amongst men with more speciall respect, thã ỹ chosing of these things, whiche out of manye others we doe take to our owne possession and vse. Diuers men haue diuers respectes, but yet for all that we be commonly enticed all ỹ sort of vs, to chose those things that are to be chosen for the respecte of the quality of them. And we be inclined partly to pleasaunte things, and partlye to things profitable. In pleasant things we doe credite our eyes, by whiche we do put a difference betwixte faire and foule. To the chosing of things profitable, we doe oftentimes vse a corrupte iudgemente, and be therefore oftentimes deceyued. To be short, we doe seeke our selues, and in chosing we do not serue for the profite and healthe of them that be chosen, but for oure owne affectiõs. These be our trades. Nowe lette vs see the trades of God, whether that he in ỹ chosing of hys, hathe anye respect to the quality of them whiche are to be chosen. Firste when he chose vs before the worlde was made, what did he fynde in vs before we were yet extant, in respect whereof he shoulde chose vs? Secondly, albeit that he did knowe before what we shoulde be, yet for all that he found nothing in vs whereby he should be moued to chose vs. We be of nature, all the sort of vs, borne the children of wrath. He knewe before we should be such, wherefore he had cause to refuse vs rather than to chose vs. For we can not saye, that he chose vs in respect of oure godlynesse and iustice that was to come. For if there be anye godlynesse and iustice in vs, it is in vs not as a cause, but as the fruite of the election and grace of God. For as the Maister of the Sentences sayeth arighte, he chose whome he would of his free mercye, not bycause they would be faithfull, but bycause they should be faythfull: and he gaue them grace not bycause they were faythfull, but to the intent they myght bee made faithfull. Wherefore it appeareth, that the choice or election of vs, is made by no manner of respecte of any qualitie of oures. Therefore it is necessarie for vs, to seeke the respecte of our election in God himselfe, why the dothe chose vs. For ỹ perceyuing of oure owne vnworthynesse and deprauation, dothe drive vs vnto thys. Dauid. Lord, what is man that thou arte mindfull of him? And the sonne of man that thou doest visite him? We may in this case say much more iustlie: What is man, that thou hast chosen him when he was not? and the sonne of man that thou didest predestinate hym when thou knewest before that hée shoulde bée naught and depraued? The Apostle doth so expounde this cause, that hée dothe attribute it wholly vnto God, and nothing vnto vs. He dothe turne the respect of our election vnto ỹ good pleasure, will, purpose, and grace of God, according vnto the good pleasure (sayth he) of hys will. Item, According to the riches of hys grace, and according vnto his good pleasure which he purposed in himself. Item, Predestinat according vnto his purpose. So that these bée the causes of our election and choyce. He hath chosen vs, because it so pleased him, hée woulde do so, he purposed so to hymselfe, we must rest heere, and seeke no causes of these causes. We must not vppon an vngodly rashnesse searche and trauell, why it hathe so pleased hym, why he would and purposed so to do, but we must imputte it vnto the infinite goodnesse and riches of hys grace. Christ our sauioure when he had sayd: I thanke thée father, Lord of heauen and earthe, for that thou hast hydden those thinges from the wise and cunning men, and hast opened them to the little ones: he did referre the cause hereof to nothing else, but to the good pleasure of God his father, adding and saying: Surely father, because it was so liking in thy sight. And the Apostle when hée disputed of election and refusing, hée doth openly and stedfastly referre the causes of both to the will of God, saying: He hath mercie vpon whome he wyll, and hardeneth whome hée will. Therefore, we must consider the certaynetie of oure election and saluation, in that that it is grounded vpon his good pleasure, will and purpose, whose will is most free, interest and ryghte moste hyghest ouer all things, truth immutable, pleasure stedfast for euer, purpose most effectuall, and power subiecte vnto no let or hinderaunce. Besydes thys, these poyntes do agrée with the nature of Gods goodnesse, whose propertie it is to haue mercy, and to doe good vnto men. The naturall determinations and purposes in things created and subiecte also vnto change, are wont to be things most fast & firme, howe muche more muste it be so in Gods nature, which can not haue any vnstablenesse? Wherefore it is not possible, that the election of vs, made according vnto hys pleasure, will and purpose, shoulde be altered and made voide.

The respect of our election is to be sought in God himselfe.

Psal. 8. & 44.

Ephe. 1.

God hath chosen vs, because it hath so pleased him.

Matth. 11.

Rom. 9.

The certaintie of our election.

VI. In vvhom we be elect.

Albeit that it dothe appeare that the election of vs is not to be attributed vnto anye respecte of oure qualitie and worthinesse, but vnto the only respecte, will, and purpose of God, and that we can giue no reason for it, but his great goodnesse: yet it is not conuenient for vs to beléeue that it commeth to vs by no meane in which the Maiestie of God did chose vnto hym before the making of the worlde, men whiche were so far from his nature, and that should be so sundry wayes wretched and miserable. For this election is of that nature, that it can not abide the separation of the choser and the chosen. For like as reprobation doth exclude al manner of coniunction of them that bée refused and the refuser, so election dothe also ioyne the chosen with the choser, whiche knitting togyther of two moste sundry natures, of God & of man, coulde not be made without the closing by of some mediatoure. Whote and colde can not be vnited, but in some meane, whiche maye receyue both: It was muche lesse possible that man, whiche is colder than any Ice, should be vnited with God, who is a consuming fyre. This is a most clére case to all men, sauing only to them, whiche considering neyther the hyghnesse of Gods wrath, nor the basenesse of mans weakenes and corruption, doe thinke that they may be ioyned vnto God, I wote not by what rites and workes, withoute any mediator. Nowe who that mediator is, in whome God hath chosen vs before the setting of the worlde, and hathe ioyned vs vnto hym in a perpetuall coniunction, the Apostle doth diligently expresse to the Ephesians saying: Blessed be the God and father of oure Lorde Iesus Christe, who hath blessed vs in all manner of spirituall blessing, in the heauenlye things by Christ, like as he had chosen vs in hym, before that the foundations of the world were layd. Ergo, we be chosen by God the father in Christ his sonne in an euerlasting election before the tymes, that is to saye, before the seasons when the worlde was made. Wherein we doe sée, that it was so determined for euer, that we shuld be saued by Christ the sonne of God oure mediatoure: and that it was so predestinate, that the same eternall worde shoulde bée borne at hys time in our flesh, so that by the same through which we should be created by, in him we shoulde bée chosen also to be redemed and saued. This wise oure faithe in our mediatour and sauiour Christ hath a most auncient foundation, that is to saye, eternall, and layde before all tymes of the worlde. In this wise also wée were in Christ before ỹ worlde was made, that is to saye, by the strength of this eternall election. He dyd not chose vs as being in him before that we were chosen, but he chose vs to the intente that we should be in hym and bée saued by him. Chrysostome doth take the Greeke word, In hym, to be al one with that that is by him. But in my iudgemente, like as it is not conuenient, that it should be sayd of Christ as our mediatour, that hée is the chooser of vs: so it dothe not agrée so well to say that we be chosen by him, as that of Paule where hée sayeth, that we be chosen by God the Father in him. God chose vs for Christe, and hée chose vs in Christ. Hée chose vs for Christe, as for the mediatour: hée chose vs in Christe, as in the head of all them whyche are electe, and to bée saued. And the nativitie of hys flesshe was not the fyrste tyme that hée was

The foundation of our faith is most auncient.

ἐν αὐτῷ κατ' αὐτόν

God hathe chosen vs in Christe, and for Christe.

made made the mediatoꝛ, head, and sauioꝛ of the elect, but he was appoynted so by the Father from euermoꝛe, and we weꝛ choſen in him, & foꝛ him, beſoꝛe that we weꝛ boꝛne. At the ſame tyme when God did determine vpon the head and mediatoꝛ of them that ſhould be ſaued, he did alſo determin vpon them that ſhoulde be ſaued by him as his members: whiche determination the Apoſtle doth call, the election made in Chꝛiſte. Wherefoꝛe we muſt conſider of this miſtery of oure election, not by halfes and by pæcemeale, as they ſaye, but as it is whole and ſound, with both ỹ partes of it ioyned togyther, wyth ſincere faith, with all deuotion, honoure and thankefulneſſe in Chꝛiſt our mediatour, head, and ſauiour. And foꝛ the confirmation of the certaynetye of our ſaluatiõ in our heartes, we muſt ponder alſo with oure ſelues, haiue that the election and choſing of vs is grounded and builded vpon the ſame counſel and purpoſe of God the ſame eternitie, yea and the very ſame certainctie that ỹ miſterie of Chꝛiſt is.

VII. Whome God hathe choſen.

THe ſearching of this point may be thoughte moꝛe curious than is mæte foꝛ a godlye perſon. And in dæde the nature of our fleſh is ſuche, that when we doe heare that ſome be elect of God, and ſome repꝛobate, we will moꝛe of a curiouſneſſe than foꝛ any pꝛofitablenes couet to know who be electe, and who repꝛobate: whiche curioſitie we meane not to maintayne oꝛ fæde in this place. Secondly, it may ſæme alſo impoſſible to attayne to the knowledge of them whiche be electe and repꝛobate, although we doe ſæke foꝛ it neuer ſo earneſtly. And in verye dæde thys knowledge is ſo farre paſſing oure reache, that both conſidering the vnſearchable counſell of God whereby we are choſen from euermoꝛe, and alſo conſidering the baſeneſſe, vileneſſe, weakeneſſe, and the often aduerſitie and trouble of them that bæ elect, it is not poſſible foꝛ the woꝛlde to knowe, who be elect, and who repꝛobate.

But foꝛ all that, this conſideration is neyther curious, neyther incõpꝛehenſible to the electes of God thẽſelues, ſo as it is to the woꝛlde. John ſayth: Dæerely beloued, we be nowe the childꝛen of God, and the woꝛlde knoweth vs not. The ſame which to the woꝛlde is curious and incompꝛehenſible, is vnto vs both pꝛofitable and poſſible alſo to knowe. Wherefoꝛe we may not neglect this conſideration, but we muſt earneſtly gyue our mindes to know the elect, ſo that we do it temperately and with reuerence. And we may not in this poynt ſearch out that eternall counſell and purpoſe of God, wherein hæ choſe whom he would. Foꝛ this dæpeneſſe is vnſearcheable. They which iudge of the elect, muſt nædes be firſt elect themſelues. Foꝛ the repꝛobate can haue nothing to doe in thys matter. Secondly, they muſt not onely be elecꝛe, but they muſt be alſo endewed with the true faith and ſpirit of God. A man may finde ſome that be electe and not yet illuminated, and as long as they be ſo, they can not iudge of the electe. Of that ſoꝛt Paule was, when he did perſecute the Churche of Iudges impoſſible for the lecte of God to knowe electes. Iohn.

example of Paul of Gods elect. In caſe he had knowē the electe, he hadde not boꝛne them ſo greate hatred and iudged them woꝛthy to be ridde out of ỹ way. Thirdly, it behoueth that the elects whych muſt be knowen by the electes, bæ ſo inſtructed and informed of God, that when they bæ furniſhed wyth the ſure cogniſaunce of God, they maye be knowen as the like is knowen of the like. Foꝛ before they be called, illuminated, iuſtifyed, and renued, they be as thyngs boꝛne out of faſhion, and can not be knowen, no not to the elected and them whiche be illuminate. Yea, and when they are become alſo elect and illuminate, they be not yet knowen to the elect, vnleſſe they ſæe and tryе them by ſome ſure pꝛoues and arguments to be ſuch. As it happened to Paule, whome the elect and faithfull at Hieruſalem did not acknowledge, no not after hæ was called, illuminated, and renewed: noꝛ they would not ioyne oꝛ enter wyth him, vntill they were by ſome ſure argumentes enfoꝛmed of his conuerſion. As we may ſæe in the Actes. Foꝛ when he came to Hieruſalem, after that he was conuerted to the Lozde, and had defended the faith of Chꝛiſt very earneſtly at Damaſco, & would haue ioyned hymſelfe in the compaꝛny of the diſciples, they were all afrayde of him, and beleæued not that he was a Diſciple. By whiche example we be taught, that the elect be not knowen, no not of the electe, vnleſſe there doe appeare in them certayne tokens of the childꝛen of God. And howe wꝛetched a matter it is, when an electe is neuer a whit knowen by the elect, and ỹ fellowes of his owne faith, thã he is by the repꝛobate and wicked, we nædе not to ſaye muche. Suche darkeneſſe dothe not pleaſe God in his Churche. And therefoꝛe he doth ſo furniſhe and adoꝛne his elect to the intent, that by their mutuall knowledge, they ſhould reuerentlye and louingly one embꝛace another.

VVhiche ought to be taken for elect.

We nædе not to trauell moꝛe curiouſly to knowe the electe. All the faithfull are to be reputed foꝛ electe, in whome there be no apparante arguments that they be out of the true faith, and voyde of the ſpirite of the childꝛen of God. The Apoſtle writing to the Chꝛiſtians not like a captious noter of men, ſayth ſimply and generally: He that bleſſed vs, he that choſe vs, he that did pꝛedeſtinate vs, and gaue vs grace in his welbeloued ſonne, &c. He hadde this opinion and iudgemente of the faithfull without any ſcrupuloſitie, taking them foꝛ electe, pꝛedeſtinate, bleſſed and redæmed. What did he ſæe in them? No doubt, faith in Chꝛiſt and loue to all Saindtes, that is to ſay, to the faythfull of Chꝛiſt. By theſe tokens and markes he knew the elect. Therfoꝛe we muſte iudge alſo by the ſame markes of the faithfull of Chꝛiſt, acknowledging and embꝛacing them foꝛ the electe of God, whome he hath choſen to hym from euermoꝛe in Chꝛiſt. It cannot be expꝛeſſed, howe muche this conſideration doth helpe vs, that we may not onely tye moꝛe diligently obſerue the woꝛke of God in the electe, but that we maye alſo woꝛthely eſtæme one another, and linke our ſelues into a moꝛe ſtreighter knot of bꝛotherly loue. I ſæe not how I can eſtæme and louingly embꝛace hym as a Chꝛiſtian man, of whome

whome I do ſtand in doubt, whether that he be of the number of the elect of God or not. And I ſée no cauſe why I ſhoulde doubt of his election, whome I can not vppon anye ſure grounde reckon with the reprobate as an vnfaithfull and a ſtraunger vnto Chriſte. I ſée not what reaſon it were to take hym to bée a caſtaway, of whome I am not able truly to ſay that he is a ſtranger to Chriſt, in whome we be choſen from euerlaſting. Therefore what ſhall we do elſe, but iudge that the faithfull and louers of Chriſt be choſen in hym of God the father?

Hovv vve may knovv our ſelues vvhether that vve be elect or no.

Hitherto we haue briefly noted how we may know them whome the Lorde hathe choſen to him from the beginning. And foraſmuche as the elect can not be knowen but by the elect, it remayneth nowe to ſée howe we our ſelues may knowe whether we be electe and choſen or not. In dede we may trye our ſelues by the ſame tokens and ſignes, whereby we do know other, that is to ſay by faith in Chriſt, and loue towards his holy ones, felowes of the ſame faith that we do profeſſe. To this purpoſe was that ſayd of the Apoſtle: Trye youre ſelues whether that you bée in the faith, proue you your ſelues. Knowe you not your owne ſelues that Jeſus Chriſte is in you? vnleſſe peraduenture you be caſtawayes. But there is giuen vs yet for thys purpoſe a more ſpeciall teſtimony of the holye ſpirite, whereof the Apoſtle ſpeaketh in this wiſe: Whoſoeuer be ledde by the ſpirit of God, they be the children of God. For you haue not receyued the ſpirit of bondage in feare, but you haue receyued the ſpirit of adoption of the children of God, in whome we do crye Abba Father. For the ſame ſpirite doth beare witneſſe vnto oure ſpirit, that we be the children of God. I beſéke you, what more certayne witneſſe can we haue of the grace of oure election and adoption, than the ſpirite himſelfe of God? If an Angel ſhoulde come from heauen, to bée a witneſſe that I am elect from the beginning, and adopted as a child, who woulde not thinke, that ſuche a teſtimony were to be muche eſtéemed? But the nature of Angels reacheth not to this ſecrete poynte of election which is from euerlaſting, vnleſſe it be by ſpeciall reuelation. But the ſpirite of God being priuie of all ſecretes, can moſte certaynelye of all beare witneſſe of thē. And to whome can he beare more certayne witnes, than to our ſpirite? As long as the teſtimonies of Gods worde do ſtick ſtil in oure eares, and in the carnall vnderſtanding, the perſwaſion of them is very weake: but when the ſpirite of God doth teſtifie vnto our ſpirite of the grace of our election and adoption, then we be without all doubte. Therefore the faithfull perſon is endewed with ỹ holy ſpirite, and aſſertayned by the teſtimony of hym, of the grace of our election and adeption, and conſequently of our redemption and eternall ſaluation. And vpon this aſſurednes he doth ſay with the Prophet: Lord kéepe my ſoule, for I am holye. And with the Churche of the elect: Bleſſed be God and Father of oure Lorde Jeſus Chriſte, who hath choſen vs, who hath predeſtinated vs, who hath adopted vs and gyuen vs grace in hys beloued ſonne. He that hath in himſelfe no fælyng of

2. Cor. 13.

Rom. 8.

See Auguſtine. Pſalm. 85.

of this election, how can he ſay wyth thankes giuing: Bleſſed be God that hath choſen vs? For vnleſſe he do acknowledge that this grace of God is in him, he can not account himſelfe with the Church of the elect. The Apoſtle might haue ſayd: Which choſe and predeſtined you, &c. But foraſmuch as he was one of the elect himſelf, and did acknowledge this grace of God in himſelfe, whereby he was a member of the body of the Church of the elect, he ſayde not, which choſe you, but, whō choſe vs, &c. For hée wrote as an electe to the electe, of the common grace of their election, adoption, redemption, and ſaluation. So that we doe ſée by this conſideration, how farre they be from this aſſuredneſſe of the heauenlye grace, which do iudge that this doctrine of election and predeſtination is ſo darke, yea ſo perillous, that they woulde haue no mention made of it in the Churche, whereas the moſte aſſured ankerholde of our ſaluation doth conſiſt in it. If they bée true Chriſtian men, it muſt néedes bée ſo found, that they doe truly beléeue in Chriſt. But that faith can not bée in them, which do ſtand in doubt of the grace of election and adoption, out of whiche as of a welſpring, all the gratious giftes of the new borne mā do procéede and flowe.

VIII. What manner of perſons God hath choſen.

GOd choſe vs before ỹ we were, as wée haue ſéene before in the fourth Article, and there can bée no qualitie of them that yet bée not. Therefore it can not be reported of him which yet is not in nature, what manner of perſon he is. For to be, is before being of ſome quality, and for a certaynetie, howſoeuer menne doe reaſon of this matter. It is not poſſible to appoynte a man to be of anye qualitie before that he be in déede. Whereforе when we do demaunde: what manner of folkes God hathe choſen from euerlaſting, it is not to be referred to the article it ſelfe, of the time of the election (foraſmuche as ther was yet no articles of time) but vnto the tyme wherein they were long agone electe, which ſhould be borne in thys worlde, from the begynning vntyll the endyng of it. Héere we muſt conſider of what ſort the electe bée when they be borne, and before that they be called vnto the grace of the knowledge of God and of ſaluation: whether that by the difference of the election and reprobation, whyche was done before the making of the worlde, it doth ſo fall out, that the electe bée conceyued, borne, and doe lyue after one way, and the reprobate an other waye. The Scripture dothe teſtifye of the beginning and encreaſe of our kind, ỹ oure nature is infected with ſinne in our very firſt parentes, and made ſubiect vnto death: of whiche matter we ſpake alſo before in the place of the Fall of man.

Queſtion vvhether that the elect bee borne and conceyued one vvay, and the reprobate an other vvay? The anſvvere. 1 Cor. 6.

The queſtion is therefore héere, whether that the ſame infection of ſinne, and thoſe things whiche do belong vnto it, haue place not onely in the reprobate, but in the electe alſo. For this queſtion we muſte harken to the Apoſtle, who writeth thus: Like as by ỹ ſin of one euill, is ſpred

abrode

abroade into all men vnto condemnation, so by the iustifying also of one, good is spredde abroade vnto all men, to the iustification of life. And least that anye man shoulde alleage, that like as the latter vniuersall saying: Vnto all men to iustification of life, doth take place only in the elect: to the first, Into all men to condemnation, shoulde be referred to the reprobate onely, the comparison of Adam and Christe will not suffer it, wherein the euill whiche came of Adam, is imputed vnto all ẏ be borne of him, and on the other side the good vnto al which be iustifyed by Christ. Now in case the reprobat only were borne of Adam, this euill dothe fall vnto them only: but in case the electe do come of him also, truely they bee borne partners of the same euil with the reprobate, from whiche they bee not deliuered, but by the iustifying of Christe only, in whome they be electe also from the beginning as wee sawe before in the vi. Article. And therefore it is, that the Apostle as an elect, writing to the elect, sayth: We were of nature the childrẽ of wrath, like as the rest. And therefore Dauid being himselfe an elect, crieth out with a sorowfull heart: Lo I am cõceyued in wickednesse, and my mother conceyued me in sinnes.

Hebr. 2.

Psalm. 51.

The electe be borne also in sins.

It appeareth therefore, that the elect be borne also in sinnes by the infection of the corrupte nature, and that therefore they be worthy to bee condemned, but that they be saued by grace, is thorough the goodnesse of Christ. And they be not onely borne such, but they doe liue also in sinnes, wicked, sinfull, and enimies of God. For so the Apostle writeth to aduance the greatenesse of Gods loue, saying: For Christe, when we were yet weake according to the condition of the time, died for the wicked. Item, God doth set forth his charitie towarde vs, in that that when wee were yet sinners, Christ dyed for vs. Item, When we were enimies, wee were reconciled vnto God by the death of his sonne. If Christ dyed for the wicked, for sinners and the enimies of God, and the electe bee not suche, Ergo he dyed not for the electe, but for the reprobate only: nor he did not reconcile the elect vnto God, but the reprobate onely: and so it followeth, that eyther the elect be not saued, either that they be saued without Christ, which both are agaynste the election whiche was made from euerlasting: and that the reprobate onely be saued in Christe, whiche is proued in verye deede to bee false. Therefore to the intente we fall not into those foule erroures, we muste holde for a certaine vndoubtfull doctrine, that all the elect, as well as the reprobate, are borne of nature the children of wrath, subiect vnto sinne and death: and that they doe lyue in sinnes before that they be called Iustified, wrapt vp in erroures, and serue their lustes, and that they bee not saued but by the grace of the Mediatoure and sauioure Christe. And this determination doth muche auayle to the acknowledging of the free election of God, grounded vpon no merites of the elect, but vpon the only mediation of Christ the mediatour, that there may be no glory left vnto any flesh, but the only goodnesse and mercy of God may be acknowledged and be blazed abroade in the very election also. Wherefore where as we doe reade, that God chose the poore of the worlde, and the riche in faith, heires of the kingdome. &c. it is not so to be taken, as though hee dyd chose them at length beeyng suche before, but that he made them whiche were electe from the beginning to be suche at the tyme of their callyng by the grace and spirite of Christ.

Rom. 5.

IX. To vvhat purpose God hath chosen vs.

A Man might knowe euidently ynough by that that God vouchsafed to make man at the beginning to his own image and likenesse, that is to say, to the Image of God, that he appointed hym from the beginning to no common felicitie, but to some speciall and excellente happinesse, whiche purpose of his, seeing that it can not be made voide, it muste of necessitie be accomplished in the electe of Christ. But the Apostle dyd playnely expounde thys case, from whence we may seeke those thynges that are to be considered herein: Like as (saith he) he chose vs in him before that the foundations of the worlde were layde, that we shoulde be holye and blameleese before him, by charitie, &c. Item, Who predestined vs to adopte vs to hys children by Iesus Christe in himselfe. Also, That the glorye of his grace may be praysed, whereby he hathe made vs beloued by hys deerely beloued, by whom we haue redemption thorough his bloud, forgiuenesse of sinnes, according to the riches of his grace, whereof hee hathe bestowed abundantly vpon vs in all wisedome and knowledge, disclosing the secret of his wil vnto vs, &c. Item, By whome we be also called into the portion. Item, That wee may be to the prayse of his glorye. Item, You be signed vp with the holy spirite of promise, who is the earnest pennie of oure inheritaunce, &c. This sayeth the Apostle. Vpon the consideration of the whiche, we doe finde ẏ this matter hath two partes: so that the first parte of it dothe concerne God, which is the chuser: and ẏ other part doth concerne vs, which be elect by him. As touching him, hee chose vs vpon no respect of his owne gayne, but to this intente only, that the glory of his grace mighte be aduanced. Whiche poynte the Apostle doth the thirde time beate into vs, to admonishe vs, that in this cause of our election, we ought to glorifie vpon no worthinelle or vertue of oure owne, but vppon the onely grace of Gods goodnesse. There be manye things in God that are worthy most hygh commendation, as his power, wisedome, truthe, iustice, goodnesse grace, and mercy, &c. but yet he chose vs vpon speciall purpose, to thys intẽt, that he would aduance his grace in vs. And this aduancemente of the grace of God, is of that nature, that there doth asmuch abate from it, as is attributed vnto our worthinesse, vertue and merites. Wherefore they do not slenderly sinne against it, whiche do aduance the merites and righteousnesse of them whiche be saued, and do attribute vnto them the cause both of oure election and saluation also. After their iudgemente the Apostle should in this case of our election haue commended the glory, not of the grace of God, but of his iustice.

This finall cause hath two parts.

But as concerning vs whiche be chosen of God, we be chosen generally vnto this purpose, to be made happy for euermore. To this poynte of true felicitie those things doe belong, which be rehersed particularly by the Apostle. For what can wee make of it else to be holy and blameless, than to be adopted to be ỹ child of God, to be beloued, redéemed, fauourably pardoned of sinnes, to bée lightened with ỹ wisedome & knowledge of Gods wil and purpose, to be called to the portion of inheritance, to be signed vp with the holy spirite, as the earnest penny of the inheritance, but to be made happy for euer, and to be taken into the glory of the Childrẽ, and to be heyres of God? If the Prophet doe pronounce hym aryghte and to be happy, whose sinnes be forgiué, how much more are they to be counted happy, whiche be chosen to that intent from euerlastyng, that they shoulde be adopted to the children of God, made holy & blameless, and partakers of the heauenlye inheritance? This grace of Gods election is incomprehensible, & therefore can neuer be so estéemed of vs as it ought to be.

Psalme.32.

X. Of the Reprobate.

Contentions touching the reprobate are to be eschewyed.

TO tell you the truth, I can not like their contentions and deuises of them which do so striue about the reprobate in this case of Gods election, (as some do also in the cause of the Lordes supper, aboute the eating and receyuing of the wicked) that they do make the whole matter odious, and the worse misliked for their striuing, and they doe entangle (which is much to be pitied) the frée grace of election, wherein consisteth the foundation of our saluation, and wrappe it as much as lyeth in them, in most grosse darkenesse. Surely I do so much estéeme the grace of election, (whereof I haue hitherto spoken more slenderly than the matter requireth,) that I thinke it not necessary as muche as to thinke vppon the reprobate, much lesse so sharplye to contend of them in Gods Church. The Apostle did talke largelye of this grace to commend it to ỹ faythfull: but as for the reprobate, he dyd scarsely touche of them in one or two places.

But forasmuche as those thynges be true whiche we haue before spoken out of the Apostle of the election and the electes, it must néedes follow that there be some reprobate, that is to saye, the same whiche be not of the number of the electe, vnlesse wé will that generally all be elect, which opinion dothe repugne muche to the holy Scriptures. Like as some men be of God, and some be not of God, so some be chosen and some reprobate.

And the Apostle distinguishing the reprobate from the faithfull, sayth: Know you not your selues, that Iesus Christe is in you, vnlesse you bée castawayes? But yet I hope you will knowe that wée bée not castawayes. If all be elect, it is necessarye that none be reprobate. For it is not possible, that he whyche is electe and predestinate, shoulde come to be reprobate and be damned. Wherefore is it is it then that the Apostle saith héere: Vnlesse you be reprobate, if none bée reprobate but all electe? We muste néedes graunte therefore, that some be elect and some reprobate.

Secondly, we muste graunte that also, that they be called reprobate which be dilyked, or to vse Hieroms words, Cast off from God. The Master of the Sentences sayth: He predestined them whome he chose, and the rest he refused. Item, He refused whom he would, not for any merites which he saw to come, but yet vppon a most right truth, and hidden from our senses. We call not them héere reprobate, which are for their naturall euill reprobate, and not vpryghte and good: as that is called refuse siluer which is counterfait. But them whome God hathe cast off and refused, when he did chose whome hée would. So that in two respectes they be reprobate: Firste, bycause they bée reprobate of God. Secondly, bycause they be euill and reprobate of theyr natural malice. In these later ways they be also reprobate, which do appertayne to the number of the electe. For they be also conceyued in sinnes, and of nature children of wrathe, as we declared before. But as the elect be called in Scriptures not reprobate but electe, for bycause of the grace of the election, so these be called not electe but reprobate, bycause of the refusall of them. They doe obiecte héere the words of the Apostle, wherein he dothe speake in this wise of God: For this is good and acceptable before God our sauiour, which would all men to be saued, & to come to the knowledge of the truthe. If God (say they) would haue all menne saued, how can that stand firme and stedfast, that he hath chosen some only to saue, and refused the rest? To this obiection we aunswered in oure commentaries vppon the Epistle to the Romaines in the ix. Chapter. And for this time I will bryng the exposition of Augustine saying thus. Whyche woulde haue all menne saued, not that there shoulde bée no man whome he woulde not haue saued. Whiche would do no vertue of miracles amongst them whiche hée sayde woulde haue done penaunce, if hée hadde done them, but that we shoulde vnderstande by all men all sortes of menne, distributed in certayne differences: Kings, priuate persons, noble and base, hygh and lowe, &c. And a little after: For the Apostle commaunded that they shoulde praye for all menne, and specially he added for Kynges, and them that were in high estate whyche myghte haue bin thoughte to refrayne from the baseneste of the Christian faithe for a loftinesse of courage and worldly pryde. Therefore when hée sayde, thys is good before GOD oure sauioure, that is to saye, that wée shoulde praye also for suche: hée dyd adde by and by to take away desperatiõ, Whiche woulde haue all men to bée saued. This is in that place.

Augustinus in Ench. Cap.102.

And in an other place, hée sayeth this. But as that whyche is sayde, all shall bée restored to life in Christ, whereas for all that many are condemned to eternal death, it is sayde therefore, bycause that all, as manye as doe enioye euerlastyng lyfe, doe not enioy it but in Chryste: so the same that is spoken, Epist.106.ad Vitalem. 1.Cor.15.

God will haue all men saued, whereas he willeth not to haue so manye saued, it is spoken therefore bycause that all which be saued are not saued but as he willeth, and in case these wordes of the Apostle may be any otherwise vnderstanded, so that for al that they maye not be contrarye to this most manifest truth, wherin we doe see so manye not saued, whereas men woulde and God willeth not. This sayth Augustine. Wherby we do see, that the wordes of the Apostle are not so to be taken that of all men God hathe refused none: but that hee would haue no sorte of men shut out from hys saluation and the knowledge of the truthe. Vnlesse wee doe sticke vnto this sense, it must needes follow that we must say eyther that the wil of God not only can be void, but that it is also made voyde, which is altogither wicked: or else ỹ none is damned, and doth perish, but that all generally be saued, yea, and that no man departeth out of thys lyfe, without the knowledge of the truth, which is openly false. They say how did he refuse some, when he woulde haue all men saued and come to the knowledge of the truth? Lette them aunswere me if this be the wyll of God that none be damned, whether is it accomplished or no: if it bee not accomplished, then it is vtterly vaine and voyde. Contrarye vnto that saying. All my will shall be done. How much better is it that Augustine sayeth in the place before cited. He that is almightye can not will in vayne, whatsoeuer he willeth: And in an other place: The omnipotency of the will of God, is alwayes inuincible. If it be accomplished, Ergo no man is damned, there is no man that doth not at some time come to the knowledge of the truthe. And who wyll allowe thys vnlesse he be madde? I saye nothyng, that they do expound the wordes of the Apostle contrarye to the Apostle. For if God wil haue no man condemned, howe dyd hee hate Esau beeyng in hys mothers wombe? Howe dyd hee when hee woulde shewe hys wrath and declare hys power, suffer with greate myldeneſſe of mynde the vessels of wrath appoynted vnto destruction? Howe dothe he harden whome hee wyll? Howe doth hee putte them ouer vnto a reprobate sense? Howe dothe hee sende the efficacie of errour that men doe credite lyes, so that it is very weake whyche is obiected by these men agaynst the manifest truth out of the wordes of the Apostle, if thou aske me when the reprobate bee refused of God, and howe and wherefore, & whether that they may not be altered, albeit I doe thinke that these demaundes bee verye curious, yet I will in fewe wordes say what may be thoughte of them.

Firſt, that for asmuch as the election of them that shoulde be saued was made before the constitution of the worlde, it followeth that the refusall of them whyche bee damned, was made also at the same season.

Secondlye, that they bee reprobate in the verye same that they bee not elected, and foreordeyned to lyfe. So the maister of the Sentences sayeth: that God did from euermore refuse some in not chosing them.

Thirdlye, that we oughte not to searche the cause of our refusall, bycause that it is secrete. It is a wonderfull poynte that suche as the election doth chose suche the calling off doth refuse. And Augustine sayeth, that the cause hereof maye be secrete, but that it can not bee vniuste.

Fourthly, lyke as the elect whiche bee called, when they tyme commeth doe beleeue, repente, bee iustifyed and saued, and can not fall from thys saluation, so wee muste graunt that the reprobate can neyther obey God when hee calleth them, nor beleeue, nor repente, nor bee iustifyed nor saued: and therefore it is that the maister of the Sentences in the place before cyted sayde, that none of them whyche bee predestined can bee damned, nor none of them whiche be reprobate can bee saued. And this we doe saye briefly, without the preiudice of anye person that thynketh otherwyse. But lette all godlye persons beware that they doe not rashly gyue sentence vppon the reprobate, but leaue the iudgemente of them vnto hym, who onely knoweth theyr names whome hee dyd diſſeuer from the number of the elect, before hee made Heauen and earthe, accordyng to the depthe of hys secrete and alwayes iuſt iudgemente. Lette vs as neere endeuoure as wee can, to saue all menne, prayse for all menne, louingly embrace all menne, and lette vs doe good to all menne, and not rashely despayre of anye man, for asmuche as it is hydden from vs what the Lord hathe fynallye determined of euerye man.

Of Repentaunce.

The order of this place.

THe grace of Gods goodneſſe through ỹ whiche synners bee called to repentance by the Gospel of the kyngdome of God dothe passe playnely all estimation. Wherefore this peece of Gods doctrine muſt needes be embraced of all sinners that bee desirous of theyr owne saluation, and with all theyr heart. And would God it had bin set forthe purely to the faithfull in the Church vntill these dayes. Nowe to talke orderly of it, we will see fyrſte what Repentaunce is, nexte from whence it is, thirdlye what bee the parts of it, fourthly what ỹ strength of it is, fiftly of what necessitie it is.

I. What Repentance is.

The Schollers.

THe Scholemen do defyne repentaunce after this wise. Repentaunce is a vertue, whereby we doe bewayle and hate the culs whyche we haue committed, with the purpose of amendment, and wil no more commit that which we may worthyly bewaile. And hereof they wil haue some to be solemne, some priuate, some publike, some after the commō sort when a man confesseth himselfe to a Priest, and some other enioyned by rule for anye deadly sinne, and so they do cal that Penance which is enioyned to the sinner from anye other person, whereas the worde of it selfe indeede, if you consider the nature of it, doth signifye the verye anguilsh and sozowe bzedde in the heart of him that doth amende, we doe call the same whiche the holy Scripture doth cal in Greeke μετάνοιαν, Amẽdment, when the sinner forsaking the folishnesse of sinning, dothe come home agayne, and alter his olde purpose of minde vnto a better way. Of whiche worde Lactantius writeth thus: He that dothe forthinke his doyng, doth vnderstand his old errour. Therefore the Greekes do cal it better & playnelyer μετάγνωσις, whych is euen the same that μετάνοια is, which we may well call Amendmẽt. For he whiche is sory for his misdoing, doth amende and reclayme hys mind from that madnesse he was in, and dothe chastice hymselfe of hys owne folly, and doth settle his minde to lyue better, and wyll be well ware, specially of that that he come not agayne in the same snares. This sayeth he. The penance or repentaunce of the hearte is a parcell of this amendment. The Prophet doth call the same that the Greekes doe call μετάνοιαν by an other worde after the custome of ỳ holy language, that is to say, the turning, meanyng vnto God. Of whiche the Angell spake vnto Zacharie the father of John Baptist, the Preacher of amendment and repentaunce, saying: And he shall turne many of the chyldren vnto their Lorde God. And therefore the Prophets do so oftentimes say that vnto the Israelites: Turne Israell vnto thy Lorde God. Item, Turne vnto me, and yon shall be saued. And, I will not the deathe of a sinner, but that he shoulde turne and liue. And, If I say to the wicked, Thou shalte dye, in case he returne from his sinne: whiche the common Latine translation hathe, and doe repentance of his sinne.

Penance.

Lactantius Lib. 6. Instit. Cap. 24. Of forethinking.

Exechiel. 33.

Whereforе by thys vnderstanding it belongeth vnto true repentaunce, that the sinner doe acknowledge his sinnes, and that he be hartely sory for that he hath sinned, that he do amend and change his minde, and the manners of his euill life, and turne vnto God, beleeuing hys promises, beseeching and hoping vppon mercye. And as for the worde, we neede not muche to striue. If a man list to take all these three wordes togyther, Repentance or Penance, Amendment, and Turning vnto God, I suppose he shall be better spedde touching the definition of the matter, than if he do stand only vpon the word of penance or repentance, specially in that sense, whiche ỳ Scholemen and Churchmen haue taken it, which we did briefly touche before: That penance which some men doe take, albeit it were according to some rules; and done openlye in solemne pomp, suche as some nations do vse sometimes, when they doe openlye scourge themselues naked through the stretes, may be counterfayte and come of Hypocrisie. But the same which we do describe vnto you, can abide no Hypocrisie, but it dothe consist only in the truth, without the which it is not only no repentance, but it is also a very mockerye in the sight of the Lord, whatsoeuer be outwardly blazed abroade, according vnto the constitutions of men and the rules of penaunce. The most high penitentiarie Christ, whe he gaue and defyned true penance or repen-

True and full repentance.

Repentance & amendment.

repentance, sayd: Goe, and sinne no more. And Ambrose sayth: True penaunce, is to cease from sinne. Dure Churchmasters of penance, do bring the worde of Repentance vnto that, that ỳ poore seduced people do thinke that they haue repented sufficientlye for their sinnes, in case they haue obserued the same which was appoynted thẽ for their penaunce, according to the number, maner, tyme and tide gyuen them by their goostly father: although they neuer felte one iote of true repentaunce in their hearte, nor yet did accomplish it in worke.

II. Of vvhence true Repentance doth come.

WE said in the place of Faith, that Repentance is bredde of Faith. And so we maye iudge righter, than to saye that it commeth of the feare of punishment. For we do speake here of the repentaunce of the elect, and such as shall be saued, not of the same, whereby the reprobate doe repent of their euill doings, when they be touched with the feeling of the iust iudgemente of Gods wrath, of damnation, and eternall death: the example whereof was declared in Judas the traytour. Like as the reprobate dare not sinne for feare of punishmente, and not for loue of vertue, so whē they do feele the feare of it, they do finde also a remorse of the sinne in their heart, and so doe shewe it also forth: which they would neuer do, in case that they coulde be perswaded that they shoulde goe quite vnpunished. But the elect that be of God, do repent of their sinne as sone as they haue knowledge or vnderstanding that they haue offended God. Which doth trouble thẽ exceedingly although they should scape withall scotfree.

Augustine sayeth, Grace doth goe before the merite of repentance. Item, No mã doth repent of his sinne, but by some warning of Gods calling. Therfore true repentance commeth firste of the grace of God, secondly of the worde of Gods calling and warning, thirdly of the faithe of the word, without the which the firste two shuld be vtterly voide touching the effect, albeit they be of thẽselues most good. No doubte, it is a greate good thing to be called to amẽdment by the grace of God: but it is offered to the reprobate to no purpose: who although they do seeme to repente at the firste, yet they doe not continue in it, bycause they do not hartely & truly receiue the grace of God, but colorably and for a season, whiche the Apostle did feare in thẽ, whome he aduised that they should not receiue the grace of God in vayn. There be many examples, whereby it is declared that repentaunce commeth of Gods grace by the admonition of ỳ worde, and of Faith. So they repented whiche beleued the worde of grace, spoken by the Apostle Peter. So Dauid repented his sinnes, when hee was warned of them by the Prophet Nathan. And yet for al that Gods hand is not tied vp, but that he may strike into mens harts the feeling of repentance, eyther by some scourges, or some other terrible chaunce: as that was whyche chaunced to Paule, and to the keeper of the prison.

Augustinus libro epist. ad Rom.

V Whereof true repentance commeth.

2. Cor. 6.

Acts. 2.

Act. 9. 16. The common vvay of calling to repentance.

But that maner of calling to repentance is not cõmon, but very seldome, and of some speciall meaning: but that whiche is common and vsed according to the generall institution of God, is when sinners be called at the tyme appoynted by God, vnto faith and repentance, and to true saluation also, by the Gospell of Grace. The Apostle sayeth: Doest thou despise the riches of his goodnesse, sufferance, and mildnesse, knowing that the goodnesse of God doth allure thee to repentance? Ergo, we must giue it to the goodnesse of God that we be callled to repentance. And to Timothe: The Lordes seruaunt maye not wrangle, but be milde towardes all men, ready to teache, bearing gently with the euill, instructing them whiche doe withstande him, in case God may once giue them repentaunce to know the truth, and to returne from the snare of the deuill, &c. Therefore repentance is both the gifte of God, and is giuen also by the ministerie of the worde, doctrine, and instruction, with the worckyng also of the holy spirite. And this the Ministers of the Gospell of God ought to knowe, to the intent they may be the gentler towardes sinners, and apply theyr Ministerie with continuall trauayle and payne.

Rom. 2.

2. Tim. 2.

III. What be the partes of Repentance.

The Scolemen.

Forasmuch as we do sinne when we do offend God, in hart, word and deede, the Scholemen doe make three partes of repentance, as correspondent to the same, that is to saye, Contrition of the heart, Confession of the mouth, and Satisfaction of the worke. But as I sayde before, the contrition of the hearte is the verye repentance. But they do take repentance for the whole and perfecte repentaunce, whereof they doe make these to be the parts.

Therefore the maister of the Sentences doth say: There be three things to be obserued in the perfection of repentaunce, the compunction of the hearte, the confession of the mouthe, and the satisfaction of the worke. So they meane, that the same is a perfect repentance whiche is made vppe with these three partes.

But we doe comprehende it all in the contrition and sorowe of the spirit, in the alteration of the mind, and in the turning vnto God. The Apostle doth call this sorrow the same whiche maketh to repentaunce and saluation. For the same sorow (sayth he) whiche is according vnto God, doth worke repentance to an assured saluation. And this peece of repentaunce is of no small waighte in the sight of God, as we may perceyue by that which Dauid saith: A sorrowful spirite is a sacrifice vnto God, the contrite and humble heart God will not despise. There is included in this sorow a shame also of the sinne committed, and a lowlinesse of mind condemning and setting hymselfe at naught.

2 Upon that, there ensueth an alteration of the minde, whereby the sinner is farre otherwise disposed than he was before. So he dothe change and alter a newe purpose of his former life, in so much that he becommeth a new man. Zacheus being so altered, sayde: Lord I do gyue the one halfe of my goodes to the poore: and in case I haue deceyued any man in any thing, I giue him, four times as much for it. How far wide was he nowe by the benefite of repentance, frō that that he was before?

3 Thirdly, there doth accompanye this sorowe and chaunge of mynde, the turning to God also. For lyke as the sinners minde is turned from God, is farre off, & strange vnto him as longe as it is giuen to the desire of sinne, so it is by repentance turned vnto God, and doth now feare, worship, and serue the same, whome he before despised. These be the partes that we make of repentance, and yet for all that, we do not refuse the confession of sinnes, as farforth as it hath testimonie out of the scriptures. Therefore we will briefly note a fewe points for this present. For vpon Matthew we haue spoken largelier of it.

Of Confesion of sinnes out of holy scriptures.

We doe finde two maner of confessions of sinnes in the Scriptures. One which is made to God, an other to our neighbour. Touching the first, the Prophet saith: I haue sayd, I wil confesse mine owne vnrighteousnesse against my selfe, & thou forgauest the wickednesse of my sinne. And the Publican sayde: God be mercifull vnto me, which am a sinner. This kinde of confession may be made three maner of ways.

1 First alone, as the Publican did, of whom we spake: secondly in common, as when the Church saith with one accorde: Lord we haue sinned against thee. See the example hereof in the bookes of Kings in the wordes of Salomon. We maye take herewithall that confession of the church which is openly made by the wordes of the Minister. Thirdly, it is made by them which doe confesse their sin in presence of the whole congregation. The example wherof is read in Iosue. Where he that hadde stolen of the goodes which were damned at Hiericho, when he was founde out by the lot, he saide: Truely I haue sinned against my Lord, the Lorde of Israell, and haue done thus and thus. Such an open confession was wont to be vsed in the Church, &c.

1. Reg. 7.

Iosue. 7.

3. Reg. 8.

The Seconde confession, is when a man hath offended his neighbour, and repenteth himselfe of it, & doeth confesse it vnto him, and desireth him to forgiue him. Of this Christ maketh mention, saying: If thy brother doe offende thee, rebuke him: and in case he do repent himselfe for it, forgiue it him. And if he do offende thee seuen times, and turne to thee seuen times a day, and saye: I am sorry for it, thou shalt forgiue him. The like matter is in Matthew. If thou doe offer thy gifte at the Altar, and doest remember that thy brother hathe a matter against thee, leaue thy gifte there before the aulter, and goe and be reconciled to thy brother. And this Iames mente when he wrote: Confesse your sinnes one to another, and praye one for an other, that you may be saued.

Luc. 17.

Matthew. 5.

Iam. 5.

By these two kindes of Confessions, we be reconciled bothe to God and to our brethren also: which reconcilement can not be done without the forgiuenesse of sinnes. God forgiueth him whiche confesseth, and

We be reconciled to God & our brethren by two kindes of Confession.

Psalm. 32.

saith vnto him: God be merciful vnto me, which am a sinner. As it appeareth in the Publicane, and the wordes of Dauid, when he sayth: I haue said, I will confesse my vnrighteousnesse against me to the Lord, and thou forgauest the wickednesse of my sinne. He doth also pardon him which is reconciled with his brother, for a token of which pardon, he saith: And then come and offer thy gift. Wouldo to God, both these kindes of cõfessions had taried to be wel vsed in the church, so that when we were reconciled with God and oure brethren, we might haue more quiet and lesse offence and trouble.

Of the Popish Confession, which men cal auricular.

That auricular Confession is not of Gods lawe.

WE saye that this was neither of Gods law, nor vsed of the tyme in the Apostles days and the fathers which followed them, nor that it auaileth any whit to the forgiuenesse of sinnes. That it is not grounded vpon Goddes lawe and commaundement, it appeareth wel ynough by that, that neither Christ neither his Apostles gaue any commaundement of it. They doe alledge this out of Iohn: Receyue ỹ holy Ghoast, theyr sinnes whome you doe forgiue, they be forgiuen: and theirs which you do with holde, shall be with holden. Iohn. 20.

And in Matthewe: I will giue thée the keyes of the kingdom of heauen, and what soeuer thou doest binde vpon the earth, shal be bounde also in heauen, and what soeuer thou doest lose vpon the earthe, shall be losed also in heuen: and the same Christe sayd to the leper: Go shewe thy selfe to the Priestc. And Iames saithe: Confesse your sins one to another, and Iohn: If we confesse our sinnes, he is faithfull and iuste to pardon our sinnes, and to washe vs from all wickednesse. They do go aboute to proue by these places of holy Scripture, that Auricular and Popishe confession is grounded vppon Gods lawe and commaundement. Lette vs sée therefore whether they do fully & to the purpose proue that which they affirme. First it is a clere case, that these wordes of Christ to the Apostles, be not spoken of Auricular confession, but of the office of the Apostles, whereunto they shoulde be sente into the worlde to preache the Gospell. For the which purpose he sayde also vnto them: As my father sente me, so I do sende you also, and then breathed vppon them, and sayd: Receyue the holy Ghoste, their sinnes whose you forgiue, &c. They were appoynted to preache repentaunce and forgiuenesse of sinnes in his name. And they whiche shoulde beleue this preaching, shoulde be saued, and they which shuld not beleue, shuld be subiect vnto condemnation: as he saide in the laste of Marke, the verye same he declared here in other wordes, saying: Whose sinnes soeuer you do forgiue, they be forgiuen thē: and whose sinnes you do withholde, they be withholden. Therefore the Apostles did binde the vnfaithfull, and they did lose them which repented, and did beleue the preaching of the gospell, wherby they did denoūce vnto all beléeuers forgiuenesse of their sins vnder the name of Christ. What hath Auricular confession to do here? They prelle vs that ỹ Lord saide: Whose sinnes you forgiue, &c. we do laye vnto them also the same that goeth before: As my father sent me, so I do sende you. Item, Receiue the holy spirit. I doe not reade that Christ sent any Confessionaries into the worlde, to searche the secretes of mens hartes, but I do reade that he sent Apostles, and that he gaue thē the holy spirit, by whose instincte and strengthe, they shoulde openlye preache the Gospel of the kingdome, throughout the worlde.

Secondly, we shape them the same aunswere that we did to the other. For it is all one thing. That which in this place he did promise vnto Peter, he did in the other place after his resurrection performe vnto him and to all the reste of the Apostles. Ierome saith vpon Esaye, We be euery one of vs bound with the ropes of sinne, which ropes and bandes the Apostles also can lose, followinge their master, who sayde vnto them: What things soeuer you do lose vpon the earth, they shal be losed also in heauen. And the Apostles do lose them by the word of God, and the testimonies of scripture and exhortations, by their counselling of menne to vertue. And also in another place he saith: The bishops and Priestes vnderstanding not this place, doe take somewhat vpon them of the countenance of the Pharisées, that they wil either condemne the innocent, eyther surmise that they do lose the harmfull and guiltye: whereas with God there is no accompt made of the sentence or iudgement of the Priestes, but of the lyfe of the parties.

Thirdlye, as for that whiche the Lord sayd: Verely I saye vnto you, whatsoeuer you do lose vpō ỹ earth, &c. it is not spoken to the Apostles and ministers of the worde only, but vnto the church, yea and to euerye one of the faithfull, as these thinges which goe before and come after do proue: And Theophilactus doth expounde it this waye: If thou when thou art offended do take him (saith he) which hath don thée wrong, as a publican and a gentil, he shal be such a one also in heuen: and if thou doest forgiue him, he shall be pardoned also in heauen. For not onelye these things which the Priestes do lose be losed, but whatsoeuer matters we also, when we haue wrong don vs, doe binde or lose, the same also be bound or losed. This sayth he. And Augustine expoundeth the wordes of the Lord in like wise, saying: Thou hast begon to repute thy brother as a Publican, thou hast bounde him vpon the earth, but sée that thou hast bound him aright. For iustice doeth breake wrongfull bands. And when thou hast reformed the matter and agréed with thy brother, thou hast losed him in the earthe. When thou hast losed him in the earth, he shal be losed also in heauen. You maye sée how the fathers sawe not ỹ in these wordes which the Romanistes began afterwardes to wring out of them, but as though the vnderstanding of them were very harde, they doe pretende that the meaning of them is declared by the practise of the church: and they do call that the Practise, which they might more rightly call the Seducement and tyranny of the Romish route. In Matth. ser. 26. cap. 18.

Fourthlye, it is manifest ynough, to what purpose the Lord said to the Matth. 8.

lepre

lepze which was made cleane by him, See you tel no man, but go and shewe thy selfe to the Priest, both by the wozde of shewing, and by that also which he added, saying: & offer foz a witnes to them. It is plaine ynough by this place, how the mainteyners of the Romishe tyrannye do wrest the scriptures. By the ozder of lawe, this lepze was sequestred from the companye of Gods people by the Priestes, and by the lawe he coulde not returne to accompany the people of God, vnlesse he were allowed to be cleane by the iudgemente of the Priestes. Therefoze when the Lozd had made him cleane, he badde him goe to the Priest: not to confesse his sinnes, noz to be cleansed by him, but that when he had acknowledged and alowed his cleannesse which was restozed him, he shoulde offer, accozding to the ozder of the lawe, and that the oblation might condemne the malice of the Priestes, in that they blasphemed him which cleansed the lepzes. I beseech you, what hold hath the mainteyners of Popish confession of this place? If they thinke that they haue anye, yet this is the conclusion of it, that they only which be clensed must goe to the Priestes, and shew them not their sinnes, but their iustification which they haue receyued of Christ by fayth, to be allowed by their testimonie.

Leuit. 14.

Iames. 5.

Fiftly, that place of James: Confesse your sinnes one to an other, doth concerne as we sayd before, that confession, when one brother doeth confesse and yelde to an other, that he hathe offended, him and desyreth pardon: he sayth not Confesse you euery man to his priest, and take absolution of them: but he sayethe, confesse one to an other, and praye one foz an other, that you may be saued. If this was spoken of auricular confession, it foloweth that the priest must as well confesse him selfe to the lay mens eares, and the lay man to pray foz the priest to be saued, as wel as the laye man to confesse himselfe to the eares of the Priestes, and the Priest to pray foz the laye man. And if to pray, be here as muche to saye as to absoyle, then it doeth not lesse belong to the laye man to absoyle the Priestes, than it doth to the Priest to absoyle the laye man. I thinke that the Papistes will rather lose al the matter, than to take this condition oz offer made them, at James handes.

This Duns sawe, who wzote this vpon that place. He thinketh that nother James gaue this foz a commandement, noz did sette it forth as receiued from Christ. Foz first, from whence should he haue authozitie to binde the whole Church, whereas he was Bishop but of the church of Ierusalem onely? Vnlesse you wil say, that the same Church was the principall church at the beginning, and so in conclusion, that he was the principall Byshop, which the Romishe roystkers wil neuer yeld vnto. Again he saith not that the confession is to be made moze to a Priest than to an other. Foz he addeth immediatlye, and praye one foz an other, that you maye be saued, where no man will say, that he made it as a commaundement as of God: but his meaning is, that as in that wozd confesse one to another, There is a persuasion to humblenesse, that is to say, that we should confesse vs to oure neighbours that we be sinners, accozding vnto that saying: If we say that we haue no sinne, &c. This saith D. Duns, whome foz his singular wit, they do call the Subtil Doctoz. What is then the Imagination of Eckius, when he saith: Is it true that James did no precisely determine to whome we shoulde confesse vs, foz as much as Christ had alreadye expressed them that do absoyle sinners, therefoze it was ynough foz James to expresse that which was necessarye to absolution, that is to say, Confession, not telling particularly of the iudge. Howe did he not expresse, who and to whom we shuld confesse, when he doth say one to an other? This Duns sawe, Eckius sawe it not, oz els dissembled & would not see it, to hide the truth which he knew well ynough.

Li. 4. Dist. 17. quæst. 3.

Sixtlye, the same which they doe alledge out of John: If we doe confesse our sinnes, &c. it serueth foz that confession wherby we humbly in the sight of God doe confesse our selues to be sinners, with the Publican in the Gospell. So Augustine doth expounde it: If thou tell not God what thou art, God doth condemne that whiche he shall finde in thee. Wilt thou not that he shal condemne thee, condemne thou thy selfe. Wilt thou haue him pardon thee, acknowledge thou thy self that thou mayest say vnto God: Turne thy face from my sinnes. And say also the wozdes vnto him of the same Psalme: Foz I doe acknowledge my wickednesse. This saith he. Whereby it appeareth well ynough, that these wozdes ought to be vnderstanded of the confession of our sinnes to be made before God, as the same also which foloweth doth well declare, when he sayth: He is faithfull and iuste, so that he will forgiue vs oure sinnes: which wozdes can be no wayes referred to the Priestes, but vnto God himselfe only. Foz the Apostle doth commende him vnto vs to be such a one, to the intent we may the sooner be brought to confesse our sinnes vnto him.

Scotus.

Lo these be the weake arguments of the Papistes, whereby they haue driuen the consciences of simple folkes to Auricular confession, vnder the colour that it is Gods lawe and commaundement. Duns sawe that it coulde not be surelye grounded vpon scriptures, and therfoze he made this foz a verye doubtfull conclusion of that matter, saying: Therefoze either we must stande to this, that it is of Gods law set forth by the Gospell of John in the xx. chapter, either if the will not serue, we muste saye that it is of Gods lawe Positiue, as giuen by Christ to the Apostles, but yet set forth to the Church, by the Apostles without any Scripture, as the church holdeth also many things set foz the vnto it from the Apostles by mouth only without scripture, the foundation whereof is that of John: And many other thinges Iesus did, &c. This saythe he. When he sawe that the holy Scripture could not be well applyed vnto this matter, he shifted me in this deuise of the positiue law without writing, which is as easily shaken of, as it is rashly alledged, and can no wyse proued.

The Gloser of the Decrees. D. 3. dist. 5. cap. In parte.

And therefoze the Gloser of the Decrees sayth this: But it is better sayde,

saydo, that confession was institute by some vniuersall tradition of the church, rather than by the authoritie of the newe or olde Testament. Item in the same place. Therefore confession is necessary for meme, among vs which be Latines, but not among the Greekes, for as much as there is not come to them any suche tradition. This saith he. But where, how, and when, was there such a tradition made of the vniuersal church? If the vniuersal Church did so order it, how did it not binde the Greekes but the Latines only? Doeth the vniuersall church consiste only in the Latines? Such vaine deuises as this is they be all, whereby they trauaile to establish this confession, imagined to deceyue the simple, whereas it is a playne case, that it is nothing lesse than Gods law, and commandement of God.

That auricular confession was not vsed in the fathers times.

And that it was not generally vsed in the tymes nother of the Apostles nother of the fathers which followed them, it is manyfeste, firste by that that there is founde no mention of it in the writing, nother of the Apostles, nother of the Fathers. As for that that Socrates writeth of the penitentiarie Priest, of the confession of sinnes ordayned, because of the departure of the Nabatians, and abrogate afterwardes vnder Nectarius of Constantinople for a haynous trespasse of a Deacon. Eckius himselfe is a witnesse, that it was nothing touching this auricular confession, but the same which was of open penance, of which matter see the Triparte historie. Secondly the writings also of the chief of the fathers do sufficientlye teache vs, that this confession was not vsed in the church in their days. Chrysostome saith thus: I do not say to the, that thou shalt disclose thy self openly, or accuse thy selfe vnto others: but I will haue thee obey the Prophet which saith: Disclose thy lyfe vnto the Lord. Therefore confesse thy faultes before God, pronounce thy sins with prayer to ỹ true iudge, not in tongue, but in remembrance of thy conscience, and then hope that you maye haue mercye, if you haue always the sinnes in minde, &c. And againe in an other place: Tell thy sinnes that you maye be ridde of them. If you be ashamed to tell any man how thou hast sinned, tell them daply in thine owne harte. I bidde not bidde thee tel them to thy fellow seruaunt, to twite thee withall, and put them in thy teeth, tel them vnto God which doth make them whole. For though you tell them not, doeth not God know them? &c. Again he saith: It is not necessarye nother nowe to confesse our selues before witnesse. Let this seking out of thy sinnes be in thy thought, & let this iudgement be without witnesse. Let God onely see thee when thou dost confesse thee, god which doth not twite thee wt thy sins, but doth vnburden thee of them, &c. And Augustine saith: Then what haue I to do with men to heare my confessiõs, as though they were able to heale my diseases? They be a curious kinde of men that will seke to knowe an other bodyes lyfe, and be slowe to amend their own: Why doe they seke to heare of me what I am, which wil not heare of an other man what they be? And howe doe they know when they do heare me tell of my selfe, whether that I do say true or no? for no man doth know what is don within man, but the spirit of man which is in man: This saith he. Nowe lette the reader, if he be wise, thinke with him selfe: In case that auricular confession had bin vsed in the tymes of Chrysostome in the Greke churches, and in Augustines times in the Latine churches, whether it might agree therewithal, that they wrote such thinges contrary to the custome and determination of ỹ whole Churche, and whether they would not haue rather counselled all menne to confesse their sinnes to the Priestes? I suppose that those men would haue written far otherwise, if the same had bin vsed in their times, which was after their dayes conueied and brought into the church.

Hist. Eccles. lib. 5. cap. 19.

lib. 11. cap. 35.

Chrysost. ad Hebr. Homil.

In Psal. Homil.

Homil. 31. in Ioh.

Aug. de Decem cap.

The beginning of Auricular Confession.

But some bodye peraduenture that readeth this will aske me, from whence came this confession at the first? My opinion is, that whē the sharpnesse of the open confession and penaunce coulde be no longer kept after the olde accustomed vse in the Church, partly bicause of great personages which came into Christes faythe, and partelye bycause of the sluggishe and sinfull lyfe of the Bysshoppes and Priestes, it beganne to fall firste from a publike and an open confession to the priuate and secrete shrifte, continuyng yet a whyle after the open order of penaunce, and so by little and little they came both to be secrete. In this sorte I suppose that this confession, whereof wee speake, crept in by peece meale into the Churche, and came to passe the easlyer, bycause it was layde vppon the Gentils also by the Priestes of Idols, As it appeareth by the history of Lysander, whom the Priest commaunded when he sought to the oracle in Samothrace, to confesse him selfe of that which he had most wickedlye done all his lyfe tyme: of whome he asked, whether that he shoulde do it at his commaundement, or at the commaundemente of the Gods? And when the Priestе made him aunswer, and saide, of the Gods. Than get thee hence saith he, and I will tell it to the Goddes, if they demaunde me of it. We do see by this history, by what spirit this Auriculare confession was charged vppon mens consciences. It is brought in not only by mans tradition, but by ỹ moste wicked and craftie counsell of Satan also, as a passing number of the mischiefes whiche are sprong vpon the same, doe declare as cleare as day.

Vide de pœn. Distinct. 1. cap. Quamuis. The saying of Lysander to the idolatrous Priests.

There is an other point behinde yet to prone, that it neither doth good neither is requisite to the forgiuenesse of sinnes. Herein I will bring nothing of mine owne head, but the Bishop of Romes owne Decrees do sufficiently proue it. For we do read in them, in this wise. As the authoritie doth testifie, the wil is rewarded, not the worke. For the will is in the contrition of the harte, but the work is in the confession of ỹ mouth. So that it is a cleare mater that sins be forgiuen by the contrition of the harte, and not by the confession of the mouth. And in an other place: The very same is proued (sayth he)

That Auriculare confession doeth not auayle to the forgiuenesse of sinnes. De Pœnitent. Dist. 1. can. Sicut.

by

The Decrees of Popes. Can. Facilius.

by that authoritie of the Prophet: In what houre soeuer the sinner be conuerted and do bewaille, &c. For it is not sayde, Do confesse with his mouth, but only, If he be conuerted and do bewaille, he shall liue the lyfe and not dye. And again: As it is proued saith he, we be raised vp through grace before our confession, & made the children of lyght, it doth appeare most playnely, that sinne is forgiuen by the contrition of the harte onelye, without confession of mouth. Item: Therefore sinne is forgiuen in confession, which is knowen to be forgiuen already. So that confession is made for the declaration of repentaunce, and not for the obtainement of forgiuenesse. And in the same Canon in the glose: There be two confessions, the inwarde and the outwarde. Of the Inwarde whiche is made to God, it is saide, that without confession, sinnes be not forgiue. Item: Therefore sayth he, this secrete confession of lighte and secrete sinnes, is to be yelded vnto GOD. But those thinges which be spoken of the open satisfaction or confession of the mouth, are to be vnderstanded of open and manifest crimes. And in the same place: Therefore by former authorities it is proued, that for open crymes there must be yelded open satisfaction. But it is not proued, that the hidden sinne shoulde of necessitie be confessed to the Priestе, and to be cleansed at his arbitrement. Agayne in an other place: The confession therefore (sayth he) which is made to God only which is for iuste men, doth purge sinnes: but the same which is made to the Priest, doeth teache how sinnes be purged. These Cano. Quinatus.

Canon Omnis.

Canon. Quis Aliquando.

Can. Quis dum Deo.

and suche other like places are wrested and wrong out of them by the very strengthe of the truth, and put into the Decrees, whereby the Papistes be sufficiently ouercome, that it is a very deceite to ascribe forgiuenesse of sins vnto Auriculare confession. Thus I thinke it is manifest, that it is neither of Gods lawe and commaundement, neither that it was vsed in the times of the Apostles and fathers, neither that it auayleth to the forgiuenesse of sinnes. Wherfore ỳ Canon of Innocentius the thirde in the Decretals, made 356. yeares agone, that is to saye: All faithfull folkes of bothe kindes after they came to ỳ yeres of discretion, shal once a yeare at the least alone faithfullye confesse themselues to their owne Priestе, and endeuor of their owne strengthe to fulfill the penaunce enioyned them, &c. is not like an Apostles of Christ, but like a Tiraunts saying, which of a wylde ralhnelle, tormenting the consciences of the faithfull with more plagues and scourges, than I wil now speake off. And thus much of Confession: now let vs see for Satisfaction.

The Scholemen doe call Satisfaction the worke of Penaunce, enioyned by the Priestе after the Auricular confession. And here they make much adoe, that the satisfaction be nother lesse nor lighter than counteruailinge the waighte of the Sinne. This doctrine of satisfaction doeth exceedingly darken the clearenesse of the grace of Christ: it doeth make mens consciences either fully assured, when they suppose that they haue satisfied: either it doth piteously tormente them, when they can not not tell by what tyme they haue satisfied in the sight of God for one sin: much lesse for all their sinnes. Besides that it hath opened not one gap, but all doores, windowes, arches, &c. to the Popes markets, to gayne vpon pardons; and for the traficke of Priestes masses, to deliuer soules out of Purgatorye. Wherefore all godly doe worthyly abhorre it. The doctrine of the Gospell doeth denounce vnto vs pardon of our sins, by the bloude of Christe, by the shedinge whereof, there is satisfaction made, not onlye for ours, but for the sins also of the whole worlde. And where soeuer this grace doeth take place, that satisfaction hath nothing to doe, we coulde beare with them if they sayde, that lyke as the saythe in Christ is reputed for righteousnesse to the beleeuers, according to the example of Abraham, so Repentance is of mercy and frankelye imputed for satisfaction, as we maye perceyue it was in the Prodigall sonne, whose returne and repentaunce, his father of his righte fatherlye clemencye did accept for a meete sufficient satisfaction, & sought nothing further of him. This meaning of satisfaction doeth derogate nothing from the grace of God, but doeth exceedingly auaunce it. It maketh nothing for the gayne and inglings of the Popes markets, but it maketh muche to the quieting of our consciences. Wherfore we wil sticke vnto it, and we will leaue these trumpery wares of counterfaite satisfactions to the Pope and his Priestes and Fryers.

Of Satisfaction. How satisfaction derogate vnto Christ.

There is an other kynde of satisfaction, wherby euery man standeth bounde to make his neighbour amendes, whome he hath harmed or hindered: and yet we doe not denye that satisfaction also, whereby they be bound to satisfy to the church in the true fruit of reformation, which hath in anye open crimes offended it. But the merchantes of the Church doe make small accompt of this mater, and yet the fathers were very sore and sharply set to the obseruaunce of it.

IIII. What is the efficacie of true repentaunce.

VVhat repentaunce doth vvork in the reprobate and in the elect.

The vertue of repentaunce is so greate, that it is not possible to recounte it in all points, wherof we nede not to search all things to the vttermoste which it doeth produce, bring to passe and worke: but we wil note those things onlye which we do presently remember. Some thinges it doeth worke and bringe to passe, commonlye as well in the reprobate as in the electe: againe certayne things in the elect and not in the reprobate: thirdlye some things in the reprobate, and not in the electe, according to the diuersitie of the wrath & grace of God.

To openeth the eyes of the minde.

1 First it doth commonly open the eyes of the mynde, that we maye see and vnderstand, how naughtilye, fondlye and wickedly we haue done. When we sinne we be blynde, and that is by the deuise of Satan, to the intent he woulde not onelye leade vs into all kindes of errours and euyls, but to kepe vs there also when we be once in. The place of the Apostle is knowen, wher he spea-

Ephes. 4.

keth of the darkeneſſe, the dimmed vnderſtanding, ignorance, and blindneſſe, which he doeth attribute vnto them that doe liue out of Chriſt, in ſinnes. Repentaunce doth driue away all this darkeneſſe, and openeth the eyes of the minde, ſo that this point needeth no examples, for it is open ynough of it ſelfe.

It vexeth the mynde.

2 Secondlye, it doth tormente the minde, and oppreſſeth it with the griefe, whiche it doeth ſo earneſtlye conceyue vpon the conſcience of ſin, that it can hardlye be gotten awaye. And therefore ſome woulde call it Penaunce, bycauſe it is a greate payne. Some called it Compunction, ſome Contrition. This kynde of ſorrow Dauid felte as we maye ſee the xxxij. Pſalme, and in many other, and in Peter alſo when he came to himſelfe and wept bitterlye: and in the woman ſinner, when ſhe waſhed the Lords feete with hir teares. And Iudas the traytor was not voyde of ſuche ſorrowe, when he hurled the monye backe agayne into the temple and ſayde: I haue ſinned betraying the innocent bloude, as his ende did proue. And the wicked ſhall feele incomparable griefes of this repentance in the daye of iudgement: of whome we reade in this ſorte: And the wicked ſeing it, ſhall be troubled with an horrible feare, and ſhall be aſtonyed, wayling for the anguiſh of their ſpirit, and ſhall ſay to them ſelues, repenting: Theſe be they, whom ſometyme we had in mockage, &c.

Pſalm. 32.

Sap. 5.

3 Thirdly, it condemneth that which is done, and maketh the ſinner iudge him ſelfe worthye to bee punished. Cayn ſayde: My wickednelle is greater than that I may deſerue pardon. Lo thou doeſt caſte me out this day, &c. So Iudas did alſo condemne his owne facte of ſinne, and punished him ſelfe with his owne hande. And Dauid repentinge, did in the ſpalmes condemne ſome of his own doinges.

It condemneth that which is done. Genes. 4.

4 Fourthlye, it changeth the mind, and maketh menne to miſlike that which pleaſed them before, and to be farre otherwiſe diſpoſed than they were. This followeth vppon that which went before, although not in all men alike. And this repentaunce doeth worke as well in the reprobats, as in the elect.

5 Fiftlye, it doth delyuer the elect out of the ſnares of the Deuill, by whom they be kept in holde, vntill tyme of their callinge. In caſe peraduenture ſayth the Apoſtle, God do giue them repentaunce to know the truth, & that they may recouer themſelues out of the ſnares of the deuil, by whom they were kept in priſon at his own will: which words can not concerne the reprobate and wicked, vnto whome the gifte of this repentaunce, amendement, and deliuerye, is not giuen.

It deliuereth the elect out of the ſnares of the Deuill. 2. Tim. 2.

6 Sixtly, it doth reconcile them vnto God which be amended, and doth reſtore them vnto his Grace. This grace and attonement is preached by the Goſpell vnder the name of Chriſt. And for this cauſe it is called by ſome men the ſeconde chiſte, for a borde to ſwimme vpon, and to ſaue vs when our ſhip is loſt. And it maketh vs cleane before God, as though we had neuer ſinned at all. Wherfore Eſaye ſayth: In caſe thy ſinnes be as redde as ſkarlet, they ſhall ſhall be made as white as ſnowe.

It doth reconcile vnto God. Eſay. 1.

7 Seuenthly, it doth reſtore that which was amiſſe done, and doth renewe the trade of lyfe. So Zacheus, which before his amendement gaped for other mens goodes, did after he began to repent once, beſtow of his own vpon the poore.

8 Eightly, it maketh them humble and lowly. Therfore after that Dauid had ſayde, A troubled ſpirit is a ſacrifice vnto God, he added: a contrite hart and an humble, Lord thou wilt not deſpiſe. So he ioyned repentance and humbleneſſe together.

9 Ninthly, it maketh them milde alſo toward others ſinners. For like as the opinion that the phariſees had of their owne righteouſneſſe, doeth make them pufte vp and proude, ſo the acknowledging of ourc ſinnes doeth make vs gentle towards other ſinners. He that is a ſeuere & proude iudge of other mens ſinnes, doth yet in no wiſe knowe his owne. Seyng therfore that repentance doth bringe ſo manye good thinges, it is not vnworthyly ſpoken of Chriſt, that ther is greater ioye with the Angels of heauen for one ſinner which doth repent, than for nynetye and nyne iuſt folkes.

10 Tenthly, as touching the attainement of the grace of God and of reconciliation, it is vtterlye vneffectual in the reprobate. For it is not true repentaunce in them, but falſe and counterfaite. We read of Eſau, that he founde no corner of repentance, though he ſought it with the teares of his eyes. Nor he did not truely repent, nor he coulde not recouer the bleſſing which he had loſt, nor the alteration of the ſentence that was giuen, although he wepte for it. And Iudas repented his treaſon, but he attayned not the grace of reconcilement.

11 Eleuenthly, the greater and ſharper it is, the more it doeth prouoke the wicked vnto deſperation. So Cayn ſayd: My ſinne is greater than that I maye be worthye of forgiueneſſe. And this is tried alſo by the example of Iudas, who vnleſſe he had bene driuen by the greatneſſe of the repentaunce vnto deſperation, he would not haue choked & hanged himſelfe. There hath bin many examples ſhewed of this matter.

It bringeth the vvicked to deſperation. Genes. 4.

12 Laſtelye, what doth the repentance of the reprobate elſe, but giue them as it were a taſte whiles they doe liue yet in this fleſhe, of the euerlaſting puniſhment, which they ſhall ſuffer after this life? So that a man may aright call it the beginning of the paines to come. Thus I ſuppoſe, we haue in fewe wordes ſet forthe, what the ſtrengthe and efficacie of Repentaunce is, as well in the wicked as in the elect.

It giueth the vvicked a taſte of the eternall puniſhment.

V. What the neceſſitie of Repentaunce is.

In vvhat ſorte of neceſſytie repentance is neceſſary.

LIke as before when we ſpake of the neceſſitie of fayth, we declared of what kind of neceſſarie things it was, ſo we muſt doe alſo in this place. There is one neceſſity of compulſion, and other of naturall conſequencie, and an other of condition. We do ſaye, that repentance is neceſſary nother in the neceſſitie of cõpulſiõ, nother of naturall cõſequency, but in the neceſſitie of condition: in which caſe we ſayd, that fayth alſo is necessary. No man is constrained against his will to repent, no man is brought necessarily by natural consequente to repent (for then all men generally should repent) but repentance is continually necessary, which I thinke I shal be able to declare in fewe wordes.

For the corruption of our nature.

1 First, it is a cleare matter that we be so corrupt of nature, that ther is no man that can liue in this fleshe infected with the poyson of sinne, without sinnes, no not they whiche doe by the speciall instincte of God giue themselfe to righteousnesse, and do walke in the lawe of God bothe daye and night. Wherevpon that was sayde: There is no man that doth good, and doth not sinne. Much lesse they are able to do so, which be altogether carnall and far from the fealyng of GOD. Therefore by cause of this corruption of our nature, repentance is necessary for vs, wherby we may reforme our faults, and that which is amisse in vs. For repentaunce is the amendemente of euill doynges, and returning to innocencie: euen as it is necessary for a writer, though he do vse to wryte neuer so diligently, yet it is necessary for him by reading ouer again those things which he hath once written, to recognise and amende the faultes which hathe escaped him. Therefore seing that we muste haue generally all this necessitie towardes the reformation of our life, it followeth that repentaunce is necessary, generally for all.

Ecclesi. 7. 1. Reg. 8.

A Similitude.

For the necessitie of the goodnesse of God.

2 Secondlye, for as muche as no man can be saued without the goodnesse of God, repentaunce is necessarye for vs also for this cause. For Goddes clemencye and goodnesse is suche, that there is no way vnto it but for them which do repent, ỹ is to saye, that no mans sinnes be forgiuen whiche do not repent that they haue sinned. And without the forgiuenesse of sinnes, there can not fal out to anye man any reconcilement with God, nor saluation. For there is no manne able to satisfie the iustice of GOD in paying of that which he oweth. Wherefore repentaunce is also most necessary in this behalfe, to them that desire to be saued. Therefore it is, that we be so often called to repentaunce in the Scriptures. Turne vnto me (he sayth) and you shal be saued. Item, If the wicked doe tourne from his naughtie waye, &c. And, I will not the death of a sinner, but that he be turned and lyue. Item, Amende, and beleue the Gospel. And, I came not to call the iuste, but sinners vnto repentance. And loke how great this grace is, when they which do repent are pardoned by Goddes clemencie, and that their repentance is reputed for Innocency: so reasonable is this condition, that no mans sinnes be forgiuen but theirs which do repent. No man is so madde and so voyde of reason, that he will thynke it an vnfitte matter, if he see the grace of forgiuenesse restrayned from them, which will not repente and amende. For as it may seeme a harde and an vnkinde matter when a man wil not forgiue him which repenteth & desireth mercye, so on the other side it seemeth moste vpright and reasonable to all men, that they whiche doe refuse the grace of forgiuenesse when it is offered to them vnder condition dition of repentance & amendement, that they should not be forgiuen, but sustaine worthy punishment.

what they which be penitent not to receyue.

Peraduenture some body wil aske me, whether that there be any causes to grounde a man vpon, why it should not be conuenient, that they which do not repente, nor doe desire pardon and mercye, should be receyued by God into grace, all be it that his mercies do exceede al his workes, and that he bringeth forth his sunne vpon the good and the euill, and doth rayne vppon the thankefull and vnthankfull, and doth good many ways, not onelye to men whiche knoweth it not, but whiche are not wylling with all other. Albeit that by the common perseuerance of all men, it is moste indifferent, that they which will not repent should not be forgiuen: yet besides this equitie, there be also other reasons, why that it can not be, nor it is not conuenient, that their sinnes should be forgiuen which doe not repent, but contemne the grace of Goddes clemencie. I will reherse some of thē here, which be bothe manifeste and out of all doubt.

the ce of should so much ga-

1 The firste is, least the iustice of God shoulde be to much derogated. God is merciful, and it is méete that he be iuste also. His iustice can not suffer that they shoulde be forborne, whiche doe contemne his grace. He can not bée a iuste iudge, vnlesse he do punishe them whiche doe not repent. Wherefore grace hathe place ynough, so that it doe not altogether decaye the iustice of the iuste iudge, which it shoulde doe without remedy, if they which do not repent, shoulde haue their sinnes forgiuen them. Besides that, there should be left none, vpon whome the iustice of the iuste iudgement might be executed vpon: and so all thinges shoulde be voyde and come to nothing, which are red in the Scriptures of the iustice of God, as of the iuste and vpright iudge.

Least the grace of God should be despised.

2 Secondly, the very grace of God also, if it were as ready, and as indifferentlye to be offred to them whiche doe not repente, as to them which doe repent, it shoulde haue no taste nother of profite nother of necessitie, in mens hartes. For who woulde impute his saluation to the grace of God, or earnestly sēke it, if it were certaine that they whiche doe not repente and doe despise the grace, should be saued? So after the iustice of God, his grace also should goe after and come to nothing. Whē contraries doe stande together, saith one, they be the better knowen: if thou takest awaye the contrarye of the iuste iudgemente of God, what shall ensue else, but the darkening of grace and mercye? Ye cannot be called iustly a gentle king & Prince, which doeth neuer punishe the wicked with iuste iudgement, nor doeth spare them whiche doe amende, for bycause of their amendemente, but suffereth them to runne on all a like. But surelye the same is true clemency, when it is so bestowed vpon them which doe amende, that it doth also with iuste iudgemente punishe the reprobate and impenitente. For iustice maketh clemencye the more noble: and on the other syde, clemencie maketh iustice also the more semelye.

3 The thirde reason is, bycause all gappes shoulde not be lefte open to sinne. For in case the impenitent persons also shoulde be saued, there shoulde be no place left for the feare of God. And when the feare of God were once gone, there should raygne bothe extreme rashnesse, and carelesnesse in sinning. For this consideration the Apostle doeth threaten to the impenitent folkes the wrathe of the iuste iudgement of God, saying: Knowest thou not that the clemencie of God doth leade thee to repentaunce? but according to thy hardenesse and impenitent hart, thou doest heape thee vp displeasure vnto the day of wrath, and reuelation of the iuste iudgement of God, Who shall giue vnto euery man according vnto his workes.

Least all gappes should lye open to sinne.

Rom. 2.

Least all should be saued without difference.

4 Fourthly, in case that the grace of God were readye as well for the impenitent as the penitent, it muste followe of necessitie, that all should be indifferentlye saued, one as well as an other, not menne onelye but Deuils also: and so the whole difference of Goddes election and reprobation, shoulde vtterlye be taken awaye, whereof we spake before: and therewithall all the consideration of true godlinesse and iustice, should be wypte quite out of the heartes of men. By these reasons which I take to be manifest, it is apparante ynough, howe it is not conuenient nother for the grace, nother for the iustice of God, that sinnes shoulde be forgiuen not onelye to them whiche doe repent, but to them also whiche doe not repent, nor desire forgiuenesse of the same.

Of Iustification.

This is a notable place and diligentlye set forthe by manye mens wrytinges in these our dayes. And therefore I thinke it shall not be necessary to make much a doe in this treaty. For though this sounde doctrine of iustification be assaulted by all kind of sectaries, specially by them which be the teachers of merites and mens workes, yet it is grounded vpon such sure and vnfallible foundations of the holy scripture, that it can not be ouerthrowen, no not by the gates of Hell. And no maruel why. For all our saluation and the whole quietnesse of our consciences, doth depende vpon this iustification whiche we haue by Christ. Wherefore many godly and learned men haue vpon moste great and good purpose, bent all their power and strength towards the opening and confirmation of this place: vnto whose trauayles I will ioyne my minde also, as some small droppes to their moste abundant riuers.

I. What it is to Iustifie.

This worde Iustifie, in the Latine mens eares is as muche to say, as make iuste: like as Magnifie to make great, and sanctifie to make holy. And this sense of this worde the diuine Scholemen liked well, which they that doe folowe them doe yet earnestly stande vnto. Augustine also doeth in diuers places stil expounde this worde of Iustifying in this this sense, when he saith, Beleuing in him which iustifieth the wicked, that is to saye, of the wicked doeth make godlye. The Apostle Paule, out of whose writings this doctrine of iustification is principally taken, vsed the worde of iustifying not in that sense which the Latine eares doeth lyke, but in that sense in whiche the holye Scripture vseth it, according vnto the custome of the holye language in which he was borne, brought vp, and instructed in from his childhode. In that language, to Iustifie is as much to say, as to quitte a mā of his offence, and to pronounce him iuste. The contrary of it is to condemne a man of naughtinesse & wickednesse. For I thinke it can not be founde, that in any pece of Scripture in the holye language, this worde iustifie should signifie to make any man iust of an vniust man. Which sense in case a man woulde applye to the places of Scripture where this worde is vsed, the matter shall seme to be either vnpossible, or vnmete, or vntrue. And to this purpose I wil run ouer the places of Scripture, as diligently and truelye as I can. When Josephs cuppe was founde in Beniamins sacke, and the brethren wiste not howe to trie and maintaine his innocencye, Judas said vnto Joseph: What shall we speake to my Lorde, and what shall we say, and wherein shall we be iustified? God hathe founde out the iniquitie of thy seruauntes. In which wordes he sayth nothing else, but there is no way for vs to declare our selfe to be innocent, to be quitte of the gilte of theft. For it is opened by the iudgemente of God what we be, wee can not denye it, &c. And in Exodus: Slaye not the innocent and iuste, for I will not iustifie the wicked. What is to say, I will not quitte the wicked of his faulte, I wil not take him to be innocent. And in Deuteronomye: When there is a controuersie betwixt men, and they do come to iudgement and to the Iudges, iustifie you the iuste, and condemne the vngodly. What sayth he else, but quite the iuste and condemne the wicked? Item in the seconde boke of Samuel Absalon sayde: Who will make me iudge vpon the earth, and that euery man maye come to me whiche hath any matter or iudgemente to seke, that I may iustifie him? That is to saye, that I maye quitte him and pronounce him to be iust. Again Salomon among the reste doeth pray to the Lord in this wise: When a man doeth offende his neighbour, & he require an othe of him to make him to sweare, and that the othe commeth before thy Altare in this house, heare you him in heauen, and do it, and iudge thy seruauntes, that you condemne the wicked, giuing his way vpon his owne head, and that you doe iustifie the iuste, giuing vnto him according vnto his righteousnesse, that is to say, that by righte reuenge you declare the wicked to be guiltye, and in deliuering the iuste, thou shewe him to be iuste and innocent. Job saith: GOD forbidde that I shoulde iustifie you, that is to say, pronounce you to be iuste, and take you to be iuste. Dauid saith: I haue sinned against thee onelye, and haue done euill in thy sight, therefore thou shalt be iustified in thy wordes, that is to say, declared

Exod. 23.

Deut. 29.

2. Samuel. 15.

1. Reg. 8.

Iob. 27. 55.

Psalm. 51. 4 203

Psom. 82. for iuste. Againe: Iustifie the troubled and the powre: he speaketh to the iudges, and aduiseth them to discharge and deliuer with iuste iudgement the powre and oppressed. Item:

Psalm.143. Enter not into iudgement with thy seruant, for no liuyng man shall be iustified in thy sight, that is to saye, no man shall be accounted iuste and innocent in thy sight, but all shall be worthy to be condemned, if thou liste to pronounce of them in iuste iudgement.

Prouer.17. Salomon sayth: He that iustifieth the wicked, and condemneth the iuste, they be bothe abhominable before God. No man shoulde be abhominable before God, if God made of a wicked person a iuste man: nor he that were suche a one, shoulde not lightly make a man wicked that is alreadye iuste. But he which doth pronounce the wicked person to be iuste, and doeth condemne the iuste man as though he were vniuste, it is he that is worthye to be accounted abhominable. In Esaye we reade this of the wicked and vniuste iudges, which doe iustifie the wicked for a reward. He saythe also: Let them bring their witnesse sayth the Lord, and let them be iustified. Againe in the same chapter: Tel you, that you maye be iustified, that is to say, if they thinke that they be iuste, let them bring witnesses by whome they may be tryed to be iuste. Item: If thou haue any thing to saye that will serue for thy purpose, shewe it, that thou mayst proue thy selfe to be iuste, and be pronounced iuste. Also he saith: They shall be iustified in the Lord, and all the seede of Israell shall be glorified, that is to saye, the same shall be reputed for righteousnesse vnto them, that they be the Lordes, and do sticke faste in faythe vnto him, and shall repete themselfs happy for this cause. And that is the matter that he sayth: And they shall glorye. Like as the wicked are both condemned and confounded, so the faythfull are bothe iustified in the Lorde, and they doe glorye of his grace. Item, He is neare at hande whiche doeth iustifie mée, who will striue with me: that is to say, I lack not my iuste iudge, which will maintayne my parte and pronounce for me. Item, My iuste seruaunt shall iustifye manye in his knoweledge. Which he speaketh of Christ. And he calleth the knowledge of Christ, the same, whereby he is knowen vnto vs by faith, in which Peter sayde, And we haue beleued and knowen that thou arte Christe the sonne of GOD. By this sayth Christ doth iustifye vs. How? Bycause (sayth he) he shall beare their wickednesse, in whiche wordes he doeth expresse the cause of this iustification. And in Ezechiel: And Samaria (sayth he) hath not sinned the one halfe of thy sinnes, and thou haste multiplied thy abhomination aboue them, thou hast iustified thy systers in all thy abhominations which thou hast done. That is to saye, for as much as thou hast done more haynous things, thou hast declared that thy sisters in comparison of thée, are to be accounted for iust. He speketh of the iustifying which is in comparison of them that be worse. There is yet one place left of Daniel, where we do reade in this wise: And they whiche doe instruct men to vnderstanding, shall shyne lyke the shyninge of the firmament, and Esay.5. Esaye.45.

Esay.53.

Esay.65.

Ezechiel.16.

Daniel.12.

Esaye.45.

and they which do iustifie many, shal be as starres for euer and euermore. Where the worde of Iustifying is put neyther for to make iuste, nor to quite from all faultes, whiche both bothe belong vnto God only: but to instruct men to righteousnesse, whiche the ministers of the word doe in the Church.

These sentences we haue rehersed of the olde testament, whereby it is manifest inough, that the word of iustifying is in no place put in that sense, which the men that be ignorãt of the holye language, doe attribute vnto it, whiche will haue Iustifie to be nothing else, but to make one iuste whiche is vniuste and wicked, but it appeareth that it is vsed in euerye place for to quite a man of his fault, and to pronounce or declare hym iuste. Nowe albeit that the preiudice of the old Testamente were euen ynough to proue this to be the sense of it, yet for all that let vs goe to the scriptures of the new testament, and loke into them also.

Our Sauiour Christ sayeth: And wisedome is iustifyed of hys chyldren: Luke doth adde All. And notwithstanding that they do expounde this place sundrye wayes, yet it is a clere matter that Christe spake nother Greke nor Latine, but Hebrew to the Hebrewes in ỹ holy language and the accustomed sense. Therefore when he saide, that the wisedome of God was iustifyed of all his chyldren, he sayde nothing else, but that he left nothing vndone towards hys children, that is to saye, the people of the kingdome, which he had trayned vp as his children, in all things that might belong vnto their saluation, and that it was therefore free and clere from all blame of their destruction and perishing. And so Chrysostome doth also expounde it. It were a very vnfitte thing to expounde it: the wisedome is iustifyed by his children, to saye it is from vniust, by the benefite of the children, changed vnto iust and innocent. By thy wordes (saith the Lord,) thou shalte be iustified, or by thy wordes condemned, that is to saye, by thy wordes thou shalt be declared eyther to be iust, or condemned of iniustice. Wordes doe not make, but declare a man to bée iust or vniust. In Luke it is written thus: And all the people (sayeth hée) and the Publicanes whiche hearde him, iustifyed him, being Baptised in the baptisme of Iohn. Howe then coulde the Publicans whiche were vniust themselues, make anye man iust that was not iust, muche lesse coulde they doe anye thing to make God iust. Fye vpon this absurditie. They iustifyed God, that is to saye, they acknowledged and allowed the iustice of God when they were baptised of Iohn, which the Pharisies in refusing his Baptisme, did cõtemne. Agayne: He willing to iustifie hymselfe. Item: You be (sayth he) they which doe iustifie your selues before men. It is the part of hypocrites to iustifie themselues, and it is nothing else but to counterfaite righteousnesse. Agayne: And the Publicane standing a great way off, would not lift vp his eyes to Heauen, but stroke himselfe on the breste, saying: God be mercifull vnto me whiche am a sinner. I tell you this man went home to his house more iustified than the other. He calleth this man iustifyed, Math.12.

Luc.7. 29

Luc.10 & 16

Luc.18. 1-4

that is to saye, that when he had obteyned Gods mercy, he was pardoned of his sinnes, for the humblenesse of his confession and faith, whereby he obteyned the forgiuenesse of hys sinnes, as Lyranus also dothe expound it. In the Actes we reade, that Paule sayde in this wise: Therefore be it knowen vnto you brethren, that by him there is forgiuenesse of sinnes declared vnto you, and of all things from which you coulde not be iustifyed by the lawe of Moses, by him euery man that dothe beleeue is iustifyed. And hereby it appeareth well ynough, that to be iustifyed, is to be acquited from sinnes: which is done by the forgiuenesse of sinnes ỳ is preached in the name of Christe. For when he had said, that forgyuenesse of sinnes is declared vnto you by him, and shuld say more, and from all those things, the forgiuenesse of which coulde not come to you by the law of Moses, he expounding ỳ meaning of it this way, And euery man which dothe beleeue is iustifyed by him from all those matters whyche you could not be iustifyed of by Moses law. Therefore to be iustifyed frō sinnes, is to be acquited of sinnes by ỳ grace of forgiuenesse of sinnes, and to be discharged from the gilte of them. To ỳ Romaynes we reade: Not they which doe heare the lawe, be iust in the sighte of God, but they which do exercise the law in doings, they shall be iustifyed, that is to say, they shal be reputed for iust, and pronounced iust. Erasmus dothe translate it, shall be taken for iust. He sayeth: That thou mayest be iustified. Of these sayings, we haue spoken before out of the 51. Psalme. In the same place Paule sayeth: By the workes of the lawe no flesh shall bee iustifyed in his sight, that is to saye, shall not be taken for iust. And they be iustifyed freely by his grace, that is to say, they be acquited freely from sinnes. The iust person is not iustified freely for nothing, and by grace, but by the merite of his own iustice. Wherefore it is necessarye to be vnderstanded of that iustification, whereby the sinner is acquited from hys sinnes by grace. And that which followeth agreeth withall. Item: We suppose that man is iustifyed by fayth, without ỳ workes of the lawe. And, for as muche as it is one God whych shall iustifie the circumcision by faith, &c. He sayeth nothing else, but that the absolution of synnes commeth by faythe, whyche coulde not come by the lawe. And in the same sense hee vseth thys worde styll in that whiche followeth. As in the fourth Chapiter: To hym whyche beleeueth in hym whyche dothe iustifie the wicked. And, Therefore beyng iustifyed by faith, we haue peace towardes God. And therefore much the more nowe beeyng iustifyed in his bloud. And what is it else to bee iustifyed in the bloud of Christ, than to bee discharged of our sinnes by the merite of Christes bloud? He that is dead, is iustifyed from synne, that is to saye, deliuered and discharged from the dominion of synne, that he be no longer bound to serue it. Also: Whome he called hym hee iustifyed also. He dothe heere symplye vse the worde of iustifying: but it is more allowable to vnderstande it in that sense which he toke it for in all that disputation before, than otherwise.

Acte. 13 Act. 39

Rom. 2. 13

Psal. 4 Rom. 3. 4

God

Gen. 4

Ibidem.

Rom. 4.

Rom. 5.

Rom. 5.

wise. And in the same Chapiter: It is God whiche dothe iustifie, who is hee that can condemne? This contrarye settyng of iustification and condemnation one against another, doth sufficiently proue, that whereas he sayeth: It is God whiche iustifyeth: it is as muche to saye, as, it is God which doth absoile vs from our sinnes and pronounce vs iust. And to the Corinthians hee sayeth: I knowe not my selfe guilty in anye thyng, but I am not iustifyed by that, that is to saye: I am not therefore accounted iust, for that I know nothing by my selfe. My iustice doth not stand in my owne innocency, but in the grace of God by Christe. And agayne: And thys indeede you were, but you be washed, but you be sanctifyed, but you be iustifyed, by the name of the Lorde Iesu, and by the spirite of our God. All these poyntes are to be referred to the forgiuenesse of synnes, whyche they that beleeued, dyd obteyne by the name of our Lorde Iesu, and the worcking of the holy spirite. By this grace he sayeth they were washed from their former sinnes, sanctifyed and iustifyed, to the intent they shoulde beware that they shoulde not runne backe againe vnto them, and make the grace whyche they hadde receyued, to bee voyde. Wherefore hee sayeth nothyng else, but Lo, nowe you bee discharged from all youre former synnes, beware that you do not lyke agayne hereafter. And to the Galathians hee sayeth: Knowing that man is not iustifyed by the workes of the lawe. Item, That we maye be iustifyed by faythe. Item. Forasmuche as no man is iustifyed before God by the lawe. Agayne, You whyche bee iustifyed in the lawe, be voyde of Christe. Hee vpholdeth nothyng else, but the verye same whyche hee maynteyned to the Romaines in longer talke, and therefore we muste take the word of iustifying in the same sense heere, as wee dyd there. Vnto Timothe he sayeth of Christe: God is manifest in the fleshe, hee is iustifyed in the spirite, &c. That is to say, declared and approued iuste by the testimonye of the spirite. And the same (sayeth hee) shall iustifye of mee. And to Tite: Accordyng vnto hys mercie (sayeth hee) hee hathe saued vs, &c. by Iesu Christe our Sauioure, that beeyng iustifyed by hys grace, wee myghte be made heyres accordyng to the hope of euerlasting life. For he dothe not meane heere that we be otherwise iustifyed, than in the same sense, that he disputed of the same matter to the Romaines and the Galathians, that is to say, that wee be acquited from oure sinnes, and accepted to the glorye of the children of God. And James sayth, Abraham oure father, was he not iustifyed by his workes, when he had offered his sonne vpon the Altare? He sayth not that Abraham was made iuste by that worke, whereas he was iust before: but that he was thereby declared and tried to be iust.

Gal. 5.

Tit. 3.

Iacob. 2.

Hitherto we haue rehearsed the places of both the Testaments, and set them out to be seene as it were in a Table, wher ỳ word of Iustifying is vsed: to the intēt ỳ the reader may see, that it was not for naughte that I sayde before, that a man can not easily finde in Scriptures any place,

where where to iustifie, is as much to saye, as to make one iust, of one that is vniust. Wherefore my iudgemente is, that in this matter of our iustification, we must allow no other sense of this word, but the same whiche is found to be the meaning of ỹ whole scripture, and whiche the Apostle vsed in many places of the same very matter: so that for a man to be iustified before God is all one, as to bée acquited from sinnes by frée forgiuenesse, and to be reputed for iust. And this we haue noted somewhat the largelyer, that we may grounde vpon the sure sense and meaning of this word, without whiche we maye striue much in the Churche, and edifie little. This same Bernarde dyd acknowledge also saying thus: Take this yet with thée, that thou beléeue that thy sinnes be forgiuen thée by him. This is the testimonie whyche the holy spirite doth beare vs in oure heart, saying: Thy sinnes be forgyuen thée. For so the Apostle supposeth that man is iustifyed fréely, by faith. This saith he.

Bernardus in sermon. de Annunciatione Mariæ.

II. Who it is that doth Iustifye vs.

We should not néede to trauell in so manifest a matter as thys is, vnlesse that there had starte vp by the enticemente of Satan, certayne craftie Apostles and deceyuers in the Church, which do saye: we do sanctifye: it is we that do iustifie: whose decepte we reade was repreheded also by Augustine, whose words be these: Bréethren, we haue Iesus Chriſte our aduocate with oure father, he is the forgiuenesse of oure sinnes. Ye that held this, was no heresie: he ỹ helde this was no schisme. For whereof came the schismes? Truly when men do say, we be iust: when men do say, we doe sanctify the that be vncleane: we doe iustifye the wicked: we do pray: and we doe obteyne. But what sayth John: If any man doe sinne, we haue an aduocate with the father Iesus Chriſte the iust, &c. This sayeth he. By whyche words, he did no more touch the Donatistes, than he should now adayes if he were a liue gall them, which do so muche challenge to themselues all the authoritie in the Church to sanctifie and to iustifie men, and doe for filthye gayne sell the same also ouer vnto others. But let them goe, ouer whose heads there hangeth a moste grieuous iudgement, and let vs turne vs vnto hym who only hathe power to forgiue sinnes, yea and to iustify, and to saue them also whom he hath iustifyed. And that God onely dothe forgiue sinnes, it appeareth in Esay where he sayth: It is I, whych do take away thy sinnes, and that hée doth iustifye, the Apostle dothe witnesse, saying: To him that dothe beléue in him whiche iustifyeth the wicked, his faithe is reputed for iustice. The same is God, in whome only we do beléue. Item, It is God which dothe iustifie, who is hé that doth condemne? They be the Church théeues and wicked persons, whiche doe chalenge this glory to theyr authoritie that dothe belong onely to God. No Apostle doth so, but al true ministers, by preaching of the Gospell and Repentance, doe serue hym, which only dothe pardon sinnes and iustifyeth the wicked.

Augustin. Tract. 2. sup. prim. Epist. Ioan.

God only iustifieth.

Esay 43.

This

This grace of iustification is attributed vnto Chriſt also, vnto whõe the father hathe giuen all power in the earth to forgiue sinnes. In Esay we do reade thus: By the knowledge of him, whiche is my righteous seruaunt, he shal iustifye the multitude. And in the Actes Paule sayth: Be it knowen to you bréethren, that forgiuenesse of sinnes is declared vnto you through hym, and euerye man that beléeueth is iustifyed by hym from all those things, from whiche you could not be iustifyed by the law of Moses, meaning of Chriſt whom God rayſed from the dead. And we must beware, that we doe not attribute this worke of our iustification vnto his Godlye nature alone, or to his nature of man alone, but vnto Chriſt full and whole, and saye that Chriſt our lord is our iustice. Some will nédes haue the grace of oure iustification attributed vnto ỹ Godhead of Chriſt onely. In my iudgement it is as daungerous a matter, to exclude the dispensation of the worde incarnate made in the flesh, from the worke of redemption, iustification, and saluation, as it is to attribute that to man only, whych doth only perteyne to God.

In the Epistle to the Corinthians this worke of iustifying, is ascribed vnto the trinall Maiestie of God, when the Apostle dothe saye there: Such were some of you, but you are washed, but you be sanctifyed, but you be iustifyed, by the name of oure Lord Iesu, and by the spirite of oure God. So God the Father doth iustifie vs in his sonne oure Lorde Iesu Chriſt, by his holy spirit, the Sacrament of whose washing, sanctifying, and iustifying, baptisme is, in which we be baptised according to the institution of God, in the name of the Father, the Sonne, and the holye Spirite.

III. Hovv God doth iustify vs.

We said in the first article of the worde of Iustifying, that to bée iustifyed is as muche to saye in thys matter, according to the meanyng of holy Scripture, as to be acquited by grace from sinne, and to be taken for iust. Therefore God dothe so iustifie vs, that he forgiueth our sinnes, hée hideth them, and doth not charge vs with them any more, but doth rather impute iustice vnto vs, not oures, which is none but the iustice of hys sonne our Lord Iesu Chriſt, and by this imputatiõ of iustice, he maketh vs saued and blessed. So the Apostle doth four times set forth this iustification to the Romaines, leaſte wée should séeme to bring any thing with vs of our own. Like as Dauid (saith he) dothe expresse the blessednesse of the man to whome God dothe impute righteousnesse without workes, saying: Blessed be they, whose wickednesses bée forgiuen, and whose sinnes be hidden. Blessed is the man, to whome God dothe not impute sinne. It appeareth verye well, that the iustification which is imputed by grace without workes, is the forgiuenesse of sinnes and the help vnto saluation. For whereas he might haue saide: Blessed be they whome God dothe iustifie withoute workes, hé sayth: blessed be they whose sinnes be forgiuen, and whose sinnes be hyd-

VVe be iustified by forgiuenes of sinnes.

den:

den: Blessed is the man to whome God doth not impute sinne.

How this maner of iustifying agreeth with God which is the sole Iudge.

But heere the question is, howe it is conuenient for God, who is a iudge most iust of all, to iustifie, that is to take for iust and to pronounce them iust, which be not iust but wicked, yea rather vniust, & full of sinne, whereas after ỳ order of hys iustice, he doth rather cõdemne such, and iustifie the iust, which Salomon dothe desire of him also saying: To condemne ỳ wicked giuing him his way vpon his head, and to iustifie the iust giuing him according vnto hys iustice, and doth pronounce them to be abhominatiõ before the Lord, which doth iustifie ỳ wicked, and condemne the iust. Yea seeing that he dothe commaund the iudges to iustifie the iust, and to condemne the wicked, and that he dothe openly testifye of himselfe, saying: Slay not the innocente and iust, for I will not iustifye the wicked. If he bee a iust iudge, and dothe iustifye not the wicked but the iust, and condemneth ỳ wicked, and doth commaunde the same iustice also to be vsed of his iudges, and doth abhorre thẽ which do iustifie the wicked, how cã it stand withall, that we may attribute vnto hym this kind of iustifying, whiche is linked in with wickednesse & falsehode: and therefore can not be fytte for a iust iudge, that is to say, to iustifye the vniust, sinfull, and wicked, and to take them for iust, which be iniust, do remayne wicked, like as wrongfull iudges do for money, iustifie naughtipackes, & pronounce them iust and acquite them in a wrongfull cause:

1. Reg. 8. 32

Prouer. 17. Deut. 17.

Exod. 23.

Now it is likely that all they bee of this mind, which do either vtterly condemne, eyther by sinistrall interpretation, doe weaken this doctrine of the Apostle of the imputation of iustice, bycause they neyther vnderstand it aright, nor do with due reuerence, submit their iudgementes to the Apostle, when he dothe playnely talke of the same. But we doe easely make aunswere to this obiection: In case that God be a iust iudge, and not mercifull withall: or else if he bee iust in that sorte, that he can not bee mercifull, without the decay of hys iustice: I say if he be so streightened to his iudiciarie iustice, that it be not lawfull for him to haue mercy vpon whome he will, and to pardon the gilty of their sinne, which for al that we doe see that manye Princes and Magistrates doe franckelye suffer themselues to do: it dothe folow, that all those things be vayne whyche be redde of in holye Scriptures of the grace and mercye of God, and that he hath not so much power, vpon his owne creatures, as man hath vppon his subiectes, yea lesse than the potmaker hath vpon his clay, and what can be thoughte more wicked than this? But in case that God be iust in that sorte, that he is mercifull also withall, and doth so punish the gilty, that he doth freely and frankly withall haue mercy vpon them whiche he will, and doth acquite the sinfull frõ their sinnes, and yet may not for all suche mercie, be bereft of the glorie and commendation of iustice, what else doth ensue, but that he hath two seates, one of iudgemente, and another of grace, and that it dothe perteyne to the seate of iudgemente, when he dothe iustifye the iust and condemne the wicked, and that it is to be

God is bounde and not bounde, full and emptie, chaine & free, ouercõmer & ouer all things.

doe for fie

ces

tifi-

to be referred to the other whiche is of grace, when he dothe not condemne the wicked, which he myghte iustly doe, but dothe mercifully acquite, and iustifie him from the gilte of his sinnes:

But they say, We do knowe that God is not onely iust, but mercifull also, and that we do graunt, that hee may of his free mercy pardon sinnes to whome he will, & acquite whome he will from the gilt and condemnation of them, but that he dothe it not in this sort, that he doth take him for a iust man, whome he knoweth to be wicked, and pronounce him to bee iust, and impute iustice vnto hym, when he is vtterly voyde and wyde from all iustice. Wherefore we doe not acknowledge that his mercye and forgiuenesse of sinnes is any iustificatiõ, but we do dissener it from that iustification whereby wee bee made iust, not by imputation, but truly and effectually, and so iust, that we shall liue now not vnto vniustice as before, but vnto iustice, and to do that whiche is iust, and so to be truly iust, according vnto that saying: My sonnes, let no man seduce you. Hee that doth iustice is iust, as he is also iust. The works of God be true and effectuall, If he do iustifye any man, that man must needes be iust indeede. And this iustification whereby hee doth make vs iust, of vniust, is attributed vnto him with glory: but the other is with reproche, when you doe saye, that hee taketh them for iust, whiche be yet vniust and wicked.

I aunswere, The Apostle the teacher of Goddes grace and of iustice, freely imputed, was not so madde, that he would say, that God take the wicked for the iust, eyther by errour and ignorance, as though he knewe him not to be wicked: eyther by negligence, as though he were careles howe euery man lyued: eyther by ouerthwartes that he allowed his iniustice, as we see done nowe adayes, when Judges either of errour, eyther of wickednesse or negligence, do discharge the wicked, and condemne the iust. This imagination be farre from the mindes of the goodye. God knoweth all men, he loueth the iust, and hateth thẽ whiche worketh wickednes. But to aduance the fulnesse of his grace, he doth call the forgiuenesse of sinnes our iustificatiõ, whereby he doth freely impute iustice vnto them which do amend their life, and doth not condemne, but saue them, which do beleeue in him, in such sort, as if they were altogither innocente and iust. And to declare this, the Apostle sayeth, that God doth iustifye the wicked, & that freely: and he dyd not hide the circumstances of thys iustification, whyche dothe gyue it great light, and leaueth no matters to striue vpon, to men that be not of themselues contentious, but do seeke for the truth with the feare of God.

I do maruell much, why some of our brethren do so mislike this speach of the Apostle, when it is saide, that they be iustified, whiche be deliuered and acquited from their sinnes and from their worthy condemnation by the grace of God, seeyng that it is a speache moste vsed in the Scriptures. If we may say aryghte, that the same iudge doth iustifie the iust, and dyrecte him as a wicked man that is wicked, when he dothe acquite the one in iudgement, and condemne the other, and yet for all that is not able eyther to make the iuste, iuste, nor the wicked wicked. Againe on the other side, if we may say arighte, that the iudge which doth iustify the wicked, and dothe handle the iuste as though he were wicked, when hée condemneth the one in iudgemente, and acquiteth the other, albeit he doe make nother the iuste to be wicked, nor the wicked iuste: howe can it bée that they do not sée, that this manner of speach, after the fashion of man, is turned vnto God, and that we doe arighte attribute vnto him that hée dothe iustifie them, whome he dothe find wicked and sinfull, when he doth by his grace assoile and acquite them in iuste iudgement from condemnation as iuste?

IIII. In vvhat respect vve be iustifyed of God.

They that be iuste, when they be complained vpon of the wicked, are vppon the declaration of theyr vprightnesse discharged, and so they be iustifyed in consideration of theyr owne vprightnesse, in case the iudge himselfe be vprighte. God forbydde that we shoulde otherwise thinke of God. He doth iustifie the innocente and iuste persons, in respecte of theyr innocencie and iustice, nor hée condemneth none that is iuste. But what be they amongst all mortall menne, whiche may be so iuste, that they can in respect of their owne iustice be iustifyed in his sighte? Dauid was of this minde and saith: Enter not into iudgement with thy seruaunt, why? bycause sayeth he, no liuing person shall be iustifyed in thy sight. Vnderstande withal, in respect of his owne iustice, he fyndeth nothing in vs of our owne, in consideration whereof he may iustifie vs.

God dothe iustifie the iuste also, but vvhere be they?

Psalm. 142. 143. 2

It is a commō case in the worlde, that an offender is iustifyed & acquited for his former desertes and merites. For it is thought that they whiche haue done some greate good, are worthy to be borne withall. But it is otherwise in Gods sight. Here go no merites before iustification, in such sorte, that in respect of them we may be iustifyed. Else it shoulde ensue, that we be not freely iustified & vnworthily, but as worthy and for our desert: which is againste Goddes grace, whiche (as Augustine dothe write) no desertes of man doe go before. And so the grace of our redemption also, whiche is by the bloud of Chriſt, should be of lesse estimation, and the glory of Gods mercy should be fayne to giue place vnto the worthynesse of mans merites, and so our iustification shoulde not be the gifte of Gods mercie, but the, rewarde of the man that worketh well. At one worde, Chriſt shoulde haue dyed in vayne.

vvee iustified in one poynte

Note for the poynte. Iustified

We sée also in worldly practises, that the offender is acquited in consideration that he shall make amendes, which he doth vndertake to do, both to the iudge and to the parties also which are trespassed. But this respect can haue nothing to doe neyther in this case, for it is impossible for vs to satisfye and make amendes for any one sinne, muche lesse for all our wyckednesses & transgressyons, which are without all number. And if it were not thus also, Chriſt had dyed for vs in vayne.

Nor we be not iustified any poynte that we can Therefore séeing that we be iustifyed nother in respect of oure owne iustice, nother of our merites goyng before, nor for any amends that may be made afterwards, so that there is no way, but to be iustifyed freely by Goddes gyfte, I thinke it a manifest matter to all men, that we be iustified in the onely respecte of his goodnesse, loue, grace, and mercye. And therewithall agréeth those sayings of the Apostle: All haue sinned, and be destitute of the glory of God, and they be iustifyed freely by his grace. And to the Ephesians: but God who is rich in mercy, for his great loue which he hath borne to vs, yea when we were dead through sinnes, hathe made vs aliue againe. &c. And to Tite he sayeth: According vnto his mercye hée hath saued vs, &c. that being iustifyed by his grace, we shoulde be made heires of euerlasting life. Therefore like as there can be no other cause alleged for our election, redemption, and whole saluation, so there can bée no other occasion yelded, nother of our iustification, but the wil of Gods goodnesse, loue, mercy, & grace, wherin he chose them whome he woulde, before the setling of the worlde, and the same whome he chose, he did predestinate, and the same whome hée hath predestinated he doth call, iustifie, & glorifie. Wherefore it is méete that we do, specially in this matter, acknowledge, praise, and glorifie the grace and mercy of God.

V. Wherein vve be iustifyed.

Like as in the place of Election before, we sought to knowe the meane of our election, so wée muste séek also in this place by what meane we be iustified and reconciled vnto God. And there bée two meanes in this mater. One in which we be iustifyed, the other wherby we do apprehend or take holde of the grace of this Iustification. They be both necessary, and none of them doth iustifie without the other. The meane in which wée be iustified, is the incarnate worde, our Lord Chriſt, the only begotten of God, whom the father sent to be our redéemer, mediator, reconciler, and sauiour. The worke of thys mediation was made vp in the crosse, wherein the vnspotted lambe, in satisfying for our sinnes, did shead his bloude, and obtayned for vs this iustification and reconcilement. Herevnto Paule hathe respecte when hée sayeth. And they be iustifyed freely by his grace, by the redemption whiche is in Chriſte Iesu, whome God did set forthe to be the reconciler by faith, in his bloud, &c. And God dyd declare hys loue towarde vs, that when wée were yet sinners, Chriſte dyed for vs: therefore muche more nowe béeyng iustifyed by his bloud, wée shall bée saued by him from the wrathe. And for thys cause hée sayeth, that Chriſte is made vnto vs by God oure wisedome, iustice, sanctification, and redemption. And there is no doubte of thys meane of iustification to them whiche doe leane vnto the holy Scriptures, and wyll séeme to be true Christian mē. No you shall hardelye fynde anye Chriſtian whyche wyll openlye denye, that we be iustifyed and reconcyled to God in Chriſte oure mediator and redemer, although that they

Two meanes of iustification.

The meane in vvhich vvee be iustified, is Christe.

Ro. 3. & 5.

1. Cor. 1.

be many that doe for a countenance confesse with their mouth the same, which they do with cõtrary doctrine destroy againe.

VVhether Christe do iustifye as an aduocat and intercessour. 1. Iohn. 2. Heb. 7.

Some doe suppose that we be iustifyed in Christe, bycause he is oure aduocate and intercessor, obteyning for vs forgiuenesse of our sinnes. In deede wee can not deny the mediation of his intercession, wherby being made our aduocate, he doth entreate for vs: as it is said of him, and it is a parcell also of ỹ office of his priesthode. But the iustification of vs standeth not only in that, but principally in this that hée turned oure sinnes vnto hym, and in sufferyng death for them, he did satisfye Gods iustice, and dothe communicate hys owne iustice vnto vs.

VVe be not iustifyed parte by Christ, and part by oure selues.

Againe, there be some that do surmise vs to be so iustifyed in Christe, that he dothe satisfye parte, and wée part for our sinnes: and what is that else, but to leaue vnto Christ not the whole worke of our saluation, but to stand in halfes, and to deface his glorye also, to the ende that flesthe maye haue somewhat to glory of, whereas for all that the holy Scripture dothe spoyle and leaue vs naked of all glorye, especially in this poynte. The Pharisey forasmuch as he gaue not the whole glory vnto God and shame to himselfe as the Publican did, hée continued subiecte vnto condemnation. Wherefore to the intent we shall giue the glory of our whole redemption to our sauioure, we may not deuide the worke of iustification and reconciliatiõ, nor chalenge any peece of it to the flesh.

Now let vs goe to ỹ other meane of our iustification, whereby we doe take holde of the grace of iustification in Christe. We do not deuide the iustification it selfe, nor diminish the glorye of the grace of Christe when we doe make two meanes of it. For the wholenesse of it dothe consist in the worke of redemption, albeit that we do not take holde of it. But what is this other meane? The meritemõgers doe make it good workes, and will haue oure iustification before God to stand by them. But to be iustifyed by workes, is to deserue forgiuenesse and absolutiõ from sinnes, and saluation also by oure owne doings. Whiche opinion is well lyked with the iudgement of reason, but it is quite cõtrary vnto the Apostolike and true doctrine. In déede workes do iustify, taking iustifie to be, to declare iust: euen as white heares doe make a man olde, bycause they be a signe of age, but workes do thys before menne and not before God, nor they can not take holde of forgyuenesse of sinnes and deliuerance from their deserued condemnation. For then it shoulde be false that the Apostle saith: We be iustifyed freely by his grace. For to him that worketh, his reward is imputed vnto him for a duety and not vpon grace and fauour. Wherefore the errours of thase men is to grosse to deceyue any of them whiche hath looked ouer the holy Scriptures neuer so sleightly. For it dothe not agrée with that sense nother, when they wil haue Iustifie, to be as much as to make iust. For workes doe not goe before hym that is to be iustifyed, but do followe him which is alreadie iustifyed, witnesse Augustine, and workes do come of Grace, not grace of workes, witnesse nesse the same Augustine. But let vs leaue them alyde, and hére the Apostle pronouncing playnely of thys meane of apprehension.

Phil. 3.

The Apostle saith: They be iustifyed freely by his grace, by the redemption whiche is in Christ Iesu, whome God hath set forth the reconciler by faith in his bloud. Item, We do suppose therefore, that man is iustifyed by faith, without the workes of the lawe. Item, Forasmuch as it is one God whiche dothe iustifye the circumcised by faithe, and the vncircumcised by faithe. To him whyche dothe not worke but dothe beléeue in him, whiche doth iustifie the wicked, his faithe is imputed for righteousenesse. Item, The inheritance is gyuen by faith, that the promise may be sure by grace. Item, It is not written for bycause of him onely, that it was imputed vnto him, but for vs also to whome it is imputed, beléeuing vppon him whiche rayled oure Lorde Iesus from the dead, whiche was deliuered for oure sinnes, and rayled vp for the iustification of vs. Againe: Therefore being iustifyed by faithe, we haue peace towardes God, by oure Lorde Iesu Christ, by whome it is befallen vnto vs also, that by faith we shoulde be trayned vnto this grace, wherein we do stãd. And to the Galathians: We of nature Iewes, and not sinners of the Gentiles, forasmuch as we do know, that man is not iustifyed by ỹ works of the lawe, but by the faith of Iesus Christ: and we haue beléeued in Iesus Christe, to the intent we may be iustifyed by the faithe of Christe and not by the workes of the lawe. Item, The Scripture foreséeing that God dothe iustifie the Gentiles by faithe. And: That I may be founde in him not hauing my righteousenesse of the lawe, but the same whiche is by the faith of Christe, whyche is the righteousnesse that commeth of God, vpon faith.

By these and other lyke testimonies, it is manifest, that the same other meane wherby we do apprehend and take hold of the grace of Iustification, is nother workes, nother the worthinesse of any qualitie of ours, but faith in Christ, vnto which oure saluation and euerlasting lyfe also is attributed by manye testimonies of the doctrine of the Gospell: whiche bycause we maye fynde them euery where, we will not alledge them at this present. And they be to bée vnderstanded not onely of the historicall faith, albeit that the same be requisite also, but of the same Faithe, whereby in beleeuing the promises of the Gospel, we do giue vp our selues wholly, with sure trusse vnto Christ our Sauiour and redéemer. For by this Faith wherin we be ioyned vnto Christ, we bée discharged of oure sinnes, wée bée deliuered from the guilt of them, and we be iustified and that freely by grace. Wherfore they do teache aright, whiche do call this faithe, the sure trust, leaning to the promises of the Gospell. And wée may find this sense of this word, not seldom, but very often in the Scriptures: where To beléeue is vsed, for to trust, and faith for trust: nor there is no other sense that doeth agrée with this saying, when it is said that faith doth iustifie: for it is most manifest, that Iustifying commeth not by hystoricall Faythe: for so the deuill should be saued also, for he beleeueth also and doubteth nothing of the historie of Christ. Wherefore it must nedes be, that we must understand that this saying is concerning the trust, whereby in beleeuing we do assuredly trust to the promises of the Gospell, that we be redeemed by the bloud of Christ and reconciled to God the father.

Iustifying faith is the gift in the bloud of Christ.

The obiections of the aduersaries.

They that be more moued vppon reason than vppon Gods worde, for as much as they do not consider the purpose of Gods will, they doe fynde faulte with thys faith: and bycause they do not fynde it worthy inough, as that a sinfull man should be iustifyed by it, and reconciled vnto God and saued, they doe deuise some one thing, and some an other, to adde vnto it as some waight of more merite and valew, by the helpe and encrease whereof they maye apprehende this iustification before God as it were by heape measure. And they be of such affection whiche do adde vnto it the obedience and képing of Gods lawes and of all good workes.

2 Secondly, there be some that do put vnto it the loue of God, and both of these doe holde that Faithe onelye dothe not iustifye, but faithe ioyned with workes and the loue of God.

3 Thirdly, some beganne to attribute iustification vnto faithe, not in respect that it dothe apprehende forgiuenesse and absolutiō from sinnes, but in respect that it doth apprehend Christ himselfe, so that he doth dwel in our heartes, and doth by his essentiall righteousnesse, renue vs and make vs iust.

4 Yet there be some also which do graunt, that we be iustifyed by faith by the forgiuenes of sinnes, but they do restrayne it to the beginnyng of our conuersion, when we do beginne firste to beléeue in Christe. Of these pointes let vs consider nowe one after another.

And firste of all I doe giue moste harty thankes vnto God the father through Christe our sauiour, that he doth with other maner eyes consider the trust of his mercy which he hath of hys frée gifte poured into oure hartes, and doth estéeme and regard it more for Christes sake, than either the olde either the newe Scholemen doe. We ought to estéeme this faith not in the respect of the qualitie of it selfe, but in respect of the purpose of God, that he determined to impute it for righteousnesse to them whiche beléeue in Christe, for his sake. Nor these Doctours oughte not to haue wayed it so light: for euen in ỳ same that they teache vs to doubte of the grace of God, they doe sufficiently discouer themselues, howe that it is no pẽce of our strength, but the speciall gift of God, to beléeue in Christ and with assured trust to rest vpon his Grace.

They that do say, that fayth doeth not suffise in ỳ matter of iustification, and therefore doe ioyne vnto it good workes, by the helpe of the whiche it doth iustify, do heape vp together al those places of the scriptures, in whyche there is anye mention made of workes, of reward, of recompence, and of the iudgement of God, wherin euery manne shall bée rewarded, according vnto his doings, as though we spake of a vayne and vnprofytable fayth, and did reiect good workes, when we doe saye according to the rule of the Apostles doctrine, that the iustifying fayth alone dothe iustifye freely and without good workes. We knowe that faithe can in no wise be vnfruitfull, of whose efficacie and might, we noted somewhat before, when we spake of it in a place by it selfe. We knowe that the workes of Faithe be acceptable in Goddes sighte, and that they be required of the faithfull and of thē that be iustifyed, that they bring forthe good workes, as it were good fruites, Whereof we will giue a seuerall note hereafter. But the question is here, whether that good workes doe auaple anye thing wyth God to our iustification and reconciliation. They say that faith doth not iustify alone, but faith togither with workes. Which is euen a lyke matter, as to say, that the goodnesse of the tree doth not alone, but that it dothe with the fruite make the tree fruitefull. But we say in the cõtrary wise, that faith only doth iustify. It is one thing to be alone, and an other to bring forth fruite alone. We say not that it is alone, meaning that it is vneffectuall and without fruite of good workes. But yet, albeit it bée not so alone, yet for all that it dothe iustifye alone, in what meaning so euer they doe take the worke of Iustifying.

For it doth iustifye not in respecte that it is effectuall by loue, but in respect that it doth apprehend the mercy of God, and forgiuenes of sinnes, and of condemnation. Yea, And in respecte also that it dothe renue and clense our hearts, that is to say, doth make men iust, and dothe iustifye alone without any help of workes, in which sense they themselues do take this word of Iustification. For euen so it dothe goe before the workes also, whiche it dothe produce of it selfe. It must of necessitie firste become a good tree. And thē after that ỳ fruites do followe, whiche doe not make the tree good, of whence they woulde not come, vnlesse it were good, but they doe declare that the tree is good. In like case we must iudge also of fayth and workes. Wherefore it is a great inconuenience, to denye that faythe only or without workes dothe iustifye. And they do vs great wrong to call thys doctrine newe and heretical, whereas manye of the fathers also did vse manifestly the very same kinde of speach.

Ambrose vsed thys word only or freely. Ad Ro. c. 4.

Ambrose in his Commentaries vppon the Epistle to the Romaines sayeth: They be iustifyed freely, bycause they do worke nothing, nor do nothing to requite it, they be iustifyed by faith onely, by the gift of God. And in the same place: But to hym which beléeueth in him. &c. he sayeth, that it is so determined by God, that when the lawe ceassed, the grace of God should require faith onely vnto saluation. Item, He dothe confirme the same by the example of the Prophet. He calleth it the blessednesse of man, to whome God hath attributed righteousnesse without workes. He calleth them blessed, to whome God hathe ordered this, that they shoulde be iustifyed in his sighte by faith onely, without any labour or obseruation. And also: Onely faythe (sayeth he) is giuen vnto saluation. Rom. 9.

Sée howe oftentymes this man dyd vse and beate in, thys worde Only, which our aduersaries do condemne to be Heresie. Againe he sayth: They be manifestly blessed, whose wickednesse be forgiuen without any labour or worke: and their sinnes hyden without any workes of repentaunce soughte of them, but onely that they muste beléeue. This sayeth he. But let vs sée others also.

Hilarius in Matth. 9. Hilary vpon these wordes of Matthew, Thy sinnes be forgiuen thée, sayeth: It troubleth the Scribes that sinne is forgyuen by man, for they considered man only in Christe Iesu, and that he forgaue the same whiche the lawe could not lose. For faith only doth iustifie.

Athanas. in Gal. 3. Athanasius vpon the wordes of the Apostle saith. Forasmuch as in the lawe no man is iustifyed, &c. Nowe he dothe declare playnely (sayth hée) that the very fayth, yea alone, hathe power to iustifie.

Chrysost. in Epist. ad Rom. cap. 2. Chrysostom vpon the Epistle to the Romaines in that place: For the iustice of God is reuealed in it, &c. For thou canst not (sayeth he) purchase it with any sweat and trauails of thy body, but by the gifte of Gods grace: thou must néedes receyue that freely which commeth from aboue: thou must bring this only of thyne owne, that thou beléeue. And vppon these words, Where is thy glorying? Héere he declareth (saith he) the power of God, that he did not only saue vs, but iustifye vs also, and brought vs into his glorye, vsing no workes thereunto, but requiring faith onely.

Homel. 7.

Rom. 3. Item, vppon that, We be saued by hope: For we do yéelde to God thys only gifte, that we doe beléeue his promise in things to come, and we be saued by this way only. And vpon the Epistle to the Ephesians vppon that, And now in Christ: Either saith he, He meaneth of faith, calling it the decrée. For by faith only he saued vs. This is Chrysostk.

Homil. 3.

Origen ad Romans 3. And Origen doth trauayle much to proue that faith only doth iustify, and that the iustifying of fayth alone, is sufficiente. And that he dothe proue by the examples of the théefe, the synfull woman, and the Publican.

Chrysost. in Rom. 5.

Basilius in Hom. de initio. And Basile hath this: And the Apostle sayeth, He that glorieth, lette him glorye in the Lorde. Where hée sayde. For that Christ is made vnto vs from God, wisedome, iustice, holinesse and redemption, to the intent, that as it is written: Whosoeuer doth glorye, let him glorye in the Lord. For the same is the perfecte and full glorying in God, when no man is proude of his owne righteousnesse, but dothe acknowledge that he is destitute of true iustice, and iustifyed by faith only in Christ.

These and many other like things be redde in the writings of the fathers, whereby we may sée, that wée be not the fyrst that do vse this word Only or Alone, to expresse the meaning of the Apostle, and to aduance the glory of Gods grace, séeyng that the fathers themselues vsed the same before vs, whose writings oure aduersaries doe regarde welnére as muche as they doe the Canonicall scriptures. They crie out, that it is not so in the wordes of the Apostle. Let them say so to ỳ fathers, whome they will haue taken for the pillers of the Church. Let them striue with them rather than with vs. If it be heresie to say, Faith in Christ only doth iustifie, iustifie, lette them condemne the fathers themselues of heresie, yea they must nédes make them the archheretikes. Let thé not accepte persons, but let thé iudge iustly. Let them acknowledge that ỳ same whiche they spake without heresie, and is spoken also by vs, is no heresie at all.

They sawe that this doctrine dyd aduance and further the glorye of Gods grace. And Chrysostome vpon the Epistle to the Colossians, called it the glory and riches of the mistery of God. And vpon the Epistle to the Romaines where it is saide: What shall we say then, that Abraham, &c. he sayth thus: For it is no noueltie for him to be saued by faith, whyche hath no workes: But for him which is adorned with good déedes, to bée made iust by faith, and not by them, that is a wonderfull poynt, and doth most chiefely declare the power of faith. But our aduersaries whé they do teach that ỳ iustifying of vs dothe not consist in faith only but in workes also, what doe they else, but obscure the glory of Gods grace, and extoll the merites of oure workes? They do not sée that it is necessary that our iustifying do consist in faith only, for as muche as it is beestowed freely, If they can not abide the word Only or Alone, let them leaue it and vse thys word Freely. For in case we be iustifyed freely by faithe, as the Apostle doth testifie, it must nédes followe that we be iustifyed not by faith and workes, but by faithe onely. If it be not by faithe onely, but by workes withall, then it is not freely but of duetie. If it be of duetie and not freely, then there is left no glory of Gods grace at all. To this ende they striuing dothe come. And this is the endeuoure and deuice of Satan, who is altogither against the glory of Gods grace.

But héere some men, when they sée that they be ouerwhelmed wyth the iudgements of so many of the fathers, and that they cã not for shame auoyde this worde Onely, they doe flée to this shift, that they doe graunt that man is iustifyed by faithe onely in Christ, but they doe put to it, that this is done onely at the beginning of our faith, that is to say, when wée begin firste to beléeue in Christe, so that we must take it that Paule dyd affirme, that the sinnes did not hynder the Gentiles, but that they were iustifyed by faithe onely, as sone as they began to beléeue in Christ, and that the workes did profite ỳ Iewes nothing at all at the beginning when they came to Chryste, but that their faythe was reputed to them also in stéede of ryghteousenesse. And they doe so affyrme thys, bycause they woulde wynne thys poynte of vs, that they whyche be once iustifyed by faythe, when they haue once sinned agayne after that iustification, they can not be iustifyed now again by faythe, that is to saye, freely, as before, but they muste bée iustifyed by workes, that is to say, by Satisfaction.

Of them vvhich do say, that at oure firste tourning vve be iustifyed by faith, but aftervvardes not so.

To these men we doe answere, that thys shift is vtterly fonde, and to no purpose. For if they doe take the worde of iustifying as we do, for to be absoyled frõ sinnes, it is manifest ỳ we must néeds haue this iustification whiche doeth consiste in frée forgiuenesse of sinnes all oure lyfe long: vnlesse it be in vain which our Lord taught vs to pray, And forgiue vs oure trespasses as we forgiue thē that trespas against vs. Whyche

1. Iohn. 2. Iohn interpreteth of them whyche do beleue and be iustifyed. My chyldren, if anye man sinne, we haue an aduocate with the Father, and he is the forgiuenesse for our sinnes. Hee sayeth not, that he was the propitiation for our sinnes, and that now we must be iustifyed by oure workes, and we our selues to satisfy for oure sinnes, but he bothe sette forth to the Churche of God a continuall and euerlasting propitiatiō for our sinnes in Christ, that is to say, the forgyuenesse of sinnes and iustification.

2 But if they meane that iustice whiche is the effecte of this iustification, whereby oure heartes bee clensed and oure lyfe renued, nor the same nother bothe so pertayne to faithe, that it is to bee referred to the beginning of it onely, and that so all oure lyfe after must needes haue the iustice of workes whereby wee shoulde be saued. For this were as A similitude. muche to saye, as that the soule doth at the fyrste gyue lyfe to the bodye, but not so afterwardes: as though that the whole lyfe giuing, during all our life after, depended not of the soule, but of oure workes. The Apostle sayeth: The iust man lyueth by faithe. The life of iust men is adorned with many trimme vertues, and yet for all that no thanke to anye of them but vnto faythe onely that we doe lyue godly and with clensed heartes in the sighte of God. Whys briefely we thought good to aunswer vnto their imagination.

They do charge vs with the place of Iames. But I say whatsoeuer he were, if he shoulde speake contrary to the iudgemente of Paule, yet for all that he shoulde not be any preiudice to the truthe. It is a cleere case that he doth speake of the vayne and dead faithe, whiche the counterfaite Christians did euery where boast of workes, so that hee seemeth that hee meante to expresse the very strumpet of the common people, when he once craketh of his faithe, and the other calleth for the workes, whereby hys faith is tryed. But when Paule doth attribute iustification vnto faithe, he speaketh not of a dead and counterfaite faith, but of a true and liuely faithe. And therefore are those wordes of Iames, What auayleth it my brethren, if any man say that he hath faith, and haue no dedes, Is faith able to saue him? He sayeth not simply, If a man hath faith, but if a man say that he hath faithe, whereby he dothe declare, that he dothe touche their vayne boasting whyche sayde, that they had faith when they hadde none but dead and counterfaite faithe. And he addeth to it this: In case a brother or sister be naked, and stande in nede of theyr dayly relefe, and anye of you saye vnto them: Goe a Goddes name, bee warme and fyll your selues, and yet for all that you gyue them nothyng that is necessarye for the bodye, what profyte shall there bee? So faithe, if it haue not workes, it is dead of it selfe. But some man wyll saye: Thou haste Faithe, and I haue workes, Shewe mee thy Faythe of thy workes, and I wyll shewe thee my faythe of my workes. And bycause wee shoulde vnderstand what faith they did vainely boaste boaste off, he addeth, saying: Doest thou beleue that there is one God? thou doest well, the Deuils do also beleue, and feare. He sayth not, beleuest thou in Christ? or beleuest thou the promisses of God? or trustest thou in God? but thou beleuest that there is one God. The Apostles did in the beginning of their preaching defende the vnitie of God among the Gentils, to confounde their errour of many Gods. This faith many receiuing, stucke so vnto it, as though it were alone sufficient to saue thē; and they did so boast of it, as though that they were perfecte Christian men, by and by, bycause they beleued in one God, Whereas the very Deuils did beleue also the same. But hitherto Iames spake not of the veryе Faith of the promisses of Christ, of which Paule speaketh, when he disputeth of iustification, which can not be Idle and dead. Wherefore he doeth set forth the example of Abraham as not appertaining vnto that matter, when he saith. Wylt thou knowe thou vayne man, that faith is dead without workes? Was not Abraham our father iustifyed by his workes, when he offered his sonne Isaac vppon the altare? thou seest that faith doeth worke towarde his doinges, and that by his doinges his faith was made perfect? and the Scripture was fulfilled which saith: Abraham beleued God, and it was imputed to him for iustice, and was called the friende of God.

He doeth confounde the worde of Fayth. For vntil this place whiles he blamed the dead and vaine fayth, he spake of that that we beleue that ther is one god, which no doubt is in many folke verye yle and vaine. But as for the Example of Abraham, that is not so reported in the Scriptures, that he did onely beleue that there is one God, but that he hadde fayth also to the promises of God. Which is expressed thus, Abraham beleued God, and it was imputed vnto him for iustice. This faith is onlye of the electes: but the same whereby we doe beleue that there is one God, is cōmon to good and euil, yea, and to the Deuils also: the one is imputed for iustice before God, and the other is not so: the one is liuely and working by the spirit of God, and the other faith, without this faythe, is vayne and deade.

This confounding of the worde of faith, doth make the matter blinde to the reader. Wherefore we muste diligently marke, that Paule and Iames spake of two sundry faithes. How muche better I pray you had it bene, to haue diligently and plainly distincted, that true and very Christian faythe, whiche Paule doeth preache euerye where, from that which is common to the Iewes and Christians bothe, yea, and to the Turkes also, and Deuils, than to haue myngled them one with an other, and to set forthe so contrarye a saying from the Apostles doctrine? whereupon he doth inferre and say: Ye see therefore, that man is iustifyed by his dēdes and not by faith onlye? Whereas the Apostle doeth most strongly argue vpon that that the scripture saith, Abraham beleued God, and it was imputed vnto him to iustice: in this wise, what shall we say then, that Abraham our father accoꝛding to the flesshe foundꝛ. Foꝛ if Abꝛaham were iustified by his woꝛkes, hee hath cause to glooꝛye, but not with God. Foꝛ what saith scripture? Abꝛaham beleued God, & it was imputed to hym foꝛ iustice. But vnto hym whyche woꝛketh, the reward is not imputed accoꝛdyng vnto grace, but accoꝛdyng vnto dutye. But vnto him which dothe not woꝛke, but beleueth in hym whyche dothe iustifye the wicked, hys faythe is imputed foꝛ iustice, &c.

And in the ende of the Chapiter: And it is not written bycause of him only, that it was imputed vnto hym, but bycause of vs also, vnto whome it is imputed beleuing vpon him, who rayſed vp our loꝛd Iesus Chriſt from the dead, who was deliuered foꝛ our sinnes, and rayſed vp foꝛ the iustification of vs. This saith the Apoſtle, of whoſe doctrine woe doe doubte nothing at all.

Compare nowe the conclusion of thys James with thys argumentatiõ of the Apoſtle: you doe see therfoꝛe (saith he) that man is iustifyed by woꝛks and not by faith onely, conſider how contrary it is. I say nothing how that the Scripture maketh no mention of iustifycation in the hiſtoꝛy of the offering of Isaac, noꝛ of the woꝛkes, neither of Abꝛaham in that place, when he sayth: Abꝛaham beleued GOD, and it was imputed to him foꝛ righteouſneſſe. Wherefoꝛe he ſhoulde haue inferred moꝛe directlye in thys soꝛte: You ſee therefoꝛe that Abꝛaham did not onelye beleue that there is one God, but he gaue Faith also to hys promiſſes, and the ſame faith which was imputed to him foꝛ iuſtyce, was no Idle fayth, but founde to be effectuall in a notable woꝛk. Thys we ought to obſeruc touchyng faithe in thys place.

Now concerning woꝛkes, it is a playne matter, that the iuſtification of Abꝛaham which came vnto him by Fayth, was many yeres befoꝛe the fact of the offering of Isaac. Wherof is written in Geneſis the xv. chapiter. So that it was the fact oꝛ woꝛke of a man wpich was iuſtifyed befoꝛe by the fayth in the pꝛomiſſes of God. Wherefoꝛe it could not concurre wpth faythe in the point of his iuſtifycation. In deede he offered his ſonne in faith, and the very ſame wherby he was iuſtyfied befoꝛe: And ſo the fayth and fact were ioyned together, but the iuſtification of Abꝛaham whiche wente befoꝛe, was imputed onely vnto faith. Therefoꝛe let them ſay which doe obiecte this place of James againſt the doctrine of the Apoſtle, that James toke the woꝛde of Iuſtifyng here one wayes, and Paule, an nother wayes. That James toke it foꝛ to be declared iuſt, which ſenſe is aright applied to the woꝛkes of faith: and that Paule toke it foꝛ acquiting from ſinnes, and to bee reputed with God foꝛ iuſte. Foꝛ vnleſſe they ſay ſo, they can not defende this James, but that he muſt nedes be founde contrarye to the Apoſtle, and foꝛ that cauſe to be diſalowed.

The ordinary gloſe out of Auguſtine ſayth, that Paule and James do agree in this ſoꝛte. That wheras Abꝛaham was iuſtified by fayth without good woꝛkes, it is vnderſtanded of the woꝛkes which went befoꝛe befoꝛe: foꝛ he was not made iuſte foꝛ the woꝛkes which he did, but foꝛ fayth onely. And here it is meant of the woꝛkes which doe follow fayth, by whiche he was iuſtifyed the moꝛe, whereas he was iuſte befoꝛe by faith. Wherefoꝛe Paule ſayth: Abꝛaham offeꝛed Isaac by faith, when he was pꝛoued. Thys oblation was the woꝛke and teſtimony of his faith and iuſtice. This hee writeth vpon the Epiſtle of James. So that if the offering of Isaac was the teſtymony of the Faith and iuſtice of Abꝛaham, then he was not iuſtifyed by it, but declared therby to be iuſte.

They that doe aſcribe loue also to our iuſtification, to the intent that they woulde pꝛoue that fayth doeth not iuſtifie alone, doe alledge that saying of Chriſt: Many ſinnes be foꝛgiuen hir, bicauſe ſhe loued muche. Lo (saith he) there is manyfeſtly attribute foꝛgiueneſſe of ſinnes vnto loue. If to be iuſtifyed be to be aſſoyled from ſinnes. Ergo, not faythe alone, but loue also doth iuſtifie. To them we do anſwere, that the loue of the ſame woman was not the cauſe of the foꝛgiueneſſe of hir ſinnes, but the pꝛoofe and the declaration of it. She had obteined foꝛgiueneſſe of hir ſinnes by fayth in Chriſte, and when ſhe was thereby iuſtified, ſhe loued him feruentlye, and did openlye declare the ſame loue. And therefoꝛe that which Chriſt ſayd in that place: There be foꝛgiuen to hir many ſinnes, and pꝛoueth it by that which he addeth: foꝛ aſmuche as ſhee loueth muche. As though he had ſayde: It is no wonder that ſhee loueth me ſo muche, ſhe hathe good reaſon to do ſo, foꝛ there be foꝛgiuen hir manye ſinnes. So we ſaye: He hathe obteyned his purpoſe, foꝛ he laugheth and is merye. Item: He is ſoꝛe hurte, foꝛ he is verye angry. Item, He is verye hungrye, foꝛ he eateth apace. Therefoꝛe this appeareth to be a very weake argument, that the aduerſaries do take out of this place againſt the doctrine of Faithe, that doeth iuſtifye. They might haue vnderſtanded it by the ſimilitude that went befoꝛe of two detters, of which when Simon was aſked, whether of them bothe did loue his creditour the better that foꝛgaue them theyꝛ dettes: he aunſwered, I ſuppoſe he to whome he foꝛgaue moſte. And agayne by that which the Loꝛd added, ſaying: And he which hathe the leſſe foꝛgiuen hym, doeth loue the leſſe: whiche ſhoulde be taken after theyꝛ meaning in this ſenſe: Foꝛ he that loueth leſſe, hathe leſſe foꝛgiuen him. And that this woman obteyned foꝛgiueneſſe of hir ſinnes, not by loue by but by faith, it appeareth by that that whē the gueſtes which ſate at the boꝛde, thought in theyꝛ minde: Who is this whiche doeth alſo foꝛgiue ſinnes? The Loꝛd ſayde vnto hir: Thy faith hathe made thee ſafe, go in peace. How did faith make hir ſafe, but bycauſe that in beleuing ſhe had obteyned foꝛgiueneſſe of hir ſinnes?

As foꝛ them which do appoint that neither the obedience, deathe, and bloud, but the Godhed of Chriſt is the efficient cauſe of our iuſtification, and doe ſequeſter the foꝛgiueneſſe of ſinnes from our iuſtification, ſo that they doe ſay, that foꝛgiueneſſe doeth goe befoꝛe, and then the iuſtifycation,

The opinion of Oſiander.

tion commeth after, which commeth vnto vs by the essentiall iustice of Christ dwelling in vs, according vnto his Godhead, manye haue made them aunswere already: wherefore we answere briefly, that we can not lyke, that contrary to the doctrine of the Apostle, they doe sequester iustification from forgiuenesse of sinnes, as appeareth by that which is spoken before: and there is no cause why they should so do, seyng that it is certain, that they which be iustified by fayth, be regenerate by the holye spirite, and directed vnto good workes: and that the same point is not to be allowed that they do in this matter sequester the nature of God in Christe, from the manhode, obedience, and death of Christe. We know that Christ doth dwell in our hartes by his spirit, and doeth frame vs a new, that we should be a newe creature, ready to all good workes: but we do not seke in this article, of whence we be regenerate, to newe men, but of whence we be iustified before God, in that sorte of iustice, whereby we may haue peace in our consciences before him, and whereby we maye be saued, yea and doe stande fast and boldelye in the iudgement of God agaynst the sentence of condemnation. And this ý death of Christ doth giue vnto vs, iustifying and deliuering from sinnes all them which do beleue in him, and not by that infused and essentiall iustice, whiche bycause we do not atcheue vnto perfectly in this lyfe, it can not quiet our consciences. But let this serue for that point, wherein we be iustified before God. And this which we haue spoken may profit the godlye, and satisfie them which be not contentious, as for the rest, we take no charge of.

VI. To vvhat purpose God doth iustifie vs.

The fruites of this iustification be great and inestimable. God doeth iustifie vs and acquite vs of our sinnes, not to ý intent, that when we be iustified, we shoulde by our euill liuing shame his name & grace, as though he did not abhorre sinne: but in suche sorte that he hath a regarde both of our saluation and of his owne glorye also. And these be the speciall fruites of this iustification, which I do plainly finde.

The first is, that the glorye of Gods iustice, that is to say, the goodnesse of God be shewed and auaunced. So the Apostle meaneth when he saith: They be iustified frely by his grace, by the redemption which is in Christ Iesu, whom God sette for to be reconciler by fayth in his bloud, to the shewing of his righteousnesse, &c. And, Abraham staggered not at the promise of God through lacke of beleefe, but he was made strong by faithe, giuing glorie vnto God, conceyuing a certaine assurednesse, that he which had promised, was able also to performe the same. Ergo he which doeth beleue the promises of God, doeth glorie him, giuing him glory both of truth and of power, and is iustified to this ende, that the glory of his goodnesse be auaunced.

2 Secondly, this iustification falleth out to the quietnesse of our consciences, whereof the Apostle speaketh, saying: Therefore being iustified by faith, we haue peace towards God, by our Lord Iesus Christ. And wheresouer this peace is, there can be none of that doubting, which the Scholemen of our tyme do teache. For the doubting and the quietnes of conscience, be quite contrarie. Yea, we haue not onely the quietnesse of conscience, but a certaine glory also by this iustification, which thing can not be with doubting. And the same glorie is that when we doe glorie in the hope of Gods glory and in our afflictiõs also. Looke to the Romaines: For he wold haue vs so farre from doubting of the grace of God in Christ, that we muste haue quiet consciences towardes hym, and hartily glorye also vpon the hope of his glorie, & that he doeth for that cause frelye iustifie vs bicause of our faith in Christ.

3 Thirdly, this iustification doth furder vs to the holines of lyfe & studye of iustice. Thereof the Apostle doth admonishe them which be iustifyed, as well in the beginnings as in the ende also of the syrte chapiter, wher he saith: But now being made free, that is to say, quited and discharged from sinne, you haue your fruite vnto sanctification. And to the Corinthians: Neither whoremongers, nor worshippers of Images, nor adulterers, &c. shall receiue the inheritaunce of Gods kingdome: And this you were sometymes, but you be washed, but you be sanctified, but you be iustified by the name of our Lord Iesu, and by the spirit of our God, &c. by which words he doth warne them, that forasmuch as they be iustified, they muste from hence forth giue themselues to godlinesse, to holynesse of lyfe, and iustice, &c. For this cause the spirit of Christ is giuen to them which be iustified, by whom they be altered to a newnesse of lyfe, which newnesse beyng receiued by the holy spirit of god, is not of it selfe the iustification, but the fruits of Iustification.

4 Fourthly, this iustification which is by fayth in Christ, doeth tende also to the glorye of them which be iustifyed. Hereof the Apostle speaketh to ý Romains, saying: Whom he hathe appointed before, them he hath called also: and whom he hath called, them hee hathe iustified also: and the same whome hee hathe iustified, he hath glorified also. He speaketh in the tyme passe, for bycause that God hath appointed them whiche be iustified to the glorye of Gods Children, which is to come, which we doe yet loke for in hope.

The glory of them vvich be iustified. Rom. 8.

5 Fiftly, God doeth iustifie vs by grace frely in Christ, that we may be saued and be made partakers of eterall lyfe. Of this Paule maketh mention, saying: But after that the goodnesse and loue towards man, of God our sauiour appeared, he saued vs not by the workes, which are in rightuousnesse which we did, but according vnto his own mercy, by the bathe of regeneration, and renewing of the holy spirite, which he poured plentifullye into vs by Iesu Christe our sauiour: that being iustified by his grace, we might be made heires, according to the hope of euerlasting lyfe. This saith he. And he calleth the worde of this doctrine, Undoubtfull, bycause of the infallyble truthe and certentie of it. Wherfore I doe Saluation and lyfe euerlasting. Tit. 3.

epre-

ercedingly maruell of the dulneſſe of our aduerſaries, that they ſée not the light of this doctrine, nor feele not the inestimable grace which thei do ſo much ſtriue againſt, in the elects of God. Thus much we haue noted of this place of iuſtification, and haue ſayd the leſſe, bycauſe that it is more plentifully treated of by others: and we haue alſo ſaide ſomewhat more of it vpon the Epiſtle to the Romaines.

Of good workes.

After the Iuſtification of ỹ elects which is by faith in Chriſt Ieſu, we muſt conſider of good workes, chiefly bicauſe of them which doe partly blame vs, for this doctrine of the Apoſtolike trueth, wherein we ſay that we be iuſtified by Faith onlye, as thoughe we did reiecte good workes, and ſpake of an vaine and idle Faith: other ſome partly allowe it, but yet doe euill applie it, as though they ſhoulde obteyne or had already obteined by faith ſuche a ſalnation, which ſhoulde doe no good worke, and as though it were not required of ỹ beleuers, that they ſhuld be fruitfull in good workes, and yet both partes may be well enough anſwered by thoſe thinges, which we haue ſayde before of Faith, how it is nothing leſſe than Idle, but is ſundry wayes effectual, and doth worke the effectes of godlineſſe and charity in the beleuers.

They muſte alwaye worke well. Gen. 1.

1 Firſt, like as al things be ſo made of God, that they be not vaine, but good and profitable, according vnto that ſaying: And God ſawe al that he had made, and they were verye good: ſo he made man alſo not to be idle and ſluggiſhe, but that euerye man ſhuld according vnto his eſtate and hability, which he hath receyued of God, worke continuallye thoſe things that be good and profitable. But Satan hath diſordred and ouerthrowen this end and purpoſe of our creation by bringing in of ſinne, and Chriſt hathe brought it into order again, who was ſent into the worlde to this purpoſe, to deſtroy the worke of Satan. By him we be regenerated, ſo that being shaped to a newe creature, we may be profitable, and fruitefull in good workes. Therefore the Apoſtle ſayde: For we be his creature made vnto good workes in Chriſt Ieſu, whiche God prouided for vs to walke in. And: Who gaue himſelfe for vs to redeme vs from all wickednesſe, & to cleanſe to him an acceptable people, folowers of good workes. And to this purpoſe many of the admonitions of the lord and of the Apoſtle do tende, as the ſame in Matthewe: Let your lyght ſo ſhine before men, that they maye ſée your good workes, and glorifie your father which is in heauen, And to the Galathians: Therfore whiles we haue tyme, let vs do good towards all men, and ſpecially toward them of the houſeholde of Faythe. To this vſe the holy ſcriptures were giuen. For all ſcripture inſpired frō God, ſaith the Apoſtle, is profitable to teache, to reproue, to correct, to inſtruct in righteouſneſſe, that the man of God be perfect, and furniſhed to all good workes. It is a cleare caſe caſe then, that we be not ſo iuſtified by Faythe, that we ſhoulde be vnprofitable, barren, and vnfruitfull after our iuſtification: but rather that giuing our ſelues continually vnto good workes, we ſhoulde auaunce the glorye of Gods grace, and laye it before the eyes of al men, as the light of oure newe creature. Who doeth plante a tree, and digge aboute the rootes of it, meaning onely to haue it a tree, and not rather to haue it a good tree, and to beare good fruite? We be after the ſame ſorte regenerated in Chriſte and iuſtified, not to be Chriſtians in name onely, but to become good of euill, and to declare that goodneſſe receiued of Chriſte by good workes. In teaching of this, we doe neither giue occaſion to our aduerſaries, to condemne the doctrine of iuſtification, as though it did reiecte good workes: nor we be not in the fault, that the falſe Goſpellers doe liue more lyke Epicures in the Goſpell, than they liue like Chriſt.

2 Secondlye, we muſt ſée which be to be accompted good workes, after the rule of Chriſtian religion. There is greate diuerſitie of opinions herein. They which doe partly regarde and ſéke for gaine in the Church of Chriſt, more than the ſalnation of the faithful, and are partly blinded with ſuperſtitions: they do teach it to be good workes, if men doe heare a great ſorte of Maſſes euery daye in the Churche: if men fall proſtrate before images: if thou mumble out certaine prayers vnto certayne Saintes: if men giue well vnto them, if all thinges be largelye founde vnto prieſtes, fryers, and nunnes: if the Decrees of the prelates be diligentlye obſerued, and ſuche lyke ſtuffe deuoutelye done. But the good workes which be requyred of the faithfull, be voyde of al ſuperſtition, nor they be not bounde to anye place, perſon, or time. For they be as certaine fruites of oure whole lyfe, witneſſing of the goodneſſe of our minde, and declaring the nature of our heauenly father which maye be acknowledged to be good, not onely to the faithfull, but vnto the vnfaithfull alſo, and ſo giue them occaſion to glorifie God our father. Good workes be the workes of faith, which worketh by loue. They be the workes of God, which he worketh in vs and by vs. Chriſte doeth particularly ſpeke of ſome of them, ſaying: I was hungry, and you gaue me meate, I was a thirſt, and you gaue me drinke, &c. And the Apoſtle is wonte to call the workes of charitie, Good workes.

Mat. 5.

Mat. 25. 21

Heb. 13. 21

2. Cor. 10. 1. Tim. 6. 1

It is a matter in vvhat minde good vvorkes bee done.

But for all that we muſt conſider here, of what minde thoſe things be wrought whiche be of themſelues good, whether of the affection of loue and mercie, or for ſome other cauſe. For he is not worthy ſtraight way, to haue the commendation of good workes, which doeth beſtowe meat, drinke, or clothing, vpon the poore not of the deſire to do good, but rather to hunt and hawke for glorie in the ſight of men. Wherefore all be not immediatlye good workes, whiche be eſteemed to be good, but it is requiſite firſte, that they be ſuch as do profite their neighbours: Secondlye that thei do proceede from a good and faythfull harte, and the affection of charitie: Thirdly we muſt reyſe der the vse of good workes.

The vse of good vvorkes. Matth. 5.

The first is, to aduaunce the glory of our heauenlye father, this vse Christ teacheth hemself, saying: Let your lyght so shyne before men, that they may see your good workes, and glorifye your Father whiche is in Heauen. So that in case there were none other vse of good workes but this only shewed by Christ him self, the teachers of workes ought not to charge vs with the abrogation of good workes, bicause that we doe denye that they do iustifye. For lyke as this is the chiefest desire of faythfull folkes, that they may glorifye the name of their Lord and God, so it is no small matter of waight vnto them, if they can glorifye the same with their good workes, although they get nothing else by it besides.

The second vse of good workes is, that we be assured by them in our consciences of our election and calling, in that we doe dayly more and more feele the grace and vertue of Christe by the meanes of them: like as on the contrary parte, euil workes do expresse and trye out more and more the malice of our hartes. And herevnto serueth the place of Peter, where we reade thus: Wherefore Brethren, take hede rather that you make your election and vocation assured.

2. Pet. 2.

The thirde is, that our faith is exercised, fedde, encreased, and strengthened by good workes. And this waye Paule doeth admonithe Timothée to kindle (as it were a fyre) the gifte of God within him. For lyke as the fyre by wasting of the wood wareth greater and stronger, so is godlinesse and faith fedde and maynteyned in Christian men by the study of good workes, euen as by vse and exercise of vertuousnesse men doe come to a perfect habite of the same.

3. Tim. 1.

The fourth is, that by your good workes our neighbours be stirred to the like desire of godlinesse, when they doe see some lyuelie examples thereof in vs, which they may follow. So Paule writeth of almes dædes, saying: And your Zeale hath stirred many. And to the Ebrewes: Let vs consider our selues one an other, and to stirre one an other to charitie and good workes, &c. which is not to be vnderstanded of workes onely, but of examples of good workes also.

The fifte is, that by the applying of good workes, the necessities of the poore needye widowes, fatherlesse, outlawes, prisoners, and sickefolkes, &c. be relieued: which kinde of profit doeth resemble the very disposition of God. Yea and there is not prouision onely made for them hereby, for our common frailty also and lackes be supplied by this mutuall desire to do good one to an other. For godnesse which we are created vnto, is not determined in the workes of mercy only, but it doth reach vnto our whole lyfe common trade of liuing together, wherein one man is so knitte vnto an other by mutuall ayde and seruice, euen as the very members and partes of our body do one seruice, to the necessary ayde of the other. Wherefore they be not men, but the vaine shapes of men, which do ydelly spend all their life, as though they were borne to no other intent, but to consume meat and drinke.

drinke. Thus much for the thirde point of the vse of good workes.

Fourthly, we must see whether and why they doe please God. And that they do please him, we may perceyue by the wordes of the Apostle when he saithe in this wise: That you may walke worthile in the sight of the Lorde, to please him in all pointes, beyng fruitefull in all good workes. Ergo, they that be fruitfull in all kindes of good workes, do please the Lord in all thinges. The reason is at hand. In dæde, Gods maiesty hathe no nede of our good workes, neither in wordes nor in dædes, and yet for all that, those thinges which we do well, do please him: firste, bicause the be the fruites of our faithe. For how can it be, but that he which doeth like the fayth of the beleuers, muste also lyke the fruites of their faith? As he doeth mislyke the workes whiche be done without fayth, so he doth allow and like the same which do procéde from a pure and sincere fayth.

Secondly, good workes do please him, bycause they be done by his spirit. For as the Apostle is witnesse, he doeth worke in vs, bothe to will and to perfourme, according vnto his good will. And Augustine doeth say aryghte, that he doeth crowne his good workes in vs. In dæde those things which we do well by the spirit of God, are not perfectly good, bicause of our owne imperfection, but yet forasmuch as they do come from him, it can not be, but that they must be lyked of him, as the author and beginner of them.

The thirde reason is, bycause that those thinges whiche faithfull men doe, they doe them for their Lorde Goddes sake, whome they seke to please in all pointes, And how shuld he not like this minde in them? But we must beware that we open not a gappe here vnto them, which doe many thinges, neyther of sincere fayth, neither of the spirit of God, but vpon superstition and common custome, for that they surmise that those thinges doe please God, whereas they doe earnestlye displease him. We knowe that saying of Christe. They doe worshippe me in vayne, teaching the doctrines and commandementes of menne. The Iewes, Turkes, and counterfaite Christians, be farre out of the way in this matter.

The fourthe cause is, bycause that his iustice is suche, that he loueth the same whiche is iuste and good. In this sorte beynge him selfe of all moste iuste, he loueth good, iuste, and vpright workes, lyke as in the contrary, he doeth abhorre not onely the very wickednesse, and vnrighteousnesse of the naughty heart, but all the fruites also of this wickednesse and vniustice, what colour soeuer they be bragged out by. Dauid saythe: Thou hatte hated all them which do worke wickednesse, thou shalt destroye all them whiche doe speake lyes. And Peter sayth: But in all people whosoeuer feareth God, and worketh righteousnesse, is accepted of him.

That vvhich is iuste and good, is loued of God.

Act. 10.

Fiftly, forasmuch as he is full of truthe, our good workes are liked also of him, in that respecte, that they doe procéde of true godlinesse, godnesse, and faythe, which trueth he doeth regarde in all points. All dis-

God doeth like good vvorkes for the truths sake.

semblers are abhorred before God and men. In the contrary, God loueth truely, not onlye in those things which be well done by the elect and faythfull, but in them also which do without dissimulatiō truely confesse their faultes.

For these causes and many others yet, which we haue not rehearsed, it is most assured, that the good workes of the faithfull doe please their God, so that we muste apply good workes not only bycause they be in sundrye sortes profitable, but also bycause they doe exceedinglye please God. Surelye I can not thinke him very godlye disposed, that is not moued by these two causes: It is a filthie and corrupt minde that hath regard to nothing but to the reward and repayment of his workes, and accompteth all that he doth to deserue somewhat, as thoughe God were in his daunger.

It is a filthy thing to seke reward.

Of the reward of good workes.

And yet the goodnesse of Goddes maiesty is suche, that it doeth consider and rewarde the good workes of the faithful, and is in no mans dette. And therefore is that sayde: Be glad and reioyce, for your reward is great in heauen. He that hathe giuen to one of my little ones a cup of colde water, verilye I saye vnto you, he shall not lose his reward. And, Come ye blessed of my father &c, I was hungrye, and ye gaue me meat. Item, to the Ebrewes: God is not vniuste, that he wil forget your trauayle.

Matth. 5. & 10.

Matth. 25.

Hebr. 6.

When we reade this, we may not referre it to the desertes of oure good workes, but vnto the goodnesse of God, hauing in our mind that saying of our Lord. Although you do al, yet say that you be vnprofitable seruantes: and that our righteousnesse is compared by the Prophet to a defiled cloute. The remembrance of those sayings shal vtterly extinguish the consecration of our own deserts, and is impugned by the doctrine of Gods grace. Augustine sayth: Woe be to all our iustice, if it be iudged setting mercye aparte. Therefore this is a Christian sentence worthy to be beaten into all mens heades: Let not thy lefte hand know what thy right hand doeth. Let our right hande worke those thinges whiche be good and pleasaunte vnto GOD. And in the meane season lette oure hartes depende vppon the grace of Gods goodnesse only, and let not thy left hande wrpte into thy kalender those thinges whiche be somewhat well done by the right hand. Lette the note of our good workes, be in Gods hande, and not in our owne. Let them be wayed by the balaunce of his goodnesse, and not by our own. What soeuer he doth rewarde vs either in this life, either in the lyfe to come, let vs thanke his grace of it, and not our desertes.

That we must not attribute any merite to oure vvorkes.

And beynge of this minde and doctrine, we do derogate nothing from the doctrine of iustification, and of Gods grace nothing from the christian endeuour of good workes, nothing from Gods goodnesse, whiche giueth rewarde where no man deserueth any whitte: and so I suppose there is no doubt of the places of holy Scripture, whether they doe sette forthe fayth vnto vs or good workes. Fayth and good workes be in degree one vnder the other, & not contrary. Wherefore lyke as we be not offended ded whē we do hear that God of his grace doth promise life euerlasting, to them which doe beleeue in Christ, and that he imputeth iustice to their fayth: So we maye not be offended when we doe heare that God is iust, and that he abhorreth wickednesse, that he loueth rightuousnesse, that he rewardeth the good workes of the faithfull, and punisheth the wicked and reprobate. Bothe these pointes are in God, as well to destroy the reprobate in iust iudgement, as by his mere grace to saue the elect through Christe: as well to condemne the naughty doings of the reprobate, as to accept and recompence the good workes of the faithful, by his grace, through the very same Christ.

Away therfore with the doctrine of our merites, and of the confidence of our owne righteousnesse. Let the doctrine of the faythe in Christe be truelye taught, let the fruites of an effectuall faythe be required of the faythful, that they be not like barren trees: let the vse of good workes be declared vnto them, and withall let them be admonished, howe that it is in no case conuenient, that they shuld haue any hope or confidence in their owne desertes which be redeemed by the bloude of Christ, and be altogether his, by whom they be redeemed, and are bounde to him for all, and that they can nother thinke, & muche lesse do, anye thing in deede that is good, by their own strength, but that they ought to say with the Prophet: Enter not into iudgement with thy seruant, O lord, for in thy sight no liuing person shal be iustified. And in the Lordes prayer, Forgiue vs oure trespasses.

Of Merites towardes God.

Although that the godlye and faythfull person, may be sufficientlye enformed by the doctrine of grace, which is in Christe Iesu, what he ought to iudge of the desertes which are before God, yet for al y to arme the simple sort against the dreames of the Scholemen, I though mete to say somwhat seuerally of the same.

VVhat is merite.

We nede not to define what merite is. It is taken sometime for the worke it selfe, whiche is taken to be meritorious: in which sense Augustine in a place sayth, that merites must go before the rewarde. Sometymes it is taken for the rewarde which is worthily giuen to him that worketh. The first sense is cōcerning him that worketh, the last cōcerneth him which giueth the rewarde to the worker. Occam disputeth here, how that merite and rewarde are as contrary one to the other, in consideration of the deseruer and the rewarder, for that it commeth by the reason of the merite that it shoulde be actiuely from the deseruer, and by the reason of the reward that it is more passiuely in him that is rewarded, bicause that the rewarde ought to be actiuely from the rewarder: and that it is one mans part both to deserue and to be rewarded, to deserue actiuely, & to reward passiuely. This is their manner of speach. In deede there can be no reward but in respect of a desert or merite, but there may be desert, though there do ensue nother ther punishement neither reiwarde. And therefore we do not giue vnto merit the name of reward, but we do oftentimes call reward, by the word of merite.

Merite of three sortes vvith the Scholmen. The merit of congruence.

Secondlye, the Scholemen doe make three sortes of merites. The first is the merite of Congruence: the seconde the merite of Worthinesse: the thirde the merite of Condigne. Some will haue the merite of congruence to be, when although that he to whom the thing is giuen, be vnworthye to haue it giuen him, and that his doing is not such that it deserueth it, yet that it becommeth him to whom it is done to giue him: as althoughe the sinner deserue no fauour, yet it is conuenient for God of this godnesse to forgiue the repentance, and to giue him his grace. But some say that the merite of congruence, is when a man of his owne god motion comming by nature, doth deserue the firste grace, which they call the preuenting grace.

The merite of vvorthinesse.

They call the merite of worthynesse, when the iuste person doth entreate for the sinner, for they saye, it is worthy ỹ the iuste be hearde. So when grace is giuen to the sinner at the prayer of the iuste, they do attribute this to the merite of worthynesse, that is to say, of the iust which doeth make meanes for him. They will haue the merite of condigne to be, when a man holpen by the firste grace, doth make himself by the first grace worthye of euerlasting lyfe. For he by that meanes doing well, is worthy they saye, to haue reward for his labour. This they suppose that man of his own strength and by the motion of his owne wil, naturally had, doth deserue the firste grace, and that then the same firste grace doeth not sauc, but aydeth mans strengthe to deserue saluation condignely by god workes.

The merite of condigne.

Firste, as touching the merite of congruence it is contrary vnto the scriptures, for as muche as they call that merite, where no merite is at all. For what merite or deserte can there be in him which deserueth no thing at all? In what sense soeuer they doe take the merite of congruence, it is not merite but mere grace. Secondly, nor the merite of worthinesse is properly any merite, for the reward of it is not giuen to the worthy, but to the vnworthy. For albeit that the sinner fare the better for the prayers of the iuste person, yet this benefite is not bestowed as a reward to the worthy, but as a fauour or grace to the vnworthy. They saye, when any iuste man doeth entreate for any person that is in sin, it is the merite of worthinesse if he be heard. For the iuste is worthy to be heard. If God by so bound to the iuste, that vnlesse he do heare him whē he prayeth for the sinner, and that he doeth otherwise than becometh him, & doth not vse him accordingly to his merit, to what purpose nede men to seke or to make meanes vnto him by intercession and prayer, if he heare him not? If it be be attributed vnto merite or deseruing, when God doeth forgiue a sinner for the righteous mans sake, why then saythe not the iuste and worthye person of merite, rather thus: It is mete O God for my deserte towards thē, that thou at my requeste doest forgiue this sinner? Neither can thei in any wise say, but that that a righteous man in dede, doeth not impute any thing to his own deseruing, neither that he doeth so iudge or esteeme of him selfe, that he shoulde be worthy to be hearde, but that God is so minded towardes the righteous man, that he doth esteeme him to haue deserued well, and to be worthy to be heard when he prayeth. For there is no man so righteous, that he shoulde be more able to obtayne his petition throughe his own deseruing when he doth praye, than through the grace of God: for prayer and merites are contrary one to an other. For prayer hath a respect vnto grace, but merite loketh for reward. The merite of condigne is vsed in worldly cases among men: but not a lyke in the matter of our saluation and towards God, as we shall declare hereafter.

Ephes. 2.

In fewe wordes, where as they do attribute the beginning of saluation vnto naturall motions, and to the strength of men comming of nature, and wheras also they do attribute vnto the grace of faythe not saluation, but a certaine helpe to deserue saluation condignelye by god workes, these points be farre wide from the scriptures, and the verye deuises of Scholemen vtterly repugnant to the heauenly grace of God. This pestilent plague of the Pelagians is to be withstanded with al our might, & we must firmly holde, that we can deserue nother grace nor saluation by any strength or works of our owne, for any merite either of congruence, worthinesse, or condignelle, but that al is simply & verily to be referred to the grace of God in Christ. For be saued through grace by fayth (saith the Apostle) and that not of your selues, it is the gifte of God, not by workes, least any man might glory. After the Scholemens diuinitie we should haue sayd: You haue deserued your firste grace by the god motion of your hartes, produced of nature, but ye haue not yet obtained saluation, but you must deserue the same by god works of condigne. When Christ sayth, He that beleueth in me, hath lyfe euerlasting, he speaketh not like a Scholeman. For he shuld haue said: He that beleueth in me by the god motion picked out of nature, he shal deserue the first grace: but he shal haue euerlasting lyfe at ỹ time when he hath deserued it of a condignelle by god workes. Paule calleth not euerlasting lyfe the merite of condignelle, but the gifte of God. Therfore loke howe far wide this doctrine of the merite of congruence and condigne is from holye scriptures, so farre it is to be calle off from the eares and harts of the faythfull.

Rom. 6.

This might serue in so manifest a matter: but bicause we do consider the case of the simple, let vs searche out our whole lyfe, and se what part of it is such, that it may glory of the merites thereof towards God, and that rather hathe not nede of the grace and mercy of God.

There is no merite of them that be not yet conceyued. De verbis Apost. Ser. 11.

Firste, I thinke it can not be, that he maye deserue any thing which is not yet conceyued in his mothers wombe. Marke sayth Augustine, howe that before we were made or created we deserued no godnesse: & therefore it is grace that we were made or created, when we deserued nothing. This saith he: So ỹ grace hath place in them that be not yet made, where there can be no merite. Onlesse we like to trifle with Origen, to surmise that there was an other worlde before this worlde, wherin our good or euil desertes are past, according vnto the which we be borne into this worlde, either happy or vnhappy: so that euery soule should receyue worthy reward in this present worlde for his merites, which he gate by well or euill liuing in the worlde before. So fond they must be which will looke for anye former desertes of all those thinges which do befal to man. But we be certaine and sure, that there can be no desertes to them that be not yet made in the worlde.

No merite in them vvhiche be not yet borne. Rom. 9.

Secondly, let vs consider that parcell of our life when after we be cõceyued vntill our birth we be fashioned, quickned, & nourished frõ an vnfashioned thing in ỹ mothers wõbe, whether we can at the time chalẽge any merite vnto vs. I suppose no man will saye so. The saying of the Apostle of Iacob and Esau is well knowẽ. Whẽ they wer not yet borne (saith he) or had done nother good or euill, that the purpose of God might stand according vnto the election, not by workes, but by the caller, it was said vnto him: The elder shall serue the yonger: as it is written: I loued Iacob, and I hated Esau. How can there be any merite where there is nother good nor cuyll? Nay how can there be any merite, where the poison of sin is contracted of the very cõceptiõ it selfe? The Pelagians whiche were more desirous to set forth mãs merites than Gods grace, sought some ground in these childrẽ, to establishe their opiniõ vpõ. Lo (say they) Esau and Iacob do contend within their mothers bowels, when they be borne, the one is supplanted by the other, and by finding his hand that came out last, holding his fote that went out before, there was tryed to continue a manner of strife betwixt them. How then is ther no arbitrement of their own wil, either to good either to euil in the infantes that did this, wherby ther shuld folow either reward or punishmẽt to the merites going before.

Gen. 25. 23

malachy 1. Rom. 9.

The Pelagiũs of Esau and Iacob.

To this Augustine doth answere against the Pelagians in this wise: To this we say, the same motions, and as it were wrestling of the childrẽ, was therfore a token of great matters, bicause this was not a will but a wõder. For we will not graunt that asses haue free will, bicause a beast of that kinde, as it is written, & a dombe creature without speach answearing in the speach of man, did forbid the madnesse of the Prophet, but thei which wil maintaine ỹ these be not prodigious motions reported of childrẽ, but voluntary actes done by childrẽ, what will they answere to their Apostle, who seinge these two persons, were mẽte to be mentioned for the declaration of grace comming franke and frẽ, (sayde) that to them being not yet borne nor doing any thing good or euell, that the purpose of God might stande according vnto election, not by workes, but by the caller, it was sayde, that the elder shall serue the yonger, &c. and he addeth: Truly the doctor of ỹ Gentils in fayth and truth doth testifie that these two which were not yet borne, did no euyll or good to set forth the grace infantes hath prero-gatiue of merites.

Augustin. Epist. 156. ad Inno-cium contra Pelagianos. Fo. ca. age.

grace that the same which was spoken: the Elder shall serue the yonger, might be vnderstanded as sayd not by the workes, but by the caller, so that the purpose of God might stand according vnto his election, & not that the merit of man must needs go before. This saithe he: Which were not much to be wayed, vnlesse this worlde did not only brede newe doctrines, but were also very apte to stirre vp againe the olde, which hath layne of longe time well buried.

Thirdly, let vs passe on to the infancye of the new borne childe. The same is neither so furnished with the vnderstanding of minde, or the arbytrement of will, or with strengthe to worke, that it is able either to will or to doe any thing that is meritorious. And this appeareth to be true, not only in the infantes of the Ethnikes and of the other vnfaithfull, but of the faithfull also, whiche we do seale with the marke of Gods grace. Augustine sayth playnely of them in the Epistle before alledged, that when the grace of regeneration which is by Christ, is bestowed vpon them, they haue nother sense of that grace which they doe receyue, nor that they haue any wil towards it, nother before, nother at the tyme of the acte, nother after: but rather that so great a benefite is giuen vnto them not onely not willyng, but also withstanding it, which shoulde be imputed vnto them for great wickednesse, if that at that time the arbitrement of wil could doe any thing in them. Ergo, nor our infancie nother canne receyue this doctrine of mans merites.

There is no merite neither in them that be growẽ to yeares.

Lib. contra Pelagium et Celestium, De gratia Christi. cap. 26.

7 Fourthly, whẽ childhode is past, and that we be growen in bodye and power of reason, can we then deserue anye thing well of God? How coulde we deserue of God the reward of saluation, seing that we be of nature the children of wrathe, wicked, sinfull, the enemies of God, blinde, not vnderstandyng those things that be of God, and altogether carnall, reprobate to all good workes, doyng not the will of God but of the flesh, farre from the lyfe of God, &c. vntill that we be newe borne by the spirite of God, & made of vnfaythfull, to be faythfull? So Augustine sayth: And if he doe consent that we doe receyue charitie by the grace of God, let him not so thinke, as though there wente any good desertes of oures before. For what good desertes coulde we haue then, when we loued not God? for to the intent we shoulde receyue loue to loue him withall, we were loued when we had yet no loue. This he sayth in that place. It were very wicked then to take the grace of our vocatiõ, fayth, conuersion, illuminatyng, iustifyng and regeneration for a rewarde as due to mans merites. Nor they muste not obiect vnto vs, that there bee many good men blinded of the Ethnickes, Iewes, Turkes, or Papistes, whiche maye deserue of God, by their honestie and good workes, to become true beleuers: for so they doe extinguish ỹ glory of Goddes grace, when they doe attribute ỹ beginning of our saluation not vnto Goddes grace, but vnto merites. The gifte of God is faith, and not merites. The grace of God dothe goe before all merites, as well of fayth as of workes.

Cornelius. Act. 10.

8 They make an obiection of Cornelius, of whome we do read in the Actes of the Apostles: that his almesdædes were allowed, & his prayers heard in the sight of God, before that he beleued in Christ. This Augustine answereth vnto in his booke of the predestination of saincts: Yet for al that (saith he) he gaue nothing, nor prayed not without faith. What so euer Cornelius did well, bothe before he beleued in Christ, & whyles he beleued, and after that he beleued, all is to be giuen vnto God, that no man be proude. This saith he. Herebythat saying of the Apostle hathe place also in Cornelius: You be saued by grace, by fayth, and that not of your selues, it is Gods gifte, & not of workes, least any man might boast of it. If any man will denie this, he may say that Cornelius was saued by his deserte, and not by the grace of God, of him selfe and not of God. For it was Gods rewarde dewe to his workes, wherof he might glory. If these thinges be wicked, then let the Iusticiary graunt that Cornelius was not iustified by his own deserte, but by the grace of God.

Cap. 7.

There is no merite in the conuertes and the faithfull.

9 Fiftly, let vs go on to that part of our life, wherein lyke god Christian and faithfull persons, we doe beleue in God and his Christ, & beleuing we be iustified & regenerate, we do loue God and our neighbour, and by good workes we do glorifye the name of our father which is in heauen, and let vs see whether that being in this sorte, we may chalenge iustelye vnto vs good desertes, and hope for the rewarde of euerlasting life. Truly we must nedes graunte, that there is greater reward layd vp in heauen, for the good workes of the godly. There be many testimonies of holye Scripture, whereby we be taught, that there shall be a repayment of those good thinges which be done by the godly, and a consideration of those aduersities which be suffered also for Gods sake. So the lord saide: Be gladde and reioyce, for your rewarde is greate in heauen. Again: Whosoeuer (sayth he) giueth vnto one of these litle ones cold water to drinke, verily I say vnto you, he shall not lose his reward. But it is one thing to say, that the reward is giuen of Gods goodnesse, and another to saye, that we be worthye to haue it, & haue deserued it: that God shal giue vs eternall lyfe for our rewarde. When God giueth reward, he giueth it of grace and not of duty. And we when doe good workes, must thinke vpon the saying of Christe: When you haue done all, saye that you be vnprofitable seruants: rather than to glory in your merites, and to demaunde reward of God.

Matth.

Matth.

God giueth reward of grace.

We be not able to thinke it.

1 Cor. 4.

For firste, seing that we be not our owne men, but doe wholly belong to the Lords interest and iurisdiction, by whome we be first made, and afterwardes redemed by the ppyce of his bloud from sinne and euerlasting death, according vnto that of the Apostle: Ye be bought by a great valew. And, We be the Lords, whether we liue or dye. None of vs doeth liue to himselfe, &c. then what deserte can we pretende, and what reward can we require of him whose vassales we be altogether? Eyther then let vs shake off all this dominion of God which he hath vpon vs as his own good and possession, or els let vs vs acknowledge that it is not meete for bondmen to glory towards theyr master and demaund rewardes. For these two can not be so ioyned together, but that the other must gyue place. If the maister doe esteeme the faithe and diligence of his bondman for a deserte, and do iudge hym worthy to be deliuered and made free, we must thanke his goodnesse & not take it for a duty. For he is not bounde to him, bycause he is faithfull and doth serue him faithfully. For he doth but his duty, and vnlesse he did so, he were worthy to be punished. He is a verye rare man that will thynke hymselfe beholding to his better, when he payeth him that whiche he oweth hym. And so we muste nedes thinke hym shameles, that will demaunde a rewarde as though he hadde deserued highly, when he dothe but pay hys dette. He that is a seruaunte, and hee that is a better, and doth no more but his duty, can not boast himselfe of any merite. And such folkes we be, yea when we be iust, and do that whych is good, and commaunded vs to do.

Secondlye, we must consider further, that we be not onely bondmen and detters, in al respects vnto God, but that we be also so nedy of al good things, that we can not of our selues as of oure selues, as much as thynke that whiche is good, muche lesse perfourme it in deede: but that it is necessary that all oure ableneste be gyuen vs by Gods grace. Wherefore it is plainely attributed vnto God, that he doth worke in vs both to wil and to doe, according vnto his good will. Ergo to will good, & to perfourme that in deede which we wil, commeth not of our will and habilitie, but it is both the wil and worke of God, whiche doth worke in vs both to wil and to perfourme it, according vnto hys good will. Then from whence commeth faithe? from whence charitie? from whence hope? from whence the religion of God? from whence patience in aduersitie? from whence is good will? from whence the strength to do that well whiche is good? If it come of oure selues, we haue matter whereupon to glory. If it come not of vs, but of the free and franke grace of God, what followeth else, but that we must render thankes to Goddes goodnesse, rather than glorye of oure desertes? They say that desert is deemed according to the good will of the person. But from whence commeth this good will to the man that is not good, but from him whiche is onely good, and from whence whatsoeuer is good, is yelded vnto vs? How can there be anye deserte in the worke that is done not by our strength, but by the strength of God himselfe?

An obiection.

But they do obiect that saying of the Apostle: I haue foughte a good fight, I haue runned out my race, I haue kept my faith: for the rest there is layde vppe for me a crowne of iustice, whiche God shall restore me in that day, the iust iudge. Is not mention made of both (saye they) by the Apostle, both the good worke whyche he did, and the reward also which hee looked for of God? Augustine answereth saying in this wise: The Lorde sayth he, shall render me my crowne, the iust iudge: Ergo he oweth it me. Who shal render it then? then: Ergo he shall render it as a iust iudge. For when he considereth oure worke, hee can not vppon that consideration of

2. Tim. 4.

Augustinus. In quinquagint. Homel. Hom. 14.

the worke denye vs a rewarde. I haue foughte a good fyghte, it is a worke: I haue finished my race, it is a worke: I haue kept my faithe, it is a worke: ther remaineth a crowne of iustice for me, that is the rewarde. As for thy rewarde thou doest nothing, and as for thy worke, thou doest it not alone. Thy crowne commeth from him, and thy worke from thy selfe, but yet not without hys helpe. And a little after: Therefore (thou seist) when he dothe render good things, he dothe preuente hymselfe, giuing good thinges to them before, to whome he may render good things also after. Lo he rendereth reward vnto those good things by ỹ good workes, to him that fought out his fighte, to him that ranne out hys race, and kepte his faithe. He rendereth good things, but for what good things: The same which he gaue before himselfe. Did not he giue it thée to fight out the good fight: If it were he that gaue it thée, why doest thou say in an other place, I haue labored more than all they: But not I, but the grace of God with me: Lo thou sayest againe, I haue runned out my race. Did not he gyue thée also to runne out thy course: If he gaue thée it not to runne out thy race, what is that that thou sayest in an other place: It standeth not in the willer, nor in the runner, but in God which hath mercy: I haue kept my faythe, Hast thou kept thy faith: I know it, and am content withall. I graunte thou hast kepte it. But vnlesse the Lorde doe kéepe the Citie, he dothe watche in vayne whiche doth kéepe it. Therefore thou hast both foughte out thy good fyghte, and runned out thy race, and kept thy faith, euē thorough him as ayding thée, and giuing it to thée. Giue me leaue, O Apostle, I know nothing of thine own but naughtinesse. Giue me leaue, O Apostle, We saye that thou diddest teach: I heare thée confessing God, I finde thée not vnthankefull. But wée perfectly know that there be none of thy owne thinges gotten to thée by thy selfe, but euill things. Therefore when God doth crowne thy merits, he crowneth nothing else but hys owne giftes. Thus sayeth he. Wherby he doth graunte, that the Apostle dyd good workes, and that he loked for a reward: but he doth so attribute his worke vnto the grace and gyfte of God, that there was not in hym properly and truely anye merite of man, but the grace of God, so that the same crowne to come, hadde not properlye the nature of a rewarde, but rather the consideration of Gods grace crowning his owne giftes in the Apostle. Now in case this merite of good workes hadde not truly and lawfully anye place in the Apostle neyther, where shall we fynde anye in whome it may take place:

3 Thirdly, if we do consider ỹ maiestie of God, which hath néede of nothing, but yéeldeth rather all thyngs vnto all men, what shall be that good worke of oures wherein we maye do him any good: Dauid saith: Thou hast no néede of my good things. And what desert can there be in a worke whereof there commeth no profyte vnto God: Yea (and whiche is more) the profyte whereof, if it be any, doth come to oure selues: He that is iust and worketh well, is iust and worketh well for his owne profyte and not Pardon me O Apostle, I know nothing of that ouerthwart cuil.

VVhat dost God no good Pyndar.

not Gods: euen as he which is euill and worketh euil, is euil to himselfe, and in working euil dothe hurt hymselfe also. Howe saye you to hym that is healthfull of hys body, and hathe a regarde of his healthe by lyuing in good order, working, eating, and drinkyng temperately, dothe hée deserue anye rewarde of the Phisition in so doing: I thinke not. It is for hys owne aduantage and not the Phisitions, that hée is of that temperancye, and lyueth in that order. Likewise hée that hathe obteyned by Goddes gift the health of the minde, and dothe through his grace those thyngs whiche doe helpe for the preseruation of the same, shall we saye that he deserueth, I wote not what rewarde of God: bycause that hée is made to be of that sort by his gifte, and dothe conserue being holpen by his ayde, the grace whiche he hathe receyued to his owne benefyte in diligently beléeuing, hoping, louyng, working, and suffering: &c. Who is so very an Asse to saye so: But thou wilt say: He crowneth suche. Yea hée crowneth in them his owne giftes, which be their good déedes, and so all is kept safe to the glory of his grace. And where all is in the grace of God, what can be left to the merites of men: For loke wheresoeuer that grace is, there is no place for merit, if we doe consider the nature of oure owne merite.

4 Fourthly, If we shall examine oure workes and lay them before the iust and straight iudgement of God, who is so ignorante of the imperfection of man, that knoweth not that we ought rather to feare the punishment whiche our righteousnesse deserueth for the lackes and faultes that be in it, rather than to loke for any rewards, and to glory of, I wote not what merites: Doe we thinke it a matter of nothing, that the Prophete cryeth out, that all our righteousnesse is like, not snow, or whyte woolle, but like a filthy cloute loathsome to beholde: We nede not to saye anye thing of the iustice of the flesshe of a man not yet iustifyed, but take me the iustice of Christian mē, which is to be iudged according vnto the qualitie of his workes and affections, and sée what Augustine sayeth of it: Wo be to all our iustice if it be iudged, setting mercy aparte. Then what manner of merite is it, that is not able to abide the verdite of iudgement and iustice, and is not deliuered from condemnation, but only by mercy: Truly it is better to confesse oure sinnes with the Publican, than to glory and presume vpon our merits with the Phariseye. Such be our merites, that the confessing of our sinnes is preferred before the recounting of them.

Esay. 64.

Augustin. Lib. Confess. 9.

5 Fiftly, If we doe compare the inestimable glory of euerlasting life and felicitie, not onely with oure workes (be they neuer so good) but with all our affections and troubles also, can we giue them so muche merite, that they be able to make vs to enioy that euerlasting good things: The Apostle sayeth: The passions of this tyme be not counteruayleable to the glorye whiche is to come, whyche shall be reuealed in vs. If oure passions layd vpon vs for Christes sake, be not counteruayleable to the glory which is to come, howe can oure workes be so: howe can

The greatnesse of the glorye to come, commeth not by mannes merites.

Rom. 8.

they

they haue the nature of merite, when they do not equally counteruaile the greatnesse of ỹ glory to come? Whē we loke for a deserued rewarde, we must consider on both sides, both the quality and the measure of the labour and of the rewarde, and we must sée that the reward be of no lesse waight and value than the merite is: and that the merite doe aunswere to the greatenesse of the reward. For what so euer there is in the rewarde that dothe exceede the merite, it is to bée reckened not to the merite, but to grace and fauoure. And how small is the merite of our iustice, if it be estéemed to the infinite glorye of eternall felicitie? It is not one droppe in comparison of the most large and déepe Ocean sea. If we way the matter in this sort, how falleth it out, but only to determine, that there is no merite of man towarde God, neither before nor after his conception? nor before nor after his birth? nor before nor after his conuersion and regeneration? but that all the merite which hée hath from the beginning of his fayth vntill the accomplishmente of hys race, is the gifte and worke of God, as Ambrose witnesseth. So that Bernard said right, that all our merites be so the giftes of God, that man is rather debter to God for thē, than God to man.

Lib. 1. de Vocatione Gentium. cap. 7.

Lastly, as concerning the estate of our soules after the death of oure body, I thinke that there is no man will attribute to them anye habilitie to deserue. When thou art departed from hence (sayeth Augustine,) thou shalte be receyued according vnto thy desertes, and shalte rise againe to receyue ỹ which thou hast done.

Of our estate after death.

Any thinge.

Then God shal crowne not so much thy merites as his owne giftes. This sayeth he. And Hierome after that he hadde recited the opinion of them, which do hold that after we be departed out of this worlde, we may both hurt reasonable creatures, and doe good, yet he dothe expounde that place of Ecclesiasticus. The dead knoweth nothing, and there is no rewarde anye more for them, in thys wise: They that doe liue, maye for feare of death doe good workes, but they which be dead, can adde nothing else to that which they haue carryed once with them out of this life. Item. They can neyther do iustly, nor sinne, nor adde nother vertue, nor vice. This sayeth he. And no doubte, there is one season to worke in, and another season to receyue for that whiche a man hath wrought in thys life. And men shall be iudged at the iudgemente to come, not for the workes or merites whiche be done after this life, but for the same which is done in this bodye, as the Apostle saith. Wherefore it appeareth that we haue no merite, nother before this life, nor in this life, nother after this life.

So that though we must néedes graunte, that there is a rewarde for those things whiche we do, prepared for vs in Heauen, yet for all that we must graunt withall, that God dothe crowne in vs not our owne merites, but his giftes. And therefore what rewarde so euer we shall receyue, is not properly to be tearmed Reward, but to be called properly Grace: and that the good thyngs whiche we doe, be not ours, but his worke in vs, and wrought by him through vs.

For as Augustine sayeth, God doth manye thinges in man, whiche man doeth not: But man doth nothyng which God maketh not man to doe. Wherefore we must in any wise beware, that we doe not so establishe mans merites, that we doe make voyde the grace of Christe, and contemne the iustice of God. For merite and grace be so contrarye one to an other, that as Bernarde sayeth. There is no meanes for grace to enter, where merite dothe kéepe place.

Somewhat wée must saye to you of that, and briefely, that men saye, that the merites of Saintes and of iust men doe profyte them that come after. Hierome dothe graunte thys wayes, that the merites of the fathers doe profyte the children, if they doe turne from euill. And Augustine sayeth: When oure merites doe so burden vs, that we can not be loued of God, that wée maye be relieued towarde hym by theyr merites whome God dothe loue. It is out of all doubt, that God doth conferre his benefytes, and giueth mercye not onely to the iust and to them whyche loue hym, but also to theyr aftercommers, vnto thousandes of generations. But wée muste take these thrée poyntes withall. Fyrste, that it is to bée referred vnto worldly good things, and not to euerlasting lyfe. Secondly, that it must be with a condition, so that they make not themselues vnworthy for this grace by irreformable impenitēce. Thirdly also, that all this is to be attributed more to the goodnesse and grace of GOD, than to the merites of Saintes.

Of Forgiuenesse of Sinnes.

LEtte vs leaue the merite Doctors, and goe on rather to consider the forgyuenesse of sinnes, without which no man can be saued, and which béeyng obteyned, no man can perishe. We saide in the place of Justification which is by faith in Christe, that to be iustifyed is as muche to say, as to be quited of oure sinnes. But wée thoughte not then to haue made a speciall treatye of Forgiuenelle of sinnes, whyche nowe we wyll do for the profyte whyche maye rise therof to the godly disposed persons.

Forgiuenesse of sinnes.

Firste we néede not to define what sinne is, for as muche as we haue spoken of it in a distinct place before. But we must consider of the forgyuing of it. We say sinnes are forgyuen when that the sinner is mercifully pardoned: and that it is withholden, when he is not pardoned, but there is required a punishment of it. There be thrée poynts in sinne. The facte, the wickednelle or faulte, and the guilt. The facte passeth away in the verye doing, the wickednelle remayneth, and the gilte or dewe of it cleaueth vnto it, wherby we became giltie of condemnation, and worthye punishmente. Therefore when sinne is forgiuen, the facte is not forgiuen, whiche is otherwise vanished away of it selfe, but it is the wickednelle of the facte, and the gilt, and dewe wyth all, which is forgiuen. That whyche

Three pointes in sinne.

is

is done amisse, is called sinne, eyther bycause of the wickednesse, or transgression, or disobedience: and bycause of the guilte of it, it is called dette or due. Therefore we reade in Scriptures sometymes of the forgyuenesse of sinnes, sometimes of the forgyuenesse of wickednesse, and of dettes, whych is altogither one thing. Whē we pray in the Lords Prayer: And forgiue vs our dettes, we desyre nothing else, but that oure sinnes and wickednesses maye of hys fatherly clemency be forgyuen, and the deserued condemnation be pardoned.

How necessary forgiuenesse of sinnes is

And howe necessary forgiuenesse of sinnes is for mankinde, it may bee vnderstanded by three most certaine reasons. The firste is, bycause that there is no man which is cleane from all sinne, no not the childe of a daye olde. We be al conceyued and borne in sinnes. Secondlye, we do all oure life long drinke and soke in wickednesse as it were water, nor there is no man which doth good, and sinneth not. And bycause we should not laye this to the vnbeleeuers onely, the Apostle writing to Christian men, sayeth: If we say that we haue no sinne, we deceiue our selues, and his truth is not in vs. Well, the Angels maye haue no neede of forgiuenesse of sins, but it is a cleare case, that in anye wise we which come of Adam, must of necessitie haue it, for we be all sinners. The seconde reason is, bycause that we be all through sinne made subiect vnto death and eternall damnation. Therefore it is that the Apostle sayeth: that we be of nature the children of wrathe. By sinne wee be seuered from God, and made his enimies, withoute whose grace there can be no hope of saluation for any man. The thirde is, bycause wee be not able to pay and to satisfye for it. We be charged with greate huge dettes from our first conception, and we be not able to satisfye as muche as for one of them. We can not aunswere the iustice of God, no not for one of a thousand. Then what ensueth else, but that either oure sinnes must be forgiuen, or else we vtterly perish? For no body can discharge vs out of the hande of God the moste iust iudge: and neyther are we discharged without punishment, vnlesse our sinnes be forgiuen vs. And therefore it is that Dauid doth call them blessed, whose wickednesse is forgyuen them, and whose sinnes are couered: meaning that they be moste vnhappy of all men and vtterly lost, whose sinnes be with-holden. So that we be vppon greate, yea exceeding greate reason enformed by the Lorde, to crye vnto God our father, for forgyuenesse of oure sinnes, saying: And forgiue vs our trespasses or dettes. For vnlesse this be done, it is not possible for vs to be saued.

1. Iohn. 1.

Ephes. 3

The vse of this sect.

Therefore seyng that the forgiuenesse of our sinnes is so necessary, that no man can be saued without it, it shall not be amisse to declare some things which be profitable for a godlye disposed person to knowe in this case. As whose parte it is to forgiue sinnes: to whome they be forgiuen: by what meanes this forgyuenesse is obteyned: vpon what kondition it is bestowed: whether all sinnes be forgiuen: whether that forgiuenesse once obteyned, maye bee frustrate: whether not the faulte only, but the paine also be forgiuen: whether that the sinnes whiche bee not forgiuen in this life, be forgyuen after our death.

I. Whose part it is to forgiue Sinne.

Like as it is sayd, that the verye fayne is a poynt of wisedome, to knowe of whose gifte the thing is, whiche is to be desired: so we muste iudge in this matter also, that it is a poynte of wisedome most necessarye, to knowe of whose gifte it is, and of whom the free forgiuenesse of sinnes is to be sought, least we fal into some crafty Apostles, whiche do chalenge to themselues power to forgyue sinnes: and in so necessary a matter seeking their owne gaine, do deceiue the simpler sort of men, in emptying their purses, and do either tormente their consciences in with-holdyng their sinnes, or fallly assure thē with their forged forgiuing of their falts.

And I suppose that there is lyke order in forgiuenesse of sinnes altogither, as there is in forgiuenesse of dettes: that like as no man can forgiue dettes, but ỹ creditor to whome the dette is due: so no man can forgiue sinnes againste whome there is no sinne committed, but he only whiche is hurt and offended by the sinne. If one do forgiue an other mannes dettes, the dettor is abused, if he doe beleeue that he is discharged of the bonde of his dette, and the creditor hath wrong done him without whose knowledge and will the dettes belonging vnto him are forgiuen, and his dettor discharged: which forgiuenesse he dothe make voyde immediately, and doth neuertheless clayme the dette vpon his dettor. Likewise if any man do forgiue sinnes, which be not done againste himselfe, he deceyueth him whome he forgiueth, and sinneth againste him also to whome the offence was done, which hath the power only to forgiue or with-hold ỹ offences done vnto him: and so hee dothe both not discharge the gilty, and doth offende him also into whose right he doth vnaduisedly intrude.

He that sinneth, synneth against god, either immediatly either mediatly.

This is moste sure and certaine. And farther, this is certein also, that whosoeuer sinneth, doth sin againste god, either immediatly, or by means. Immediatly, when we sinne against the preceptes of the firste table: by meanes, when we transgresse in the seconde table. When the people of Israell followed strange Gods, and did set vp Idols, and take the name of their Lord God in vaine, and prophane the Sabboth, they did sinne immediately against God: but when they contemned their parents, killed their neighbour, committed adultery and theft, bore false witnesse against their neighboure: and coueted other mens goodes, they sinned againste their neighbors, and by meanes againste God also, as the generall Lord & lawgiuer vnto al mē. And the very same which we haue spoken for eramples sake of the Israelites, doth pertain to vs also to iudge therby of euery kind of sin. Therfore vpō those two propositions before had, of whiche the one serueth for oure Maior, that is to say, that it is his parte to forgiue sinne, or to withholde the sins of al men, against whom al men do sinne: and this is the Minor, but al men do sinne against God: This cōclusion muste nedes follow. Ergo it pertayneth to God to forgyue, or

Al do sinne against god with-with holde the sinnes of all menne. Wherefore they which sayde. Who is it that can forgiue sinnes but God only? were not farre out of the way: and therefore their saying was not denyed by Christe, but it was confirmed with miracle by Gods power, when he declared by healing the mã that had the palsey, by his word only, that he had the same power that his father had. So God cryeth by the Prophete: I am, I am verye he my selfe, which doe wipe away thy wickednesse for my nowne selfe.

Luke. 5. It is the parte of god to forgiue sinnes.

Esai. 43.

But some man will say: If God onely doe forgiue sinnes, so that the forgiuenesse be fast and firme, what meaneth that whiche we reade spoken by the Lorde to his Disciples: Whose sinnes soeuer you forgyue, they be forgiuen them: and whose sinnes so euer you do with-hold, they shall be with-holden them? Agayne, what meaneth that that we saye in the Lordes prayer, As we forgyue them whiche trespasse against vs? And that whiche the Lord saith: If thy brother sinne against thée, reproue him: and in case he do repent: forgiue him: and if he do offende thée seuẽtimes in a day and turne to thée seuentimes in the day, and say, I am sory for it: Forgiue him. Is it not a plaine matter, that not God onely, but the Apostles also, and euerye faithfull person do pardon sinnes?

An obiection.

Iohn. 20. VVhose sinnes soeuer you forgiue. &c, as vve forgiue the that trespas against vs.

Luke. 17.

I aunswere: There be three manner of powers to forgyue sinnes. The first is of authoritie, the second of the ministery, the thirde of euerye priuate persons righte and interest. The first is the same whiche belongeth to God onely: the second to the Apostles and ministers, the thyrde, when any man forgiueth his brother which offendeth him. Upon the first there dothe depend all our saluation. For vnlesse the Lord himselfe do forgiue oure sinnes, it is in vayne for any Minister to forgiue, in vayne for vs to forgiue our brethren. But you will say: Yet for all that Christ sayd, Whose sinnes so euer you doe forgiue, they be forgiuen. Erg., when the Minister also dothe forgiue sinnes, ỳ forgiuenes stãdeth fast. It is true, it is so if he doe forgiue him, whome the Lord forgiueth. But in case he do lose him whome the Lord doth bind, and doe bind him whome the Lorde dothe lose, it can not stande in Heauen which he doth, bycause he dothe it not according to the order appointed vnto the ministerie: For ỳ firmenesse of the forgiuenesse doth depend vppon the authoritie and verdite of the Lord himselfe. It is the part of the Minister to declare this grace by the preaching of the Gospell vnto all men, whereby sinnes be forgiuen to them which do beléeue in Christ: and to declare also the wrath of GOD, whereby the sinnes of the vnfaithfull be with-holden. In this sorte he forgiueth the faithfull and repentante, and he forgiueth not the vnbeléeuing and impenitente. And yet all thys which he doth, perteyneth to the authoritie of the Lord, whose Minister he is. When I saye that the Prince only dothe binde and lose his prisoners, I meane of the chiefe authoritie, vpon which the doings of the minister doth depende, whiche doe bind and lose at his commaundement. As touching the thirde, that is to say, the priuate power to pardon sinnes, by the whiche power one brother dothe

Three maner of powers to forgiue sinnes.

forgiue

forgiue an other when he trespasseth against him, the same is frée thus farre forth, in so muche as it is lawfull for euerye man to relente of hys owne right for his neighbours sake: but in respecte that we be not oure owne men, but the Lordes, it is not lawfull for vs to forgiue or retaine the faultes of oure brother done against vs, but we be charged by gods commaundemente to forgiue, when he saith, Forgiue him, &c: and we bée bound vnto it by a hard and straight condition, which he expressed saying: If you do not forgiue vnto men, your father shall not forgeue your sinnes nother.

And this third kind of forgiuenesse is ratified also in heauen, if we doe forgiue oure brethren their faultes, not simply, but when they do amend, acknowledge their offence, and desire forgiuenesse. We are not to bée blamed, if we forgiue them also whiche do not amende as touching oure selues, yea if we do not only forgiue, but saye also with the Lord: Father forgiue thẽ, for they wote not what they doe. But this manner of forgyuing dothe profite them nothing before the Lorde, who forgiueth none but them that doe amende, and desire to be forgiuen. In this sorte all that forgiuenesse of sinnes which is necessarie to our saluation, dothe depende vpon the grace of God only.

II. To vvhome Sinnes be forgiuen.

IF we consider of them which do purchase the forgiuenes of their sinnes by the grace of God, there is but a small number of them, euen as it is of the elect in respecte of the reprobate, whose sinnes be with holde for euermore. But we sérke not here to whome this grace of forgiuenesse dothe befall, but rather to whome it is to be taught and set forth. We can not hére appoynt vpon any certaine persons, to whome only this forgiuenesse of sinnes is to be preached. All men be generally called vnto it, both Iewes and Greckes, learned and vnlearned, wise and foolishe, riche and powre, olde and yong, men and womẽ. For like as God enclosed all vnder vnbeliefe that he might haue mercy vppon all, so he will haue this grace of his mercy to be sette forthe to all men: So God loued the worlde (saith our Sauioure) that he gaue his only begotten sonne, that euery one whiche beléeueth in him shoulde not perish, but haue life euerlasting. And in the firste Epistle of John, we reade thus: But in case any man doe sinne, wée haue an aduocate with the father Iesus Christe the iuste, and he is the propitiation for oure sinnes, and not for our sinnes onely, but for the sinnes also of the whole worlde. I thinke that there is meant by the worlde, all mankinde, by whiche the worlde doth consist, from the beginning of it, vntill the ende. Therfore, when it is sayde, that God gaue hys sonne for the worlde, and that he is the propitiation for the sinnes of the whole worlde (what else is meante, but that the grace of forgiuenesse of sinnes is appointed vnto all men, so that the Gospell therof is to be preached vnto all creatures? In thys respecte the gentill loue of GOD towardes man is sette forthe vnto vs to bée considered, whereby he wol

To vvhom the forgiuenesse of sinnes is to be preached. Rom. 11.

1. Ioan. 2.

not haue any to perishe, but all men to be saued, and to come to the knowledge of the truth. But for all that, this generall grace hath some conditions going withall, of whiche wee will speake hereafter.

III. By what meanes the forgiuenesse of sinnes is gotten.

IN deede, the forgiuenesse of sinnes is altogyther francke and free, so that it is no due nor debte to oure merites, but it is a meere and an vnbounden grace: and yet it is requisite by reason it selfe, that it be not bestowed and receyued without certaine meanes and conditions. Of the meanes we will speake in thys article, and of the conditions in the next after. And like as men must acknowledge two meanes of iustification, whereof we spake before, so we must do also in forgiuenes of sinnes: One in which, the other by which it is bestowed and receyued. The meane in whiche, is Christ the onely mediator, reconciler, and redeemer of all men, to whome all Prophetes do beare witnesse, that all they which doe beleeue in him, doe receyue forgiuenesse of sinnes by his name: by whose bloud we be washed from our sinnes, whome God appoynted to be the propitiation for the sinnes of all the world, and to reconcyle the world vnto himselfe in him. Of this meane, as farre as I knowe, there is no doubte among Christian men. We doe all confesse that Christe is that lambe of God, whiche taketh away the sinnes of the worlde, whose bloud was shedde vppon the Crosse for our sinnes. But the meanes, by whiche, is of two sortes, for there is one meane whereby it is bestowed, and an other whereby the forgiuenesse of synnes is receyued. The meanes of bestowing it, the Schole Doctors do call Applicatory meanes. Vnlesse (say they) that the merite of Christ be applyed to this man or that man, there is no offence of sinne taken away, seeyng that it is taken away onely in the vertue of Christes passion, and therefore for asmuche as the sacramentes be the immediate applicatiue meanes of the passion of Christe vnto vs, it behoueth that in case the faulte must be forgiuen, it must be done by some sacramentes, exhibited eyther in facte or in vowe. This is the manner of their speach. But yet for all that, they do proue it by no scriptures, that the sacraments be a meane whereby the forgiuenes of sinnes is bestowed. But we doe saye playnely, that the meane of bestowing of it, is the worde of grace, whereby forgiuenesse is declared, whether it bee done generally and publikely, or specially and priuately. In deede it should seeme that the forgiuencsse of sinnes is attributed vnto baptisme, whereas we doe reade that Peter sayde: Amende and be euery one of you baptised in the name of Iesu Christe, vnto forgiuenesse of synnes. And by that that Ananias sayde vnto Paule: Arise and bee baptised, and wash away thy sinnes. But we muste make a distinction betwirte the Reall and the Sacramentall bestowing of thys grace. The Reall is the same which is done by the inward grace: the sacramentall is that which is conferred by the outward outward signe. Furthermore albeit that the worde and signe be ioyned togither in the sacramentes, and that the same which is done by word is done sacramentally also in the signe: yet as touching the forgiuenes of synnes, it hathe place indeede in baptisme, but not in the Sacrament of the Lordes supper. And further it is to be referred vnto originall sinne, and to the actuall sinnes also, whyche passed before the baptisme. But wee do now speake of the forgiuenesse of sinnes whiche is not gyuen once alone and at the beginning, but is gyuen vs all oure life long, whiche wee can not referre to the Sacrament of baptisme, whiche is not to be taken more than once: nor we oughte not nother referre it vnto the supper of our Lorde, bycause the same was instituted not to conferre or receyue the forgiuenesse of sinnes, but to the remembraunce of Christes deathe. For the Lorde saide not: Do this for forgiuenesse of sinnes: but do this in the remembraunce of me. And that which can not be attribute vnto the Sacrament of the Lords supper, can not perteine nother to the Popishe Masse, vnlesse they will say that it is not only an other maner of matter but that it is also of greater weight and efficacie than the supper of the Lorde is. Wherfore they be very triflers, which do attribute vnto the Masse, the application of the merite of Christ, most special, singular, and generall, according to the intention and will of ꝑ Masling Priest: against which trifles we wil speake herafter in the place against the Masse. We leauing those, do say, that the meane to gyue the forgiuenesse of sinnes, is the very word of grace, by which, the grace of our forgiuenesse and reconciliation & conuersion at the beginning, and for all our lyfe long after, is denounced vnto vs, as well generally and publikely, as specially and priuately. Generally, as we read it was done by Peter the Apostle: Specially and priuately, as wee read it was done by Christ himselfe, when he saide to the man that he cured of the palsey: Be of good chere my sonne, thy sinnes bee forgyuen thee. And as it was done by the Prophet Nathan, when he said vnto Dauid: And the Lorde hathe put off thy sinne. But the meane of receyuing thys grace, is not that only whereby we be made able to receyue it, but that whereby we doe also receyue it when it is offered. The contrite and humble heart is meete to receyue it. But it is one thyng to bee able to receyue it, and to receyue it in dede is an other. The hungry stomacke is able to receyue meate: but yet for all that vnlesse he which is hungrye, do receyue and eate the meate, he is not refreshed. In lyke case the contrite hearte is able in deede to receyue Forgiuenesse of sinnes, but yet vnlesse it doe receyue it in verye deede, the conscience of synne is not quieted. But it doth receyue it in deede, when it receyueth the word of grace by Faith. When Iudas sayd: I haue sinned, betraying the iust bloud. He was in thys respecte able to receyue this grace, bycause his heart was tormented with the sorow of repentance: but bicause he was destitute of faithe, he receyued it not, but dyed in desperation. Wherfore faith is requisite in euery

Tvvo meanes, one in vvhome sinnes be forgiuen. Acles.10.

The meane of conferring forgiuenesse of sinne is the worde of grace.

Act.2.&3.

Math.9.

2.Sam.12.

The meane to receyue forgiuenes of sinnes is fayth.

place, wherby the promises of heauenly grace may be receiued to lyfe and euerlasting saluation.

Confession of sinnes and prayer be not excluded.

Now when we doe attribute vnto faith, that it receyueth forgiuenes of sinnes, we doe not exclude the confession of our sinnes and prayer: Like as good fruites be not excluded when the goodnesse of a tree is commended: nor the spirite and the sound of the voyce be not excluded when the strength of eloquence is prayed: nor the bowing downe and caryng vp of our handes when we do praye vehemently or effectually, faith receyuing forgiuenesse of sins, doth make the sinner to confesse & pray. Wherefore when wee doe reade: If we doe confesse our sinnes, he is faithful and iust to forgiue vs our sins, we muste not vnderstand it by that confession whyche commeth not of the faythe of the worde, wherby we be reproued and conuinced of oure synnes. And when we do say praying according to the doctrine of Christe: And forgiue vs our trespasses, I thinke it is manifest, that we do pray vpon the spirite of Faithe. Wherefore all this is arighte applyed vnto faith, which is wrought by it, to the receiuing of the grace of oure reconciliation.

1. Iohn. 1.

IIII. Vpon what conditions our sinnes be forgiuen.

NO doubte, the forgiuenesse of sinnes is offered vnto vs by the worde of the Gospell in Christe, as our onely propitiatorie, mediatoure and reconciler, and it is receyued by faith as the gifte of grace and Gods mercy: yet for all that, there bee certayne conditions without the which eyther this grace is not obteyned, or else after it is gotten, it is not preserued without them. The fyrste is, true and stedfast amendmente of life.

1 It is manifest, that this is required in the verye beginning of the preaching of the Gospell, which both the Precursor and the Lord himselfe vsed saying: Amend your life, for the Kingdome of Heauen is at hande. And the same is required to be true and not fayned. Wherefore John also demaunded of the Pharisees and Sadducees worthie fruits of amendement, meaning that they must be vtterly voyd of vain hypocrisie, whiche would seeme to amende from the bottome of their hearts. Also, it is requisite, that it bee not onely true but stedfast also, so that we maye euer afterwardes forbeare from sin. So Christe sayde: Go and sinne no more. And in so saying, he ment that it is in vayne forgiuen, whyche after the forgiuing, is renewed again. To what intente is the disease cured, whiche is of purpose procured againe, when it is once healed: Therfore as forgiuenesse of sinnes is not obteined without true repentance & amendment of life, so after it is once obteined, it is not continued without the constant obseruing of the same.

2 The seconde condition is, that we be reconciled to our brethren, against whome we haue sinned: and that we doe either satisfie them if it be possible, eyther that we desire to bee forgiuen. He that by sinistrall and wrongfull meanes hath taken awaye that whyche is hys brothers good, dothe in vayne hope to be forgyuen of God, vnlesse he doe restore the euill gotten good, if he be able to make restitution. And therefore it is saide: that sinne is not forgiuen, vnlesse the amendes be made. Thys hee likewise whyche sayde: If I haue deceyued any man of any thyng, I restore fource double. And therefore is that spoken: If thou offer thy rewarde at the Altare, and remembrest that thy brother hathe somewhat agaynste thee, goe bee reconciled fyrste to thy brother, and then come and offer thy rewarde. Thys reconcilemente can not otherwise be made, but by satisfaction or pardon. Wherefore wee doe applye both vnto it.

The thirde is, that we also following the mercy of our heauenlye father, forgyue our offendors, and pardon them all theyr offences. The same Christ did manifestly set forth vnto vs, when he taughte vs to pray, and to say, Forgiue vs oure trespasses, as we also forgiue them whyche trespasse againste vs. And after the order of prayer he added: Therefore if you doe forgiue men their faultes, youre heauenly father shall forgyue you also. But if you forgiue not men their faultes, youre heauenly father shall not forgiue you.

These be the conditions whych be necessarye for the obteynemente and preseruemēt of forgiuenes of sinnes. But yet withall we may not ioyne to them any merite of oure owne iustice, and diminish the grace of God. For we be not able to satisfye the iust iudgement of God, eyther by amendmente of lyfe, eyther by reconcilemente to oure brother, eyther by pardoning his faultes: but there is ynough wonne of it, whe that sinnes be forgyuen to them whyche doe amende and bee reconcyled to theyr brethren, whyche myghte haue bin worthily punished. It is ynough for the mercy and clemency of God, if sinnes be so forgiuen, that not onely the person whyche sinned is pardoned, but that the euill is also reformed. We haue declared before in the place of Repentance, the causes why that the impenitente can not bee forgyuen, which may be also considered of in this place.

V. Whether all Sinnes be forgiuen.

HE that sente his sonne into thys worlde to saue the same whyche was perished, doth not forgiue some certaine of oure sinnes, but all. For he shoulde not accomplish the dispensation taken vppon him if he shoulde forgiue some and reteine some. For in that case we shoulde as well perishe, as though he forgaue no sinnes at all. One sinne alone maketh all mankynde subiecte vnto destruction. And how can it be, but we must also bee condemned for one sinne alone, if wee shall bee iudged vppon it, setting mercy aparte? Therefore the ground and foundation of oure Lordes incarnation can not stande, withoute that all oure sinnes and offences bee fauourably forgyuen. Vnlesse there were full forgiuenesse of all sinnes, hee woulde nother haue saide to the theefe: Thys daye thou shalte bee wyth mee in Paradise. Nor that saying coulde not stande: Verely, verely I saye vnto you, hee that heareth

The reason of Christes dispensatiō and of our saluation, do require that all our sinnes be forgiuen vs

Iohn. 5.

my worde, and beléeueth hym whiche sente mée, hath lyfe euerlastyng, and shall not come into iudgemente but shall passe from deathe to lyfe. For wheresoeuer anye synnes bée wyth-holden, these sayings can take no place: for what is it elſe to withholde some, and not to forgyue all, but not to acquite the gilty person altogither from hys synnes, but to kéepe him styll in daunger of iudgemente? Yée that forgiueth not the whole dette that anye man oweth hym, but with-holdeth a péece of it, hath the better styll bound vnto him in righte and lawe, for the reste of the dette whyche hée forgyueth hym not.

If all oure synnes be not forgyuen, then eyther they be the leſſe or the greater whiche be with-holden, whethersoeuer of them both wée graunte, it shal bée very vnfytte for Gods mercy. For to what purpose shoulde the leſſe bée with-holden if the greater be forgiuen, hée that is contente to forgiue a man a thousande Crownes, to what purpose shoulde he require of hym the dette of a fewe shyllings or pence? But graunt that you may fynde some one man whyche will doe so, yet it were a foule matter to thynke so of God. Agayne, in case the leſſe sinnes shoulde bée forgyuen and the greater with-holden, howe coulde that manner of imperfecte grace profite to oure saluation? when we be not able to satisfye the iudgemente of God, forasmuche as one sinne. Now then if wée bée not able to satisfie, what followeth elſe but that wée muste perishe, vnleſſe that all bée forgyuen. But that can not stande wyth Goddes clemency, that wée shoulde all miscarie, who sente hys sonne into thys worlde for our saluation to seéke and saue that whyche was lost.

If all sinnes were not forgiuen, what shoulde followe.

And this is proued by that that the Lorde dothe sette forthe vnto vs in hys parable, not a péece and imperfecte, but a full and complete forgyueneſſe, to be considered by vs in God, to thys intente, that we should also forgyue all oure debtes to oure brétheren. So he byngeth in an example of a King, whiche did mercifully forgiue the whole debte to one of his seruauntes, whiche ought hym tenne thousande Talents, and was not able to pay him. And when that afterwardes he had refused to shewe the lyke fauoure to his fellowe seruaunte, hée was displeased withall, and rebuked hym and sayde: Thou wicked seruaunte, I forgaue thée all that debte when thou desiredſt me, did it not behoue thée also to haue had pitie vpon thy fellow seruaunte as I had pitie vpon thée? By this parable the Lord dothe sufficiently declare, that this is required of vs, that we forgiue al the debtes to our brethren, bycause that all be forgyuen vs by Gods mercy. Howe can wée giue this qualitie to God, that séeing hée requireth at oure handes full forgyuenes, that he doth pardon vs but in part onely? How is the clemency of God figured vnto vs in the king, if God do not forgiue vs our whole debt, as it is mentioned, that hée forgaue his seruaunte not a péece, but the whole?

The Parable of Christ.

What is this sinne.

Let vs consider then how great it behoueth this grace to be, whereby not the lighte but the moſt grevous sinnes

Howe great grace must be, whereby all sinnes be forgiuē.

sinnes also be freely forgiuen by the infinite clemency of God: For if God be so affected that he dothe not forgiue some sinnes only, but altogither: it followeth that there is none so great, which is not forgiuen by hym which forgiueth all. For in al points those things which be greateſt, haue the chiefeſt place. Therefore like as it can not be reported of a Phisition that he is cunning in his faculty, and that he can heale all diseases, if he be not able to cure some greate sicknesses: so we coulde not attribute vnto God full and perfect mercy whereby he forgiueth all sinnes, if he shoulde forgiue the lighte onely and not the great also. Ther is no number, measure nor end of Gods mercy. Wherfore it is not possible that it can bée oppreſſed or ouercome, eyther wyth the waight or multitude of our sins. And these thinges be good to make oure heartes the bolder to pray vnto God oure moſt mercifull father, not onely for the forgiueneſſe of one or two lighte sinnes, but for all, be they neuer so great, yea and they serue also to make vs more ready to forgiue our brethren whiche doe offende vs, not onely some lighte offences and shapes, but all kynde of mischiefes also, be it neuer so heynous: for asmuch as all our sinnes whereby wé do offend Gods Maieſtie, be so mercifully forgiuen vs, and specially knowing that we be receyued into this fauoure vppon that condition, that we shoulde shewe the like mercy also to our brethren. As concerning the sinne againſt the holy spirite, we haue declared it in the place before of Synne, why that it is not to bée forgiuen.

VI. Whether that vvhē forgiuenes of Sinnes is once gotten, it may be voyde agayne.

Forgiueneſſe of sinnes must be firme, elſe vve should not be saued.

Vnleſſe that the grace of forgiueneſſe be euermore firme and certain, our saluation can not be fyrme and sure. For there is no other way to be saued by, if this fayle, and bée voide. Therfore it is necessarie that sinnes once forgiuen, are forgiuen for euermore: vnleſſe all that doctrine and promiſe of euerlasting life and saluation purchaſed by Christe vnto mankynde, shoulde bée voyde, whiche no Godly person can think. This is moſte certaine, and to bée stucke vnto without doubt, and yet there be some places of Scripture, which séemeth to teach the contrary. We reade this: If the wicked repét from al his sins which he hath wrought, and kepe my preceptes, and doe iudgemente and iuſtice, he shall liue the lyfe and not die. I will not remember any of his wickedneſſe whiche he hath done. Is the death of the wicked by my will? sayth the Lord, and not rather that he tourne from his ways and liue? but if the iuſt do turne from his righteousnes and cōmitte wickedneſſe according vnto al the abhominatiōs which the vngodly is wont to worke, shall he lyue? all the righteouſneſſe whiche he hathe done shall not be remembred. Albeit that I doe say to the iuſt that he shall liue the life, and he trusting vpon his iuſtice do commyt wickednes, all his iuſtices shall be forgotten, and in the wickedneſſe which he hath wrought in the same he shal dye, &c. So that in case ỹ iuſtice paſt be forgotté & made

An obiection. Ezech. 18. 33.

voyd, for the wickednesse following. Howe muche more may the sinnes mercifully forgiuen bee reuoked to the state of iust iudgement. Agayne, we reade in this wise, then the Lorde sente for him, & saide vnto him: Thou vngracious seruaunte, I forgaue thee all that thy dette, when thou besoughtest mee. Shouldest not thou also haue hadde mercy vpon thy fellowe seruaunte, as I had pitie vpon thee: and his Lorde being angry, deliuered him to tormentors, vntill hee should pay hym all which he oughte him. So my heauenly father shall do also vnto you, if you doe not euerye one of you forgiue youre brethren their offences from the bottome of your heartes. Is it not manifest by this that it is possible that the forgiuenesse of sinnes once obteyned may be made frustrate, and that the synner shall be endaungered to satisfye Gods iustice for them.

Matth. 18.

Howv forgiuenesse of sinnes can not be made voyd and howv it may.

I aunswere as touching the clemencie and goodnesse of God, like as the giftes and calling of God bee without repentaunce, so is the forgiuenesse of sinnes also. And in this respecte it can not be voyde for that saying standeth fast: I will no more remember his sinnes, for there is an vnchangeable truth ioined with this grace also, but as touching vs to whome sinnes bee forgiuen, there skilleth much how stedfastly we doe stand in the grace of God once receiued and howe we keepe the conditions annexed vnto it. We muste make a difference betwixte that grace of God whiche hath no conditions ioyned vnto it, as that is that he bringeth forthe his sunne vppon the good and the euill, and rayneth vppon the thankefull and the vnthankeful. And that which is giuen conditionally in which forte forgiuenesse of sinnes is this laste, although it be assured and firme in God (for he is not chaunged as man is) yet by oure fault it maye be made voyde, if we obserue not the conditions of it.

And we rehearsed the conditions annexed vnto this grace in the article that went before, that is to wit true and constante repentaunce and amendment of life. Whereby we do afterwardes forbeare from synne. And the brotherly reconcilemente which is by forgiuenesse of sinnes or amendes making. Therefore if anye man that hathe obteyned pardon of his sinnes past by the grace of Gods clemency, doe become so vnthankefull and so vncarefull of his owne saluatiō, that he breake off the repentance whiche he began in, and turne agayne to his vomite lyke a dogge, and doe openly declare that he dothe rather despise than feare God, no doubte he sheweth himselfe worthy to be punished for the sinnes passed, from which he was discharged. And that is the meaning of the two places of Ezechiel which we recited before. Againe if the man which hathe mercifully obteyned a pardon for a thousand talents, do refuse to forgiue his brother an C. pence: that is to say, if one that hath obteyned of God forgiuenesse of all his sinnes, wil not afterwardes forgiue his brother offending him, and desiring pardon, is there any cause to doubt, why he loseth the pardon of all his sinnes whiche he hadde gotten, and is called backe agayne to suffer worthy punishmente for it? It standeth with all all equitie and reason that we should do y same to others, which we wold haue done to our selues: or if we refuse to do it, to be bereste of the same grace and fauour which we will not shewe to others. Therefore in this respecte it may wel be, and it is moste méete that the grace once receyued should be made voyde and frustrate: but this commeth not of the vnstablenesse of Gods clemencye, whiche can not be in God, but of our naughtinesse. Wherfore it is not without greate cause, that the Apostle beseecheth and chargeth them to loke that they receyue not the grace of God in vaine. Some man will say: If the sinne comming after the grace receyued, do make the forgiuenesse of the sinne whiche wente before, voide, who shal then be saued? Was it not for this entent, that many in tymes paste, although that they beleued in Christe, yet for all that they deferred their baptisme vntill the very point of death? For they were afraide, least they should lose the forgiuenesse of their former sinnes receyued in baptisme, if they shoulde through the weakenesse of the flesh sinne againe after it. And the place of the Epistle to the Ebrewes not well vnderstanded, serued muche to the purpose.

1. Ioan. 2.

But we muste put a difference betwixt the sinnes which be committed and nowe and then by them that be baptised, through the weakenesse of the flesh, and that falling backe againe, when we fall quite of from our faithe, religion, profession, and grace of Christe, vnto our olde wickednesse: and so do bereue our selues of al that grace and saluation, whereof we were made partakers. Euery sinne doth not decaye the grace that went before, but the retourning to our olde wickednesse, as to a dogges vomite, doeth decaye it. It is one thing to raye a bodies fæt after they be washed, and an other matter to go tumble al the body again in filthy and myre lyke a Swine. And it is not all alike when a woman doth sometime offende hir husbande, as when she breaketh hir faythe and bande of wedlock, and setteth hir self quite out from all the honest knot of wedlocke. So it is one thing simply to sinne, which the children of God also doe: and an other matter vtterly to fall and runne backe from the grace of God, and to mocke and crucifie Christ anew, which the reprobate doe, and not the elect. The Epistle to the Ebrewes, speaketh of this laste kinde of sinning, and not of the firste. And therefore it sayth plainely: Howe muche greater punishmente thinke you he shall haue, whiche doeth treade vnder fæte the sonne of God, & esteemeth the bloud of the Testamente as a prophane matter, whereby he was sanctified, and shameth the spirit of grace. For he speaketh of the same falling backe, of the which he spake Chap. vj. But of the firste fall the Apostle speaketh, saying: If a man sinne, we haue an aduocats with the Father, &c. This iudgement which some of the fathers also did take, and whiche the Maister of the Sentences would neither allowe nor disallowe, but left it to be iudged by the reader, some of the Glosers of the Schole doctors doe exceedingly entangle in their disputations, & some do vtterly abanabandone it. But we doe plainely iudge it to be followed, bicause it is agreeable with the Scriptures and with the Lords parable.

And whiles I do according to my small hability simply treate of this matter without all contentious inquisition, I wil not seeme to be preiudicial to anye mans iudgement that is better learned than my selfe. For like as I am contented to speak freely what I thinke, so I doe not despyse other mennes opinions spoken without contention. It might be obiected vnto me here, that this manner of relapse, whereby the forgiuenesse of sinnes once be made voyde, can haue no place in the elect: no more in the reprobate nother, bycause that they can not be capable of forgiuenesse of sinnes, for that they haue not true and liuely fayth whereby it is gotten, and that therefore there is none at all in whome the sins once forgiuen may be voide. But I warne them which are lead out by this argument, to waye well what they saye of the reprobate. As for the elect I graunt, but for the reprobate I know it is a matter disputable, whether there be neuer any forgiuenesse of sinnes to them or no. There is in the Epistle to the Ebrewes attributed vnto them the lightning by Christ, the taste of the heauenly gifte, the participation of the holy spirit, ye and the taste of the good worde of God, and of the vertues of the worlde to come. Also, the sanctifying which is by the bloud of the Testament, and the spirit of Grace. And in the latter Epistle of Peter they be compared to the sowe, which after she is washed, tombleth again into the myer. And howe this can chaunce vnto them without all forgiuenesse of sinnes, it maye be well made a question in this case.

Heb. 6.

Heb. 10.

2. Pet. 2.

VII. Whether not the fault only, but the punishment also be forgiuen.

The Doctrine of the Schole doctors is, that the faulte onely of deadly sinnes is forgiuen, and not the punishment also and satisfaction: but that the same (whereas the sinner is worthye to be punished for it euerlastingly) is chaunged by Gods grace into a temporarie punishment, to be suffered either in this lyfe, or after our death. And therefore they deuised the fyre of Purgatory, wherin Gods iustice might be satisfyed, and the reste of the filthynesse of mens sinnes shuld be as it were sodden out. And bycause men shoulde not be bounde to paye the vttermost farding of their dette and duetie, the Bysshoppes of Rome came on with their pardone, to succour the poore soules being in Purgatorie & in the satisfactorie fyre, and they began to deliuer them out of their bounden paines, and to sende them to heauen, so that their trauaile & fauour therin were well payde for.

But Scripture knoweth nothing of this forgiuenesse of sinnes, nor it doeth not anaunce the glorye of our redemer Christe, nor it hath not any grounde of true and full forgiuenesse. The true and full forgiuenesse is, when not only the fault or blame of sinne, but the punishment also is forgiuen. All faithfull persons doe praye: Forgiue vs oure trespasses.

So

So we be taught by the Lord, that we shoulde vnderstand, that the forgiuenesse of sinnes is of the same condition, that the forgiuenesse of dettes is. And ẏ det or due vnto God, is not the sinne it selfe, or the faulte of sin, but it is rather the bande and obligation to satisfie the iustice of God for the sinne committed. Therefore when the dette or due is forgiuen by God, then surely the very obligation & band it self, the deserued punishment and due satisfation is forgiuen: if the det or due be not forgiuen, to what purpose be we commaunded to desire the forgiuenesse of it of our heauenly father.

And besides that, how shall that stande which we doe adde thervnto: As we doe forgiue them which trespalle against vs? If God do forgiue the faulte only and not the due satisfaction also and worthy punishment, then he doth not require of vs nother to forgiue oure brethren their trespalles, but that we maye neuerthelesse kepe them in holde to satisfye vs. And who that is well in his wittes will saye that the due or trespalle is forgiuen, when there is yet required the satisfaction, and that the dettor is not yet discharged? What time the king of his mercy forgaue al the det to his seruant when he did humbly beseche him, did he not withall let him go cleare away lose and at libertie? he would not haue done so, vnlesse he had forgiuen the making him of amendes and satisfaction. If this be to forgiue det, to holde fast the dettour still as bounde to satisfye, the seruant might haue aunswered the king his maister: Syr, I pardoned him of al his det, but I reserued the payment of the det wholy vnto me still. I say he might haue so pleaded the matter for himselfe, if he had in like conditions obteined the pardon of his dettes of the king his maister. But he could not make him this aunswer, for he had handled his fellowe seruant other manner wise than he was dealte withall himselfe by ẏ king, by whom he was mercifully forgiuen fully of all his dettes, and therfore worthily condemned as an vnright and vnmerciful person, and compelled to make amendes. The Apostle saith: Pardoning your selues one another: if any body hath any matter one againste the other, like as Christ pardoned you, so doe you also. Then if Christ do but halfe forgiue vs, we be not bounde to the full forgiuenesse, whereby not onely the fault of the wrong done, but the reuenge and satisfaction is also forgiuen: But then it is ynough, if we doe so forgiue offences, that we will neuer the lesse be reuenged vpon our brethren. But the doctrine of the Apostle doth require an other matter of vs, which chargeth vs to forgiue not only the offence, but the reuenge also. Ergo, Christ doth not forgiue vs by peece meale and by halfes, but ful and whole bothe the faulte and the satisfaction to.

Coloss. 3.

The nature of satisfaction dependeth vpon a dette.

No, no, that peece and halfe forgiuenesse can not stande by any reason, for the reason of satisfaction doth hang vppon a dette or duetie. He which oweth nothing, can by no law or right be compelled to satisfye him whome he oweth naught vnto. And he oweth nothing whose det is forgiuen hym. Ergo, the forgiuenesse of the dette maketh the dettour free, that that he is no longer bounde to satisfie. For when the cause ceaseth, the effect also ceaseth. But if we be not deliuered from the det and duetie of satisfaction, it followeth, that our dettes be not forgiuen, and so where as we doe beleue that our dettes and offences are forgiuen before God, it were not true faith but a vaine opinion: and we shoulde in vaine praye as the Lord hathe taught vs, saying: Forgiue vs our trespalles as we forgiue them that trespalle against vs.

An argument vpon the bloud of Christ.

Farther, what shall we say of the bloud of Christe which was shead for our sinnes vppon the Crosse? If we haue not by it obtained full forgiuenesse of our sinnes, then there doeth not consist in it full satisfaction and redemption: which we can not saye without the greate wrong of Christes death. If Christ hathe not satisfyed God the Father for our sinnes, who I beseke you will so much presume, (vnlesse he be starck blinded,) either vpon his workes or afflictions, or the merites of anye other, that he can hope by them to satisfye God? But in case we do beleue aright that the bloud of Christe doeth deliuer vs, and cleanse vs from all our sinnes: who seth not howe detestable and poysoned a deuise it is, that they say, that the punishment is reserued, whereby Gods iustice must be satisfyed, either in this lyfe, either in the life to come.

Obiection of our more saintes.

But they doe obiecte in case the forgiuenesse of sinnes be the forgiuenesse not onlye of the faulte, but of the punishment also: How commeth it that all mankinde is yet after the death of Christ subiecte vnto deathe and corruption? Is not death the reward of Sinne? Dyed not Christ for the Sin of Adam, from whence death issued into all mankinde? And yet to this daye we do all dye and be corrupt, yea the faithfull also of Christ which are redeemed also by the raunsome of this death. What can we gather els vpon this, but that the faulte of our sinnes is forgiuen, but not the punishment.

Againe, did not Nathan say vnto Dauid: and the Lord hathe remoued and made passe thy sinne? But yet he did adde immediatlye for the punishment, which his family should suffer for that sinne. Wherby it is euident ynough, that the sinne was so forgiuen, that the punishemente should followe not withstanding.

We aunswer, that there be yet remaine in vs in deede the leauings of our sinne borne with vs, and sticking to our flesche as long as we be in this lyfe, and that we be deliuered for all that from our deserued condemnation by the bloude of Christe. But these leauings be not taken away but only by death. And deathe it selfe our extreeme and laste enimy, & all other corruption withall is not taken away but by the rising again of our bodyes, and the sudden change of them into ỹ heauenly glory. And that these thinges be thus ordered, we muste not attribute it to our satisfaction and punishmentes, but rather to the speciall purpose of God, that he kepeth vs so long in this image of the earthlye Adam, vntill that the same tyme come, when all thinges shall be chaunged and restored. So that for the meane season we be saued in hope, and not yet in deede. Loke vpon Augustine.

As

As touching the historie of Dauid, we aunswer, that the punishmẽt wherby Gods iustice muste be satisfied, is one thing, and the chastisement whereby the Lord doeth chasten his children with the fatherlye rodde, is an other matter. The punishment and the faulte of the sinne also, is forgiuen to them which doe repente and beleue, but the chastisement is not so: I will visite (saythe the Prophet) with the rodde theyr wickednesse, and their sinnes with stripes. And the Apostle saithe, he scourgeth euery childe which he receyueth. And so Dauids sinne was forgiuen him, and the punishmente also of it. Wherevpon the Prophet added also, thou shalt not dye: but the chastisement and rodde of discipline was not taken awaye. It is not possible that there can be satisfaction made vnto God by any man, no not for one sinne alone, but we maye be chastened, for all of them, either gentlye in this life, if we be of the elete and faithfull, or else by iust iudgement in the pit of hell, if we be of the numbre of the reprobate. The children of God be not chastened to the intent thereby to satisfye Gods iudgement, but to be instructed, and to be made more ware after that, to the intent they be not condemned with this world. For it were a maner of Cockering, if when the faulte and punishmente of the sinne also were forgiuen, the chastisement of discipline shoulde be pardoned also. Wherefore this obiection of Dauid doeth not make for those doctors, which to the intent they would defend their gainefull purgatorie, Popishe masses, and Romishe pardones, doe deuise that sinnes be so forgiuen, that the punishement of them is stayed, and chaunged from an euerlasting paine into a temporarie paine, to satisfie Goddes iustice withall, from which the soules maye be deliuered by Masses and merchandise of pardons. The fault and the punishment of sinne is freely forgiuen be Christs bloud, but the chastening, discipline, & instruction of the children of God, is holesomly dispenced by God, and is not discharged by any Masses or Popishe pardons.

VIII. Whether that Sinnes be forgiuen also after death.

The deuice of the Scolemen touching the sinne against the holy spirit. Math. 12.

The Schole doctrine doth inferre vpon that which we doe reade in Matthew: Whosoeuer speaketh against the holye spirite, shall not be forgiuẽ, nother in this present world nor in the world to come, that thereby we be giuen to vnderstande (say they) as holye doctours doe teache, that some sinnes shall be forgiuen in the world to come. For some faultes (say they) are released in this world, yea and some small ones, in ỹ world to come, which doe trouble men after their death: and that they be forgiuen them if they be found worthy, & if they haue deserued by their good dedes in this life, to haue them forgiuen them. They thinke that they do grounde themselues vpon a sure argument. If the sinne against the holye Spirite (say they) be forgiuen nor in this worlde, nor in the worlde to come, Ergo, then there is forgiuenesse of some sinnes also in the world to come. A very foolishe argument no doubt. If I shoulde saye, I will not forgette this wrong, nor in this nor in the worlde to come, I praye you can you gather therupō aright, that we shall remember wrongs in an other worlde, and be there desirous of reuenge? He that speaketh after that manner, meaneth nothing else, but that he will neuer forgette the wrong receyued. Wherfore men must not gather therevpon what is to come after this lyfe. For when Christ said: He that speketh against the holye Spirite, shall not be forgiuen nor in this worlde, nor in the worlde to come: He mente nothing else in hys saying, but that it shall neuer be forgiuen. And so the same thing is expressed also in Marke, he hathe not forgiuenesse for euermore, but is subiecte vnto eternall iudgement. Chrysostome dyd not waye this Schole doctrine in this place, albeit he did diligentlye expounde the Scriptures. For he expoundeth it thus: But you shall be punished both here and other where also. And a little after. Of al men some shall be punished bothe here and there, some onely in this present lyfe, and some in the lyfe to come only. Bothe here and there, as the Sodomits and these Pharisies: and in this present onely as the whoremonger at Corinth, and as that riche man in Hell. This sayth he. Whereby it appeareth, that whereas it is sayde, that blasphemie is not forgiuen here nor in the worlde to come, it is nothing else to say, but that it shall not escape vnpunished for euermore. And withall the reader maye see, howe vaine a deuise it is, that they doe set forth of the fyre of Purgatorye, wherein the soules shoulde be punished after this death.

not

Mark. 3.

Chrisostom.

2. Cor. 11. Luke.

You may see that Chrysostome by these wordes doeth acknowledge, that there is no punishemente after death, but of the damned, such as the Sodomites, Pharisees, and that rich man in hell were. But he doth appointe to the faithfull which be sinners also, the punishment of this present lyfe onely, but not of the life to come: & he alleageth also the adulterer of Corinthus, and the rest of the sinners of that Churche, whiche the Lorde chastened in this lyfe, to the intent that they shoulde not be damned with the worlde. If these sayings be true, then there is no manner of hope of pardon after this life, nor there is no trueth in that fyre of Purgatorie, whiche men deuised to make their lucre of in the Church.

They doe obiecte also the place of the Apostle where we doe reade in this wise: The fyre shall trie euery mans worke what it is. If any mans worke doe abide, which he hath builded vppon it, he shall haue rewarde: if anye mans worke be burned, that shall take harme: but he shall be saued, notwithstanding so, as by fyre. These wordes the Maister of the Sentences doeth alleage in this wise: Of them also which do builde wood, heye, and stubble. Augustine sayethe, that their buildings whiche may be burned, shall finde the fyre of transitorie tribulation, burning those thinges whiche they brought with them: for he sayethe in this sorte: Surely after the death of this body, vntill the soules come from the fyre of Purgatorie, to the daye of damnation and reward, if in this meane season the soules of them whiche be departed,

Aug. de cura gerend.

1. Cor. 3. Fire shall trie euery mans worke of what it is. If any mans worke abide which he hath builded vpon it, he shall receyue reward. If any mans worke be burned, he shall suffer losse.

Aug. de Ciu. Dei. lib. 21. cap. 11.

departed, and which builded vpon wodde, heye and stubble, be reported to suffer suche fyre which others doe not feele, which caried not suche buildings that they might finde the fyre of transitorye tribulation, which burneth Venial sinnes, I do finde no fault withall, for peraduenture it is true. Hytherto he hath alledged the wordes of Augustine, and afterwards he addeth of his owne: But forasmuch as it is sayde: he shall be saued as by fyre: that fyre is little esteemed, and yet for all that the same fyre shal be grieuouser thā any thing that a man may suffer in this lyfe. Here it is plainely proued, that they which do builde wood, hey, and strawe, certaine kinde of buildinges which may be burned, that is to say, such as doe carry Veniall sinnes with them, which be burned in the fyre of reformation. Wherby it appeareth, that some Veniall sinnes be taken away after this life. This saith that Maister of Sentences, not very wel set and applyed.

First, as concerning that place of the Apostle, I will sende the reader to my Cōmentaries vppon the firste Epistle to the Corinthians, where he shall finde also sundry expositions of the Fathers vpon it, as Hierom, Ambrose, Augustine, and Chrysostome. But as concerning this present place of Augustin, which the Maister toke out of the. xxj. boke De ciuitate Dei, peecemeale, and not truely, I thinke it expedient to set it forthe more fullye and faithfully. In the beginning of the Chapiter he doth alleage and refute theyr opinion which doe say, that the Catholikes which doe not swarue from the vnitie of Christ, can not perishe, because that they haue Christ for their foundation, although that they doe builde vpon it any lyfe, neuer so euil. And against this opinion he doth lay the wordes of James: If any man saye that he hathe fayth, and hath no workes, can fayth saue him? After that he dothe compare James and Paule togither. And firste to declare that Paule speaketh not of such Catholykes, he expoūdeth what it is to haue Christ for the foundation. After that, whereas the Apostle sayth, that they which do builde, hey, wood, and strawe, vpon the foundation which is Christe, shall be saued by fyre, he expoundeth it in thys wyse.

For the fyre of trouble shall burne or waste away suche pleasures and worldelye loues, which be not damnable because of the knotte of wedlocke, to which fyre also the deathe of Children and all other aduersities also doe belong, which doe take these pleasures awaye. And hereby this buylding shall be hurtefull to the builder, because he shall not haue that whych he buylded vpon it: and shall be troubled with the losing of those thynges, in the vse whereof he reioyced. But he shall be saued by thys fyre, by the worthinesse of hys foundation, because that when it was layde before hym by the persecutour to see whether he had rather haue that or Christ, he did most frankly declare, that he had rather haue Christe than those matters. Marke herein the man in the Apostles wordes, building vpon this foundation, golde, siluer, and precyous stones. He which is without a wyfe, (saith he) thinke th vpon those things whiche be of God, howe he maye please God. See now an other building wood, hay, and strawe, but he (sayth he) whiche is coupled in Matrimony, thinketh vpon worldly maters, howe he mays please his wyfe. Euery mans worke shall be reueiled of what sort it is. For the daye of the Lord shal open it, no doubt the daye of anger, the daye of trouble. For it shall (sayth he) be disclosed in fyer. And the same tribulation he calleth fyer: as it is reade in other places: The furneffe doeth trye the potters vessels, and the temptation of troubles the iuffe men. And what euery mans worke is, the fyer shal trye. If any mans worke doe abyde it (for whatsoeuer a man doth thinke touching Gods matters, and howe to please God that doeth abide) the same which he hathe buylded vpon it, shall receyue rewarde: that is to saye, shall receyue the same whereupon he thought. If anye mannes worke do burne, he shall take harm, for he shall not haue that which he loued. But he shall be saued, bicause no tribulation hathe remoued him from the stedfastnesse of his foundation. But yet for all that, so as by fyer. For the same which he enioyed not without the entisemente of loue, he shall not lose without burning of sorrowe. Lo, as farre as I can perceyue we haue found a fyre which dampneth none of both parts: but enricheth the one, and doth damage the other, & trieth them bothe. And after he hath expounded this to declare his meaning in it, then he doeth adde the refutation of them, which do expounde the wordes of the Apostle of the euerlasting fyre. And after that refutation he doeth put these wordes which the Maister of the Sentences (as I sayd) doth falsely alledge. For he doeth not onely hyde his iudgemente and expositiun of it whiche went before, and doeth picke out and bring for the confirmation of an opinion crepte into the Churche, the same which Augustine mighte alledge vppon other mens heades, and spoken so conditionally by him, as though in deede it were not his owne opinion, but of others, as though it were Augustines own, but he doth also so falsely, corruptly and by patches bring the very wordes of Augustine, that he doeth frame them to his own purpose.

(saith

Whereas Augustines wordes be: Truely after the death of this body, until we come to that day which after the rising vp againe of the bodies shall be the laste daye of the damnation and rewarding, he mingled in of his own and made it: Truely after the death of this bodye, vntill we come from the fyre of Purgatorie vnto that daye, &c. Besides this, he doeth thrust in some things which Augustine hathe not, and of that which he hath, some thinges be lefte out: as, Whether they be punished there only, or bothe here and there: or else here, bycause they shoulde not be punished there, &c. which he did vtterly suppresse: and that also which he spake of the death of the flesh. of the persecutions of the church, wherwithal the Martires were crowned, and true Christians afflicted: and that also which was added by Augustine of the troublesome tyme of Antichrist. He perceyued in deede that the verye iudgemente of Augustine made not for his purpose, and therefore he forsake that, and brought an other mans opinio, which Augustin alledged, but yet such as he declared that he doubted of it, whiche he expressed, saying: I doe not reproue it, for peraduenture it is true. He saith not, bycause it is true, but bycause peraduenture it is true. And therevpon this Schole doctour maketh the matter more sure, saying: It is declared openly. Item, It appeareth certeinly, that some Uenial sinnes be forgiuen after this lyfe: whereas Augustine doth pronounce nothing of himselfe, but saith, that he will not reproue it, bycause peraduenture it is true. It is one thing to allow a mans iudgement to be certainly true, and an other thing when a man will say nothing againste it, for peraduenture it is true, for they be of the first sorte which be certainly perswaded of some infallible truth by the holy Scriptures: and they be of this seconde sorte, which haue no certain grounde for their opinions alledged besides the holy scriptures, and therefore doe doubt of them, and do nother allow them, nother disallow them.

Why doth not the Maister of the Sentences alledge those places, rather wherein Augustine did expresse his owne iudgement, and that not only in this place, but in his Enchiridion also where he sayth thus: For the fyre whereof the Apostle spake, muste be vnderstanded to be such, as both doth passe by the same: that is to saye, both he which doeth builde vpon this foundation, gold, siluer, and precious stones, and he also which doth buylde, wood, hey, and strawe therupon. For when he had sayd this, he added vnto it, To that euery mans worke is, the fyre shall trie: if any mans worke endure which he hath builded vpon it, he shal receyue reward. If any mans worke be burned, he shall take dammage or losse, &c. So that the fyre shal not trie the works of one of them alone, but of them bothe. In deede the fyre is the temptation of tribulation, whereof it is written manifestly in an other place: The furneffe doeth proue the potmakers vessels, and the fyre of temptation of troubles, the iuffe men. The fyre doeth worke the same effect whiles we be in this life, which the Apostle spake of. This saith Augustine in the place. But the maister of the Sentences did like better that which this man touched of ỹ Purgatory fyre, though it were doubtfully spoken, and that which he addeth, saying: It is not incredible, but that such a mater may be after this lyfe, and whether it be so or no, therby lyeth a question, and whether that it may be founde or no, or whether it be hidden, and that some faithfull men are so much the longer or sooner ere they be saued through this Purgatory fyre, the more or the lesse that they loued vaine worldly gooes in this lyfe, &c.

They which be of this opinion, say that there be some Uenial sinnes forgiuen after this death. But if they be venial & pardonable, I beseech you why be they not forgiuen in this life? Again, how should they be taken away by fyre? Is the forgiuenesse of sinnes, the consuming of them by the afflictions of fyre? Besides this, what kinde of things be those Venial sinnes, which be forgiuen a Gods name in the worlde to come? What manner a way this is (sayth Augustine) and what those sinnes bee which do so hinder the comming to the kingdome of God, that yet for al that they do obteine forgiuenesse by the merites of holy friends, it is most harde to synde, and moste daungerous to define. Truely I haue trauailed as much as I can in that mater vntill this time, and could neuer come to the knowledge of it. This holye man is verye ware in all his sayinges, that he will determine nothing for a certentie of this matter, which the penithe Papists wil haue all men to beleue out of all doubt, as one of the articles of our Christian faith.

If some veniall sinnes be forgiuen after death.

De ciuit. Dei lib. 12. cap. 27.

But to conclude. I am altogether of this iudgement, that it can not be proued by the holy scriptures, that some sinnes be not forgiuen in thys lyfe, but onely after this lyfe. And I am not the firste that doe iudge so. For Ambrose also hathe written so before our dayes, saying: The holye man Dauid made haste also to departe out of thys place of Pylgrimage, saying: I am a stranger with thée in the lande, and a Pylgryme, as all my fathers were. And therefore lyke a pylgrym made haste to that common countrey of al Saintes, desiring in consideration of the filthinesse of this dwelling, that all his sinnes might be forgiuen him, before he shoulde departe out of this lyfe. For he which receiueth not forgiuenesse of his sinnes here, shall not be there. And he shall not be, because he can not attein to euerlasting lyfe: For euerlasting lyfe is forgiuenesse of sinnes: And therefore he sayth: Spare a little that I may recouer my strengthe before I goe hence, and be no more seene. And what can be spoken anye plainer than this that he doth denye that he shall be there in the common countrey of all men, which receyued not forgiuenesse of hys sinnes here: that is to saye, in this present lyfe. If there be forgiuenesse of sinnes also in the lyfe to come, then the same is in vaine which he doth so certainlye pronounce. Therfore the Maister of the Sentences should haue confuted by the holy Scriptures this place of Ambrose, as contrary to the Schole Doctrine, or if he were not able so to doe, he should haue acknowledged the trueth. We reade the lyke matter in Cyprian, saying: When we be once departed from hence (sayth he) there is then no place of repentance, nor effecte or worke of satisfaction. Life is either lost or preserued whiles we be here. Whiles we be here, we may prouide for euerlasting salnation by the fernice of God and effecte of our Fayth.

Ambrose. De bono mortis. Cap. 1

Psalm.

Tertul. in libro de resurrectione Christi.

Of the Priesthode of the nevve Testament.

He new Testament which is sanctified in ỳ bloud of Christ, and succeded into the place of the olde, hath his peculiare priesthode. And bycause there is no doubt of the matter, we nede not to to stand long about it. Wherefore they may be ashamed that do charge vs to be so rude and barbarous, as though we did bereaue the church of the newe Testament of his Priesthode. They saye, that very reason and the common sense of nature can not abide, that there should be in any religion so foule a barbarousnesse, whereby all priesthode should be taken away. We be not so madde as to deny the priesthode of the newe Testament, but we do stande rather vpon this pointe, to sequester and chalenge the same which is lawfull and due vnto it, from that which is counterfait and false, and that by the authoritie of the holye Scriptures. Therefore seing we do also acknowledge that there is a certaine Priesthode of the newe Testament in the Church of Christ, and that there is one highe priest, and that there be other priestes of lower degrées vnder him, and that there be sacrifices and such other matters pertaining vnto priesthode, we muste now sée, what the same is, who is this highe priest, who be the inferiour priestes, and what be the sacrifices.

2 Firste of all this is a cleare case amongst all Christian men, that Aarons priesthode of the olde Testament, is abrogate together with the lawe of Moses by the comming of our sauiour, and hath nothing to do in the newe Testament. The lawe and priesthode were fulfilled & turned at one selfe same instante and time, as it is in the Epistle to the Ebrewes. Nowe if the Priesthode of the olde Testament, which was ordeined sometimes by Gods authoritie, could haue no place in the newe Testament: what can you finde me of al the Ethnikes religion that may take place with vs, thoughe it be neuer so like to that of the Iewes? And yet notwithstanding our pontificall Papistes haue brought in that outward and Passing priesthode, wherin they boaste and crake, that they do play the mediatours betwirte God and his Church, and do sacrifice for the quicke and the dead. But we loke to haue testimonies out of the holy scriptures ỳ God did so ordeine it. For it is not conuenient, that any man take honour to himselfe of his own head: like as nother Christ did clarifie himselfe to be made the high priest, but it was he which sayd vnto him: Thou art my sonne, &c.

Hebr. 5.

3 The ministers of the new Testament which are placed by God in his Church, are recounted in this wise: And he gaue some to the Apostles, some Prophets, and other Pastours and Doctours, to the accomplishement of Saincts to the worke of the ministerie, vnto ỳ edifying and making vp of the body of Christ. And again: God did set some in ỳ church, firste Apostles, secondly Prophetes, thirdly Doctours, then power, after them graces of healing, and helping, gouernance, kindes of languages, interpretations of speaches: Be all Apostles? be all menne Prophetes? be all Doctours? be al men powers, haue all men graces of healing? Do all men speake languages? Do all interprete?

The ministers of the nevve Testament. Ephe. 4.

1. Cor. 12.

The Apostle disputing in these two places of the Church and of the ministers of the same, doth not speke one worde of this Popishe Priesthode, for all ỳ they say that the Mas

The Apostle maketh no mention of the Popish priesthode.

sing prieste is in the chiefe degree of the politike of the Church. And who can beleue that the Apostle either of forgetfulnesse, or because he thought not upon it, would haue passed ouer these priests, and that not only once, but twise or thrise, if he had known that they had bin set in the church by the Lord: and wil not rather gather hereby that this Pontificall Popishe and Massing priesthode, was vtterlye vnknowen in the Apostles dayes.

Deacons. Act.6.

Secondly, we doe reade, that the Apostles with the multitude of the faithfull did ordeine seuen Deacons, that is to witte ministers, but such as shoulde take charge for the almes of the poore, not to be hangers on of the Popish and Massing priesthode: it was mente that they shoulde serue the tables of the poore, and not at the aulters of offerings and sacrifices. We like not, saide they, that we shoulde leaue Gods worde to serue the tables.

Therefore loke about you, brethren, to picke out seuen men among you of tryed honestie, full of the holy spirit and wisdome, to whome we shal giue this charge. What is that? Truely to minister to the tables.

Byshops, Elders and Deacons. 1 Tim 3 Titus. 1.

The Apostle giuing order for Bishops, Elders, and Deacons, doeth make no mention of this priesthode. But the Pontificall Papistes do say, that these places do not deny or forbidde their priesthode and order, but rather confirme it, forasmuch as the Apostles, doctors, pastors, and elders were priestes, and did sacrifice vnto God, and for this purpose they doe alledge the same of Barnabas, Simon Niger, Lucius of Cirene, Manaseene and Saule, that they did sacrifice to the Lord, as Erasmus trãslated it. But the same translatour in his annotations saith, that there is no sacrifice more thankfull vnto God, than to bestowe the doctrine of the Gospell. And Luke himselfe doth sufficientlye declare, what maner of sacrificers these were, in that he doeth not saye, that they were prieste & immolatours: but he sayd this, there were some in the Church which was at Antioche, prophetes and doctors. What the office of prophetes and of Doctors is, it is well knowen of it self. And wheras he addeth after, As they were doing their ministery: or as the olde translation is, Whiles they were ministring vnto the Lord, what is his saying else, but conformable to the same which went before, that is to say, that they did instruct the faithfull people, as prophets & doctors by the gospel, vnto ỹ faith in Christ? the which Epiphanius also did expresse & set forth, saying: Peter also and Andrew, James and John, Philip and Bartholomew, Thomas, Matthews and James of Alpheus, and Judas of James, and Simon the Cananite, and Matthias which was chose to make vp the twelue: all these be chosen Apostles, sacrificing the Gospell. Ergo. this man take the preaching of the Gospel to be a sacrifice, and the preacher to be the sacrificer. But they do meane nothing els by their priest, but a saying Maller, and one well annointed and shoone to say Masse, such as no man for extreme shame can say that the Apostles were.

Act. 13.

Whereas we do trãslate the word Presbyteros not prieste, but elders, accor-cording to the Greeke worde, they say it is naughtily done of vs. And wheras the people doth conceiue nothing else thereby but the massing priest, it cõmeth by their own fault, which ought rather to haue pluckt out this error out of their minds by doctrine, than to confirme it with their custome. The worde of Elders hath not the signification of priesthode, but of a Counsellers roume in the Church, wherof Tertullian maketh mention. Some of them haue plainely written, that in deede this massing priesthode is not expressed in holy Scriptures, but that it is to be obserued neuer a whit the lesse, because it is instituted by the fathers in the Church, besides the scriptures, by the teaching of the holy spirit. But we aunswered these mens trifling in our booke called Anticeleum.

¶ But we will let them go, and see the Scriptures, whereby the true priesthode of the newe Testament is set forth. First, the high priest of this priesthode is not some Bishop of that Romishe rable, calling themselues by the name of Popes, more Popishe and strange than Christian, but Christ the only begotten son of God, the true and only mediator betwixt God and man. Of this highe priest we reade much in the Epistle to the Ebrewes. Wherfore he shold become a like to his brethren, to be the merciful and faithfull high priest in those things which should be done towards God, to cleanse the sinnes of the people. And againe: Wherefore my holy brethren, parteners of the heauenly vocation, consider the Apostle and highe priest of our confession Christ Jesu, that he is faithfull towardes hym which ordeyned hym. Item, Hauing therfore a great high priest, which hathe perced the heauens, Jesus the sonne of God, let vs kepe our profession. For we haue not a high priest which can not perceiue our infirmities. Againe: So Christ also did not glorifie himselfe, to be the high Prieste, but he which sayd vnto him: Thou art my sonne, I haue begotten thee this day. As he saith also in an other place. Thou art a priest for euermore, according to the order of Melchisedech, which place is intreated of more at large in the seuenth chapter. The lyke testimonies are read also afterwards, of this high Priest Christ.

Hebr.4.

Hebr.5:

Psalm.2.

There is no other chief Priest but Christ.

Therefore, seing that it is not to be graunted, that there shoulde be two Priesthodes of sundry sortes in the newe Testament, or that there should be two highe Prieste in one selfe same priesthode, and that it is proued by most strong testimonies, that Christ the sonne of God is the hygh Priest of the newe Testament, it followeth, that it is a meere mans imagination, that the Bishop of Rome is taken for to be ỹ high priest in the Church. Of that priesthode of the newe Testament, which is comprehended in Scriptures, Christe is the high priest, and that only. Wherfore it can not be, that anye other should be associate vnto him. And in case the Bishop of Rome be a hyghe priest, he is not certainlye of ỹ priesthode, wherof the Scripture doth set forth Christ to be the highe Prieste. Then of what priesthode is he else, but of the same which is not ordeyned by god, but by mens imaginatiõ:

6 But let vs see what the writing of the Apostle doth reporte of the chiefe priest of the newe Testament. And in case that it doe not frame to the bysshop of Rome, then I thinke it is a cleare case that he is nothing lesse than the chief priest in Chrystes church. Of these reportes some doe concerne the person, and some the office of the prieste. To the person of Chryst as of the chiefe priest, these thinges do belong. Fyrst, That he is the sonne of God, and administrator of his fathers house, appointed and named by hym the hyghe prieste, accordyng to the order of Melchisedech. Faythfull towards him which did appoint him. Merciful and faithfull. And tempted in all thinges, that he may haue the perseuerance of our miseries. Perfect, Mercifull, innocent, vndefiled, sequestred from sinners, and made lighter than the heauens. Sitting at the right hand of ẏ tron of the maiestie in heauen. Let them which doe appoint the bysshop of Rome to be the chiefe priestes of the newe Testament in ẏ church, declare howe these reportes do agree vnto his person. I saye nothing of the title of the sonne of God, but can they verifye this of him, that he is appoynted and named by God the chiefe Priestes, accordyng to the order of Melchisedech: that he is faithfull to GOD, mercifull, tempted in all pointes, sorrowing for our miseries, perfecte, louing of God, innocent, vndefiled, sequestred from sinners, and made hygher than the Heauens? Though we wolde saye nothing but holde our peace touching the Bysshoppes of Rome, they themselues do declare, that they be nother appointed by gods chief priests,

That the Bishop of Rome is not the highest Priest.

Hebr. 3.

Hebr. 5.

Heb. 3.

Hebr. 2.

Hebr. 4.

Heb. 7.

Hebr. 8.

nor that they be faithfull, perfect, louing of God, innocent, vndefiled, sequestred from sinners, but contrary in all respectes.

There appertayneth to the office of priesthode, the mediation betwixt God and men, which the Scripture doth attribute onelye to Chryste the sonne of God. One God (sayth the Apostle) and one mediator betwixte God and men, the man Chryst Jesus. If Chryst onelye be the mediator of the newe Testament, it followeth that Chryst also onelye is the chiefe priest of the newe Testament. The Sophister will saye: The Apostle saith, The mediator is one, but he saith not he is one only. We do not deny that Chryst is one mediator, but we deny that he is on only mediator. For there be many mediators bothe in heauen & in the church also. Now heare me to your obiection. If it be not all one to say, one mediator and an one only mediator, then it followeth, that to say one God, is not as much to say as one only God. For the Apostle sayth plainely: one God, and he addeth one mediator betwixt God and men. What wise man wil graunt you, that in so fewe wordes and manifest meaning of the Apostle, one mediator is otherwise spoken than one God? If you will not be suspected to fauour the opinion of many Gods, do not make of one mediator, some one out of many, leaste thou seemest also to make of one God, some one God out of many.

Some other Sophister leauing the worde One, bringeth me a distinction in the worde Mediator. And sayethe: There is one mediator of our redemption Jesus Chryst: for he onely onely redemed mankinde, for there is no other name vnder heauen, wherin we muste be saued: but yet ther be many more intercessors, this will he saye. Now if he had vnderstanded what is meant by the mediation of Chryst, he woulde not haue made a difference betwixt it and the redemption. But lette them which be of that opinion, heare not me, but him whome they do honour for the Doctour of the church, I meane Augustine, whose wordes these be: Brethren (sayethe he) we haue Jesus Chryst the iuste, for our aduocate with the Father, he is the propitiation for our sinnes. He which helde this, committed no hereste. He which held this opinion committed no Schisme. For wherevpon are Schismes committed? When menne doe say, We be iuste, we do make holye the vncleane, we doe iustifye the wycked, we doe desire, and we doe obtayne, but (I beseche you by the waye, howe much more paste shame be they which doe saye, We doe determine, we doe commaunde?) and what sayde John? And if any man doe sinne, we haue a aduocate with the Father Jesus Chryste the iuste. But some manne will saye: Do not the Saintes then praye for vs? doe not the Bishoppes and superattendentes praye for the people? Marke the scriptures, and see that the ouerseers also doe commende themselues to the people: for the Apostle sayth to the people, praying together for vs also, the Apostle prayeth for the people, and the people praieth for the Apostle. We doe praye for you brethren, but pray for vs also: Let al the members pray together one for an other, and let the head make meanes for all. This saith Augustine in that place. In which wordes he doth plainly and openlye attribute the office of intercession, which pertaineth to the chief priest, to none but to Chryst as the heade. Againe he writeth thus: But if the Apostle shoulde haue said thus, This I wrote vnto you, to the intent that you shoulo not sinne, and in case any man do sinne, you haue me for a mediator to the father, I do pray for your sins, (as Parmenianus in one place doth make the Bysshop mediator betwixt the people & God,) what good and faythfull Christian folke coulde abide him? Who wou'd esteeme him as the Apostle of Chryst, and not rather as Antichryst? For all Christian men do commend themselues one an other in their prayers, but he for whom none doth intreate, but he him selfe intreateth for all. He is the only and true mediator, and for asmuch as the figure of him was resembled in the priest of the olde testament, ther is none foūd there that euer prayed for the priest. But ẏ Apostle Paule, albeit he was nerte the head the chiefe member, and yet for all that a member of the body of Chryst: and for bicause he so knew that the greatest and truest priest of the church entered for vs not by a figure into the inwarde parte of the vaile, in the place called Sancta Sanctorum but in expresse & assured truth, into the inward parts of heauen, to a holinesse not imaginatiue, but eternal: he did also commend himselfe to the praiers of the faithful, and he maketh not himself a mediator betwixt the people and God, but he desireth all the mēbers of Chryst to pray one for an other. Forasmuche as true membres be all carefull one for an other. For in case that Paule were a mediator, then his other fellow Apostles should have bene mediators also. Nor Paule himselfe shuld then have bene able to have giuen you a reason why he sayd: One God, and one mediator of God and men, the man Christ Jesus, &c. This he seith also in that place. And who sayth not euen by the iudgement of Augustine, that there is no mediator in the church of the newe Testamente betwixt God and men, but only Christ? Wherfore that Sophisticall distinction, wherein they trifle, that Christ is the mediator of redemption, but that there be many others for intercessors, is vtterly to be reiected. In case that the Apostles be not to be taken nother for mediators and intercessors, howe shall the rest of the saincts be accompted such: much lesse the bishops of Rome. If he must be taken not for an Apostle but for Antichrist, which doth chalenge himself to be a mediator, what reckening shall we make of him, which doeth make him selfe the chiefe Priest in Christes church: but let vs procede.

Contra epist. Parmeniani libr. cap. 8.

Of the sacrifice of Christ.

Now there belongeth to the mediation of a Priest, sacrifice and prayers, and this sacrifice doeth specially belong vnto the chiefe priest, which is of cleansing, the sacrifice of Christ is the offering of his body, made vpon the crosse, when he offered him selfe vnto God the Father. Of the prayers of Christ we do read in this wise: Like as he sayth also in other place: Thou art a Priest for euermore, according vnto the order of Melchisedeck, who in the days of his flesche, offering prayers and supplications, with strong crying and weping to him, who coulde haue saued him from death, was heard according to his worthinesse. Again: The prayer of Christ is rehearsed which he prayed to God the father for vs al when he was nere vnto his offering vp. Vnto this sacrifice there was annexed the entring to the inwarde partes of the vaile, which was called the Sancta Sanctorum, whereof we do reade in this wise: Christ our forgoer, entered for vs vnto those parts which be within the vayle. Item, But Christ being an highe priest of the good thinges to come, came by a greater and a more perfecter tabernacle, not made by hand, that is to saye, not of this building, neither by the bloud of goates and calues, but by his own bloud he entered in once into the holy place, and founde eternall redemption. And more manifestly in the same place he saith: He entered into heauen it selfe, to appeare now in the sight of God for vs.

Heb. 7. 9. & 10.

Heb. 5.

And in this kinde of sacrifice our chief priest Christ doeth differ much from the priests of the old testamẽt, which entring into the holy places made by hãd, did offer beasts and the bloud of calues and goates. But he pearcing vp into heauen it selfe, did offer a sacrifice which was not without him selfe, but his very self, such a sacrifice, as that there colud not be a more excellent and better offered. In him there was the very truth of our expiation and cleansing, wherof ther passed but figures in the sacrifices of the olde Testament.

And to this sacrifice of Christ these two thinges do belong: One, that being being once done, it can not nor ought not to be iterated and done againe: the other that it is effectuall in the sight of God. Of these both the writtings of the Apostle do testifie. It is said that Christ the chiefe Priest had not the lyke necessitie as the olde Priestes had, to offer dayly. Agayne we reade, that he offered hymselfe once, to the riddaunce of sinne. But this man (sayeth he) hauing offered but one oblacion for sinnes, sitteth for euermore at the righte hande of God. For by one oblacion he hathe made them perfecte which be sanctifyed. And this vnitie of this sacrifice doth depend vpon the effectuousnesse and accomplishment of those thynges which it ought to performe. The old sacrifices, forasmuche as they were figuratiue and vneffectual, they were iterated and renued dayly. Wherefore the iteration of them declared their weakenesse and vneffectualnesse. What do they then, whiche do holde an opinion that the sacrifice of Christe ought to be made dayly, not onely memorially, but really also. The efficacie of the one only sacrifice of Christe, made at the alter of the crosse, decayeth not in procesle of time, so that it must haue nede to be renued: but as it was effectuall euen from the beginning of the world, so also after that it was performed once, it kéepeth the strength and efficacie thereof sure and vnshaken, tyll the very ende of the same. Being once offered, it reconciled this world to God the father, it droue away our sinnes, it purged our consciences frõ dead and stinking sinnes, to serue the liuing God, and sanctifyed and made vs perfect for euermore, and opened an entry vnto vs into the holy place to the throne of grace, that comming therevnto with boldnesse, we maye obteyne mercy and grace to our conuenient ayde. Thus much I thought to touche by the way of the sacrifice of our chiefe priestes. As considering the qualitie, vnitie, and perfection of it, we may learne to knowe and refuse the deuice of that Popishe sacrifice. But let vs returne to the verye priesthode it selfe of Christ.

Of the perpetuitie of Christes priesthood.

Hitherto wee haue briefly sette forth those things which are in scripture, concerning the person of oure chiefe priest Christ, and his office of priesthode. It remaineth now to consider somewhat of the perpetuitie of it, and after that of the communicating of the same. The scripture doth set forthe the chiefe priest Christ vnto vs, not as transitory, but euerlasting, when he doth alleage that saying: Thou art a priest for euermore, according vnto the order of Melchisedecke: And he is in this respect also preferred before the priestes of the olde lawe, bycause they were manye of them, forasmuch as they could not continue for deathe: but that he abydeth for euermore, and hath himselfe alone a perpetuall priesthode. And this perpetuitie of Christes priesthode is not a matter of vayne tytle, whereby the Bishoppes of Rome should haue any occasion to chalenge the chiefe priesthode heere in earthe, as though that otherwise the church of the faithfull were destitute of the necessary priesthode. He is in that sorte a perpetuall priest, that he can haue no successor, so that the efficacie of hys one onely sacrifice endureth for euermore, and that he doth teach Psalm. 110. Hebr. 5.

Hebr. 7.

Howe Chriſt is a perpetuall Prieſt. Hebr. 7.

and direct the elect by his ſpirite, vntil the very ende, and that liuing euermore and ſitting at the right hand of the Father, he dothe entreate for vs, that he is fully able to ſaue them whiche doe come vnto God by hym. This perpetuitie of Chriſtes prieſthode can not away with any other chiefe priest: and withall it cutteth off all manner of occaſion from the church to ſeke and ſet vp any other. Wherefore we can not without the contumely and rebuke of Chriſt the euerlaſting prieſte to acknowledge the Biſhoppe of Rome for the chiefe priest in the Church. For that were as much, as to forſake our Lord Jeſus the Biſhop of our confeſſion, and to make place for Antichriſte amongſt vs.

Of the Communicating or participation of the Prieſthoode of Chriſte.

NOwe we muſt conſider how the prieſthod of Chriſt is Communicated and applyed. Therof we find alſo teſtimonies of ſcripture: as in the Epiſtle of Peter, where we doe reade in this wiſe: Vnto whom whē we do repaire being the liuely ſtone whiche was refuſed of men, but choſen and honored of God, ſe that you alſo like liuely ſtones be builded vpon him to be ſpirituall houſes, and to be a holy prieſthode, offering ſpirituall hoſtes, acceptable vnto God by Jeſus Chriſt. Item: But you bee the choſen kinde, the princely prieſthode, the holy nation, the people purchaſed, to declare his vertues, who called thee out of darkeneſſe into hys wonderfull lighte. And in an other place: Who loued vs and waſhed vs from oure ſinnes in his owne bloud, and made vs a kingdome and prieſts vnto God and to his father. Againe, For as muche as thou haſt redeemed vs O God in thy bloud, from all tribes, and languages, peoples, and nations, and haſte made vs a kyngdome and prieſts vnto our God, and we ſhall reigne vpon the earthe. Item: Bleſſed be they (ſaith he) whych haue part in the firſt reſurrection, in them the ſecond deathe hathe no power, but they ſhall be the Prieſtes of God and of Chriſte, and ſhall raigne with him a thouſand yeares.

1. Pet. 2.

Apoc.

Apoc.

Apoc.

These foure teſtimonies of ſcriptures do ſo ſpeake of the prieſthode, that they doe declare it to be cōmon vnto Chriſtian mē. For theſe points which be mentioned in them, concerning prieſthode, be altogither generall and common vnto all the faythfull of Chriſte, nor can not by anye reaſon perteyne to the Popiſh prieſthode.

1 All true Chriſtian perſons bē liuely ſtones to bē made ſpirituall houſes vppon Chriſte, builded vppon him, as the liuely ſtone layde for the foundation.

2 Al do offer ſpiritual ſacrifices, acceptable vnto God by Jeſus Chriſt,

3 All be a choſen kind, a holy natiō. a people of purchaſe, called out of darkeneſſe vnto ẏ maruellous light.

4 Al be dērely beloued, and waſhed from their ſinnes with the bloud of Chriſt, redēmed out of all tribes and languages, peoples and nations by the bloud of Chriſt. Seing therefore that theſe things be not peculiar to Churchmen only, but vnto all faithfull full folkes: it followeth that the ſame alſo which is reported withall of the Princely prieſthode, doth not onely belong to the order of the churchmē, but to the honor of al faithfull folke, which honor we do generally receiue all of vs, from oure head Chriſte, as many as by true and ſincere fayethe doe come to communicate and take part, not onely of hys fleſhe, but alſo of his ſpirite, as true members of his body.

Origenes in Leuit. Hom. 9 cap. 16. Beda. Capite. 2.

Thys Auguſtine dyd acknowledge in thys wyſe: There is no man almoſte of the faithfull that doubteth, but that the prieſthode of the Jewes was a figure of the princely prieſthode to come, which is now in the Churche, wherein all they bee conſecrated, whyche doe belong to the bodye of Chriſte, the chiefe and true Prince of Prieſtes. For nowe all menne bee annoynted, whereas at that tyme Kynges and Prieſtes were ſo onely: and whereas Peter writing to Chriſtian people, called them Royall prieſthode, hee declared that both the names of them dyd agree vnto that people, vnto whome the ſame annoynting dyd belong. In an other place he ſaith: From which tyme (ſayeth hee) thoſe whiche doe beleeue, and be cleanſed by the ſanctifying of that baptiſme, they be annoynted not ſome, as it was before in the lawe, but all for Prophetes, Prieſtes, and Kynges. By the example of the whyche annoynting wee bee admoniſhed what manner of folkes wee ought to bee, that oure converſation be no leſſe holy, than our anoynting is. For from the ſacramente of this anoynting, both the word and the name of Chriſt and all Chriſtians, that is to ſay, ſuch as doe beleeue in Chriſte, is deſcended and derived, whiche name is naughtely and in vaine applied vnto them whiche doe not follow Chriſte. And Origene ſayth: As many (ſayth he) as be annoynted wyth the holye ointemente, be made Prieſtes, like as Peter ſayd vnto all Churches: You bee a choſen ſorte, and a Royall prieſthode, a holy people: you be therefore a prieſtly kynde, and therefore you repaire to the holy places. And Beda vppon the firſte Epiſtle of Peter. Whereby (ſayeth he) he doth moſte manifeſtly admoniſh vs, that where as we be oure ſelues a holye prieſthood, we may be builded vppon the foundation of Chriſt. Therefore bee calleth euery Churche a holye prieſthood, which name and office the houſe of Aaron had only in the lawe. For ſurely we be al of vs members of the high prieſte, & we be all marked with ẏ oyle of gladnes. And Hierome vppon the prophet Malachie ſaith: We be all the prieſtly and Royall kynde, which being baptiſed in Chriſt, doe beare the name of Chriſt. Theſe be ẏ ſayings of thoſe Doctors, by whoſe teſtimonies it is approued, that the ſame which is mencioned of ẏ prieſthod of the new Teſtament in ẏ places before rcherſed, doth pertein vnto all Chriſtian perſones, and that therfore we be all Prieſtes.

Hieronymus Capite. 1.

The Scholemen alſo be compelled to graunte the ſame, foraſmuche as when the holie Scripture hathe done, they be cōuinced alſo by the teſtimonies of the fathers: but they do call this Prieſthod of Chriſte generall, in that ſort, to diſtinct it from a ſpeciall Prieſthod, whych they haue imaimagined, and doe attribute it vnto the order of Bishoppes and Priestes. But they can fynde nothing in anye place to proue their maskyng priesthode, in whiche the Bishop of Rome shoulde be their chiefe priest, and the Masse their chiefe sacrifice. Wherefore Maister Cocleus began to affirme, that al things which we ought to beleeue and obserue, be not expressed in the holy scripture, to the intent he woulde forge himselfe a defence for it out of vnwritten verities. But wee haue aunswered it him in oure booke called Anticocleus. It is the old shift of Heretikes, when they be not able to proue their opinions by scriptures, to runne to vnwritten fables, and reuelacions of the holy spirite, whiche men muste they saye, as well stande vnto, as vnto scriptures. But we doe constantly affirme, that men muste make a difference betwixte those things which be set forth to the faithfull to bee beleeued, and those whiche bee appointed for a common commoditie to be kept, eyther by custome, eyther by authoritie of anye lawfull Councell. For those thynges whiche we oughte to beleeue, muste haue the expresse & vndoubted worde of God for their warrante: but customes and free and lawfull ceremonies doe not so, forasmuche as there bothe not consist in them any necessitie of our faith. Nowe in case they will make their priesthode a matter of faith let them shew vs some scriptures whereby to proue the institution and authoritie thereof. But if they can be content to let it be a rite and custome made by men, let them deliuer the consciences of the faithfull from the yoke of it, and graunte that there is but one priesthode onely of the new Testament grounded vpon the authoritie of Gods worde, of which we spake before. For it can not be defended by truth, to establish two priesthodes in the Church.

Anticocleus

But let vs procede. Forasmuche as al the faithful of Christ be priests vnto God, as we haue declared out of the scriptures before, it followeth that according vnto the nature of the priesthode, they must offer acceptable offerings vnto God, and suche as may be offered by all, as wel poore as rich. If this sacrifice did consist in outwarde and worldlye things, as Gold, Siluer, Cattell, &c. it could not as easely be offered by the poore as by the rich. Therfore it is necessary, that the offerings of this priesthode be not earthly and worldly, but spirituall. So Peter saith in the place before cited: Offering spirituall sacrifices, acceptable vnto God by Iesus Christ. Like as we be to our God a kingdome and as Kings, not after the fashion of the world but spiritually, so is the nature of our priesthod also with his sacrifices, that we bee suche Priestes also as we be kings, according vnto the exaple of Christe our head, the chief Priest and king.

And there be three manner of sacrifices of this priesthode, of whiche the firste doeth pertaine onely vnto Christe as our mediator and hyghe Priest, the other two be common to vs also with him. The first is the sacrifice of expiation or clensing, wherin he offered himselfe the onely and immaculate hoste vppon the Crosse to God the Father for the synnes of the whole world. Of this sacrifice we haue spoken before.

The

The secõd is the sacrifice of praise and prayers. This is common vnto all faithfull folke with Christe oure chiefe priest, who did offer himselfe also a sacrifice of prayse and wyth prayers togither vnto God hys father. And that this sacrifice of prayse doth not pertayne to the ministers of the Church only, but vnto all the faithfull and redeemed people, it appeareth in the verye Canon of the Popish Masse, where this is written word for word: Remember Lord thy men and women seruauntes. &. and all whyche standeth heere aboute, whose faithe and deuotion is well knowen vnto thee: for whome we do offer vnto thee, or, which do offer vnto thee thys sacrifice of prayse for themselues and all theirs, for the redemption of their soules, for the hope of their saluation, and they yelde vnto thee eternall lyuely and true God their vowes, &c.

Nowe howe acceptable and ercedyng thãkefull this sacrifice of prayse and prayers is vnto God, we maye perceyue in the L. Psalme, where we reade in this wise: Heare my people and I will speake, Israell and I wil take thee for witnesse, I am God, thy God. I will not reproue thee for thy sacrifices, nor for thy burnt offerings which are alwayes before me. I will not receyue out of thy house a bull, nor kydde from thy folde: For all the wilde beastes of the woods be mine, sheepe in a thousand hylles. I knowe all the birdes of the hylles, and the wild beastes be with me. If I be hungry, I will not tell it to thee: for the world is mine, and all that is in it. Shall I fede vpon bulles flesh, and drinke the bloud of kidde? Sacrifice prayse vnto God, and yelde thy vowes vnto the hyghest. And cal vppon me in the day of thy trouble, and I wyll delyuer thee, and thou shalt glorifye me. By these wordes the holye spirite expressed euen then in the olde Testamente, what manner of sacrifice there should be in the new Testamente, whiche Augustine also did acknowledge saying To declare what the sacrifice of the newe Testamente shoulde be when the lawish should cease, he sayd Offer vnto God the sacrifice of prayse, and make thy vowes to the highest. No doubt though that this sacrifice were vsed continually of godly persons before the law, vnder the lawe, and after the lawe, yet it dothe principally perteyne to the people of the newe Testament, and is most conuenientlye applyed vnto the same only, wherby we be redeemed. For this is assuredly that people, which in declaring the deathe of God, and the vertue of their God, by whome they be called out of darkenesse into a maruellous light of truth, doth not cease to offer the sacrifice of prayse, and call vppon his name, with assured truste and fayth.

Augustine. De gratia Noui testamenti ad Honoratum.

This sacrifice of prayse is that pure sacrifice, which according vnto the Prophecie of Malachie, is offered in euery place vnto God, from the rising of the Sunne, vntill the going downe thereof, whereof Augustine In oratione contra Iudæos, & lib. 2 Contra literas Petiliani cap. 86. & Contra aduersarium legis & Prophetarum lib. 1. cap. 20. & Tertullian. lib. Contra Iudæos, doth testifie.

Malach. 1. The pure sacrifice, which is offered frem morning tyll night. The fathers.

Oure aduersaries doe alleage the Fathers, that they do call the memo-ric cie of the Lordes deathe with the ſacrament of the ſame. The ſacrifice of the newe Teſtamente. Albeit that it may be borne wel ynough with men of vnderſtanding, to call the memory of the only ſacrifice once offered vpon the Croſſe, a Sacrifice, in that meaning, when the tokens of thynges do take vppon them the name of the things, whiche be betokened: yet for all that we maye not diſſemble, but that if we will ſpeake properly, a Sacramente is one thing, and a Sacrifice an other. In deede there is ioined vnto the ſacrament of the bodye and bloud of the Lord, the ſacrifice of prayſe, wherevpon it was firſt called Euchariſtia, that is to ſaye, Thankeſgiuing.

Auguſtine. De Ciuit Dei. Lib. 10. cap. 5.

And Auguſtine doth mingle togither the wordes of ſacrifice and ſacrament, ſaying: The viſible ſacrifice is the ſacramente, that is to ſay, the holy ſigne of the inuiſible ſacrifice, but it is better for all that, that diſtincting the ſacrifice of prayſe from a Sacrament, we bind it not vnto anye order, time, or cuſtome, but that we leaue it vnto the free affections of the faithfull, what place and tyme ſo euer it be: that like as accordyng vnto the doctrine of Paule, they doe lifte vp pure and cleane handes in euerye place, praying vnto God, ſo they may alſo offer vnto him ſacrifice of prayſe in euery place, gyuing thankes, and declaring his vertues. And being of this iudgement, we be not againſte it, but that it maye bee done openly in the congregation of the faithfull, when in communicating of the bread and cuppe of the Lorde, we doe declare the Lordes deathe. But we do require alſo, that not only at theſe manner of communions, but at all other Churche meetings alſo, the offerings of oure lyppes ſhoulde bee offered eyther in ſyngyng, or praying, or Preachyng, and that thys princely prieſthode myghte bee practiſed by all the faythfull.

Now when the miniſter of Chriſt doth beſtowe hys trauayle towards the offering of this ſacrifice, and ſerueth the multitude of the people, he doth this by the office of his miniſterie, and not of a ſingulare and priuate Prieſthode, and he ſerueth the faithfull not as a Prieſt to the laye and prophane people, but as a Miniſter and a guide of the worde to the holye people, and as offeryng togyther commonly the ſacrifice of their prieſtly prieſthode vnto the Lorde. For it is not to be alowed, that the Scholemen doo make two ſortes of prieſthodes: one which ſhould ſpecially belong vnto Bythoppes and Prieſtes, whoſe ſacrifice ſhoulde bee the oblation of the body and bloud of Chriſte for the ſinnes of the quicke and the dead, to bee reuued dayly and not to bee offered by anye faythfull perſon onely, vnleſſe he were ſhorne and annoynted: the other generally perteyning vnto all Chriſtian men. There is in the Churche but one Prieſthode, one chiefe Prieſt Chriſt, one honor of the prieſtly people, comprehending in it all faithfull alike, but there be diuers and ſundry ſortes of Miniſters.

The third kind of our ſacrifice is, when we doe accordyng vnto the example of Chriſt our chiefe Prieſt, offer oure bodyes, that is to ſaye, oure ſelues, a lyuely, holy, and acceptable ſacrifice ſacrifice vnto God. And in this reſpecte the Apoſtle wrote in thys wiſe: I beſeeche you therefore brethren by the mercies of God, that you yelde, or as it is in the Greeke, doe preſente youre bodyes, a lyuely, holy, and acceptable ſacrifice vnto God, your reaſonable ſeruice. In this ſaying, he dothe require of the Prieſtes of the newe Teſtamente, that they doe preſente themſelues wholly vnto God in all poyntes, obedient and readye to all aſſayes. This he calleth the liuely oblation, comparing it as contrary to the oblation of the ſlayne and dead beaſtes. Then holy, that is to ſaye, pure and leande, as contrary to the ſacrifices of the beaſtes of the Iewes and the Gentiles, in whiche there was much vncleanneſſe. And thirdly, acceptable vnto God, to make a difference betwixte it and that outwarde ſacrifices, whiche of themſelues were not pleaſaunte vnto God, as we maye ſee in the fiftie Pſalme, and in Hieremie. And this ſort of ſacrifice he calleth a reaſonable ſeruice, to diſtincte it from that ſacrifices of beaſtes. And to ſignifie that the ſame ſacrifice is proper and peculiar for Chriſtian folke, he ſayeth not ſimplye Reaſonable, worſhip or ſeruice, but he addeth, Yours: as if he ſhould ſay, You may not thinke that you be deſtitute of prieſthode, ſacrifice, and ſeruice, becauſe that you doe not offer nor Golde nor Siluer, as the Iewes and Gentiles doe: you haue a more excellente prieſthode, the ſacrifice of the whyche is not of Beaſtes, but reaſonable: not dead, but liuelye: not prophane, but holye and acceptable vnto God. Thys you doe offer vnto God, when you doe preſent youre bodyes vnto hym in true obedience.

But thys kynde of offeryng can not bee offered by them whyche haue not ſhaken off themſelues, nor can not take vppe their croſſe and followe the foteſteppes of Chriſte, paſt before them. Wherefore it is neceſſarie for vs to mortifye fyrſte the fylthy affections of olde Adam, that is to ſaye, of the bodye of ſinne, whereby wee maye bee the better able to preſente oure ſelues wholly vnto God, obediente and holy, according to hys wyll, as a liuely, holye, and acceptable hoaſt vnto hym. But oure ſhorne and annoynted prieſtelynges, hadde rather ſlay Chriſte a hundred tymes, and burne a thouſande of hys members, than once preſente their owne bodyes vnto God, to bee as a liuely and holye ſacrifice vnto hym. For they doe ſeeke vppon the people whyche they doe ſeduce for their owne gayne, and not for Chriſte, and they be for the moſt parte of them carnall and delicate, though that they woulde be called neuer ſo ſpirituall.

The fourthe ſacrifice. Philip. 4.

4 Vnto theſe ſacrifices of the newe Teſtamente we may adde the fourth alſo, of which the Apoſtle maketh mention, ſaying: When I was at Theſſalonica, you ſente me once or twice, things which I hadde neede of, not for that I doe loke for any rewarde, but I do loke for plentifull encreaſe of fruite for youre aduantage and profyte. Yet for all that, I receyued all, and haue plentye. I am well furniſhed ſynce that I receyued by Epaphroditus theſe things whiche were ſente from you, a ſauoure of good ſmell, an acceptable & thankfull hoſt vnto God. Ergo it is a thankfull & an acceptable hoſt & a ſacrifice vnto God, to ſuccor the neceſſities of Chriſtes miniſters, and to maintaine and relieue his members. And thys ſacrifice doth belong vnto all faythfull perſons to vſe, which do depende vppon the princely prieſthod of the newe Teſtamente. The annoynted and ſhaulings do like but one peece of this ſacrifice, and that is for the taking.

of

The concluſion.

This I haue noted briefly of the Prieſthode of the newe Teſtament, to the intente that the godlye reader ſhould ſee what he ought to iudge of the popiſh prieſthode, and of ỹ chiefe prieſt thereof, and of the ſacrifice, and that he may perceiue withall what is the true prieſthode of the newe Teſtamente, and who is the chiefe prieſte thereof which is Chriſte, and what thinges be reported of him in the Scriptures: & beſides that, what other prieſtes there be vnder hym of inferioure degree, and whiche be the true and thankefull ſacrifices of the newe Teſtamente of God. There is no worldly matter in all mans lyfe, that may be more holye and acceptable vnto God, than true and lawfull prieſthode is. But on the other ſide, there could neuer haue bin deuiſed, neither among the Gentiles and Iewes, nor among the Chriſtians, any poynt more gainefull and peſtilent withall, than falſe and counterfeyte prieſthode. Wherewithall this world hath bin euermore, by the ſpeciall deuiſe of Satan, deluded and drowned in falſe religions, errours, and ſuperſtitions. For when the miniſterie of the worde began to degenerate and growe out of kinde to an vnnaturall prieſthode, and the Biſhop of Rome to be a chiefe prieſt in the Churches of Chriſte, than the gates were ſet moſt wide open vnto the doctrine of Antichriſt.

Of the Churche.

LIke as the matter of the Churche is taken to be one of the chiefe places in matters of religion, ſo there be notable ſayings alſo thereof in the Scriptures, whereby is ſet forth the ſpeciall fauoure and grace of Gods maieſtie towards the ſame. Wherefore we muſt diligently diſcourſe of thoſe things which doe truly belong vnto it, ſpecially bycauſe of thē which in theſe our dayes will ſeeme to be churchmen in that ſort, that vnder the coloure of the Churche they doe reiect, and caſt off the manifeſt truth, as though that the authoritie of the Churche were of greater power thā the truthe of Gods worde: and as though that the churche wer of that nature, that it coulde ſtand without the worde of God, and haue any authoritie attributed vnto it. I knowe that there be many of them whiche do ſo batter with their falſe and fayned wares and words in the church, and do ſo ſticke vnto, not Peter, but Symon, that they hadde rather wittingly runne headlong to the deuyll, than giue place to the truth of gods worde, leaſt if that ſhould be receiued, they? gayne ſhoulde be vtterly decayed: And as for them we make ſmall ſmall account of, for they will abyde no admonition. But our meaning is to helpe them whiche are entangled with ſo fond a zele and liking of the word Church, that they can not forſake thoſe groſſe and vnexcuſable errours, wherewith the Romiſhe Church is full hard vp to the brinke, and come to the truthes ſyde. They doe profeſſe a bound dutie and obedience to the Churche, they will bee no runnagates from it, but naturall and kind children. They doe ſurmiſe that albeit it do doubt in many things, yet for all that it is the mother of all: and that we muſt beare with the authorite of the mother, though that ſhee haue hir faultes. And for this cauſe we muſt conſider what the Churche is, and whyche is true and whyche falſe: and ſuche other matters as ſhall ſeeme mete to be conſidered in this caſe.

I. What the Churche is.

THe word vſed in Latine for the Church, is Eccleſia, commyng from the Greeke worde, and ſignifieth properly a callyng out, derined from the greeke word ἐκκαλέω, that is, to call out. Some men do tranſlate it for a Conuocation, whiche is called in Greeke συγκλησία of συγκαλέω, that is, to call togither. And they ſet this difference betwirt thē. that the ſame Eccleſia ſhoulde ſignifie the aſſembly of the people, and Synecleſia, the comming togither of the counſellours. The Ebrewes do call this word Eccleſian. The congregation, and aſſembly of people togyther. So they and the Greekes do vſe words commonlye knowen, taken out of their countrie ſpeache. The Latines haue vſed always a ſtrange word, which very many doe not vnderſtande, ſpecially after that there grewe in once ſo greate barbaroufneſſe, that there remayned no true vnderſtanding nother of the Latine, nother of the Greeke tong. If you aſke an Engliſhe man what he calleth the Latine word Eccleſia, he wyl aunſwere, the Churche, and vnderſtandeth nother from whence it is derived, nor the Etymologie, whyche is the nature of the word: And we do call by this word both the congregation it ſelfe of the faithfull, and the place alſo appoynted for their aſſemblie, generally called the Churche. Few men would beleeue what miſts hath bin caſt ouer the mindes & eyes of the faithful by theſe ſtrāge words.

So that this Greeke word Eccleſia, whith we will tearme hereafter by the Church, is a verye calling out to way the nature of the word whyche we muſt thinke was vſed by the holy ſpirite, not without purpoſe. For thereby is ſet forth vnto vs the grace of the heauenly calling, whereby we be called out of this trāſitory world, vnto the kingdome of God. But the word of the Church is taken not for the calling it ſelfe, but for the faithfull, which be called forth, and the felowſhip of the ſame.

How many ſortes there be of the callings of the faith full.

There be three ſortes of calling of them. The firſte is, the inwarde calling by the ſpirite that openeth the heartes. The ſeconde, is the outward calling by the preaching of the Apoſtle and miniſter of Chriſte. The thirde calling is, when the faithful be called into the felowſhip and company of the Churche or congregations. By the firste and second callyng we be made Christian men: by the thirde we be gathered togyther at certayne due times, to encrease oure Christian religion, faythe, and godly loue.

That the place of the assembly is called the Churche.

It is no newe matter to call the very place of the repaire of the faithfull, the Church. For the Fathers did accustome to call it so. Epiphanius in his Epistle vnto John the Bishop of Jerusalem, whiche Hierome dyd translate, among the rest wrote thus: When we went togither to the holy place which is called Bethel to make a gathering there with thee, according to the custome of the Churche, and came to the towne which is called Anablatha, and sawe there passing by, a candell burning, and asked what place it was: and had learned that it was a Churche, and wente in to pray, &c. Whereby it appeareth manifestly, that they did euen at that time accustome to call the place the Churche, where the congregation was wont to assemble togither. And in deede it agreeth better with the nature of the new Testament, that the place wherein the people vseth to repaire togither, shoulde be called the Church, than to giue it the magnificall title of Temples among Christian menne. Gods maiestie is not in loue with the sumptuous and gaye sightly buildings, which for the sight and gaynes of them, were wonte to be called Temples, of the Latyne worde Contemplando. The vse of the place for the Churche is, that the multitude of the faithfull should in it assemble togither, to pray, to syng, and to teache, and to communicate.

Temples.

Whereupon the place appoynted to that purpose, is aptlye learned the Churche.

But yet I do not allowe that they do so scrupulously and superstitiously rather than religiously determine of the materiall Churches, as they cal them, whether that it be a church if it be not consecrate by the accustomed ceremonies, by whose authoritie a Church ought to be founded, in what cases it is to be consecrate or halowed: whether that it may be halowed without any Masse: if it be halowed without any endowmente, by whome it ought to be endowed: whether a church halowed by Heretikes must be halowed againe a newe or no: whether a secular Church maye be turned into a monastery: how manye wayes a Churche is defyled, and how it must be reconciled, and much other such like harletries. They bee verye carefull of the stony worke of the Church, but they doe set nothyng at all by the buildyng of the true Churche. They haue heaped vp infinite treasure by their great pardons, vnder the pretence of the Churche workes and buildings, specially of Saint Peters church at Rome, whiche is alwayes so kept in building, that it shall neuer be full builded, and is lyke ynough to be sooner destroyed by the Turkes, than to bee brought to an end of buylding by the Romaines.

As for that that they doe call the Bishoppes Priestes, Cardinalles, and Clergye with the Bishoppe of Rome also the Churche, wee wyll speake hereafter in that treatye.

We will now speake of ỹ Church in in respect that it is the calling out of the faithfull, eyther generally of all whiche bee dispersed throughout the worlde, eyther particularly of some certaine only, whether they be gathered togither in spirite, in vnitie of faith, eyther in certaine places in body and spirite. And we passe not vpō the multitude of ỹ faithfull, or the hallowing of the places where they assemble togither, for our saniour himselfe doth not measure his church by the multitude or quality of the place, when he saith: Wheresoeuer be two or three gathered togyther in my name, I am there in the middes of them. And who can denye, but that that is the churche of Christe, where two or three assembled togither in the name of Christ, he himselfe is in the myddes? So the Apostle stucke not to call a faithful family of Christ in one house, a Churche. When hee bade them to salute Priscia and Aquilas, and the Church whiche was in their house. And to the Corinthians he saith: Aquilas and Priscilla do greete you well in the Lord, with the Church whiche is in their house. And in an other place: Salute you (saith he) them which be at Laodicea and Nymphas, and the Church whiche is in his house. Againe vnto Philemon, he calleth the family of hys house, a church. Would to God, that all the houses of faithfull men were so affected and ordered in the faith of Christ and true godly loue, that they might vnderstand themselues to bee the Churches of the Lorde, and be vsed thereafter. Augustine doth in one place call the house of Iuliana no small Church.

II. Hovv many sortes of Churches there bee.

The true Church of Christ, is one only Catholike, and Orthodoxe.

IF the question be of the true Church of Christe, whyche the Scripture dothe call, The house of God, and the body of Christe, surely there is but one and not manye of them. And the same they do call the Catholike & Orthodoxal church: that is to say, the vniuersal Church, and professing the right and true doctrine. And as touching the difference of bodies and places, the partes of it are dispersed throughout al ỹ worlde: and yet for all that they be knitte and linckt togither in spirite and faythe, and in this respecte doe make vp not many, but one Churche alone. The Church of Rome is no vniuersall Churche, but a parcell onely of thys Churche, in case it be in true faithe linched in with the rest of the members of Christes body. We may not onely suppose that the Church of the Citie of Rome is not different from the other Churches of the whole worlde, (for as Hierome saith: Fraūce, England, Aphrike, the Persians, and they of the east partes and of the Indians, and all Barbarous nations, do worship and serue all one Christ, and keepe all one rule of truth,) but wee muste suppose the Churche of Christ to be so one, that the Romishe Churche be meante to be nother the head, nother the mother of it, but some member thereof as well as the rest.

The Church of Rome is no vniuersal Church.

1 Whereas Dauid saith: I hated the Church of the mischeuous men, and I wyll not sytte with the wicked, they doe take an occasion

Psalme 25. The Church of the elect, is not the reprobate.

vpon these wordes to make two maner of Churches, the one of the faithfull and electes, the other of the mischeuous and wicked. But thys doublenes is not in the true Church of Christ whereof we spake, there is not in that, one company of faithfull and an other of wicked. For although that the darnell and cockle doe beare a greate sway in the outward felowshippe thereof, yet for all that these wordes do not so belong to that felowship, that it can make two Churches of one. We may not gyue the name of the Churche (whiche is peculiar only to the Saintes which be called and congregate in ỹ Lord) to the wicked and reprobate, though they be neuer so many of them, and knytte togyther. The properties gyuen to the Church in Scriptures be suche, that they can not frame to the factions of the wicked. But if they wyll algates haue the name of a Church, we can be contented withall, so that wee adde to it a clause whereby their conspiracie may bee distincted from the true felowshippe of Chrystes Churche, and to call it the Malignant Church. The worde of Churche absolutely spoken without any speciall addition, dothe in no wise perteyne to the faction of the reprobate, but is peculiar to ỹ Saintes only, whiche be called vnto the common felowship of the body of Christ. We shoulde do a great wrong, to allowe the faction of them whiche can in no wise be reputed for members of Christ, to be the church of Christ. The Church is the body of Christe. Wherefore they bee no parcell thereof, whiche be not subiecte to the very head thereof, which is Christe.

The name of the churche doeth not agree to the reprobate.

2 Men do deuide this true Church of Christe into the Militant and the Triumphant Churche. So that the Militant Church should be of them whiche do yet trauel in this mortall flesshe, and dos striue wyth Satan, the flesshe, and the worlde. The Triumphant, of them which are passed to Heauen, and haue ouercome all manner of theyr enimies. In thys sorte Augustine placeth the Angels also. These be not two churches, but the parcels of one selfesame Church, of which the one is already gone to that dwelling of Heauen, the other dothe follow euery day, vntill that at the last in the ende of the worlde, they shall be both ioyned togither, and liue euerlastingly in blisse with Christ our Sauioure.

The de che m

The m priuate church

The ren of elites Gen

The Church first Le vnder lawe, after lawe.

3 It shoulde seeme also that there be three churches of God: the firste, whiche was before the lawe: the seconde, which was vnder the lawe and the thirde, whiche followed after the lawe, and is limited to the new Testament. But like as ther is but one selfesame determinate order of mans saluation, and but one Testament of God embracing al the elect eue from the beginning of the worlde vntill the ende, whereof we treated before in a place alone: so there is also but one Church of Saintes throughout all tymes and tydes. And the vnitie of onenes of it, is not diuided nother by alterations of times, nor by the dissuerance of places, nor by chaunges of orders and dispensations. The one selfesame Churche was otherwyse appoynted before the lawe, otherwyse vnder the lawe, and otherwyse after the Lawe, accordyng vnto the Prouidence of God. But it was not in any wise deuided into three churches: muche alike as three sundrye formes in one selfe same schole, though they be not all alyke taught, yet they make not sundrye Schooles, but conteyne sundry learners and scholers in one selfe same Schole, to be broughte vppe in conueniente sorte, according to the diuersitie of the persons and formes.

4 The faithfull of the newe Testament be called and gathered into the Church of Christ, first out of the Israelites, and next out of the Gentiles. Therefore the Fathers doe sometimes make mention of the Churche gathered of the Israelites, and sometimes of the Gentiles: but yet for all that there is not in deede one churche of the Israelites, and an other of the Gentiles which beleeued in Christe, but all is one selfe same Churche. And Paule doth so knytte both the peoples in Christe, that hee dothe resemble them to one bodye, whereof Christe is the head: and to one house, whose foundation and corner stone is one selfe same Chrystе: And Christe himselfe. And I haue other sheepe (sayth Christ) whiche bee not of this sheepecote, and I muste bring them also, and there shall bee one flocke and one shepheard. There was as a man would say, two shepecotes, of the Israelites and the Gentils, before that they were made one in Christ. But when they wer brought to the vnitie of faith by the spirite and Gospel of Christ, then there was made of two sundry flockes but one flocke, yea and but one Churche also. If we consider this aright, wee can not otherwise determine of the true Church of Christ, but that it is one, and doth consist of true faithfull folke onely.

But some man will saye: They whiche doe now adayes trauayle againste the true doctrine of the Gospell, to mainteyne the Romish kyngdome rather than the true Churche, do not only graunt that there is but one Churche of Christ, but they doe also therepon argue againste vs in this wise: The Churche is the body of Christ, and the body of Christe is but one. Item. There is one Lorde, one faithe, one Baptisme, one God and father of all, one spirite, and there is one doue of mine: one that is my perfect one, &c. Ergo the Churche is one. Wherefore in like manner as it befell in time passed in the Arke of Noe, that no liuing thing was saued without it, and that all they whiche wer saued, wer saued in it, which was a figure of the Churche, so they which be now saued, are saued in the Church only, and as many as be out of it, must nedes perish. Then what must they trust vnto, which do nowe adayes sequester themselues from the Church, and doe ordeine conuenticles and metings without it, but to fall into the iudgement of God, as it were into the fludde of Noe, and perishe.

The obiection of our aduersaries. That out of the vnitie of the Churche there is no saluation.

Ephes.4. Cant.6.

The Arke of Noe.

As for thys, it is easely aunswered. Certaynely hee muste nedes perishe, that dothe sequester hymselfe from that true and only Church of Chrystе. But it followeth not straighte withall, that the Churche of Rome is the Churche of Christe: and therefore they whiche doe sequester themselues from it, muste nedes perishe. We must put a difference betwixte that true and onely Churche, and those which be not the Catholike and whole bodye of the Church, but seeme to be some parcell of it. A particular Churche may bee of that nature, that vnlesse a man do dissener himselfe from it, hee can not haue felowshippe in that onelye Churche whiche is ỳ body of Christ. Such wee fynde the Romish Church to be nowe adayes without all question: so that in forsakyng it, menne doe not forsake the true and onely Churche of Chryste, but verye Babylon it selfe. It can neuer be proued that the sea of Rome is that onelye bodye of the Churche, wythoute which no man can be saued. Wherefore it is a verye shame to wyrke vnto it those properties whiche doe belong onely to the felowshyppe of the body of Christ: wherein all the members of the Lords body, throughout all the whole worlde, are knitte and soldered togither in ỳ faith of Christ by the holy spirite. For any man may be in the body of Christ, and lyne by the spirite of Chryste, in what corner of the earthe so euer he do truely beleeue in hym: yea although that hee neuer hearde or vnderstoode letter of the name of the sea of Rome, moste accursed and detestable to all godlye persons at thys presente for manye respectes. Beware and loke to thy selfe O Rome, that by thys kinde of argumente thou proue not thy selfe to bee fallen from the true trade and waye of Saluation, seeyng that thou arte become so farre wyde from the true and only Churche of Chryste.

The aunswere.

III. What is the true Churche of Christe.

IT is a waightie matter, specially in this case, to trie the false from the true: and that in such a time when all kind of errours are mainteyned againste the doctrine of the truth, vnder the coloure and countenaunce of the Churche, and that men muste eyther ioyne themselues vnto them, eyther forsaking their tokens, muste sustayne the reproche of heresie and of schisme. Wherefore we muste diligently consider, what is the true Churche of Chryste. For if that be knowen aryghte, it is an easie poynte to picke out the false from the true, and to turne hir out of hyr counterfayte foles cote, so to clere mens consciences from hir yoke, and to iudge who be the Schismatikes and forsakers of the Church indede.

But we may not iudge of the true Churche of Chryste accordyng vnto the iudgement of man, nor yeld vnto them whiche doe iustifie whyche Churches they lyke, and do condemne whyche they lyke also, but wee muste seeke the iudgement of ỳ true church out of the holy scriptures. We haue learned Chryste (saith Augustine) in the Scriptures, we haue learned the Churche in the Scriptures, we haue these Scriptures among vs as common matters, why doe wee not also kéepe Chryst and the Church still as common pointes? And Chrysostome saith: For at this time (saith he) since that heresie hath the better hande in the Churches, there can be no tryall made of true christianitie, nor any other refuge and shoteanker vnto christians, which woulde knowe the truth of the faith, but the Scripture of God. For in tymes passed it was sundry wayes declared, whiche was the church of Chryst, and which was gentilitie: but nowe if a man wyll knowe whiche is the true churche of Chryst, it is no wayes vnderstanded but only by the Scriptures. Why? Bicause ỳ the heresies in the schisme hath all those things which are proper vnto Chryste in the truth: Churches alike, the very same holy scriptures also alike, Bysshops and other degrées of clergye alike, baptisme alike, the Supper of the Lord alyke, and all other matters, yea and finally Chryste himselfe. Therfore when a man wold know which is the true Churche of Chryst, how shall hée be able to vnderstand it in so greate an vncertaintie of resemblāce and likenesse one to an other, but onely by Scriptures? Item, The Church of Chryste before tymes was knowen by very behauior therof, when that the conuersation of al Christen mē, for the moste parte, was holy, which was not so of the wicked: but now Christian men are become such like or worse, than the heretikes or Gentiles be: yea and there is yet founde to bé in them more Continencie, though that they be in a schisme, thā is among Christian menne. Therefore hé that wyll knowe whiche is the true church of Chryst, how shall he know it, but onely by scriptures? Wherfore bicause the Lorde vnderstode how great a confusion of thinges there shoulde come in the latter days, he cōmandeth that ỳ Christian persons which do consist and remain in their christian profession, & would be assured of the true faith, shoulde lée vnto no other thing, but vnto the scriptures. Else in case they haue regard to other things, they shall take harme and perish, and not vnderstād whiche is the true Churche. Thys sayeth Chrysostome. Which I haue sette forthe so at large, bycause that the Reader shoulde sée, that euen by ỳ testimony of the fathers, we ought not otherwise to iudge of the church, but accordyng vnto the holye scripture.

We could say absolutely, that the Church of Chryste is the communion and felowshippe of Christian mē: vnlesse that we were driuen to séeke out certaine sure markes and knowledges to knowe the true from the false, bycause of the false and counterfayte Church, which doth chalēge and take the title of the Churche to it selfe only.

The true Church is the company and felowship of the true faythfull, holy, & elect, standing in faithe, hope, loue, and the spirite of Christ. Whē we do say, that it is of the true, faithful, holy, and elect, we do exclude out of the true churche the counterfaite Christians, in whome there is nothing else but a vaine name of christian Religion, and the abuse of the Sacraments: as for al other points, they be mere Ethnick in matters of religion, superstitious & Idolatrous, and in the rest of their life fleshely & carnall. In that that we do say, that it is a felowship standing in faythe, hope, loue, and the spirite of Chryste, wée doe erpresse the treiwe, euerlasting, and catholike and vniuersall companye of the treiwe Churche of Chryste, whiche standeth not by any outward and bodily felowshyp, whether it bée of places or of Ceremonies, but by a spirituall and inwarde societie, and embraceth none but thē only whiche be elect and truly faythfull. Yet for all that, with all we doe not bereaue this Churche of the vse of bodily mætings, nor of the outward felowshyp of the Sacraments, and lawfull rites and Ceremonies. God forbidde. For there is no place better mætings and assemblies than in the true Churche, nor no where matters better vsed. But we doe determine that the same is the ryghte and naturall felowshyp and communion of the Church, which taketh not place in all persons, but in the electes and true faithfull onely, and is rather of mindes than of bodyes.

The definition of the true Churche.

With this definition of the true Church, the holy Scripture dothe agrée, which doth call it the house and building of God, the flocke of Chrystes shæpe, the spouse, yea and the body also of Chryst, which properties can not frame but to the Churche of the holye and true faithfull, and to the same they doe cleaue perpetually, whatsoeuer becommeth of the particulare companyes and felowshippes.

The Church is the house of God. 1. Cor. 3.

That it is ỹ house and building of God, the Apostle witnesseth, saying. To the intente that in case I come late, thou mayest knowe howe thou oughtest to vse thy selfe in the house of God, which is the Churche of the liuing God, the pyller and grounde worke of the truthe. And you bée the building of God.

The flock of Christes Shæpe. Iohn. 10.

That it is the flocke of Chrystes Shæpe, it is proued where Christe himselfe sayeth: I am the doore for the shæpe. Item. I am a good shepheard: and I know my shæpe. And I haue other shæpe whiche be not of this shæpefolde, and I muste bryng them home also, and they shall heare my voyce, & there shall be one shæpefolde and one shepheard. That it is the spouse of Chryst, it appeareth by the wordes of the Apostle, where he sayeth: I haue despoused you to one husbande, to yéld your selfe a chaste virgin vnto Chryste. And Men loue your wiues, as Chryste also loued the Church. Item: For this cause also a man shall forsake Father and Mother, and be ioyned to his wife, and there shal be made of two one flesshe. This is a greate misterye, but I doe speake of Chryst and of the Church. And that it is the bodye of Chryste whiche is the head, we may sée in the same place of the Epistle to the Ephesians, and to the Colossians in the first Chapiter also.

Therefore in respect that it is the building and house of God, it muste nédes haue not some slighte foundation, but suche a one as must be correspondente to the qualitie, worthynesse and greatenes of the same. And there is none else méte for it, but only Chryst himselfe, the only begotten sonne of God, who is only able to susteyne and beare vp this building of Gods house, and preserue it agaynst the Deuill, the World, Sinne, and Deathe. He is that immouable and stayed stone, vppon whiche the true Churche is so grounded, that nother Hell gates can preuayle agaynst it. Chryst sayeth: Thou arte Peter, and vppon this stone I will buylde my Church, and Hell gates shal not preuayle against it. He saith not, & vpon thē, thē, but vpon this stone will I build my Church. No doubt, by the stone he vnderstandeth the foundation, and the Apostle saith: No man can laye any other foundatiō, but that which is already layd, which is Chryst Iesus. Of this he speaketh also in an other place, saying: Therefore you be not nowe straungers and newe come, but you be the Citizens of Saintes, and the houshold folke of God, builded vpon the foundation of the Apostles and Prophets, whereof Chryste Iesus is the chiefe corner stone, in whome what soeuer buylding there is made, it groweth vnto a holy temple in God.

Secondly, for asmuch as this building is not earthlye but heauenlye and spirituall, it followeth, that the stuffe whereof it is builded, doth not consiste of earthlye, but spirituall stones: which Peter calleth Liuely stones, saying: Be you all builded as liuely stones, a spirituall house, a holy priesthode, &c. So that we doe consider the builder himselfe, the foundation, and the stones also of Gods house, which is the Church. I thinke it is a cleare case, that these thinges can not be mente but of the true Church of Chryst, which is the fellowshyp of the electe, of the saincts and of the true beleuers. For it can not be, that the fellowshyp of the reprobate may be builded by the Lord, founded vpon the Lorde, and be a worke of liuely stones growing in the Lordes Temple.

And for asmuch as the Church is the flocke of Chrystes shæpe, it hath thereby to his shepharde, not the bishop of Rome, but Chryst himselfe, whose voyce they heare, and whome the flocke doeth followe after. And this can none do but the true church of Chryst, not the fellowshippe of the reprobate, but of the electe and true beleuing, for the Church of the wicked doeth not heare the voyce of Chryste, but when it pleaseth Antichryst to giue them leaue, nother doe they follow him as their shepherde. And it is not a mater of so great a difficulty to know who they be which do willingly hear and harken to the voyce of Chryste their shepherde, and doe followe him, declaring themselues by their conuersation, maners and behauiours to be not Dogges, Swyne, Wolues, and Lyons, but shæpe and Lambes.

The Churche vvhich is the spouse of Christ can not be of false christians. Ephes. 5.

Nor it is not possible that the Churche of euill and counterfaite Chrystians shoulde be the spouse of Chryst, for that misterie of man and wife can not take place in it which the Apostle doeth set forth in Chryst and the Church, when he saith, that we be one flesshe with Chryst, like as the man and wyfe be one flesshe: and that Chryst doth nourish and cherishe his Churche, as the husband doeth therishe and nourishe his wife: and that the Church ought to be subiecte vnto Chryst, as the wife ought to be subiect vnto the husbande. This misterie is placed onely in Chryst and his true Church.

The Churche being the bodye of Christ is of none but of the members of Christ.

Lastly, whereas the Scriptures teacheth ỹ the Church is the body of Chryst, doeth it not manifestlye declare, that the Church of Chryste, is not of them which can not be reckened among the members of Chryst? In déede there be many euil persons in the fellowshyp of the outward profession, and in some respecte of the Church, but they be not of the church in dede bycause the be not members of the true Churche. It is one thing to be in the outwarde fellowshyp of Christian men, and an other maner of matter to be ioyned to the inwarde societie which is of the spirite and faith, wherein the head and the bodye and the members also doe spiritually and truely communicate one with an other. It is two things, to be in the Church, and to be of the Churche. They went out from vs (saith John) bicause that they were none of vs. There is none doeth belong to the church, vnlesse he be of the Churche. There be manye in Church which be none of the church, whome the Scripture also calleth straungers. Bernarde vppon the Psalme Qui habitat at the ende: But nowe (saith he) we be at resse with the Paganes, at resse with Heretykes, but we be not at resse with false brethren. Augustine sayth: But yet hereby, yea althoughe the Church knowe it not, they which be condemned by Christ for their naughtie and filthie conscience, they be not still in the bodye of Christe, which is the Church: forasmuch as Christ canne not haue anye damned members. For God forbydde, that all these monsters shoulde in any wise be accounted among the members of that pure doue. God forbydde, that they shoulde be able to enter into the bounds of that paled and close grounde, whereof he is the keper, which can not be deceyued. Thus saith he.

So that the matter is clere by the premisses, that the true, onely, holy, and right teaching Church of Christ, is the fellowship and communion of the true, faithful, holy, and elect, in which there is no place for the reprobate that be not acquainted with the spirite of Christ. Wherefore whensoeuer that there be anye contention of the true Churche of Christ, our aduersaries nede not lay it in our lappe, that the wicked also be intermingled with the good in the church. For that is seen wel ynough of it selfe. But we doe talke of that Church, which is not onely called by the worde of grace, but is elect, predestinate, iustifyed from euermore, whych Christ himselfe doeth cleanse, to make it a glorious Church for himselfe, without spot or wrinckle, and any lyke mater, but that it shuld be holy and withoute blame, and to haue it knyt vnto him for euermore. The reprobate doe in no wise belong to this Churche, with which kynde of men the particular Churches are now adayes exceedinglye pestered & burdened in a lyke comparison, as if the true members of our bodyes should be pestered and ouercharged with botches and boyles, of which it can not be well sayd, that they do belong to the constitution of the body, although they sticke sometymes faster than we would, vnto our bodys.

Fernarde. Serm. 2.

Augustin. Contra Crest conium gra. Lib. 2. cap. 21.

VVhich is the true Church of Christ.

IIII. Of the Catholyke Church.

The Fathers began to call thys true and right teaching Church of Christe, The Catholyk churche, which is as much to say, as vniuersall. Augustine to his Cosyn Seuerinus: This is (sayth he) the Catholyke church, wherupon it is also called καθολικὴ, in Greeke, bycause it is spreade throughout all the worlde. Isychius vpon Leuiticus. For the vniuersall Church (sayth he) is Hierusalem the citie of the lyuing God, whych conteyneth the Churche of the fyrste begotten, written in heauen. And Gelasius vnto Anastasius the Emperour: the same is well called, saythe he, the Catholyke church, whych is by a pure, cleane, and vndefyled fellowship sequestred from all the vnfaithfull, and theyr successors and companions. Otherwise there should not be a difference giuen by god, but a miserable mingle mangle.

1 So that these three properties, be giuen vnto the catholike Churche. First that it is spreade throughout all the worlde. Ergo, the Catholyke church is not the Church of Rome, but the Church of all the faithfull & elect, which doeth make vp the true Church dispersed bodily throughout all the compasse of the worlde, but vnited and knit together spiritually, euen from the beginning of the worlde vntil the verye ende.

And Adam, Seth, Nohe, Sem, Abraham, Isaak, Jacob, Moses, Dauid, and the reste of the Patriarkes and Prophetes, and faithful persons of the olde Testamente, be alwell members of this church, as the Apostles, Euangelists, Martyrs, and other Christian men, which did furnishe the Catholike churche, before that the Romains receyued the faith of Christe. There is a meaning of an vniuersalnesse in the worde Catholyke, which can not be applyed to the Church of Rome, nor to anye other particular Churche, no nor to all mankinde nother. For the christian faith doth not belong to the Romaines onely, nor yet it doth not embrace all kinde of men. If it serued for Rome onelye, it were not meete to be called Catholyke, that is to say, vniuersall. And if this note of vniuersalitie did embrace all the worlde, then the Christian faith shuld not be Catholike. For it doth not belong vnto all, and in this respect the Church should be nothing lesse than Catholike.

2 Therefore Isychius doeth aright giue it that seconde propertie, that it is the Church of the fyrste begotten, written in heauen.

3 The third propertie is that which is expressed in the wordes of Gelasius, that the Catholike churche is cleane, and vndefiled, deuided from the company of the vnfaithfull, and the felowship of the reprobate. Now whether that Rome doeth embrace the greatnesse of the whole kingdom of Christ, and whether it doeth containe all the elect and faithfull: and whether that it be cleane and vndefiled, sequestred from the companye of the reprobate, and the fellowship of the vnfaithfull: let them tel me which do vnderstande by the Catholike church nothing elles, but the Romishe Church, and vppon this gaye title and pretence do make it the Lady mistresse of all other Churches.

Augustin. Epist. Hyeron. Loa.

Which is Catholyke church

The members of the Catholike church.

V. That the Prelates of the Church of Rome be not the true Churche.

They say, that the Prelates, Bishops, and Cardinals, with the Bishop of Rome, do represent ỹ Catholike tholike Church. And that it agreeth with the Scriptures, where we doe reade in this wise. The king turned his face, and blessed all the church of Israell. And that the Church was gathered there together in the Princes and heades only representatiuely, it appeareth in the beginning of the same chapiter, wher it is read in this wise: Then all the elders of Israel gathered them together, with the Princes of the Tribes, and the captaines of the families of the children of Israell, vnto king Salomon. And whereas the Lord saith: If he hearken not to thée, tell the Church: he meaneth not by the worde of the Churche, all the multitude of the whole Catholike Church, but the Prelates. Otherwise how were it possible to doe that whiche he teacheth? For it is not possible to assemble the Catholike Church it selfe into any one place, and committe any cause or matter vnto the same.

We answere. The chapiter it self aboue alleaged, doeth declare immediatly, that not only the elders of Israell and the captaines of the familyes, but all Israell also came vnto Salomon. For it is added straightwayes: And all Israell came together to king Salomon, in the moneth Bethamin, vpon a solemne day, that is the seuenth moneth, &c. And in an other place it is declared, that thys dedication of Gods house was the xviij. daye of the seuenthe moneth: Whereby it appeareth that this Church of Israel was assembled together in the dayes of the feastes of the Tabernacles, when by the lawe all the mankinde was compelled to appeare before the Lorde, as it is commanded in the law. Wherupon it is read in Paralipomenō, how Salomon kept a solemne feast for seuen dayes at that time, and all Israell with him. An exceeding great church or congregation from the entrye of Emath vntill the water of Egypt. The Hebrewe worde signifieth, An exceeding greate church, so that the worde church is simply taken for the congregation, else to what purpose had it bin to say, An exceeding great Church?

1. Reg. 8.

Matth. 18.

2. Par. 7.

As concerning Christes wordes: Tell the church, it is very manifest, that they must be mente not of the Catholike, but of euerye particular Church, specially ordered according to the manner of the Synagoge, where matters were determined betwixt brother and brother, whereof we spake in an other place. And this custome was kept also in the primitive Church. For then there were certaine tryed men of the elders chosen out, which as Tertullian maketh mention, did iudge their causes with great grauitie and estimation. In such a church one brother may be complained vpon of an other, and the saying of Christe be accomplished, Tel the church: and in case he heareth not the church, let him be as an Ethnike and a Publicane vnto thée: which can not be, if it be referred vnto the Catholyke churche. Wherfore, where as they do referre it vnto the Prelates of the churche, it procedeth of that errour: that they will haue it vnderstanded of the Catholyke church, whereas it is to be referred to any particular Churche. And they themselues do sufficiently signifye, that the Prelates of the church church be not the Churche, in that that they doe say, that the church is represented by them, although the same be not so some proued, as spoken. But thereby they doe bewraye themselues, for what church they do so manfully fight, no doubt for Popes, Cardinals, Bysbops, Princes, Abbathes, Prelates, Prouostes, &c. very commercburches. In maintening of whose kingdome in the church, they doe seke also more their owne profyt than the commoditie of Christes churche: but they shoulde see to their owne saluation if they woulde deliuer the flocke of Christe by the power of the truth from their tyrannye, whome they doe defende, and hadde rather abide trouble with Moses, the Prophetes, Christ himselfe, and the Apostles, and all true godly persons for Gods people, than to enioye the temporarie commodities of Sinne for the time present.

VI. Of the knowledges of the true Church.

The framers of the vnstable doctrine, of that Interim, made at the assemble of states of the empyre at Auspurge. 1548. at which some woulde bring the Churches, which had receyued the Gospel, by little and little vnto Popery againe: and some other sought to frustrate the present endeuours of the wicked, did set for the these foure tokens to knowe the true church by. The first is, pure and cleane doctrine: the second, the right vse of the sacraments: the thirde is, the vnitie which should consiste in loue and quietnesse: the fourthe is the Catholike and vniuersall consent, throughout all the places and times of the worlde. If these were handled in their right and naturall kinde and meaninge, there were no harme in them. For I suppose that there is no man that hathe any Christian vnderstanding that woulde refuse that Church, and not take it to be verilye christian lyke, in which these tokens of true religion be perceyued and sene to be. Who would not desire to liue in that Church, wherein there is pure teaching, the sacraments vsed aright, the vnitie and concorde of the faithfull is kept in loue, and quietnesse, and where there is obserued a Catholike consent bothe of faith and vnderstanding with all true faithfull folk, dispersed throughout the whole worlde?

Doctrine.

We do allowe altogether these foure tokens and signes of the true Churche, but in an other meaning than as it is receyued in the Popishe churches. For we doe take the same to be the pure doctrine of the church, which commeth from Christ, conueyed vnto vs by the holy Apostles, which appointed vs nothing of their owne chopse, but did faithfully prefer vnto all nations the discipline which they receyued of Christe: in which is not hearde the voyce of any man, but of the onelye begotten of God, the true and only shepherd and teacher. My sheepe (saith he) heareth my voyce, and doe follow me. The pure preaching of Christes Gospell doeth aright beare the first signe and token of the true Churche. We do sequester here all kinde of doctrines & commandementes of men. Where soeuer the lawe of Moses is taught,

there

there is knowen to be a Synagoge of Iewes: and where Alkoran is read, there is the meeting of Mahomet, & so where the Gospell of Christ our sauiour is taught, there is declared to be the Christian church.

The vse of the Sacramentes.

The seconde marke of the true Church they do make lawfull vse of the sacraments, which we comprehende in two partes. The one is, if these sacramentes be vsed whiche were instituted by the Lord himselfe and our Sauiour: the other, if they be purely and vprightly vsed accordyng vnto his ordinance. For if this marke be wreasted to other Sacraments also as they call them, or to any other than the lawfull vsage of the sacraments, which both we see is done in the Poperie, we esteeme this to be the note not of the true but of the counterfait Church.

The vnitie of the Church.

And whereas the thirde marke whiche they doe take of the true Church, is the vnitie of the Churche which standeth in quietnesse & loue, I doe saye it is not euery manner of vnitie, but the same which is powred into the hartes of the true faithfull by the spirit of Christ, and withall is declared throughout al our life by charitable good turnes of Christian loue, of one to an other: as it were betwixt members of Christes body. Otherwise the children also of this world, and the nations which be voyde of Christ haue their vnitie, concorde, peace, and loue. And we doe see that the Bastarde chyldren of the Church doe stoutlye maintaine, and vpholde their vnitie and quietnesse in religion.

The Catholike Consent.

As for the fourthe marke, which they make to be the Catholyke consente of al the churches of the whole worlde, we do not referre it vnto the extraordinarie ceremonies, whiche be diuers and diuerslye vsed in diuers and sundrye Churches, nor vnto mens traditions, and constitutions, which folowed after the times of the Apostles: but vnto the chiefe points of our Christian faith, which as they be euerlasting and vniuersall, that is to say, necessarye pertayning vnto all the faithfull of Christ, so they be able also to be receyued in the Catholyke and vniuersall consent of all. Wherefore we doe exclude here all such thinges, as hath ben brought in, in these latter times, and be either false and contrary vnto Gods word, either at libertie to be obserued and allowed, after the vsage not of all, but of some Churches only. There is none of these matters confirmed by the catholike consent of all faithfull. For the Catholike consent in this matter muste be referred not to the present time only, or to anye other time passed or to come, but vnto all times and seasons of the whole Catholike church, euen from the verye Apostles, vntill the time of the ende of the worlde.

VVhat Poperie doe make Catholyke consent.

The Romishe men take that for a Catholyke consente, which is decreed in the Churche of Rome, commonlye of the Byshop of Rome and others adioyning vnto it, that he is the heade of the Churche, and the highest vycar of Christe, that the Masse is a sacrifice for the quicke and the dead, that the dead Saintes muste be prayed vnto, that the vse of Images is not onelye lawfull but profytable also in the Churche, that the vse of the Lordes cuppe is vnlawfull full for the faithful people: and such other lyke.

But forasmuche as these matters were not knowen vnto the pure Church, which was in the first times of Christian religion, nor yet vniuersallye receiued and allowed of al them which haue followed, they can not haue the title of the Catholike consent. Wherefore he is not to be accounted streight ways a straūger frō the Catholyke consente of the true Church, whosoeuer refuseth these matters as voyde of truth, & therefore doeth differ in opinion from the Churchs of the Papistes, in as much as they be long since fallen from the olde puritie of the Churches of the Apostles.

VII. What is the head of the Church.

FOrasmuche as the Church is a certaine body made of lyuely members, it must nedes of necessity haue a head, of whence it may bothe take lyfe, and by whose Spirite also it may be directed in all thinges, and not directed and ruled onely, but receyue increase also and growe.

Euery Church (sayth Chrysostome) as long as it hathe a head, it groweth. There is no doubte of thys point. There is no Christian man of the opinon that the Church is headlesse, that is to say, a body without a heade.

1 Therefore the Church hathe a head and not a straunge heade, but a head of his owne: Secondlye, not manye, but one: Thirdlye, not some vnprofitable, vneffectuall, and insufficient head, but such a one as doeth effectually, conuenientlye, and profitably performe those thinges which doe belong vnto a true head. It hathe no other heade, but hys owne heade. What is that? The same to whome the bodye doeth belong, and him to whom the bodye is vnited and subiecte as to the heade. Euerye bodye hathe a head of hys owne, vnto which it is subiect by the very creator therof. So the church also hath a head of his owne, which it chose not to it selfe, but toke it as giuen hir by God.

The Churche hathe not manye heads.

It hath not many heads, but one. It is not a two headed or three headed beast, &c. Nor it can not receyue many heades, succeding one after an other, by chaunge and casualtie of death. For so it shoulde dye it selfe as ofte as it shoulde lose the head by death, and line agayne as ofte as it getteth any newe heade, which enterchangeableneesse of dying and lyuing agayne, shoulde make the thing verye monstrous. The true Churche beyng once dead wyth hir head, and being raised vp again with the same vnder the true head which shall neuer dye agayne, hathe it selfe obteyned also euerlasting lyfe, and shall neuer dye anye more hereafter.

The Churche hathe a head sufficient for it.

It hath (I saye) a head not onely of his owne and one alone, but conuenientlye, and effectually also sufficient, that it is well able to gouerne it. For it hathe spirite and life: the spirite not of this worlde, but of God: lyfe not earthlye, but heauenly, whose trade is in Heauen. And thys it hath by none other meanes, but by the sufficiencye of his heade,

where-whereby it is declared, that his head is not onely sufficient, but heauenly also and Godly.

VVhat is the head of the church.

